Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: As Senator Steuart and others have said, it is our primary responsibility to bring before the legislature of Canada the problems in the regions, and they are extremely severe. I do not understand the arguments that are put forward by Senator Marshall. They no longer have any validity. I do not understand his objections. Why does he not give us the real reason for his trying to stonewall this motion by standing the order? Why does he not just let it go?

Honourable senators, I want to say in conclusion that this order may be further stood once or twice while those opposite consider what they are going to do with it, but as far as I am concerned we need to get on with the actual application of what the committee is going to do. Whether it be tomorrow or Thursday, I am going to do what I can to see that this order is not “stood over” any more.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear! Well said, sir.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Does Order 16 stand?

Senator Argue: I believe it has been standing in Senator Marshall's name. Does he want that to continue?

Senator Marshall: The order can stand in my name unless someone else wishes to speak to it.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

UNITED NATIONS FOREIGN ARBITRAL AWARDS CONVENTION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill C-107, to implement the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill C-108, relating to commercial arbitration.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 14, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Registrar General of Canada showing that Michel Cogger has been summoned to the Senate.

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and was seated.

Hon. Michel Cogger, of West Brome, Quebec, introduced between Hon. Duff Roblin and Hon. Jacques Flynn.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, presented the following report:

Wednesday, May 14, 1986

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

On October 10, 1985, a suggestion was made by the Honourable Senator Godfrey that your Committee examine the matter of whether or not senators who are cabinet ministers, including the Leader of the Government in the Senate, should be members of Senate Committees.

In accordance with Rule 67(1)(f), your Committee agreed to consider the matter and held meetings on October 24, 1985 and May 5, 1986.

Your Committee reviewed the practice now in place and concludes that it is desirable to have the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate as members ex officio of all select Committees of the Senate, as provided for in Rule 68, but that your Committee considers it undesirable to have any cabinet minister other than the Leader of the Government as a member of Senate Committees.

Respectfully submitted,

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Phillips, for Senator Molgat, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

On Reports of Committees:

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I have a report to present on behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. It is not to hand at this time, so I ask leave to revert to this item later in the sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

● (1405)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 27, 1986, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Before the motion is put, honourable senators, I would like to add that the House of Commons is presently involved with a number of opposition days and, as all honourable senators know, no legislation appears from those. It is my understanding that there are ten opposition days between now and the summer recess—out of a total of some 27 sitting days for the House of Commons—and Monday next being a statutory holiday no legislation is expected.

I need not remind honourable senators that committees will be meeting as usual. I mention particularly two committees scheduled for tomorrow: Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, with the Minister of Fisheries appearing before that committee at 11 o'clock, and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources is having a special meeting in order to hear witnesses from western Canada who can only appear at that time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Not only that, but leave is given.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, in case some of you tend to stray too far from Ottawa, I would remind you that rule 14(a) allows the Speaker to recall the Senate. We can anticipate that happening if legislation arrives from the House of Commons.

Hon. Allan MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): In an emergency.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted to put the motion forward, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—BENEFITS ACCRUING TO OTHER TRADING PARTNERS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government which arises from the statement which the Prime Minister made when he announced the opening of trade talks between Canada and the United States.

The Prime Minister indicated what he thought were the benefits which would accrue to Canada as a result of a successful outcome of these bilateral trade negotiations. Then, he went on to refer in his statement to the benefits which would accrue not only to Canada and the United States, but, also, to our other trading partners—including those in the Third World who see trade as the best avenue to prosperity.

What is not clear to me is what benefits the Prime Minister foresaw would accrue to our other trading partners and to developing countries as a result of a successful outcome of the negotiations between Canada and the United States.

● (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will make inquiries on that point.

[Senator Phillips.]

Senator MacEachen: In making his inquiries, would the Leader of the Government, if possible, find out whether any discussions are contemplated with other countries which would permit them to have additional access to the new proposed trade area which would be created if a successful outcome followed such negotiations?

For example, since the words “developing countries” are used by the Prime Minister, I should like to know whether it is expected that Canada and the United States together, if they do succeed in creating this huge trade area composed of two of the richest countries in the world, would be prepared to offer any beneficial access to the developing countries in their trade with Canada and the United States.

That thought is, in a sense, suggested by the Prime Minister's reference to benefits to other partners and, particularly, to the developing world.

Senator Roblin: I know that Canada is interested in pursuing multilateral trade negotiations as well as bilateral trade negotiations, so I feel that is relevant to the question. However, I will obtain more information.

ENERGY

PRICING—DEREGULATION OF INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, as we are likely to adjourn until May 27, it forces me to ask the Leader of the Government a number of questions in respect of which I might have been willing to wait a little longer for the answers.

I hope he understands the gravity, indeed the almost desperate urgency of the situation with respect to the high number of people who are losing their jobs every day in the oil and gas industry.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if it is still the position of this government that the price of oil will average $22.50 per barrel during the period covered by the budget, and if they have revised that figure, could he give an indication of the basis on which the revision was made and where it is going? I am not asking about the consequential ramifications of the budget projections at this time, but I think the industry and the people who are employed in it would like to know whether or not the government has a view as to where these prices are going and how long they are going to be at these levels so that they can make their plans accordingly.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will ask my colleague, the Minister of Finance, if he can shed any light on this question.

Senator Olson: I take it the Leader is not willing to shed any light on it himself today. I say that because I make the assumption, rightly or wrongly, that he attends a number of cabinet meetings where this is discussed. If we are not going to be here the remainder of this week and all of next week, I think he probably could give some indication about where we are going although if that is as far as he is prepared to go I have to accept that reply. In fact, his response may even be an improvement over the situation on other occasions because he has at least given an indication that he is willing to make the inquiry.

Is the government aware of the fact that the so-called "deregulation of oil prices" has resulted in producers in Canada now receiving the lowest price per barrel of equal quality crude of any oil in the world? Was the government aware of this when they started out on this deregulation and, if so, are they going to continue to allow the industry to be devastated by this kind of action?

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend knows that the situation, which I think he correctly describes, is one that has arisen in the last few months, in fact, since the beginning of the year. I know the situation is being looked at by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I am sure a statement will be made about it in due course.

Senator Olson: Could the leader give us an indication of what he means by, "in due course"? People are going bankrupt daily. New groups of companies are declaring bankruptcy almost every day. As I indicated yesterday, there is an average of 100 people per day laid off from what was considered permanent employment in Calgary alone. The number in Edmonton is probably equally high and is proportionately so in the rest of the gas and oil producing areas. Their whole economic well-being depends on this pricing arrangement. Even if the government could not see it when it started down this disastrous road of deregulation—or what is really a cop-out in terms of giving any governance in this respect—at least now, in retrospect, it can see what has happened. Is the government prepared to take any action to deal with it?

● (1415)

Senator Roblin: We are certainly not prepared to go back to the policy espoused by my honourable friend.

Senator Frith: Shame!

Senator Olson: If the government is not prepared to take any portion of the policy that was in place, which did have aspects to it that could deal with some of the situations that have arisen, surely the Leader of the Government can tell us what the government is prepared to do. We have heard what it is not prepared to do. What is the government prepared to do, positively?

Senator Roblin: This question is very similar, if not identical, to the one I answered yesterday.

Senator Olson: The only difference is that you did not answer it.

Senator Roblin: I know, and I cannot give you any more information today. When there is a policy announcement to be made, I will be glad to make it. I cannot make one today.

Senator Olson: Can the Leader of the Government give us an indication of when we can expect this policy announcement to be made? People are desperately interested because they are losing their whole economic base.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am sure that the situation is serious. I am cheered up moderately, at any rate, by the news this morning that the Home Oil Company has reactivated some 300 oil wells in Saskatchewan. That is a pleasant change from what we have seen. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, is aware of the situation and is giving it serious attention.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to know the government's attitude with respect to proceeding towards full deregulation of the natural gas industry by November 1, 1986. Does the government intend to pursue that policy? Even one of its greatest advocates, former Premier Lougheed of Alberta, is reported to have changed his mind about whether it is a good idea for Canada and for the industry. Is the government now modifying its view on what will again turn out to be a disastrous course of events?

Senator Roblin: Of course, I do not agree with any of the conclusions reached by my friend, but then, I seldom do; I do not think he expects me to. But I can tell him that the question of deregulation of natural gas is on the table for discussion between the federal government, the provinces and the industry. We are not yet at a point where any firm decision has been made as to what should be done.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the government has stated that it is going to have full and complete deregulation by November 1. Thus far, that is the stated position of this government. Surely, if it is about to modify that, the government leader in the Senate could let us know and give some comfort to those people who are involved in the industry.

Senator Roblin: We think it advisable to consult as widely as we can in this matter and that is what we are going to do. If there is any change in government policy, my friend will be one of the first to know.

● (1420)

[Translation]

INSURANCE

BANKRUPTCY OF INSURANCE COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government about the recent bankruptcy of the Northumberland General Insurance Company.

As a preamble, I would like to quote from the program As it is of April 20, on which Mrs. Marilyn Weston, reporter for the CFCF station in Montreal, interviewed a few of the victims insured by this company as well as insurance experts. This was a report entitled "The Insurance Illusion".

This is an eight page document, but I shall quote only a few passages as background for my intervention.

First of all, of the 50,000 Northumberland policy holders, 29,000 are Quebec residents.

Of 1,000 claimants insured in all Canada, 800 live in Quebec.

The total amount of individual claims is $3 million for all Canada, while claims by individuals and corporations amount to about $80 million.

The claims against Northumberland amount to a total of $170 million and the assets of the company are evaluated at only $120 million.

Because of this, the victims of this bankruptcy can only wait for a final settlement, which could be in about five years according to the experts. The creditors of Northumberland, including the insured victims, can only hope to recover part of what is owed to them.

During the interview, Mr. Nolan Bateau of the Quebec Consumers' Association said the following:

[English]

There is no help for them anywhere. The insurance industry has no compensation fund. We asked the government to advance money with no interest, loans, and we were refused—although they are financing depositors of all failed banks! The brokers are saying they give professional advice to the public. Well, they take the public's money and they deny responsibility.

[Translation]

Mrs. Weston pointed out that, before 1980, insurance company failures were practically unknown in Canada while the following bankruptcies have occurred since then.

In 1981, the Pitts Insurance Company and Strathcona General Insurance Company. In 1982, Cardinal Insurance, in 1985, Northumberland General Insurance, and in February 1986, United Canada.

These last failures are the result of the following problems, according to Mr. David Atkins, insurance expert and senior partner of Coopers and Lybrand:

[English]

Lack of liquidity by the insurance company, a rush for growth.

Mr. Garth MacGirr, an expert on bankruptcies and President of the accounting firm Price Waterhouse and President of the Insolvency Association, said:

Simply they have not been writing quality business and I think that is common in just about every one of them. I suspect if you look beyond that, you would find a reaching out for volume and sacrificing quality at the same time . . . We have seen too many people trying to share in the same premium, whether it's by excessive commissions, or by management fees.

[Translation]

Mrs. Weston added that an "in house" investigation had showed that this situation resulted from the following practices:

[English]

We investigated the insurance business and discovered some practices which, although legal, are wide open to abuse. They are:

[Senator Langlois.]

1. SPECIAL DEALS BETWEEN INSURANCE COMPANIES AND BROKERS

2. INSURANCE MANAGEMENT COMPANIES

3. REINSURANCE

Here's what can happen under our present system. When you pay your broker for your home or car insurance policy, he is entitled to take part of it as his commission. The normal commission would be about 12.5% on automobile policies; about 20% on home policies. But insurance companies can arrange what are called "sweetheart deals" with the broker. Some companies give fatter-than-normal commissions—perhaps 25%. That's to make sure the broker is especially energetic in selling the company's products . . . There can be other incentives: free trips and cars, for example—

[Translation]

Mr. Garth MacGirr emphasized this point with the following remark:

[English]

I have seen sweetheart deals in the insurance industry, I have seen it in fifty other industries. Wherever there is a large pool of money, over which there perhaps is inadequate regulation, there is always the danger that unscrupulous people will look after themselves first. And since I practice in the area of insolvency, I tend to see it more often than not.

[Translation]

Before I end this series of quotations from the "As it is" program, I wish to read a last remark from Mrs. Weston's text, and I quote:

[English]

The problems of affiliated reinsurance and management companies surfaced in the Northumberland bankruptcy documents. As well, the documents cite "a lack of proper financial controls and records".

Northumberland was a concern to the federal Department of Insurance for a long time. In the fall of 1983, the department believed that Northumberland might be short of the required amount of assets to the extent of $4 million to $8 million. In late 1983 the department began to chase the money chain in discussions with Northumberland to try to find out how big the shortfall was. That December, Northumberland reported an excess of required assets to the tune of $7 million. The department believed that there was a shortfall of at least $6 million. In June 1984, the government gave Northumberland a deadline. It had until the end of the year to make good on the shortfall. The government forbade Northumberland to sell more in 1984 than it did in 1983. That was two years before the bankruptcy arose.

However, as recorded in TRAC, the insurance industry's bible, Northumberland's volume almost doubled from 1983 to 1984. This should have sounded an alarm bell, but these statistics did not come out until well into the next year. Northumberland, like all insurance companies, did not have to file its 1984 financial statements with the federal Superintendent of Insurance until February 28, 1985.

[Translation]

I am concluding here my references to the transcription of Mrs. Weston's program, and I come to my questions to the Leader of the Government in this House:

First, can he inquire from the Minister of Finance whether the Superintendent of Insurance has reported to him on the Northumberland situation before the latter's bankruptcy, and, if so, on what date?

Second, if there was such a report, was he informed that, two to three months before Northumberland went bankrupt, the Superintendent of Insurance was issuing monthly certificates of registry rather than annual ones?

I must note here, in passing, that under the Insurance Act the Superintendent may issue certificates of registry on an annual or a shorter term basis.

In order to better inform the Leader of the Government, I am sending a complete copy of the program's transcription to him, and to our colleague, Senator Murray, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, with the hope that his Committee will undertake a thorough study of the circumstances which lead to that situation. At first, I had intended to put forth such a motion for referral to his Committee; but I thought I would rather leave it to the Committee Chairman to take the initiative of ensuring that his Committee would undertake without delay an in-depth study of the situation, not only in the Northumberland case but also in the area of insurance generally.

Also, I was provided this morning with another very interesting document. It is an abstract from the magazine Insurance TRAC Report. As you may know, that magazine is published by Colandor Publications Limited of Toronto. In Mrs. Weston's program, it was referred to as the "insurance people's Bible".

The role of that publication is to establish insolvency forewarning tests. The job of determining whether an insurance company is solvent or not is a complex and hazardous one, especially if it is done by a layman.

The TRAC report includes yearly surveys of eight insolvency forewarning tests made under procedures currently in use in Canada, the United States and Great Britain.

As an example—and this is a very interesting part—in that TRAC report dated November 1985—

The Hon. The Speaker pro tempore: Senator Langlois, perhaps you would let the Leader of the Government answer the question. Also, perhaps you could send him your documents to complete your question.

Senator Langlois: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As an example, in 1983, the Northumberland Insurance Company passed five tests out of eight, in 1984 one only, and in 1985 it went bankrupt.

I think there was sufficient information available for the Superintendent of Insurance to act before the bankruptcy came about, and especially to make the Northumberland General Insurance Company's policy holders aware of the situation.

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not authorized to speak for the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, but I think the idea that my friend has of sending his papers to them for their consideration is a good one. If he sends the papers to me, I will be pleased to inquire of the Superintendent of Insurance through my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, as to whether or not they can throw any light on the problems that have been set forth by my friend.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE—U.S. COUNTERVAILING DUTIES— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, yesterday in a committee in the other place, Mr. Kelleher, Minister for International Trade, threatened to retaliate if the United States imposes countervailing duties on Canada's softwood lumber exports to that country. He said that the United States has no monopoly on countervailing actions, and here I quote his remarks:

Canada, too, has equipped itself . . . to deal with injurious subsidized imports.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform the Senate what specific actions directed toward what specific products the government has in mind when it makes these threats?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I would not describe what my honourable friend has said as a threat. I think it is a statement of the options that are open to the government under GATT and under our other laws and regulations with respect to international trade. It is simply a statement of the fact that if we feel that we are unjustly dealt with, we have means by which we can respond.

A prime example of that has been the flood of European beef into Canada in the past little while. When we could not reach an understanding with the European Community on that, we took other measures which had the result of solving the problem. Therefore I think there is nothing sinister in what the minister has said. It is merely a statement of the means that are available to all countries in dealing with trade disputes with their neighbours.

Senator Grafstein: Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the government has collected evidence with respect to specific and outstanding cases that might prove injurious subsidization, on which the government has not yet acted? Is that what the Leader of the Government in the Senate is telling us?

Senator Roblin: I am telling you that when trade measures are taken which we feel are unfair, the international trading rules and the international trading community provide a remedy, and if we have to have recourse to those remedies in the course of a trade dispute, I think you would expect us to do so.

Senator Grafstein: I would assume that the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Minister for International Trade have received legal advice which indicates that we can take random retaliatory measures which, to my mind, appear to be consistent with Canadian practices in Canadian law.

Senator Roblin: The minister and his colleague hope very much that there will be no need for such considerations.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

WITHDRAWAL OF BENEFITS OF ARMED FORCES PENSIONERS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Today, as I was crossing the front lawn of Parliament Hill, I saw hundreds of people from the province of Quebec asking for their rights to receive both their pensions from the armed services and their unemployment insurance. I believe that there are approximately 30,000 armed forces personnel on pension who have lost their eligibility for unemployment insurance. Of those 30,000, about 1,000 have appealed and 200 of those have won their case before the appeal board. The Government of Canada has not only taken their unemployment insurance but now is refusing to pay back the unemployment insurance that they won before the appeal board.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise me if the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable Flora MacDonald, is considering the plight of these people who, over the years, have paid their unemployment insurance premiums and if she is intending to reinstate the payment of unemployment insurance to these people?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that the Government of Canada foots the bill for the appeals to the board that he refers to, and of course in these cases we have done that.

The question as to whether or not those decisions are to be appealed is outstanding at the moment. Approximately 1,000 appeals were laid; 200 were successful and 800 were not. The minister has the responsibility for deciding what to do next. She is considering this matter, and I do not think I can say any more about it at the present time.

Senator Bonnell: I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would use his strong voice in cabinet to speak on behalf of those people in order to see that they receive justice. The opinion across the country now, from Newfoundland to Vancouver, is that you cannot trust this government, but I know that we can trust the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We saw what he did yesterday with respect to the statement he made about fairness and integrity, of which we are very proud. He is our leader and we know that he will speak justly for those armed forces personnel who faithfully paid their dues, with a view to getting this money back when they retired.

[Senator Grafstein.]

I understand the Leader of the Government has said that the Government of Canada paid for the appeals. I am wondering whether he means that the Government of Canada paid for the lawyers hired by these members of the armed forces personnel in order to defend their rights before the courts.

Senator Roblin: My reference was to the expenses of appearing before the appeal board. That is the process we are talking about. I did not say anything about other legal matters, and I have nothing to say about other legal matters. However, I have no hesitation in telling my friend I will convey his very sincere view on this matter to those concerned.

GRAIN

WHEAT PRICING—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS TASK FORCE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We are all aware of the House of Commons task force that is looking into the question of making a recommendation with regard to a two-price system for Canada with respect to wheat. My information is that they have run into a great variety of opinions, and that some of them, at any rate, may be considering the possibility of recommending a two-price system that would apply to all wheat that is marketed in Canada.

My question is: Does the minister know whether it is within the terms of reference of this committee to make a general recommendation regarding the general price level of wheat in Canada that will be guaranteed to the producers? Perhaps if that were done, it could then be paid to those producers by way of a deficiency payment. Does this task force, in fact, have the flexibility within its terms of reference to bring in that kind of recommendation?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not have the terms of reference in front of me, but my impression is that my friend is right. They have the power to bring in broad recommendations in this field.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE DETERMINATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, as you know, today it is one year and one month since the federal government received the Rabbi Gunther Plaut report on refugee determination. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate could allay the concerns and, indeed, the agony of many refugees, some awaiting their turn now for almost five years for their case to be heard, and tell them and us why the federal government, to date, has not responded to the Gunther Plaut report. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate can also tell us whether the response will, indeed, be tabled before the end of this session.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): There are a wide variety of factors, over and above the report my friend has mentioned, that are being considered in respect of this whole problem. It is not just that report alone; there are several other factors of great importance that have been referred to.

I can tell my friend that the legislation to give effect to these changes is presently being drafted so we hope that before long it will be cleared for presentation to the Parliament of Canada.

ENTRY OF SOVIET JEWS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a related supplementary question. Today, on the 30th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence of the new State of Israel, a youth freedom caravan on behalf of Soviet Jews proceeded to Parliament Hill. A demonstration addressed by some of us was held in front of the Centennial Flame. One of the issues raised was: What more is the federal government doing to help expedite the issuance of exit visas for Soviet Jews who want to emigrate to Canada?

● (1440)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have no information that there is any problem in securing visas for entry into Canada; the problem is securing exit visas from the Soviet Union.

Senator Haidasz: That is what I meant. My question was: Has the federal government taken any further steps to expedite the emigration process to Canada from the U.S.S.R.?

Senator Roblin: I am sorry, that is not within our control. All we can do is put forward in the most emphatic way we know our recommendations to that government that it should let those people go.

This government, and I am sure the one before it, has never failed to do that, and we hope to continue doing that.

What effect that has had is difficult to determine, but there seems to have been some movement.

EMPLOYMENT

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF REDUCTIONS—JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, my question arises from an article I read in Parliamentary Alert dated May 12-16. That article states, in part, that public service numbers are down in Canada.

When I read on, I noticed that the number of public servants employed in 1985 by the Government of Canada was down by 101 in Nova Scotia, by 66 in New Brunswick, had increased by 90-odd in Prince Edward Island—which was the result of the Department of Veterans Affairs moving there, which reflected a decision made by the previous government—that it was up by 15 in Newfoundland, that it was down by 400-odd in Quebec, and up in the other provinces of Canada.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Do these figures reflect this government's policy?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can say that it is this government's policy to reduce the number of public servants in a humane and discreet fashion to the lowest number that can adequately carry out the public business. As to the particular reductions the honourable senator has mentioned, I think they are probably a reflection of that policy. As to the detail, I would have to look into the matter to make a sensible comment.

Senator Thériault: It is striking, honourable senators, to note from reading that article that the higher the unemployment rate the quicker the government has been to fire people. My question is: Does that reflect government policy?

Senator Roblin: Government policy is to increase employment in Canada. In fact, there have been 640,000 jobs discovered or made available since this government assumed office.

Senator Argue: Discovered!

Senator Roblin: That is the policy of this government. The policy of this government is to run an efficient operation.

If my honourable friend thinks that we have been unfair in any way, let him give me his objection and I will certainly see that it is examined.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, for months we have been hearing that 640,000 jobs have been created or that 580,000 jobs have been created.

I invite the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or anybody else in the government, to go down to the Atlantic region and tell the people that there has been an increase in the number of jobs created since this government took office. The people down there will tell you something else.

Senator Argue: They have been getting the answer.

Senator Thériault: Inquire of your colleagues from the Maritimes and you will realize that unemployment is higher in every province east of Ontario, including Quebec, than it was in 1984 when this government took office.

Senator Roblin: I take it that my honourable friend is asking for statistics on employment in those provinces, and if so, I will get those for him.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May we have the source of the figure of 640,000 jobs?

Senator Roblin: The source is basically with Statistics Canada.

Senator Frith: Where in Statistics Canada?

Senator Flynn: Find it for yourself.

Senator Frith: Find it for yourself! That's the answer.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Why is it the policy of the Government of Canada to lay off people in various government departments—and I can name some of the departments—while, at the same time, it is hiring part-time workers who are not allowed to work over 100 hours a month? Is the government calling that job creation? I should like to know what the Leader of the Government in the Senate has to say about that.

Senator Roblin: I will give my honourable friend the figures on full-time jobs, part-time jobs, jobs for youth and jobs for women. I will look up those facts for him.

Senator Guay: The matter I should particularly like the leader to look into relates to the fact that these positions have been filled by part-time employees. Those people who are being hired on a part-time basis cannot become permanent, even though some of them have been employed for two years. I should like the leader to look into that aspect of the matter.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend will give me facts to go on, I will do so.

TRANSPORT

CN SHOPS—MONCTON LAYOFFS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, respecting the questions raised by Senator Thériault and the answers given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the leader asked for specifics.

It was the commitment of this government in its election campaign that the employees of the CN shops at Moncton would be protected and that those shops would continue in the fashion they had followed for so many years.

At that time there were some 1,150 employees in the shops at Moncton. Despite assurances that have been received since the election, the CNR has been carrying out a policy of attrition and the number now employed at the CN shops is down to approximately 900, a drop of approximately 250 personnel.

That, in itself, is a very serious situation for a community of that size. Related to Toronto or Montreal, one would appreciate that that number would be in the thousands.

Currently, I know that the Minister of Transport, Mr. Mazankowski, has been trying hard to find a solution, but there are now some 900 families—not just in Moncton, but in that whole general area—which are daily left with the extreme worry that those jobs, too, will disappear in the rationalization as to where CNR shop repair and maintenance work will be carried out. The rumour runs strong that Moncton may be on the chopping block.

In light of the dreadful worry that rests with those families—and I am sure the leader can appreciate that—would he please ask the Minister of Transport to bring this matter to a head as quickly as possible in favour of the retention of the shops at Moncton?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Yes, I will, honourable senators.

[Senator Guay.]

ORDER OF CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER MEMBERS OF FEDERAL CABINET AND FORMER PROVINCIAL PREMIERS—REVISED REPLY TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION—EXPRESSION OF THANKS

Hon. Charles McElman: I wish to take this opportunity to thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for the speedy and sensitive action that he took in having published in yesterday's Debates of the Senate a corrected list of those distinguished Canadians, former cabinet ministers and former provincial premiers, who have in the past and up to the present been appointed to the Order of Canada, and I note that that list, through his action, now includes the name of the late Brigadier the Honourable Milton F. Gregg, V.C., P.C., O.C.

On behalf of his widow, Mrs. Erica Gregg, and our former colleague and Speaker, Senator Fergusson, I express appreciation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I thank my honourable friend. Let me say that I appreciate the interest that he takes in this matter. I hope he will continue to keep a sharp eye on those returns.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF SOVIET JEWS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is supplementary to that put by my colleague, the Honourable Senator Haidasz, concerning Soviets of Jewish origin who want to emigrate from that country.

I wonder whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate is aware of the magnitude of the change that has taken place over the past six or seven years. If my figures are correct, in 1979 some 53,000 Soviet Jews emigrated from that country. That figure has dwindled to something of the order of 50 to 60 this year.

I understand from estimates taken from people in authority and in the know that there are some 400,000 applications that have been made by Soviet Jews to emigrate from that country. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate bring us some statistical information and, also, tell us—this is a non-partisan issue—what action his government is taking in order to influence the Soviet government to relax their rules of emigration of Jewish Soviets?

● (1450)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am sure I can get the figures as to the number of Soviet Jews who have been received in Canada, say, in the last five years; I will produce that information.

Senator Bosa: From 1979.

Senator Roblin: Since 1979? All right, we will go back to that.

But, I have to tell my honourable friend that one has to use some care about pressure on the Soviet government because we all know too well what happened when some American senators attached some conditions to inter-state relations dealing with the emigration of Jews from the Soviet Union to elsewhere in the world; it did not produce a helpful response, quite the reverse, and may have been—I say may—part of the reason why there has been this tragic slow down. So, one has to use considerable finesse.

With that in mind, I would like my honourable friend to excuse me from answering the details of what we have done because to do so may very well not be helpful.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 4 last by the Honourable Senator Sinclair regarding The Economy—Decline in Value of Canadian Dollar—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

The Canadian dollar has been trading above 71.5 U.S. cents since the beginning of April and recently has been above 72 cents. The present situation contrasts with that experienced earlier this year when our dollar was under intense downward pressure, touching a record low of 69.13 cents on February 4th. This pressure was spilling over into domestic financial markets and interest rates were rising.

At the time the dollar was showing signs of weakness an Honourable Senator asked if the Government was "... prepared to take extraordinary steps to restore confidence in our currency." The Government's actions in this regard can leave no doubt about its commitment to a sound currency. At the time when the dollar was under strong downward pressure, the authorities responded to the situation by stepping up official operations in both the foreign exchange and money markets. In early February, the Minister of Finance stated in the House of Commons that the government was raising additional funds abroad to bolster its capacity to intervene in the foreign exchange market as the occasion required. In addition, the budget presented in late February clearly indicated the government's commitment to sound financial management.

The dollar has strengthened and interest rates have declined.

There was some downward pressure in late February and early March as the market took time to digest the new budget; this pressure was both moderate and short lived and the dollar resumed its upward course as the budget's message became more fully understood.

It was widely recognized that the downward pressure on the Canadian dollar earlier this year was not due to a deterioration in Canada's economic fundamentals—on this score, the government's economic performance and prospects compare very favourably to other industrialized countries. Rather the source of the pressure appeared to lie with short-term capital outflows, which were partly speculative in nature and related to misconceptions about our economic situation. The government felt that it was advisable to send a strong signal to the market and did so.

Finally, on occasion honourable senators have made inquiries about the precise timing and extent of the authorities' actions in the foreign exchange market. It would not be appropriate for the minister to make comment on this matter.

BANKING

PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 4 last by the Honourable Senator Grafstein regarding Banking—Promotion of International Banking Centres.

(The answer follows:)

The city of Toronto has already attained the status of an international banking centre in its own right. The proposal announced in the Budget Speech of February 26, 1986, has two underlying objectives: to strengthen our financial and commercial ties with countries in Europe and the Pacific Rim; and to bolster the reputation of Montreal and Vancouver in the field of international banking.

However, it cannot be over-emphasized that the stimulation of international banking activity in these cities is not intended to occur at the expense of the city of Toronto or other cities. Instead, the focus of this project is upon the attraction of activity which, in the absence of this incentive, would not otherwise have taken place in this country. In other words, the purpose of this proposal is to increase the amount of international banking activity in Canada as a whole, rather than to merely reallocate that activity which presently occurs within our borders.

It is not believed that this incentive will involve inordinate cost to either the federal or provincial governments involved. This proposal should also not be regarded as the first in a series of projects which will discriminate between cities and regions in Canada, but rather as an isolated instance in which the benefits to be derived from an incentive targeted to two centres justify its restriction in this manner.

The incentive which is contemplated by this proposal is directed towards the profits of international banking activity conducted in Canada. A great deal of this activity presently occurs outside of this country and does not form part of the Canadian tax base; consequently, a tax concession which exempts the profits of such transferred activity from Canadian tax should not prove costly. However, the structure of the international banking centre system has not been finalized and will depend, in some measure, upon the views and recommendations of the provincial governments and members of the banking community. Due to this fact, the revenue cost of the proposal cannot be determined with precision at this time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—ROLE OF LOBBYIST— POSITION OF UNITED STATES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to questions asked in the Senate on April 15 and 17 last by the Honourable Senators Croll and Olson regarding Canada-United States Relations—Bilateral Trade Negotiations.

(The answer follows:)

Mr. Michael Deaver was retained by the Government of Canada for the period of July 1, 1985 to June 30, 1986, for the sum of $100,000.00 U.S. and expenses limited to $5,000.00 U.S.

Mr. Deaver was engaged as part of a program initiated in 1983 under which the Canadian Government seeks knowledgeable advice on issues of importance to Canada in the United States.

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—AGRICULTURE— CONSULTATIONS WITH CANADIAN PRODUCERS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 29 last by the Honourable Senator Hays regarding Canada-United States Relations—Bilateral Trade Negotiations—Agriculture—Consultations with Canadian Producers.

(The answer follows:)

There are two parts to the trade advisory committee system. One is the International Trade Advisory Committee (ITAC), which is chaired by Walter Light and has already held two meetings. Its mandate is to advise the Minister for International Trade on bilateral and multilateral trade negotiations, market access and trade development issues from a national perspective. Included in the membership are two individuals with agricultural backgrounds. One, Arthur Kroeker is past president of the Canadian Horticultural Council and a former working farmer.

The Sectoral Advisory Groups on International Trade (SAGIT) will approach trade questions from a detailed sectoral perspective. The Agriculture, Food and Beverage Group will be comprised of about 15 members. The producer interests will be drawn from suggestions submitted by associations that represent working farmers. In this way they will be assured of an effective voice in the committee system.

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ACID RAIN—STATUS OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 30 last by the Honourable Senator Frith respecting acid rain.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Could you read that one, please?

Senator Roblin: Certainly.

As the minister stated in the House of Commons on the same day, the honourable member is referred to the transcript of what was actually said in the relevant congressional committee.

The Energy Secretary—in the United States that is—went on to say:

Technology transfer

—in other words, for the purpose of acid rain control—can be promoted by resolving present regulatory constraints that may work against innovation. This is under way and the acceptance of the envoys' report

—by the U.S. administration—has given new impetus to this process

Senator Frith: I can't imagine any question that I asked to which that would be an answer, but I will have a look at it.

Senator Roblin: Oh, have a look at it; you might be surprised.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, there are two questions which I had asked the honourable Leader of the Government and to which I am still awaiting answers. I hope he has not forgotten them.

The first question is whether Mr. Ed Broadbent was invited to the gala after the first Shamrock Summit.

The second question is whether he would do something about that unfortunate young Greek peasant girl who was "done wrong" by a Canadian—unfortunately of Greek descent, I am ashamed to say—who gave her a child and then abandoned her. Her child was born here. The father of the child is a Canadian citizen; therefore, the child is a Canadian citizen on two counts and, yet, this young woman is being told she must leave the country, though she is the mother of a child who is not yet one year old.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am a little embarrassed that we haven't answered the first question heretofore.

Concerning the second question, did my friend give me the name of the person concerned so that I can make reference to it? Otherwise, it is a little too vague to handle.

Senator Gigantès: I gave you all the correspondence, sir; I brought it over to your desk.

Senator Roblin: Thank you. I will look for it. If I can't find it, I will come back to you and ask for a repeat.

Senator Gigantès: Thank you, sir.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

INTERIM REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-67 TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the twenty-first report from the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, respecting the subject matter of Bill C-67, to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act.

I would ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 2484.)

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, on a point of clarification, does the Honourable Senator Lewis propose a debate on the report at this stage?

Senator Lewis: I presume that it would be considered at the next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The report has been tabled, if anyone wants to take the floor on the report.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in order for it to appear on the order paper Senator Lewis would have to move that it be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: But he doesn't have to move it.

Senator Frith: No, he doesn't have to; I am not suggesting that. I am saying that for it to become the subject of a debate he would have to move that it be taken into consideration at the next sitting—which is what I think he was proposing to do.

On motion of Senator Lewis, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE ON FILM ENTITLED: "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—MOTION TO REFER REPORT BACK TO COMMITTEE—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: Production and Distribution of the National Film Board Production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1986,

And on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molson, seconded by the Honourable Senator McElman, that the Report be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

3. That a copy of this Report as it stands or as it may be amended, be formally submitted to the Honourable Minister of Communications, with the request that it be transmitted to the National Film Board along with the Minister's specific instructions of action required of the Board to correct the wrong that has been done to the factual record of the late Air Marshall William Avery Bishop, Victoria Cross.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order stands in my name. I am not able to speak to it today, but Senator Lang is ready to proceed and I yield to Senator Lang.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Thank you, honourable senators.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lang: I must say that for a person like myself one pays an awful penalty to get on to the Orders of the Day, having to sit for one hour and fifteen minutes through what I would call the most boring and uninformative situation—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Lang: —we have in this house which we now label "Question Period."

Hon. Hazen Argue: You had better make it good if you want us to sit this long. Do you want us to support you, or don't you?

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I don't want to reiterate what has been so eloquently expressed in this debate, both pro and con, as to the report of that subcommittee. Other senators have done it well and ably, and I think I can understand the points of view expressed, both pro and con, in that debate.

What really bothers me is the fact that this is probably one of the best written, carefully analytical reports that any committee has put out, but I cannot make the substance of the report conform with its conclusions and recommendations. In fact, the conclusions and recommendations in my opinion are almost a non-sequitur.

Honourable senators, we are involved here in a debate that far transcends the issue before us. We are involved in a balancing act between two values in our society; namely, the rights of a person to his reputation against free speech, or what might otherwise be described as artistic expression.

Honourable senators, we all sometimes think that this is the first thing that has ever happened in the world in this way and we find, so often, that it is not the case.

In 1980, the University of Western Ontario published a report entitled: "Libellers of the Dead." I would like to quote one paragraph contained in that report which I think bears so well on what is before us now.

Because of the lack of direct protection in tort for the reputation of the dead, there are several recent instances in England of literary or mass-media attacks on a famous deceased personality, causing acute distress to the relatives, who have been unable to strike back. One of the most notorious of these instances was in Hochhuth's play, Soldiers, wherein the late Sir Winston Churchill was alleged to have conspired in the murder of the Allied Polish General Sikorski. More recently, however, the so-called current fashion in England of "demythologising famous historical figures" is evident, for example, in the newly published book Scott and Amundsen, . . . Scott in respect of his ill-fated expedition to the South Pole.

● (1500)

Accordingly, his surviving son, Sir Peter Scott, who, incidentally, served with me in the same flotilla of torpedo boats during the war, issued a writ for libel as well as for breach of contract and infringement of copyright.

I believe that in the issue before us today we have that same phenomenon appearing in our society. In looking at this matter we must realize that we are confronting an issue of what is defamatory libel in law.

Defamatory libel can either be a tort or a crime under our Criminal Code. As a tort, it comes under provincial jurisdiction; as a crime it comes under our federal Criminal Code. On both those scores, that is, in a personal tortious way and in a criminal way, this film is a defamatory libel.

If you examine it carefully, you will see that what we have here is something akin to what I would call hate literature except that the film is not directed against a group but against an individual. I know the Senate would stand up to defend any provisions we have in our law against hate literature. I think here we are looking at the same thing, and I am afraid the committee has missed or underestimated the serious nature of the offence.

[Senator Argue.]

On the question of non-criminal but tortious liability, the normal tests of the court have been: Does the publication bring a person into hatred, contempt and ridicule? Another test is: Is it a "designed insult"? On all scores, honourable senators, this film does exactly that. In terms of bringing Billy Bishop into hatred, it brings him into hatred because he fought in a war. That extends not just to World War I but, in fact, it tends to bring into hatred and contempt all of us who are veterans of World War I or World War II.

In terms of contempt, it certainly brings the man into contempt. The film starts out by saying that he lacked intelligence because he could not get into a university so he had to go to the Royal Military College. It brings him into contempt by making him look as though he is full of fear by being sick on board a ship on the ocean. As regards ridicule, it is just laden with ridicule. It is suggested that he faked the raid on an airport for which he was awarded the V.C.; and that he faked the shooting down and destruction of a number of enemy aircraft. If we add all these things together, it is indeed a "designed insult" on the part of the producer and the National Film Board.

If this matter were before a court of law, the National Film Board would have no defence whatsoever. There is no "absolute privilege" involved such as there is when I speak in this chamber; there is no "qualified privilege" involved; there is no "justification," that is, proof of truth; there is no "fair comment" weighing the pros and cons of the evidence; and, certainly, honourable senators, there is no "public benefit."

What defence does the Film Board have? It has that one powerful, cowardly defence: The man is dead.

What are we faced with now? A criminal offence or a tortious offence in civil law? Honourable senators, reputation is a fundamental value in our society. Attacks upon reputation may result in serious consequences to the victims and their kin. I am not sufficiently proficient in the Quebec Civil Code but under that code, I understand, there may be a recourse by kin against the National Film Board. However, I think I know Billy Bishop's survivors well enough to know that they would not pursue that avenue.

However, deliberate character assassination ought not to be tolerated in our society in the name of artistic expression or free speech any more than hate literature ought to be tolerated in our society in the same name.

Honourable senators, I have unearthed a reference which was not produced at our committee hearings regarding the raid made by Bishop on a German airfield and for which he was awarded the Victoria Cross. I should now like to read that reference into the record.

It is found in a book entitled The Years of the Sky King written by Arch Whitehouse and published by Doubleday and Company, New York, in 1959. Arch Whitehouse is an historian and writer of repute and, particularly, an authority on World War I flyers, he having been one himself. In that publication it is stated:

It was for this solo feat that he was recommended for the Victoria Cross. After long weeks of careful investigation as to the authenticity of his report the decoration was confirmed on August 11, 1917. Agents inside the German lines discovered that the two seater had been seriously damaged, several of the single seaters had been put out of action and the fourth Albatross pilot had been lightly wounded.

I want to underline that this says, "After long weeks . . ." Honourable senators, in actual fact, it took nine weeks of careful investigation. British agents went behind the German lines and confirmed the damage and destruction that he had accomplished. How can we possibly conceive of anyone awarding a Victoria Cross without substantiation such as that?

Arch Whitehouse further wrote the following:

Raid on the German airfield became the high point of Bishop's career, although he continued his wild attacks on enemy aircraft and ran his score up to 47. British agents inside the enemy line eventually confirmed that three Fokkers had been shot down. Several of the single seaters had been damaged seriously and a two seater so shot up it had to be completely rebuilt.

He then said:

It is interesting to note that after the war German officials said that no such attack had been made on any of their airdromes on that date. The British, however, were more than satisfied and by August 11, 1917, Bishop was awarded the Victoria Cross for his efforts.

Of course, the Germans would deny that. I can remember much damage that was done to them in World War II which they denied. Remember, for example, the air raids on London in 1940 and 1941. Many German planes were shot down and the Germans denied that they had lost any planes.

● (1510)

Honourable senators, we must go to the best evidence available. Unfortunately, Cowan and the National Film Board did not do so. They set sail on their own course to prove something—what, I do not know. But the Film Board is an agency of the government and I think that it has to be brought more sharply to heel than will be accomplished by adopting the report of this committee. That may be done by referring the matter back, as was suggested in Senator Molson's motion yesterday.

In conclusion, I will refer to a quotation which I know is familiar to all honourable senators:

Good name in man, and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of our souls.
Who steals my purse steals trash. 'Tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed.

Shakespeare—Othello

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I am not a member of the Committee that submitted this report on the film: "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". I did not take part in the Committee's proceedings. I did not see the film.

I am satisfied that the report described the film as it is. The report's conclusions are founded in that this film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction and does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

I agree with all those who described the way the film was made and produced and who accused the National Film Board of tarnishing Billy Bishop's reputation without reason.

Actually, the point I want to make differs from the one the Committee made and which Senator Molson made as well in his amendment to the report or in his motion to refer the matter back to the Committee, to add to the conclusions or recommendations we have before us now.

My point is: Is this a film that the National Film Board could produce by virtue of its mandate? After examining the provisions of the relevant legislation and the contents of the report on the film, my conclusion is that this is not a film that can truly be said to fit the mandate of the National Film Board.

Consequently, I believe the Senate has every reason to censure the National Film Board and indicate to it in some way that this type of production is unacceptable in terms of the legislation by which the Board is governed.

I examined the original legislation which goes back to 1939. It has been changed somewhat since then but has remained substantially the same with regard to the purpose of the NFB.

I would like to quote section 9 of the present legislation, chapter N-7 of the Statutes, which says:

9. The Board is established to initiate and promote the production and distribution of films in the national interest and in particular

(a) to produce and distribute and to promote the production and distribution of films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations;

(b) to represent the Government of Canada in its relations with persons engaged in commercial motion picture film activity in connection with motion picture films for the Government or any department thereof;

(c) to engage in research in film activity and to make available the results thereof to persons engaged in the production of films;

(d) to advise the Governor in Council in connection with film activities; and

(e) to discharge such other duties relating to film activity as the Governor in Council may direct it to undertake.

It is clear, even when we look at other sections of the act, that the work of the National Film Board is essentially technical. It is supposed to promote the production and distribution of films and represent the government in its relations with other agencies with the same avocation. However, the NFB has no mandate that can be said to be ideological.

We can say that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with its cultural mandate, can produce works on controversial subjects.

None of the provisions of that act gives the National Film Board free rein to indulge in an ideological controversy. I make a distinction between production and creation. In this case we have someone who created a scenario, and then produced the film. But the creation of the scenario does not really come under the responsibilities of the National Film Board. Its duty is not to promote the careers of scenario writers but only to produce films. Production is a technical element which ensures the progress of cinema. Cinema is a medium which is becoming ever more powerful, challenging and entertaining.

But the National Film Board should not express its ideological or political opinion. The National Film Board is not in a position to lecture us about war, about the merit or demerit of Billy Bishop, or about this or that. In my opinion, such a production is definitely outside its jurisdiction.

I read with interest the remarks of Senator Le Moynes. I agree with him that we must avoid censoring government agencies which enjoy a rather flexible mandate. However, when we have the unmistakable impression that a government agency goes far beyond its mandate, I think we can and must intervene. In my judgment, such is the case with respect to the production of this film.

The committee is unanimous in stating that this is not a documentary but a docu-drama—in other words, a film which combines facts and fiction. The film seems to make an argument about the behaviour of certain military people during the war, or perhaps about the policy governing the award of military decorations, etc. That is not its role.

For that reason, I agree that the Senate should censure the National Film Board. In what terms? Of course there can be no doubt about the real meaning of the unanimous report which includes the following recommendation:

That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added.

This is censure all right. Senator Molson would add two paragraphs which are recorded on page 2455 of the Debates of the Senate of May 13, 1985. They read as follows:

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

● (1520)

This recommendation is more specific in allocating blame than the report. I think that the facts justify the addition of this paragraph.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Molson would go even further, and I now quote paragraph 3:

3. That a copy of this Report as it stands or as it may be amended, be formally submitted to the Honourable Minister of Communications, with the request that it be transmitted to the National Film Board along with the Minister's specific instruction of action required of the Board to correct the wrong that has been done to the factual record of the late Air Marshal William Avery Bishop, Victoria Cross.

We now enter a technical area which could lead to confusion. The Minister of Communications is certainly responsible for the National Film Board. However, true responsibility lies with the Commissioner and members of the board.

Should the present minister receive instructions from the Senate? This is another very delicate matter which could be debated at length.

Since it makes the problem of the Senate's opinion about this film more complicated, I suggest that the third paragraph is uncalled for. In fact, I would have concluded that the Senate believes that the National Film Board should not have produced this film and should keep strictly to the technical making of films which cannot give rise to ideological controversies. I believe that to do otherwise would go beyond the terms of reference of the board and that this film goes against this principle.

By removing the third paragraph from the recommendations proposed by Senator Molson, we would be allocating blame as specifically as necessary, more so than was done in the report, and that this would clearly indicate that the Senate disagrees with the production of this film.

In these circumstances, I move, seconded by Senator Walker, that the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 3. [English]

The conclusion would certainly be clear—not necessarily expressed in the manner which I would have liked, but in a manner sufficiently clear to represent the viewpoints which so far have been expressed by most of those who have spoken on this report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It has been moved by the Honourable Senator Molson, seconded by the Honourable Senator McElman:

That the Report be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker:

That the proposal in amendment by Senator Molson be amended by deleting paragraph 3.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak at this time, I move the adjournment of the debate in the name of Senator Frith.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

RULES OF THE SENATE

RULE 67(1) AMENDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barrow:

That Rule 67(1) of the Rules of the Senate be amended by striking out paragraph (n) and substituting the following:

“(n) The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to agriculture and forestry generally, and the Canadian Wheat Board.”; and

That the following new paragraph be added immediately after paragraph (n):

“(n.1) The Senate Committee on Fisheries, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to fisheries generally.”.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise to speak to the motion covered by this order. On February 11, Senator Molgat moved an amendment to rule 67(1), which, in effect, would split the existing Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry into two committees, one on agriculture and forestry and one on fisheries—the justification being that the importance of the three fields and the complexity of the issues within them imposed tasks beyond the capacity of the current committee.

The motion is of particular interest to me as chairman of the committee which Senator Molgat proposes to split. The argument is persuasive, and, in view of the crisis which has now occurred in the agriculture industry—which is certainly in the news; we hear about it every day—certainly it can be supported.

However, I wish to take this opportunity to address a problem concerning the overall structure of the committees. This indeed involves some major problems and fails to raise some broader considerations which should be addressed in any debate about the modification of the current committee system.

While it is true that the existing Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry is sometimes hard pressed to deal with the range of issues which are now current within its field, the solution, to my mind, is not a piecemeal exercise in committee splitting. What is needed instead is for us to look at the committee structure as a whole in light of the purposes and capacities of the Senate. We must look at them in order to identify some general directions in which the Senate committees should develop.

The problem that exists with Senator Molgat's proposal in favour of splitting the existing committee is that to the extent that it applies to the Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, it applies also to other committees. The best example is the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, headed by Senator Tremblay, which at the present time is split into three subcommittees. There is a subcommittee on Veterans Affairs. As chairman of that subcommittee, I can never attend the main committee meetings. There is a Subcommittee on Elderly and Child Benefits which is presently doing a study, and another Subcommittee on Training and Employment. Each of those committees has about five or six members. It means that there are more members on the subcommittees than there are on the main committee. This is one of the problems we face.

• (1530)

I want to make it clear that I am well aware of the purpose of Senator Molgat's motion and his sincerity in proposing it. Senator Molgat and I, as well as other members of the committee, have discussed the problems we face in our responsibility to administer and to deal with perhaps three of the most important sectors of our country's economy. Further, we have to be flexible enough to deal with all the problems that exist and that arise almost on a daily basis in these three vital areas. I am also aware of the honourable senator's interest in the agricultural aspect of the region he comes from and his desire to fulfil that responsibility as a representative of that region, just as other members of the committee have the same desire. I refer here to Senator Argue and to Senator Olson, who were so strong yesterday in their questioning. Neither do I hesitate to express to Senator Molgat my appreciation of his interest in the study on the marketing of fish and the expertise he contributed to the first phase of our study, the freshwater fishery, which we will be reporting on very soon.

I also say without hesitation that when the committee began its work, the first topic raised was that of how to cope with our far-reaching mandate. I agreed with the opinions expressed on the difficulties with which we were faced, to the point of discussing them with my leaders, almost on a weekly or bi-weekly basis, and indicating the consensus of the committee. One of the ideas raised at that time was that we form three subcommittees on the three components of our responsibility. After experiencing the duties of chairman of two committees and deputy chairman of another one and being a member of two others, I have come to the conclusion that the apparent trend toward more and more committees is too simplistic an answer to the problems of our operation. In proposing that the present committee be split, Senator Molgat rightfully pointed out that four cabinet ministers deal with the fields addressed by the one Senate committee; namely, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of State for Forestry. Senator Molgat could have pointed out as well that the House of Commons also has under its new rules three committees covering the subjects which the Senate covers with one committee. They are a committee on fisheries and oceans, a new committee on the environment and forestry and a committee on agriculture.

The suggestion is that these levels of specialization respond to requirements of the renewable resources area and that the Senate follow the example of cabinet and presumably the House. However, it can be argued that this is exactly what the Senate should not do. It should not develop its committee structure by emulating that of the lower house. Instead, it should base its committee system on the distinctive purposes and capabilities of the Senate itself. The purpose of the Senate is not to echo judgments expressed in the other place, but to complement those judgments by employing the distinctive perspectives of an appointed body. The committee system in the Senate should foster the development of global and longer term approaches to issues by counterbalancing the increasingly specialized committees of the House with committees structured around the linkages between diverse government portfolios. Far from emulating the example of the House, senators should remember that they belong to an independent body with a distinctive role to play and, where practical, structure Senate committees in deliberate contrast to the House.

Dealing with the motion itself, let us look at what has happened in just a year and a half or so with the Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee. Perhaps this will indicate the amount of thought or lack of thought that went into its formulation. Everybody knows that we had a committee on agriculture. As a result of requests from me and from others to the effect that more attention should be focused on the topics of fisheries and forestry, somebody decided to expand the committee to take in these two subjects in addition to agriculture. Now, here we are, going full circle and recommending that we go back to where we started. The only difference is that the committee that was originally agriculture will now take on forestry, and another separate committee will be formed to take on fisheries. Would it not have been simpler, shown more common sense and thought if we had left the committee on agriculture alone in the first place and formed a committee on fisheries and forestry, if we are to copy the other place?

I would like to dwell on forestry, because it is always tagged onto the end of something else. The situation is quite different if we consider the three in line of importance. I have with me some figures that I received from the research people. Of the three areas, forestry has the highest annual exports at $16 billion. Agriculture is second with exports of $10.8 billion and fisheries has exports amounting to $1.6 billion. Nobody has mentioned minerals, which come second to forestry in exports and ahead of agriculture and fisheries. We export minerals worth $13.5 billion each year. It seems that we are applying band-aids, rather than doing what we are supposed to do. That is, form the committees to respond to the method of how we may best serve these areas.

[Senator Marshall.]

When I became Chairman of the Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee, we decided that we would direct our efforts toward the fishery, since a study had already been done on soil conservation. That study was a good one and was hailed across North America. The then chairman was commended throughout the country. On the advice of some learned colleagues, it was felt that the most important aspect to be addressed at the time was the marketing of fish. First, however, we had to deal with some unfinished business left over from the old committee, which had completed the study entitled "Soil at Risk." Further, we decided to withhold our start on the marketing of fish to allow the committee to do a study arising out of the report, "Soil at Risk", which resulted in the herbicide pricing report that was tabled a few months ago and about which Senator Molgat spoke in glowing terms. So, honourable senators, this committee has not neglected agriculture.

Senator Molgat will recall that last year we dealt with a bill which affected the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Senator Molgat and Senator Steuart spoke on the bill and requested of our leader that the matter be referred to the fisheries committee. In response on behalf of the party, I indicated that we would deal with it in committee during our study on the marketing of fish and, furthermore, that it would be the first phase of our study on marketing. I think we fulfilled that commitment to its fullest, as we have spent the last months dealing extensively with that aspect. I should also mention that in an attempt to deal with all aspects of the committee's mandate, the whip agreed to give us another time slot. This meant that the committee had available two time periods every week and we used those periods to good advantage. This proves that we had some flexibility in dealing with other aspects of our mandate.

I am sure that if Senator Molgat were here, he would be saying to himself that I should not be complaining, because if the committee is split it will give me back the fisheries committee that I lobbied for in the first place. I can only repeat that after my experience as chairman I have learned to recognize that we cannot expect to have a committee for every topic that is of concern to an individual senator or group unless we are prepared to combine our efforts, as we have attempted to do, or to extend our sittings. I am also sure that Senator Molgat and other honourable senators who have strong feelings on the matter are aware of the difficulty we have on this side with only 20-odd members in manning all the committees.

Senator Bosa: You will soon have the majority.

Senator Marshall: I hope so.

Nor do I wish to leave the impression with those who propose the establishment of the committee, that concentrating on their own particular interests is not important. I have been as guilty as anyone. My efforts resulted in the formation of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, as well as increasing the mandate of this committee by including fisheries. But we have to learn to be able to divide. We have to learn to be able to divide the number of senators who attend committees into the number of committees we have times the number of hours and days we are prepared to attend and stick to a schedule commensurate with some realistic objectives and rules by which we should abide. There are already 11 Standing Senate Committees, two Special Committees, five Joint Standing Committees and one Joint Special Committee, for a total of 19 committees. I do not know how we are to divide that number of committees into the number of people available to sit on them. It can thus be argued that the existing committee system is already ill-suited to the actual capabilities of the Senate, because it subdivides scarce resources to the point where overall effectiveness suffers.

● (1540)

However, honourable senators, in view of the crisis that exists, and after discussions with my leader, it is very obvious to me that we have to be more flexible in trying to pool all of our resources in order to provide support for agriculture which is in such a dire crisis at the present time. I want to make just one point, and it has to do with the discussion which is taking place today. Just last week, all of the committee chairmen met on the particular problem of the proliferation of committees, the budgets we have to contend with and the fact that, together with the 19 committees I have already mentioned, we are looking at the formation of a committee on Parliament, a committee on Indian affairs and northern development, a committee on human rights and a committee on terrorism. Therefore there are four more committees. If you multiply that by 12, that indicates that another 48 people are needed to sit on those committees.

Apart from that, no one is yet talking about one of the most important topics in the country today, namely the environment and, as I mentioned before, the subject of minerals which is of great export value to the country.

Honourable senators, let me just leave you with one example of the Social Affairs Committee which Senator Tremblay chairs. Under his mandate, he has 12 responsibilities. There is a Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, which I chair now and which takes up a great deal of my time; there is a committee on Indian and Inuit affairs, and now we are facing the formation of a committee on Indian affairs and northern development, which is justified. Senator Tremblay also is supposed to look after matters of cultural affairs and the arts, which is important. There is a committee on social and labour matters and another committee on health and welfare. I am wondering why we do not have a committee on health and welfare or a committee on pensions, subjects which are so important today. Perhaps we should have a committee on housing, since there are people across the country today who do not have a place to live. Fitness and amateur sports is another topic that we could be discussing, as is employment and immigration, which is a topic close to our hearts today. Another topic is consumer and corporate affairs, which is so important. Another aspect which should be considered is youth affairs. Instead of dealing with youth affairs under the committee that already has that responsibility, we formed another special committee with a big budget and thereby stretched our numbers even further.

Another important matter is the present financial crisis that has struck agriculture, and in that respect there was a meeting last night and I believe there is a debate going on in the other place today. This crisis in agriculture is the most severe since the 1930s, and the negative psychological effects of that crisis are becoming so apparent.

Therefore I feel, despite the problems that we face, we have the flexibility and the resources here in the Senate to be able to improvise and to set up a committee on agriculture. I would therefore urge the adoption of the motion.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

MEETING IN ITALY—REPORT PRINTED AS APPENDIX

On Inquiry No. 3:

By the Honourable Senator Macquarrie:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the meetings of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association held in Italy from March 21 to 31, 1986.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I would like to intervene on a matter of order and procedure. Some time ago, I remember Senator Stanbury requesting leave of the Senate to have a report that he had available published as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate so that, when the time came for debate a few days later, honourable senators would have had the opportunity to read that report.

I propose not to drop my oratorical gems today, but would like to proceed after our adjournment till the 27th. In the meantime, I would ask that this small report be appended to the Debates of the Senate of today.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "B", p. 2486.)

Inquiry stands.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SEVENTY-FIFTH CONFERENCE, MEXICO CITY

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of May 13, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Seventy-fifth Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, held in Mexico City, Mexico, from 7th to 12th April, 1986.

He said: Honourable senators, yesterday I gave notice that I would draw the attention of the Senate to the Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference which took place in Mexico City in April. However, at that time, I was not aware that the Senate would not meet tomorrow. I discussed this matter with Senator

Phillips and with Senator Petten, and I am wondering whether the Senate would have any objections to my proceeding with the matter today.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Bosa: It gives me great pleasure to report to you today on the Seventy-fifth Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union which was held in Mexico City between April 7 and April 12, 1986.

The Canadian delegation was made up of Mr. Benno Friesen, Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis, Mr. Simon de Jong, Mr. François Gérin, Mr. Bill Gottselig and Mr. Marcel Prud'homme representing the House of Commons, and Senator Robert Muir and myself representing the Senate. Mr. Friesen was the chairman of the Canadian delegation and Mrs. Duplessis and I were vice-chairmen. The delegation was accompanied by Mr. Stephen Knowles of the Parliamentary Relations Secretariat, who served as our executive secretary, and by Mrs. Barbara Reynolds who served very capably as our adviser.

The meetings of the Association of Secretaries-General of Parliament were held concurrently with the IPU Conference. Canada was represented at those meetings by Mr. Charles Lussier, the Clerk of the Senate, Mr. Richard Greene, the Clerk Assistant of the Senate, and Mrs. Nora Lever, the Principal Clerk of the House of Commons.

Before leaving home, the Canadian delegation was briefed by officials of the Department of External Affairs and the Canadian International Development Agency on the various subject matters that were to be on the agenda. In Mexico, we were greatly assisted by the staff of the Canadian embassy. The Ambassador, His Excellency, Mr. Raymond Chrétien, invited us to the embassy to review various aspects of Canada-Mexico relations including bilateral trade and commercial relations, the debt situation, cultural exchanges and Canada's ongoing and emergency aid to Mexico including the assistance provided following the earthquake of September, 1985.

Mr. and Mrs. Chrétien are a charming couple and excellent hosts. All members of the delegation felt very much at home with them. I would be remiss in my duty if I did not single out at least two gentlemen from the embassy: Mr. Terry Wood, Third Secretary and Vice-Consul, and Mr. Emile Martel, Counsellor and Consul. Both of them displayed an eagerness to assist us in all our endeavours. They attended our caucus meetings which took place at 7.30 in the morning at the Camino Real Hotel where we were staying. They provided valuable advice to some of us on speeches we were called upon to deliver and, in short, they made it easier for us to carry out our duties at the conference.

● (1550)

Mexico is a country of approximately 80 million people and has an area of 1.98 million square kilometres. It has one of the highest foreign debts of the Third World countries. During the last five years it has begun to sell sizeable amounts of oil and petroleum products. Last year Canada imported $1.33 billion worth of goods and services from Mexico while exporting $391 million worth of goods and services to it. Our relations with Mexico are good. Our trade and exchanges are on the increase. At the time of the earthquake in Mexico City last September, Canada responded generously to the plight of the victims. The government has so far pledged $5 million in emergency aid—$1.25 million was dispensed in immediate relief and a further $3.75 million for reconstruction purposes was announced by External Relations Minister Monique Vezina on 7 November 1985. The funds will be allocated as follows in keeping with the priorities identified by the Mexican government: $1 million for reconstruction of the National College of Technical Education; another $1 million for housing and community services, to be jointly administered by a Reconstruction and Reorganization Committee, which includes representatives of CIDA and IDRC; a third $1 million for a drinking water and public health project initiated by UNICEF in the State of Guerrero. In addition, the Canadian embassy has been given $250,000 in discretionary funds for local needs. The remaining $500,000 will go toward various projects in the areas of housing, health and education.

[Senator Bosa]

Three days before the conference began, Mr. Friesen and I represented Canada at a meeting of the Ten-Plus group. The formation of this group arose out of the fact that, increasingly, various like-minded countries are forming "caucuses" in international organizations to discuss issues of common interest and to co-ordinate their positions. The Ten-Plus group began a few years ago with the ten members of the European Economic Community and, subsequently, countries from Western Europe, North America and the Pacific region decided to join them. The name Ten-Plus was chosen because the group was formed from the ten members of the EEC, plus a number of other countries. The name was changed at this meeting to Twelve-Plus in recognition of the recent admission of Portugal and Spain to membership in the EEC. Today the group consists of all the members of the EEC, all the democratic countries of Western Europe—except Finland—Canada, the United States, Australia and New Zealand.

The group discussed various issues expected to arise at the conference, such as the relationship between the IPU and other supra-national parliamentary organizations; the preparation of a commemorative publication to mark the 100th anniversary in 1989 of the founding of the IPU; the election of the new Secretary General of the IPU; and themes for the October 1986 conference. In addition to this first meeting, the group continued to meet each morning of the conference.

The Executive Committee of the IPU also met before the conference began. Canada was represented by the head of its delegation, Mr. Friesen. The committee reviewed various issues relating to the organization of the IPU, such as the appointment of a new Secretary General, the recommendations on admission of new member delegations, the organization of future conferences, topics for the 76th Inter-Parliamentary Conference in Buenos Aires, and the possible duplication of the IPU's work by other inter-parliamentary organizations.

The conference was opened by His Excellency, Señor Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado, the President of Mexico, Senator Antonio Riva Palacio Lopez, the President of the Grand Committee of the Senate and of the Mexican IPU group, Dr. Hans Stercken, the President of the Council of the IPU, and Mr. Hugo Navayas Mogro, Under Secretary General of the United Nations. During the opening ceremony, tribute was paid to the memory of the people killed in the earthquake of September 1985 and in the recent aircraft crash in Mexico.

Following the inaugural ceremony, the Inter-Parliamentary Council met and welcomed Honduras and Guatemala to membership in the Union. It also readmitted Liberia and suspended temporarily the membership of Haiti and the Philippines.

During the first plenary session, the conference considered requests for possible inclusion as supplementary items on the conference agenda. Four items were suggested: the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union; the question of the Palestinians, Lebanon, occupied Arab territories and the Iraq-Iran war; armed conflict and international law; and American aggression against Libya. After the Iranians and Syrians had withdrawn their proposals, the Iraqi proposal was accepted as the supplementary item on the agenda.

Also on the agenda were resolutions on disarmament, terrorism and the Contadora process; the role of science and technology in the economic advancement of developing countries; and the general world situation.

Mr. Gottselig and I spoke on the Contadora process. I noted that despite various efforts at disarmament, there had been almost 150 armed conflicts in the world since World War II. I stated that one cannot give up hope, however, and noted the importance of verification in making real progress in arms control and disarmament. I discussed the importance of international co-operation in dealing with terrorism and raised the Contadora process, and Mexico's role in it, as attempts to reach a reconciliation in Central America.

Mr. Gottselig spoke on terrorism and Canada's support for international efforts against it, including this country's co-sponsorship of the United Nations resolution against terrorism passed unanimously in December, 1985. He said that tough measures were required to stop terrorism and pointed to Canada's firm opposition to the making of concessions to terrorists. He also felt that terrorists must meet with certain and severe punishment for their acts and that the "prosecute or extradite" clauses of various treaties that relate to terrorism in civil aviation should be extended to other forms of transportation.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis and Mr. Simon de Jong spoke on the item dealing with the role of science and technology in economic development. Mrs. Duplessis noted the importance of transferring the results of fundamental scientific research to developing countries. She felt that priorities should be placed on the promotion of literacy programs and on the provision of clean water.

Mr. de Jong spoke of the cost of the ongoing arms race which, he felt, had resulted in a lower standard of living for everyone. He also emphasized the need for a new international economic order to aid the progress of developing countries. On the topic of technological development, Mr. de Jong said he believed that the primary concern of science should be the improvement of life for people and that it should assist rather than exploit them.

In the debate on the general world situation, Mr. Friesen and I both spoke. Mr. Friesen talked of the proliferation of terrorism in the world today. He noted that some people feel that one cannot deal with terrorism until economic conditions have changed. He felt, however, that economics was not the only cause of terrorism and that terrorists also act on outdated notions of morality and society. He urged countries never to concede to terrorism and reminded them that the rule of law is an absolute necessity in their societies.

I spoke on the tension among nations, pointing out that the United Nations is not being used as a forum for the resolution of international conflicts. I called for confidence building measures in order to alleviate the deep mistrust that exists among nations of the world. I concluded my remarks by asking for respect for the individual, for human rights, for non-intervention in the internal affairs of other countries and for democracy and freedom.

Two committees of the IPU met during the conference: the First Committee on Political Questions, International Security and Disarmament and the Third Committee on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Questions.

The First Committee, under the Chairmanship of Mr. Marcel Prud'homme, and with Senator Robert Muir serving as the Canadian representative, considered the supplementary item proposed by the group from Iraq. After a plenary debate on the substance of the resolution, a committee was selected to examine the draft resolution.

● (1600)

The first committee also considered the third item on the agenda, the resolution concerning the contribution of Parliaments to halting the arms race, combatting terrorism and supporting the efforts of the Contadora Group. The Canadian group, represented by Mr. François Gérin, submitted a memorandum and a draft resolution on the subject of international terrorism which was based on the December, 1985 United Nations resolution with two additional points: a policy of no concessions and an enactment of a prosecute or extradite policy. Both of these points were accepted. The draft resolution prepared by the drafting committee was adopted without a vote by the full committee.

The Third Committee on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Questions considered agenda item No. 4 which dealt with the role of science and technology and the economic advancement of developing countries and their effects on the welfare of mankind. Canada was represented on this committee by Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis. The draft resolution presented by the drafting committee was adopted without a vote of the full committee.

On Wednesday, April 9, Mrs. Duplessis attended the meeting of women parliamentarians chaired by Senator Guadalupe Gomez Maganda of Mexico. During the session on women in the workplace, Mrs. Duplessis discussed measures taken by Canada in this field including the employment equity legislation and the establishment of a task force on child care. The meeting decided to hold a one-day meeting at the 76th Conference in Argentina to allow for a full discussion of various agenda items including the preparation of the 1987 report. Women parliamentarians also planned to meet at a conference in Bonn in May, 1986.

During our stay in Mexico, Mr. Bill Gottselig took the opportunity, along with officials from the Canadian embassy and Agriculture Canada, to visit the International Maize and Wheat Improvement Centre to which the Canadian International Development Agency will contribute $1.65 million this year to help research into ways to improve farming in developing countries.

The final plenary session of the conference was held on Saturday, April 12, to examine the various draft resolutions. The conference adopted unanimously the resolution on agenda Item No. 3 on disarmament, international terrorism and the Contadora process. The draft resolution on Item No. 4, dealing with science, technology and the economic advancement of developing countries was adopted by consensus of the conference. The draft resolution on the supplementary item concerning the Palestinian question, Lebanon, occupied Arab territories and the Iran-Iraq war was ultimately accepted by the conference after amendments by the Netherlands and Canada were passed. The Canadian amendments were moved by Mr. Marcel Prud'homme.

Mr. Prud'homme has served on the executive of the Canadian National Group for a number of years in various positions including being its chairman during 1983 and 1984. At the IPU international he has served as rapporteur on disarmament at the Rome conference in 1982 and as a one-man committee to reconcile the wording of two resolutions submitted at the Seoul Conference in 1983 by the states of Iran and Iraq on the Gulf war.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme was elected chairman of the Inter-parliamentary Union Committee on political questions, international security and disarmament for two years in Geneva in 1984, and ended his mandate in Mexico in April, 1986. Throughout his involvement with the IPU, Mr. Prud'homme has taken a special interest in establishing contacts with the non-aligned Arab and African nations. In Mexico he has performed a valuable role in chairing the sessions dealing with Item No. 3 on disarmament, international terrorism and the Contadora process, as well as the sessions dealing with the supplementary item on the Middle East, Lebanon and the Iran-Iraq war. Because of his special relationship with many IPU members, he was able, in plenary session, to introduce successfully two amendments to the draft resolution on the supplementary item to delete contentious words.

[Senator Bosa.]

This is why I wanted to give Marcel a plug! Because of what he was able to achieve in plenary session.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Hear, hear.

Senator Bosa: First, he moved deletion of the words "to recover their entire territory" from the phrase "affirms the inalienable rights of the Arab Palestinian people to recover their entire territory, to return to their homeland."—which means that the state of Israel would have had to disappear.

Second, he moved the deletion of the contentious words "U.S. and Israeli as well as" and "other" from the original text which reads as follows:

Strongly condemns U.S. and Israeli as well as any other actions which pose a threat to civil aviation security and endanger passenger safety.

At the final session of the IPU Council, the President, Dr. Hans Stercken, thanked Mr. Prud'homme—as he retired as chairman of the political committee—for his untiring efforts.

To sum up, the 75th Conference was a great success.

Notwithstanding the success, though, of this conference, there are a number of delegates who believe that the IPU activities should be reviewed and reformed again to make them more effective.

Honourable senators might recall a speech I made on the history of IPU on June 27, 1985, during which I outlined the reforms that had been effected in 1984. Prior to 1984 the conferences were too cumbersome. In the last decade the number of national groups grew from less than 70 to more than 100. There was a tendency to crowd the agenda with more and more supplementary items, numbers of speakers, specialized meetings, caucuses, receptions, and so on. The union adopted a series of measures designed to make it more efficient. It was decided that two annual conferences were to take place rather than adhering to an annual cycle, which included preparatory meetings in the spring and a main conference in the autumn. The conferences were to last one week rather than two; the number of delegates was reduced, in the case of Canada, from 12 to 8; the agenda was limited to a maximum of four items rather than the very extensive list which had been possible previously.

Only two and a half years after this major reorganization there is a movement afoot at this time to further reform the conferences to make them more reflective still in dealing with the very important problems that prevail in the international community. These are signs of vitality, and I hope that the IPU, the world's oldest international organization—it will be 100 years old in 1989—will continue to provide a forum where international issues will be debated and bridges built among nations. This is the aim of the IPU. It is up to the national groups, then, to convince their respective parliaments to live up to the spirit of the resolutions that have been adopted at these international conferences.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

THE SENATE

RECEPTION FOR NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In accordance with tradition, you are all invited, senators, officers and pages, to come to the Reading Room to meet Senator Cogger and his family immediately after the Senate rises.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 27, 1986 at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 2473)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

INTERIM REPORT ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-67

WEDNESDAY, May 14, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to table its

TWENTY-FIRST REPORT

Your Committee to which was referred the subject-matter of Bill C-67, intituled: "An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, December 17, 1985, examined the said subject-matter and now submits an interim report thereon. This report is not intended to be exhaustive, and the Committee will continue its pre-study of the Bill pursuant to the order of reference. There are four areas of concern about the proposed legislation that we wish to deal with at present.

1. Judicial Determination of Detention

The first issue has to do with the question of what is the appropriate body to make decisions with respect to the detention of allegedly "dangerous" inmates beyond the date of their eligibility for release on mandatory supervision. It is the opinion of the Committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32, An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act (on June 6, 1983 in the First Session of the Thirty-Second Parliament), namely, that the courts, rather than the National Parole Board, should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates who would otherwise be eligible for release on mandatory supervision. We have heard the comments of the Solicitor General with respect to the appropriateness of the Board taking on this responsibility, but with respect we must disagree. While recognizing that the legislation attempts to ensure that, in the words of the Minister, "inmates are afforded the best procedural safeguards available to administrative tribunals", we are still of the view that such decisions, affecting as they do the liberty of individuals, are more appropriately addressed in a judicial rather than an administrative forum, where affected inmates would have recourse to all the procedural rights and protections available in the criminal courts, as well as a distinct right of appeal.

2. Entrenching Guidelines in the Legislation

The second issue concerns the decision to allow the Governor in Council to make regulations dealing with: guidelines with respect to detention orders; the right to assistance at hearings of the Board into such detention orders; and the withholding of information from inmates subject to the detention process. Our comments on these matters would be equally applicable if the courts were the decision-makers with respect to detention orders.

The Committee considers that the substance of the regulations contemplated to be made pursuant to section 15.6 of the Parole Act, as it would be amended by Bill C-67, should instead form part of the legislation itself. The proposed section would give the Governor in Council authority to make regulations "establishing guidelines with respect to the application by the Board of subsections 15.3(7) and 15.4(4) and section 15.5". It is clear to your Committee that any such guidelines will have an effect upon decisions touching personal rights and liberties and that policy directions as to how these decisions should be reached ought to be given by Parliament itself. We hold a similar view with respect to the power to prescribe what information may be communicated to or withheld from an inmate about the evidence which will be presented at a hearing to determine whether that inmate's incarceration should be continued, and with respect to the power to determine whether an inmate is entitled to assistance at a hearing and the kind and extent of such assistance as well as the persons or class of persons who may provide it. In this latter regard, we note that the right to counsel was guaranteed under Bill S-32 as proceedings of this nature would have been conducted before a court. In addition, section 15.6(2)(b) allows the Governor in Council to prescribe the offences the commission of which will trigger an automatic review. Once again, this is a matter critical to the liberty of incarcerated individuals and in our view the offences should be determined by Parliament itself.

3. Limiting "One Shot" Mandatory Supervision

The third issue has to do with what has become known as "one-shot" mandatory supervision - the denial of the right to earn further remission to certain inmates whose mandatory supervision has been revoked. We note that the scope of this amendment was considerably narrowed in the legislative committee of the House of Commons. Only inmates who have been made the subject of formal consideration for detention under proposed s. 15.4 of the Bill, but who are not detained by order of the Board, are to lose the right to earn further remission on reincarceration following revocation of their release on mandatory supervision. This amendment, however, fails to take account of the criticism that an inmate may have his release revoked for the contravention of terms and conditions of that release which have nothing to do with his or her perceived or potential dangerousness. Even the narrow class of inmates who would become subject to the "one-shot" amendment should not lose the right to earn remission by reason of a "technical" or minor breach of conditions which results in revocation. That right should only be lost if there is a criminal conviction while on release.

4. Review and Termination of the Legislation

The fourth, and final issue has to do with the duration of this proposed legislation, and the process by which it should be reviewed. The Solicitor General has indicated that Bill C-67 is, in many respects, a stop-gap measure, intended to deal with some pressing issues pending a more thorough revision of corrections legislation in the near future. In view of this, the Committee is of the opinion that the Bill should contain a "sunset" clause which would deem its provisions to have no force after a certain date. We would fix that date at five years from the coming into force of the legislation. Bill S-32 contained a "sunset" provision (on its main amendments) of three years. The provision for a review of the operation of the Bill after three years, which was added in the Legislative Committee of the House, should remain. We feel, however, that such a review should be undertaken by a joint committee of both Houses of Parliament, and not only a Committee of the House of Commons. The deliberations of the joint Committee would be of assistance in the formulation of new legislation to replace the Bill.

Respectfully submitted,

DEREK P. LEWIS
for Nathan Nurgitz (Deputy Chairman)

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 2479)

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

MEETING IN ITALY, MARCH 21 to 31, 1986

The Official Parliamentary delegation which visited Italy from March 21 to 31, 1986 has the honour to present its

REPORT

The Canadian parliamentary delegation was led by Mr. Jack Ellis, M.P., Chairman of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association. The other members of the delegation were:

The Honourable Lorne Bonnell, Senator
 The Honourable Heath Macquarrie, Senator
 Mr. David Orlikow, M.P.
 Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart, M.P.
 Mr. John A. MacDougall, M.P.
 Mr. Vincent Della Noce, M.P.
 Mrs. Danielle Parent-Belisle,
 Executive Secretary of the Association

To permit the number of delegates and spouses to participate in this parliamentary visit, it had been decided by the Executive of the Association that all delegates travel economy class (apex fare).

The Italian parliamentarians involved in the visit were:

On. Giuseppe Azzaro,
 Vice-president of the Chamber of Deputies
 Senator Giovanni Prandini,
 Under-Secretary for Foreign Trade
 Senator Learco Saporito
 On. Karl Mitterdorfer,
 Chairman, Italy-Canada Parliamentary Group
 On. Romeo Ricciuti, deputy
 On Bruno Stegagnini, deputy
 On. Bruno Ferrari, deputy
 On. Savio Gastone, deputy
 On. Giovanni Giadresco, deputy

The delegation was in Italy from March 21 to 31, 1986. It was the first time that a delegation of Canadian parliamentarians travelled to Italy to meet their homologues to discuss a wide range of issues on an informal basis according to a mutually prearranged programme.

The official visit began on Friday, March 21 in Milan where the Canadian parliamentary group undertook a rigorous series of meetings and discussions with key local government leaders including the prefect of Milan, Dr. Enzo Vicari; the President of the Lombardy government, Avv. Giuseppe Guzzetti; the vice-president of the regional parliament, Ing. Vittorio Korach; and the vice-mayor of Milan, Hon. Antonio Del Pennino. In addition to trade and economic issues, discussions dealt with subjects such as the structure and role of regional government, how political power is shared between Rome and the regions and the effects of increasingly decentralizing the political process.

In Rome, the delegates met with the Hon. Giuseppe Azzaro, vice-president of the House of Deputies, with Mr. Karl Mitterdorfer, president of the Italy-Canada parliamentary group and with several other parliamentarians. At a round table with members of the Italian Senate and Chamber of Deputies, the discussions focussed mainly on the subject of current Canadian immigration policy and more specifically, the proposed establishment of Italian Emigration Committees in Canada.

Such Committees had been proposed in May 1985 through legislation passed by the Italian Parliament. It specified that they be established in every sizeable community of Italian origin lying outside Italy. Their purpose would be to attend to the welfare of the communities by "taking on responsibility for, in cooperation and in coordination with the consular authorities, promotion functions, taking also appropriate steps with regard to subjects relating to social and cultural life, assistance, recreation, sports and the free time activities of Italian nationals resident in the Consular District."

The Canadian delegation expressed the views of the Government that the creation of such Committees would, amongst other reasons, be counter to the Canadian policy on Multiculturalism. It was also noted that the various Italian Canadian Committees across Canada had expressed opposition to the formation of these Committees. The Italians nevertheless expressed a strong desire to begin dialogue with Canada to avoid any future misunderstandings.

Questions regarding economic development and industrial cooperation, were also raised. The Canadian delegation underlined that promotion of industrial cooperation between Canada and Italy should continue to be a priority component of our trade activities with this country. Technology transfer and political cooperation matters were also discussed.

Previously arranged meetings with the Hon. Amintore Fanfani, president of the Senate and with Dr. Arnaldo Forlani, vice-president of the Council of Ministers had to be cancelled due to the events which had just occurred in the Mediterranean Sea (USA-Libyan crisis).

The official visit included a day in Florence and a day in l'Aquila where the Hon. Bruno Stegagnini, deputy and the Hon. Romeo Ricciuti, deputy were respectively host to the delegation's visit in their own riding. In Florence, the delegation also met with Hon. Massimo Bogianckino, mayor of the city and in l'Aquila with Dottor Enzo Lombardi, mayor of l'Aquila and Avv Sergio Cataldi, mayor of Avezanno. The delegation was also recognized by the regional Council of Abruzzo and the regional giunta of Abruzzo in their respective chambers. In the regional giunta, members representing each of the five recognized Parties spoke on the healthy state of current relations between Canada and Italy.

The group met with business representatives and toured manufacturing facilities in both the industrialized north as well as in the central Abruzzo area.

During their stay in Italy, the delegation had a private audience with His Holiness, Pope John Paul II, and visited the war grave cemetery at Cassino where a wreath was laid in honour of the 855 Canadians buried there.

The visit provided the delegation with the opportunity to familiarize themselves with several geographical areas of Italy and to meet with a cross section of Italians including top members of federal, regional and local governments. The meetings proved useful in sensitizing Canadian parliamentarians to the concerns of their Italian counterparts, in establishing a direct link between Canadian and Italian parliamentarians and in contributing significantly to efforts to enhance the bilateral relationship as a whole.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 27, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

SECHELT INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-93, relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

[English]

GRASSY NARROWS AND ISLINGTON INDIAN BANDS MERCURY POLLUTION CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-110, to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Government of Canada, the Government of Ontario, Reed Inc., Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd., the Islington Indian Band and the Grassy Narrows Indian Band.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44 (1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons in the following wording:

Ordered,—That, notwithstanding the Order of the House made on Wednesday, June 12, 1985, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations be empowered to present its final report not later than Wednesday, June 25, 1986; and

That a message be sent to the Senate to request that the Senate unite with this House for the above purpose.

ATTEST

MICHAEL B. KIRBY

for the Clerk of the House of Commons

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That, notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Thursday, June 27, 1985, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations be empowered to present its final report no later than Wednesday, June 25, 1986; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that the Senate do unite with that House for the above purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Dalia Wood, Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages tabled the following report:

Tuesday, May 27, 1986

The Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Official Languages has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

In relation to its Order of Reference from the Senate dated Tuesday, March 25, 1986 and its Order of Reference from the House of Commons dated Thursday, February 27, 1986, your Committee has considered Vote 15 under PRIVY COUNCIL in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, and reports the same.

Respectfully submitted,

DALIA WOOD
Chairman

[Translation]

PARLIAMENTARY AFFAIRS COMMISSION OF THE
INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FRENCH-SPEAKING PARLIAMENTARIANS

MEETING IN BRAZIL—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, June 4, 1986, I will call the attention of the Senate to a meeting held in Brazil from April 22 to 26, 1986, by the Parliamentary Affairs Commission of the International Association of French-speaking Parliamentarians on the following subject: Women in Parliament.

[English]

CANADA PETROLEUM RESOURCES

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED
TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-92

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-92, intituled: "An Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES AND SHINGLES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether the Government of Canada is making representations to the Government of the United States to rescind the presidential order which placed a 35 per cent duty on shakes and shingles and which, if implemented, would cause the loss of thousands of jobs in British Columbia. Is the government making representations to have that order rescinded?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The answer is, yes, honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: Would the Leader of the Government tell me whether representations have been made by the Prime Minister to the President? He will recall that on the occasion of the Libyan adventure, the President and the Prime Minister had several conversations. I wonder whether this incident justified the Prime Minister's making personal representations to the President and were those made by the Prime Minister himself?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think the first step will be a meeting between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the American Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz.

Senator MacEachen: Representations have not yet taken place and the first representation will take place at a meeting between the two ministers. When will that meeting take place?

Senator Roblin: I cannot say for sure whether any representations have taken place so far. I am not aware of them if they have. However, I do know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Clark, will be meeting with Mr. Shultz on Friday to discuss this matter.

Senator MacEachen: A week will have elapsed and the government will not have made any direct representations to the Government of the United States requesting that this particular order be rescinded.

Senator Roblin: I cannot respond to that statement directly because I do not know, but I imagine that the letter sent by the Prime Minister to the President of the United States conveys some idea of our concern with respect to this matter.

I can say that we are formally seeking compensation from the American authorities if they decide not to rescind this order.

I can also say that the representatives of the shakes and shingles industry from British Columbia will be meeting in Ottawa tomorrow with Mr. Clark and other ministers to discuss the Canadian reaction.

Senator MacEachen: I am most surprised that the government would have allowed a week to go by without making a direct request to the President and to his officials to rescind this order in accordance with the unanimous resolution passed by the House of Commons last Friday. Is it a fact that the government has not transmitted that resolution to the Government of the United States? The Leader of the Government has said that representations will be made for the first time on Friday.

Yesterday, I believe, the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that today the cabinet would be considering retaliatory action, that a range of options was being considered, and that a decision might be reached today regarding retaliatory action against the United States. Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether any decision has been reached?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend must not put words in my mouth or make assumptions from what I have said. He said that we have not made representations to the United States with respect to the resolution passed by the House of Commons the other day. I have no specific information on that and I would not like him to think that nothing has been done. I can certainly ascertain what the facts are, but I would not like him to think that the meeting between the secretaries of state of the two countries on Friday is the first action to be taken, because I am fairly confident that it is not.

Senator MacEachen: Based on his confidence, can the Leader of the Government tell me what form the representations have taken?

Senator Roblin: I cannot allow my honourable friend to draw me out because I have already said that I do not have the details at my disposal at the moment.

Senator MacEachen: Does the Leader of the Government know whether the government has made a decision about retaliatory action?

Senator Roblin: The government has considered the matter and has certain alternatives in front of it. No decision will be made on those until we have had a chance to speak with the people from British Columbia.

● (1410)

Senator MacEachen: Presumably, the same reasoning applies to the proposal for assistance to the affected persons in British Columbia; that no decision will be made until after the conversation tomorrow with those persons affected.

Senator Roblin: Generally speaking, we think it advisable to talk to the parties at interest.

Senator MacEachen: In spite of the allegedly intimate personal relationship between the President and the Prime Minister and the allegedly warm and unprecedented new era of American-Canadian relations, the Canadian embassy, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs had absolutely no prior knowledge whatsoever of this action that was taken by the President of the United States. Can the government leader give us any plausible explanation as to how that could happen, in view of the allegedly warm relations to which the honourable senator has, himself, referred so many times in the Senate?

Senator Roblin: I think that will be a matter that will be discussed between the President and the Prime Minister.

Senator MacEachen: Neither the President nor the Prime Minister is here. I am asking the Leader of the Government why the Canadian embassy did not know about this pending action. Why did not Mr. Deaver, to whom we are paying over $100,000 a year as a consultant, know about this presidential action?

Senator Roblin: I think that the American government held that card pretty close to its vest.

Senator MacEachen: That is absurd. The card was not held close to the vest because the Premier of British Columbia wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada on May 6, telling him that this decision was imminent. In fact, I believe he indicated the date before which the decision had to be taken and asked the Prime Minister to call the President. The Premier of British Columbia was greatly afraid that this action would be taken by the President of the United States. Why is it that the Canadian government, Mr. Deaver and all of the others who have made themselves authorities on Canada-U.S. relations, did not know about this action when the Premier of British Columbia did know about it?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend will just reflect for a moment, he will understand very well that a lot of people knew the date by which a decision was to be taken. That is perfectly correct. What we did not know was that the answer of the President would be adverse to our interests. We knew that a decision would be made but it was our expectation that it would not be an adverse one.

Senator MacEachen: Did the government make any representations that led it to conclude that it would be a favourable decision? Was the government led to believe by anybody—and, if so, by whom—that it would be a favourable decision?

Senator Roblin: I am completely unable to answer that question because it is a matter of discussion between the two governments. I must tell my honourable friend that there is no way in which I can put myself in the place of those actually conducting the negotiations and advise him of an answer.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government has stated that the Canadian government believed that the decision would be favourable. That is what he said. Did they believe it so thoroughly that they did not bother picking up the phone to ask for a favourable decision? I think it is reasonable to ask what led the Government of Canada to this conclusion. Was it Mr. Gotlieb who called up to say that everything was OK? Was it Mr. Deaver who led the government to this belief? On what evidence did the government base its decision?

Senator Roblin: My friend is a great one for sketching scenarios that suit his purpose. I do not believe that that scenario is correct.

Senator Olson: He is asking a question.

Senator Roblin: All right; I will take the question as notice. Because it is clear to everybody here that I had no part in these negotiations, I will have to take the question as notice to find out if there is more information that I can provide. For my honourable friend to draw a sketchy scenario which suits the purpose of his argument is all very well for him, but it may have nothing to do with the facts of the matter.

Senator MacEachen: I am not introducing facts. I am basing my questions on what has been stated by the Leader of the Government within the last few minutes. I asked why it was that the Prime Minister of Canada did not respond to the urgent message of the Premier of British Columbia, who was terrified that this action would in fact be taken. And when I asked why the Prime Minister did not do something, the Leader of the Government said, "Because we had no reason to believe that the decision would be anything but favourable."

Senator Frith: Exactly.

Senator MacEachen: Is it stretching the scenario, honourable senators, to ask the Leader of the Government, "On what did you base your view that the decision would be favourable?"

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: No, it is not stretching it at all. I have told my honourable friend three times that I will find out for him what I can.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has made the statement that the Government of Canada had reason to believe that the decision would be favourable. I want to know on what evidence. The Leader of the Government cannot say, "I believed it, but I had no evidence; the government believed it but had no evidence."

Senator Frith: He can say that.

Senator MacEachen: He said it, but it does not make sense. I ask the Leader of the Government, in view of an obvious breakdown in communication between Washington and Ottawa, whether the government is now re-appraising its foreign policy approach to the United States. After all, the Secretary of State for External Affairs described this action as "a surprise attack." Is the Leader of the Government still ready to repeat those soothing comments he has made about Canada-U.S. relations, in light of this development?

Senator Roblin: I am certainly not prepared to escalate the war as my honourable friend appears to wish to do. I have told him that I have been advised that we did not expect an adverse answer. I am entitled to make that statement, because that is the information given to me. If my honourable friend wants further information with respect to it and if it is available, I will be able to get it for him. But I refuse to allow him to stand up and pontificate on this matter in the way that he does in order to produce an effect.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, it is hilarious to accuse me of escalating the matter. No other Prime Minister that I know of in the history of Canada has used such intemperate language with respect to a President of the United States, as the present Prime Minister of Canada has done. No one could escalate this.

Senator Frith: Or pontificate.

Senator MacEachen: The Prime Minister has called the action "unjustified", "unacceptable" and "bizarre". I would suggest that the Leader of the Government go to the Oxford dictionary to find out what "bizarre" means. That is the word used by the Prime Minister. Mr. Clark, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, called it, among other things, "eccentric." So the Leader of the Government should not accuse me of escalating a controversy the like of which we have never before seen between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States—never. The Leader of the Government had better not try that line. But I return to the utterance which he made in his unjustified rhetoric, his eccentric, bizarre, grotesque rhetoric. The Leader of the Government said that he had information that led him to believe that the decision would be favourable. Where did you get it?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have answered the question for the fourth time. I will make inquiries about this.

My honourable friend cannot have a very long memory if he thinks that there have not been differences of opinion of a substantial nature between the governments of Canada and the United States, because I can remember one or two very easily. I say to my honourable friend that we will try to get the answers to his question, but I refuse to allow him to escalate the matter here.

Senator MacEachen: There have indeed been differences of opinion between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States, but I challenge the Leader of the Government to produce any statement by any Prime Minister of Canada that equals in intensity the vocabulary used on this occasion by the Prime Minister with respect to the President. He described him as an unreliable partner, a man who would not keep his word, a man who would not permit Canadian goods to enter the United States if they could compete successfully. All these things were said by the Prime Minister of Canada in the House of Commons on Friday. I challenge the Leader of the Government to find any other Prime Minister who used such intense language with respect to the President of the United States.

• (1420)

In this case, it indicates a total reversal, a total failure of the policy of the Prime Minister—which he so angrily admitted in the House of Commons last Friday—a total reversal.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend had better wait and see. Before he arrives at such complete and unconditional judgments as the one he just rendered, he had better wait and see, because everybody knows that these matters are subject to negotiation and that we will have to wait and see what the outcome is. We do not like what the United States has done to us, and that is clear enough. The Prime Minister has made his views well known with respect to the matter. However, I still have the firm opinion that being candid as between friends is not such a bad thing, that there is no need to pussyfoot on every issue that comes along.

If the Prime Minister had been pussyfooting on this issue, what would the Leader of the Opposition be saying? I can just hear his speech. I can hear him saying, "Who is this wimp who will not stand up to the United States? Who is this man who sold out Canada to the American traders? Who is this fellow who cannot go into negotiations because he is not tough enough?"

Senator Argue: Mulroney!

Senator Roblin: That is the kind of language that he would be using, but because the argument falls on the other side we get from the Leader of the Opposition another speech of a different tenor. I tell him that we should be careful about passing judgment on these matters until we find out what the events produce.

Senator MacEachen: I have been very careful about passing judgments. In my first speech in this chamber I warned the Prime Minister about the folly of the approach he was taking to the United States, that it would not work. The Prime Minister felt that amiability was a substitute for the pursuit of Canadian interests. He has painfully found out that the approach he was following was mistaken, and he admitted it publicly on Friday. The Leader of the Government should not accuse anyone else of escalating the situation. It has been created by the government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: The Prime Minister said that the President of the United States promised, both at the summit in Quebec and at the summit in Tokyo, that he would not do what he did, and that he has broken his word.

I was telling the Leader of the Government not so long ago to be cautious, to seek deeper assurances from the United States on acid rain, and he replied that he was "willing to take the word of the President of the United States at its face value." Those are the words of the Leader of the Government.

Senator Roblin: That's right.

Senator MacEachen: On Friday, the Prime Minister as much as told the Leader of the Government that that is not the Prime Minister's view, that he cannot take the President's word, and he said so in his letter to the President and in the House of Commons. That is why I am asking the Leader of the Government: Is the government presently re-evaluating its overall approach to the United States to put it on a more realistic basis, and not on one of amiability and misguided sentiment, which has been the cornerstone of the Prime Minister's approach, thinking that the singing of duets is a good means of formulating foreign policy?

Senator Frith: And Irish smiles.

Senator Roblin: I have heard a lot of things, but I have never heard anything quite so insipid—

Senator Frith: "Insipid", that's a good word.

Senator Roblin: —as the suggestion that sentiment and singing ballads in Quebec City are substitutes for foreign policy.

Senator Frith: By George, I think he's got it!

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Roblin: They are not; they never have been and they never will be.

It is a little bit different from going to the United States with a chip on your shoulder, as some Prime Ministers have done, and making remarks that are hardly printable with respect to American officers of state, as one of the former Prime Ministers of this country did, and saying that that is a foreign policy. Anyone who says that that is his foreign policy would be wrong, because it was not. He indulged himself in those gestures, to be sure, but I would be the last one to say that that was the substance of his foreign policy. The same with my honourable friend.

The substance of the foreign policy of this country is to look after the interests of Canadians, and we intend to do it one way or the other.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government in the Senate has made an assertion about unprintable comments made by former Prime Ministers with respect to the President of the United States. "Remarks that are hardly printable," were the words. I wish he would back them up and give us the quotations from any former Prime Minister. Let us have them.

Senator Roblin: I was referring to the attitude of Prime Minister Trudeau with respect to certain officials in the State Department on one occasion when he was there, and my honourable friend knows that reference very well.

Senator MacEachen: I do not.

Senator Roblin: It was in the newspapers at the time. You ought to have been reading them.

An Hon. Senator: It is the other way around.

Senator Roblin: My friend says: "It is the other way around." I do not think so. However, let us come back to the point. If anyone thinks that the foreign policy of this government towards the United States is based on sentiment, well, they have heard the Prime Minister's speech! It is not based on sentiment. It is based on an endeavour to cultivate a relationship, and what is wrong with that? How can people go into a negotiating situation if they do not try to do that? Even in the course of those negotiations, if we run into problems—and heaven knows, we have run into one with respect to this—that does not mean that our policy is based on sentiment, or the singing of ballads. It is quite the contrary. Our policy is to defend the interests of this nation, and that is what we will do.

Senator Frith: That is what we are worried about.

THE ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, we seem to have a new diplomatic language, and perhaps some of us had better find out the definition of certain words, so that we will have a better understanding of what is being said and what is meant by what is being said.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether or not Canada has been asked to shore up, or further increase, the relative value of the Canadian dollar in relation to United States currency. I do that because I think that shortly before we adjourned, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States had indicated that they expect the value of the Canadian dollar to be increased. At that time he was referring to some of the obligations that Canada would be expected to take on as a result of being admitted to the group of seven.

I am sure that both the Leader of the Government in the Senate and I understand that it has been a concern of the Treasury of the United States and their trade departments for some time that the relative value of the Canadian dollar has been, in fact, an advantage to Canadian trade in a number of commodities going into the United States. Can the Leader of the Government, therefore, tell us if there has been any follow-up to the suggestion—or admonition, if you like—of the Secretary of the Treasury that Canada ought to be more active in its intervention to increase the relative value of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not think my honourable friend is correct in saying that entrance to the group of seven means that we are accepting the opinion of others as to what the value of our dollar should be. That is not one of the matters on which we are bound by any agreement. In fact, each one of the seven nations still follows its own policy except those that may be bound up in what is called the "snake" inside the European Community. Apart from that, it is not an issue in that respect.

With respect to the Canadian dollar, as recently as two weeks or a month ago, my friend was ripping the hide off me because the Canadians were supporting their dollar. It had gone down to 70 cents and we were trying to get it back to where we thought it should be. This was considered to be reprehensible in some way or another.

● (1430)

I think we have to tell the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States something that I am sure his officials have told him by now, and that is that the Canadian government has not been a party to the lowering of the value of the Canadian dollar; in fact, quite the reverse is true. If we had let our dollar go unsupported below the 69 cent mark, then perhaps he would have had something to complain about.

Senator Olson: A supplementary question, honourable senators. What I had to say had nothing to do with some action that may have been taken some time ago. When the Canadian dollar goes down, there are people in Canada who would like to know the reason for that and what the attitude of the government is, but that was not the question I asked the honourable leader, and I think he knows that. I asked him whether or not we had received any further messages from the United States and, in particular, any messages following the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury, which indicated his view that Canada has an obligation to increase the value of its dollar relative to the American dollar.

Senator Roblin: I believe the Minister of Finance recently answered that question. His answer was "No."

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

IMPACT OF FREE TRADE ON AUTO PACT—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT TO PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, the full, uncensored, unexpurgated government report on the impact of free trade on the auto pact—which has not been made available to either the Senate or to the House of Commons—according to a Canadian Press report has concluded that there are in the comprehensive-agreement-approach substantial risks and substantial costs to the auto pact with no discernible benefits.

Since the government has chosen not to make this information available to Parliament, would the government consider making this information available to the Province of Ontario on a confidential basis so that it can carefully assess the very detrimental effects that free trade might have on the auto pact?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe that document has been made available to the Government of Ontario, but I should like to take the question as notice to be sure that I am correct.

EFFECT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF JAPANESE AUTOMOBILE PLANTS IN CANADA

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Just as a corollary to that question, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform us as to what steps the Canadian government is taking to counter representations by industry representatives in the United States to the effect that any investment by Japanese car manufacturers in Canada by the establishment of automobile plants would be contrary to GATT?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think that if the matter is contrary to GATT, it will fall within the province of the United States government to raise the subject with GATT.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate is, no doubt, aware of the evaluation report made by the Department of Employment and Immigration on Challenge '85, the Summer Youth Employment Program for last year, which report pointed out that the non-private sector was more successful than private sector firms in finding jobs for young people, especially jobs closely linked to their career interest.

In light of that, and in light of the reaction to this year's program by the group called "Save Our Summer", does the government have plans to redress that imbalance for the remainder of the Challenge '86 program?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not sure that I can accept the premise of my friend's question. I have not read the reports, so I am not in a position to judge them.

Senator Marsden: I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would be kind enough to have a look at that report—which is available from the Department of Employment and Immigration—and let the members of this chamber know whether there are such plans.

YOUTH

REPORT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: While I am on my feet, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us when we can expect a reaction from the government to the Report of the Special Senate Committee on Youth, which was promised some time ago?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take both questions as notice.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am disappointed to see that Senator Gigantès is not present in the chamber this afternoon to hear the answer to a question that he asked some time ago. If I may say so, the delay has been an unconscionable one.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Please let us have it.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, this delayed answer is in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 19, 1985 by the Honourable Senator Gigantès regarding the Summit Meeting in Quebec City last year and whether Mr. Broadbent was invited to the gala.

(The answer follows):

Yes, the Leader of the NDP was invited to the gala performance.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

CANADIAN SHARE OF MARKET

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 7 last by the Honourable Senator Grafstein regarding Publishing Industry—Canadian Share of Market.

(The answer follows):

The Longman decision is the last transitional case where the rules in effect prior to the July 1985 book publishing policy announced by the Minister of Communications will apply. From now on all cases submitted to Investment Canada will have to be reviewed against the guidelines of the foreign investment policy in the book publishing and distribution sector as outlined by M. Masse on July 6, 1985.

As conditions of the sale, Longman undertook the following commitments:

—Longman will give Copp Clark's Canadian managers the opportunity within six months to acquire up to twenty per cent of the Canadian subsidiary's voting equity of which they currently hold none.

—Longman will ensure that Canadian management will continue to enjoy full authority over editorial policy and general operations.

—A distribution agreement was reached whereby Longman will offer to transfer to a Canadian-controlled agent the right to distribute Longman's children's books and trade reference books.

—About 70 per cent of Copp Clark's revenues are and will continue to be derived from books by Canadian authors. To ensure that this level is maintained, Longman plans to triple over the next three years Copp Clark's investments in the development of new Canadian books.

The government is assured that the commitments offered by Longman, together with Copp Clark's established record in the Canadian publishing industry, compare favourably with any obtained under the criteria which applied to foreign investment review policy prior to July 1985. The government is also assured that these commitments will be beneficial to the Canadian publishing industry and to Canada's writers.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY LAYOFFS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 13 last by the Honourable Senator Olson regarding Energy—Oil and Gas Industry Layoffs—Government Policy.

(The answer follows):

Because Canada has important consumer and producer interests in energy, the impacts of lower oil prices are mixed. Consuming industries and regions will clearly benefit while the petroleum and related industries, and the regions dependent upon them will be subject to serious declines in employment and investment. These enormous differences in regional impacts are concerns to the government.

The federal government is watching this situation very carefully. We are committed to a fundamental reliance on markets in our economy. We would be very reluctant to return to the regulated oil markets of the past decade, even though such a move might result in the short-term amelioration of employment and investment declines.

Despite the less than optimistic short-term outlook, we can find some solace in a recent Wall Street Journal analysis that concludes that Canada is in a better position to weather the current low-price situation than the U.S. due in part to the relief provided by governments in the form of price decontrols and decreased taxation, initially by the Western Accord and more recently in response to the international oil price collapse.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—BENEFITS ACCRUING TO OTHER TRADING PARTNERS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 14 last by the Honourable Senator MacEachan regarding Canada-United States Relations—Bilateral Trade Negotiations—Benefits Accruing to Other Trading Partners.

(The answer follows):

Both the Canadian and U.S.A. governments have made clear to other trading partners that any Canada-U.S.A. trade agreement would be in conformity with the GATT and reflect the principle that it should be trade creating, rather than trade diverting. Any agreement reached by the two countries on contentious subjects in international trade such as agriculture, services and contingency protection could have an important exemplary and catalytic effect on Multilateral Trade Negotiations and help promote a great liberalization of the international trading system. Finally, a stronger and more dynamic North American economy that should result from such a bilateral agreement will represent a larger and more attractive market for exports from other trading partners, including the developing countries.

No bilateral or trilateral discussions are planned with other countries to permit them additional access to a Canada-U.S.A. free trade area. Both Canada and the United States are strongly committed to the launching of a new round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations with a view to a general liberalization and expansion of international trade. If those negotiations are successful, they will result in additional access by other trading partners to the Canadian and USA markets.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, with your permission, may I draw to your attention the presence in the Visitors' Gallery of some distinguished guests: His Excellency, Ambassador José Francisco Pulit, the Ambassador of Argentina; Dr. Edouardo Jhantus, from the Embassy of Argentina; the Honourable Senador Fernando Mauhum and the Honourable Senador Miguel Mathus Escorihuela. These visitors are paying their first visit to Canada. Let us give them a good Canadian welcome!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

SMOKING PROHIBITION BILL

SECOND READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—SPEAKER'S RULING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Bosa, for the second reading of the Bill S-8, intituled: "An Act to prohibit smoking in certain work areas and on board certain modes of transport",

And on the motion in amendment thereto of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Steuart (Prince Albert-Duck Lake), that the Bill be not now read the second time, but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for consideration and report.—(Speaker's Ruling).

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on May 7 last, during the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill S-8 intituled "An Act to prohibit smoking in certain work areas and on board certain modes of transport", the Honourable Senator Godfrey moved the following amendment:

That the Bill be not now read the second time, but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for examination and report.

During the debate on the amendment, the Honourable Senator Frith stated "the question of whether this motion is in order is still in doubt", and, after discussion, asked for the Chair to rule on "whether it is technically correct for the Senate to ask a committee to help it consider the principle of a bill."

While Senator Godfrey's amendment is in order according to citation 746(1) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, the form of the amendment is incomplete. I would refer honourable senators to Form No. 40 of the Forms and Formulae of the same authority at page 280. In order for the amendment to conform to established parliamentary form, the following words should have been added to the amendment: "that the Order for the Second Reading be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and".

As I must base my ruling on established Parliamentary practice, I rule that the amendment, as drafted, being incomplete, is out of order.

However, may I be permitted to suggest that if Senator Godfrey were given leave of the Senate, he could modify his amendment so that it would conform to Beauchesne's Form No. 40 and would be in order.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in view of the fact that Senator Godfrey is not present, perhaps it would be advisable to let the matter stand as it is at the present time so that when he is present we can get his reaction and suggestion. The Senate can then decide what it wants to do.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

SECHELT INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the second reading of Bill C-93, relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band.

She said: Honourable senators, I rise to speak to Bill C-93, an act relating to the establishment of self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band of British Columbia. I must say, honourable senators, that before I finish my remarks I may have to call on Senator Marchand to help me with the pronunciation of some names of the Indian bands referred to in the document.

As honourable senators know, this bill has been thoroughly reviewed by the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development of the other place. The bill received third reading in the House of Commons with the support of all parties on May 21, 1986. We now have the opportunity and responsibility to further Indian self-government in this country by supporting this legislation. Various forms of government have existed among the Indian people of this country for centuries, long before the first Europeans settled on this continent, but, with the encroachment of European civilization, and the eventual Confederation, the self-governing powers of Indian nations were replaced by Indian Act governments. It has taken Canadian legislators a long time to recognize fully the magnitude of this adjustment.

Bill C-93 is a reflection of the current government's commitment to responding to community-based self-government initiatives. The Senate has always supported the principle of Indian self-government, but it has not always supported the methods proposed for achieving it.

● (1440)

When Parliament's Special Committee on Indian Self-Government held hearings in 1983, Indian people from all parts of the country said that they wanted a new relationship with the federal government—one that would break the cycle of dependency and give them more control over their day-to-day existence.

Even then, honourable senators, the Sechelt people were leading voices supporting Indian self-government—and this is not surprising. The band comprises 33 reserves on Sechelt Peninsula, about 50 kilometres north of Vancouver on mainland British Columbia. The majority of the band's 650 members live on the reserve, where unemployment is below the national Indian average, and some band members have established and operate successful businesses.

In addition to leading the recent move to self-government, the Sechelt were the first Indian community in Canada to manage their own lands under the Indian Act. They assumed this responsibility in 1974 and have proven skills in handling land appraisals, negotiations, leases, rents and general administration.

Further, the Sechelt have a good record of administering funds coming to the community from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. For these and other reasons, they have earned the respect of surrounding communities and governments.

Honourable senators, well before the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government submitted its final report to Parliament, the Sechelt band presented the committee with their draft legislation for self-government for this community. They have been refining that legislation ever since.

Bill C-93 is, thus, the culmination of more than a decade of work for the Sechelt people in co-operation with officials from various government departments. Chief Stanley Dixon's diligent work in bringing this dream of self-government to reality is particularly commendable.

On March 5 of this year, the Sechelt held a referendum on Bill C-93. The voter turnout was 91 per cent, and 70 per cent of the voters were in favour of the legislation.

Honourable senators, this bill truly comes from the Sechelt people.

I should like to take a few minutes to review some of the basic concepts contained in the legislation, which will take effect over time.

Bill C-93 establishes the Sechelt community as a legal entity. This means that the Sechelt may enter into contracts and agreements, buy, hold and sell property; and spend, invest or borrow money.

The legislation also enables the band to develop a constitution which will eventually become the cornerstone of Indian government in the community.

The constitution will establish a governing council with specific terms of office and tenure of members. It will also likely establish procedures to be followed in exercising the band's powers, provide for a system of financial accountability to band members, establish a code for membership in the band and set out the specific legislative powers of the council.

Bill C-93 also grants the Sechelt band fee simple title to its lands and provides for ongoing funding from the federal government. It allows for the future establishment, with provincial co-operation, of a Sechelt Indian government district to act as the unit of local government for all residents of the community—Indian or non-Indian.

Under Bill C-93, the Sechelt council will be able to negotiate authority to pass laws on a wide range of matters, including access to and residence on Sechelt lands; zoning and land use planning; expropriation for community purposes; use, construction, maintenance, repair and demolition of buildings; local taxation of reserve lands, occupants and tenants; administration and management of property belonging to the band; education, social welfare and health services; natural resources; public order and safety; roads and operation of businesses, professions and trades—the same range of self-governing powers and authority, honourable senators, now taken for granted by non-Indian communities throughout Canada.

Honourable senators, the Sechelts are not the first Indian bands to pursue self-government. Under the Cree-Naskapi Act (1984), the Cree and Naskapi people of northern Quebec were granted powers over land, hunting, fishing, trapping and other local government matters. But Bill C-93 is an important expression of the current government's new approach to Indian self-government.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

This new approach is based on the simple premise that the desire for self-government, and the methodology for achieving it, must originate in the community. Self-government cannot be successful if it is imposed by another government.

Approaches to Indian self-government must be tailor-made to fit the aspirations of each individual Indian community—and according to a timetable set by the community. In some cases, the best route might be through legislation; in others, through policy changes and, in still others, through administrative changes. But the key is that each self-government initiative will be dealt with on its own merits.

Indian communities across Canada have welcomed Bill C-93 as a sign of the federal government's commitment to proceeding with self-government on a case-by-case basis and not as a model to be copied.

This legislation will open the door to Indian self-government for Indian communities across the country. Already, the federal government is receiving proposals from, among others, the Nishnabe-Aski people and the Mohawk Councils of Akwesasne, Kahnawake and Tyandinaga in Ontario, as well as the Swampy Cree bands in Manitoba and the Saddle Lake community in Alberta.

Self-government will not solve all of the problems faced by Indian people in Canada, but legislation such as Bill C-93 will represent a new beginning. I urge honourable senators to support this important legislation. The Sechelt people have decided that the time has come for self-government and this is how they want to achieve it. As responsible legislators, it is important that we return to them the most basic of all human rights—the right to govern themselves.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Marchand, debate adjourned.

GRASSY NARROWS AND ISLINGTON INDIAN BANDS MERCURY POLLUTION CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the second reading of Bill C-110, to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Government of Canada, the Government of Ontario, Reed Inc., Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd., the Islington Indian Band and the Grassy Narrows Indian Band.

She said: Honourable senators, I have the privilege today of speaking in support of the Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands Mercury Pollution Claims Settlement Bill.

I am certain that you are all aware of the years of frustration which precede this legislation. The tragedy of the Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands has been playing far too long on the national scene. Indeed, the settlement has had a gestation period of 16 years. Allow me, then, to urge the members of this chamber against any further delay in putting the bill into effect.

This act will validate an agreement reached in November of last year. By doing so, it will enable the awarding of compensation for damages resulting from mercury pollution to two Indian bands in northwestern Ontario—about 1,500 members of the Grassy Narrows Band and the Islington Band, also known as Whitedog—located about 60 miles north of Kenora. The settlement is a six-party agreement between the federal government, the Province of Ontario, two pulp and paper companies and the two bands. It amounts to $16.667 million. Of that total, the federal government is contributing $2.75 million, the province $2.167 million, and the two corporations a total of $11.75 million.

● (1450)

It is a settlement both of band claims and of individual claims for damages, and abolishes any future rights of action, of the bands or their members, in consideration for the benefits to be conferred through the settlement.

This settlement is very much more than just the sum of its parts. It represents a triumph of patience on the part of the residents of those two reserves, and of the sincere, diligent efforts of the negotiators. We can see it as a symbolic end to injustice, while it marks the beginning of a return to independence, self-sufficiency and prosperity for the residents of the Grassy Narrows and Islington communities.

This settlement deals specifically with the effects of mercury pollution on the health and lifestyle of the two communities which occurred after contamination was discovered in the English-Wabigoon River system in 1970. Ironically, when Roy McDonald, the former Chief of the Islington Band, had to translate the word "mercury" into Ojibway for the first time to explain what was happening to the river, he called it "the silly little thing that rolls around and disappears and you don't know where it went."

To this day none of us knows where all the estimated ten tonnes of mercury that the Dryden, Ontario, paper mill discharged into the English-Wabigoon River system ended up, but we do know that dangerously large amounts of it found its way into the rivers' fish, was transformed by bacteria in the river from inorganic to organic mercury, or methyl mercury, and absorbed into the food chain in this form. We also know that those fish were a staple in the local diet, as well as a source of jobs through tourism and the commercial fishery.

The mercury was discharged into the rivers from 1962, and by 1970 fish in the first lake downstream from the plant had mercury concentrations as high as 24 parts per million. It is considered that fish can be eaten on a daily basis with mercury levels no higher than 0.2 parts per million.

Organic mercury attacks the central nervous system. Its effects show up as constriction of the visual field, tremor, sensory disturbance, slurred speech, hearing loss and other symptoms. More severe effects include cerebral palsy, mental retardation, psychosis, and, in the worst cases, paralysis, coma and death. But many of the long-term effects of consuming methyl mercury are not clear. The possibility of delayed effects, perhaps years after the intake of mercury has stopped, is disquieting.

That is why $2 million of the total settlement has been devoted to a special fund, from which awards to a maximum amount of $800 a month are available for those with health problems consistent with mercury poisoning. This enhances the quality of the agreement and permits it to deal with individual health claims as well as the communities' requirements for social and economic reconstruction. This fund will be replenished by the province in the event of its depletion.

The symptoms of disrupted community life manifested by residents of these two bands were in many ways even more disturbing than the physical ailments. When the commercial fishery shut down because of mercury contamination in 1970, most of the bands' employment in the tourist industry simultaneously disappeared. Men who had worked as guides for 20 years lost their jobs, and unemployment rose to more than 75 per cent. As former Chief Arnold Pelly of the Grassy Narrows Band explained years later, the loss of jobs and opportunities "introduced an era where we had to be dependent on the governments, both governments. When the community loses its livelihood, it also loses its spirit."

A social tragedy unfolded on these reserves during the 1970s. At Grassy Narrows, at the end of that decade, almost three of every four people buried on the reserve had died violently. In one year, 1977-78, almost one-fifth of young people 11 to 19 years of age attempted suicide. The suicide rate on the reserve was 16 times the national average. In 1975, fully one-third of the child population aged 5 to 11 on the reserve was removed from parents because of physical neglect or abandonment.

In his 1978 Interim Report and Recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Northern Environment, Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt described the situation of the communities as follows:

I have spoken to the people of Whitedog and Grassy Narrows, received submissions and held independent discussions. Even with the short exposure to the problem that I have had I can describe the current situation in one word—intolerable. I saw the despair over a situation which was not of their making and over which they have no control; fear for themselves and their children that the effects of mercury poisoning will one day strike or has perhaps already struck some of them. One sees the despair and fear in violence turned inwards, in assaults, suicides and an attitude of hopelessness. One cannot but be concerned about the ultimate effects of the situation on the people and their actions if they are not given something for which to hope.

But while the Grassy Narrows and Islington Bands attracted national and even international attention because of the mercury pollution, certain other factors made the social consequences of that pollution even more devastating than they might otherwise have been.

[Senator Robertson]

Both the Islington Band and Grassy Narrows were already, to some extent, disrupted communities when the mercury pollution was detected. In the 1950s, Ontario Hydro flooded sections of the reserve land occupied by members of the Islington Band. Permanent log houses were submerged and One Man Lake was rendered unfit for commercial fishing. Grave sites were eroded and skeletons exposed. Releases of water also damaged the wild rice crop in certain areas.

At Grassy Narrows, the federal government, in the early 1960s, relocated the band from its traditional site on the river to a new townsite four miles away, on a logging road leading into Kenora. This resettlement, in keeping with the policies of the Department of Indian Affairs at the time, was undoubtedly well-intentioned. The community was moving to a site where there could be access to more modern facilities with electricity provided in a cheaper manner and better access to government services and employment opportunities in Kenora. However, the road also brought problems with alcohol, and the close-built houses of the community site disrupted a traditional way of life.

Thus the communities were struggling to deal with the effects of flooding in the late 1950s and resettlement in the 1960s. In this context the discovery of mercury in the river system in 1970 had an explosive, unimaginably destructive impact. Uprooted and denied the traditional livelihood from the river, the people even found their perception of security in nature ripped away by a poison which they could not see, or smell, or taste. The waters that had sustained them for generations were poisoned.

These, for the two communities on the English-Wabigoon River system, were the so-called "benefits" of closer contact with modern services and industry: Loss of space; loss of a lifestyle; loss of a river; and, ultimately, loss of lives.

But the remarkable thing about the people of Grassy Narrows and Whitedog is not what they have lost; it is what they have preserved. The bands have accomplished young leadership. The communities have explored every possible avenue for redress. They have found legal advice which eventually has brought them this agreement: A settlement which has been endorsed by more than 90 per cent of residents on both reserves.

In the face of the grave social and psychological traumas the communities experienced, the bands have worked with federal, provincial and corporate negotiators to secure what is, in the words of John Olthius, the lawyer for Grassy Narrows, "the best settlement we could achieve under the circumstances." With an action pending in the Supreme Court of Ontario, the bands came to the table fully equipped to bargain effectively. They came with tough positions and won a fair, comprehensive settlement.

They also made some tough decisions and took initiative on the home front. In Grassy Narrows, for example, the people voted alcohol off the reserve in October, 1984. The crime rate has dropped dramatically. In fact, the reserve won a provincial crime prevention award about a year and a half ago, and the local probation officer quit his job last year because he did not have enough to do. Teachers and day care workers say the children are happier and healthier, and the school attendance was 94 per cent for the 1984-85 school year. Band members have organized their own crisis intervention team and night patrol.

• (1500)

Former chief Arnold Pelly is quoted as saying:

Now the little kids don't have to hide on the weekends. People are keeping their houses up, buying household goods. Every time I meet people who talk of Grassy Narrows I take the opportunity to say that's the old Grassy, you should come now and see the new Grassy.

When the Special Parliamentary Committee on Indian Self-Government turned in its report in 1983, all three parties in the House of Commons were unanimous in their support of recommendations supporting Indian self-government. The committee's report stressed again and again that self-government for Indian communities is only possible where the community itself can control its own economy and its own future. It is ironic but gratifying to see that these two Indian communities have come through a period of extreme adversity in a better position to do just that.

Anastasia Shkilnyk, a sociologist who studied the Grassy Narrows community in the 1970s, observed recently of the Grassy Narrows and Islington bands that:

They are beginning to turn around quite solidly and what the settlement will do now is give them the potential to provide a very solid foundation for long term development. In essence, I think the settlement has the potential to change people's perceptions about what the future holds for them and their children. . . if it leads them to believe that they can influence the course of their lives, then I think it will have a very dramatic impact on that community.

Chief Roy McDonald of the Whitedog band has said:

This is a new beginning for us. While money can never replace what we have lost, it provides a basis to begin to rebuild our people and community with hope and dignity.

The federal government realizes that the Grassy Narrows and Whitedog bands have been denied justice for too long. We cannot forget the 16 years' delay in reaching this settlement. As the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said in introducing this bill:

Anyone who has had experience with the episode of the mercury poisoning in the English and Wabigoon rivers and how it affected those communities will know that, in a way, we will never be able to rectify what was done.

But he added that this settlement is, nevertheless,

—a small way in which to begin a future with a new generation of people in these two communities.

The people of Grassy Narrows and Whitedog have been waiting for this settlement since 1970. The details were actually worked out in less than a year of intensive negotiations, starting in January, 1985, when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development appointed the Honourable Emmett Hall as his personal representative to facilitate an agreement. With his candour, his knowledge of the law, his energy and particularly his sense of social justice, the 87-year-old former Supreme Court Justice brought negotiators for the federal and provincial governments, Reed Inc. and Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd. together in a truly remarkable agreement.

There have been concerns voiced that this settlement is "just a cash settlement." But it is more than that. It is a commitment to help the members of these communities make their own way to a prosperous future.

Moreover, this settlement does not stand alone, but forms part of a comprehensive settlement package for both bands. It is additional, for example, to the 1982 agreement of the federal government to provide special assistance to the Islington band. This special assistance included a $1.5 million grant to establish an economic development fund and more than $900,000 to be spent on various social, economic and educational measures of benefit to the reserve, including a new high school facility. At Grassy Narrows, the federal government has provided $4.4 million to two band-owned corporations to undertake social and economic development measures on the reserve.

An agreement has also been reached between the Islington band and the province to provide special economic and social assistance to the band, including the construction of a seedling greenhouse to be managed by the band. A further agreement has been reached, and is now being finalized, to compensate the Islington band for the flooding, referred to earlier, that occurred in the 1950s. The Grassy Narrows band is engaged in continuing negotiations concerning the access to land and resources proposal it has submitted to the province.

Of course, existing federal and provincial services to the bands will not be reduced because of the agreement.

It is tremendously encouraging to note the plans the two communities already have for their future. The bands will be channelling their settlement funds into their social and economic development programs. The Grassy Narrows community intends to take over a well known tourist spot, Ball Lake Lodge, which was closed in the 1970s, to create jobs for the reserve. Other planned or proposed initiatives include participation in forestry development, the seedling greenhouse project earlier referred to and new initiatives to support hunting, trapping and fishing in waters off the river system where fish suitable for human consumption can be taken. The bands will also focus on establishing more life skills programs for their people, especially the young.

Ms. Shkilnyk once quoted Proverbs 29:18 to describe the situation at Grassy Narrows: "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Obviously, these bands have regained their vision. Justice has been long in coming to Whitedog and Grassy Narrows. I hope it will not encounter even the slightest delay at our hands.

Honourable senators, please give this bill your prompt and positive consideration. A lot of people are watching what we do.

On motion of Senator Watt, debate adjourned.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray, for the adoption of the Fifth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments (Statutory Instruments No. 32), presented in the Senate on 20th March, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Orders Nos. 12, 13 and 14 deal with reports from the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, and then deal with supplementary budgets for the Banking, Trade and Commerce committee, the Energy and Natural Resources committee and the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments respectively. I believe that the report which is the subject of Order No. 14 can be adopted. Orders Nos. 12 and 13 will have to stand until the other committee budgets are in. Those budgets that are approved by the Internal Economy Committee are entitled to three-twelfths by reason of an order of the Senate passed a few weeks ago. These two now qualify for that three-twelfths and we are waiting to give full approval by Senate adoption when we receive the budgets from those committees that have not yet submitted them. We will then have the required total picture.

I repeat that Order No. 14—which deals with the delegation to be authorized to represent Canada at the Conference of Subordinate Legislation Committees of the Parliaments of the States and Commonwealth, to be held in Brisbane, Australia—can be dealt with now.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Is it not true that the delegation has already left?

Senator Frith: What better reason for it to pass?

Senator Roblin: My words exactly.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

● (1510)

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE ON FILM ENTITLED: "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—MOTION TO REFER REPORT BACK TO COMMITTEE—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: Production and Distribution of the National Film Board Production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1986.

And on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molson, seconded by the Honourable Senator McElman, that the Report be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop."

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used the character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

3. That a copy of this Report as it stands or as it may be amended, be formally submitted to the Honourable Minister of Communications, with the request that it be transmitted to the National Film Board along with the Minister's specific instructions of action required of the Board to correct the wrong that has been done to the factual record of the late Air Marshal William Avery Bishop, Victoria Cross.

And on the motion in amendment thereto of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C., that the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 3.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Frith in connection with this order. Can the honourable senator give us an idea as to when he will speak on this order, so that we can dispose of it?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on entering the chamber I mentioned to Senator Molson that I intended to proceed with my intervention tomorrow. I hope also to proceed with the order standing in my name concerning Senator Kelly's motion.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 28, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

CLERK'S ACCOUNTS

STATEMENT TABLED PURSUANT TO RULE 112

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that, in conformity with rule 112, the Clerk of the Senate has laid on the Table a detailed statement of his receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year 1985-86.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved:

That the Clerk's Accounts be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

THE ESTIMATES 1986-87

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the sixteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance concerning its examination of the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this House.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Leblanc: Honourable senators, I move that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 2522.)

[English]

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-90

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-90, intituled: "An Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Doody did not mention in advance, as he usually does, his intention to ask support for this motion. I assume that he has spoken to the chairman of the committee and that there is room for this study on the committee's agenda, and that he has taken other usual steps, although he did not in this case let us know beforehand that he intended to make this request.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have to admit that I was negligent in this particular instance. Usually I am quite faithful in checking on these things.

Last night I received a message indicating that there was some urgency with respect to this particular bill. Senator Robertson had been contacted and briefed on the bill, and agreed to sponsor it in the Senate. She is a member of the Social Affairs committee and is looking after the matter in that area. Senator Tremblay, the chairman of the committee, has been ill these past several days. I have not had an opportunity to check with him, but Senator Robertson is carrying the responsibility in this regard.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, for the information of the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, there is a deputy chairman of that committee.

Senator Doody: I thank the deputy chairman. I had not seen him in the chamber recently and I did not notice that he had joined us today.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Frith: We are off to a good start today.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, if I may, I will say a few words to my honourable friend in rebuttal. I was absent from the chamber because I was down in the great province of Prince Edward Island, trying to protect the interests of secondary education. Forty million dollars will be cut off from the people of that province by one of the bills on EPF funding passed in the House of Commons. I was in Prince Edward Island with a task force, trying to obtain the views of the people of that province concerning this terrible catastrophe.

Senator Doody: I hope the honourable gentleman will give me credit for having given him the opportunity to say that.

Senator Bonnell: Thank you very much.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES AND SHINGLES—COMPENSATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the Government of Canada has made a request to the United States for compensation for the unjustifiable and appalling action which that country took against the Canadian shakes and shingles industry? If so, what form has the request taken? What kind of compensation has been requested?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a request has been made. I believe that it is in the form of a note and that meetings will be convened very soon in the United States to discuss the matter.

Senator MacEachen: Can the Leader of the Government tell us what form the compensation is to take? Is it to be a cash payment?

Senator Roblin: I do not have any information on the note, honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: In the absence of information today, can the Leader of the Government find out whether the request is that the compensation take the form of a cash payment to be made by the Government of the United States to the producers, or is it a request that the Government of the United States give concessions to Canada on other tariff items to compensate for the action taken against this particular industry?

● (1405)

Senator Roblin: I think the form of the compensation is the subject of the negotiations. If there is any solid information that I can properly give my friend on this matter, I will do so.

Senator MacEachen: Am I to conclude that the government will be saying to the United States, "We want compensation," but it has not gone beyond that in defining the form of the compensation?

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Roblin: I do not think it is safe to conclude that.

Senator MacEachen: But the Leader of the Government—

Senator Walker: Don't be ridiculous!

Senator Frith: Steady, steady; don't lose your cool, David.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government is aware that the request for compensation has been made, but he is not sure whether it is a request for cash payment or whether it is a request for tariff concessions, or whether the Government of Canada is totally unclear with respect to what it is requesting; is that a fair conclusion?

Senator Roblin: It is not a fair conclusion.

Senator MacEachen: Well, can the Leader of the Government throw some light on the question in view of the fact that he has excluded the alternatives as being unfair conclusions? What is the fair conclusion?

Senator Roblin: The fair conclusion is that I will do what I said with respect to the question my friend asked me several questions ago.

Senator MacEachen: May I follow up, then, and draw the attention of the Leader of the Government to a statement made by the Prime Minister on Friday last, in which he said:

We will try to prepare an appropriate response for the American administration which will convince them of the folly of this kind of action—

Is this request for compensation the "appropriate response" by the government?

Senator Roblin: I would not necessarily link the two matters.

Senator MacEachen: So we are to conclude that there will be a different "appropriate response" apart from the request for compensation?

Senator Roblin: My friend can conclude whatever he wishes.

Senator MacEachen: Will the Leader of the Government find out whether there is under consideration another response referred to by the Prime Minister apart from the request for compensation, which does not appear to be a response at all? It is merely a request to the United States, another request to "Please, Uncle Sam, help us by compensation." What, apart from the request for compensation, is the Canadian response? If the Leader of the Government says he does not know, I will ask him if he will provide the information.

Senator Roblin: I think I have already answered my friend's question on that point.

Senator MacEachen: I do not recall any such answer. The Leader of the Government has not answered the question and he has not indicated whether he will get the information; and I would like one or the other.

Senator Roblin: I have indicated that I will get the information.

Senator MacEachen: Thank you.

Senator Olson: Pure stonewall.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Olson: Well, he did it to me yesterday; so I guess I know what it feels like.

THE ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, yesterday I asked the Leader of the Government whether or not the government had received any messages from the United States Treasury following the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury that the Canadian dollar should be higher relative to the United States dollar, because of the trading advantage that the lower value gives us. I am sorry to say that I have to admit, from reading Hansard, that I was too specific in my request because I asked if there had been "in particular, any messages" following that press conference. In reply, Senator Roblin said that the Minister of Finance answered "No". I would like to know whether or not the government is aware that the United States is unhappy or dissatisfied with the relative value of the Canadian dollar because of the trading advantage it gives, and whether or not the Canadian government intends to respond to that situation that was clearly expressed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

● (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am under the impression that the government has responded to the allegation, if I may put it that way, of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States that somehow we were keeping our dollar down. I think the government has responded in terms of what our record on this matter will show. However, in order to be perfectly satisfied that my response is correct, I shall ascertain if my impression is correct.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, a number of people are very concerned about this matter. If Canada does respond, one of the implications is that it will probably do so by more active intervention by the Bank of Canada and the government in relation to interest rates and that sort of thing. Some people are extremely concerned that we should not receive another surprise like we received last Thursday. Therefore, I hope that the minister will be able to allay the fears of these people that interest rates will be forced up again by government and Bank of Canada intervention.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think I can say that the government is quite clear in its position that it is not artificially manipulating the Canadian dollar in any respect whatsoever despite the complaint made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

EFFECT OF CANADIAN CONTENT RULES ON U.S. TRADE INTO CANADA

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, apparently in recent weeks, the senior representatives of the film industry in the United States have made representations to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in the Congress to the effect that the Canadian content rules—appropriately passed by Parliament and approved unanimously by all parties—are an undue restriction on the U.S. trade into Canada, despite the fact that the film industry dominates our Canadian marketplace. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us what steps, if any, the Canadian government's representatives or its lobbyists in the United States are taking to counter this outrageous representation that, if followed, would seriously affect Canadian identity in Canada?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I expect that over the course of the next weeks and months every interest group in the United States will be raising some point or other about trade with Canada with which they do not agree or approve. I would not be in the slightest surprised if the same thing happened in Canada. Now that the trade negotiations are under way, every party or interest will be concerned about getting its special interests or its special views into the public arena, and I presume that that is what has happened in the United States. I think we can expect a great deal more action of this kind on both sides of the border.

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, I raised this issue because heretofore representatives of the U.S. film industry had never raised this matter as a particular issue. They were never concerned about the issue in the same way as it would appear they are today. I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he can give the Senate some type of comfort as to what strategy or tactics the Government of Canada and its representatives will be taking in the United States to moderate some of these views, which, if unanswered, will be raised to a currency and a legitimacy that will build up support in the U.S. Congress for countermeasures against Canada. I think that this is an important issue and that to just say, in effect, that we will allow the Americans to debate this issue as we in Canada will debate certain issues is not addressing the core issue. As he said yesterday, we are trying to prevent an escalation of these claims being made that could seriously derail any fruitful exchange of trade in this area. I wonder if the government does have a tactic or strategy that can moderate these pleas to Congress in the United States when they are entering into an election year.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend gives me a very good argument why we should proceed with the trade negotiations that are under way, because that is exactly the kind of situation that we are trying to bring under some system of order and control.

In the meanwhile, we will certainly put our best foot forward to defend the interests of Canada, wherever they may be challenged.

Senator Grafstein: It may very well be that the very process of these talks has brought to the fore in the United States arguments that heretofore have not and would not have been raised. Therefore if, in fact, the talks themselves or the way the government is going about them has raised these particular issues in the United States, I would like to know whether the government has any approach, tactic or strategy that could moderate these claims now, before they get out of hand.

Senator Roblin: I have answered my friend's question.

BROADCASTING

CAPLAN TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I wonder if he can tell us what has happened to the Caplan broadcasting task force, which was to be such an important instrument and the findings of which all of us looked forward to receiving. As I am sure the government leader knows, those findings are now months and months overdue and I am wondering why the long delay.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no idea. If my honourable friend would like me to make some inquiries about it, I will be glad to do so.

Senator Davey: I would be most grateful.

THE ENVIRONMENT

SUBMISSION TO WORLD COMMISSION ON ENVIRONMENT AND DEVELOPMENT—INPUT OF PEOPLE OF CANADA

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I assume that all honourable senators have received copies of a submission to the World Commission on Environment and Development, dated May 1986. This is a blue-coloured document with the insignia or logo of Environment Canada on it. It is entitled: "Survival in a Threatened World—Submission by the People of Canada to the World Commission on Environment and Development." The document contains a foreword by the minister and, I must say, some excellent submissions on behalf of Environment Canada. However, it is an interesting process that I was not aware was taking place.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would ask his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, the extent to which the people of Canada were consulted and had direct input into this document. The minister is apparently speaking on behalf of all of the people of Canada, including me and, I suppose, his colleague in Ontario and all of the 25 million people he refers to. I must say I am inclined to support everything he says, but—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): After the election of September 1984, I think the government had concluded that it was appropriate to speak in the name of the people of Canada, and it has been doing so ever since.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: I beg your pardon.

Senator Roblin: To repeat my answer, I think, after the results of the election of September 1984, the government concluded that it was appropriate for it to speak for the people of Canada. It has been doing so ever since.

Senator Frith: Yes. That is a very good answer. That is the kind of arrogance we are getting used to. One election, and you can speak for 25 million people.

GRAIN

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT APPROACH

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can the leader tell us what approach the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board is likely to be taking at the upcoming International Conference on Grain to be held in Vancouver on June 1 and 2 of this year? If I might say so, it seems to me that the minister should be articulating a very strong and positive stand which would include criticism of what has been done by the United States in attempting to give away their grain and grain products. The same applies to the EEC.

However, I am disturbed by the reports that are coming out, through statements by the officials of the minister, that this conference is really just to get together; that we should not really be expecting anything positive to come from it. In other words, it is just a talk session.

● (1420)

It seems to me that in international negotiations, as in other things in life, if you want to get anywhere you have to go in with a positive, firm attitude. If the minister went in with that kind of attitude, I think there is a chance to get some movement, but by going in and saying, "Well, it is just a little talk session, better we get together—"

Senator Barootes: Just like the Senate!

Senator Argue: Let's hope not.

I would appreciate a statement from the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Did you say, "Just like the Senate"? Well, of course it is. I have to say, however, that the minister is not going in to any talk show; he is going in to get results. Whether he can or not, heaven only knows, but he is going to give it all he has.

Senator Argue: If that is correct, the minister should ensure that the officials in his department are backing him up and going in with the same attitude and are preparing the ground in the same kind of way. What is happening today is that they are already cutting him down to size, and that is saying to the world, "We don't expect very much to come of it." I think that that is a bad approach.

Senator Roblin: I think it is rather peculiar that my honourable friend should launch his attack on the public service and not on the minister. If he has names of people who are being unhelpful in this matter, let him name them and then the minister will take it up with them.

Senator Argue: This appears in an article written by Barry Wilson in The Western Producer, dated Thursday, May 22, 1986. This article is the result of an interview with Noel O'Connell, Director General, Department of External Affairs, Grain Marketing Bureau. In the article, Barry Wilson states:

the only truly optimistic words about the meeting last week came from grain industry officials who hope it will lead to negotiations to end the grain price war that is ravaging the Canadian grain industry.

The article quotes Saskatchewan Wheat Pool president, E. K. Turner, as saying:

"What I would like to see coming out of that is some kind of an agreement to get us back to a more market-responsive situation than we have now."

Mr. Wilson states that the director general said:

"I think it would be unrealistic to expect they would immediately see eye to eye at Vancouver. The minister's view is that it is better that they at least get together and compare notes than stay apart.

I would agree with the leader in that I doubt very much that that is the minister's attitude. If it is, that is an admission of failure to start with. I think he needs to go in—

Senator Walker: Oh, oh!

Senator Argue: You can snort and make your guttural interventions in whatever way you like, but I would think that if the minister is going to have any luck at all he had better go in with a positive view, and he does not need that kind of support.

Senator Flynn: You can remember.

Senator Frith: Those senators sitting opposite think they speak for all of the people of Canada, so show them a little respect!

Senator Argue: You are as good at that as anybody I know, Senator Flynn.

Senator Walker: The trouble is that you are half-baked.

Senator Argue: And you are not baked at all.

Senator MacEachen: This cannot be the Senate!

Senator Frith: You are back in the green chamber.

Senator Stanbury: It sounds like the Prime Minister!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order!

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR AMPLIFICATION OF DELAYED ANSWER

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for providing a written answer to my question relating to bilateral trade negotiations. The answer states:

Both the Canadian and U.S.A. governments have made it clear to other trading partners that any Canada-U.S.A. trade agreement would be in conformity with the GATT—

That leads me to ask whether, in the mind of the government, any mutual benefits negotiated between Canada and the United States would be made available to other trading partners under the most-favoured-nation principle.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My friend is asking me a question involving a technicality because of his introduction of the most-favoured-nation principle. I am not sure how that applies in the GATT or in these negotiations. I will have to make an inquiry.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the honourable leader for that undertaking.

There is one other point I want to raise. It derives from the succeeding sentence which says:

Any agreement reached by the two countries on contentious subjects in international trade such as agriculture, services and contingency protection could have an important exemplary and catalytic effect on multilateral trade negotiations —and so on.

What the statement raised in my mind was the status of agriculture in the negotiations between Canada and the United States because the answer refers to "any agreement reached by the two countries," as a result of the bilateral trade negotiations, "in international trade such as agriculture". It leads me to ask whether agriculture is on the negotiating table between Canada and the United States because it is alluded to in this answer.

I was under the impression that agriculture, particularly agricultural marketing boards, had been excluded from the negotiations by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have no complaint with that exclusion, if it is the case, but I am asking if agriculture is on the table and if all of the aspects are on the table, or are there certain exceptions stipulated by the government?

Senator Roblin: Well, there are certain aspects of agriculture that have nothing to do with marketing boards, for example, the export of livestock, and that may very well be on the negotiating table because we have something to gain.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government says "may well be on the table," and that is all right, but can the Leader of the Government find out for us if all agriculture products are on the table, including livestock as he mentioned, and that the only exclusion is the marketing boards?

I am looking really for information. It is not my intention to debate the question.

Senator Roblin: It seems to me that the general principle under which these trade negotiations are being conducted is called a clean start—what is the expression?

Senator MacEachen: A fresh launch.

Senator Roblin: Yes, "clean launch." That means that everything is on the table, but it certainly doesn't mean that everything is going to be negotiated away. So, there are certain areas in which we are quite clear that we are not going to be in a position to make concessions of any great magnitude, and I think the question of marketing boards is probably going to be one of them.

Senator MacEachen: So that I won't have to come back to this again—

Senator Roblin: You are welcome to come back to it.

Senator Flynn: If it is a promise.

Senator MacEachen: —can we get from the Leader of the Government a definitive conclusion on this point that agriculture will be on the negotiating table in all its aspects? I put the question directly so that the Leader of the Government can consider it and provide the information. My question is: Is it a fact that all aspects of agriculture, with the sole exception of marketing boards, will be on the negotiating table and will be among the items discussed? I add the comment that, of course I understand that when negotiations take place all things cannot be agreed to in advance—that is understood—but what are the pre-conditions in agriculture, apart from marketing boards?

Senator Roblin: I think the government has made it clear on many occasions in the past that it is a clean launch on both sides, so anything that has to do with the question of trade between the two countries, as defined by those who are negotiating—and that is probably one of the things that they are talking about—will be included in the clean launch. But, I am also quite clear, as my honourable friend says, that that does not mean that you are going to negotiate on all of those topics, because you are not.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government has complicated the situation by saying, "Anything that has a trade impact will be included," because that is precisely what Ambassador Murphy said with respect to social programs. I do not think that the Leader of the Government would go along with his statement. Mr. Murphy said, "Anything with a trade impact relating to social programs, naturally, I would want to consider." The Leader of the Government has just about said the same thing.

● (1430)

Senator Roblin: I hope I have not, because the opinion of the Government of Canada is that the American negotiator is stretching his mandate when he talks in that way about the trade negotiations. The Minister of State for External Affairs has said so in the most explicit and uncompromising terms.

Senator MacEachen: In other words, the Leader of the Government has modified his answer: It is not, therefore, true that everything with a trade impact will be on the table. Even if social programs do have a trade impact they will not be on the table.

Senator Roblin: I am saying that the Americans can say anything they like about what is going to be on the table, but we have the same right. We are now in the process of negotiation to define those limits.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator MacEachen: I hesitate to be tiresome on this point, but it is a fact that the Leader of the Government said that everything that had a trade impact would be on the table pursuant to the clean launch, and I built on the Leader's answer to seek clarification. It is legitimate to try to clarify pronouncements from the government. The Leader of the Government, however, having made a statement, has now withdrawn from it.

Senator Roblin: I have not withdrawn from my statement at all. My statement is quite clear: We have a clean launch but the question of what we negotiate on when we see what is on the table is another thing, and I do not know anyone in Canada who thinks that unemployment insurance or medicare, for that matter, is trade-related as the Americans seem to think. We do not think those are trade-related matters and other people do, but we are going to stand by our position.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

ARTICLES SENT TO WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would be grateful if the Leader of the Government would undertake to let me have the 30 articles the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources sent to various weekly newspapers promising to buy a page of advertising in those newspapers should they print six of those 30 articles.

Someone has sent me those texts and I should like to check whether the person who sent me those texts sent me the real ones. I would like to get the real ones from the Leader of the Government, if I may.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not accept my friend's premise because I am not sure that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made any such stipulation that they had to print six articles selected from the 30 that she sent—if she sent 30.

She said something quite different from that and if my honourable friend likes, I will get her reply in Hansard to him because I think it is important.

As for the 30 articles, I will make inquiries about them.

Senator Gigantès: Will the Honourable Leader of the Government, when he makes inquiries about the 30 articles with a view to securing the texts for me, also let me have whatever was sent accompanying those articles to the editors of the publications that received them so that we can determine whether the public servant who sent them misunderstood the purport of the minister's wishes and said something different from what the minister said in the House? Of course, we will believe the minister, but we would like to see whether a public servant misinterprets his boss.

Senator Roblin: I will give my honourable friend that information which I can obtain from the minister. I do not think it is appropriate for me to try to obtain information that has been provided by public servants in this respect.

JUSTICE

CANADA COMMISSION OF INQUIRY ON WAR CRIMINALS— EXTENSION OF MANDATE AND COST

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he can inform us today whether it is the intention of the government to prolong the life of the Deschênes commission of inquiry into the alleged Nazi war criminals who may be living in Canada.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that matter is under consideration at the present time.

Senator Haidasz: As a supplementary question, would the minister, at some time—and I hope before the end of this month—answer a question I posed three months ago as to the estimates of the expenses of conducting this inquiry?

Senator Roblin: I think that information should be available quite soon, honourable senators.

VISITOR IN GALLERY

Hon. Hazen Argue: I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the gallery of a distinguished Canadian. I do this in the absence of Senator Lucier. I refer to Dr. Don Branigan, the Mayor of Whitehorse.

Dr. Branigan has been a distinguished member of the Science Council of Canada. For many years he has enjoyed the largest medical practice in the Yukon. He is in Ottawa to meet with authorities to discuss oil and gas development in the Yukon.

On behalf of all senators, I wish Dr. Branigan well in his negotiations on behalf of the citizens of the Yukon.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

SECHELT INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle, for the second reading of the Bill C-93, intituled: "An Act relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band".—(Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C.).

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, yesterday when Senator Robertson introduced Bill C-93 she talked about its many virtues. I do not plan to recount many of those today. As a matter of fact, it is not my intention to spend too much time on the remarks I am going to make before this chamber regarding this bill.

I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-93 which is called, "An Act relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band." I am quite familiar with this band. As a matter of fact, one of my great friends and mentors, in a sense, was the late Clarence Joe, a former leader of the Sechelt Band. He was a very wise individual who spoke out on a number of issues such as fishing. I see the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans across the way nodding his head. Clarence Joe spoke about self-government and about the Liberal Party of which he happened to be a member. The late Clarence Joe was quite a man who had been talking about many of the things contained in this bill for a long time. That is one of the reasons I do not want to dwell on it.

Another reason I do not want to dwell on this bill is because it has some shortcomings, and they should not be emphasized.

Self-government has been talked about for a long time among our people. When I was a fairly young person back in 1958 and 1959, I recall when I first became involved with a group called the North American Indian Brotherhood. At that time we discussed self-government, education, alcohol and other issues of that kind which were facing us. Uppermost in our minds at that time was the issue of the federal vote. Of course, that was given to us back in 1960.

In those days we were pretty angry that we, as the first citizens of this nation, had to be governed by the Indian Affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Here the first citizens of this land had their so-called branch of government within a department called Citizenship and Immigration. At that time, I had an opportunity to meet our esteemed Clerk of the Senate who was very much involved with that department as the head of the Citizenship branch.

• (1440)

The evolution of self-government has taken a long time and in one form it was one of the Liberal Party platforms in the election of 1965. The late Lester Pearson was of the view that the federal government had to do more for the original peoples of this country. His promise was that greater attention would be given to the Indian people and that that would be done by forming a new department of Indian affairs for them. It was in January of 1966 that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was formed. That was one of the responses given by the late Lester Pearson and his government to the question of self-government and greater autonomy for native people.

Over the course of time, various powers have been given to individual band councils. Most of them have been running their own programs for some time now, but this has essentially been done on a delegated basis. They are running their own education, their own welfare and a number of other things. But the Sechelt self-government bill changes this somewhat, even though the authority is still delegated from the federal government.

Although I do not want to dwell on this, what we actually want, and what was the subject of the last three constitutional conferences, is the recognition in the Constitution of a separate order of government. We want a level of government recognized in the Constitution, and the powers would flow from there. That is where we want to start, and this is why the bill before us is not acceptable to a number of people in the Indian community. As a matter of fact, the Sechelt people themselves have said that this bill does not do everything that they wanted, but it does go some distance towards that goal. They have taken the view that they do not want to wait 10 years, 15 years or however long it would take to negotiate through the constitutional process—that is, to negotiate with the provincial and the federal governments—to get what they want. Therefore, they put this bill forward on behalf of their people.

As Senator Robertson mentioned yesterday, they held many meetings over a long period of time; they held a number of discussions to reach this point and I applaud them. I applaud the Sechelts greatly for their diligence, their foresight and the action they have taken in bringing forward this bill at this time in their history. I particularly like a few of the provisions contained in the bill.

Clause 6 has to do with the capacity and powers of the band. I really like this part:

6. The Band is a legal entity and has, subject to this Act, the capacity, rights, powers and privileges of a natural person and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may

- (a) enter into contracts or agreements;
- (b) acquire and hold property or any interest therein, and sell or otherwise dispose of that property or interest;
- (c) expend or invest moneys;
- (d) borrow money;

Honourable senators, this has been one of the most difficult things for the Indian people to do. My friend Senator Watt and a number of other people will tell senators about the difficulty that native peoples have had in borrowing money and in developing the resources that are on the reservations. Try to imagine what it is like for an Indian to go to a banker to ask for a loan. The banker will ask what his assets are and if he says that he has such-and-such a property on the reservation, well, “good-bye; too bad, Mr. Indian, you can go away.” But as a result of this bill, the Sechelts will have legal powers that will enable them to do such things as borrow money, lease land and, basically, sign on the dotted line. Their leases will be legal documents as of the time they are signed, instead of being sent off to the Department of Indian Affairs, where they will finally wind up on the minister’s desk or on the assistant deputy minister’s desk, along with thousands of other leases that are awaiting approval. This bill will mean a great improvement for the Sechelt people. Over a number of years they have developed some property on a leasehold basis, so this provision is of importance to them.

However, a sticky point with me, and one on which I run into a little trouble, is the fact that some powers must be sought from the provincial government. On constitutional grounds, the Indian people of this country have historically had a relationship with the federal government, and they do not want that relationship changed. Constitutionally, it is only the federal government that has the power to legislate respecting Indians and Indian lands. We do not want to change that. That is a sacred trust, if I dare use that word. But under this bill, the Sechelts have to go somewhat “cap in hand” to the province and ask whether they may have some powers. Those powers they will be requesting of the provinces relate, for the most part, to taxation of those non-Indians who have a leasehold interest on Indian lands. I would much rather have it whereby we, from the federal government, through the constitutional power that we have, give directly to those people the power to tax whoever is occupying any kind of Indian land, whether it is leased or not. But under the law of the land today, that, apparently, cannot be done, and the Sechelts do not want to wait around until that is changed.

[Senator Marchand.]

I think that the Indian community in general has taken the view that although we may not agree totally with the way in which the Sechelts have proceeded, especially on constitutional grounds, nevertheless we applaud them for the efforts that they have made, for the vision that they have had and for the initiative that they have taken in developing this bill. I, too, applaud the Sechelts and the action they have taken.

Honourable senators, through consultations with the senators in our party, I think it is fair to say that we do not want to hold up the bill. We do not think there is any need to refer it to committee. Although there are some topics worthy of discussion, there is nothing at this point that we feel we could really contribute with relation to the bill. If we wanted to make some improvements to it, it would take a long time to do so. The kind of improvements I have in mind are those fundamental constitutional changes that really need to be made. This is something that Mr. Mulroney and the premiers will have to do the next time they sit around that table, and I hope that they will pay a great deal of attention to what needs to be done in terms of the development of self-government and the constitutional recognition of self-government.

In any event, on behalf of our party I am prepared to give the bill second reading quickly and to proceed directly to third reading, if that is the desire of this chamber.

I thank honourable senators.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform the Senate that if Senator Robertson speaks now her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of the bill.

Senator Robertson: I thank honourable senators. I listened with interest to my good colleague’s remarks and recognize the inadequacies that have been identified in the bill. However, everyone in this chamber knows that constitutional changes take a long time. I believe that the Sechelt band and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are wise in proceeding with this bill at the present time. Certainly it is a major step forward. I am delighted that Minister Crombie and his staff have been able to work with the Sechelt. I applaud them, as my colleague has done, for their great contribution in this respect.

I have nothing further to add, except to point out that it has been brought to my attention that the leaders of the Sechelt would like to be present in the chamber at the time of Royal Assent. They would also like to have Mr. Crombie present at that time. I have discussed this matter with our house leader and I understand that the department has discussed this on the other side. It looks as if June 17 is a reasonably secure date for the Sechelt people to come to Ottawa, for the minister to be present and for us to arrange for this bill to receive Royal Assent. I believe it to be a reasonably historical moment and I am delighted that the members of Sechelt have taken such an interest. I again congratulate them on their tremendous contribution through their participation in the development of this bill toward the self-government of the native people.

● (1450)

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

GRASSY NARROWS AND ISLINGTON INDIAN BANDS MERCURY POLLUTION CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cogger, for the second reading of the Bill C-110, intituled: "An Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Government of Canada, the Government of Ontario, Reed Inc., Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd., the Islington Indian Band and the Grassy Narrows Indian Band".—(Honourable Senator Watt).

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, it is my great pleasure to speak on behalf of the people who have been affected by what I believe to be one of the most dangerous poisons in the world. Various speakers in the other place have spoken in support of Bill C-110, and I was struck by the fact that they appeared to be anxious to close a chapter. However, I do not know that we can really close this chapter, because of the way that people have been affected by this mercury pollution. I say that because it is quite likely that future generations will be affected by mercury pollution. Uncertainty exists. Parents of the future do not know whether children will become disabled, crippled or perhaps lose their eyesight. For me this is a very important matter which has not occupied in any serious way the attention of the general public in the past. To a certain extent it may have drawn the attention of the Canadian public, but 16 years is a long time.

If a similar incident had occurred in downtown Toronto, how long would the situation have existed? Possibly a day.

But, something would be done about it immediately. Is it because we are dealing with a small group of people that we tend to ignore our responsibilities, our primary responsibilities? We should take a look at some of the things that have been done in the past and try to avoid them in the future. We should not make the same mistakes again. Let us act before it is too late. This is not the first time, and this will certainly not be the last time. All kinds of industries—mining outfits, oil companies, and so on—are coming to my area, to the north, to the high Arctic, which, because of the cold climate, is harder to clean up if pollution occurs. I wonder how seriously our people are likely to be affected in the future.

I would like to read the following: Sixteen years ago the lives of the 1,200 people of the Grassy Narrows and the Whitedog Indian Reserves in northwestern Ontario were devastated by the mercury pollution of the English-Wabigoon River system by a paper mill in Dryden, Ontario. The river was closed for commercial fishing. This destroyed the economy of the two bands which was based on fishing and guiding. Social disintegration followed the economic collapse of the communities. In addition, people were concerned that the damage to their health from eating mercury polluted fish, as well as the damage to the health of their children and children yet to be born, might be as severe as that resulting from a similar outbreak of mercury poisoning in Minamata, Japan, which killed 100 people and left hundreds disabled or with less minor effects on their health.

A whole new generation of people grew up on the reserves without work or hope for their future. We need to learn something from the alarming fact that it took 16 years for these native people to get a settlement with the companies who polluted the river. In 1982, the Whitedog Band received a $2.4 million settlement from the federal government for economic development. In 1984, the Grassy Narrows Band reserve received $4.4 million in its settlement with the federal government.

The settlement before us in the legislation today gives each band $7 million for economic development. It also gives each band $1 million as an initial contribution to a $2 million mercury disability health fund to be established by Ontario legislation. As honourable senators know, the chapter is not closed.

The Ontario government has agreed to contribute to the fund as necessary to ensure that every person, including unborn children whose health has been damaged by mercury pollution, will receive an award—an award in the sense of attempting to correct the situation that took place in the past. Being a native person, "award" to me means something else: an award of death; an award of honour—what is it?

Individuals may receive up to $800 per month for life from the fund. That is all that we can do, because there is no other way that we can correct the mess that took place in the past. Again, I emphasize: "Let's not do it again." If it happens, let us act upon it as quickly as possible.

The bands will invest the economic development funds and will use the interest for job creation on the reserves, particularly in the traditional economy. Expected projects include re-establishing commercial fishing in unpolluted waters, outfitting hunters, trappers and guides and a sewing factory to produce native clothing and crafts and provide jobs for native women. The bands will also expand their logging and wild rice operations and become more involved in the tourist business.

• (1500)

The chiefs and councils of both reserves, as well as the members of each band, have fought long and hard for the settlement, and both reserves approved the settlement by over a 90 per cent majority in the ratification votes.

Honourable senators, as an individual senator, I support this legislation because the people of Grassy Narrows and White-dog fought for the settlement that will be enacted. In particular, we as a government must do more to ensure their rights to self-determination and self-government in forums such as the First Ministers' Conferences with Native Leaders. I am confident that we are making a contribution to that end by approving this bill that gives force to the claims of the Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands.

Honourable senators, I endorse what was tabled by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This morning I spoke to the lawyers who represented the two Indian bands and they, too, indicated that the bill should be passed as quickly as possible. The people of these communities need the money to redirect their lives—there is no way that we can correct the mess—to endeavours that will better their lives. That is all we can do.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I must remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Robertson speaks now, her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Senator Robertson: Honourable senators, I listened with interest to Senator Watt's remarks. I thoroughly agree with him that the unknown consequences of mercury poisoning are major and legitimate concerns for any government. We really do not know what will happen to future generations. That is why the bill provides that the fund for those affected by such poisoning be replenished as it is depleted. That is small reward, and I agree that we could debate for the rest of the afternoon the meaning of the word "reward."

Surely, these two areas of concern—the unknown as to what the future holds and how we can prevent a recurrence of such an event—have to be uppermost in our minds, because if we have any responsibility at all we must work diligently to protect our native people in this regard. We all know that there are a couple of such areas that all levels of government are watching now very carefully in the event of a problem. However, I think it is important to know that the federal government is committed to seeking at the First Ministers' Conference agreement amongst all parties on the constitutional protection of aboriginal rights, including the right of self-government. The previous bill was an example, and I think that that bill or modifications of it will be repeated many times over.

[Senator Watt.]

Last year our Prime Minister stated that we must have self-government within the Canadian Confederation for our native people. Only then will we have proper protection for our native people and only then will they have the proper opportunities that they desire. I am pleased that Senator Watt, on behalf of his colleagues, concurs with the bill. There is a lot yet to be done and this is only one step in the right direction. I thank honourable senators for their support.

Motion agreed and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

SMOKING PROHIBITION BILL

SECOND READING—MODIFIED MOTION IN AMENDMENT
AGREED TO AND SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL REFERRED TO
LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Bosa, for the second reading of the Bill S-8, intituled: "An Act to prohibit smoking in certain work areas and on board certain modes of transport",

And on the motion in amendment thereto of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Steuart (Prince Albert-Duck Lake), that the Bill be not now read the second time, but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for consideration and report.—(Honourable Senator Godfrey).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I do not propose at this time to speak to the motion or to make an amendment such as was suggested in the Speaker's ruling yesterday. What I would like is a clarification of that ruling. I am concerned about the wording, "that the Order for the Second Reading be discharged, the Bill withdrawn" and whether or not that means that the bill has been killed. Of course, that was not my purpose in having the matter considered by a committee. My purpose is to determine whether or not the committee can help the Senate by reviewing the matter and providing recommendations as to whether or not it should be given second reading.

The Speaker referred to a citation in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition. It is not very clear, but I think that it does give an indication that the effect of such action is not to kill the bill. Citation 746(1) reads:

An amendment, urging a committee to consider the subject-matter of a bill, might be moved and carried if the House were adverse to giving the bill itself a second reading and so conceding its principle. But where further information is desired in direct relation to the terms of the bill before the House, the advantage of referring the bill to a committee could be explained in the second reading stage.

Obviously, the implication there is that the bill is not killed; otherwise, why would they want further information in direct relation to the terms of the bill? I suggest that the implication is that, after the committee has reported, the bill can be restored to the order paper and debated at second reading in light of the report of the committee. For example, when the subject matter of a bill is referred to a committee before the bill itself reaches the Senate, part of the Senate report—and I can remember that we did this very thing with the Canadian Arsenals bill—may be a specific recommendation that the Senate give the bill second reading. The committee in this case could do the same.

I ask that the Speaker take the matter under consideration and give us clarification on what happens next, so that we will know, should I move the amendment as suggested, that we are not killing the bill, but merely following a procedure to return the bill to the order paper so that it may be debated at second reading in light of the report of the committee.

• (1510)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on the question of order I draw the attention of honourable senators and His Honour to page 2431 of Debates of the Senate of May 7, 1986, when the ruling of the Speaker was requested.

In speaking to the question of order and the reference to the Speaker for a ruling, I raised the question as to whether, if we adopted a motion that said that the bill shall not now be read a second time, et cetera, we were then voting on the question of second reading and deciding that it shall not be read a second time. Were we therefore pronouncing ourselves on the question of second reading so as to bring into play the provisions of rule 47? Rule 47 says:

A motion shall not be made which is the same in substance as any question which, during the same session, has been resolved in the affirmative or negative—

At that time, I asked the Speaker for a ruling on that specific point.

There is an explanation as to why the Speaker may not have made a ruling on that, because the ruling that the Speaker did give was to say: "The motion as presented is not in order but is probably in order if the following words are added..." Therefore, in a sense, he is not seized of my point until the motion is put in that form.

However, I want to ask again that any ruling on whether or not the motion is in order, as requested by Senator Godfrey, include a decision as to whether rule 47 would apply. In a way, this is what Senator Godfrey is also asking. In other words, if the words are added that the order at second reading be discharged, perhaps that would get us around it and it would not fall under rule 47. However, if it does fall under rule 47, the result is that the bill is killed for this session unless we have a two-thirds vote to restore it.

Therefore I ask that, when any ruling is made, reference be made to my request that that dimension of the problem be dealt with also.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I must say that I was also surprised at the ruling, because it suggests that there is only one way of referring the subject matter of a bill to a committee, and that is by deciding that the bill is withdrawn. I think we made it clear in the discussion that it was not the intention of anyone to defeat the bill at this stage. We wanted the committee to consider the subject matter, report and possibly suggest that the bill be re-worded in a certain manner.

I would also like to draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that we very often refer the subject matter of a bill to a committee before we deal with the principle of the bill. In that case we ask the committee to tell us something about the subject matter. However, in this case, we were only asking for an adjournment of the debate on second reading in order to consider the subject matter. That is all we were trying to do and I do not think we are bound by the forms that we find in Beauchesne, especially since some of these forms go back years and years, as I mentioned on a previous occasion. These forms are not compulsory at all. There was only the technical problem that was raised by Senator Frith with respect to whether or not the item remains on the Orders of the Day, and that was easy to solve.

As I have mentioned before, when we dealt with Bill S-32 we proceeded in this manner. We did not vote against the bill; we referred the subject matter of the bill to committee, and it was agreed at that time. Therefore there is a precedent, because the Senate agreed at that time, and I would say that if Senator Frith is in agreement with the interpretation that Senator Godfrey put on his motion, we could very well say that we appeal the ruling of the Speaker and restore the debate to the point where we were. Then, subject to any technicalities that remain to be settled, we could refer the question to the Rules Committee. With this ruling, I would say we are in a bind and we do not know where we are going but we would, I think, solve the problem by saying that the motion of Senator Godfrey is in order and that the bill can be sent to committee. Then when the committee reports—as it must do—we can decide to put the bill back on the order paper. I do not see why we cannot do that.

Senator Godfrey: May I make one comment? In view of what Senator Flynn has said—and I am speaking generally—I think in a matter like this where I personally feel quite strongly, this is a very desirable procedure to have. It does not happen very often but occasionally this is the kind of procedure I think that we want to use. I do not think we should feel that it all depends upon the Speaker's ruling. I think the whole matter should eventually be considered by the Rules Committee.

In the meantime, we have this present problem to solve. However, in the long run, it should be considered by the Rules

Committee on the merits. We should ask them to suggest an amendment to our rules so that we know exactly what should happen in a case such as this. In other words, we will have set out the procedure that we want to adopt and will not have to accomplish our purpose by doing something artificial.

Senator Frith: Getting it back on the order paper solves the problem of rule 47. I think that the ruling probably should be that rule 47 would not apply, but I think we must have something on the record about it, because simply getting it back on the order paper does not do the job.

Senator Flynn: When the report from the committee reaches us, with unanimous consent the bill can be put back on the order paper. If there is agreement, of course, we can always decide that we will not.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I must say that I was not surprised by the ruling of the Chair because I did argue that if this motion were put and carried, it would have the effect of withdrawing the bill from the order paper.

However, what I was surprised at was the addition of the words that the bill be discharged and withdrawn, which has the effect, of course, of removing the bill from the order paper. The subject matter would go to the committee and the bill itself would enter oblivion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): As all bills do when they go to committee, in a sense.

Senator MacEachen: However, the bill would enter oblivion without any possibility of resurrection.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that is true.

Senator MacEachen: If this motion is carried, the order discharged and the bill withdrawn—and I am talking on the procedural point; I will make a suggestion in support of what Senator Flynn has said in a moment—but strictly from a procedural point of view, if this motion were carried, either in the original form or in the proposed amended form, it is my judgment that the bill would be basically withdrawn and could only be restored by a new action of the Senate. It would not automatically come back. Therefore I think, from a procedural point of view, that that is the situation.

However, as Senator Flynn has argued, there is no obstacle in the way of the Senate's agreeing—quite apart from the rules—to take a certain course with respect to this bill. It would not create a new rule; it would simply be by way of unanimous consent to deal with this bill and it would constitute no precedent.

● (1520)

Therefore, if I understand Senator Flynn's suggestion in detail, it would be, first, that the motion in amendment of Senator Godfrey be accepted and the subject matter of the bill be referred to committee, and, second, that the Senate now order that when that study is completed the bill be automatically restored to the order paper so that the status of Senator Haidasz's bill is protected. That can be done, as Senator Flynn has pointed out, by unanimous consent. That does not change the rules, but it does get us out of this difficulty, if there is a difficulty, and if that is the proposal, I would support it.

[Senator Godfrey.]

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, there is a point that I think might be enlightening in the course of consideration of this subject, and that is: What would be the status of this bill if it were referred to committee?

The Speaker's ruling indicates that the recommended form of the motion is that the bill be withdrawn and it is therefore dead.

Senator Frith: Are you talking about the referral of the bill or the subject matter of the bill?

Senator Roblin: I am talking about the Speaker's proposal that we amend Senator Godfrey's motion in amendment by adding the words "That the bill be discharged" or whatever the wording is, which, in effect would kill it.

Senator Frith: That is on the question of referring the subject matter, not the bill itself.

Senator Roblin: Exactly. I read Beauchesne in a slightly different way from everybody else. What else is new? Everyone has his or her own interpretation. Citation 746 states:

(1) An amendment, urging a committee to consider the subject-matter of a bill, might be moved and carried if the House were adverse to giving the bill itself a second reading and so conceding its principle.

In other words, the house wants more study on the bill. That is the way I interpret that.

I would think if a motion in those words were carried that the committee could be instructed at the same time to report, and when it reported, it could say that the bill was fine and that the house should proceed with it, or whatever.

I do not see why that is not standard procedure. As has been said by my colleague, we have done that before. I do not think that requires unanimous consent; I think it requires common sense.

I merely say that when the Speaker reads over these discussions—as I am sure he will when he returns—I hope he takes a look at this point because, to my mind, it should be freely available to us if we do not want to go ahead holus-bolus with second reading, which is the important reading of a bill because that establishes beyond any doubt that we approve of what is in it, not the details, but the principle. Senator Stewart is shaking his head in the negative, but I think that second reading does cover approval of the bill in principle.

Perhaps Senator Stewart will enlighten us as to why I am wrong on this point. It seems to me that if one does not want to do that on second reading, as is the case now, there is nothing to stop the Senate, in full accordance with the rules, from saying, "We are not going to give it second reading but we are going to refer it to committee." The committee will then report back and tell us what it thinks should be done, and the Senate will decide what should be done when it has heard what the committee has had to say. Maybe I am just too simple-minded, but it seems to me that that should be the way to go.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I do not want to take us down a long by-road, but since my name was mentioned perhaps I had better say something.

The motion that a bill be read a second time is really a procedural motion. What it says is that the house is prepared to take a bill sufficiently seriously as to refer it to a committee to the end that the bill can be reported in what would be its final form.

That does not mean that the house has said conclusively that it is in favour of the bill; rather, it means that it is sufficiently interested in the bill to invest the time and energy of a committee to study it.

The reason I shook my head was because—and that is what led Senator Roblin to mention my name—very often we are told by the media and by distinguished colleagues here and in the other place that, “the house has accepted the principle of the bill,” and that, in a sense, there is a commitment by the house to pass the bill. I think that is wrong. It would be quite reasonable, in my view—and I think I could support this with plenty of historical documentation—for a house to vote in favour of a bill at second reading, and then when it received the bill from committee in its final form to say, “No, now that we see what is available in the way of a bill we have changed our mind,” and consequently to vote no on the third-reading motion.

Sometimes I use the analogy—if Senator Roblin will permit me—of saying it is as if a family were saying, “Perhaps we should explore the possibility of buying a new car,” so they vote “yes”. As a result, they go out and see what is available. But at the end of the day, not having found a suitable automobile, they go home and decide to do with the old car. You do not commit yourself completely when you say “yes” to a second-reading motion; you are committing the time and energy of the committee to study a particular proposed bill.

As I said, honourable senators, this is a side discussion; I do not want to divert the house from the main line of discourse.

Senator Roblin: I am interested in pursuing it because my judgment has been challenged on this point. I quite agree that second reading does not guarantee the house will vote “yes” on third reading. That is obvious and has nothing to do with the issue, in my mind. The house has the right to do what it wishes on any motion that is before it.

If Beauchesne means anything to anybody—and that is a fairly big “if” because this house is a free-form body, there are no rules of any consequence here; we only dig out Beauchesne when we are having an interesting argument, as we are having now—under citation 712 it sets out the purpose of each stage of a bill. I will skip the subparagraph dealing with first reading. Subparagraph (2) states:

Second Reading—The stage of second reading is primarily concerned with the principle of a measure. At this stage, debate is not strictly limited to the contents of a bill as other methods of attaining its proposed objective may be considered. This stage is coupled with an Order to commit the bill.

I rest my case.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to add my understanding, though I am not an expert on the rules. If a bill receives second reading and is approved in principle one cannot amend the bill later, if that amendment would contradict the principle of the bill. So, if we are not approving the principle, why have that rule that you cannot amend a bill if it contradicts the principle?

Senator Stewart: I wish I had not moved my head at all, honourable senators, because it seems to me that we have now got into something quite different from the main subject.

Senator Godfrey makes a good point, but I do not think it is conclusive. What the house does when it agrees to the second reading of the draft bill that is then before it is to say that it is interested in a bill to achieve the particular purpose of the proposed bill. The house having instructed the committee to go out and bring back a bill to achieve the purpose or principle of the bill that was read a second time, the committee is not free to bring back a bill to achieve some other end. The house defines the principle of the proposed bill so as to instruct the committee, but it does not commit itself.

Going back to my analogy, the family having decided to shop for an automobile could not come back with a yacht. In that sense, the committee is instructed as to what its particular task or commission is.

But, as I said before, it could very well come back and say “We have looked at all the versions, all the automobiles that are available and we have now concluded that we should vote ‘no’ on third reading.”

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I will begin with one comment, and that is that the second reading procedure is one of the most difficult that one encounters. It certainly was my experience in the House of Commons that to get a reasoned amendment on second reading required great ingenuity. For a long time Speakers refused rigorously to accept on second reading amendments declaratory of a principle adverse to the principle of the bill, and that is why oppositions often had to resort to the six months’ hoist or to send the subject matter to a committee.

I am not, however, going to get into all of those interesting areas, particularly the interesting discussion begun by Senator Roblin and continued by Senator Stewart. What I am going to propose, without prejudice to the rules, Beauchesne or the Speaker’s ruling, is that we accept the proposition as amended by the Speaker and that we agree now that when the study is completed, Senator Haidasz’s bill will be restored to its status on the order paper. That satisfies the will of the Senate and would be unanimous.

● (1530)

Senator Flynn: I thought that was the purpose of the wording proposed by Senator Godfrey. The suggestion of the Speaker, however, is that the bill would be withdrawn and discharged, and I thought that we might as well leave the wording as is, but it would be understood that when the bill comes back from the committee it will be restored to the order paper.

Senator MacEachen: I think that we are faced with a Speaker's ruling—

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator MacEachen: —and I certainly will not move to overturn his ruling. If we are to respect his ruling, we must incorporate his judgment in the motion and I want, in this case, to respect his ruling and incorporate—if Senator Godfrey agrees—his amendment into the motion and carry it and, then, make what may be logically a contradictory act, immediately agree to reinstate the bill to the order paper when the study is completed.

Senator Roblin: Where does that leave Senator Frith? Senator Frith is concerned about the application of rule 47 to this procedure. He seems to be advancing the point that if we do what is suggested, then rule 47 will be brought into play—which means that unless we have unanimous consent, or two thirds, we cannot do it. Where does that stand in this argument now?

Senator MacEachen: Well, I would say that the implicit assumption in the proposal is that the Senate would be able to deal with Senator Haidasz's bill through unanimous consent rendered today as if it had waived the rule to which Senator Frith made reference.

Senator Roblin: Well, I would be satisfied with that provided that my honourable friend replaced the word "implicit" by "explicit"—I have had some experience with him.

Senator MacEachen: Well, I'll be accommodating; "explicit" is fine.

Senator Walker: What's the matter with you?

Senator Roblin: I will mark this day in my calendar.

Senator Walker: So will I.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, as long as the ruling of the Speaker has been made, the ruling stands. And, as long as there is no appeal of the ruling of the Speaker, we should continue and accept the Speaker's ruling. But senators are the masters of the rules. If you want to give unanimous consent to restore the original bill of Senator Haidasz, you can do it any time; you can do it now. But, I am waiting for a formal motion.

Senator Godfrey: I will make a motion. To begin with, I will agree to the modification of my motion, in accordance with the Speaker's ruling, and I now move that upon the report of the committee—because part of my motion was that the committee had to report back to the Senate, that it be restored to the order paper. And, if we get unanimous consent on that, there is no problem.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, to give unanimous consent to Senator Godfrey's motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Godfrey: I emphasize that I am going to ask the Chairman of the Standing Rules and Orders Committee, when he is here, to have this matter referred to the Standing Rules and Orders Committee so that we can consider what kind of procedure we really want.

Senator Marshall: Why didn't you do that when we started half an hour ago?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I want to add one comment, namely that it is understood, as you have stated, Your Honour, that this is by unanimous consent—

Senator Godfrey: You are right.

Senator MacEachen: —and the rules and the precedents are still in effect.

Senator Flynn: Yes. Then my objection to the ruling would have been removed.

Senator Frith: Your objection has been noted, Senator Flynn, as they say in court.

Senator Roblin: That will not be counted as a precedent.

Modified motion in amendment agreed to and subject matter of bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY
COMMITTEE ON FILM ENTITLED: "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS" REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, entitled: Production and Distribution of the National Film Board Production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1986,

And on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molson, seconded by the Honourable Senator McEldman, that the Report be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

3. That a copy of this Report as it stands or as it may be amended, be formally submitted to the Honourable Minister of Communications, with the request that it be transmitted to the National Film Board along with the Minister's specific instruction of action required of the Board to correct the wrong that has been done to the factual record of the late Air Marshal William Avery Bishop, Victoria Cross,

And on the motion in amendment thereto of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C., that the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 3.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, you can imagine what Senator Molson and I were speaking about. As a matter of fact, what we were speaking about is a relevant introduction to what I want to say on this order, and that is the question of when—if a vote turns out to be necessary on this motion—that vote should be held.

My feeling was, although I am not very partisan one way or the other on it—I have a viewpoint, but I am not launching a movement—that we should have some idea of when the vote is going to take place rather than just having the vote. In other words, some senators, I think, knew I was going to speak on the motion today—I don't know whether everybody expected that there would be a vote on it today or not.

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator Frith: Well, I don't really want to get into a scrap on it at all. It seems to me that some honourable senators might say, "We didn't know that there was going to be a vote on it." However, I am not wanting to get into any shouting match about that at all one way or the other.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Why does he say a vote? Has he been told there is going to be a vote? Surely the question will be put in the normal way, will it not?

Senator Frith: I personally want to vote on this. I want it to be clear, for the reasons I am about to give, that I propose to vote against the amendment and I want to have the opportunity to vote against the amendment. I assumed that there was nothing very controversial about that and that many other senators wanted to be clearly recorded as voting in favour of the amendment.

Senator Molson: I know.

Senator Frith: So, that is what I meant when I said that I thought that there would be a vote.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Does he not think in suggesting that there be a specific time for a vote that he might be creating a precedent that would somewhat hobble the work of this chamber in other situations where you would have to set up a timetable and say that the vote would take place at such and such a time? Does he not think that that would not be in the best interests of this chamber?

Senator Frith: I don't think it would be in the interests of this chamber to establish a precedent whereby we had to decide in advance exactly what time a vote was going to take place. I agree with Senator Everett.

My point is simply that I can imagine in this case that some particular senators might feel that they did not understand that the matter was going to come to a vote and thought that there was going to be more debate. I am sorry that I brought the subject up; I will drop the whole thing. I don't care whether we have the vote today, or when we have the vote—it was just a suggestion.

Honourable senators, I support the committee's report and, therefore, do not support the amendment.

But, I want to make it clear that I am doing so on my own behalf and not as a spokesman for our caucus because the caucus has decided that it would allow honourable senators to vote on this amending motion as they see fit.

Senator Flynn: Don't you normally do that?

Senator Frith: No, we do not normally do that. We very frequently—unlike, perhaps, your party—take a position on matters before the Senate.

Honourable senators, I want to explain why I support the committee report and, in order to do so, I want to recall to honourable senators what has taken place, some of the background.

When the motion first came to us—and the motion was that the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine and report upon the activities of the National Film Board with respect to the production and distribution of the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss"—honourable senators will recall that I, and I believe some other senators, had some reservations about the wisdom, or desirability, of having that question referred to a Senate committee—in fact, raising some doubts as to whether this was properly a matter for the Senate at all. After listening to the debate, I took the position that because the Film Board's reputation was at stake—the Film Board being a national institution within Parliament's purview—it ought to be given a chance to explain its position and that those who wished to criticize the activity of the Film Board with respect to this film should also be given that opportunity. Therefore, I overcame those reservations and voted in favour of sending this matter to committee under the terms of reference provided.

● (1540)

Then what happened? The committee, in its activity and in its study did a most thorough investigation, one that was very widely reported in the media. The first phase was the activity of the committee listening to the witnesses and in having its hearing reported widely in the press. That resulted in a stunning exposé of this film; the material that went into it; the methods used to produce it; and the inaccuracies—and that is putting it mildly—found in the film.

What that committee did over a long period—and I congratulate it on doing so successfully—was to blow a very loud whistle on the NFB exposing the weaknesses of this film, its inaccuracies and resulting, in my opinion, in more exposure of the weaknesses, inaccuracies and unfairnesses of the film than the film itself had had or was ever going to have.

I believe that as matters stood when the committee finished its examination, even before its report, many more thousands of people in Canada knew what was wrong with this film than had ever seen the film or were ever going to see it. For that reason I congratulate the committee because I feel the proposal made originally by Senator Molson produced the desired effect, which was exactly that.

What happened next? The committee released its report in which, as honourable senators will remember, it detailed in a most effective and articulate way, chapter and verse what was wrong with this film. Although a thin document, it is most articulate and very powerful. In its summary and recommendations on page 18 it states:

“The Kid Who Couldn’t Miss” is a highly dramatized and one-sided account of Billy Bishop’s life—

Any honourable senator who has not read this report and who will not accept my assurance and the assurance of others, ought to read the report and he or she will know that what this committee says in its summaries and recommendations is fully supported in the material that leads up to those summaries and recommendations. As I said, the summary and recommendations state:

“The Kid Who Couldn’t Miss” is a highly dramatized and one-sided account of Billy Bishop’s life and his exploits while serving with 60 Squadron during World War I. Research for this film overlooked a wealth of Canadian sources, veterans, and expertise on the subject, and concentrated instead on a few British sources. Through the technique of “interviewing” from time to time an actor in the role of Bishop’s mechanic, the film gives a false and misleading authority to what is, in the view of most historians, rumour and unpublished speculation. While Mr. Cowan and the National Film Board have every right to express reservations about Bishop’s record, your Committee questions whether the public interest is served, as required by the Act establishing the NFB, by representing these rumours, which seem to have arisen some time after the events described, as based on first-hand, eyewitness evidence.

The report goes on to state:

According to Mr. Macerola and Mr. Cowan, “The Kid Who Couldn’t Miss” was structured as a “docu-drama” to convey a message “about heroism, . . .

The committee gave the point of view of the NFB. The report goes on to state:

Members of the Committee and of the public have strongly objected to the promotion of the film as a “feature-length documentary”. Your Committee’s and indeed the public’s perception of the term “documentary” inevitably brings to mind the qualities of authoritative-ness, accuracy, fairness and even-handedness, within the limits of personal objectivity, especially when the National Film Board is involved. These qualities can be present, in our opinion, even in the treatment of historical subjects, where actors must assume the roles of real characters.

Within the film industry, however, the term documentary is used much more broadly. It was pointed out by Mr. Macerola that John Grierson, the founder of the NFB, said that there were many different types of documentary film, beginning with the newsreel and continuing through the dramatic field, where such a film may involve “an attack on the emotions or on the imagination”, to the poetic. However broadly defined, the object of a documentary remains to capture “fragments of actuality” . . .

The recommendation in the committee’s report is as follows: That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added:

This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

I think that is a very skillful way of pulling together the evidence heard. It is not even-handed and it is not chronological because we know how chronologies were reversed, switched and manipulated in order to give a wrong impression. Then there is another disclaimer:

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop’s mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop’s exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne.

More widespread publicity than our Senate reports normally receive was given to this report of the committee. Again, more people, including the original people, were also aware of what was false, unfair, and pernicious about the film than I believe had ever seen the film or ever will see the film.

After the committee’s report was presented, it was debated here in the Senate. At that time we had an avalanche of details. I would mention, particularly, Senator Perrault’s most detailed indictment. It was, in fact, more than an indictment, it was pages and pages of evidence to support every single particular in that indictment. Senators Everett and Steuart, looking at the matter from different perspectives, again exposed the errors, inaccuracy, falsehoods and innuendoes. Again there were reports of these eloquent and deserved denunciations of this film in the press.

• (1550)

Honourable senators, to use a military metaphor, it seems to me that the film “The Kid Who Couldn’t Miss” has been so thoroughly strafed and bombed by the activities of the Senate in its first debate, in its hearings in committee, in the report of the committee and in the debate in the chamber upon consideration of the report—and by all of the attendant publicity—that all that is left of it is smoking rubble. That is a direct result of the good work of the Senate. I agree with many of my colleagues that the film, in getting that strafing, got no more than it deserved. Indeed, it may get elsewhere, from the government or from the minister, even more than it got from the Senate.

I must say that I was impressed by Senator McElman's intervention. Although I was not present to hear it, I did read it. It pointed out that under the provisions of the statute, there is a special responsibility on the minister with regard to the National Film Board. While I do not support the amendment, I do support the principle of that portion of it which includes the views of Senator McElman. I am sure that when we adopt the committee's report, as I think we ought to, it will be sent to the responsible minister.

Honourable senators, the film got what it deserved from the Senate; I hope that it will get the same from the government, and I believe that it will get what it deserves from the viewers, who will know about it in advance, having been alerted and alarmed by the exposure it has received in the Senate.

But, honourable senators, for the Senate to go any further raises serious problems, in my view. One of those problems is the allegation of our being involved in censorship. I noted that any senator who has spoken in favour of further action has shrugged off the allegations of censorship by saying, "This is not censorship." If those senators had looked up the definition of "censorship", I can well understand why they would say that. The Encyclopaedia Britannica has eight or 10 pages on the subject. But the definition of "censorship" in the Oxford is:

The official restriction on ideas prior to, or prosecution or suppression following, their publication.

If the proposals in the amendment do not fall within the definition of censorship, then I think the least that can be said is that they certainly raise serious questions as to whether the Senate is going beyond where it ought to go and is entering an area where it can justifiably be charged with engaging in censorship.

As much as I hope that the film never rises from the smoking rubble to which it has been reduced, to say that it should be withdrawn is clearly censorship. Although I do not agree with it, I can accept the view that, although it does constitute censorship, we should withdraw the film. But, in my opinion, it is unreasonable to shrug off the withdrawal of the film as not constituting censorship. That is one of the dangers in our going any further than we have gone, which is to censure as distinct from censor.

The second problem involves the precedent we might create if we were to refuse or reject the recommendation of a Senate committee which has studied the matter. The committee recommended that a disclaimer be added to the film. If senators were to go on to recommend that the film be withdrawn—

Senator Flynn: That is not what the motion says.

Senator Frith: Some question has been raised as to what the motion actually says, so let us have a look at it. If I have been wrong—if I have exaggerated the recommendation—then we ought to put the record straight.

The motion is:

—that the Report be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20—

So that there is no doubt about what we are talking about, page 20 recommends that a disclaimer be added. Therefore, the motion recommends that that be struck and that the following be substituted:

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added—

I believe that the first paragraph of the motion is the same as what appears on page 20 of the report. The motion further recommends:

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

There is no recommendation of withdrawal; I stand corrected.

What happens when Warner Brothers, for example, wants to distribute a film in Ontario where there is a censorship board? That board will review the film and will then instruct Warner Brothers to remove certain passages from it.

Senator Molson: Warner Brothers is not a government agency, however.

Senator Frith: I am now dealing with the question of censorship. We keep shrugging off the idea while, at the same time, we say that the Film Board should be requested to eliminate certain things from the film. That is precisely what a censorship board requests of whoever made a film it is censoring.

The next question is: If we decide to do that to the National Film Board, will we create a precedent such that, in future, if we find that the Film Board is guilty of inaccuracies in other films to which someone objects, will they take the view that they should not bother with the censorship board but ought to come to the Senate for redress?

Senator Marshall: Come on, now.

Senator Frith: All right, "Come on;" let me hear about that.

Senator Roblin: Order. You have the floor.

Senator Frith: Do I? I understood, however, that I was asked to come on. I take it that that means—

Senator Walker: Go ahead.

Senator Frith: That means, I take it, that we will not be doing what I said. When in this case we say to the Film Board, "We ask you to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop," will we not thereby be inviting other people, who find objectionable material in other productions of the Film Board—I am not talking about Warner Brothers, but other films of the Film Board—to complain to the Senate about those inaccuracies and ask that the matter be referred to a subcommittee, with the hope that eventually the Senate will ask the National Film Board to take action to eliminate from the film whatever it is that the committee finds unproven.

● (1600)

Senator Molson said that Warner Brothers is not a federal institution. But the CBC is. Therefore it would be reasonable for people to come to the Senate and complain about inaccuracies in CBC films. The other evening I saw a CBC film on Hal Banks, and it contained the most outrageous implications and suggestions, particularly about Prime Minister St. Laurent who is in a similar position to that of Billy Bishop in that he cannot defend himself or sue.

Senator Barootes: How was it labelled?

Senator Frith: It was a docu-drama, a similar production. What are we going to say if someone comes to us and says, "You did this in the Billy Bishop case"? Do we establish that the Senate does that only in cases where it is called a docu-drama and deals with a war hero? We cannot take such a position. That is the danger in going any further than the committee has already gone. In the CBC film there was a suggestion, in a gratuitous way, that the action against Hal Banks was part of an anti-communist witch hunt by Mr. St. Laurent. I am pointing out the danger that we are running into.

Senator Flynn: I agree with you, but I see quite a difference between a CBC film and a National Film Board film.

Senator Frith: You may, but others may not see the fineness and the elegance of that distinction, and they could come to us and say, "You justified your activity when you asked for the elimination of certain parts of a National Film Board film. You justified yourselves on the basis that the NFB was a federal institution. But so is the CBC." They might not catch the subtle distinction between the CBC and the National Film Board. If we are setting ourselves up as a sort of appeal court for the Film Board, certainly the same could reasonably apply to the CBC.

I am giving honourable senators an example of what someone who saw the film might say. What was said about Mr. St. Laurent in the CBC film was not at all necessary; it was quite gratuitous. It was suggested that Hal Banks was the victim of a St. Laurent anti-communist witch hunt. On the contrary, every statement that Mr. St. Laurent made was to the effect that "I am glad that we are living in a country where deluded people like communists can speak." However, they threw that in because it fitted their bias—just as they did in connection with Billy Bishop. As Senator Molson and Senator Perrault have demonstrated, they took the facts that fitted whatever they wanted to apply in their film, and they used it with no regard for accuracy. Someone could come to the Senate and say, "You did it for Billy Bishop; you should do it in this case too." Perhaps that is what those who support the amendment would like us to do; but it is not what I would like us to do. I do not believe that we should go that far. The danger in going any further than the committee has already gone is such that we would be opening the door to legitimate criticism that we are engaged in censorship. It would be opening the door to an avalanche or at least a steady flow of objections from people who complain about what the CBC or NFB does, and, in effect, they could ask us to play a role which, in my view, is one of censorship and one that we should not be involved in.

In summary, I believe that the work of the Senate in the debate leading to the reference, in the work of the committee, in the committee's report, and in the debate after the report, has exceeded our greatest expectations as to what we could accomplish with regard to this film. I believe that we should support the committee's report and that we should go no further. For that reason I will vote against the amendment.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators—

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak on this matter, I should like to say a few words on the amendment. I will yield to Senator Bonnell. Senator, please go ahead.

Senator Bonnell: I was going to speak to the original motion and speak to the amendment later.

Senator Roblin: You should speak to the amendment now.

Senator Bonnell: It doesn't make much difference what I say.

Senator Roblin: You are wrong there.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words on the National Film Board production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". If we are talking about Billy Bishop, then he was the kid who couldn't miss; but if we are talking about the author, then I am afraid he missed the point, because he missed what we as Canadians feel proud of in Billy Bishop. I am a member of the committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology and we heard many witnesses tell us about the great feats of Billy Bishop; and, as a Canadian, I was proud to have such a man in our forces fighting for our country.

As I watched the film I was saddened to see the great hero represented almost as a fraud. I was saddened to think that any Canadian would feel the urge to destroy one of our great heroes. I had different thoughts on what we should recommend. One of the recommendations I had in mind was the one that we did make. I thought that we should include a disclaimer before the film to explain that the film was fictitious, that Walter Bourne was an actor and that the words he spoke in the film were not the words of the mechanic who worked with Billy Bishop but the words of the author who had put words in his mouth and had given no proof that Walter Bourne ever said them.

There was another option. We could have frozen the film in the Archives for 40, 50 or 100 years. However, it was my view that 100 years from now the film would be shown and it would be like Erik Nielsen with the bugging of the Liberal caucus. Forty years from now, people will look at the film and it will be that much harder to prove that Billy Bishop was a hero. Therefore, I did not want to see the film put away in the Archives in its present form because it would still be the lie that I thought it was and more difficult than ever to prove.

● (1610)

The third thing we could have recommended was that the film be destroyed altogether, ask the National Film Board to destroy this film and all its copies that degrade our great hero. Then I thought—you know if this film indicates that it is a docu-drama, that it is fictitious and that Bourne is only an actor, it would be a waste of the taxpayers' money to destroy what is otherwise a fairly good film of fairly good photography and fairly good work. I also thought that it behooves a Senate committee to tell the National Film Board to change this and to change that, and to cut out sections here and cut out sections that cannot be proven to be true, but then I thought that it would destroy the whole film and that a lot of the money of the taxpayers of this country would be wasted.

However, to put a disclaimer at the beginning of the film would cost very little. This disclaimer could point out, as the committee did in its report, that the film contains words of the author and not facts, that it should have been called a docu-drama from the beginning and not a documentary. Such a disclaimer would suffice in that it would not put the Senate in the position of a censorship board or in the position of telling the National Film Board which films it could make and which ones it could not make. Nor could the Senate be used as a scapegoat for other films that people may not like. Rather, it would point out the weaknesses of this film. I felt that the recommendation of the committee covered all these angles. Since I had something to do with making that recommendation, I must stand by my original thoughts and vote against the further recommendation to refer the matter back to committee.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, you have debated the motion in amendment. Is it your pleasure—

Senator Frith: Madam Speaker, do we know whether anybody else wishes to speak to the debate?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Are there any further speakers?

If not, it has been moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C., that the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 3.

Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion in amendment?

Senator Frith: What amendment?

Senator Flynn: The amendment to the amendment.

Senator Frith: Your amendment?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it. I declare the motion in amendment carried.

Motion in amendment agreed to, on division.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the question now is on the main motion, as amended.

It was moved by the Honourable Senator Molson, seconded by the Honourable Senator McElman—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion, as amended, please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion, as amended, please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Please call in the senators.

● (1630)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Molson, seconded by the Honourable Senator McElman, that the Report be referred back to the committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

Motion, as amended, carried on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Anderson	Marshall
Barootes	McElman
Barrow	Molson
Bélisle	Murray
Buckwold	Olson
Denis	Petten
Doody	Phillips
Everett	Robertson
Flynn	Roblin
Godfrey	Sherwood
Lafond	Steuart (Prince
Lewis	Albert-Duck Lake)
MacDonald (Halifax)	Turner
Macdonald (Cape Breton)	van Roggen
	Walker—28.

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Argue	Le Moyne
Bonnell	MacEachen
Corbin	Macquarrie
Doyle	Marchand
Fairbairn	Marsden
Frith	Rizzuto
Gigantès	Stewart (Antigonish-
Haidasz	Guysborough)
Hébert	Thériault—17.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

● (1640)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, as I understand the matter, we have voted on the amendment and now we have to vote on the main motion as amended. Am I wrong on that?

Senator Frith: Yes, you are. The amendment carries the motion. The vote was on the motion as amended and that has succeeded. Therefore, as I understand it, there are no further motions to be put.

Senator Roblin: You can't win them all.

Senator MacEachen: You want another victory.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Senator Doody: It's my first.

Senator Frith: In football that is called "piling on."

Motion, as amended, agreed to, on division, and report referred back to Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

TERRORISM

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—
DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sherwood:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to provide a forum to examine, consider, evaluate, consolidate and synthesize available research, documentation and other information relating to terrorism as a real or potential threat to Canada and to Canadians;

That the Committee identify any areas where further study, research or investigation is called for;

That the Committee examine and make recommendations on the role of the media in reporting terrorist threats and incidents;

That eight Senators, to be designated at a later date, act as members of the Special Committee; and

That the Committee present its report no later than December 19, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the motion before us differs substantially from the motion Senator Kelly presented last January. To save time I will not read the debates which, I believe, led up to Senator Kelly's changing his motion. However, for the sake of the record, I would refer honourable senators to the Debates of the Senate of February 11, 1986 at page 1991 when I made a speech against the motion expressing some grave reservations and focusing, particularly, on how broad the terms of reference of the original motion were and expressing some doubts as to whether the Senate of Canada could usefully make a contribution to the solution of this admittedly serious problem by the setting up of a committee.

I then went through the terms of reference and pointed out that the work of the committee, if it fulfilled its mandate as it ought to—if we gave it such a mandate—would require a lifetime's work. It would require examination of government policy. It would involve evidence from each of our foreign postings if the mandate were fulfilled. It would include the role of the media and although I thought that was manageable, most of the other aspects I did not think would be manageable.

At that time I also expressed some reservations about the problems that we have at the present time in terms of having enough senators to be members of our committees. I also had some reservations about the costs of retaining counsel and travelling as, I believe, the original mandate would have required.

The motion before us now has solved most of those problems because the wording is as follows:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to provide a forum to examine, consider, evaluate, consolidate and synthesize available research, documentation and other information relating to terrorism as a real or potential threat to Canada and to Canadians;

That the Committee identify any areas where further study, research or investigation is called for;

That the Committee examine and make recommendations on the role of the media in reporting terrorist threats and incidents; . . .

Honourable senators, I take it that the substance of this motion is the providing of a forum for all of these things. I still have some reservations about whether we have enough person power to man such a committee because we recently split the Agriculture and Fisheries committee into a committee on fisheries, and another on forestry and agriculture so, in that instance, we had to double the number of senators to fill those committees. This committee will require an equal number of senators because the motion asks for eight senators.

I am, however, encouraged by the fact that the scope is noticeably limited. I believe we have a role to play in establishing such a forum. Senator Kelly has made it clear that there is at the present time no forum for all these various bodies interested in terrorism.

For that reason, although I speak for myself and not for our caucus, and subject to the reservations about a guarantee that we have senators to fulfill our present obligations to Senate committees, including the splitting of that one committee, and with it being understood that there is no power to travel and no power to hire professional services, I believe that we should support this motion.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

● (1650)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 3, 1986, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the Internal Economy Committee is meeting at 9.30 tomorrow morning. I understand that all other committees that are scheduled to meet tomorrow will also do so.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 3, 1986, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 2501)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE
SIXTEENTH REPORTREPORT ON THE ESTIMATES LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT
FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1987

Wednesday, May 28, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

SIXTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which the expenditures proposed by the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31 March, 1987 were referred, examined the said Estimates and presents, in obedience to the Order of Reference of March 4, 1986, its interim report as follows:

In undertaking this review, the Committee heard from four groups of witnesses:

1. April 23, 1986, Treasury Board:

The Honourable Robert de Cotret, P.C., President;
Mr. J. L. Manion, Secretary;
Mr. Michael Rayner, Comptroller General of Canada.

2. April 30, 1986, Department of Finance:

Mr. Stanley Hartt, Deputy Minister;
Mr. G. E. Shannon, Senior Assistant Deputy Minister,
Trade, Tax and Economic Development Policy;
Mr. C. David Weyman, Assistant Deputy Minister, Tax
Policy and Legislation Branch;
Mr. C. Peter Daniel, Director General, Consultations and
Communications;
Mr. Don Lusby, A/Director General, Administration.

3. May 7, 1986, Revenue Canada, Taxation:

Mr. Harry Rogers, Deputy Minister;
Mr. Hervé Diguer, Assistant Deputy Minister, Policy and Systems;
Mr. Perry Anglin, Assistant Deputy Minister, Legislative and Governmental Affairs.

4. May 14, 1986, Auditor General of Canada:

Mr. Kenneth M. Dye, Auditor General of Canada;
Mr. Ron Thompson, Assistant Auditor General, Audit
Operations Branch;
Mr. Barry Elkin, Principal, Audit Operations Branch.

A. THE ESTIMATES

A.1 An Overview

The 1986-87 Main Estimates tabled on February 27, 1986, total $107.4 billion and are made up of $107.0 billion in budgetary estimates and $0.4 billion in non-budgetary loans, investments and advances.

For the budgetary estimates, this represents an increase of 4.4% over the 1985-86 Main Estimates compared to an 8.4% growth rate for the previous year. With the announcement by the Minister of Finance of a further expenditure reduction of $500 million, not reflected in the Blue Book, the Main Estimates over Main Estimates growth rate for budgetary estimates declines to 3.9%.

Of this budgetary component, roughly two-thirds or $69.5 billion represents statutory expenditures while the remaining $37.5 billion represents expenditures which Parliament is being asked to authorize.

These Main Estimates can be compared with the expenditure plan announced on February 26 by the Minister of Finance who indicated that total budgetary expenditures for 1986-87, on a revised accounting basis, are to be $116.7 billion. This expenditure plan includes contingency funds and reserves. The former covers the cost of initiatives that could not be anticipated in time to include them in the Main Estimates while the latter covers financial adjustments to existing programs during the fiscal year. In all cases, Parliamentary approval is required through Supplementary Estimates or other legislative means for use to be made of these reserves.

The Main Estimates plus the reserves, on an unrevised accounting basis, bring the projected total budgetary estimates for 1986-87 to $110.0 billion. To arrive at total budgetary expenditures on a revised accounting basis, this figure must be increased by $8.0 billion due to changes in accounting policy, particularly the consolidation into budgetary transactions of the Unemployment Insurance Account, the Exchange Fund Account and the Western Grain Stabilization Account, and loans to developing countries. In addition $130 million must be added for the valuation provision, and $1.4 billion must be subtracted as a result of the anticipated lapse of spending authorities. These data are summarized in the following table.

Expenditure Framework for the 1986-87 fiscal year

	($ million)
Budgetary Main Estimates
Statutory expenditures	69,538
Annual appropriations	37,470
Total Budgetary Main Estimates	107,008
Reserves for Supplementary Estimates
Allocated to envelopes	1,100
Provisions for adjustments to statutory and other programs	1,900
Projected Total Budgetary Estimates	110,008
Consolidation of accounts	8,039
Provision for valuation	130
Allowance for lapse	-1,437
Total Budgetary Expenditures	116,740

A.2 The $500 Million Expenditure Reduction

Following its usual practice, the Committee chose not to examine in detail specific votes or program expenditures but focussed on general areas it found important. In this regard, the Committee took up the issue of the $500 million reduction expenditure announced by the Minister of Finance on February 26, 1986 but not reflected in the Estimates. The Committee learned that the bulk of these reductions will fall on non-statutory programs (excluding Defence and Official Development Assistance (ODA)). Data released with the Budget indicated that non-statutory program expenditures excluding Defence and ODA, after the $500 million reduction, are expected to grow over the next five years by 3.7% while statutory program expenditures are expected to grow by 19.1%. The Committee expressed concern that because Parliamentary approval is not required for expenditure reductions, Senators and MPs would not be informed of the decision by the Treasury Board of the sources of the $500 million reduction. The Committee suggested to the President of the Treasury Board that he table before Parliament a document indicating the areas targetted for expenditure reduction as he did in November 1984. The President of the Treasury Board agreed to take this proposal into consideration.

B. TAX EXPENDITURES

The last three sessions in this Main Estimates review were taken up by an investigation of tax expenditures. Before putting forward the Committee's recommendations and the rationale behind them, some background information is necessary.

B.1 Background

A number of provisions in federal tax law give special tax treatment to selected individuals and groups in society. In some cases, this treatment is tied to particular sources of income such as the pension income deduction. In other cases, preferential tax treatment is provided in respect of particular uses to which taxpayers put their income such as savings in registered retirement savings plans or purchases of goods exempt from sales tax. Also a number of tax measures are based on specific characteristics of taxpayers such as the disability deduction. In all cases, these provisions are selective in their application.

These selective tax measures generally take the form of tax deferrals, exemptions, incentives, deductions, credits or reduced tax rates, and are a means by which the federal government can pursue public policy goals. Because such tax measures can often be used as substitutes for direct expenditures in the pursuit of these public policy goals, they have come to be referred to as tax expenditures which is the term used in this report.

Accounts of tax expenditures are not new in Canada. In 1979, 1980 and 1985, the federal government issued such an account. However, no commitment has been made that this will be an annual event.

In his 1984 annual report, the Auditor General indicated that tax expenditures are a hidden budget in the financial affairs of Canada. He stated:

MPs have increasingly brought their scrutiny to bear on the direct expenditures of Government and have made it more accountable. But all the while, beneath the surface of any accountability régime, programs fuelled by tax expenditures have expanded, their real costs unquantified, their total effect a mystery. And these tax expenditures have an enormous impact on our nation's economy. (p.1-24)

In his 1985 report, the Auditor General returned to the tax expenditure issue and used the Scientific Research Tax Credit to illustrate the kinds of problems that can arise when government chooses to pursue its policies by providing tax reductions without appropriate checks and balances. While he welcomed the Minister of Finance's release of the tax expenditure account in August 1985, he was concerned that some tax advantages such as the $1 billion remission order to Dome Petroleum would never show in any such accounting. The Auditor General indicated that his 1986 report would contain a major chapter on tax expenditures.

In February 1986, the Task Force on Program Review (Nielsen Task Force) report, An Introduction to the Process of Program Review indicated the magnitude of tax expenditures through the following illustration (p.20):

	($ Billions)	% of Total
Tax Expenditures	$36	39%
Statutory Programs	$37	40%
Non Statutory Programs	$20	21%
Total	$93	100%

Of these categories, only non-statutory expenditures are subject to annual Cabinet, Treasury Board and Parliamentary review.

Finally, in March 1986, the Office of the Auditor General in conjunction with the United States General Accounting Office issued their Federal Government Reporting Study in which they called for an annual reporting of a tax expenditure account as part of the annual financial report to their respective legislatures. This document also presents an illustrative financial report which includes summary data on major tax expenditures as supplementary information.

B.2 The Recommendations

Using these documents as background the Committee heard from officials of the Department of Finance, Revenue Canada, Taxation and the Office of the Auditor General. The Committee concluded that there are two fundamental issues which must be addressed and makes the following two general recommendations:

- 1) THE FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT BE AMENDED TO REQUIRE AN ANNUAL ACCOUNTING OF TAX EXPENDITURES COMPARABLE TO THE REQUIREMENTS FOR THE PREPARING AND TABLING OF THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.
- 2) EFFECTIVENESS EVALUATIONS FOR THE TAX PROGRAMS INCLUDED IN THE PROPOSED TAX EXPENDITURE ACCOUNT BE DONE ON A REGULAR BASIS AND WHERE APPROPRIATE BE PART OF THE PUBLIC RECORD.

B.3 An Annual Accounting of Tax Expenditures

The Committee recognizes that requiring an annual accounting of tax expenditures is only the tip of the iceberg. Making such an account useful and as complete as possible for parliamentarians and the general public will take considerable effort since there are many serious gaps of knowledge in the existing account. For example the Account of the Cost of Selective Tax Measures illustrates that for many tax measures, actual tax data are not available. The exemption of income earned by Status Indians on reserves and the exemption of capital gains on owner occupied residences are such examples. Collecting data on items such as these or improving existing data may be costly and may impose an additional burden on taxpayers. The Committee is mindful of this and strongly suggests that a drive for additional and more complete information should take place, but it should be tempered by regard for excessive additional costs in obtaining it.

A second problem the Committee encountered regarding the need for more complete information concerns knowing why individual tax programs were introduced in the first place. Throughout the hearings, Committee members and witnesses referred to the objectives of various tax measures - as they understood them to be. Yet there is no single reference source noting the objectives for each item as would have been indicated in the Budget when the item was first introduced. For that matter, there is also no reference indicating how old some of these items are. In the Committee's opinion such information is vital if Parliament is to understand the role and effectiveness of tax expenditures.

The Committee also addressed the fact that there is a considerable lag between the year of application of a tax measure and the year in which the data are available. In some cases, this can be as long as three years. With such an extensive lag, the account which the Committee is proposing could not contain changes introduced in recent budgets. To remedy this, the Committee recommends that where data are not available, the account contain estimates for the tax measure as indicated when the measure was first introduced.

Lastly, the Committee wishes to make clear that it is talking about a tax expenditure account to parallel the Public Accounts. This means looking to the events of the past. Such an account would not project anticipated expenditures for the coming or future years. This too is a problem and could well lead to a requirement for an annual estimate of tax expenditures to parallel the Main Estimates. Producing such an account would be full of many of the same pitfalls as producing an account which looks back. While the Committee believes that this should be considered, it does not recommend it with the same urgency as it does for a record of the events of the past to parallel the Public Accounts.

B.4 Evaluation of Tax Expenditure Programs

The second general recommendation of the Committee refers to the need for systematic evaluation of tax expenditures and the availability of these evaluations to the public. In Auditing of the Effectiveness Measurement, Reporting and Use (February, 1986) issued by the Office of the Auditor General of Canada, Treasury Board Circular 1977-47 is quoted:

Departments and agencies of the federal government will periodically review their programs to evaluate their effectiveness in meeting their objectives and the efficiency with which they are being administered. (p.6)

In the Part III of the Main Estimates for the Department of Finance, the following statement appears:

To this end, much of the Department's work involves the evaluation of existing programs and measures. For example, the Tax Policy and Legislation Branch is involved in the continual analysis and assessment of existing tax measures. These in-depth evaluations must be undertaken if the Branch is to be in a position to propose that these measures be increased, extended, modified or terminated. (p.2-18)

To achieve this, the Department allocated 104 person years and $8.1 million to the Tax Policy and Legislation Branch for 1986-87. Last year, it received 113 person years and $8.1 million.

At present, there is no way of publicly documenting whether the Department of Finance has a procedure in place for undertaking evaluations of the various tax programs. This concern is confirmed in the Nielsen Task Force report, Service and Subsidies to Business.

We do, however, have some concern with the cost effectiveness of tax expenditures in general and, in particular, with the apparent lack of a procedure to effectively measure that cost effectiveness.

While an evaluation of the cost effectiveness of tax expenditure items is conceded to be a difficult task, we believe that it should be possible to introduce some measures, albeit perhaps somewhat rough and ready, for this purpose. If the tax system is to contain incentive provisions which result in significant amounts of foregone tax revenue, for example, the investment tax credit, some reasonably reliable means of assessing their cost effectiveness must be implemented. Also, the study team suggests that sunset provisions be used where appropriate when new incentive measures are introduced or when there are additions to existing incentive provisions. (p.99)

From the evidence presented, the Committee would have to concur with this statement and wishes to make three further comments.

Firstly, from the evidence presented, the Committee has come to realize that some tax expenditure items are more difficult to evaluate than others. For example, the Cape Breton tax credit, introduced in May 1985 is a tax program which could have been delivered using direct expenditures such as grants or contributions. As such, it is more amenable to evaluation using such criteria as employment creation, economic growth and regional development. Other tax expenditure items may not be so amenable to evaluation along traditional lines. For example, the dividend tax credit for individuals, as indicated in p.101 of the Account of the Cost of Selective Tax Measures, is part of the move toward an integrated personal and corporate income tax system in Canada. Evaluating this program in isolation of other personal and corporate income tax measures makes little sense. These two examples illustrate the complexity in carrying out the recommendation of the Committee that tax expenditures be evaluated.

Secondly, public release of evaluation studies would obviously be of great benefit to Parliament in understanding the role and use of the tax system. However, the Committee is mindful that evaluations are often based upon judgement as well as statistical analyses and realizes that the mandatory release of such evaluations must be tempered with respect for the advice-giving process and the confidentiality of taxation data.

Thirdly, if an evaluation function for tax expenditures is to be established within the Department of Finance, it must be separate from the policy function. This is not to say that it must be outside the sphere of the Assistant Deputy Minister, Tax Policy, but clear lines must be drawn to ensure that those who develop programs are not responsible for their evaluation.

B.5 Conclusion

The Committee believes that the recommendations in this report are a logical extension of the comments made in the Nielsen Task Force report Services and Subsidies to Business and the comments made in the 1984 and 1985 Auditor General's reports. However, it is also aware that all of these reports, comments and recommendations are only the beginning; sustained efforts by Parliament will be required to ensure that the real cost of these tax expenditures are no longer represented by guesses nor their total effects a mystery. In this regard, the 1986 report of the Auditor General is expected to contain a major chapter on tax expenditures and Mr. Dye has agreed to appear before the Committee to explain his findings.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 3, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE FLORENCE ELSIE INMAN TRIBUTES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on Saturday last our beloved and highly respected colleague, Senator Inman, died, or, to use what I think is the proper Senate vocabulary, left. She was born on December 5, 1890, when Sir John A. Macdonald was Prime Minister. Those of us who knew her—and that includes everyone in this chamber, even those most recently appointed to the Senate—know that she took her Senate duties very seriously. Whips and party leaders in the Senate can attest to that fact. She not only attended almost all Senate sittings faithfully, but also carefully weighed the arguments presented in debate prior to voting. We all remember her decision with respect to the patriation of the Constitution. As for her attendance, I can remember that when we had to sit very late one evening and into the early morning over the settlement of a strike, and the whips had a little difficulty getting a quorum, Senator Inman, taking her duties seriously as usual, was here.

She was also very consistent. On November 22, 1977, during the debate on retirement policy, she made it clear that she was in favour of allowing individuals to work beyond the age of 65. She was appointed to the Senate at the age of 64. When most Canadians have reached the age when their careers are coming to a close, Senator Inman started a new career—a long and distinguished career as a parliamentarian.

Unfortunately for her, for us and for the country, her health in recent years did not allow her to participate in debate as much as she would have wished. Those who have come to this chamber more recently may not realize how active in debate she was. She always kept herself well informed. I can remember coming into the chamber and stopping at her usual seat near the door to talk to her about matters that were before us. I always found that she had read over her orders of the day, knew very well what was happening and, as usual, had some fairly strong and independent opinions on things.

Senator Inman's interests were diverse, as an examination of the Debates of the Senate will show, and she had no hesitation in participating at length in debates on a wide variety of topics, and I say that she discussed these matters as a champion not only in the Senate but outside the Senate as well. She could speak on things as diversified as the role of women throughout history, the plight of the poor, the need for daycare facilities, consumer protection, the environment, the special needs of women serving time in our penitentiaries and the United Nations. On February 25, 1971, when Paul Martin was the Leader of the Government, she said in debate that she was old-fashioned. To that, Senator Martin replied, "You are more modern than most, as far as I am concerned."

Senator Inman, as all senators know, was very contemporary in her attitudes, speaking out on numerous social issues well before some of them became fashionable topics. I notice from the excellent obituary that appeared in the Globe and Mail that she once described Mr. St. Laurent as a real French gentleman. I understand that although it is still all right to describe someone as "a gentleman", it is not acceptable in some quarters to describe someone as "a lady".

Recently, I was reading a book the title of which was The Gentleman in Trollope. After the author had made a full analysis of what she considered to be the definition of this unique cultural word, namely, "a gentleman", she decided that the person who best exemplified all of the qualities of a gentleman in Trollope's novels was, in fact, a woman. I think we can honestly say—and I do so respectfully—of Senator Inman that she was, in that sense, a true lady and a great Canadian.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): It is true, honourable senators, that since we last met news has come to us of the death of the Honourable Florence Elsie Inman, and on behalf of the government I would like to add a word of tribute to her contribution and career in this chamber.

As we know, she came to the Senate in 1955 and she leaves it in 1986: a term of some 31 years of service in this house, climaxing a life of 95 years. That is quite extraordinary. As Senator Frith has said, she had certain real interests. One of them was, without doubt, the question of women's rights in this country. In fact, in her maiden speech in the Senate in 1956, or shortly thereafter, she said:

It is an honour indeed to be the sixth woman to sit here in the Senate and I would like to think that my appointment is further recognition of the part that women play in Canada today.

I am sure that that was the case, but her interests in women's rights did not start when she got to the Senate. During World War I she was a most successful advocate of the right of women to vote, both in the nation and in her own province, and she must share a good deal of the credit that comes to those who were successful in that campaign to provide this elementary right for the citizens of our country who happened to be women.

As the other issues came along, namely, the question of maternity leave, daycare, equal economic opportunities and that whole range of issues with which we have been dealing over these past years, they found in Elsie Inman an informed, articulate and able advocate.

As Senator Frith has said, she had very pronounced views about retiring, and that is true. She came here at the age of approximately 65 and, in that 1977 debate which has just been alluded to, she had something to say about that subject. She did not think much of mandatory retirements. She said at that time:

It now is thought by many that retirement should come about as naturally as other events of life. It should not be forced upon people who may not be ready for it and who do not wish to give up their active working lives.

How foresighted. She had no idea, I suppose, that the Constitution might have something to say about that matter when finally it came to pass, but certainly her views on this important question were on the record long before that event.

We know she was an independent soul, because on one of the greatest issues that has ever come before this chamber—namely those issues dealing with the Constitution—she found herself, for reasons which I thought persuasive, to be on the negative side of that vote, even though the government was on the affirmative. However, I think she earned the respect of all for the contribution, short as it was, that she made to the debate at that time and her determination to stand up for her convictions, because they were of the essence of Elsie Inman.

Of course, she was a Prince Edward Islander, par excellence. She knew that province from stem to stern. She was born there so many years ago. There could not have been much about Prince Edward Island that she did not know. She talked about it in her introductory speech in this house, and she had this to say:

Prince Edward Island's economic stability lies in the soil and in the sea surrounding it. Harvest from land and sea is the goose that lays the golden egg in this small province . . . We have no mineral resources; nothing is mined deeper than the depth of the sea.

Of course, things have changed since 1956, but I think it can well be said that her analysis of the situation in which her province found itself can stand a good deal of the test of time in the days that have passed since then, because agriculture of the sea is still part of the very matrix of Prince Edward Island.

I think of Senator Inman as, particularly, an extraordinary link with the past. She was 95 years old—not quite as old as the country, but almost there. She carries our minds back to those days before the turn of the century; the days of the First World War; and all those events of the youth and the growth of this nation of which she was a part. I think of her connection with those early days carrying right through to her work in this chamber up until the last little while. It is an extraordinary link; a link that binds the country together, I suggest.

I know that all honourable senators, regardless of the side of the chamber on which they happen to sit, join in an expression of appreciation for what she has done for her country and an expression of sympathy for those of her family who mourn her.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, in paying tribute to Florence Elsie Inman, I should like to mention that to those of us who knew her she was always Elsie. Elsie was a lady, a senator and a truly great Canadian pioneer. She died last week full of years and honours.

Senator Inman was born in Prince Edward Island in 1890 and she never let you forget it.

She was hailed to the Senate in a group of five, of which I was one, in 1955. We were all sworn in on the same day and, by virtue of her age, she was a senior senator when she passed on. She was firm in her liberalism—really a liberal's liberal. She had no difficulty in expressing her independence from time to time, more recently on the Constitution.

Her motivating force was the strong feeling that she had for the underprivileged, the poor, the needy and, more particularly, aged women.

We worked together as close friends for 30 years. Senator Inman was appointed to the Special Committee on Aging when that Senate committee first began its investigatory activities in 1966. We spent three years studying the subject before bringing in our report which recommended lowering the age of pensioners from 70 to 65 and proposed a guaranteed income.

In 1968 Senator Inman was appointed as a member of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty which was authorized to report on that subject. Over four years of study, the committee visited every province, including the Northwest Territories, at least once. We held meetings two or three times in some provinces. This gave her an opportunity to really shine. Her interest, her concern and her knowledge contributed materially to the report of the committee. The report is widely used in universities and is perceived as an authority on the subject. Incidentally, the report recommended a guaranteed annual income—that was only 14 years ago.

● (1410)

In 1977 the Senate authorized a special committee on Retirement Age Policies, of which she was one of the members.

There was in the house a group of about 15 members who were particularly interested in the unfortunate, the poor and the needy, and we continued this study for a full ten years.

I well recall that she was never absent and she was never late. She was there contributing her wisdom on all occasions. Throughout all her life she was able to maintain a sense of proportion, to rise above failure and handle success.

On Tuesday last I went out to visit her. I made arrangements for my visit. When I got there she was sitting up. I was told to make my visit short. We talked for a while and we remembered some of the activities which I recalled and some which she did. As I was leaving, she threw her arms around me; I threw my arms around her and kissed her goodbye. There were tears. I was sad, and yet I was glad that I had come to know this kind and gentle woman with humanitarian instincts.

She has served her country well in her own quiet way, in the way she always did. She was formidable, precise and independent; her love for her province always showing. Moreover, she proved that it makes very little difference if you come from a small province or a large one when you come to represent it in the Senate. Her representation was noteworthy and formidable. She was really a true Canadian.

I extend my sympathy to the family: two sons, men who have made their way up to high office, eight grandchildren and seventeen great grandchildren, who are all left to follow in the footsteps of Elsie Inman and to preserve her memory.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to join in the tributes paid to the late Senator Inman.

She was a pioneer among women in politics, and as a member of this chamber she received a great many invitations to speak to women's groups. She always used those occasions to urge women to participate in politics and to explain the function of the Senate to those groups.

As Senator Roblin stated, she was a very proud Islander and in her remarks she usually incorporated some bit of island history, some reference to the island beaches and scenery and, then, invited her audience to visit Prince Edward Island.

We used to say that she was an "ex officio" minister of tourism before either the province or the federal government had such a ministry.

She was the mother of a very distinguished family and, as such, took a very special interest in veterans' legislation that was before Parliament, because she had a unique perspective to bring to veterans' studies; she was the mother of veterans and, therefore, had a special feeling and understanding for that group.

Indeed, she had a special consideration for everyone in Canada and will be remembered in that regard.

I should like to extend my sympathy to her surviving sons, daughter-in-law and grandchildren.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should like to join with my colleagues in remembering my dear friend, the late Senator Florence Elsie Inman, who was quite active in the Senate until a month or so ago when she was stricken with a heart attack.

I first met Senator Inman in 1949 when I started to practise medicine with her son, George. In 1951, when I was nominated to run for the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, the first person to congratulate me was Florence Elsie Inman. She invited me to her home for supper and organized all the ladies in the area to hear me speak. I can tell honourable senators that I think I would have received more votes if they had never heard me, but she meant well.

Prince Edward Island, when it lost Senator Inman, lost a great Islander, a great Canadian, a gracious lady, a great mother, a grandmother, a fighter for women's rights, a fighter for the rights of minorities and a fighter for the underprivileged, whether they were young or old.

Senator Inman was really a social reformer. In her early days she organized health groups, worked in the hospital in Prince County as a volunteer, in the hospital at Kings County as a volunteer and became president of the first Ladies Aid in that part of the province. Later she became a trustee on the hospital board, was active in the Ladies Auxiliary of the Royal Canadian Legion, organized many Liberal ladies' clubs in Prince Edward Island and was elected President of the Prince Edward Island Liberal Women's Association and held that position for many years. In the early 1900s she was active in fighting for the right of women to vote.

When she was appointed to the Senate in 1955, along with Senator Croll, she was quite proud and told me many times that Senator Croll seconded the Motion In Reply to the Speech from the Throne, when she made that motion in February 1956. As Senator Phillips has said, she was thinking of her island province at the time. She was always a promoter of tourism as she talked about the beauty of the province. She talked about things that we are still talking about today. In fact, she condemned in her speech the National Film Board for a film it had put out. This film was not about Billy Bishop but about Prince Edward Island, and Senator Inman felt that it did not do the province justice. In that same speech she complained about the imposition of tariffs and indicated that we should be doing something to enhance free trade. At the time a tariff was being imposed on Prince Edward Island potatoes of 75 cents per 100-pound bag. Senator Inman also complained in that speech about the poor transportation facilities between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, between Borden and Tormentine. We still do not have the services she sought.

• (1420)

Senator Inman was a forerunner in promoting those issues that were so very important for people in Prince Edward Island. As is reported in Hansard, February 16, 1956, page 167, Senator Inman said:

Prince Edward Island's economic stability lies in the soil and in the sea surrounding it. Harvest from land and sea is the goose that lays the golden egg in this small province.

At the time of this speech, farmers were having difficulty selling their wheat in the west, as farmers were having difficulty selling their potatoes in the east. On this matter Senator Inman commented:

If bread is the staff of life, then the potato is the root of sustenance. Both are staple articles of diet in Canada;—

It seems to me that Senator Inman left her mark, both on Prince Edward Island and in Canada. She has left her mark on the Senate of Canada. She has left her mark on her family and her four sons and their families and her grandchildren. She has left her mark as being the first woman senator from Prince Edward Island. She was honoured for her work on behalf of social welfare—the underprivileged, the aged and the poor—

[Senator Croll.]

by the University of Prince Edward Island when they gave her an honorary doctorate of law degree in 1982.

All Prince Edward Island is saddened by her loss, but we are richer for her having shared her life with us. So I would like to take this opportunity to pass on my sympathy to her family—her two surviving sons, her grandchildren and her great grandchildren—and to say that I have lost a great friend.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, in following the eloquent tributes paid to the late Senator Inman by my colleagues I associate myself completely with their appraisals and their praise. Indeed, she was a great legislator, a distinguished Islander and a friend whom one will not easily forget. I suppose I appreciated her more for her salty humour and her impressive individuality. As I have been thinking about her life and our friendship these last few hours, I think of some of the things which she said in an indelible way. Senator Frith has referred to one incident already. She said to me, "I have been a Liberal for 90 years, but I am not voting with them tomorrow." Since I was not voting for a majority in my party, either, which is an occasional case with me, I did not seek to dissuade her. The next night we were voting on the same side.

I remember also when in Charlottetown some years ago the Canadian National Railways, in some kind of a public relations exercise, was presenting a museum day. They sent over some very old railway coaches and were going to impress the Island people with what great things the CNR had done in past years. That railway, like many railways, of course, when it wanted to abandon a line, rendered service that was so bad that the passengers abandoned it, and then the line itself could be abandoned. So the display was made, speeches were done, and the big shot from Moncton, I suppose, or perhaps even Montreal, said, "Senator Inman, you did not seem to be very impressed." She said, "No, I was not, because if you look over there on track three you will see the exact twin of this historic car of yours, and I am going down on it at three o'clock to Murray Harbour." Right to the point.

Reference was made to her long championing of women's rights. There is something that I knew for many years but was not able to tell until lately when she authorized me to do so. When she was one of the leading members of the Liberal Association, the Conservatives in Kings County were running a lady who became the first woman from Atlantic Canada to sit in the House of Commons. Elsie said that her party was suggesting that naturally, since there was a feminine orientation to the campaign, she should get down there and get in the campaign. But she said, "Here I am, going all across Canada urging women to get into politics, and when there is one running in my own backyard, am I going down there to try to beat her just because she is a Conservative?" She didn't go down to try to beat her. In fact, she voted for her.

But she had proven herself to be very smart on these issues long before. She was married in 1910, which was before even I was born. So when they came to the ceremony—and we must always remember that there was terrible distinction in there, one of the couple had to say "cherish, honour and obey"—Elsie, the young bride, said to the clergyman before the ceremony began, "You just omit that part about the obeying," and in that he obeyed her.

There was another one. As she became older, certain people were suggesting that she retire. If you wanted to get on the bad side of Elsie, that was the thing to do. She heard the suggestion from very lofty people, often in her own party, and she used to tell me what she thought of the suggestion. On one occasion she said to me—I guess she said it to many people, because everyone seems to know it—"I am getting a little tired of going down to the Island and having all these people shaking my hand and taking my pulse at the same time."

So I thank God that this fine, intelligent, devoted woman, and dedicated Islander, was able to live a life of fullness, 95 and a half years. To the very end, as I understand it, although she had some physical infirmity, she was blessed with the full retention of that fine mental quality which made her so sharp, such a valuable legislator, and such a cherished and appreciated champion of Prince Edward Island, the part of the earth above all others that she knew best and loved most dearly.

● (1430)

I join with all of my friends and colleagues in expressing sympathy to her loved ones, to our province and, indeed, to the Senate itself on the loss of its senior member.

[Translation]

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

ANNUAL REPORT OF LIBRARIAN TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the annual report of the Parliamentary Librarian for the fiscal year 1983-84.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-86, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-109, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED
TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-111

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-111, intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 4, 1986, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, perhaps I should offer a word of explanation. Tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock the memorial service for our deceased colleague, Senator Inman, will be held here in Ottawa. I thought, as did many of my colleagues, that it would be appropriate to sit at three o'clock rather than at two o'clock so as to provide honourable senators a chance to attend the service.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the service will be held at Christ Church Cathedral on Sparks Street. It is a ten- or fifteen-minute walk from here, so I do not think we need feel that we must take too much time to return after the service.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I believe that the Clerk is making arrangements to have the bus which normally serves as a shuttle bus between the Centre Block and the Victoria Building operate between the Senate entrance and

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Christ Church Cathedral, beginning at 1.30 tomorrow afternoon. It will also be available to bring senators back.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES
AND SHINGLES AND STEEL PRODUCTS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, this is the first opportunity I have had to ask questions relating to the tariff on red cedar shakes, which will have such a profound effect upon the province of British Columbia, and upon other events which followed, including the approval by the United States of a 40 per cent duty on certain Canadian steel products. When listening to the news media over the past few hours, perhaps some of us were encouraged to hear the words "Canada strikes back." We rushed to buy the newspapers and turned on the newscasts only to discover that striking back, Canadian style, is somewhat less than an airstrike against Tripoli. The action that we have taken is really ludicrous in light of the events that have occurred on the other side of the border. We have imposed certain imposts on books, publications and computer products. This action is so ineffectual and so meaningless that it makes one wonder whether, at some level, some Canadian official did not contact his lower-level counterpart in the United States and say, "You know, we have to play politics in Canada as well. Will you try to understand if we bring in some measure which appears to be a response to your action against red cedar shakes because we are in a political game as well, and some of our people have to get re-elected? Look, Uncle Sam, we have to play some public relation politics on our side of the border, too. Our actions will not hurt you very much and we know that you will understand."

● (1440)

The damage is all on our side of the border. There will be 4,000 jobs affected in British Columbia in an area which already has almost 20 per cent unemployment. We have $250 million in sales of red cedar shingles in the United States of America, and what do we do? We reply by saying: "We will impose tariffs on these books and other inoffensive categories such as computer products, and we will retaliate against the United States until the Canadian taxpayer screams in agony." Make no mistake, it is the Canadian taxpayer who is going to have to pay the extra $80 million to import these items—twice as much as any American taxpayer will have to pay for cedar shakes. We seem determined to punish the United States until the Canadian taxpayer screams. We are going to extract an extra $80 million a year from Canadian taxpayers and make it more difficult for them to acquire high-tech computer components in our country.

What will it do to the United States? I have already said that the American taxpayers will pay less than 50 per cent of our cost to support their government's action to help the cedar shake producers. However, the taxpayers in the United States have the option of buying alternative roofing products and thus will very largely escape these costs. This action will not only hurt the immediate market for red cedar shakes in the United States but it could permanently ruin that industry, because people will go to alternative products. The damage to Canada could continue well into the future.

In the case of computer products we do not have the same extensive range of product alternatives. Canadians must buy certain components to stay in the technological race of which the Minister of State for Science and Technology has reminded us time after time.

What has been the reaction in the United States? They did not even designate a high-level official to express any kind of public reaction.

Senator Doody: Is there a question?

Senator Perrault: My question is: What is going to be done for the red cedar shake producers in the province of British Columbia, and for the men who will be out of work as a result of this action by the United States? What is to be done with this extra $80 million which will accrue to the treasury from the Canadian retaliatory action? These are important questions. You, too, have unemployment in your area, senator.

Debra Busker, who is a press agent to the United States trade representative, one Clayton Yeutter, said that Mr. Yeutter had said "the Canadian duties will merely be passed on to Canadian consumers in the form of slightly higher prices. They will not cause any serious lack of export business to Canada." The fact is that American producers are not going to lose a dime because of this Canadian action.

Honourable senators, the first part of my question is this:—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not like to interrupt my honourable friend. I appreciate his desire to make a speech on a very important topic, but this is not the way in which to do it. If he wants to introduce a resolution for consideration by this chamber, then I think we would be prepared to debate it. However, by no stretch of the imagination can his comments be described as being preliminary to a question. They are a speech, and I think my friend should be zealous of the interests of the Senate and ask a question, and I will do my best to answer it, if I can. However, if he wants to debate the issue, why does he not adopt the proper method of doing so?

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Government in the Senate has been around long enough to know that I am entitled to make an explanatory statement with respect to the questions that I wish to pose in this chamber. The real problem with the Leader of the Government is that he is severely embarrassed, as he and his colleagues should be, about this pussy-cat, pushover attitude of the Canadian government.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Order, order.

Senator Perrault: What do you know about order? You don't know anything at all about order.

Senator Flynn: I know. I have been there, as has my friend.

Senator Perrault: Try standing up and doing some fighting for Canadian workers.

Senator Flynn: On a point of order, Senator Perrault, you are discussing—

Senator Perrault: Do you want a question?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Perrault: Your leader just pleaded for a question. I have a question.

Senator Flynn: I am suggesting to you that if you had asked leave to debate that issue at the proper time today, you would have obtained that permission. That has been done previously.

Senator Perrault: We do not need a lecture from you, Mr. Former Leader—

Senator Flynn: What is irregular is having a debate at this stage in our proceedings, and I think—

Senator Perrault: There is an urgency associated with this question—

Senator Flynn: To be sure—

Senator Perrault: —which presses upon every working person in my province who will be out of work at the end of the week. They will not be impressed by this kind of intervention from the former leader.

Senator Flynn: Very well, I will ask the Speaker to rule on this. If you will resume your seat, senator, I am going to argue on a point of order, and I will not take very long.

I am saying that what the honourable senator is doing now should be in the form of a debate. I told him that as far as I was concerned, if he thinks the matter is urgent, he can proceed today with leave but at the proper time.

However, it is unfair to make a speech like that at this point, because senators other than he and the Leader of the Government cannot intervene.

My honourable friend knows the rules very well. I do not know why he objects to following that procedure and accuses us of trying to muffle him or avoid debate on this issue. It is a proper issue to debate, but not in this manner, and I ask His Honour to rule whether this is the way to put a question, or whether it would not be preferable to move for an inquiry.

Senator Perrault: May I speak to the point Senator Flynn has raised? I am prepared to ask a series of questions about this matter, and I may well wish to initiate a special debate. If I do, I am sure the initiative will have the support of at least the members on this side of the chamber.

Senator Flynn: Why don't you do it, then?

Senator Perrault: This is total obfuscation on the part of the former leader who really does not want the question asked.

Senator Flynn: I don't mean that—

Senator Perrault: Then let us have a question.

Senator Roblin: Sure.

Senator Flynn: Do you agree with what I have said—

Senator Perrault: I am prepared to ask a question.

Senator Flynn: Very well.

Senator Perrault: The first question is this: We are told that $80 million will pour into the Canadian treasury from the Canadian countermeasures. It is, of course, pouring into the treasury from the already hard-pressed Canadian taxpayer. How much of that money, and in what manner will that money be used to ease the plight of the shingle workers in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia who are really in serious economic difficulty? It is all very well for Mr. Wilson to talk about the revenue side. What about the expenditure side? That is question number one.

Senator Flynn: No, that is a debate.

Senator Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you for order. My honourable friend does not want any questions asked—

Senator Flynn: That is in the form of debate. I want the matter to be dealt with properly and at the proper time, and that is why I am asking His Honour to rule on whether this is a matter for debate or a matter for a question.

Senator Perrault: Hearing the honourable senator talk about protocol and acting properly in this chamber is like listening to an arsonist giving a lecture on fire prevention.

Senator Flynn: Mine is a relevant point of order, and you know it very well.

Senator Perrault: My question is very relevant as far as the people of my province are concerned, especially these 4,000 workers who are being used in this international game of power politics. Therefore, we want that question answered.

The second question I would like answered is this: On the one hand we are told by the Prime Minister that there was no prior consultation on this red cedar issue. We are told that we received no information whatsoever from the White House.

Today, Washington rejected Mr. Wilson's suggestion that Ottawa was not informed of the pending U.S. decision to impose a 35 per cent tariff on cedar shingles. A spokesman said the decision to impose the tariff was conducted—

Senator Flynn: Again, I rise on a point of order. The honourable senator is making a speech and he knows that very well. It is not fair, I suggest, to the Senate and to senators to proceed in this fashion. I have told him before that if he wants to have a debate on that subject, I, for one, am quite sure that no one on this side will object to proceeding after we have gone through the legislative orders of the day, that is, the third reading of bills. We can then debate the subject for the rest of the day until midnight, or even until two o'clock in the morning, if that is what he wants, because we have done that before.

● (1450)

I would ask His Honour and honourable senators: Do you agree that we should proceed in the way Senator Perrault is proceeding? If you do, then that is all right, but we will all bear the consequences of that decision and we will all be out of order pretty soon.

[Senator Flynn.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it seems to me that the point at which Senator Flynn first intervened was a legitimate time at which he or anyone could have done so in order to complain that the preamble, as a pure preamble, was out of order according to our rules. Our rules do provide for an explanation as a basis for a question.

Senator Flynn took the position that Senator Perrault's explanation or background for his question was too long, and it was a legitimate point of order for him to raise; but the minute that point of order was raised, Senator Perrault put the question.

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Frith: He put a proper question.

Senator Flynn: Be serious.

Senator Frith: The record will show it was a proper question. It was an inquiry about a statement dealing with some $80 million and what was going to happen. It was a perfectly legitimate question.

Senator Flynn: Certainly not.

Senator Frith: It was also proper for him to put his subsequent question which asked for an explanation as to inconsistencies between two statements. In the context of a possible emergency debate, they were also proper questions in order to obtain information from the government as a basis for such a debate.

On the question, I do not think there is a need for any ruling as to whether the statement made in advance was too long, because the minute the objection was taken Senator Perrault put two questions.

Senator Flynn: He started another speech.

Senator Frith: I suggest, honourable senators, that those two questions which, I am sure, Senator Perrault is willing to repeat if there is any doubt about it—

Senator Flynn: A dozen times.

Senator Frith: I suppose I will have to wait to see if I can out-shout Senator Flynn.

Hon. H. A. Olson: It is hard.

Senator Frith: It is hard, but I have fairly leathern lungs also and I believe I could out-shout him.

Senator Marshall: The honourable senator—

Senator Frith: I could also out-shout Senator Marshall and finish making my point. I sat without a word of interruption while Senator Flynn was making his point.

The questions Senator Perrault has put are perfectly legitimate questions. He responded to the objection as to the length of his background statement by immediately putting those questions and, honourable senators, I say he is perfectly in order and ought to be able to proceed to put his questions.

Senator Perrault: There is public confusion about the degree of consultation involved in the red cedar shake issue between Canada and the United States. There appears to be a difference in official statements.

Senator Flynn: I am asking His Honour for a ruling on the point of order.

Senator Perrault: You are not in a Perry Mason re-run television series. You are not Mr. District Attorney and you are not defence counsel for the Leader of the Government. You are a backbencher trying to frustrate and divert a proper line of questioning on behalf of the working people of my province, so please sit down!

Senator Flynn: I am not going to sit down and you are not going to force me to sit down until I have asked the Chair to rule on the point of order I have made. I am serious about it. The argument that Senator Frith put forward is incorrect, and he knows that.

Senator Perrault: No, he does not.

Senator Frith: It is not.

Senator Flynn: He has no mission to come to the rescue of anyone on his side who is out of order.

Senator Perrault: Talking about coming to the rescue, you have talked three times longer than your leader this afternoon, because you do not want certain questions which are embarrassing to your government to be asked.

Senator Flynn: I am willing to give you all the opportunities you wish to discuss this matter. You can spend three hours discussing it if you want to. I am asking His Honour to rule on whether this is a proper way to proceed.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I object to putting that to the Speaker.

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator Olson: Senator Flynn knows very well that this chamber is the master of its own rules. His Honour the Speaker has a distinctive, separate set of responsibilities from those which are carried by the Speaker in the other place, for example. Therefore, when the objection was raised, as Senator Frith pointed out, it was immediately accommodated and there is nothing left to complain about. All Senator Flynn has to do is sit in his seat while the questions that were put are answered by the Leader of the Government.

We can open up a new set of problems here if we think we can get an instant ruling from the Speaker who does not have the authority to make that ruling, because the Senate itself has that authority.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: He certainly has the authority, because it is clearly mentioned in the rules that the Speaker rules on points of order when they are raised. I am quite sure that the Clerk at the Table can point to the appropriate section of our rules.

Senator Olson: Is that an interpretation of the rules?

Senator Flynn: No. If Senator Olson is not happy with the ruling which may be given by the Chair, then he can ask the majority here to establish that at Question Period we can conduct an ordinary debate.

Senator Frith: Ask the question.

Senator Flynn: If we do not want to follow the rules concerning Question Period, then that is all right. The Senate can then make that decision on each occasion.

I would refer honourable senators to rule 15 where it states:

The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide points of order, subject to an appeal to the Senate.

If we want disorder to be the rule here, then that is up to the majority.

Senator Olson: I understand exactly what Senator Flynn is doing.

Senator Flynn: You understand nothing.

Senator Olson: He is putting forward an unnecessarily awkward position because what we are talking about under rule 15 is an interpretation of what rule 20(4) means. That rule states:

A debate is out of order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made—

That is the question that will be put. If we are going to be put in the impossible position of having to question the Speaker's ruling on your so-called "phoney" point of order after it has already been accommodated, I think that is an unreasonable request to make of the Speaker now.

Senator Flynn: If there is anything "phoney," it is your intervention.

Senator Perrault: Having intervened in this manner, the former leader should be aware that his leader is perfectly prepared to reply to the question.

Senator Flynn: I know that.

Senator Perrault: Why don't you sit down and learn to writhe in your seat?

Senator Roblin: Seeing that my honourable friend has referred to me, perhaps I ought to state my position, because I am the one who raised the impropriety of his method of proceeding in the first place.

It is perfectly clear from our rules and manifestly ignored time out of mind in this chamber that a debate is out of order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the senator who asks the question and by the senator who answers it.

If anyone can interpret what my honourable friend gave us when he opened his remarks today as brief explanatory remarks, he really has an elastic definition of the ordinary meaning of English words.

Senator Frith: You have your point of order. What are you piling on for?

Senator Roblin: I think I am entitled to state my position. I am quite willing to answer any question that can be put to me insofar as I am able to do so, so no one need have any concern about my being embarrassed by questions that are asked. If I were embarrassed by questions, I would have been embarrassed out of here long ago, because the questions that are put in this place really ought to embarrass the questioner many times rather than the answerer.

I have to go on with this point to say that Senator Frith is completely right. The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and decide points of order. To make an appeal to him is appropriate, if any senator wishes to do so.

Senator Frith: You mean Senator Flynn, I suppose?

Senator Roblin: What did I say?

Senator Frith: You said "Senator Frith."

Senator Roblin: I apologize to both gentlemen, but I think my obeisance is a little deeper to you, Senator Flynn, than to you, Senator Frith. However that may be,—

• (1500)

Senator Frith: Any apology is accepted.

Senator Roblin: —the situation is that Senator Flynn is quite within his rights in asking for the Speaker to rule on this matter.

I, myself, would be satisfied if Senator Perrault were to ask simple questions.

Senator Flynn: He doesn't know how.

Senator Roblin: Not in the guise of—

Senator Frith: You mean easy to answer?

Senator Roblin: Well, they may not be easy to answer, but I don't mind that, I will do my best with them.

Senator Doody: Short questions!

Senator Roblin: Questions can be asked here for which there is no answer as far as I am concerned, because policy may not be decided. The point of asking the question is fine with me. Go ahead and ask them, but ask them in the traditional parliamentary sense of a short explanation and then the question.

And then, of course, I suppose we will get to the matter of supplementaries—because they go on in this house seven, eight, nine or ten supplementaries—which repeat the subject matter all over again and which, surely, can do no good.

Senator Olson: That can do it.

Senator Frith: You remember them.

Senator Roblin: I compare Question Period in this house and Question Period in the other place. How often is it that I note that questions which are asked here are similar to the ones asked in the other place on the same day?

Senator Frith: No matter who is in government.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Olson: When the former government was involved, that's true.

Senator Roblin: I must say that when I was on the other side of the fence I did not sit down with my colleagues in the House of Commons to determine what questions were to be asked in this house.

Senator Frith: Who said that we did?

Senator Roblin: I think that that may well be the case on the other side. They shake their heads.

Senator Frith: We read the papers the same as you do.

Senator Roblin: Well, just the same, you ask the same questions.

Senator Argue: I don't know what you are talking about; I haven't been.

Senator Roblin: Well, good for you. I would not include you in the select group of "double question-askers".

What always strikes me as very curious is that in a court of law, I am told, you get the best evidence which, surely, is from the minister in the other place, rather than from a non-portfolio minister like me in this place.

Senator Frith: We had the same reaction before 1984. We understand exactly how you feel.

Senator Roblin: But you had three portfolio ministers in here—

Senator Frith: At times.

Senator Roblin: —you don't forget that, do you?

Senator Frith: At times.

Senator Roblin: You had three portfolio ministers and the only place they could be asked questions was in this house.

Senator Frith: You still asked them the same as—

Senator Roblin: They weren't in the other house, so they had to be asked here.

Senator Olson: But we can't ask questions in the other house, we have to ask them here.

Senator Roblin: Well, you get the answers that I am able to give you here—and I was glad to be able to do it. But I have said enough. Let us have the questions.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Well, of course we can be assured that the Leader of the Government in the Senate was part of the cabinet discussions which led to the retaliatory strike. I ask then, in the course of cabinet meetings—not asking for breaches of cabinet confidentiality—what program is being put in place for the unemployed mill workers of British Columbia and the other provinces who are going to be affected by this measure? We are told by the Minister of Finance that $80 million will be raised. How is that money going to be disbursed? What is going to be done to relocate these people who are in a very, very depressed economic area? That is question number one.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear; well said.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think that I have a little difficulty with my friend's point of view, because on the one hand he is very upset with the government because they are "retaliating," to use his expression, against the American government's activity on the shakes and shingles—I notice his leader has some difficulty deciding whether he is in favour of retaliation or not. The last I saw of it, he was not in favour of retaliation—and, then, my honourable friend goes on to say, "Well, you have retaliated, but you have not retaliated hard enough; it should be worse." I got that clear impression from what he said. So, I don't really understand the point he is making.

Senator Flynn: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: But, nevertheless, he has said to us, "What is happening to the $80 million?" Well, who knows what is going to happen to the $80 million. There are not only people in the shakes and shingles industry in British Columbia who are going to have trouble, but there are the people who are making steel pipes in Regina and in Algoma who are going to have some trouble; there are some people producing potatoes in Prince Edward Island who are going to have some trouble; there are some people who are fishing off the Atlantic coast who are having trouble right now with their tariff problems with the United States. It is not going to be an easy matter to compensate everybody in Canada who is affected by these tariffs.

That is the basic reason why the government has refused to listen to those people who say, "Break off negotiations until they say 'uncle'," or whatever it is you want them to say. We don't say that. We say that if we want to protect ourselves in the future against this kind of tariff action which we find so objectionable, we are going to have to see if we cannot come to some kind of an understanding whereby these barriers are negotiated in a civilized way, and that is the ultimate policy that we have to follow.

Now, if my honourable friend wants me to tell him that the $80 million that may or may not be collected from these tariffs that we have imposed now are going to be funnelled into resolving the problem in British Columbia, I cannot give him the answer to that because I do not know. It is perfectly clear to me that the government is considering what measures they can take to relieve the situation.

First of all, we have to have some information as to just how bad it is going to get. It is going to get bad enough, but we have to have some measure of that before we can decide what to do next.

It seems to me that the government's policy is clear: We want to send a message to Washington that we do not like what they did. We want to send them a message that they can accept without having another round of the trade war start with us, and I think that is a sensible thing to do. I think that the people who buy shakes and shingles in the U.S. are going to have to pay that duty the same way as the people who buy some of these books in Canada will have to.

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Government in the Senate has made a speech, and we have listened with interest to his speech. Now we are all even, because he made a long, long speech and not a short reply.

Senator Roblin: Just a minute—

Senator Perrault: But may I—

Senator Roblin: —I had to do that because of your lengthy "brief" preamble. What other option did I have?

Senator Perrault: I am not disputing the leader's right of reply.

Senator Roblin: If you had a brief preamble, you would get a brief answer.

Senator Perrault: I am not disputing it, but I am saying that we listened to your speech with great interest.

However, my question was answered in an unclear fashion—that is the kindest way I can describe the reply.

We have 4,000 shake workers in British Columbia who have now seen their government act, in the name of retaliation, to protect the computer industry and the publishing industry, which are located primarily in Ontario and Quebec. They are given the protection; the British Columbia worker suffers.

The British Columbia worker asks—and I have had many phone calls over the weekend—"All right, of the extra money that we raise from the Canadian taxpayer—he is paying, the Americans are not paying—what kind of program is going to be put in place to help us and our families?"

I ask this, specifically: Will Manpower and Immigration establish a special needs office in Mission, British Columbia, or Abbotsford? Will there be an effort to relocate workers in different parts of the country?

These are the important questions which must be asked when people are in a position of losing their homes or their cars and when mill owners are faced with having their loans called in at the bank. It is all right for the leader to talk in these generalities that "we must sit down and negotiate free trade"; these people could be on the breadline and completely decimated by the time any negotiations come to any kind of conclusion. So, I ask the leader once again for an answer to that question.

The second question is this: There is incredible confusion relating to the degree of consultation between Canada and the United States before this action by the United States was announced. Today, a U.S. spokesman said:

We reject Mr. Wilson's suggestion that Ottawa wasn't informed of the pending U.S. decision to impose a 35 per cent tariff on cedar shingles. The decision to impose the tariff was conducted in a clear and transparent process. There was considerable consultation with Canadian officials.

We are told by Canadian spokesmen precisely the opposite, that there was no consultation; that the U.S. action came as a devastating blow. We hear rumours that Mr. Reagan said that he meant to call the Prime Minister of Canada, but he neglected to do so; he thought that some other department would handle the call. I would like answers to these questions. What are the facts?

I hope that it is not assumed in Washington, D.C., that we are a bunch of pushovers and pussy-cats, that we don't have to be talked to seriously about matters of this kind. May we have a reply to those questions?

Senator Roblin: I will reply to the first matter.

My friend raises a very important point: What can we do to mitigate the harm and hardship to these people in British Columbia? That is an important issue, and I will see that it is addressed.

The second thing that I would like to say with respect to who told whom about what is that my recollection is that the Secretary of State in the United States, Mr. Shultz, made it clear in Halifax that there had been a slip up on the American side in this respect and accepted some responsibility for the failure to notify Canadians. Now, let the Americans get their own act together—I can't do that.

• (1510)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether there is any hope this trade war will stop. At the outset it was shakes and shingles, then computer products and publications of various kinds. Yesterday we heard that it will apply to steel, which is already a severely depressed industry, particularly to steel tubing that is used in the oil and gas business. Ipsco has already had massive layoffs, and so has Algoma in Sault Ste. Marie. We wonder what is next. As the Leader of the Government pointed out, will it be pork, potatoes or petrochemicals? What will be next?

I cannot recall a government using such words as "these measures are taken in retaliation."

The Minister of Finance said that nations which resort to unjustified protectionism must be made to realize that trade is a two-way street, and that this is a retaliatory measure. We will lose that battle. We will lose a great deal more if this continues.

I should like the Leader of the Government to give us some assurance that the government will take a responsible attitude and stop this grandstanding before we do ourselves more damage in all of these potentially difficult areas.

Senator Roblin: I do not think my honourable friend need worry about the government initiating a trade war with the United States.

Senator Olson: It has.

Senator Roblin: It has not. These complaints about tariffs have been made for many years now. We are the peacemakers. What we want to do is have a conference, a trade discussion with the United States, that will put an end to this kind of thing. If Canadians want to make sure that this kind of thing stops, they will have to take notice of the fact that we are going to get a solution to the problem by agreement with the United States at the trade conference. That is where we want to put our effort, and that is where I think my honourable friend ought to put his.

I have been alarmed to hear representatives of his party—indeed his leader—in the House of Commons say that unless we get some guarantee—which is most unlikely—from the United States that we should postpone, drop out, cancel or put into deep freeze these trade talks. I think that is a very short-sighted way to go.

I am no advocate of a trade war. I want to see tariff disputes reduced to a minimum. I want to see agreement with our biggest trading partner as to how we can do something about them, but in the meanwhile we have to cope with the vicissitudes of American election politics, and my honourable friend knows that as well as I do, and he also knows that it is very difficult to protect oneself from that kind of thing.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that I know that better than anyone in the government has recently been demonstrated. I hope that the government will follow through with what I detect in my honourable friend's remarks, because he has just given us the best reason possible for not retaliating and not having that frame of mind. The government should return to more traditional, diplomatic negotiations with the United States because of what has happened during the past few days and what might happen if we do not get this trade war stopped.

I should like to ask again if the leader can give us some reason to believe that this will be cooled off and whether the government will have some direct discussions with the United States.

I am certainly not one who advocates that we stop the trade talks. We need those to go on, but we have to try to impress on the United States again that we are going to act in a calm, diplomatic and reasonable manner so that the various authorities in the United States get this thing stopped.

Senator Roblin: I hope the various authorities in the United States are getting the message from us, but I am getting a message, too, and it is a different message, depending on who speaks. I am told from this side, "Don't be a pussy-cat." I am told, "Don't be a push-over." I am told, "Don't let them walk all over you."

My honourable friend's advice—which is a little more sensible—is, "Try to be moderate in your reactions." That is exactly what we are trying to do.

Senator Olson: Then we can get better results.

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF TARIFF ON PUBLICATIONS AND COMPUTER PARTS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like the Leader of the Government to let me know whether these books on which a tariff has now been imposed include textbooks.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): No, educational books are not included.

Senator Gigantès: Do the computer spare parts on which a tariff has been imposed include spare parts used in computers that serve educational purposes, research purposes and the improvement of the functioning of various industries, as well as as bureaucracies, private or public?

Senator Roblin: I really cannot tell what the computer parts would be used for. It is hard to trace that because they have so many uses.

Senator Gigantès: Is the Leader of the Government telling me that the government has imposed tariffs on products without knowing the purpose of the products?

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that the tariffs are imposed on items. That has been going on since before Confederation.

Senator Gigantès: Would the Leader of the Government kindly ask his colleagues to let me know what effects on the modernization of Canadian industry, Canadian administration and Canadian educational institutions the rise in the cost of these spare parts will have?

Senator Roblin: The answer is very little, because the tariff is, I think, 3.5 per cent.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, first, are any of these parts made in Canada, and, second, are any of these parts made in some other country besides the United States?

Senator Roblin: The computer parts situation arose out of a tripartite arrangement made between Canada, Japan and the United States last January to reduce the tariffs to zero on those items. It is my understanding that those computer parts are probably made in all three countries.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

NUCLEAR DISASTER

UKRAINE—EFFECTS OF RADIATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 29 last by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn regarding Nuclear Disaster—Ukraine—Effects of Radiation.

(The answer follows):

There is still no information on the amount of radioactivity that was released by this accident. Canada has not been asked by the Soviet Union for assistance.

Radioactivity from the Soviet nuclear reactor accident was detected in an analysis of the following group of air filters:

May 5-6: Vancouver, Calgary, Regina, Saskatoon, Whitehorse, Winnipeg, Edmonton, and Hay River (NWT).

May 12 - 13: Whitehorse, Inuvik, Yellowknife, Hay River, Resolute, Coral Harbour, Churchill and Goose Bay.

Increased sampling for radiation levels was initiated at 28 sites across Canada on April 29, 1986, shortly after news of the reactor accident was received. Three additional sites were initiated in British Columbia on May 12, 1986. Air sampling changed from weekly to daily; precipitation sampling from monthly to weekly. Six of these 31 sites are in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The six are Whitehorse, Inuvik, Hay River, Yellowknife, Resolute and Coral Harbour. The samples are analyzed by laboratories of the Health Protection Branch, Department of National Health and Welfare.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN USE OF LOBBYIST—CANADIAN TESTIMONY BEFORE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE OR SPECIAL PROSECUTOR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 7 last by the Honourable Senator MacEachen regarding Canada-United States Relations—Canadian Use of Lobbyist—Canadian Testimony before Congressional Committee or Special Prosecutor—Government Policy.

(The answer follows):

I am pleased to be able to table copies of the correspondence between Ambassador Gotlieb and Chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the House of Representatives and the General Accounting Office concerning the Deaver contract. I can also confirm that the chairman of the subcommittee has indicated that "I must say, for the record, that we have no quarrel with the Canadian authorities and the degree of cooperation they have provided at the subcommittee's request".

You will note that Ambassador Gotlieb's letter of May 9 refers to a "light hearted conversational remark to Mr. Deaver to the effect that the United States was indeed fortunate to have a person of Mr. Deaver's talents on its team, and how much we could use a good man like that". The official who made the remark was Dr. J.A. Doucet. I can confirm that no offer of employment was made to Mr. Deaver prior to his leaving the White House.

INSURANCE

BANKRUPTCY OF INSURANCE COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 14 last by the Honourable Senator Langlois regarding Bankruptcy of Insurance Companies—Request for Study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

(The answer follows):

The operations of the Northumberland General Insurance Company were the subject of frequent written reports to the Minister of State (Finance) and her predecessors. The Department of Insurance had been closely monitoring the company for some time.

As a result of an on-site examination in the fall of 1983, the Department became concerned about the adequacy of the company's claims reserves, the security provided by reinsurance obtained from affiliated reinsurers and the amount of the company's assets that consisted of receivables from an affiliated management company. Because of these concerns, the Department insisted on adjustments to the company's capital base for purposes of determining compliance with the minimum continuing capital and surplus requirements base for property and casualty insurance companies.

Starting in March 1984 and with the Minister's approval, the company's certificate of registry was renewed for limited periods to pressure the company to comply with the continuing capital and surplus requirements and to obtain additional capital. In June 1984, a restriction was placed in the company's certificate of registry limiting its 1984 gross premium volume to the amount written in 1983. When the Department became suspicious that the interim statements that the Department was requiring the company to supply might not report all the premiums written, an examiner was sent to the company's New York branch in late 1984. Notwithstanding the volume restriction in the company's certificate of registry, the examiner discovered a large increase in the United States business which had not been reported to the Department. Immediately, New York authorities were contacted and a further limitation was placed in the company's certificate of registry preventing it from writing any additional business in the United States.

During the early part of 1985, the company's certificate of registry was renewed on a monthly basis with the concurrence of the Minister and the owners of the company were pressed to inject additional capital or to sell the company to someone who would inject additional capital. Two potential investors with significant financial resources came forward. Both carried on serious negotiations with the owners during the spring. The last week of June, in the absence of final unqualified 1984 audited statement and after being advised by both potential investors that they were not proceeding, the Superintendent recommended that the Minister direct him to take control of the company's assets and to apply for a winding-up order.

The Supreme Court of Ontario granted the winding-up order on July 24, 1985. In accordance with the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the administrative expenses involved in carrying out the liquidation will be paid by the insurance industry. As a consequence, the remaining assets of Northumberland

General will be preserved for the benefit of claimants and policyholders and, unlike most liquidations, will not be used to meet the liquidator's operating expenses.

A number of lessons have been learned from the recent failures of Northumberland General and other property and casualty insurance companies. Both the Green Paper and Technical Supplement published by the Hon. Barbara McDougall, Minister of State (Finance), and the Report on Canadian Financial Institutions published by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, included proposals in this regard. Among these proposals are the strengthening of the minimum continuing capital and surplus requirements for property and casualty insurance companies, a requirement for an annual actuarial report with respect to the adequacy of the reserve for claims, authority to control some aspects of reinsurance arrangements, more control over business arrangements that are not at arm's length and the power for regulators to issue cease and desist orders. All of these proposals would have been useful in dealing with the Northumberland General situation.

The Minister of State (Finance) has stated that she expects to introduce legislation in the very near future, the objective of which is to strengthen financial standards for property and casualty insurance companies and to improve protection for policyholders.

Since no amount of regulation will eliminate all possibility of failure of an insurance company, both the federal government and the provincial government have expressed interest in the establishment of a compensation scheme that would protect policy holders within certain limits if an insurance company fails. The property and casualty industry has taken the initiative to try to establish an industry-run scheme. Discussions on this subject between the industry and the federal and provincial governments are continuing. It is hoped that the scheme will be operational by 1987 to protect policyholders in the event of future failures.

ENERGY

PRICING—DEREGULATION OF INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 14 last by the Honourable Senator Olson regarding Energy—Deregulation of Industry—Government Policy.

(The answer follows):

The instability in the oil market at the present time makes forecasting oil prices very difficult.

The February Budget assumed an international oil price of $22.50 U.S. for the last three quarters of 1986; at that time, most private sector forecasters were predicting an oil price in the range of $22—$24 U.S. a barrel.

The price of oil has declined more sharply than was forecast in the February Budget. From a high of $30 U.S. in November, oil has fallen to the range of $11—$16 U.S. a barrel. Until late April, the trend of prices had been essentially downward; recently, however, there has been some firming of prices to the upper end of the range. Many analysts expect this pattern of volatility to continue with prices on average in the range of $15—$18, but with some short, sharp price movements in either direction outside of this range. The International Monetary Fund, for example, recently released its economic outlook based on a $15 oil price.

CORRECTIONS

DANIEL HAWE REPORT—PRODUCTION OF SERVICE CONTRACTS AND STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, while we are still on answers to questions, I wonder if I might raise with the Leader of the Government in the Senate and draw to his attention the orders for return that I placed on the order paper on March 26. I wonder if he might ascertain what progress is being made.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): What is the subject?

Senator Hastings: The Penitentiaries Act.

Senator Roblin: Is this an order for return or does this relate to a question asked during Question Period?

Senator Hastings: It relates to a motion for three returns.

Senator Roblin: Those are handled by the Table, not by me in Question Period.

● (1520)

GRASSY NARROWS AND ISLINGTON INDIAN BANDS MERCURY POLLUTION CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the third reading of Bill C-110, to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Government of Canada, the Government of Ontario, Reed Inc., Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd., the Islington Indian Band and the Grassy Narrows Indian Band.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TERRORISM

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sherwood:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to provide a forum to examine, consider, evaluate, consolidate and synthesize available research, documentation and other information relating to terrorism as a real or potential threat to Canada and to Canadians;

That the Committee identify any areas where further study, research or investigation is called for;

That the Committee examine and make recommendations on the role of the media in reporting terrorist threats and incidents;

That eight Senators, to be designated at a later date, act as members of the Special Committee; and

That the Committee present its report no later than December 19, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Phillips).

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, following Senator Frith's pertinent remarks on the subject, I moved the adjournment of the debate. It was not that I was opposed to the motion but, rather, that I found myself in the unusual situation of being in agreement with Senator Frith. A small voice kept saying to me, "There has to be something wrong."

Senator Frith: Have you seen your doctor lately?

Senator Phillips: Unfortunately, I had to cancel an appointment. Perhaps I should make another one.

On Monday I reread Senator Frith's remarks and I am still in agreement, so probably I do need that appointment.

Senator Frith: You are in trouble.

Senator Phillips: This is the second motion on the subject introduced by the sponsor. Since he introduced his first motion there have been several disturbing events in Canada which I think confirm that we need some sort of study on this subject. The committee can render a useful service by providing a forum for those who wish to express concern, and at the same time give those who are responsible for security an opportunity to state that they have plans and contingencies ready to counteract terrorism in Canada. Care must be taken throughout the committee hearings not to contravene the secrecy necessary in dealing with terrorism. Here I think we can count on the committee to recognize that there are limits to the questions they can ask of those charged with security.

Senator Frith mentioned the number of committees now in existence and the difficulty in manning them. I have a great deal of sympathy with that viewpoint, because we on this side are a smaller number. The problem is not only with finding sufficient members, but with finding a time that does not conflict with other committee meetings. As Senator Frith pointed out, when we tend to crowd everything into the three days that the Senate is sitting it becomes more and more difficult, especially when a large portion of Tuesday afternoon is taken up with party caucuses and Wednesday morning with national caucuses. The motion makes no mention of funds. I think that this is an opportunity for the committee to show us that useful work can be done without a large research staff and without having professionals to assist in writing the report.

There are two unfortunate aspects of this motion. One is that it was necessary to make it in the first place. The second is the timing. We are coming to the end of a session and, as honourable senators are aware, the tendency is for the floodgates to open and legislation to come pouring into this chamber at the last minute. This has been the practice for a number of years. I would remind honourable senators that before the Christmas recess this very thing happened. In the one week prior to the recess we had 29 committee meetings compared with the normal 10 or 12 meetings. So, at this time of the year it will be difficult to accommodate the committee in the usual Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday schedule. However, I am sure that the committee will realize that there is ample time available on Mondays and Fridays.

I appreciate the sincerity of the sponsor in moving this motion. The fact that he withdrew his original motion and attempted to cut the suit to fit the cloth, as the expression goes, I think merits considerable support, and I hope that honourable senators will give him every co-operation that they can throughout the committee hearings.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must remind you that if the Honourable Senator Kelly speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this motion.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, in closing the debate I want to express my appreciation of the comments made by Senator Frith and by Senator Phillips. I have had a number of conversations with colleagues in this chamber. I must confess that they have not been sufficient to give me a sense of whether or not your support is for this committee, but I feel that a fair length of time has gone by. There is nothing more I can say on the substance of what is being proposed than I have already said. So, I would like to close the debate by earnestly requesting again your support for this motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sherwood, that a special committee of the Senate be appointed to provide a forum to examine, consider, evaluate—

Senator Everett: Dispende.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the vote, I wonder if you would grant me the indulgence to say, at least to my colleagues, that our decision has been that we will vote on this motion without reference to party line or caucus consensus. As far as we are concerned, every senator may vote exactly as he or she feels.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is it our plan to have a vote?

Senator Frith: I do not know. I am happy one way or the other.

Motion agreed to.

[Senator Phillips.]

THE ESTIMATES 1986-87

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Consideration of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Main Estimates 1986-87), presented in the Senate on 28th May, 1986.—
(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. William J. Petten: Stand.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): One moment. If I am not mistaken, I believe that Senator Kelly indicated an interest in speaking to this matter today.

• (1530)

Senator Frith: The only reason we asked that it stand is because it stands in the name of Senator Leblanc who is unable to be here this week. We did not intend to shut anyone off.

Senator Doody: Senator Kelly can speak as deputy chairman of the committee.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Thank you, honourable senators. Again I apologize for not paying close attention to the proceedings. However, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak. Last week, as has been mentioned, Senator Leblanc tabled the Sixteenth Report of the National Finance Committee. I know that he wanted to speak to the report, but he has just undergone surgery, as I believe most honourable senators know, and he asked if I would speak on his behalf and on my own as deputy chairman.

The report, while generally addressing the main estimates for 1986-87, focuses primarily on all those expenditures of the government for which there are no reporting/accounting requirements. I refer, of course, to the $30 billion to $50 billion of tax expenditures, incentives, exemptions, deductions, credits, or whatever else you wish to call them. We have called them tax expenditures. I grant you that the term itself is a matter of considerable contention.

The committee made two recommendations: First, that the Financial Administration Act be amended to require an annual accounting of tax expenditures comparable to the requirements for the preparing and tabling of the public accounts; and, second, that effectiveness evaluation for the tax programs included in the proposed tax expenditure accounts be done on a regular basis and where appropriate be part of the public record. We recognize that these suggestions have been made before, but we believe that it is time to put them in legislation and not have them optional.

I want to tell honourable senators that those two recommendations were not made lightly. The committee was aware that providing a complete and detailed tax expenditure account to parallel the reporting of the public accounts would be a difficult exercise. I should like to take a few minutes to describe examples of some of these difficulties. We cited them in our report.

First, how would the government know the value of the tax deduction for income earned by status Indians on reserves, or the capital gains exemption on the sale of the principal residence, when individuals need never declare the value for these measures on their tax return?

The second problem with such an account is in knowing why some of these tax measures are on the statutes today. Throughout the hearings we could never discover what was the original intention of some tax measures, or whether the intentions had changed, or, for that matter, when the measure was first introduced.

Honourable senators, those are the kinds of problems that we will have to overcome if we are ever to see a reasonably useful accounting of tax expenditures. We believe that they can and must be overcome.

Senators will recall that the second recommendation in the committee's Sixteenth Report calls for the systematic evaluation of the various tax measures currently on the books. That sounds easy, but when honourable senators look more closely they begin to see that evaluating the effectiveness of some measures, such as the dividend tax credit, is far more difficult to do than evaluating others such as the Cape Breton tax credit. This is because the dividend tax credit is tied tightly in with the move toward an integrated personal and corporate tax system in Canada.

Honourable senators, I am pointing out today the difficulties in preparing and tabling a complete tax expenditure account and evaluating these tax measures. These problems have been reviewed before and have been mentioned in previous reports, well back in the 1970s, from the Auditor General. The problem seems to be to find out exactly how to address the problem. The committee feels strongly that this requirement should be entrenched in legislation, and let me tell honourable senators why. Representatives of the Department of Finance appeared before the committee. We pointed out to them the comments of the Auditor General and of the Nielsen Task Force that their evaluation capabilities were inadequate. They declined to acknowledge that they devote inadequate resources to systematically evaluating existing tax expenditures; nor were they prepared to say that the information was inadequate—which leads, of course, to the suggestion that reporting then could take place. Yet examples such as the SRTC and the $1 billion Dome remission order are examples where Parliament's right to know was denied until it was too late.

National Revenue appeared before the committee and indicated the horrors of the SRTC. They told us that the SRTC will cost taxpayers close to $3 billion, and that is against an original estimate of possibly something in the order of $100 million. While some of that money did produce good research, we also learned that close to $1 billion will have to be written off as totally uncollectable. Yet Revenue Canada's hands are tied, so they tell us. They told us that they are not responsible for policy; that that is the role of the Department of Finance.

We heard also from the Auditor General who recounted some of the horrors of tax expenditures. He told us that it is Parliament's right to know what these tax expenditures cost and whether they are effective. Yet when we asked him about the problems such as I raised earlier, the Auditor General offered no solutions. He told the committee that the Department of Finance and Revenue Canada were far better equipped to solve these problems and he was sure that they were capable of doing so.

With all due respect, senators, what we heard from the Department of Finance, Revenue Canada and the Auditor General was, in slang terms, a bit of a cop out. No one really wants to take responsibility. Yet we all agree that some method must be found to solve the problem and to report these in an appropriate manner.

For this reason the committee strongly believes that an annual tax expenditure account is required. The committee does not take a position against tax expenditures. In a country like Canada it is a very logical way to accomplish certain appropriate national policies. But we do believe that these reports and evaluations are essential parts of the process of tax expenditures; and we believe that this should be done systematically and be part of the public record—and, above all, that these requirements should be set down in legislation.

Finally, senators, the Auditor General told us that we can expect a major chapter on tax expenditures in his 1986 annual report and that he would be most willing to appear before the committee to discuss this matter in the fall. We look forward to that and we hope that he will pay attention to our recommendations, because we believe—and we know that he believes—that the citizens of Canada have a right to expect adequate information when between $30 billion and $50 billion is being spent in this particular area.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Hicks, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 4, 1986

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE
SENATE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

If I may point out, honourable senators, other committees will be meeting this afternoon. Due to the late sitting this afternoon, perhaps honourable senators could make a special effort to ensure that there is a quorum later in the day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—TARIFF DISCUSSIONS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wish to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My question is whether or not he can give a report to this chamber on the negotiations that took place this morning between the Ambassador of Canada to the United States, Mr. Gotlieb, and the Secretary of Commerce respecting an application made by the Lumbermen's Association of the United States.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I know that that meeting took place, honourable senators, but I have no report to make on it now.

Senator Olson: May I ask a supplementary question and ask whether or not the Canadian government is aware that there are other applications before the United States authorities which require similar decisions? I understand it is mandatory under United States law that a reply be given within 20 days after a formal application for countervailing duty is made. Are there products in that category other than the balance of the soft wood lumber industry?

Senator Roblin: There is a constant stream of applications made to the American government these days for tariff protection of various kinds. There have been over 21 requests made during the past few years for this kind of protection. I am not aware of the particulars with respect to all of the applications on the table at the present time. I think there is one application with respect to steel forklift arms which is still awaiting a decision by the American government.

There has been a substantial number of countervailing requests, too, which I think are similar to the lumber application. There have been 12 of those, and two have been agreed to by the American government.

● (1500)

I have no information apart from that as to the current situation, but if my honourable friend would like me to do so I will get an update on the situation.

Senator Olson: I would appreciate that, because my understanding is that the U.S. International Trade Commission has a minimum, or a maximum, of 20 days to launch an investigation if an application is made to the same authority and through the same channels, as in the case of softwood. So, if my honourable friend could get a list of those that are on that course I would appreciate it, because, apparently, there is no discretion other than to proceed. Then, at the end of the investigation, there is either an acquiescence and a tariff is put on, or the application is rejected.

Senator Roblin: I presume my friend is talking about applications for countervailing action. Well, they take a long time, as my friend knows.

There is a two or three-stage procedure in the United States, the first of which, I think, is to ascertain whether, in fact, there is any damage done to industry, and then it goes through several other stages.

In respect of the soft lumber case, it will probably be some months before it reaches the point where decisions are arrived at.

I will find out, however, what I can about any other countervailing cases that have surfaced in the United States that we know of.

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN
TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT
POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators—
Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: —I had a question relating to shakes and shingles before I was so “rudely” interrupted, and I would like to complete my question of yesterday.

Senator Flynn: Order.

Senator Olson: Can we guess?

Senator Perrault: I want to ask the Leader of the Government whether he is aware of a measure that is on the statute books of Canada. It is an act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes, or other actions of like effect.

I want to ask the Leader of the Government whether he is aware of this measure, but, more particularly, is he aware of the fact that we have faced such temporary impositions of U.S. tariffs in the past?

When eastern Canada was affected by retaliatory measures by the United States back in 1970, the government of that day immediately introduced legislation to provide temporary assistance for those industries. This legislation makes it possible to provide assistance for a specified period of time and provides for the establishment of a board to administer an aid program. That legislation means that there is no need for any further debate in Parliament—it is there to be implemented.

The purpose of that act is “to provide a means to support levels of employment in Canadian industry when other countries impose temporary import surtaxes or take other actions having a like effect that adversely affects employment in Canadian industry.”

Interestingly enough, honourable senators, the aggregate of all amounts it is possible to expend pursuant to subsection 1 shall not exceed $80 million.

I ask the Leader of the Government to declare today if it is the government's intention to invoke the provisions of this measure to help the distressed shake and shingle workers of British Columbia. The bill is there, passed by a Liberal government, and it authorizes the payment of exactly the same amount of money as the Minister of Finance says that he will raise as a result of his temporary surcharge on books and computer components. Are we going to move immediately to invoke the provisions of this legislation to help those 4,000 people in British Columbia?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think there are two questions addressed to me. One is: Is the government aware of the piece of legislation that my honourable friend refers to that provides for assistance in cases such as the one we are considering? The answer is yes, we are.

The second question is: Are we going to invoke that legislation to provide assistance? The answer is we may do, but there has been no decision made at the present time. The full impact of this American action has not yet been assessed—it does not come into effect until June 6—but when it is assessed the government will decide what to do in order to be of some service to the people of the province of British Columbia who are affected. Whether it will involve this legislation or not I can't say. It is possible, but we will have to see how the matter develops.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear; a good answer.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the government's so-called “retaliatory response” to the American action has had what may be described as a mixed response from Canadian industry.

Senator Frith: It has played to mixed reviews.

Senator Perrault: Yes, it has played to mixed reviews, as people in the theatre business would say.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government can clarify the measure to the extent of providing certain information for me this afternoon.

The Minister of Finance estimates that his so-called “retaliatory tariffs against the Americans” will extract an extra $80 million from Canadian pockets. How can it be said that the tariffs will hurt the Americans when that figure of $80 million indicates clearly that the minister anticipates no reduction in the imports of U.S. books or U.S. computer components? If import levels are going to remain at exactly the same level—and that is stated both in Canada and in the United States—the net result of the government action appears to many Canadians to be merely an extra $80 million extracted out of the taxpayers' pockets for general revenues.

Very clearly, honourable senators, this appears to be typical Tory marksmanship—a case of shooting oneself in the foot.

Senator Flynn: Amusing.

Senator Roblin: It is perfectly true that the government's response to the unexpected action by the Government of the United States has played to mixed reviews and nowhere are those reviews more mixed than in the ranks of the Liberal Party.

Senator Perrault: I am not talking about the Liberal Party.

Senator Roblin: I am talking about the Liberal Party. I do not know which wing of the Liberal Party my honourable friend stands for, because yesterday Mr. Axworthy, some other members in the other place and my honourable friend were slating the government because the action taken was not strong enough. What does he want us to do? Does he want us to go and raise $160 million this way?

Senator Olson: We want results.

Senator Roblin: Who doesn't want results? We all do. Some members of the party opposite are saying, “Not only that, but you should pick up your marbles and go home. Don't go to the trade conference!”

The whole aim of our activities in this situation is to indicate to people on both sides of the border that the trade negotiations are very important and offer a solution to the problems we are being faced with. In other words, the problems we face today are not new. I have just recited to the house that a couple of dozen tariff proposals have been made in the United States that are adverse to our interest. Thank goodness, most of them have been turned down, but we want to come to a situation where we have a means of settling these trade disputes without giving rise to the kind of situation we are now going through.

I do not claim that the policy of the government is effective in the sense that we can get the Americans to change their minds on the shakes and shingles issue, because I do not think we can; I think that is fixed. However, I think we can give them a concrete reason to feel the Canadian reaction to what they have done with respect to this particular matter. That is what I think we are trying to do.

The same set of questions was put yesterday, and I do not think my answers are going to be much different today from what they were then. What we are trying to do is make sure that people south of the border understand that we feel wounded and badly done by by this particular action that has been taken. We are indicating that not just by words but by taking an action. Nobody pretends it is perfect; it certainly is not. How can it be when we are fighting with tariffs and retaliatory measures? The question is: In the circumstances is it the best balanced reaction we can display? On the one hand we are told, "Be tough; do more;" and on the other hand we are told, "Do not retaliate." I think the government's decision to come down somewhere in the middle is best in the circumstances.

Senator Perrault: I have a supplementary question. The Leader of the Government asked the question: What should have been done? May I suggest for one thing that we might have examined ways by which some tariff measures could have been introduced that might have benefited western Canada and might have helped, for example, the agricultural industry of the four western provinces instead of slapping on a tariff which, for openers, is supposed to protect the computer parts manufacturers who are centred mostly in Ontario and Quebec.

Senator Balfour: For example?

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Government has not replied to my fundamental question: How is this retaliatory action damaging to the United States?

Senator Balfour: For example?

Senator Perrault: Spokesmen in both Canada and the United States say that the tariffs are not going to reduce the importation of electronic goods by Canadians. Indeed, the head of Merrill Lynch Canada has stated that a lot of the high tech goods we import from the United States are used to lever our productivity and we are not exactly hurting the United States.

Honourable senators, of course, we are not hurting the United States. The only people being hurt are the Canadian taxpayers who will have to pay $80 million extra to support this political charade. So, how is the United States going to be injured?

Senator Roblin: I certainly hope they are not going to be injured to the same extent that we are going to be injured by the shakes and shingles tariff. I hope that sincerely, because our policy is not one of retribution of the kind my honourable friend wants. Our policy is one of making a measured, reasonable response, and that is what we are doing.

● (1510)

Senator Perrault: It is wrist-slapping.

Senator Roblin: As for trying to play off eastern Canada against western Canada on this issue, I reject any suggestion that I should get into that kind of argument.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. The Leader of the Government has yet to indicate to this chamber precisely how the U.S. electronics and publishing companies will be injured or even threatened by this action. What we are doing is going through a charade for public relations purposes.

Senator Flynn: We have heard that before.

Senator Perrault: The only people suffering are the mill workers of British Columbia—and I talked to some of them today and they are very distressed, indeed—and the Canadian taxpayers who buy books and computer products and will have to pay $80 million more. Even the Minister of Finance admits that it will not affect the inflow of those U.S. products, so why are we going through this ridiculous charade? Why are we shooting ourselves in the feet?

Senator Roblin: When it comes to shooting oneself in the foot, my honourable friend can give a few lessons—he is an expert at that kind of thing. I am saying to him, however, that the measures we are taking form a calculated response that will indicate our position in this matter to our biggest trading partner, and I think we are justified in doing so. But we do not consider that the end of the game. If that were the end of it all, if nothing more were going to happen, if we were just going to maintain the status quo, there might be something in my friend's argument. But that is not what we are after.

We are after an agreement with the United States on trade—one which will eliminate the necessity of doing this kind of thing. If there are fallouts from this, then there are fallouts on both sides of the border; that is what is wrong with protectionism, for goodness' sakes, because everybody shoots himself in the foot. The Americans shoot themselves in the foot with protectionism. That is what is wrong with it and that is why we want to get away from it. My honourable friend would be better advised if he could give us some assistance in our efforts to get the Americans to come to a trade agreement with the Government of Canada.

Senator Flynn: But he only wants to make noise.

Senator Perrault: The government represented by the Leader of the Government in the chamber stated the other day that this was retaliation. Now it is not retaliation any more. It is a measured response—a measured response which has exactly zero impact upon American producers and American industry. The only ones to suffer from any kind of adverse reaction are the shake and shingle manufacturers of my province and the Canadian taxpayers who will have $80 million in additional revenue filched from their pockets. Do you call that a measured response?

Senator Roblin: I certainly do call it a measured response. What would my friend have us do? Would he have us do nothing? Is that his policy? Would he have us allow this situation to go by the boards without any effort on the part of Canada to express its opinion?

That is not what he told me yesterday. What he told me yesterday is that we were not tough enough. What he told me yesterday is that we should do something that is worthwhile, that meant something. What is the logic of his reasoning? The logic of his reasoning is that if we do what we propose to do—which is raise $80 million—that is wrong, but if I took his advice of yesterday I would be doubling or tripling that particular measure, and that would be right.

Senator Perrault: I said yesterday that we should act to help those Canadians suffering from this measure and that we should not move in an ineffectual way against the United States. That is what I said. That is what our party represents. This country has historically had a decent and friendly arm's length relationship with the United States. As Robert Frost, the New England poet, said, "Good fences make good neighbours."

Honourable senators, this government seems to be either at the feet of the Americans or at their throats. That is not the way to get things done. We will not get things done by grovelling and singing "Danny Boy" at one moment and then denouncing American actions in violent language and acting like some jilted lover at another.

Senator Frith: On a point of order, it was "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling."

Senator Perrault: I stand corrected; it was "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling."

Senator Doody: Don't confuse him with facts. He is doing fine.

Senator Frith: He sure seems to be confusing you with his facts.

Senator Roblin: My friend may not be much of a singer, but he certainly knows how to rant. I thought that I was pretty good in the ranting department, but he's got me backed off the map. He can rant until the cows come home.

If he is interested in the welfare of the Canadian people—and I give him the credit for thinking that he is—

An Hon. Senator: Why?

Senator Roblin: Well, because I am a decent fellow, that is why.

Senator Argue: He is a decent fellow.

Senator Roblin: He would be a decent fellow if only he would take some good advice. If we are interested in the welfare of the people of Canada, the solution to our problem is to get behind the trade measures. His party does not know where it stands. It doesn't know whether it is for them or against them. We hear the Premier of Ontario saying that retaliation is not enough; we hear Mr. Axworthy saying that retaliation is not enough; we heard my honourable friend yesterday saying that retaliation is not enough—the measures should be tougher—yet, there are other people in his party who have another point of view.

I want to know if I can count on my honourable friend to help us with the trade policy that we have adopted to try to get an agreement with the United States. That is the way in which we are going to do something good for the people.

Senator Perrault: The question was asked whether he has support. He has support, and his colleagues have support, but not if the negotiations are going to be bungled. When we say that we are going to retaliate then we should either retaliate or not threaten at all. What is the point of saying, "We are going to retaliate" when the measure is really meaningless to the Americans and to everyone but those people who have to pay the taxes on this side of the border?

Senator Roblin: My friend should have asked himself that question yesterday when he was on the retaliation kick; and he had better ask Mr. Axworthy what the attitude is today. They have the answer for it. The point is that this argument about trade underlies as nothing else can the importance of getting on with the trade negotiations; and it is no good saying, as my friend says, "Well, if you make a success of it, we are for it, and if we don't think you will make a success of it, we are against it." Well, we know that already. But meanwhile, while we are trying, we need your help.

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF TARIFF ON PUBLICATIONS AND COMPUTER PARTS

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Does the tariff on books apply to other than American books?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to consult my sources for this, but I believe that these tariff measures are universal in their application.

Senator Davey: As a supplementary, you have talked today about our relationship with the United States in the exchange between you and my colleague. What conceivable rationale is there for applying this tariff to non-American foreign books? I do not accept your rationale for the American books, but concerning non-American books, what conceivable rationale is there for applying a tariff?

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend knows the answer to that as well as I do. Under the various rules of international trading, we cannot discriminate in tariff matters of this kind, and seeing that by far the largest majority of the books in question comes from the United States, it seems to me that it is a situation that we can learn to live with.

Senator Argue: I thought it was retaliation against the Americans!

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government said earlier that he was being asked the same questions as he was asked yesterday and that the answers would have to be the same. But here is one where I hope he will have changed his answer. On page 2537 of Debates of the Senate I asked him what effect the tariff would have on computer parts. He replied that he could not tell. I then asked whether the government was imposing a tariff without knowing what effect it would have, and later Senator Godfrey asked whether any of those parts were made in Canada. The Leader of the Government was not trying to mislead us. He was not even trying to stonewall. He said that it was his understanding that the computer parts were probably made in Canada, in the United States and in Japan. I want to ask him whether he still holds to that answer.

Senator Roblin: Yes, I do. I have not yet had the opportunity to check it. If my honourable friend has some further information, I will be pleased to have it.

Senator Gigantès: The president of the manufacturers association, which deals with such products, said this morning that no, those parts are not made in Canada; that no, he and the people in his industry could not continue without those parts; they would have to import them and pay the higher tariff as they had been paying before, and that it would simply be passed on to the customers; that this in no way was going to affect the Americans.

How are we on the opposition side to be able to make any reasonable suggestions when the government does not appear to know why it has taken the action it has taken, and when that action, under examination, does not seem to have any reasonable purpose at all, either in cautioning the Americans or in providing any advantage for Canadians?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my friend is ploughing a fallow field. This matter was discussed yesterday and again today. I have nothing to add to the answers I have already given with respect to the matter. I can say this: I want to make it clear to my friend that to the best of my knowledge the tariff on computer parts is 3.9 per cent; on semi-conductors it is 5.4 per cent; and those are exactly the same tariffs that were in effect in Canada up until January of this year. That is when they came off. I do not know whether the people who use these parts reduced their prices on January 20 when the tariff came off to take into account the reduction in the tariff. If they did, I will be pleased to hear about it. I will be surprised if they increase their prices by that amount because of what has been done. I do not think they will.

• (1520)

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I am not going to try to analyze the motives of business people. They puzzle me often, as they obviously seem to be puzzling the Leader of the Government. However, what he is saying here shows that the government has not even heard from these people. Nor has it even talked to these manufacturers who were explaining this morning that they will pass on the cost to the customers. What is so annoying to the manufacturers is that they have to go back to extra paper work. This measure is not doing anything to the Americans. It is certainly not harming the Americans. It is no skin off their noses. It is Canadians who will be paying through aggravation because of added paper work and extra costs. I would be very surprised if manufacturers did not seize every opportunity to increase their costs, particularly if they can blame it on the government.

[Senator Gigantès.]

Senator Roblin: I would be rather surprised if the people of the United States did not take note of the action of the Canadian government when determining their next moves.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

GOOSE BAY, LABRADOR—BARRING OF INUIT FROM MEETING ADDRESSED BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is not very often I pick up the Toronto Star, but last weekend I noticed an article in which it stated that the Minister of Justice, the Honourable John Crosbie, had visited Goose Bay, Labrador, to make government announcements and that three representatives of the Inuit people of Labrador had been barred from the part of the military base where the meeting was held because "they were not properly dressed." They did not have a jacket and tie on! I phoned the Labrador Inuit Association in Labrador this morning to make sure that what was said in the paper was true, and a person from the association confirmed it.

In the meantime, Mr. Crosbie was announcing a $500 million project to upgrade the air base at Goose Bay, a project that would be of help to the native people there. I am wondering why those three representatives were barred because they did not have a jacket and tie on. I would point out that Mr. Crosbie is the representative in the government for Newfoundland and Labrador. I do not see why he could not tell the military that these people were his guests and that they should be allowed to enter the base. Why did this happen?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am entirely sympathetic with my honourable friend's point. I am sure that if Mr. Crosbie had known that these gentlemen were not allowed admission for the reasons stated he would have put his foot down. It is deplorable, and I hope that it does not happen again.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF TARIFF ON PUBLICATIONS

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to the questions asked earlier by Senator Davey. In his reply to Senator Davey the Leader of the Government stated that the tariff on books applied globally, because it was not possible to discriminate between the various countries under tariff rules. My understanding is that the reason the action was taken was that the GATT rules do not apply to this particular tariff. Would it not then be true that we could discriminate and apply the tariff to the Americans alone and not to other countries?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my friend may be right, and I may have to revise my answer. I shall check into the matter and see if I was correct the first time. If I was not, I shall give further information on the matter.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES
AND SHINGLES—COMPENSATION FOR WORKERS IN INDUSTRY

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Again, it is on the subject of measures taken in the United States against the British Columbia red cedar shakes and shingles industry. My colleague, Senator Perrault, asked this question yesterday afternoon and, for the life of me, I cannot find the answer in the proceedings of yesterday.

The question is whether the government is considering a program of compensation to workers and to the companies in the British Columbia red cedar shakes and shingles industry for loss arising out of the U.S. measures. I believe the case is well made, based on the statements which have been made by government ministers with respect to transitional arrangements which will be enacted in the course of the negotiations now under way with the United States on a freer trade regime.

What is needed in our province is an assurance that the principle of compensation is being considered and, of course, when the injury is better known, the compensation can be more clearly defined.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That question was asked yesterday and I answered it in a very sympathetic manner. I think my honourable friend, Senator Perrault, may remember that I felt he had made a good point, and I think my friend Senator Austin makes a good point. Whether it is to be called compensation or assistance or some other name, I do not know, but the measures to be taken to deal as fairly as we can with the people affected by these measures should be considered as soon as we can assess the extent of the damage.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN—GRASSHOPPER THREAT IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES—
REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate arising from what I am afraid is another impending crop disaster in parts of the prairies brought about by a very major grasshopper plague. This threatens the crops in those same areas where there has been a crop loss for the last three years.

In order to give some background to the question, I thought I might read a letter that I wrote today to the Honourable John Wise, Minister of Agriculture. That letter reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Wise:

There is a major grasshopper threat to grain crops in large areas of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. Already some farmers report crop losses as high as 50%.

At the present rate of damage thousands of farmers could lose all of their crops in a matter of days or a few weeks at most.

The cost of grasshopper insecticides is enormous and is financially crippling for many farmers. Immediate spraying of crops is crucial.

To enable farmers to meet the staggering cost of these chemicals I would ask the Government of Canada to pay 50% of the cost.

This would enable farmers to battle grasshoppers and to save, if they can, what is potentially a very good crop. I point out that this cost to the federal government will be small compared to the increased cost of stabilization and crop insurance if the crop is lost. I would ask you to give this urgent request your immediate attention.

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would press his colleagues in the cabinet to establish a program immediately to deal with this situation. I point out that the cost of spraying and the cost of the chemicals range probably up to as much as $7 per acre. Some farmers have already sprayed an individual field more than once, and some of them have sprayed as often as three days apart. It does not take much imagination to realize that with four or five sprayings you are getting into a very large percentage of the value of the crop. Therefore, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to convey what I believe is an urgent message for needed action.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I know that the message my honourable friend speaks of has already been conveyed to the Minister of Agriculture by members of Parliament from Saskatchewan and Alberta. I will attempt to get for him a speedy answer to the letter that he has written to the minister.

I do not know how far the grasshoppers will go. So far, Manitoba appears to be the most favoured of the three provinces. It is hard to tell just what the outcome will be but I will attempt to get an answer for him to that letter.

● (1530)

Senator Argue: I appreciate that and I point out something to the leader that he already knows; that is, that the cost to the government of the programs that I have mentioned—for example, the $150 million acreage payment made to farmers in the drought area of western Canada last year—is a preventive action and one that might pay off. I appreciate the answer.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

GOOSE BAY, LABRADOR—BARRING OF INUIT FROM MEETING
ADDRESSED BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT AND APOLOGY

Hon. Len Marchand: My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is supplementary to that asked by my colleague, Senator Adams. I, too, was appalled when I read the following headline in the Toronto Star of June 1, 1986: "Inuit barred for not wearing jackets, ties as Crosbie woos NATO over big air base."

The question that comes to my mind is: How will those people who are going to be assessing the suitability of Goose Bay for the location of a big air base be able to assess the cultural needs of the Inuit if they cannot understand that these leaders perhaps may not even own jackets and ties? They were barred from that meeting because they did not wear jackets and ties. As I said, perhaps they do not own jackets or ties. As a Canadian, it appalls me to think that we could be so insensitive to the feelings of those people.

What I want from the Leader of the Government in the Senate is a full report on this incident and an apology from appropriate sources—from either the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whom I have always known to be a decent person who is sensitive to the needs of the Inuit and the Indian people, or from some other government official.

The article states, in part, as follows:

The minister went on to announce Ottawa will give local supporters of the base proposal $150,000 to help publicize the fact people want the North Atlantic Treaty Organization installation in Labrador.

Well, it so happens that there are many people who live there who do not want this base located in Labrador, especially the aboriginal people who have lived there for thousands of years. Will those people also be assisted financially by Ottawa to publicize their opposition to locating the base in Labrador?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I need not repeat what I have said to Senator Adams. I cannot find any excuse obvious to me why those gentlemen were not allowed into what I believe was a military mess. I think that was the locale of the meeting. I have no hesitation in accepting the suggestion that there should be a report rendered as to what went wrong. We certainly do not want that sort of thing to happen again. Depending on the circumstances, if an apology is required—and it may very well be that it is—then we will certainly take that into account.

I should like to say right now that we will do that, but one never knows what the exact circumstances are; I do not know them, so I cannot give that undertaking now. If the circumstances are as described by my honourable colleague, and there was this blatant attitude taken towards citizens of the country, no doubt an apology is in order. We will check into it.

EMPLOYMENT

LAYOFFS AT MONCTON CN SHOPS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I presume that the Leader of the Government in the Senate realizes by now that it is not always fun to have the responsibility of governing a country. I have listened to the leader and I wonder what satisfaction he draws from pointing out that there may be people in my party, the Liberal Party of Canada, who may have different views on trade or tariff matters as between Canada and the United States. Has he not yet realized that it is they who have the responsibility to govern? They wanted it for 20 years, they now have it, and the people of this country are not looking to the Liberal Party at this time because the Liberal Party has no authority to implement policy.

[Senator Marchand.]

Senator Olson: In a couple of years it will!

Senator Thériault: I can assure the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate that by the time the next election is called, knowing the Liberal Party as I do, the Liberal Party will have a cause and the Canadian people will decide on who will govern, but, for God's sake, between now and then I suggest that those elected to govern set their minds on governing and do the things that the people of this country expect them to do.

Senator Flynn: Nice try!

Senator Thériault: Having said that, honourable senators, I want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate—
[Translation]

Do you have anything to contribute, Senator Flynn?

Senator Flynn: You want to teach us a lesson? What a good professor you are!

Senator Thériault: The contribution—

Senator Flynn: That is very bright—

Senator Thériault: I did not understand, but even if that were understood, it is nothing.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): This is the right time to teach them a lesson.

[English]

Senator Thériault: I want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate the following question, and I have asked it before. Week after week and month after month the people of New Brunswick, in particular, and those of the Atlantic provinces generally, have been subjected to two things from their members of Parliament and from ministers of the Crown. First, that every time they open their mouths they say that they have created 640,000 jobs, and, second, that the CN shops in Moncton will not be closed. Naturally, the people in the Atlantic provinces have tried to find those jobs, but have seen no signs of them.

The CN shops located in Moncton are an institution in New Brunswick. They employ some people living in New Brunswick and some people living in Nova Scotia. Week after week we have heard rumours that those shops will be closed. A minister from the provincial government or a minister from the federal government will deny those rumours. A couple of weeks ago the Minister of Transport for the province of New Brunswick said that he was assured by the federal Minister of Transport that the shops would not be closed, yet just last week CN made an announcement that over the next couple of months 100-odd people will lose their jobs in the Atlantic provinces. Though that is not a large number in terms of Montreal or Toronto, 66 people from New Brunswick will lose their jobs, 20 from Edmundston, 10 from Campbellton, 10 from Bathurst, 13 from Newcastle and 13 from Moncton. I have been asked by those people whether this is the beginning of the end.

Are CN and VIA, week after week, month after month, cutting back services to the point that eventually they will be able to say that there is no need for those shops in Moncton? Will those services now being provided in Moncton be provided in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or at some other location?

The people in New Brunswick are worried about this. The New Brunswick Legislature will debate this issue soon. The debate has been delayed because of the illness of the Premier. The people on the street talk about nothing else. This means 1,000 jobs, jobs that have been available to the citizens of New Brunswick since Confederation, will be lost. There were 1,200 jobs three or four years ago; 1,100 jobs two years ago; 900 jobs today, and that figure will be reduced in the future. When will the government, the Minister of Transport or the Leader of the Government in the Senate be able to tell us the real story behind these layoffs?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think I should be allowed to make a comment about the necessity of the government to govern. You are darn right we are going to govern! My friend and his colleagues opposite can criticize us as much as they wish, that is their job, and we have no complaints about that, but we are going to govern. We need no urging from my honourable friend to carry out our responsibility. I want him to carry out his responsibility, because one of these days, like it or not, he and his colleagues are going to have to come clean as to where they stand on many issues which, up to now, they have been able to avoid doing. That is my opinion and it is one not shared by everyone in the Senate.

With respect to the question, the first thing one must remember is that Canadian National Railways is a crown corporation and has a mandate to run its affairs in a business-like, modern, up-to-date way in order to provide the cheapest transportation possible to the people who use its services. That is a fact. These days we are seeing changes in technology and changes in methods, which means we have to rethink our way through the transportation system of the country. This is being seen on every side, not just on the side of Canadian National Railways. That can be seen in Air Canada, in Canadian Pacific Railways and in every trucking company in the country. There is a rationalization going on of the transportation system of the nation, and that has to be a good thing, because, ultimately, it means we will be more efficient, we will get more for our money and our people will benefit from that.

● (1540)

So, we can't stop that, but we can look at the fate of the people who are affected by these moves; and it is here that I think government has a responsibility to see what it can do to soften the blow. That is a hard thing to do, but that is what our policy is.

In respect of the situation my friend talks of, according to the information that has been given to me there are some 4,037 persons in the CN work force in Moncton. However, he gave another figure just now in the region of one thousand.

Senator Thériault: I mean in the CN shops.

Senator Roblin: Well, I am just taking the whole of the CN work force in Moncton and the figure is 4,037. Of these—

Senator Thériault: You had better check on those figures.

Senator Roblin: Well, I will; I may be wrong. But, they have been handed to me because I knew very well that someone was likely to ask me about this, so I got the figure. If I am wrong, I will correct it, but that is the figure I have.

Senator Frith: Good work.

Senator Roblin: The staff reduction is 15. So, that leaves 4,022 left. Well, what about the 15? They have to be considered.

There are union rules and there are policy rules of Canadian National that will deal with their situation in respect of seniority, in respect to early retirement and in respect of the CN employment security protection policies that they follow.

I do not pretend that that is going to ease all the hurt—there is always somebody who gets caught in these things, and that has to be a matter of regret—but I would not like my friend to think that we are dealing with this matter in a thoughtless and heartless way. The railway, I am convinced, is doing its best to be reasonable in rationalizing its work force. This is going on not only in Moncton but it is going on across the whole country. Canadian National is doing its best through seniority, early retirement, relocation and other measures that they have to minimize the impact on the people concerned so at least they will have some consideration.

There is a 90-day process, I think, during which the employees have time to consider how they want to react—these 15 who I am concerned about in Moncton. So you cannot tell how many of those will ultimately work less. Let us hope that we can arrange that most of them are taken care of in one way or another.

I do not object to my honourable friend's questioning me about this, because that is his business, that is his duty, let us say, but I want to try to convince him that the moves that are being taken are being taken in what we hope is a rational manner with as much concern for the people concerned as we can possibly manage.

Senator Thériault: Well, honourable senators, it was not quite two years ago—in July and August of 1984—that every Tory candidate in New Brunswick based most of their campaigns on job creation and they used the CNR shops in Moncton especially as an enticement. They promised—as did the current member from the city of Moncton, who won by a landslide—that jobs would be increased at the CNR shops in Moncton. Tory candidates also promised to reinstate the VIA rail service between Saint John, Halifax, and Moncton—which they did.

Senator Frith: Shame, shame!

Senator Thériault: Running for what! Because of political promises and, in the meantime, jobs are being lost.

The response of the Leader of the Government in the Senate is typical of this government. He goes on to say that this means only 15 jobs. It is 15 jobs this time; it was 25 jobs three weeks ago; it was 80 jobs six months ago; it was 100 jobs a year ago, and if the people of New Brunswick knew that that was the end it would not be so bad. That is what we want to know: Where do we stand? Is this the beginning of the end?

Can you not imagine the anguish of those people and their families not knowing what week, or what day of next week, they are going to be notified that their jobs are at stake? Because we know that someone has invited General Electric to go down and tour the shops; they did that twice. Is CN going to sell the jobs to General Electric with a grant from the government so that General Electric can close the shops two years down the road?

Transportation is one of the things on which this country was built. It is one of the reasons that the Atlantic provinces are part of this country. But we are being cut adrift by this government less than two years after they were elected with promises which went as far as the Prime Minister, then the Leader of the Opposition, inviting everybody from the Miramichi to come to 24 Sussex Drive to have a swim. That is how far you went with promises. You promised everybody jobs, and now we cannot get answers. Is it not 15 jobs—

Senator Roblin: It is people.

Senator Thériault: —it is the anguish, the concerns of thousands of people and their families in New Brunswick, which are at stake. Can't we get an answer?

Senator Roblin: I might as well give my honourable friend the whole story here. It is not just the 15 people in Moncton that are affected, there are 306 people in the whole nation out of some 35,000 employees from the CN.

Now if you look at it in proportion, you will see that while you might not like these changes they do not amount to the gut-wrenching situation that my friend is afraid of. I don't think they are. One per cent of the total working population of this railway is affected.

Now he says to me: Where are we going? Well, I am not gifted with second sight; I do not know where we are going. I do know that the railway has informed me that the situation is stabilized at this particular point for the year 1986—which is almost half through. What will happen after that, I don't know.

I am quite positive—and I will say it—that there will be change. We live in a changing world and we cannot hang on to things as they were when changes come along. What we are trying to do is to find alternative employment for people. One of the ways we hope to do so is by the trade talks that everyone is slating me for here in this house. That won't come easy and it won't come soon, but it is a goal that we must strive for. We cannot keep jobs and save the economy by maintaining the status quo in any one industry, and we cannot keep it by refusing to face up to our international competitive position and our trading relationship with the United States.

[Senator Frith.]

It is a foolish policy to think that you can hang on to things as they are, because you cannot do it. You may be able to do it for a while, but the great world changes all around you, and sooner or later they compel you to come to terms with them.

I want to tell my friend that I do not think that there will be any more changes this year in Moncton. There certainly may be changes after that, and if there are he will certainly be telling me about it. I know that. But the railway is trying to act in a humane manner. It is trying to make sure that if people are unemployed, something helpful is done about it for them; and I think that is the way that it ought to be, and we are going to do our best.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate just made a very serious statement. I hope I misunderstood him, or that he made an error. He said that there were going to be 306 people, I think he said, laid off.

Senator Simard: He said 330.

Senator Thériault: Is it 330 across the country?

Senator Roblin: That's right.

Senator Thériault: Out of a work force of 35,000?

Senator Roblin: That's right.

Senator Thériault: Do you know that there are 106 of those in the Atlantic provinces? About 30 per cent of those layoffs of 300 are in the Atlantic provinces. So, what do you say? We are 10 per cent of the population. We have an employment rate of 20 per cent and layoffs are happening to the tune of 300 in the country, and 100 and some of those are in the Atlantic provinces. That is what people are concerned about; that is what the country is concerned about.

If the honourable Leader of the Government is sincere about what he says concerning the fact that we cannot stay with the status quo, I agree, and that is what we were trying to do and tell the people in 1984. But it is you people who came along and said, "We will create more jobs, and these jobs will stay here, and we will improve the number of jobs in Moncton at the CN shops." That is what was said. Ask your colleague from the House of Commons from the area. He does not dare go home any more.

● (1550)

The Leader of the Government has just said that there will be no further announcement in this regard in 1986, and I am glad to hear that, because it is my understanding that a study is ongoing and a report should be in the hands of the Minister of Transport within the next month or so. According to the Minister of Transport, the life of the shops depends on the findings in that report.

Can I go back to Moncton on the weekend and tell people there that in 1986 nothing more will happen regarding these shops? Is that what the honourable leader has just stated?

Senator Roblin: That is exactly what I stated and, to the best of my knowledge, that is correct. I think to rush around saying that the Moncton shops are on the brink of elimination is not doing any service to anyone, because I do not think it is true.

Senator Thériault: That is what people were saying in 1984. At that time people were told that the process would stop and they believed what they were told. Now it is happening faster than ever, and that is why this government has no credibility left in the Atlantic provinces.

Senator Roblin: We have a policy of trying to improve employment opportunities in this country, not just in the Canadian National Railways but everywhere. We are working on that and we have had good success.

Senator Thériault: Where?

Senator Roblin: There are some hundreds of thousands of people employed now who were unemployed before.

Senator Balfour: Six hundred thousand.

Senator Roblin: Six hundred thousand plus.

Senator Thériault: Where?

Senator Roblin: My friend can belittle that all he likes.

Senator Frith: In the Atlantic provinces?

Senator Roblin: That is the record and it is a good record. We have in place policies which will affect Atlantic Canada where we are trying to ensure that they get their fair share. We know the situation is tough in that area. We know there are economic difficulties in the Atlantic provinces which militate against them as compared to central Canada. Don't I know that, coming from where I come from? Don't I know that the government is trying its best to see that the balance is made more equal?

My friends knows that there are plenty of policies for which he probably is partly responsible, for all I know, which this government has carried on and enhanced with respect to that matter. We are doing our best.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I cannot speak for the people of Nova Scotia and P.E.I., but, speaking for the people of my province, I know that every time those people hear the Prime Minister or a minister talking about those 640,000 jobs they cringe, because the unemployment rate is higher in that province now than it ever was.

This government came to power in 1984, and since that time there has been a record increase in the economy of Canada. In 1986, three years after the start of the economic recovery at the end of a deep worldwide recession, 600,000 jobs were created in this country, and part of that is due to the fact that during the recession people in central Canada were unable to buy cars and appliances and when they started earning some money, they could buy those things and new jobs were created.

Honourable senators, there was a parallel economic situation in Canada in the late 1960s. At that time 600,000 jobs were created in one year in this country. We had an unemployment rate of 6 per cent.

Now, honourable senators, three years after the start of economic recovery in Canada, with all the wonderful policies we have in place, we still have an unemployment rate of over 9 per cent in Canada generally and over 15 per cent in New Brunswick. People are becoming tired of hearing the government of the day talking about all the jobs they have created. It would be much better if they did less talking and created more jobs.

Senator Roblin: When my honourable friend accepts the responsibility of his party for the worst depression we have had in many years during 1961 and 1962, from which we had to pull ourselves, then I will pay attention to him.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government knows that was a worldwide recession.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Flynn: It is not your fault; nothing is your fault, and we recognize that.

Senator Thériault: I believe that the people of Canada are starting to be thankful for the social policies that were put in place by the Liberal government.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear.

Senator Thériault: We were able to get through that recession without the relief camps that had to be put in place in 1935 when a Tory government was in power. Those policies sustained this country through that recession.

How much influence does the Government of Canada have over interest rates? It has none and it knows it. Every time the interest rate goes up by .25 per cent in the United States, it goes up by .50 per cent here. That situation has not changed one bit since 1984. This government has done nothing to help the country out of the recession. The people of the Atlantic provinces are worse off today than they have ever been over the last 15 years.

Senator Flynn: That's enough.

Senator Roblin: This is a fine example of how not to use Question Period. If my honourable friend wants to debate this issue, he knows how to do it, but he wants to do it in Question Period.

I make a promise—and I may live to regret it—that I am not going to answer any more questions from him today, because they are not questions, they are speeches.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I ask my colleagues on both sides of this house to be the judges of who started the debate. I asked a question, the leader responded with a speech and I followed on.

Senator Flynn: Blah, blah, blah.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has never asked a question which did not have as its preamble a speech.

Senator Thériault: The Leader of the Government in the Senate very seldom answers any question, but he makes a lot of speeches.

Senator Roblin: I will continue to do so if I have to put my honourable friend right on the facts.

CAPE BRETON—UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I have a simple question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate because he made the assertion—

Senator Flynn: Do you want to correct the situation?

Senator Graham:—that the Liberal government was responsible for a recession in 1961-62. Mention has been made of the creation of 600,000 jobs by this government since it came to office in 1984.

I happen to come from a region of Canada which, we hope, will benefit in the future from policies of this government, policies of another government which will come to office in a couple of years from now and, indeed, policies of past Liberal governments.

I want to ask a simple question of the Leader of the Government: Is he aware that the present rate of unemployment on Cape Breton Island is 26 per cent and that when this government came to office the rate of unemployment in that area was 14 per cent?

Senator Roblin: I am aware that the rate of unemployment in Cape Breton is very unsatisfactory, although I do not know what the percentage is. I am quite prepared to believe that it is something we should not be prepared to tolerate. That is why this government has put into place a lot of new policies and programs which it hopes will help the people of Cape Breton, and I know my honourable friend supports that.

[Translation]

INSURANCE

BANKRUPTCY OF NORTHUMBERLAND GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—COMPENSATION OF INSURED VICTIMS—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I have a few supplementary questions for the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the answers he provided yesterday to the questions I raised a few weeks ago concerning the bankruptcy of the Northumberland General Insurance Company.

My first question is: Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell this house whether the Minister of Finance or the Superintendent of Insurance did inform the insurance brokers doing business with that company about the precarious situation it was in? According to the answer I received yesterday from the Leader of the Government, the department was aware of the situation as early as 1983, that is two years before Northumberland went bankrupt.

My second question is: Is the Minister of State (Finance), with the legislation expected to be announced soon, as suggested yesterday by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, going to strengthen financial requirements for insurance companies, to better protect policy holders? Does the Minister intend to compensate the victims of the Northumberland bankruptcy, that is the policy holders who lost their property in fires or other accidents covered by their policies?

[Senator Thériault.]

Third, when first asked my question, the Leader of the Government gave me the impression he was supporting my suggestion that the Northumberland General Insurance bankruptcy, and indeed the whole matter of insurance in general, be referred to the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for study. The government leader even suggested I should send a copy of my information to the chairman of that committee, Senator Murray, which I did.

I would like to know, in Senator Murray's absence whether the Honourable Leader of the Government had an opportunity to discuss my suggestion with the chairman of that committee, and whether we can expect in the near future that the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be looking into that very serious problem?

● (1600)

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): With respect to the first question, I will have to ask my colleague, the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance, if the information my friend seeks is available. With respect to the contents of the coming bill, my friend will have to wait until the bill is tabled. I really cannot get into that while the bill is not before Parliament.

With respect to the committee, I believe that the chairman of the committee was in the house when the original exchange took place between my friend and me. Was he not present? Well, it is really something that my friend should take up with the chairman of the committee, because the committee is the master of its own agenda. I cannot take the liberty of telling it what to do; the committee members will decide for themselves. I think my friend should take that up directly with the committee.

Senator Langlois: When I originally mentioned this matter, the chairman of the committee was not in his seat, but I sent to his office a copy of the information that I had passed to this house on that day. I have received no comment from him since.

Senator Roblin: I am sure that he did not intend to ignore my friend, because he is a pretty zealous committee chairman. I am sure that if Senator Langlois gave him a ring on the phone when he returns—he is travelling with one of the committees—he will deal with the matter.

EMPLOYMENT

LAYOFFS AT MONCTON CN SHOPS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to do what I believe he suggested he would do; that is, to check on the figures that he has been given with respect to the CNR employment in what I assume to be the greater Moncton area. It may well be that there are some 4,000 employees, because there is a large office staff there, but a reduction of 15 I find rather strange.

Two years ago there were approximately 1,200 employees at the CN shops, and I believe this is the area that Senator Thériault has quite properly been trying to zero in on. As of a month ago there were 950 jobs at the CN shops. That is a reduction of 250.

At the same time, could the government leader ask his colleagues—and I put this question sincerely—where is the logic of the government in putting scores of millions of dollars into my province and into other of the Atlantic provinces through grants to private enterprise to try to encourage development while, at the same time, permitting an agency owned by the Government of Canada to institute that awful process of gradualism that has crept into our society? The way to defeat any purpose is to go at it gradually, as the CNR is doing in my province. We lose a few jobs here, a few jobs there; we are getting it in the neck every six weeks and it is gradualism of the worst kind.

We had assurances from the honourable Minister of Transport that all of this would be held in place until a policy was decided upon, yet it goes on and on and on. Senator Thériault and I have been trying to convey the fact that the people of Moncton are living in terror. I am speaking not only of the families of the employees but also of the business community of Moncton. This is the lifeblood of a major city of the maritime provinces.

This government, the same as the previous government, puts scores of millions of dollars into the maritimes to preserve and encourage new jobs and new industry, yet permits an agency of the government to destroy jobs.

I will give just one more example and then I will sit down. In recent weeks employees in the city of Moncton who now have jobs have been interviewed by CNR officials, who ask them if they will move to Montreal or Winnipeg to do similar jobs to those they are now doing in Moncton. That is not waiting for a policy to develop. In the interests of those people—and there are thousands involved, when we take into account the families—would the government leader, in God's name, ask the CNR to stop until a policy has been decided upon, as was promised by the minister?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I understand the point my friend is making. I will tell him that the CN work force in Moncton is given to me as 4,037. It is my assumption that that figure includes everybody, not only those employed in the shops, and I believe that figure is correct. If one is talking about the shops only, the figure will be different because these other people are doing other things.

Senator McElman: I understood the government leader to say that there has been a reduction of 15.

Senator Roblin: That is right. Out of a total Canadian National work force of 4,037, the reduction at this particular moment on this particular issue is 15. I realize that it is not the first move of this kind that has been taken and I do know that it has been going on over a period of time. I wish I could tell my friend that it would stop, but I do not know that it will stop.

I know that technology does not stop and I know that the necessity of getting the railway into the most efficient position is a continuing pressure. Because it is owned by the government, it is subject to political comment in a way to which other enterprises perhaps would not be subject, and that has been going on for some time, too. While I have every sympathy with my friend, I have to warn him that the world moves on and there are problems.

He has asked me whether I can get anything from the minister that would give to the people of Moncton an assurance they do not already have. I will do my best, but I do not know that what I will get will be satisfactory. In any event, I will try.

THE SENATE

FORM OF QUESTION PERIOD—SUGGESTED REFERRAL TO RULES COMMITTEE

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I rise on a point on which I think I am out of order, but we have now spent an hour and 20 minutes on Question Period. The bulk of that time has been spent in debate, and I think both sides of the house have been guilty of misusing the Question Period. Would the Leader of the Government and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition consider a reference to the Rules Committee to see if there is some way of resolving this issue of Question Period so that we can operate under some definite rules as to what sorts of questions are allowed, what sort of debate may or may not take place and even what length Question Period ought to be?

I really think that Question Period is getting to the point where it is ridiculous. It is now a free-wheeling debate that totally derogates against the rules of this chamber. I think that we should correct this situation before it harms seriously the operations of this house. I feel somewhat sorry for senators who are prepared to speak and have to wait while Question Period rolls on and on and on, and while debate takes place in a forum where, so far as I know, debate should not take place.

Could the Leader of the Government and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition consider getting together to see whether a reference could be made to the Rules Committee to consider these matters that I have raised?

• (1610)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, from my standpoint that is the most constructive observation that I have heard in this house for a long time, and if any senator wishes to propose that the matter be referred to the Standing Rules and Orders Committee, to bring some sense, order and propriety into the way in which we conduct this Question Period, I for one will be glad to support it. I am positive that we can come to a better way of doing things than what we have now, and I thank my friend for raising it. I support it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Standing Rules and Orders Committee is one of two committees that we have that are entitled to initiate matters, studies and reforms on their own initiative without reference from the Senate. I certainly understand the concern that Senator Everett has expressed today. As a member of that committee, of which he is also a member, if he wishes to suggest that the committee initiates such a study, which it is entitled to do—it would save our putting anything on the order paper here—I know that I will support him and that other members of the committee will support him.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the chairman of the committee is here and he can certainly tell us if his committee is ready to do that.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, in light of the unanimity shown by the Leader of the Government and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, I ask the Chairman of the Standing Rules and Orders Committee whether he would consider such an examination and report to the Senate.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have listened to the Question Period today and for many days previously—both, I might say, before the change of government and since the change of government. I believe it might be a useful matter for the committee to review, and I will certainly bring the matter before the committee. Those members who are present in the chamber today will have heard the debate, and I will see to it that copies go to those members of the committee who are not here. At our next meeting we will see if the matter can be studied.

Senator Flynn: The honourable senator could send copies of the proceedings of yesterday and those of Tuesday of last week. He would then have an excellent example of how not to proceed with Question Period.

Senator Frith: Everyone will have their pet peeves.

EMPLOYMENT

LONDON, ONTARIO—STATUS OF CN COMPUTER EXPRESS TERMINAL

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government regarding London, Ontario. It was announced last week that approximately 75 jobs would be lost in that city. In the spring of 1984, Dr. LeClair, chairman of the board of CNR, met with the city controllers and the mayor. I attended that meeting, and at that time he suggested that there would be a commitment by CNR to build a computer express terminal in the city of London, Ontario, which would create approximately 50 jobs. With the recent sale of En Route Express, will that commitment be maintained, or will those jobs be lost, as well as the 75 that were announced last week? Can the Leader of the Government provide me with any information?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not certain whether I have any information before me that would enable me to answer the question immediately. After casting my eye over the very extensive notes that I have been given, I cannot see this point mentioned. I will have to take the question as notice.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Turner: Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government knows, seniority governs on all railways in Canada; so if workers are transferred from Moncton or Montreal to various districts in Canada, no matter where they go, sooner or later some of the younger employees in that terminal have to go out on the streets. So, it is a serious proposition. We all realize that the business is reduced, but surely to goodness they can rationalize in a far more humane manner than they are doing and have been doing for the past five or ten years on the CNR, a government-owned operation.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

TRANSPORT

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT FERRY—DELAY IN
COMMENCEMENT OF 1986 SEASON

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 18 last by the Honourable Senator Bonnell regarding Transport—Northumberland Strait Ferry—Delay in Commencement of 1986 Season.

(The answer follows):

Over the years, uncertainty has existed about the start-up of the Northumberland Ferry Service. Records indicate that since 1972, when the service commenced May 11, start-up dates have ranged from April 14 in 1981 to May 22 in 1983 due to a labour dispute.

The selection of May 1 has been adopted after careful consideration of several factors including those of a budgetary nature. Any impact in instituting a sure start-up date for service May 1st is mitigated by the fact that the constitutional service between Borden and Cape Tormentine has sufficient capacity to reasonably meet all traffic requirements to the island well into May.

TERRORISM

TOKYO SUMMIT STATEMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY RE
LIBYAN NATIONALS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 7 last by the Honourable Senator MacEachen regarding Terrorism—Tokyo Summit Statement—Government Policy re Libyan Nationals.

(The answer follows):

Canada has consistently advocated the discussion of international terrorism in the Summit context. This has occasionally been a minority view and we were pleased that this year the Summit not only discussed the subject, but issued a strong declaration on it. The Summit "Statement on International Terrorism" is not to be seen as a victory for one or another country, but as a success for the Summit process. The Canadian Government acknowledges that it has continued to try to be in the forefront of those working for effective counter-terrorism in the Summit process. As a follow-up to the Summit, Canada is working closely with other members of the Seven in the group of officials known as terrorism "experts" to implement the several important provisions of the Statement.

As to Libya, on January 10, 1986, in response to the attacks on the airports at Rome and Vienna in December, 1985, the Prime Minister issued a statement outlining Canada's concern at Libyan support for extremists and outlining measures to limit our bilateral relations with Libya. These measures taken against Libya were concrete actions to signal that the people and Government of Canada would not condone terrorist activity. (Several other countries, including those of the European community, announced similar measures of their own just before the Tokyo Summit some months later.)

As a general principle, Canada will not take any action that weakens the measures of other countries directed towards Libya. For our part, all Libyans entering Canada are already subject to stringent security checks and visa requirements. The approximately 900 students from Libya currently studying in Canada have not presented us with any serious problems. Their fields of study are restricted to less sensitive areas.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT—ENACTMENT OF DIVERSION UNIT LEGISLATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 13 last by the Honourable Senator Guay regarding Canada-United States Relations—Garrison Dam Project—Enactment of Diversion Unit Legislation.

(The answer follows):

On May 12, 1986, President Reagan signed into law a bill authorizing the construction of a modified Garrison Diversion Unit in North Dakota. This law was welcomed by the Canadian government and by Manitoba.

One of the purposes of the law is to "assist the United States in meeting its responsibilities under the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1901". It represents a major breakthrough for Canada as it appears to exclude irrigation using Missouri River water from the Hudson Bay basin and therefore should preclude the transfer of harmful fish and viruses to the Hudson Bay system. The law also requires municipal and industrial water systems in the Hudson Bay basin using Missouri River water to provide adequate treatment to meet the requirements of the Treaty. It also requires that the Sykeston Canal be "located, constructed, and operated" so that no violation of the Treaty would result. The Lonetree Dam and Reservoir remain authorized but cannot be built until consultations with Canada conclude the Treaty would be upheld. These provisions clearly provide a small margin of latitude in the implementation of the intent of the law and, in our view, dictate that the Government be vigilant and monitor future developments.

On May 13, 1986, in the Manitoba Legislature, the Manitoba Minister of Natural Resources, the Honourable Leonard Harapiak, in noting with great pleasure the new U.S. law, said that, while Manitoba still has some concerns about certain aspects of the project, he believed, as does the federal government, that they are technically resolvable. Federal and provincial officials are reviewing a recent U.S. Draft Supplemental Environmental Statement on Garrison and will provide comments on how the Canadian environment can be best protected.

Cooperation on this issue between the federal government and Manitoba has been extensive through the years. During the critical stages in the drafting of the new law in the U.S. there were almost daily consultations between federal and provincial officials to ensure Canadian concerns were reflected.

A copy of the U.S. law was provided to Senator Guay by the Department of External Affairs.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government if he is going to provide an answer to, or attempt to answer, a number of questions I have been asking for months regarding the response of the government to the crisis in the oil and gas industry in western Canada? He said that it is up to the Minister of Energy, and on almost every occasion he has said that the government is holding a watching brief. I wonder if the government has finished watching and has come to a decision, because while the oil prices went down to near $10 and then back up they are again descending very rapidly; and the economic hardship that has been visited on scores of thousands of people has not stopped but is still going on. I plead for an answer so that we can give some indication of whether the government is going to make any provision to help the industry over a rough spot.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the government has taken some action to help the industry over a rough spot. As my friend knows, in the last month or so there have been substantial changes in taxation and other measures that have been of some help. I am not pretending that that is the answer to the question, because it is not. We are facing a very trying situation, not only in oil but also in agriculture—both important industries in western Canada—and the demands that have been suggested as being suitable for the treasury to assume are enormous, and it is very difficult to contemplate what our proper policy would be. I have told my friend on a previous occasion that if I had something to say about the oil business I would say it, but so far there is nothing that I can add to the matter.

Senator Olson: I am sorry to hear that, honourable senators; but I wonder how much longer the Leader of the Government expects people to sit and wait for the government to make up its mind whether or not it is going to do anything. It is not only a matter of making a great charge out of the federal treasury to assist in this. There are a whole lot of other things which my honourable friend has indicated the government is unwilling to do—the same kinds of things that there is a growing demand for in western Canada. If people have been laid off, with no prospect of being hired again at all—and in some cases unemployment insurance benefits are running out—then they are interested in whether the government intends to govern or will continue with a watching brief.

Senator Roblin: The government has the responsibility of trying to balance the various claims against the treasury with the responsibility of running a sound fiscal policy. My friend at some time should remember that in changing the NEP, for example, the government—I am not sure whether there is such a word as “forwent”, but I will use it anyway—forwent several billions of dollars, if my memory is correct, in connection with revenue that it was taking from the industry; and since that time there has been a progressive decrease in the taxes that the industry has been paying. There may be more to come—I do not know—but to say that we have been doing nothing in the two years since we have been in office is quite wrong. We have done a great many things, and we simply have to do the best we can in the circumstances as we find them.

I really do not think that I am going to satisfy my honourable friend, because he is not going to be satisfied with the measures we have taken so far. If we are able to take further measures, we will let him know. He should remember that this question has been referred to the Rules and Orders Committee. The committee will look at it and we should be guided accordingly.

[Translation]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved the second reading of Bill C-86, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill amends the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. As you know, the corporation has undergone great trials and been called upon to contribute handsomely in recent years, more especially as a result of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank failures.

Even before these two bankruptcies the government was considering the problem of revamping legislation governing financial institutions and, as you may recall, on August 23, 1985 it published a Green Paper on the Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions. In addition, the government had already mandated a commission to examine the operations of the CDIC, and this led to the presentation of the Wyman Commission report on June 18, 1985. As you will note, these two events took place before the two western banks went bankrupt.

The Wyman report and the green paper were referred to separate committees of the House and the Senate. More particularly, the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce tabled a report on December 11, 1985. These reports of the committees of the House and the Senate, along with the Wyman Commission report, are now under consideration by the government. Several bills will eventually be introduced to bring financial institutions regulations up to date. Specifically, there will be a bill to change the operational and financial structure of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

For the time being, we have Bill C-86, a purely temporary measure which deals only with the most pressing problems that can be dealt with at this time and covers two aspects of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation: the membership of the board of directors and the prospective reduction of the substantial deficits incurred and accumulated by the corporation, more recently as a result of two bank failures.

As far as the board of directors is concerned, clause 5 provides that “not more than four” appointed members will be added to the membership of the board.

Senator Frith: Does this apply to clause 5?

Senator Flynn: Paragraphs 5(1) and (2) of the act are repealed and replaced by a new section 5. However, the important thing is the addition of “not more than four” new directors, chosen from the private sector. Today, only public servants serve on the board of directors. In addition to the chairman of the corporation, there are the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Superintendent of Insurance and the Inspector General of Banks.

As I said before, the aim of this bill is to appoint “not more than four other members” from the private sector, who may not have a direct interest in the corporation, either by the fact that they are employed by the government or by a government agency, whether federal or provincial. This clause deals with the problem of conflicts of interest.

This concept was among the recommendations of the Senate committee and even in the Wyman report, namely to have people from the private sector in addition to the public servants I have just mentioned. That is the first aspect.

The second aspect is, as I said, reducing the corporation's accumulated deficit. This is to be achieved—and the measure will be retroactive to the month of February, 1986 and remain in effect until March 31, 1987—by tripling the institutions' premiums. In other words, this measure will multiply by three the contributions paid by the companies that are insured—the member institutions. The premium will be raised from 1/30th of 1 per cent of total deposits to 1/10th of 1 per cent of the aggregate of the amounts deposited with each financial institution.

[Senator Roblin.]

Of course this does not do a great deal, for the time being. Although it reduces the deficit, eventually we will have to find a formula that will allow the corporation to operate without having recourse to public funds, without having to ask for a contribution from the government. The problem will be solved by legislation that will substantially restructure both the operations and the funding of this crown corporation.

Honourable senators, once again, the bill is essentially a temporary measure that is not overly complex. It deals with part of the problems but many others remain.

For the time being, Parliament is being asked to at least make this modest contribution.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I put a question to the bill's sponsor?

Senator Flynn: Of course.

Senator Frith: Am I right in believing that the contributions or payments made to the western banks were the main cause of the present deficit?

Senator Flynn: That is my understanding, but I want to be very careful about this. Other financial institutions experienced difficulties, in fact they went bankrupt and they certainly ate into the corporation's funds before.

I have no idea to what extent the corporation may have begun to make payments to compensate for losses incurred as a result of the failure of these two western banks.

If Senator Frith wishes to have more specific information in this respect, I will get it for him. I examined the documents I was given but did not see the amount which might be related to the failure of the western banks.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard moved the second reading of Bill C-109, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to say a few words—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Simard:—on Bill C-109 entitled an Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

First of all I want to say that the debate was very short in the other place, for this is not a very controversial issue. I might add that hopefully it will be given similar treatment here because the government is quite anxious to put a stop to the abuses this tax has led to.

● (1630)

[English]

Let me say that when the Minister of Finance announced a moratorium on the SRTC quick-flip in October 1984, and when he announced the ending of the Scientific Research Tax Credit program altogether in his budget of May 23, 1985, he was much applauded. One of the reasons was probably that the people of this country do not want the kind of abuse of the income tax system that the SRTC program allowed.

Basically, honourable senators, we are not talking about a true tax change; we are not talking about additional taxes: We are talking about a change that will reinforce the intended operation of this SRTC mechanism. The legislation is necessary not to put the relevant taxpayers through the wringer but only to give power to the minister and to Revenue Canada—and Revenue Canada is firm that they only want to be given this power to deal with abusive transactions and only those abusive transactions would be affected. However, at the same time, the amounts of money at risk represent significant sums.

Therefore, honourable senators, these amendments, as I said, do not change the intended application of the Part VIII tax as approved by this house in 1983 nor, as I already mentioned, are they the subject of any difference of opinion in this regard on either side of the house in the other place or, from what I can see, in this chamber, either.

[Translation]

These amendments should therefore have the support of the Senate, for they are in line with the objectives sought when Part VIII of the Income Tax Act was adopted in 1983.

[English]

Honourable senators, to go back to the purpose of the original legislation, let me say that Bill C-109 relates to the controversial Scientific Research Tax Credit program which was introduced by the previous government and which was designed to allow corporations to transfer the benefit of tax deductions and credits to outside investors. A special tax equal to the SRTCs sold is payable by corporations which have utilized this measure and is refundable as the corporation actually performs research and development. As we know, this tax is provided for in Part VIII of the Income Tax Act and is payable 30 days after the end of the month in which the SRTC certificates are sold. Thus, honourable senators, the intention of the Part VIII tax is to protect the government from corporations which would drain the public purse without actually doing any research and development. I am one who agrees with the purpose behind these provisions, and I am happy to be discussing it here today.

However, honourable senators, the original intention to allow and favour research and development has been undermined by recent and conflicting case law. Notwithstanding the fact that Part VIII tax is payable within 30 days after the end of the month in which an SRTC certificate is issued, a court decision has held that the tax cannot be collected as it becomes due, but, rather, may be collected only after the corporation has filed its income tax return for the year in which the SRTC certificate was issued. This could be well after the corporation's year end and, in fact, in most cases has been long after the year end of some corporations since, as we know, a corporation has six months to file its return.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I do not need to recall the abuses this program brought about, which resulted in its being abolished in the budget tabled in May, 1985. I want, however, to remind the Senate that the transitional tax break provisions implemented following the removal of that program allowed for some scientific research tax credits until the end of 1985. I suggest it is essential that Bill C-109 be adopted very quickly, so that the Government will not be forced to reimburse taxes collected under Part VIII and which could prove difficult to collect later on.

[English]

As I have mentioned already, substantial losses are at stake, and on this point I would like to add that I believe that in the absence of these amendments $225 million of Part VIII tax previously collected as the result of 576 audits—mainly by legal action, seizing assets or accepting security—may have to be refunded by Revenue Canada. In addition, Revenue Canada cannot proceed with collection of 866 additional assessments now being monitored, nor can assessments be issued for approximately 100 additional SRTC designations received since the court decision.

Honourable senators, in addition, the amendments in this bill also exclude the Part VIII tax from the taxes-in-dispute legislation contained in the Income Tax Act, which measures were passed by this house not so long ago. You will remember that the taxes-in-dispute legislation was introduced as one of the first acts of the present government in order to protect taxpayers who have legitimate disputes with Revenue Canada as to the amount of regular income tax owing. However, these provisions are not appropriate, we maintain, in the case of the Part VIII tax which merely offsets credits already issued by the corporation and which credits the government is bound to honour.

Therefore, Bill C-109 ensures that corporations cannot delay the recovery of Part VIII tax by the simple act of filing a notice of objection to an assessment. However, Revenue Canada's practice is to collect Part VIII tax during the course of a corporation's taxation year only when it has reason to believe that the SRTC funds will not be expended on research and development. Accordingly, the provisions in this bill will in no way hamper the business operations of legitimate research and development performers.

Honourable senators, I would like now to say a few words on the subject of retroactivity. The amendments proposed in this bill are not retroactive but are effective for assessments made after March 28, 1986, the day on which these proposals were announced by the Minister of Finance. Nevertheless, in cases where government funds are at risk, new assessments can be issued and Part VIII taxes collected as soon as is appropriate in the circumstances.

In closing, honourable senators, in my opinion there is no need to dwell on the abuses that have been reported on this program. It is for this reason that the SRTC was discontinued in the May 1985 budget.

● (1640)

I may mention that the Auditor General at one time questioned the cost, or pointed out the cost of this program or of the old program. It had been estimated that the cost to the government would be $200 million. It has reached now, at the best estimate, $3 billion of which $500 million may not be collected if the loopholes in this program are not closed. So, it was a good program, but as the Auditor General said, it was costly, and it was open to abuse.

Nevertheless, under the transitional relief provisions, it was possible for some SRTCs to have been issued up to the end of 1985. For all of these reasons, I believe, and we believe on this side, that it is imperative that Bill C-109 be implemented quickly in order that the government not find itself in a position of having to refund taxes collected under Part VIII which may be in danger of not being subsequently collectable.

So, honourable senators, that is what I had to say on this bill, and I would be pleased with early passage and with your co-operation in passing this bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Barrow, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 5, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

[Translation]

VISITORS IN GALLERY

REPRESENTATIVES OF REPUBLIC OF RWANDA

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like to draw your attention to the presence in our gallery of Lieutenant Colonel Bem Ndindiliyimana Augustin, Minister of Youth and the Co-operative Movement of the Republic of Rwanda, accompanied by His Excellency Nsengiyumva Joseph, Ambassador of the Republic of Rwanda.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

THIRTY-FIRST TO FORTIETH REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

The Hon. the Speaker, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented reports of the committee approving the budgets of the following committees:

31st	Standing Rules and Orders;
32nd	Fisheries;
33rd	Agriculture and Forestry;
34th	Foreign Affairs;
35th	Legal and Constitutional Affairs;
36th	Social Affairs, Science and Technology;
37th	National Defence (Special);
38th	International Relations (Special Joint);
39th	Regulations and other Statutory Instruments (Standing Joint); and
40th	Official Languages, Policy and Programs (Standing Joint).

(For text of reports, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

[English]

He said: Honourable senators, when shall these reports be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that these reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

May I be permitted the parenthetical comment that these are the long-awaited budgets. I believe that we now have budgets for all of our committees. There are a couple of items on the order paper that have not been dealt with because we have been awaiting these reports. We would like to have a look at this situation between now and the next sitting so that next week we can approve the reports and put our committees in full funds rather than three-twelfths funds.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND ATLANTIC ACCORD IMPLEMENTATION

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-94

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-94, intituled: "An Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on off-shore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Doody advised me that he would be making this motion and gave me a very short and persuasive reason why. Perhaps he would like to put that reason on the record.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, last evening the Energy, Mines and Resources Committee met to study the subject matter of Bill C-92 which deals with amendments to the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and the repeal of the Canada Oil and Gas Act. We ascertained from the officials who were at the meeting that the bill is closely related to the content of Bill C-94. It was felt that in the interests of time and efficiency the committee could study both bills at the same time and have the minister appear and explain both of them together to us as soon as possible.

Senator Olson: That was short, but not persuasive.

Senator Doody: Down, boy!

Senator Petten: I am persuaded.
Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 10, 1986, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

PRIME MINISTER'S WIFE—ALLEGED NON-DECLARATION OF GIFTS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate relating to the Prime Minister's wife. I want to preface my remarks by saying that I count myself among the legion of her admirers, and I hope that she will use the Senate to deal with a statement or an allegation that has been made that I just do not believe—or, if it is true, then it cannot be dishonourably so. In fact, I consider Mrs. Mulroney the only thing that helps to make bearable the existence of a Tory government.

The allegation has been made that when Mrs. Mulroney returned from a recent trip some gifts were not declared on the customs form. It is said that she received two cultured pearls, a beautiful and expensive Japanese vase, a beautiful and expensive Korean vase and a tea set. I hope that Mrs. Mulroney will use the good offices of the Leader of the Government in the Senate to explain away these allegations and convince us that they are false. In fact, I offer an answer that she might give. She might send us a little tape recording of the song (where-upon the honourable senator crooned):

Take back your vase,

Take back your pearls,

What makes you think that I was one of those girls?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: You have a great voice.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is clear to me that the wife of the Prime Minister needs more friends like the gentleman who has just sung. I think I shall let her answer that question herself.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, in all candour and charity, more and more this so-called retaliatory action against the United States appears to be a frenzy of masochism. We read in the newspaper—and I have a question!

Senator Frith: He was watching you, Jacques.

Senator Doody: You should have kept us in suspense.

Senator Perrault: I happened to see the Honourable Senator Flynn glowering across the way, and I wanted to assure him that there is a question at the end of the road.

Senator Flynn: It is always at the end of the road.

Senator Perrault: We now have the truth because of the candour we have recently come to expect from the Right Honourable Joe Clark. He said that Canadians are going to pay the cost of the new tariffs imposed on the United States. He said that Canadians will pay higher prices as a result of the federal government's decision to impose retaliatory tariffs on selected U.S. imports.

● (1410)

However, my question is this: Unknown to most Canadians is the fact that we are also retaliating against other nations in the world. Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us today about the other nations which will be caught in the net of this so-called retaliatory action? In fact, honourable senators, Korea, Taiwan and Japan are also suppliers to Canada of components for computers, and they are caught in the same net. I would like the Leader of the Government in the Senate to explain to us what action has been taken by these other nations which would justify the imposition of this kind of tariff on components that Canada imports from them. Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to follow.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that 91 per cent of the computer parts are sourced in the United States, and 88 per cent of the books affected are sourced in the United States also, so that indicates where the burden of these measures falls.

However, as I said the other day, we are obliged to make no exclusions because even though some of them may not come under certain aspects of GATT, nevertheless, generally speaking, there is no room for us to discriminate. Therefore these measures have been taken in the way that they have.

Senator Perrault: So are we to assume, then, that the innocent are caught with the so-called guilty in these measures that have been taken against the United States?

In view of the admission of the Right Honourable Joseph Clark that Canadians will pay these higher prices as a result of this decision, can one assume that following this line of chop logic, the next time this happens, the government will raise income taxes in order to punish our trading partners, because all we are doing in this case—and this will endure the closest analysis—I note the Honourable Senator Flynn is laughing; perhaps he finds taxation laughable.

Senator Flynn: No, no; your reasoning is always laughable.

Senator Perrault: But as I stated yesterday, the fact is that it is yet to be demonstrated by this government what adverse effect this measure will have on the United States.

I spoke with one of our shingle producers in British Columbia this morning, honourable senators, and he said that there is an almost universal reaction from customers in the United States that they are going to go to alternative roofing products. If that is the case, how will the Americans be punished in any sense for the kind of arbitrary action which they took? We still have not had that reply, and I earnestly seek that information from the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Which question do you want answered?

Senator Roblin: I think my friend's question was whether he could expect some action in the field of income taxes as part of our policy in this matter, and the answer is no.

Senator Perrault: It is quite logical.

Senator Roblin: I have said on a number of occasions that no one benefits from protectionism; everyone suffers, and there is no doubt about that in my mind.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, we have yet to hear from one government spokesman a statement that would demonstrate in any meaningful way how the Americans are going to pay for this action. Canadians are paying this extra $80 million in revenue, as we are told by the Minister of Finance. The Americans say that it will have no effect at all on their export sales to Canada. How are we putting any pressure on them at all to modify their policy if they are not suffering?

Senator Roblin: I think I have answered that question two or three times before.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am confident that he will give me a straightforward answer, either today or as soon as possible, especially as I can hardly be said to have bothered him with questions since I became a member of this chamber.

Senator Flynn: Both your appetite and your voice are in good shape again!

Senator Hébert: In fact, this is my first one!

My question is of course about a subject of particular concern to me,—no, it's not about Katimavik!—as it should be to all senators who care the least bit about the culture of Anglophones and Francophones in this country.

Like everybody else, since the “shakes and shingles” affair I have been rather embarrassed at the strongly worded exchanges between the U.S. economic giant and the poor relation that we are. But what I found not so much embarrassing as positively outrageous is that the government, with its improvised reprisal action, has decided to focus on a product that is different from ordinary products, namely, books. Despite the fact that our French and English culture must protect itself against the pervasive influence of large French-speaking or English-speaking countries, I have always defended the principle that custom tariffs should never restrict the free circulation of ideas between countries—

Senator Flynn: Question. If you want to make a speech, you should ask leave—

Senator Hébert: Yes, I heard you say that before, but since you are hardly one to respect the rules, I suggest I be allowed to abuse this one for a while—

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: You don't know the difference!

Senator Hébert: Enough said. Now for my question.

Overall, the government's recent action will cost Quebecers alone $2.6 million and will make it even harder for them to have access to books that are already very expensive, and to certain periodicals imported from France. Public libraries, distributors, bookstores and above all, the Quebec consumer will suffer.

[English]

Can the Leader of the Government tell me why sanctions have been imposed on France, which has nothing whatsoever to do with the shingles affair, except for the fact that it happens to be a signatory to the GATT multilateral trade agreement?

My second question is this: Out of respect for the principle of allowing the free circulation of ideas among nations, and in order not to make it more costly and more difficult for English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians to have access to books, which are essential cultural tools, does the government intend to take books and magazines off the list of goods targeted for economic sanctions?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think I can at least give my friend an answer that will half please him by telling him that this new regulation does not affect literature printed in the French language.

Senator Steuart: That's even worse!

Senator Argue: The best comment is, “No comment!”

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate, because of his long and, I presume, abiding interest in the Bank of Canada rate, whether or not it increased by one third of one per cent today.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not know, honourable senators. The Bank of Canada rate goes up and down on a regular basis, and one never knows where it is going to land.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is a new admission. The Leader of the Government knows that the bank rate is announced at 2 o'clock every Thursday. When he sat on this side of the house—and he has more facilities at his disposal now—he came into the house right after 2 o'clock knowing how much it had changed. I am amazed to hear that he does not know what has happened to the interest rate today. I can give him the new rate, but I would not want that to be an official declaration—I would want that from the government. But, if it did go up by one third of one per cent today, I wonder if he—

Senator Flynn: Coming from you, how can it be official?

Senator Olson: I should have said "accurate".

Can the Leader of the Government give us the justification for increasing the bank rate today when the Bank of Canada reported that it took advantage of the relative strength of the Canadian dollar last month to pay off a large chunk, whatever that means, of the money that the government borrowed last winter to defend the dollar? What, therefore, is the justification for raising the rate today adding to the interest service costs which, no doubt, will be reflected in the rates most Canadians pay when they borrow money?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend reads the financial pages, he will find that for every variation in the market all kinds of people rush in with reasons, some of which are unconvincing and some of which, perhaps, might have a scintilla of truth.

I am not sure whether I am a competent enough surveyor of the market to give my honourable friend an explanation.

But what they are saying now is that it is related to recent movements in the Canadian dollar, which movements have been somewhat indecisive.

Senator Olson: What the Leader of the Government has said is nonsense. The Leader of the Government knows very well, because he used to express and articulate himself very well, that the Bank of Canada increases its rate to strengthen a weakening dollar and, indeed, for all of the consequences that we know, such as attracting money to Canada because of a higher interest rate. But it seems to me that it is simply penalizing people who are caught in floating interest rates to put that rate up when they admit that they are able to pay off past loans because the dollar is so strong.

Why doesn't the Leader of the Government show all of the expertise that he used to try to demonstrate in these international market situations and tell us why the government is doing this, because it is costing some people a lot of money that they can ill afford to pay.

● (1420)

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend has demonstrated his interest in the matter.

Senator Olson: I may have demonstrated my interest, but I did not get an explanation as to why the government is supporting this kind of action, and that was the nub of the question I tried to ask.

Senator Roblin: Well, my friend knows that the Bank of Canada is the body responsible for these measures.

Senator Olson: Your friend also knows that the Bank of Canada is responsible to the government for the action that it takes.

Surely the Leader of the Government can tell us why they are increasing interest rates at the same time that the strength of the dollar relative to other international currencies is also increasing.

Senator Roblin: The Bank of Canada operates in an independent manner. If the government wishes to give instructions to the bank, as it well may do, it has to do so in writing; it has not done so on this occasion.

Senator Olson: Then the government endorses this kind of action; I guess that is how you can take it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN
TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: I would like to ask a belated supplementary as I may have misunderstood the answer of the Leader of the Government to my previous question. I think he said that books and periodicals from France would not be affected by the action of the government. Is this true? I am not questioning what he says. What I want to know is this: Since when has he been certain about that?

As recently as this morning at 11 o'clock, the Quebec bookselling industry was extremely worried after hearing this piece of news yesterday. I would like to know since when exactly the Leader of the Government has been sure that books and periodicals from France will not be affected by the government action?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have received advice from the Department of Finance that that is the case, that materials, books or periodicals in the French language are not included in the measure.

Hon. D.G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I have heard what the Leader of the Government has said and I have heard what Senator Hébert has said. I find it unbelievable!

My first question is: Would books printed in English, for example, coming here from Great Britain have the duty imposed on them?

Senator Roblin: I'm afraid so.

Senator Perrault: Oh, my God!

Senator Steuart: So, are you telling me that the government has discriminated not geographically but linguistically, in that books printed in French come in here free of duty and books printed in English do not? Can you imagine what would happen if it were the other way around? Senator Hébert and every French Canadian in this place would be up in arms in their places and screaming to high heaven. What kind of reverse discrimination is this? Can you answer that question?

Senator Roblin: Any form of protectionism, in my mind, is objectionable, and this is no different from any other.

Senator Steuart: This is even more objectionable. We have two standards. If the book is printed in French there is a duty, and if it is printed in English there is no duty. Is that the truth?

Some Hon. Senators: It's the other way around.

Senator Steuart: In French there is no duty, but in English there is, is that the case?

Senator Roblin: My friend is right on that.

Senator Steuart: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government, as a non-francophone Canadian: On behalf of the Government of Canada, is he not embarrassed by this reverse discrimination? Because I am.

Senator Roblin: I am embarrassed by the whole process starting with the tariff on shakes. I think this thing should never have started. Once it starts, we get into difficulties of all kinds and this is certainly one of them.

Senator Steuart: Now it has started, you have escalated it by doing this. If you had said that all books would have a duty on them, I think it would have been bad enough, but now you say to English Canada—75 per cent of Canadians: "If you want to bring books in that are printed in English, you cannot do it unless you pay this duty." You have said to francophones that they can bring these books in without paying duty. That is pandering to a minority. That is one of the problems we have, and the Leader of the Government and I, coming from western Canada, know it. We support the idea of one Canada and the principle of no discrimination.

I fought discrimination against the French language, as did my honourable friend, and now we have discrimination against the other language, and I think that is a bloody disgrace.

Senator Roblin: The trouble is that the measure is aimed at the United States where these particular periodicals and textbooks come from. They supply 88 per cent of them. I do not like the situation any more than my honourable friend does.

Senator Steuart: I buy all kinds of books that we import from Great Britain. Now we are also discriminating against Great Britain in terms of books that are printed in English and imported into Canada.

I have great sympathy for the leader's position, so I will not pursue this.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, there is another aspect to this matter on which the Leader of the Government may wish to enlighten us.

As we know, Bill C-96 has attracted a good deal of criticism in university circles by reason of the fact that provincial governments will not be able to meet the financial requirements of the universities as adequately as they might if the government had not introduced Bill C-96.

As Senator Steuart has suggested, many Canadians, particularly Canadian university libraries, make purchases of books published by distinguished British presses such as Oxford, Cambridge, Donald and Nelson. The Leader of the Government has let us know that he has been informed by the Department of Finance on this matter. Is it correct that purchases by university libraries will be exempt from the duty which has recently been imposed?

Senator Roblin: It is correct to say that books which can be described as textbooks and educational material are excluded from this measure. If my friend has a definition he would like me to deal with in connection with this matter, I will try to get a more definite statement for him. Generally speaking, educational books are not included.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: The Leader of the Government answered the question on the GATT rules indicating that we could not discriminate geographically under those rules as we are a member of GATT and are bound by those rules even though these actions are outside of the GATT rules. Does that mean that under the GATT rules we can discriminate linguistically?

Senator Roblin: I cannot answer that particular question. The point as to whether or not these have to be universal in the sense that I am using it, namely, in one language, was dealt with by the Minister of Finance yesterday, and he has stated that these matters have to be dealt with on a universal basis.

My friend asks me: Why are the French publications excluded? I will try to ascertain the answer to his question.

Senator Flynn: Does he suggest they should be included?

• (1430)

Senator Everett: No. The suggestion is that we cannot discriminate geographically. I understood that what government was trying to do was to take a rifle shot at the United States. Now, it is saying that under the GATT rules it cannot do that; the action has to be non-discriminatory. But it is also saying that we can discriminate linguistically, under the GATT rules. I think it would be worth while making an inquiry as to which aspect is correct.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, when the Leader of the Government is seeking that information, would he also find out whether books printed in Ukrainian, Polish or German are also discriminated against? If what he says is true, I would hope that every member of this chamber who is francophone would rise and protest in the same way I should hope that I would get up and protest if only English language materials were exempted and French language materials were discriminated against. I should hope that in such a situation we would all rise in our places and be as outraged as I am now.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, can the government leader tell us whether there is an expiry date set for these tariffs?

Senator Roblin: Not that I know of, honourable senators.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, for the second reading of the Bill C-109, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act".—(Honourable Senator Barrow).

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Simard for his very clear explanation of the purpose behind the proposed legislation covered by Bill C-109.

As he explained, it is first to enable Revenue Canada to proceed with collection procedures which the department felt it had the right to do but which were questioned. In two different court cases the decisions were evenly split; one for Revenue Canada saying that it had the right to collect Part VIII tax within 30 days after the end of the month in which the scientific research tax credit certificate is issued, and the other decision saying it may only be collected after the corporation has filed its income tax return for the year in which the SRTC certificate was issued.

If all of the SRTC projects were legitimate and had been carried out as represented, there probably would have been little difficulty in this latter procedure. However, as well intended as the program was—and it had the support of both sides of this chamber—the enormity of the abuse was apparently not foreseen. In that respect, I will quote the Deputy Minister of Finance in his response to a question concerning the lack of adequate safeguards. He said:

In retrospect, we ought to have had tougher controls. I think that is the real issue here. We ought to have had tougher controls on the program than we anticipated and in that respect I suppose officials are responsible for not recommending to ministers who in turn recommend to Parliament that we have tougher controls.

The second basic thrust of Bill C-109 is probably warranted when one considers the apparent degree of abuse that surrounded the marketing of SRTC credits. However, it might also be viewed as a change in policy vis-à-vis the recent income tax initiative under which taxpayers have been allowed to postpone the payment of assessed taxes until the matter at issue is resolved one way or the other. As a general rule, certain 1985 amendments to sections 164 and 225.1 of the Income Tax Act promoted the theme that unless taxes could be shown by the minister to be in jeopardy of being collected a taxpayer could postpone payment until the notice of objection and appeals procedures had been completed. Clause 2 of Bill C-109 provides an exception from these new rules with respect to the tax liability that arises under Part VIII of the act on account of SRTC credits. While this may mean that certain R&D performers will be required to pay Part VIII tax or post security for such tax prior to resolution of an assessment levied against them, it does ensure that prompt collection procedures can be taken in the apparently large number of cases where no real R&D was being done. Given the SRTC problems, quick collection action appears appropriate to protect the revenue.

● (1440)

In summary, although there appears to be a slight reversal of policy here, I believe that the bill does address a real tax collection problem in a reasonable way. Accordingly, after having reflected on the contents of the bill, I do not consider that this is an issue that warrants detailed study, and I am, therefore, prepared to recommend that the bill be approved without the necessity of its being sent to committee.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Simard speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

[Translation]

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, I do not wish to add any other comment. Senator Barrow gave us the reasons why he was prepared to recommend to his colleagues to give third reading to this bill. I thank him for his consideration and good words. I make the same recommendation to my honourable colleagues.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 10, 1986, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 10, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-91, to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS IN THE SENATE IN BILINGUAL FORM IN COMPLIANCE WITH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I would like to know from the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the documents he has just tabled are in both official languages.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I believe they are, honourable senators.

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I deliberately raise this point of order. On two occasions lately I noticed that, according to the Minutes of the Proceedings for June 3, correspondence was tabled in the English language only; in the Minutes of the Proceedings for May 27, I also noticed that a joint communique by the Minister of the Environment and the Administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency was tabled in the English language only.

The Official Languages Act stipulates that all documents tabled in either House be in both official languages of the country.

I am sure it is not because of lack of goodwill but rather as a result of an oversight that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has tabled documents in English only.

Nevertheless, I insist on my privileges as a senator and I ask that the Official Languages Act be fully respected so that when I want to consult these documents I do not have to ask translators to provide me with a version in my language of work.

I am asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate to table the French texts of the two documents to which I referred, as required by the Official Languages Act.

Senator Roblin: My dear colleague, I will table them with great pleasure.

[English]

CORRECTIONS

ANNUAL REPORT OF CORRECTIONAL INVESTIGATOR—REQUEST FOR TABLING

On tabling of documents:

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, may I make an inquiry of the Leader of the Government concerning the annual report of the correctional investigator? It is long overdue and I understand that it is in the hands of the government. Perhaps the Leader of the Government might facilitate the tabling of that document.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be glad to look into it.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-96 PRESENTED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Seventeenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the subject matter of Bill C-96, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977. Senator Kelly, deputy chairman of the committee, was to have presented the report today, but he was called out of town on a personal matter and he asked me to table the report in his stead.

(For text of report, see Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Your Honour, are we going to decide when that report will be taken into consideration?

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand that it was only tabled. There was no other motion. I had expected that we would be asked to have it printed as an appendix to today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, but that has not been suggested.

Senator Doody: Your Honour, that is the usual form. I tabled the document as it was presented to me; but certainly it is a report that should be taken into consideration, since it is a report of a committee of the Senate. If the chamber wishes, I could rephrase the motion to suit the situation. Certainly, it is my wish and the wish of the committee, through Senator Kelly, that the subject matter be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I have a motion to that effect?

Senator Doody: I so move.

Senator Frith: Perhaps it should have been presented rather than tabled.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, for the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FIFTH REPORT PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Fifth Report of the Committee of Selection respecting the appointment of senators to serve on the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries:

Tuesday, June 10, 1986

The Committee of Selection has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 66(1)(b), your Committee submits herewith the list of Senators nominated by it to serve on each of the following select committees:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

The Honourable Senators Argue, Barootes, Bielish, Fairbairn, Hays, Le Moynes, *MacEachen (or Frith), Marchand, McGrand, *Roblin (or Doody), Sherwood, Sparrow, Steuart (Prince Albert-Duck Lake), Yuzyk. (12)

*Ex officio members.

COMMITTEE ON FISHERIES

The Honourable Senators Bielish, Bonnell, Le Moynes, *MacEachen (or Frith), Marshall, Molgat, Perrault,

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Petten, Phillips, Robertson, *Roblin (or Doody), Rowe, Thériault, Watt. (12)

*Ex officio members.

Respectfully submitted.

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS

Chairman

● (1410)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question with respect to the tariff changes announced by the Minister of Finance on June 2. Among the items on which the tariff was increased was tea in tea bags, which had been allowed into Canada at a free rate and which had, as the minister pointed out, a GATT bound rate of 6 cents per pound. In view of the fact that the tariff increase will bear more heavily on the United Kingdom than on the United States, why did the government choose to raise that tariff item?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to check the facts in this matter.

Senator MacEachen: May I ask the Leader of the Government to check whether it is true that in 1985 Canada imported more than $32 million worth of tea in tea bags from the United Kingdom, and from the United States an amount worth $5 million? Obviously, the impact of this tariff is much greater on the United Kingdom. That is why I want to find out whether those amounts are accurate and, if so, why the government would not reconsider an action which was intended to damage the United States and which is having a much greater impact on the United Kingdom. Not only is the United Kingdom affected directly through the tariff on its exports of tea to Canada, but it is further affected because a portion of the tea imported from the United States is British tea that is re-exported from the United States. I would like some information on that point.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I shall try to get some information for my friend.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, may I return to the announcement of June 2 in which the Minister of Finance also announced tariff changes with respect to books and periodicals? There is an explanation with respect to the impact on the United States, but no detail is given on the periodicals to be covered. I notice that attached to the statement is a notice of ways and means, but there is no reference in that notice to books. I wonder whether that tariff change is to be included in a subsequent ways and means motion, or whether there is some other way in which that tariff change can be made without amending the Customs Tariff.

Senator Roblin: There are certain items, I believe, that do require legislation. The particulars of these items I have not seen, because I have not seen the document covering them, but I can find out.

Senator MacEachen: With respect to the importation of books, I understand that next to the United States the country most affected is again the United Kingdom. I also understand that books have entered Canada from the United Kingdom at a free rate since 1906.

I want to ask again whether the government has considered the side-swipe effect on the United Kingdom, not only with respect to the direct importations but also from the point of view that British books are re-exported from the United States into Canada. While I am on that point—and I think this has possibly been referred to here and elsewhere—is it a fact that while English books are subjected to the tariff, books in Italian and in French are admitted to the country duty free and will continue to enter duty free?

Further, I would like to ask what is the status of books published in Gaelic? Are they also subject to the new tariff? The Honourable Senator Barrotes is waving his hand as if in contempt at the mention of this language. I should remind unenlightened persons such as Senator Barrotes that there is a book publishing industry in the United Kingdom in this language with considerable exportation into Canada.

Therefore, I want to find out whether this tariff relates to books in English only; whether books in French and Italian are still entering duty free, and what the status is of books in Gaelic.

Senator Roblin: Yes, this matter was discussed last week in the chamber and I gave the answer at that time. I can repeat it. The measure affects books written in English only. Approximately 88 per cent of the books that are affected by this tariff come to us from the United States. However, books written in other languages, including Gaelic, belong to other headings in the tariff schedule and, therefore, are not included.

Senator MacEachen: Has any thought been given by the government to doing something in this particular field in light of the unfortunate impact of reversing the free entry of publications from the United Kingdom, which goes back to 1906?

Senator Roblin: I know of no move in that direction, but I will take my honourable friend's suggestion and work on it.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, as a supplementary to that question, I asked the question last week about books in English and French, and Senator MacEachen has raised an excellent point. Books in Gaelic, in Irish, in German and in Ukrainian are also imported. This measure by the Government of Canada was a rifle shot aimed at the United States because of what they did to us with respect to shakes and shingles. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate, when he is finding out about all these other things, find out exactly why we are exempting books in French and Italian and why we are imposing duty on books in English imported from England? If books are printed in England in the Italian and French languages, can they come into this country duty free?

Senator Roblin: My understanding is that the tariff item refers to books printed in English only.

Senator Steuart: So, this particular shot aimed at the United States is based on language and is an absolute discrimination against English as compared to all other languages. I must say I am amazed. We just had a French-Canadian senator get up and give you a bad time because something was not tabled in the French language, but I never heard him, or any other French-Canadian senator, say one word about this discrimination, and I think it is a disgrace.

Hon. Jean Le Moyné: I would like to say to Senator Steuart that I agree with the point he has made. I think it is a silly move.

Senator Steuart: Thank you very much.

● (1420)

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. The point raised by Senator Steuart may be a good point, but I do not recall in my seven years in the Senate an English-speaking senator rising in defence of the French language in the Senate.

Senator Steuart: I remind my honourable friend that I made a speech against discrimination against the French language in Ukrainian Place and had 700 Ukrainians who wanted to hang me. I still made my speech in favour of the French language.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on the same point of order. I think the problem lies with the fact that, like alcohol and driving, the two do not mix. Language should not be mixed with tariffs. That is the government's error.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have just one other point. In the release issued by the Minister of Finance, he refers to the fact that certain tariff changes were applied to items that were not bound by the GATT. I have failed to determine from the press release which items on which the tariff has been increased are not bound by the GATT. Can I get some help in finding out what these items are? The minister referred to them in the press release by stating:

—there also is a range of other unbound products in which the trade is not large but which, if duties on them were raised, would make clear to the U.S. administration, the Congress and various interest groups, however small, that yielding to protectionist pressure is not without cost.

One is fearful that the cost, as in the case of tea, is being borne by the United Kingdom and not by the United States. I wonder whether a similar situation might apply to the unbound items in the GATT.

Senator Roblin: I agree with my honourable friend that tariff protection costs; it usually costs both the importer and the exporter. That is why we do not want tariff protection any more than we can help it. That is why we have measures in place now to try to come to some agreement with the United States in an attempt to mitigate this problem.

My friend asks what items are bound and what items are not bound. I will try to find that out for him.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, on Thursday last I asked the Leader of the Government to tell us why the Bank of Canada rate was increased by, I think, 34 points—from 8.58 per cent to 8.92 per cent, if my memory serves me correctly. To say the least, the leader gave me an unsatisfactory answer.

Could the leader give us a satisfactory answer as to why the bank did that in view of the other things the bank did which were completely contrary to taking that kind of action, and also tell us whether the government supports this kind of action at this time?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend can correct me if I am wrong, but my impression is that these rates are set by public auction of treasury bills, or some other financial documents, and that the Bank of Canada takes the rate for those as its basis and makes an adjustment of, I think, 25 basis points. That is the process by which these rates are set, as I understand it.

Senator Olson: I am not sure whether that is the process or not; I am not questioning that.

There does not seem to be any logic in raising the bank rate now when the bank stated the same day last week that it had, in fact, paid off many of the loans that it had obtained from several countries during the winter when the Canadian dollar was under siege and was weakening rather dramatically.

A few days ago the Canadian dollar was so strong—according to the Bank of Canada—that the bank acquired the foreign exchange to pay off many of the loans it had made last winter, but the consequence of changing the bank rate last week by that amount has been the root cause of some longer-term mortgage rates increasing. There are people already hurting because they pay too high an interest rate on their mortgages, and there is no reason in logic that I know of that would cause the Bank of Canada, obviously supported by the government, to raise this rate now, as the Leader of the Government said last Thursday.

I admit that the prime rate has not changed yet, but some of the other mortgage rates have, and the likelihood of the prime rate's changing because of the bank rate's going up by 34 points could have a very profound and deleterious effect on people who are on floating rates.

I would like to hear from the Leader of the Government as to what the logic is behind this. It does not make any sense as far as I can see.

Senator Roblin: The Bank of Canada uses its market judgment when it enters into transactions of this kind—it does it all the time. It has been doing it for years. I can tell my friend that the five-year mortgage rate is down to 10.5 per cent, and that is the lowest that it has been since September of 1978.

Senator Olson: I think the rates mentioned by my honourable friend are not quite up to date; they went up on Friday.

Senator Roblin: Well, they are still the lowest since 1978.

Senator Olson: Well, that does not make any difference. If they are over 10 per cent, then probably they should be around 9 per cent, or 8.5 per cent—if that is where it should be—so that we can stimulate the housing industry and relieve some of the people of Canada who have these mortgages from the exorbitant rates that they have been paying for the last few months. That is the critical point.

I see Senator Barootes over there making funny gestures at me again. I do not know what is troubling him, because I have talked to him many times and I am sure he agrees that we should get these devastating interest rates down.

Now we have the Bank of Canada going contrary to all of the economic indicators that used to motivate them, and I am asking the Leader of the Government, if he does not already know why, to try to find out why the Bank of Canada did this in the face of the other statements that they made respecting the economic indicators that were apparent to them.

Senator Roblin: Not only are mortgage rates at the lowest they have been in a very long time, I can encourage my honourable friend by telling him that housing starts are also up. They are up 27 per cent in the first part of this year as compared to the same period last year.

Senator Olson: The Tories were in last year, too, don't forget that.

Senator Roblin: Well, they were also up a good deal more than they were the year before that. The housing industry is flourishing at the present time.

Senator Olson: That is an interesting comment, but would the Leader of the Government now answer the question? The question was: What is the logic behind changing the bank rate last Thursday by 34 points, which is a very significant amount?

Senator Roblin: Well, I will ask the Governor of the Bank of Canada if he wants to give my friend an answer, and I suspect he will. I might also ask him to explain why it has gone down in previous weeks.

Senator Olson: Well, that is easy; I already know the reason for that.

Senator Roblin: You know all of the reasons.

SCIENCE AND HUMANITIES

FUNDING FOR RESEARCH COUNCILS—IMPLEMENTATION OF BUDGET PROPOSAL

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, buried in the February 26 Budget Speech was an announcement by the Minister of Finance concerning funding for the three major granting councils for science and humanities research in this country.

The proposal was for a matching grant scheme from the private sector to raise funds for those granting councils which would have otherwise been given under other arrangements.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate please tell us if the government has decided how to implement that proposal?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My friend was good enough to let me know that she was interested in this topic, so I have what I think is hot-off-the-press information for her, namely, that a final decision on the rules has not yet been made in spite of the fact that it was advertised in the press as having been a fait accompli. That is not the case, and the government is consulting with the private sector, universities and professional groups, and will continue to do so before a final decision is made. I expect it will be made fairly soon, but it will not be made without consultation with the people I have mentioned.

Senator Marsden: Thank you. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us if that consultation will be in the form of a green paper, or is it not to be a public consultation?

Senator Roblin: I have noticed the report in the press that there would be a green paper, but I do not believe one is intended at the moment.

Senator Marsden: Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate also tell us if the meeting, which began yesterday and is taking place today in Winnipeg, of leading Canadians who are concerned with these issues is part of these consultations?

• (1430)

Senator Roblin: I am quite sure the matter will be raised today if it has not already come up at that meeting.

Senator Marsden: Finally, if I may, the private sector which is concerned with this, the universities and the granting councils, as well as, I would suggest, some officials of the government, seem very uneasy about whether or not this scheme will ever work at all.

Will the government withdraw this scheme before it is implemented if, in fact, it appears that it is not going to work?

Senator Roblin: I do not think the government will withdraw the scheme. We have a good deal of confidence that the private sector will see some advantages in this which will persuade it to continue its substantial contribution to R&D and, indeed, increase it, as the government hopes. I suspect, if we find that does not work, we will have to think of something else, but, for the time being, we think that is the correct course to follow.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REPLACEMENT OF BOARD MEMBERS

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and it arises from a press release by the minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation.

The press release states that three new appointments have been made to the board of directors of the corporation. It goes on to say that one of these people comes from Calgary and two come from Toronto. The bottom part of the press release states that the two persons whose terms have expired are Derek Oland from Dartmouth and Adélarde Savoie from Moncton. The minister then goes on, in a very polite way, to thank them for their services while they were members of the board.

For the information of my colleagues, Derek Oland is known in the Atlantic provinces as one of the most progressive young businessmen in the Atlantic area. He, to my knowledge, has no political affiliations. Adélarde Savoie is a well known, highly respected lawyer from the city of Moncton and is past president of the University of Moncton. However, he has committed the sin of having been a Liberal member of the legislature for a few years when he was about 21 or 22 years of age.

My point is not political; it has to do with the fact that two worthy members of the board of directors of the Canada Post Corporation from Atlantic Canada have been replaced by two members from Toronto and one from Calgary.

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he thinks his party is unable to find in the Atlantic provinces two persons who belong to the political party to which they must belong now in order to have these appointments, to replace those from the Atlantic provinces who are retiring.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I would not agree with my friend that a sine qua non is one's political allegiance; that is obviously not the case, because one can see instances of the appointment of people who are obviously not supporters of the present administration.

Our policy is to try to have widespread representation on the various boards and commissions operating across the country to ensure that not only is language diversity considered, but also sex as well as, in some cases, cultural background. The idea, therefore, is to have a broad distribution.

That is not to say that every board will fit that frame completely, because that is not always possible over the wide variety of government appointments, but that is what we try to do.

Senator Thériault: I should like to point out, honourable senators, that to my knowledge, from reading the names, none is francophone. Apart from that, my point is that this government has again cut the Atlantic provinces adrift. I cannot accept that no one in Atlantic Canada could be found to replace those two appointments on the board of directors of the Canada Post Corporation. I protest in the name of the people of Atlantic Canada.

Senator Roblin: Obviously, I do not agree that the government has set the Atlantic provinces adrift. I think the measures proposed in the last budget with respect to the economic welfare of the Atlantic provinces, both for Cape Breton and for the Atlantic provinces as a whole, are a very good indication of our concern.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN—GRASSHOPPER THREAT IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES— REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR RESPONSE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last Wednesday I raised the question of the federal government's providing 50 per cent of the cost of chemical sprays to deal with the grasshopper infestation. I had written a letter to the Honourable John Wise, and the government leader was kind enough to say that he would take up with the minister the matter dealt with in the letter. He said:

I will attempt to get for him a speedy answer to the letter that he was written to the minister.

Is the Leader of the Government making any progress? Was he able to raise it with the Minister of Agriculture and, if so, does he have a response?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The minister is aware of my honourable friend's concern, but he is not able to give me a reply as yet.

Senator Argue: Is the Leader of the Government aware that George Price, a long-time and very effective reporter on agricultural questions for the CBC, is reported to have spoken to Mr. Wise? I understand that the minister replied to Mr. Price that this problem did not fall within the federal jurisdiction, but if provincial premiers or provincial governments were to request him to act he would be amenable to or considerate of such a request. I have paraphrased the news report, but I believe what I have said is accurate.

Can the government leader say whether or not the response of Mr. Wise is now awaiting a request from the Province of Saskatchewan and the Province of Alberta?

Senator Roblin: I was not aware of Mr. Price's report, but I will check up on it.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT AS MINISTER

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate which also has to do with the Atlantic provinces.

[Senator Roblin.]

I read in a Prince Edward Island local newspaper that there is a possibility that the government will downgrade the Department of the Environment and thereby make the Minister of the Environment a junior minister. He would, therefore, have no power to spend money and would have only an advisory role in this government. That being the case, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would bring to the attention of cabinet my suggestion that the present Minister of the Environment be named the new Minister of DRIE.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am sure the Minister of the Environment has the full confidence of his colleagues in his present capacity.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, he may have the full confidence of most of his colleagues, but he certainly does not have the full confidence of the Deputy Prime Minister. Mr. Nielsen's report says that the position of Minister of the Environment should be downgraded.

However, we in Prince Edward Island have confidence that he is doing the best he can for us, in his present capacity, with the leadership of the government. We would like to see him take on the portfolio of DRIE and thereby help the whole of Atlantic Canada.

Senator Roblin: I understand that the other day in the House of Commons the Deputy Prime Minister denied the allegation now repeated by my friend.

EMPLOYMENT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CN SHOPS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a further question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I also read in the local newspaper that nothing has been done by the Minister of Transport to save the jobs of the eight people in Charlottetown and Borden employed in the maintenance shops of the CN Rail. Those jobs might not mean very much to the economy of British Columbia or Toronto, but they mean $200,000 a year to the economy of Prince Edward Island.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate raise those concerns with the Minister of Transport, on behalf of the honourable senator from Prince Edward Island, in an effort to hold those CNR jobs, as well as the "save-our-shops" jobs in Moncton, New Brunswick?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Last week I made a lengthy statement with respect to the future of some jobs with the Canadian National Railway. I do not think I should repeat that statement.

THE SENATE

REFERRAL OF BILLS TO COMMITTEE BEFORE SECOND READING

● (1440)

Hon. John M. Godfrey: I have a question for the chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. As senators will recall, two weeks ago His Honour made a ruling on whether or not a bill could be referred to a committee before second reading. By reason of his ruling, it seemed to be presumed that such a referral would kill the bill. I am not so sure that that is the case, and I think at one point I suggested that we might have a clarification of the ruling from the Speaker. However, I later suggested that this is the sort of thing which really should be decided by consensus—and I must say that I thought we had reached a consensus on this matter before—and that in any event, if there is any doubt and if a certain procedure is felt to be desirable, then it should be considered by the Rules Committee, which can bring back a report and decide what to do on the merits.

I must point out that in this particular case the only bills regarding which there is difficulty in terms of their referral to committee before second reading are those bills introduced in the first instance in the Senate, because we already have a procedure whereby the subject matter of a bill can be referred to a committee even before the bill reaches the Senate, and that committee can even recommend that the bill be given second reading, as was done recently by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on the Canadian Arsenals Bill.

My question to the chairman of the Rules Committee is: Will his committee consider this whole matter and come back with a recommendation to the Senate as to what we should do?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my reply to this request is the same as those given to previous requests along this line. I will ensure that copies of Senator Godfrey's comments are sent to the members of the committee and that the question will be put to them as to whether they wish to study this matter further.

AGRICULTURE

FARM DEBT LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to direct another question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The Minister of Agriculture indicated as long ago as before Christmas of last year that the government would be introducing legislation dealing with the farm debt situation. At one point he said that such legislation would have teeth in it.

My question is: Can the government leader give any indication at all as to the program of the minister or of the government with regard to introducing what I believe to be very necessary legislation? There are still many foreclosures going on and many farmers are in great distress. I think they are looking for a positive response from the government.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the minister has every hope of introducing a bill on this matter before this particular session of Parliament comes to an end.

Senator Argue: Can the minister give me any indication whether this bill would be in response to the request made by the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba, the Honourable Bill Uruski, for federal legislation which would assist the Manitoba government in its own debt legislation? The provincial minister was talking more specifically about federal legislation that would permit a judge to consider a request for a hearing in the case of foreclosure proceedings, legislation that would give that judge the power to delay such proceedings until he received a report satisfying him that a satisfactory report had been received by a Manitoba debt review committee.

It seems to me that it is quite a minimal request for a province to ask the federal government to provide judges with some minimum power, not to write down legislation and not to change the interest rates but merely to delay proceedings in a given case until that judge has had a chance to look at all the facts.

Senator Roblin: I think we will have to wait until the bill is available before we can comment on its contents.

Senator Argue: Can I take it from that that the minister does not have any idea whether the provisions of the bill might cover this situation? I know that he cannot disclose anything at this stage, but is there a possibility that that bill can address itself to this question?

Senator Roblin: My friend knows that I cannot really forecast what will be contained in bills. We have to wait until they are produced.

NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

ADVISORY COMMITTEE—ORDER FOR RETURN

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, on May 1 this house adopted a motion to the effect that there be laid before it a return showing the names, addresses and dates of employment of those persons who are presently members of the Advisory Committee to the National Postal Museum. Thus far, the report has not been tabled. This is a small—some would even say trifling—matter, but more than a month has passed since the request was made and it merely requires someone in the department concerned to list the names of seven or eight people. Honourable senators, I do not like to think that this delay is indicative of the attitude of departments of government towards orders of this house.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I agree with my friend that we should do our best to get him an answer and to get it quickly. I will do my best to do that.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In the light of his reply to Senator Hicks, I wonder whether he could hasten a reply to a written request of mine which was tabled on April 3, 1985—that is now some 14 months ago—to which no reply has yet come forward. Could he hasten that reply?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have asked my staff to put a blitz on all outstanding questions. It is our hope that we can produce the required answers by the end of this month. I cannot promise that that is going to happen, but we have been doing our best.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have one more question on the subject of the tariff measures taken by the Government of Canada. In a recent press release the Minister of Finance stated that the manufacturing clause of the U.S. Copyright Act is to expire at the end of June, at which time it would become inoperative unless extended by legislation. From the press release I draw the conclusion that if the manufacturing clause of the U.S. Copyright Act does expire at the end of June and is not extended, the Canadian government would withdraw the tariff items relating to certain books, periodicals and publications. I really want to know whether my understanding of that is correct. The minister stated:

Should it not be extended,— namely, the manufacturing provision of the Copyright Act,

—we will seek other ways to ensure the integrity of our response to the U.S. action on shakes and shingles.

I conclude that if this provision is not extended at the end of June, we would withdraw our tariff items on books and publications. I should like confirmation or otherwise from the Leader of the Government on that point.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That may be the case, but I do not think that my friend should conclude that that will happen. If there is a discussion between the two governments with respect to this particular matter, it is possible that the provisions of GATT may apply. That question is open. Until we have examined all of the options that might be involved in what is a fairly complicated issue, I do not think that any change in our policy will be made known.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government suggests that I am in error. If I am, I would ask that he explain to me this statement of the government as quoted by the press release:

Should it not be extended, we will seek other ways to ensure the integrity of our response to the U.S. action on shakes and shingles.

If I am in error, what is the meaning of that particular sentence?

Senator Roblin: I think we will have to wait until we find out what the American action is.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators—

Senator Roblin: How many supplementary questions does my honourable friend want?

Senator Frith: As many as are necessary.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I want to ask the Leader of the Government to return to this matter for a moment, because this does not make sense. If we do not take any action on these tariffs even if the manufacturing provision is not extended, what would we do by way of seeking “other ways to ensure the integrity of our response”? I read it as saying that if the manufacturing provision is not extended, the government would then withdraw the tariff items on the books and would seek other measures to ensure that the response to the shakes and shingles measure was maintained in its integrity.

• (1450)

I do not want to press the Leader of the Government further, but I would like him to try to clarify that matter, because I think it would be a good development if the government is saying, “We will withdraw that tariff.” If we received redress by the non-extension of the manufacturing provision, that would be a good thing, because it would remove some of the contradictions that have been highlighted even in today’s Question Period.

Senator Roblin: I have no objection to conveying my friend’s suggestion to the Minister of Finance; but I am not sure that an announcement on policy changes can be made at the present time.

Senator MacEachen: So, I am to conclude that the last sentence, which I have now read twice, is not saying that we would withdraw the tariff provisions if the manufacturing provision is not extended? It is not saying that?

Senator Roblin: It is saying that these are matters that will be considered should certain eventualities develop. They have not yet developed.

Senator MacEachen: It does not say that at all. It says, “We shall seek other ways.” In fact, it says, “We will seek”; it is not even “shall”. It is an expression of determination. It says, “We will seek other ways to ensure the integrity of our response” in the event that the manufacturing provision is not extended. I believe the clear wording supports my interpretation. Perhaps here again the draftsman failed to convey the clear intent of the minister, because the Leader of the Government is saying that if that manufacturing provision is not extended, we will review the situation at that time, but that at this time we do not know, in fact, what we would do. My view is that the wording says that we would withdraw those provisions and seek other measures to take their place in order to ensure that our response has been maintained. But I leave that to the contemplation of the Leader of the Government.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-109, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Simard, for the second reading of the Bill C-86, intitled: "An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act".—(Honourable Senator Godfrey).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, as Senator Flynn pointed out when opening the debate on second reading, this bill deals with two matters. One is the composition of the board of directors of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the other is the question of raising the fees paid by the members.

With regard to the first point, it is interesting to note that the bill provides that the board of directors will consist of the person appointed as chairman, then those holding the offices of Governor of the Bank of Canada, Deputy Minister of Finance, Superintendent of Insurance and Inspector General of Banks, and four independent members appointed by the minister with the approval of the Governor in Council. The same clause says that one of the four independent members of the board cannot be a director, officer or employee of a federal institution or a provincial institution.

I am not sure what that means. It may well be that in the act—I have not yet had an opportunity to look at it—a "federal institution" is defined. If not, I would like to ask Senator Flynn what is actually meant by that provision.

The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee brought out a report last December on deposit insurance, and recommended that the board should consist of a part-time private sector chairman, a president and chief executive officer, and three board members from the federal government, namely, the Inspector General of Banks, the Superintendent of Insurance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Honourable senators will note that the committee did not recommend that the Deputy Minister of Finance be a member of the board.

The committee's report then went on to recommend three board members designated by the provinces, namely, one from Ontario, one from the western provinces and one from the Atlantic provinces. There was no designation of a member from Quebec because that province has its own separate system. The report also recommended industry representatives, namely, one designated by the Canadian Bankers' Association, one designated by the Trust Companies' Association and one designated by the Credit Union Associations. It also recommended two other independent directors.

I should like an explanation from Senator Flynn as to why the recommendations of the committee were not followed, or whether this is just a temporary measure that will be reconsidered when, as he said, in due course there will be another bill brought in.

The other question dealt with in the bill is that of increasing the fees. The fees, in fact, are tripled. Senator Flynn in his speech referred to the fact that the purpose was to reduce the corporation's accumulated deficit.

The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee held hearings on the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and I would like to refer to some of the evidence given at the hearings, first by Mr. Allan Taylor, who was Chairman of the Executive Council of the Canadian Bankers' Association and also President and Chief Operating Officer of the Royal Bank of Canada, but who has since become Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of that bank. Mr. Taylor said:

A third proposal in the Wyman Report, which the banks feel strongly about, is the deficit refinancing proposal. Although this issue has not received much attention in the House Finance Committee hearings currently taking place, we believe that this is a crucial issue which must be resolved. In this regard, we do not consider that the participants in the CDIC should be asked to shoulder any part of the deficit resulting from payments in excess of agreed insurance limits in place at the time recent insolvencies occurred.

The banks recognize their liability within the terms of the CDIC Act. This includes insured deposits up to the $20,000 limit which prevailed when many of the recent insolvencies occurred, and deposits insured up to the $60,000 limit only to the extent that this limit was in place at the time of the failures. In other words, we do not accept liability for losses associated with the retroactive increase in the insurance ceiling from $20,000 to $60,000.

At the following meeting of the committee, Mr. Fullerton, Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, said:

On a final note, we are most concerned over the corporation's existing deficits and the expected increase in that deficit arising from the demise of the Canadian Commercial Bank and, today, the Northland Bank.

Over the years, we have paid into the fund on the basis of a $20,000 insurance limit. Two years ago the government increased that limit to $60,000. It did so retroactively, and then it paid uninsured depositors of failed institutions such as Crown Trust. It is not equitable to expect member institutions alone to repay the resultant deficit. We are willing, of course, to pay our full share but that should not include those payments resulting from political decisions.

The bill is unclear as to whether or not the minister intends to make this measure retroactive. The limit has been increased from $20,000 to $60,000. It is perfectly logical that premiums should triple. It may be that there will be no retroactive effect or, indeed, perhaps that decision has not been taken at this juncture. However, I would like Senator Flynn to tell us what is intended in the bill. Is it intended to have a retroactive effect and to take care of the large deficit resulting from political decisions, and they were political decisions, made with respect to the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank?

• (1500)

I must say that I think that the banks have a very good case here. Personally, I do not think that the measure should be retroactive. I believe that the banks got a raw deal in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank because the government did not adhere to the spirit of the original undertaking. Originally it was believed that they would be ranked with the depositors, but through a technicality the bill did not include the chartered banks. I must say that the banks, in trying to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, acted in a very responsible fashion, much more so than the trust companies which, you may recall, had $39 million worth of debentures that would have been wiped out completely if there had been a failure. Yet they held the government to ransom and exacted a tribute through which they were paid the entire $39 million, which they would not have been repaid if the banks had failed. Of course, though the chartered banks came forward and tried to help, they were not repaid the money they had a right to expect if all creditors were repaid.

I would like Senator Flynn, when he closes the debate, to give us some information on this matter. Subject to that, I do not see any reason why this bill should be referred to committee. We have already considered this whole question, and, as he has pointed out, this bill is only a temporary measure. The increase in fees will only last for another year or so.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, depending on whether Senator Godfrey—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform you—

Senator Flynn: Your Honour, I am merely putting a question to Senator Godfrey. Would the honourable senator like answers to his questions before the bill is given second reading? If so, I shall move the adjournment of the debate until tomorrow, at which time I shall provide the answers. Then, if there is no problem, we can move third reading either tomorrow or Thursday.

Senator Godfrey: I would prefer to have the answers before the bill is given second reading.

Senator Flynn: Then, I should move the adjournment of the debate. Before doing so, perhaps Your Honour should put the question as to whether I am closing the debate by merely adjourning it.

[Senator Godfrey.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in that case, I will save everybody the trouble and move the adjournment of the debate. I shall yield to Senator Flynn tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

THIRTY-FIRST TO FORTIETH REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Thirty-first to Fortieth Reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration presented in the Senate on June 5, 1986.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe it was last Thursday that I mentioned that the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration had managed to complete its consideration of the budgets of the various committees listed in this order. Honourable senators will remember that some of the budgets had been approved by the committee but not by the Senate, and in the meantime any committee that had its budget so approved was entitled to three-twelfths of its total budget.

Since that time the committee has considered all the budgets mentioned, and we are able to recommend to the Senate that the budgets be approved, thereby putting these committees in the position to proceed with their work on the basis of the full granting of the budgets submitted, reviewed and approved by the Internal Economy Committee.

Honourable senators, I move that all these reports be adopted.

Motion agreed to and reports adopted.

THE ESTIMATES 1986-87

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Main Estimates 1986-87), presented in the Senate on 28th May, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Hicks).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I do not know why this order is standing in my name. I have nothing to say.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I can explain. The week before last, Senator Leblanc and Senator Kelly brought this matter forward. Before going to Washington with the Foreign Affairs Committee, Senator Hicks stopped by my desk and asked me to stand the debate in his name because he would be away the following week. That is why it stands in the name of Senator Hicks, because he asked me to do it and I did.

Senator Flynn: He has changed his mind.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, it looks as if I am in default. I shall have to refresh my memory. I shall come prepared to address the subject tomorrow.

Order stands.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders (Membership of Cabinet Ministers on Senate Committees), presented in the Senate on May 14, 1986.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

In doing so, I would like to thank Senator Phillips, deputy chairman of the committee, for presenting the report to the Senate some time ago. The report is really quite simple. It arose out of a request by Senator Godfrey that the committee consider whether or not cabinet ministers should be members of Senate committees. The question is really the independence of Senate committees. The feeling is that cabinet ministers may in some way influence committees and that this would not be a proper practice in the Senate. Under the present situation, there is only one cabinet minister in the Senate. He is the Leader of the Government in the Senate, so it is a slightly different circumstance. I believe that Senator Godfrey's views on the subject go back to the time when there were as many as four cabinet ministers in the Senate.

After very careful consideration, it was the view of the committee that the present practice, which is that the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who is a cabinet minister, and the Leader of the Opposition, who is not a cabinet minister but who represents the official opposition, should continue to be ex officio members of all committees and that we should not change that rule. It is felt to be advisable that the Senate establish as a practice that in future other cabinet ministers not be members of committees. That is the recommendation in the report.

● (1510)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I just want to add a word to what has been said, because I have in mind the interests of senators who, in the unforeseeable future, might find themselves to be cabinet ministers but not leaders in this house. I think Senator Godfrey's original concern went back to the days when Senator Olson, Senator Austin, Senator Perrault and others, perhaps, were holding portfolios, and he had in mind the question as to whether or not senatorial cabinet ministers holding portfolios should be allowed to be members of a committee. I take it that it is the opinion of the committee that that should not happen in the future, and that senators holding portfolios should not be members of committees in any official sense.

However, I want to put in a caveat in favour of Senator Olson, in case he should ever be in the same position as he was formerly with respect to the cabinet, and that is, while I would not like to see him be a member of a committee for the reasons already stated, I stand up for his right to attend the committee. We know that it is the right of every senator, whether he or she is a member of a committee or not, to be there, to attend the committee, to take part in the proceedings, to speak and to have full opportunity to express himself or herself, to state policy and whatever else he or she wants to say, but not to vote. I just want it clearly understood that while I am not opposing the recommendation made to us by the committee at this time, I do stoutly maintain that we should not deprive any senatorial cabinet minister in the future of the right to attend a committee and to do all of those things that I have mentioned, although it is not necessary that such a senator should vote.

Senator Frith: Or move motions.

Senator Roblin: Yes, that is right, or move motions, although I dare say the senator concerned could get them moved if he or she really wants to.

I regard this as being not quite of the essence of our labours here in this house. While I have no objections to the motion as proposed, I defend the right of future senatorial cabinet ministers to go to committees and do the things that they are allowed to do, and I hope that that is clearly encompassed in the resolution that we have before us.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate because I disagree with both the report and with Senator Roblin.

On motion of Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-EIGHTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twenty-eighth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Supplementary Budget of Banking, Trade and Commerce), presented in the Senate on April 29, 1986.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is a supplementary budget of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and is included in the comments I made earlier.

I move the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

TWENTY-NINTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twenty-ninth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Supplementary Budget of Energy and Natural Resources), presented in the Senate on April 29, 1986.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the same comments apply to this order. Again, in our global consideration of the budgets we considered two supplementary budgets, namely, the one that we have just dealt with and this one dealing with the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

I move the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 11, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 2, 1986-87

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-115, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending 31st March, 1987.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if you would agree with the following suggestion. We have before us the bill on the competition tribunal and I believe that the sponsor of the bill, Senator MacDonald (Halifax), is ready to proceed with it. Senator Sinclair and I will be making interventions from this side, and perhaps other senators will also.

The committee to which it is agreed it ought to go for further study before it gets third reading—assuming it gets second reading—is the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. That committee is sitting this afternoon at 3.30, and the minister is going to be there. Honourable senators well know that ministers have quite busy schedules and it is not always easy to get them at the snap of a finger or the drop of a hat.

So, I discussed this with Senator Doody and our suggestion to you, honourable senators, is that we deal with that bill before Question Period. Then, if we give it second reading, and if we send it to the committee, it will be there ready for the minister to discuss.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL BILL

SECOND READING

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 3:

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved second reading of Bill C-91, to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill, in brief, is to maintain and encourage competition in Canada for its positive effect on the Canadian economy. This bill then provides us with the legislative framework necessary to achieve four important objectives.

The first objective is to promote the efficiency and adaptability of the Canadian economy so that it can respond to changing and varying market conditions and, in the process, create new opportunities for employment.

The second objective is to ensure that Canadian firms can compete effectively in world markets and can meet foreign competition in our own marketplace.

The third objective is to ensure that small and medium-sized companies are given a fair chance to participate in the Canadian economy.

The fourth objective is to ensure that consumers can realize the benefits of competitive prices and expanded choices of products and services.

Passage of this bill into Canadian law is important—simply because it will replace legislation that is out of date. The Combines Investigation Act has remained virtually unchanged since its introduction in 1910—76 years ago.

Existing competition law was designed to apply to a turn-of-the-century marketplace, most certainly not the marketplace of today. In those days there were only seven million Canadians and our total exports amounted to approximately $274 million. Today our exports amount to over $90 billion and our population is nearly four times what it was in 1910. Clearly, legislation that is in tune with the contemporary marketplace is long overdue and, I might add, that fact was also recognized by recent and previous governments.

This bill as it now stands is, we believe, a balanced bill. It is balanced because it is not the solitary creation of government; it is the product of a long process that has seen input from virtually every sector of our economy—big business; small business; economists; consumer groups; lawyers; academics; not to mention parliamentarians. Members of the committee and the opposition in the House of Commons all have played an active part in getting this bill to where it is today. It is largely through this process that a good balance has been achieved while addressing such a wide range of needs and concerns.

Honourable senators, Bill C-91 has come a lot further than its predecessors in terms of being written into Canadian law and, I repeat, part of the reason for the success of this bill, no doubt, lies in the reform process built on the work of previous governments and the consultation that took place each step along the way.

I should like to turn to the specifics of the bill. First, the bill will establish the Competition Tribunal which will adjudicate non-criminal competition matters. Its membership will be comprised of judges and lay experts in the area of business, economics and public affairs. This tribunal will deal effectively with complex competition cases in addressing questions concerning the probable effects and implications of various business activities. The concept of this tribunal is based on recognition of the fact that two things have to be addressed: first, to be able to draw on relevant expertise; and, second, to do so in a process that is and appears to be fair, open and independent.

We believe that this tribunal meets both requirements. Its membership will include judges appointed from the Federal Court as well as people appointed from the world of business and economics. To ensure fairness and consistency, the tribunal will be chaired by a judge. Lay appointments will be cleared by an advisory council made up of representatives of big and small business, consumer groups, the legal community and labour. This council will ensure that lay members are impartial and have the necessary qualifications to carry out their duties.

The tribunal will adjudicate, but it will not have the powers now held by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission to, for example, authorize searches, subpoenas and conduct inquiries of its own. On matters of law, there will be an appeal from decisions of the tribunal to the Federal Court of Appeal.

The bill also proposes a basic change in our approach to the questions of mergers and their impact on competition. This change is primarily to consider mergers as falling under the jurisdiction of civil law rather than criminal law as is the case under the present act.

It has been evident for some time that using the criminal law approach to deal with mergers is not appropriate. The principles, procedures and sanctions inherent in criminal law simply do not fit. When we are dealing with mergers and other related practices, we are concerned with day-to-day business transactions that, upon review, may or may not prove harmful to competition. We should not be attempting to put someone in jail or to levy a fine, but, rather, we should be concerned with protecting the public interest by establishing specific rules in keeping with the realities of the marketplace and then by strictly enforcing these rules. Aside from the fact that criminal law does not lend itself to an analysis of the impact of a merger, that approach has proven ineffective.

In criminal law, as I am informed, not only must you prove that a violation has taken place, but you must do so beyond a reasonable doubt. When dealing with the likely future effects of mergers, that can be a difficult task. For example, can it be confirmed beyond a reasonable doubt that a merger or an acquisition will have an entirely detrimental effect on the public? Seen in this context, it is not surprising that in three quarters of a century there has not been a single conviction in a contested merger case.

The new law takes a more effective approach by empowering the competition tribunal to prohibit, or to attach specific conditions to, mergers that are deemed likely to result in a substantial lessening of competition without bringing compensating gains in efficiency. The role of international competition in the Canadian economy will be given much greater recognition in this legislation. In 1910, when the present provisions were consolidated in the current law, Canada was protected in many ways from international competition. But today many of our industries have to face international competition both at home and abroad. With the reformed law, when it decides on the legality of a merger or an acquisition, the tribunal will also take into consideration the role of foreign competitors in the Canadian market.

The proposed act will also provide exemptions for joint ventures that clearly do not lessen competition in research and development, for example, or in natural resource exploration. These types of arrangements are particularly important to the resource sector of the economy. Most joint ventures do not lessen competition but promote efficiency by allowing firms to share the high risk associated with large capital projects. Where such arrangements do lessen competition, the law will enable the tribunal to assess their implications and to prevent them, if necessary. The new law will also require advance notice or pre-notification of mergers involving companies with assets or sales in excess of $400 million. This will enable the legislators to examine the merits or disadvantages of large mergers—those most likely to lessen competition substantially—before they are permitted to take place. That requirement, we are told, is currently found in the competition laws of other nations such as Japan, West Germany, Australia and the United States.

In essence, the merger provisions will give us a law that works, that can be enforced, that protects competition and does not handicap Canadian businesses in international trade. As an aside, we are assured that legislation affecting mergers will be promulgated immediately following Royal Assent.

This bill also contains provisions to deal effectively with the abuse of market power. As it stands now, the act can deal only with the most blatant and serious abuses of market power. The new law recognizes that in a small open economy such as ours, some firms may well achieve market dominance. Thus, it allows those firms doing a better job to continue to succeed while enabling action against firms that abuse their power and prevent or lessen fair and healthy competition. Small businesses—the sector that provides so many Canadian jobs—are particularly vulnerable to this type of behaviour. The new act will serve as an effective deterrent to these practices and will give small businesses the protection and the fair chance they deserve.

In the first place, the clauses in the bill on abuse of dominant position clearly define what constitutes anti-competitive behaviour. As well, we will have a law that can be applied more precisely, enabling us to distinguish between market success based on superior performance as opposed to success built on unfair market muscle. No public interest is served, for instance, by preventing businesses from reducing prices and gaining a larger market share because they have found ways to keep their costs down. However, it is very much in our interest to act against dominant firms that use predatory practices to eliminate competition. For this reason, the new law invites the tribunal to consider whether the practice results from simply superior competitive performance.

Another important aspect of the new law is the way in which it deals with conspiracy designed to lessen competition. Conspiracy remains what it has always been in this country—a serious criminal offence—out the present law is simply not strong enough to deter the real conspirators. It is also so unclear in some areas that it might actually inhibit agreements that would be good for our economy.

This legislation provides penalties severe enough to deter individuals from entering into anti-competitive agreements and, at the same time, does not prevent Canadian enterprises from negotiating desirable agreements to improve their positions in world markets.

With respect to its deterrent value, the new law increases the maximum penalty for conspiracy from $1 million to $10 million, a clear message that conspiracies in restraint of trade simply will not be tolerated. Also, it clears up uncertainties about the criminal intent that is required to prove a case, and “inferred agreements”—that is, the weight that courts will give to circumstantial evidence in such matters.

● (1410)

Other important provisions concern the status of banks and crown corporations. At the moment bank agreements and mergers come under the Bank Act alone, and agent crown corporations are generally exempt from competition law altogether.

Bank mergers and agreements will now be subject to the new legislation and enforcement by the competition law authorities. Also, crown corporations which compete with private business will be subject to the provisions of the act. In order to provide that investigatory clout, the powers to issue search warrants and subpoenas will be vested in the courts. That is seen as the best way to protect individual rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms while, at the same time, providing the tools that are required for effective enforcement.

Finally, in response to one of the concerns which was raised in our pre-study of the bill—I believe by Senator Barrow—the bill gives regulation-making powers to the Governor in Council. The government has ensured that these regulations will be gazetted before they come into force. In other words, affected parties may submit comments before the regulations are promulgated.

Honourable senators, we need this new law to enable us to meet the complexities of the modern marketplace. We need the law to make Canadian firms more competitive both at home and abroad; and we need the law to see to it that Canadian consumers derive the fullest possible benefit from vital and healthy competition. Therefore, honourable senators, I ask that this chamber provide the necessary approval for Bill C-91.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I congratulate Senator MacDonald on his lucid presentation of the elements of this bill. At this stage we are, after all, debating the principle of the bill, and I cannot see any reason why we should not support that principle. I had the experience, before becoming a senator, of prosecuting two cases under the old legislation. I might say that they were not merger cases; so I won them, I did not lose them. I understand there have not been any convictions under the merger sections. They were, of course, prosecutions under the criminal law. The procedure at that time was that someone would file a complaint, or it would come up. The Director of Investigation and Research would look at it and then decide to open a file on it and do investigations, including finally going out and seizing documents to try to prove the case. He would then present a case to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and the Commission would spend a long time studying the matter. But nobody was being charged with an offence at that stage. It was an investigation by the Commission. The Commission would hold hearings and then make a report, I believe, to the Attorney General or the Minister of Justice, who would then decide whether or not he wanted to recommend prosecution—because at that stage, as Senator MacDonald has pointed out, if there were going to be a prosecution, a higher test had to be met. It would be the criminal test of guilt, namely, proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

I believe that part of the reason for putting this legislation under criminal law in the first place was the fact that there was some doubt as to whether the federal government would have jurisdiction under section 91 of the British North America Act, as it then was, to enact this legislation. Constitutionally, the support for the legislation was offered under the criminal law subsection of section 91 as the authority for the federal government to deal with what otherwise might have been considered property and civil rights under section 92, which is within the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the provinces.

All of the points made by Senator MacDonald have been the subject of discussion over the years as areas for improvement of our system. In terms of the scope of the discussions over the last decade, this is only a part. It is one step, and I believe it to be a good step. The questions that were raised in the committee of the other place were raised by witnesses who had particular interests and expertise. There were a number of such questions, and some of them may be raised here. The consultation process has been the subject of discussion in the other place.

I have a note of some of the issues that were raised in the other place. My colleagues can decide whether or not they want to raise them in the committee, or whether or not they have been sufficiently dealt with in the other place. The merger test is new, as is the list of factors with regard to mergers. The merger efficiency defence is, I believe, very new.

It provides that any gains from a merger must be passed on to the consumers. At one time the effect on the consumers, even if it was beneficial, was not a defence, at least not in conspiracy cases. Of course, most conspiracy cases were what was called "price-fixing" cases. As Senator MacDonald has said, you had to prove a conspiracy, which was done by proving that there was agreement. Usually the accused parties did not sit down and write out an agreement saying that they would fix prices. That is why evidence with regard to prices being the same when they tendered or published new lists had to be introduced in court, and counsel would argue that without an agreement there would never have been such a similarity in prices, right down to the penny, as it was in some cases. The test at that time was whether the limitations on competition were undue, and you usually proved it was undue by illustrating the dominance, as Senator MacDonald said, that the accused had over the market and that such action would thus have the effect of "unduly" limiting competition.

Another question about this bill was the relationship with Investment Canada. There was a question about whether the $400 million pre-notification threshold is too high. In other words, whether other mergers should be included under the same jurisdiction. Questions on the appointment process to the tribunal were raised on the other side. I believe we have pre-studied this bill. Perhaps Senator Murray could confirm that.

Senator Murray: We are in the process of doing so now.

Senator Frith: Some questions were raised about the constitutionality of the tribunal in that it proposes a mixture of judicial and lay members. Some other questions raised were about third parties' standing before the tribunal and about whether the rights of appeal were too broad. The provision for a cabinet override when the tribunal blocks or dissolves a merger was the subject of some controversy, but I believe that provision remains. Mention was made both here and in the proceedings of the committee about the abuse of the dominance provisions and whether or not they are too weak. That is, whether it is too easy to get away with an abuse of dominance. Questions were raised about class actions and loss leader selling.

Those are just some of the questions that were raised. I mention them too, because it may be appropriate to raise some of them here, though the minister and our committee have probably already examined many of them.

What it all comes down to is this: This legislation constitutes an important advance. There are still many problems, because this is a complicated issue. The solutions offered in the legislation are not perfect. The best way to find out which ones require improvement is to put the legislation into effect, let it work and see how well it works. Only in that way can we find out what needs improvement. With those few comments, I support the motion for second reading.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I also want to extend to Senator MacDonald my congratulations on his exposition of this complicated legislation that has been before parliamentary committees and Parliament for a great number of years. As I listened to him, I thought, surely here is a man who is telling this chamber that he has a perfect bill. There was not a single thing that he said that indicated any doubt in his mind about the efficacy, the conciseness and every other aspect of this legislation.

[Senator Frith.]

• (1420)

Honourable senators, I am sure that in that respect he was wrong. This type of legislation has been an area where members of the bar have wallowed in great abandon for many years, including Senator Frith, and he never lost a case—so he said. That shows you what kind of cases he had.

Senator Frith: That is part of the skill—picking the winners.

Senator Sinclair: Let me say this, honourable senators: In a market economy, good competition legislation is an absolute essential. For many years we in Canada have not had that type of legislation. Many times people in business have appeared before committees on draft legislation and, as has been indicated, a number of bills have not been proceeded with because of substantial flaws in that legislation.

At the present time and after much consultation, I think a bill is now before us that solves a lot of the problems in the existing law. The make-up of the tribunal, which is a mixed tribunal, is unusual; it raises some difficult questions as to what happens on mixed questions of fact and law, and I agree with Senator Frith that the way to find out whether or not a law is going to work is to put it into effect and see what happens. Unquestionably, the legislation is much more flexible. Undoubtedly, that is required. The world is changing; the marketplace is changing and flexible legislation and a flexible tribunal is essential, in my opinion, for effective maintenance and enhancement of competition.

Coming down to the question of its coverage, as Senator MacDonald has indicated it now covers banks, which previously were not covered. Whether or not that is a good thing raises a question as to whether you can have more than one tribunal or one group controlling an institutional framework. There is some doubt about that, certainly on the part of some of us who have had problems due to the fact that the Competition Act legislation, in effect, did not apply to crown corporations, and to see them now covered by this legislation is a very major step forward.

Honourable senators, if there was one area that bothered me somewhat and which I think has not been fully covered, it is the whole question of market dominance. However, I do not intend to spend a lot of time discussing that, because there are so many different views as to what constitutes market dominance, and how that aspect is to be controlled for effective competition is a very difficult question. I am sure that we will be addressing this question at a later time.

I think this legislation is a good step forward and I ask honourable senators to join with me in supporting this motion.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, as you are aware, this bill has been the subject of pre-study by the appropriate Senate committee. I believe—and Senator Murray can correct me if I am wrong—that the final witness, the minister responsible for the legislation, is scheduled to appear before the committee. Therefore, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

AMBASSADOR OF HUNGARY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I draw to your attention the presence of His Excellency, Mr. Lajos Nagy, Ambassador of Hungary, who, during a courtesy visit to my chambers, mentioned that July 4 next would be the hundredth anniversary of the arrival of the first groups of Hungarian immigrants in Canada, more precisely, in what is now known as the municipality of Esterhazy, Saskatchewan.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: His Excellency brought with him a short history of Hungarians in Canada, and honourable senators might agree that it would be appropriate to add this text as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of document, see appendix "A", p. 2593.)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRANSPORT

TRAVEL TO UKRAINE—REFUND OF RESERVATION DEPOSITS—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. By way of a preamble, I should like to advise the leader that I have been contacted by a number of people who have told me that a fairly large number of people who have paid substantial deposits on trips to the Ukraine are meeting stubborn resistance on the part of travel agencies to their requests for a refund of those deposits.

In the wake of the recent nuclear disaster in that part of the world, and having regard to the daily news reports of the mounting effects of that disaster, quite naturally many of those people have grave doubts as to the wisdom of travelling to that area. Would the leader take this issue up with the Minister of Transport to determine whether or not a special arrangement can be made so that the deposits paid by those people can be returned?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can certainly have the matter looked into. The obvious question arises as to whether the particular subject is one that is within the jurisdiction of the federal government or within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. The question that naturally follows is: What is the nature of the contracts?

I will take the matter under advisement to see if there is anything that can be done that would be helpful.

Senator Olson: I appreciate that. If they are not already well known to the minister, I would be pleased to obtain details of certain cases so that the leader can determine what the situation is.

Senator Roblin: That would be useful.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

GOOSE BAY, LABRADOR—BARRING OF INUIT FROM MEETING
ADDRESSED BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT
AND APOLOGY—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week Senator Adams and I posed questions arising from the following headline in the Toronto Star: "Inuit barred for not wearing jackets, ties as Crosbie woos NATO over big air base." I wonder if the Leader of the Government has any information on that issue today. I am rather anxious to hear some explanation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some information, but not a complete reply. I can tell my honourable friend that I have been told that the people concerned were told of this condition when they set out for this meeting. My reaction was: "Well, so what?" I was not satisfied that the matter had been properly checked into, so I have asked that further inquiries be made.

Senator Marchand: I thank the leader for that statement. I appreciate his sentiment very much. It is the same as mine. I understand and respect the rules of the officers' mess regarding proper dress code. I also have a high regard and admiration for the members of the Canadian Armed Forces and their traditions. But in this particular instance this was not a normal mess dinner. It was a highly political meeting where the leaders of the NATO countries were wooed by the Minister of Justice to establish a NATO training base at Goose Bay. I believe that the rules of the mess should have been relaxed in that instance. I was hurt, and I know that a number of other people were hurt, to read headlines of this nature. I know that my Inuit colleagues were particularly hurt to read such headlines. I hope that the Leader of the Government can obtain a report as soon as possible.

Senator Roblin: I must say that I have a great deal of sympathy with the point that is made. I will do my best.

● (1430)

GOOSE BAY, LABRADOR—PROPOSED NATO BASE—FUNDING OF INTEREST GROUPS

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, when the Leader of the Government is looking into that matter, there is another that I would draw to his attention. I refer to the report that $150,000 was to be given to the group in favour of locating the training base at Goose Bay.

I think it is equally important to fund those peoples, whoever they might be—I know in this case they are Inuit groups and Indian groups who are opposed—who have an opposing view on the question of this base. I hope that he can get me some information on this subject.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I take it my friend is asking what the distribution of this $150,000 is going to be. I will try to find out about that.

There is a good deal of interest in this base. I notice that one of the members of the House of Commons who represents the area is strongly in favour of it, so I presume there is some support for the idea.

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, I understand that on issues like this there are pros and cons and I am not one who is always negative about these matters. I can understand the need for creating employment in that area and creating employment in all of those areas where unemployment is high. Certainly our native peoples need employment as much as anyone else, but the point I want to emphasize, though, is that a proper assessment should be made and all points of view should be considered before a final decision is made.

There are some very important environmental considerations involved here, the caribou herd, in particular, which the native peoples depend upon, and the effect that these low-flying planes, for instance, will have on the caribou herd, their calving, their migration, and so on. I hope that this aspect, as it affects the native peoples of the area, will be totally canvassed.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, it is the policy of the government to give the widest possible consideration to the environmental factors involved.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to return to a subject I raised yesterday with the Leader of the Government, namely, trade relations between Canada and the United States.

Perhaps I can begin by referring to a statement which was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on Sunday last on the CTV program "Question Period". The minister said, referring to the recent incident on shakes and shingles:

[Senator Roblin.]

We had also made it very clear to the Americans and I think it's now understood that we regard the action on shingles and shakes to have been a breach of the Quebec Accord and that we don't want it happening again.

We know that the tariff item on shakes and shingles was unbound. It was not negotiated under the GATT and, therefore, we could not complain or seek compensation under the GATT. I understand why the minister did not refer to the GATT, but he referred to the Quebec Accord, which, I presume, is the declaration that flowed from the Quebec Summit.

I would like to know from the Leader of the Government whether he can clarify in what respect the action of the American government broke the agreement reached at the Quebec Summit.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have not seen my colleague's statement, but I will ask him if he can explain it further along the lines raised in the question.

Senator MacEachen: In order to assist the minister, may I ask him to confirm whether the accord was broken with respect to the commitment made by the two governments to halt protectionism in cross-border trade in goods and services.

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and now the Secretary of State for External Affairs have said that the United States has broken its word. The most recent utterance by the Secretary of State was that it had broken a solemn undertaking. I want to ask whether the breach was against the following sentence of the declaration, and I quote:

As a first step, we commit ourselves to halt protectionism in cross-border trade in goods and services.

So my precise question is: Is this the declaration which was breached, in the view of the government, by the imposition of this particular tariff?

Senator Roblin: I will ask my colleague to expand on his original statement.

Senator MacEachen: May I follow that up and ask for a further clarification, honourable senators, on a related matter? In the same interview the minister was asked what the government's attitude was with respect to a stand-still arrangement, or a cease-and-desist arrangement by which the government on each side of the border would commit itself to refrain from further trade actions.

I was surprised, I must say, to read the answer of the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he said that:

...it is our considered judgment that the effect of a stand-still across the board would be more damaging, more limiting, to us; more limiting, for example, to corn producers in Ontario who want to take action against the United States than it would be to them.

I assumed that what the Quebec declaration was was a stand-still agreement, in other words, an agreement to halt all protectionist actions. When the minister is asked if the Canadian government is in favour of a stand-still, even though he accuses the United States of breaking its word, he says,

"No, because we want to take action ourselves," or, as he puts it, "there are corn producers in Ontario who want to take action." In other words, at a certain point it would be in the interests of the corn producers for the Canadian government to take protectionist action.

I would like to have some clarification on what the Quebec Summit did say. Was it a halt to protectionism? Was it a stand-still, absolute, and if it was not, why is it objectionable for the United States to take trade action and not objectionable for Canada to do so? The minister says that if we made a solemn mutual undertaking it would limit us more than it would limit the United States, and it would prevent the corn producers—in his example—from taking tariff action. So, I really would like to get some clarification on this apparent discrepancy and whether, indeed, there is an obligation to halt protectionism. If there is such an obligation, is it absolute? Or are there certain areas that are still open to both governments? That is really my question.

● (1440)

Senator Roblin: I will ask the minister what light he can throw on that general subject.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for his undertaking to ask the minister, but I hope the Leader of the Government, on his own responsibility, will undertake on behalf of the government to clarify the situation. I think it is reasonable to find out on this major matter what the policy of the government is; what it is that the United States broke; how it broke its word; how absolute is the undertaking to halt protectionism; and if it is not absolute, what are the exceptions? I thank the minister, but I want him to go further and say that he will provide some answers.

Senator Roblin: I can tell my friend that when he gets the answers he will see that they comprise the policy of the government.

Senator MacEachen: I should like to ask one further question as a follow-up to the question I asked yesterday about the Minister of Finance's statement. Specifically, I asked: What items were unbound that had been affected by the Canadian retaliatory action? The minister said that he would find out, and I wonder if he is able to tell me what items have been affected that are not bound by the GATT.

Senator Roblin: I will get that information to the house just as soon as I can, honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: I find it rather urgent to deal with this matter because of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said on Sunday when asked why the government chose books. Indeed, the question we are all asking is why it chose books for its retaliatory action. In this connection the Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

We chose books because we didn't have many choices in terms of unbound tariffs and they happen to be one of them.

Can the Leader of the Government confirm that, in fact, books are unbound items?

Senator Frith: No pun intended!

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have undertaken to get the answer and I will do so as soon as I can.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS PRICING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As it has been some few sitting days since the matter of energy was raised with him, I should like to do so at this time.

My question is prompted by a telephone interview granted by the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and reported in today's paper. The interview dealt with the effect of low prices on Canada's self-sufficiency in oil. It was indicated that we may lose our self-sufficiency and become more dependent on imported oil very quickly as a result of low prices. In the interview he said that, nonetheless, federal energy officials see no need for policy changes at this point. He goes on to say that Ottawa is monitoring events closely while waiting for oil markets to settle down.

Essentially, I think that is what the Leader of the Government has been saying in the Senate.

My question is prompted not only by this interview but by increasing anxiety and frustration in western Canada over the question of whether or not something is going to happen. I think that is reflected in a recent report that the Alberta Progressive Conservative caucus chairman was reported to be fuming and simply not satisfied with Finance Minister Wilson's promise that PGRT removal was being reviewed.

Specifically, what I think we would all like to know, and particularly western Canadians, is: Is there a set of circumstances in terms of a low price for any prolonged period of time that the government has as a guideline in which, when that has occurred, they will come forward with an announcement?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is no doubt at all that we have a very serious problem on our hands in western Canada, first, with the oil industry and, second, with agriculture.

Some measures have been introduced, and I will not repeat them now because they are known in this chamber, to alleviate that problem insofar as we can do so at the present time.

However, we are very much concerned with the question of self-sufficiency and national control of the oil supply over the long term; that is perfectly true. We are monitoring that matter carefully to make sure that we do those things we can do now to take care of that problem. For example, in the case of the Hibernia field off the Atlantic coast, negotiations are now going on between the company and the provincial and federal governments in order to see what régime can be arrived at which would enable that particular discovery to be brought into production.

I dare say that we will have to give consideration to other aspects of that same problem which bear on the question of our long-range oil prospects.

If policies on a global scale are developed, and they are not at the present time, then, of course, we will be presenting them to Parliament and to the public.

Hon. H. A. Olson: I have a supplementary question. The Leader of the Government mentioned action to proceed with the development of Hibernia, and I agree with that, but I do know that there was a high priority placed on developing the known deposits of oil, such as the tar sands and the heavy oil in Lloydminster, Peace River, Wolf Creek and many other places where there are several hundred billion barrels of known deposits of oil, and to bring that on at least at the same pace at which the production from the conventional fields is declining. That was a highly desirable objective. Is this no longer a priority of the government?

Senator Roblin: These matters are still very important to us. For example, the converter in Regina is one that is under study at the present time for prompt attention.

As my honourable friend knows, we have also changed the tax régime with respect to the heavy oil plants in northern Alberta to help them weather the storm. If we are not doing enough, we will have to reconsider the program, but at the present time we are taking these problems one at a time.

Senator Olson: I have a further supplementary question. To make this type of heavy oil, bitumen, useful, it needs to be upgraded to a synthetic crude oil for two reasons: one is for transportation through the existing pipelines; the second is because most of the refineries in Canada require oil that is upgraded to that status, otherwise, they cannot use it. That is one of the reasons we are shipping so much heavy oil to the northern tier refineries in the United States where they have a different processing procedure. I am wondering if those upgraders at Lloydminster, particularly, and the other two or three which have been proposed, remain a high priority of this government so that we can at least hold our own and bring on this oil at the same rate as our conventional oil production is declining.

Senator Roblin: The site under consideration at the present time is the Regina one of which my friend and I are aware. I am quite sure that the Lloydminster plant is the subject of some negotiations, but I am not able to say what progress has been made.

Senator Olson: I have one final supplementary question. Many people such as the engineering crew and many construction companies who are standing by waiting to build these processing plants, both the enhanced recovery and the heavy oil upgrading plants, would like to know if the minister could give us some indication as to when the negotiations might be completed so that some positive action could be taken out in the field.

Senator Roblin: We are certainly aware of the considerations that attach themselves to these decisions and we will make them as quickly as we can.

[Senator Roblin.]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF POST OFFICE AT FORGET, SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is the kind of question that I suppose, when senators hear it, they will think it is probably not of sufficient importance to raise here, but on reflection I think they may agree that it is wise to raise it. It is the kind of question that I am sure is not likely to make Question Period in the House of Commons. Perhaps we can be a forum in preventing what I believe to be an injustice in the making.

I refer to the determination of Canada Post Corporation to immediately close the post office at Forget, Saskatchewan. My information is that a public meeting was held in that town on June 4. The whole community came out for it. Approximately 200 people were served by the post office. Their wish, desire and request is that Canada Post look at the economics of the Forget post office and at the need to keep it in the community. They hope to solve what Canada Post says is a deficit being run by the Forget post office.

• (1450)

Honourable senators, if every little post office in western Canada that runs at a deficit is closed, there will be hundreds upon hundreds of such closures. The argument the community makes in favour of keeping their post office is that the alternative is to provide group post office mail boxes, requiring Canada Post to send in a truck on a regular basis to deliver mail to those mail boxes.

The current postmistress is almost ready to retire. The suggestion is that if a new postmaster or postmistress were to accept a much lower salary—and that is a possibility—then the post office would break even. It is further pointed out that the Forget Credit Union is willing to provide space for the post office and clerical assistance free of charge. The community proposes that by this means their post office will be a paying proposition, and they do want to keep it.

The community has a number of businesses. It has a growing credit union. People who have come to the community to retire have built new houses. It would be a hardship for senior citizens who have retired in Forget to have to go eight miles to pick up their mail.

The correspondence I have received goes on to point out that the offer of the credit union includes free space and box lobby, which should reduce the deficit; free clerical assistance from 9 to 4 daily, regardless of the post office hours, which should provide better service at very little cost, and a postmaster at a nominal charge; that is, if one of the staff of the credit union were postmaster, it is agreed that he will accept very low pay, or none at all, and would consider the post office operation as part of the credit union duty for which a salary is already received.

In view of all of these circumstances and in view of the fact that there is an agricultural crisis there at the present time, I think it is extremely callous of three officials of Canada Post Corporation to come and state to this community that it is a fait accompli, that their post office will be closed in nine days. This creates a hardship. This is narrow minded on the part of Canada Post, and I think it is economic stupidity to close the post office if the offer of the community makes its retention possible and may, indeed, enable it to make a profit for Canada Post.

Honourable senators, this request has been taken to a number of important politicians on Parliament Hill. I ask the government leader in the Senate to use his good offices and Senate Hansard of today's date in an endeavour to prevent an injustice and to allow this community to enjoy the very important services of its post office.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Up until his peroration, my honourable friend was making me an offer that seemed hard to refuse. But when he got to his description of the attitude of the postal authorities, I felt that perhaps that did not improve his case. If a number of "important personages" on Parliament Hill have been consulted about this, perhaps my honourable friend will give me those names so that I know what allies I have in this respect. I will see what sort of reply we can get from Canada Post with respect to this situation.

Senator Argue: I would be happy to send the government leader the correspondence that I have, and it lists those names. I really made that statement because three officials from Canada Post Corporation came down to a public meeting at Forget and the only message they had was that the post office in that town was to be closed nine days from that date, and they gave their reasons for that. If they had come down with that proposition and then went on to say that they were willing to keep the post office open for another 45 days in order to consider some other options—as has been requested—if they had proposed another look at the situation if the community could help clear up the deficit, then the words I used would not have been appropriate. However, the officials took that attitude, which got the people all stirred up. I think that the people of Forget would agree that I was rather mild in my choice of words.

EMPLOYMENT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CN SHOPS—DISPARITY IN TREATMENT OF DISPLACED EMPLOYEES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday I asked a question about the employees at the CN shops in Charlottetown. Last evening I received a letter from the CNR equipment shop in that city. In it there are complaints about losses of personnel and so forth. I know that the Leader of the Government in the Senate will do what he can about that. But they have another concern that I would like to bring to his attention so that perhaps he can do something about it as well. The letter reads:

The employees affected, many with thirty or more years of service, cannot receive full pension benefits because they are not sixty years of age. Recently many management employees of CN who were not sixty years of age received full pension benefits; paid-up life insurance and larger cash payments to retire.

We would like to know why when working for the same company, does management employees deserve more than the worker and where does this extra money come from?

Perhaps the government leader could find the answers to those questions so that I can write back to these CNR equipment shop employees and inform them of those answers.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I agree that the crown corporation is a crown corporation and runs its own affairs in a businesslike manner. I also agree that it ought to deal with its employees on the basis of equity. If the facts given to me by my honourable friend are correct, it would seem that we have departed, to some extent, from equity. If he would be kind enough to let me have that correspondence, I will see what I can do by way of a satisfactory answer or a satisfactory reaction.

Senator Bonnell: I will see that the honourable government leader gets a copy of this letter.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

MISSION TO CHINA—COMPOSITION OF DELEGATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Recently we received from the Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board) a news release dated June 3. The headline reads: "Mayer to Lead Mission to China". It goes on to state that the minister will be going to China to deal particularly with investment as between Canada and China in the agricultural and food sectors.

The release is very helpful in that it has with it a backgrounder on the Canada-China wheat trade. One thing it does not have, however, which announcements of such trips often do include, is the list of participants. Could the government leader undertake to get for us a list of those who went on this trip with the minister, people both outside and in government, and a statement of what their responsibilities were?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The minister is still in China, so I am not able to get the information from him. I will, however, take note of the question and see what I can do to provide an answer.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

RECRUITING PRACTICES OF RCMP

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 5 last by the Honourable Senator Muir regarding Official Languages—Recruiting Practices of RCMP.

(The answer follows):

The RCMP employs standard recruitment criteria for screening candidates for protective policing duties which include a minimum grade 12 education, suitable aptitudes and a standard level of medical and physical fitness. In addition to these basic requirements, preference is also given to additional qualifications which relate to the operational requirements of the job such as previous guard duty experience.

In keeping with the need for federal institutions to have the ability to serve the public in both official languages, particularly in the bilingual areas of Canada, the ability to speak both official languages is considered an important preferential qualification. This is of special importance in the National Capital Region where the majority of protective policing positions are located.

Recent experience has shown that the number of qualified candidates with bilingual capabilities seeking to become Special Constables in the protective policing service of the Force has far exceeded the number of positions being staffed. Recent RCMP recruitment efforts have focused on filling protective policing positions in the National Capital Region. Given the more than adequate supply of fully qualified bilingual candidates, all of these recruits were bilingual. There has been no requirement to establish a language training program for protective policing service recruits.

The Force will also be recruiting Special Constables for protective policing duties in unilingual areas in the near future. Consistent with the Force's practice of matching the recruitment qualifications with the duties of the job, it is expected that a number of unilingual candidates will be hired to fill these positions.

The preferential qualifications that apply to persons seeking to join the Force as full regular members is somewhat broader than those for protective policing and includes not only persons with bilingual capabilities but also university graduates. Women and natives are also recruited on a priority basis, consistent with the Government's affirmative action program. As many of these regular member recruits are not fully bilingual, a language training program of modest proportions is provided to interested unilingual recruits who demonstrate a facility for learning the other language.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE SALE OF CN ROUTE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 17 last by the Honourable

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Lawson regarding Transport—Possible Sale of CN Route—Government Action.

(The answer follows):

As Mr. LeClair said in his news release of April 17, 1986, "Canadian National and the purchaser will ensure any affected management and staff are treated fairly and equitably through early retirement and other measures. This will require negotiations with the unions involved".

As the Minister stated in the House on April 18, 1986, within the context of the agreement there will be provision for certain job guarantees. The final package will have to be approved by the Governor-in-Council and the CTC. Until such time as all of those details can be worked out with the unions and other parties affected, the Department cannot say just what the full package will look like.

BROADCASTING

CAPLAN TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 28 last by the Honourable Senator Davey regarding Broadcasting—Caplan Task Force Report.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What is the word on the task force?

Senator Roblin: To paraphrase the answer, we expect to receive the report this month. It has been delayed because they ran into problems they did not anticipate when they started. After we allow six to eight weeks for translation and printing, it should be available.

Senator Frith: Did it have a deadline originally?

Senator Roblin: I cannot tell my honourable friend that.

(The answer follows):

The Task Force is presently expected to report to the Minister of Communications during the last week of June, 1986. Following the report to the Minister, production of the report will take from six to eight weeks taking into account the time needed for typesetting, printing and binding.

The report was unavoidably delayed due to the lack of definitive research in several key fields, particularly financial analyses of broadcasting and cable systems, analysis of the current regulatory system and studies of Quebec broadcasting. Additionally, public hearings were held across Canada and in northern communities, a process which was not originally part of the Task Force timetable.

● (1500)

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Simard, for the second reading of the Bill C-86, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act".—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Flynn, who, I believe, is going to provide some information for Senator Godfrey.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Flynn speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Godfrey for his participation in the debate on second reading of this bill to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. He has noted that this is an interim measure, and I repeat that that is the case. The government will continue to study the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, the report of the House of Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the Wyman report, and eventually we will have a bill that will deal with all of the problems of the corporation and which may deal with questions relating to the structure, operation and financing of the corporation.

I shall now try to reply to the specific questions asked by Senator Godfrey. The first concerned the appointment of some directors from the private sector who shall not be employees of a federal institution. Senator Godfrey inquired as to what was meant by "a federal institution". There is no definition, but if one reads the bill, one can see that anyone who is paid by public funds is considered to be a member or an employee of a federal institution. The term "federal institution" really has a general meaning, the definition of which I do not believe would create any difficulty in deciding whether or not someone is qualified to represent the private sector.

Senator Godfrey's second point concerned the composition of the board of directors and the fact that the Deputy Minister of Finance will be one of the non-private sector administrators when the report of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee recommended that he should not be a director of the corporation.

The fact is that the corporation is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, and, therefore, I believe it is only proper that he should have his deputy minister on the board to advise it. I do not believe that the committee felt, as a result of its hearings, that its view on this specific point was an absolute conclusion.

The honourable senator also asked why the directors are not described as representing Ontario, the western provinces and the Atlantic provinces, and whether they should represent the Canadian Bankers' Association and others. The way the bill is worded does not preclude the appointment of people to represent those areas or associations. We simply say that they should not be related to a federal or provincial institution.

Therefore, we could very well meet the recommendations in the Senate committee's report dealing with the composition of the private sector representation on the board of the corporation.

The honourable senator also referred to some evidence given by Mr. Taylor and Mr. Fullerton before the Senate committee when it considered the Wyman report. The comments made by those two gentlemen referred to a situation which existed in 1983, if I am not mistaken, when the legislation was amended to increase from $20,000 to $60,000 the amount of protection afforded depositors. At that time, after the bill was tabled on a certain day, some failures of trust companies occurred. The retroactivity to which Messrs. Taylor and Fullerton referred was in the sense that the bill provided for protection from the day of the tabling of the bill. Honourable senators can well imagine the situation in which depositors were placed when a bill was before Parliament saying that they were going to be protected to the extent of $60,000, yet, before the bill was enacted, the depositors were faced with a loss in excess of the $20,000 ceiling then in force. So, it was a decision reached by Parliament at that time. I would suggest to Senator Godfrey that I do not believe it was a mistake; but if it was a mistake, then it was made at that time and it is not related to the bill now before us.

Senator Godfrey then referred to the retroactivity aspect of the bill now before us. I am not sure if he is referring to the failure of the two western banks. The present law with the $60,000 limit covers all of the depositors of those two banks up to that amount. This bill does not otherwise affect the situation. Any excess of the deposits in those two banks was covered by Bill C-79, which was adopted after long debate. I propose to put on the record the figures involved in connection with the failure of those two western banks. Let us say that the deficit of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation at the end of 1984 and before the payments to the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank was approximately $547 million. The cost to the corporation resulting from the failure of those two western banks is $688 million.

Senator Frith: All in?

Senator Flynn: All in, yes. It is split in the following way: the Canadian Commercial Bank, $277,800,000; the subsidiary, the Canadian Commercial Mortgage Corporation, $95 million; and Northland Bank, $316 million, making a total of $688 million, supported by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. But that figure excludes the amount which will be paid under Bill C-79, which is $875 million.

Senator Frith: For the uninsured?

Senator Flynn: For the uninsured—what we have covered in addition by Bill C-79. Exactly how much the corporation, or the government, or whoever else is concerned, will recover from the realization of the assets of the two failed banks is not yet known. Some vague estimates have been made, but at this time it is much too early to mention any figure. There will be a recovery of some kind. Those are the figures we have at this time.

● (1510)

The last point mentioned by Senator Godfrey relates again to Bill C-79. He speaks of the contribution of the five major banks to the salvage package for the two western banks, and particularly for the Canadian Commercial Bank. He says that through a technicality the bill did not include the amounts provided by these chartered banks. I do not think that it was a technical error. I think that the government felt that the banks, having agreed to provide these funds to help save the two banks, also took the risks involved. Therefore, there was no reason to include them in the list of protected creditors of the two western banks.

I think that covers the points raised by Senator Godfrey. Again, as I have said, it is an interim measure.

Perhaps I should mention the increase in premium. The reason for the increase in premium is to cover the deficit which is, as I have mentioned, $1,235,378,000. The new premium scale would provide something like $216 million per year. It is estimated that if no other major failures occur in the meantime, the deficit will be wiped out in approximately five years. That is the perspective at this time. It may be that when the government has considered all the recommendations in the reports that I have mentioned, it will find another way to deal with the deficit. However, as of now the idea is that the premiums should serve to erase the deficit, and that in the future they should provide enough funds for the corporation to meet its obligations and its objectives.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, perhaps I should explain something on this question of the banks. I said that there was a technical difference between the banks and the depositors. What I meant to say was that the government had agreed that it would treat the banks and the depositors in the same way. The government then found a technical difference, which means that for this purpose they deliberately included in the bill the wording that meant that the banks would be excluded. I happen to think that this action was unfair. However, in view of the explanations of Senator Flynn, and in view of the fact that this matter has been previously considered, I do not believe that the bill has to go to committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Flynn, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Godfrey, for the adoption of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders (Membership of Cabinet Ministers on Senate Committees), presented in the Senate on 14th May, 1986.—

[Senator Flynn.]

(Honourable Senator Godfrey).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that I am supposed to be at a meeting of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee right now, and that Senator Roblin is not present in the chamber at this time, and as some of my remarks will be directed to him—I would rather that he was here so he can reply to them immediately if he so wishes—I would like to stand this order.

Order stands.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-96—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Seventeenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (subject-matter of the Bill C-96, intituled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977"), presented in the Senate on 10th June, 1986.—
(Honourable Senator Kelly).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this particular report was tabled by me yesterday. It was then suggested that it should be presented in the Senate for consideration rather than being tabled. I have been told that it is our custom to table the subject matter studies of committees and to present for consideration the reports following the study of bills. Whether or not honourable senators wish to continue that practice, obviously, is up to the Senate. There is no hard-and-fast rule on the matter.

In any event, Senator Kelly is not here today; nor will he be here tomorrow. There is illness in his family, and this will keep him away for a few days at least. So, if anybody wishes to speak to this matter, Senator Kelly would be only too willing to yield.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, this is a very important matter. Personally, I should like to hear Senator Kelly's remarks, and if we can afford the time I think it ought to stand in his name. If he cannot be here next week, we may have to consider some other arrangement.

Senator Doody: That is perfectly acceptable. If Senator Kelly is not here next week, with the permission of the Senate we will have somebody else speak to it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on the point of order, are we leaving it as consideration?

Senator Doody: Apparently.

Senator Frith: Good. So it will stand exactly as it is now?

Senator Doody: Yes.

Order stands.

THE ESTIMATES 1986-87

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Main Estimates 1986-87), presented in the Senate on 28th May, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Hicks).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, again I apologize for my lapse of attention and lapse of memory when this item was called yesterday. I am, however, prepared to proceed briefly today. There were two points to which I wanted to refer as a result of the reference of the estimates to the National Finance Committee.

The first point arises from the statement of the Minister of Finance on February 26 of this year that he would impose a further $500 million reduction in expenditures as a lump sum, not to be disclosed in the estimates, thus denying to both houses of Parliament the opportunity to review the reduced sums of money that in the end result would be made available to several departments of government to enable them to carry out their duties. The committee urged the President of the Treasury Board to table before Parliament a document indicating the areas targeted for expenditure reduction and, indeed, the President of the Treasury Board said that he would do this. Had I spoken yesterday, I would have said that thus far we have heard nothing further on this matter. It so happens that, perhaps while I was not speaking yesterday, the President of the Treasury Board did refer to this matter in the other place and again repeated his intention that he would make available very shortly to Parliament the breakdown of the expenditure reductions that would achieve this additional $500 million in savings. That is fine, and I for one will be interested in looking at those reductions when they are made available to Parliament.

● (1520)

However, I suppose the general point I wanted to make I could have made without reference to the particular handling of this item, and that is that it seems to me that it ought to have been possible for the Minister of Finance to have effected that reduction among the departments concerned and included it in the estimates that were laid before Parliament. It could have been done, it seems to me, in the few weeks before February 26, just as readily as it could have been done in the weeks following February 26, although I observe that we are already into the month of June and it has not yet been done. It seems to me that this ought not to be a practice in handling the budget of Canada, and in laying before Parliament the estimates to implement that budget without disclosing to Parliament, in exact detail, the actual expenditures which the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in the Government of Canada expect to have allocated to the various departments of government for the carrying out of their work.

Honourable senators, that is my first point. I deplore this practice of a kind of secret reduction. Indeed, I am glad there is a reduction, but still, one would like to see what the items are, and one would like to see whether there are certain items that are considered harmful to the interests of the people of Canada and where we might like to have expressed our opinion and said, "No, this money ought not to have been cut from here." However, we shall have a look at the statement of the President of the Treasury Board when, in due course, it is laid before Parliament. I certainly hope that this can be done before Parliament rises for the summer, otherwise, it seems to me that the exercise will not be of very much value to members of either house of Parliament.

The other point on which I wish to comment, honourable senators, arises out of a question which my colleague, the Honourable Senator John Stewart, asked of the Deputy Minister of Revenue Canada on the taxation side. The question had to do with the amount of the accounts receivable by Revenue Canada. The answer was not available at the time of the committee hearing, but it has since been sent to members of the committee. Having read this answer, I, for one, am astonished at the enormity of the accounts receivable by Revenue Canada. Here is the breakdown in millions of dollars; from individuals, $1,532 million in arrears from March 31, 1985, until mid-May 1986 when this question was answered. In other words, for over a full year there is owing from individuals arrears of $1,532 million; from corporations, $1,217 million; from employers, $355 million, and from sundry sources such as Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, non-residents and bankruptcies, $321 million. This comes to a grand total of $3,425 million owed to Revenue Canada for over a year, or during the period commencing on March 31, 1985, and not received by the Government of Canada more than a full year after that.

I would urge that the responsible officials, starting of course with the responsible minister, address themselves to this problem and try to reduce this enormous accounts receivable item which is costing the taxpayers of Canada who have paid their taxes a good many additional millions and millions of dollars in interest and carrying charges on that amount.

Although Senator Stewart's question did not embrace this, it might be worth while for the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to look at this question at another time to see whether those arrears are typical, or whether they are extraordinarily large, or whether for years and years we have had an accounts receivable item in excess of some $3 billion. The people of Canada and their government ought to have the use of this money and ought not to be charged with the additional expense of carrying it indefinitely.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say about the Sixteenth Report of the Committee on National Finance. I am pleased to have had the opportunity of making these statements. I am sorry that I held you up during the period that I was absent in another country, and because of my lapse of memory of yesterday afternoon.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, Senator Leblanc, who is ill, and of the deputy chairman, Senator Kelly, for the reasons I explained earlier, I would like to move the adoption of the report.

I might just mention that Senator Hicks's comments on the outstanding accounts of the Department of National Revenue are certainly worthy of attention. Perhaps this is a topic that the committee could seize upon. I am unhappy to say that I am not a member of the elite who owe all that money to Revenue Canada. They seem to be inordinately quick in getting after me when I owe them the smallest possible amount of money. Perhaps we should find out how it is done. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance could then serve a very useful function for our colleagues here in this chamber.

Having said that, I move the adoption of the report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

[Translation]

YOUTH

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, for the adoption of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth, entitled: "Youth: A Plan of Action", tabled in the Senate on 19th February, 1986.—(Honourable Senator David).

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, being a member of the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth has been a very rewarding experience.

A number of my colleagues already gave a summary of the report's four chapters. I would now like to offer some comments and reflections on certain aspects of this paper.

Among the many statistics we find in the report, I would like to emphasize the link between unemployment and educational level (page 79), where we see that the unemployment rate is 27.6 per cent, that is, one out four, for those who have not gone beyond elementary school. We see a rate of 17.7 per cent, one out of six, among young people with only a high school diploma. And even among community college or university graduates, we find an unemployment rate of 9.8 per cent, that is, one out of ten.

I think there are two factors that play a fundamental role in the decision to continue or drop out of elementary or high school: the family environment and the school environment. I will comment later on other important factors at the post-secondary level.

Over the past 20 years, the structure of the family has changed considerably. Whether or not we approve of these changes, we must understand the social climate within which young people live today. We read this on page 7 of the report. A number of statistics are given to illustrate these changes. For instance, the divorce rate has risen from 21.4 per 100,000 population in 1941 to 285.9 in 1982.

[Senator Doody.]

The percentage of single-parent families rose from 10.5 in 1976 to 12.8 in 1981. More than half of Canadian families now have two earners, that is, both parents working every day.

The number of suicides in the 15-to-19-year age group rose, between 1961 and 1981, from 3.7 for males and 0.9 for girls per 100,000 population to 21.1 for males and 3.8 for girls.

The report indicates that consumption of alcohol, drug use and the delinquency rate have increased considerably among young people over the past years.

The breakup of the traditional family unit is probably the consequence of the ideological, societal and technological changes which have occurred over the past 40 years. Major changes have also transformed our post-industrial society and seriously disrupted the Judeo-Christian values of our civilization.

In this different climate, need we wonder about the problems experienced by young people often isolated within their family or families and in a society which prizes individualism very highly? Let us not forget that beside the insecurity within their family, young people must live with the reality of the atomic threat, terrorist attacks and economic instability.

• (1530)

Honourable senators, it would be surprising if these extremely rapid transformations of the family and social fibre were not deeply felt by our young people. The crisis they are going through could be a concrete result of that.

In a country such as ours where compulsory primary education is free, we should question ourselves about these young people who drop out with a minimum of education. Their ensuing practical illiteracy will probably mean for them, today like tomorrow, a lifelong unemployment problem.

To remedy this disastrous situation, I suggest it is essential to study thoroughly the psychological, social and economic aspects of the family environment of these futureless young people. In their cases, welfare benefits are an indispensable band-aid which will never really solve the problem and which cost various states a fortune. The experimental action of non-governmental and merit-subsidized organizations is, I suggest, a promising option. Social prevention is indispensable; it is cost efficient because, without it, these young people would forever represent for the state a permanent and costly burden.

The age of secondary education is that of early teens, a period especially difficult and often troubled for the young person who needs solid support in his or her family and school environment.

The positive interaction between family and school seems to me to be the surest way to develop a taste for study, knowledge and work, to develop ambition and the desire to succeed. Training and education go hand in hand, as we know, and parents and teachers alike have complementary responsibilities. Whether we like it or not, studying demands a proper climate, a surrounding both quiet and stimulating, an understanding and demanding discipline, a good balance between physical development through sports and intellectual development through learning to find a place on the labour market.

Already troubled by their physiological development, the teenage boy and girl have difficulty coping with either family agitation or insecurity, or a more or less anonymous school supervision.

Honourable senators, I suggest that the responsibilities of both parents and teachers are vital at this time in their lives, during which is generally established the basis for their eventual success or failure. Life values are taught at home, but they are subjected to a great many influences in their school society which is the mirror of the adult society. I feel, therefore, that it is vital to establish a connection between the crisis of youth and that of our contemporary society. After all, aren't adults models for our young people? Our action plans for helping young people are often temporary and superficial solutions that try to alleviate the symptoms instead of curing the disease.

In this connection, I think the debate between the generalist and specialist views of education very important. Personally, I tend to lean towards the generalist theory as far as secondary education is concerned. At this stage, I am inclined to agree with those who insist that the ultimate goal of our schools is to dispense knowledge and to develop the intelligence and judgmental and analytical skills of our young people, so that they may become independent and responsible citizens. I refer you to page 49 of the report.

And since this is a matter that is certainly worthy of reflection, I think it would be appropriate to give a summary of the many educational reforms that have taken place here in Canada over the past 20 years in an attempt to adjust to the needs of a changing society.

Honourable senators, in a society based on competition and productivity, are we right to eliminate marks and examinations, to put our best and our weakest students in the same class, to relax discipline, to reduce the emphasis on homework and learning lessons, to avoid elitism and focus on the average student? On the other hand, should we not assess our teachers as rigorously as we assess our students? In a world of constantly expanding knowledge, teachers also need constant upgrading, not bureaucratic and unionized tenure.

Entering the labour market is the young person's first major test. But our young people must be prepared for this demanding struggle which requires ambition, motivation, hard work, knowledge, perseverance and discipline.

In the present situation, I think these factors are largely responsible for the high rate of 17.7 per cent we referred to earlier.

The third chapter of the report which is called: The Transition from School to Work, uses a number of briefs to illustrate the difficult transition from learning to working.

On page 47, a witness states: We are not preparing them to live in a world that can cope with change and complexity; we are not preparing them to deal with moving into a workplace where the technology is changing.

I am as much in favour of the generalist thesis in secondary education as I strongly advocate the specialized option in post-secondary education.

The committee recommendation, on page 114, to offer certain co-operative education programs—adapted to the Canadian reality—which have proved successful elsewhere seems relevant and interesting to me. This option might meet the needs of both the community college or university student and the world of business. The post-secondary institution would give the student theoretical teaching in a limited choice of options, the workplace would enable him to make the transition while making practical use of his knowledge. Indeed, teachers themselves would benefit if they were to accompany their students. It would be a practical way for them to update their knowledge in line with modern technological developments.

Adding these mandatory stages would obviously require very close co-operation between business circles and governments. The co-operation of the central government is a fait accompli since federal funds already finance most of the post-secondary education. Although this sector is the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, it seems to me it should be possible to achieve a consensus so that the planning would be relatively similar for all young Canadians.

Honourable senators, many studies show that young people from affluent families are more likely to continue their studies than others whose parents are not so well-to-do. But then we must admit that Canada in general and the provinces in particular have made remarkable efforts to facilitate university access through generous grants which reduce tuition fees to a minimum, and through scholarships or loan programs available to many students.

I therefore gladly endorse the statement on page 71 of the report to the effect that the option of continuing or not university studies is a matter of attitude and encouragement and not only one of financial support.

It is enough to remind people that the unemployment rate varies between 27.6 per cent and 9.8 per cent according to the level of education to encourage parents, teachers and the young people themselves to acquire as much knowledge as possible to give them easier and better paid access to the labour force.

Having said that, I am nevertheless surprised and concerned to note an unemployment rate of 9.8 per cent among college and university graduates. This certainly shows, at least to me, a lack of adjustment on the part of colleges and universities to actual opportunities on the labour market. In my opinion, a better informed distribution of supply and demand is a priority if we are to avoid a maximum number of registrations in programs which offer little or no future to those enrolled in them. Financing on the basis of the number of students registered for a program may be a traditional obstacle deserving of serious consideration. On page XIV of the introduction to the report, we find the following:

The youth of the 1980's are facing new challenges in completing their education, finding work and adapting to a changing world.

These young people are our future, honourable senators. They represent a major challenge to the conscience of the parliamentarians of Canada and of every province. Are we not the physicians of the nation? We must therefore, like physicians, try to find gradual or radical remedies to our present problems, prevent future ills and relieve, by technical and human means, the most vulnerable elements of our society.

This society is aging morally and physically. Our young people suffer the consequences of this fact. This is why the report of the Committee on Youth gives us an opportunity to reflect on the weaknesses of this society and to correct them by energetic, intelligent and foresighted action.

Thank you, honourable senators, for your courteous attention.

On motion of Senator Corbin, debate adjourned.

PARLIAMENTARY AFFAIRS COMMISSION OF THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FRENCH-SPEAKING PARLIAMENTARIANS

MEETING IN BRAZIL

Hon. Martial Asselin rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 27, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the meeting of the Parliamentary Affairs Commission, of the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians, on Women in Political Life, held in Brazil from 20th to 25th April, 1986.

He said: Honourable senators, at this time of the day I imagine it will not be very easy to draw the attention of the Senate to such widely varying subjects as reports by parliamentarians on international conferences. Nevertheless, today I want to take this opportunity to draw the attention of the Senate to the subject of women in political life.

Honourable senators, this theme was discussed at an international meeting of French-speaking parliamentarians, held in Brazil from April 20 to 25, which I had the honour and the privilege of attending.

In 1975, as part of International Women's Year, the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians held a general discussion on the theme: Women in Political Life. At the end of the United Nations decade on women's problems, in July 1985, the Paris office approved the idea of calling a meeting of the Parliamentary Commission for a conference on "Women in Political Life". A study of this ever topical question would give the various sections of the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians an opportunity to measure and compare how the position and role of women in parliamentary assemblies had evolved over the past ten years.

This meeting, held in Brazil at the invitation of the Brazilian section, was chaired by Mr. Pacheco Chaves, the section president. He and his executive did not spare any effort to hold this meeting under difficult conditions.

Honourable senators, we also had the pleasure of being greeted by His Excellency President Sarney of the Republic of Brazil. As you know, there will be a general election in Brazil next November. We are now witnessing the advent of a new democracy in Brazil after 20 years of military rule. The President was an extremely charming host. He is quite familiar with international institutions. He told us that in the past he attended several meetings of the Interparliamentary Union, particularly in Spain and in Japan as well. So he knows all about parliamentary meetings.

Honourable senators, we held this meeting from April 20 to April 25. We set up two commissions. One was chaired by Mrs. Monique Tardif, Member of Parliament for Charlebourg. Incidentally, she performed her duties very well. We sat in committees to discuss the various aspects of the presence of women in our Parliaments. These discussions were well received, especially by Brazilian women, who, for the first time in twenty years, are on the point of taking part in a democratic election in their country. Following the work of this committee, resolutions were passed and referred to the general assembly, where they were very well received by all delegates.

Honourable senators, we have tried recently to establish a certain practice in the Senate. We ask for leave to table reports on missions abroad. If the Senate so desires, these can be printed in appendix to the official report of that day. I could talk to you for an hour about the various resolutions which were passed, but I believe that it would be more beneficial if each senator could read this text in appendix to the official report of today rather than hearing mere words or enlargements on this theme, which I could develop for several minutes.

With leave of the Senate, I would like to table in both official languages the report of the meeting of the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians held in Brazil from April 20 to 25, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, if I have leave to table this report to be printed in appendix to the official report, I shall table it immediately.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Since no other senator wishes to take part in this debate, this inquiry is deemed to have been debated.

(For text of report, see Appendix "B", on page 2595.)

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 2581)

HUNGARIANS IN CANADA

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OLD ARE THE FIRST HUNGARIAN SETTLEMENTS

The outset of Hungarian emigration to Canada—apart from a few travellers and emigrants after the Hungarian War of Independence in 1848—can be exactly dated: it was July 4, 1886 when the first tents were pitched by Hungarian immigrants in Western Canada, the present Saskatchewan. The soil was hard, untouched by plough until that time. Almost 150 worn and haggard, penniless Hungarians stopped at a secluded spot in the vast prairie. They wanted to set up new homes, to start life afresh, having overcome so many difficulties. Nowhere a house or a highway as far as the eye could see.

The emigrants of middle east Europe—including also the Hungarians—fled from misery and starvation. Until the turn of the century the emigrants' destination was chiefly the United States of America. Her flourishing industry and enormous mines swallowed immigrants who came to the New World with the purpose of quick enrichment. Only a few of them wanted to establish a permanent home here. For this very reason they were living in Canada in closed communities and did not strive to learn the language either.

The first immigrants arrived in Canada from the United States. The offer of the Canadian government was very attractive: 160 acres of land without payment, the necessary equipment and loans. Besides, they had still fresh in their memory the trying experiences of the coalmines in Pennsylvania, and of the burning hot air in the forges of Pittsburgh.

The Government of Canada had employed a well-known Hungarian for recruitment, Count Pal Esterhazy, whose name survived in the history of Canadian Hungarians. The establishment and formation of the scattered and isolated Hungarian farm system is due chiefly to him and to the pioneer work of the first Hungarian immigrants.

The first year's crop was destroyed by bitter frost and by lack of experience. In the first winter they were threatened with death from starvation. Some of them took their chance to make a fortune as gold-diggers; others chose the nomadic life of trappers instead of agriculture which latter seemed to be quite hopeless.

Many true stores survived from the lives of pioneers of "Hungarian Canada" as that region was called at that time. These do not lack adventurous buffalo hunting and coloured stories related to Red Indians. The stories reflect that the natives and the Hungarian immigrants had always been living in peaceful co-existence and mutual respect for each other.

Contemporary descriptions bear evidence of natives' liking for Hungarian immigrants whom they held industrious and steady people, worthy to be relied on.

Towards the end of the century Hungarian settlements were formed, one after the other, preserving the memory of the fatherland in their names too: Esterhaza or Kaposvar, 1886; Halmok, 1896; Otthon, 1895; Bekevar, 1896. Mention must be made of a settlement, densely populated by Hungarians, which originally was founded by Swedes and named Stockholm. When the Hungarian population became predominant, they changed the name simply to a Hungarian one: Sokhalom. Thus runs the story of an evangelic parson named Jenő Ruzsa in his book written about the history of Canadian Hungarians.

In 1924, when the Government of the United States restricted immigration by the "quota" system, Canada remained open, primarily for those who had engaged themselves to go to Western Canada for agricultural work. The outset of mass immigration may be put at 1924. According to official data, 1,510 Hungarians emigrated to Canada between 1920 and 1925, while the period 1925-1931 numbered 28,628 immigrants. This wave of immigration consisted predominantly of peasants, but there were many craftsmen, artisans, merchants and intellectuals among them. Almost all of them headed for Winnipeg, the gate of Western Canada at that time. They were allotted there by agents to farms, mines, forest clearing and road-building. It was not agriculture that attracted them—they intended to cultivate it in their fatherland from savings earned in Canada—but higher wages paid in industry. For this very reason Canada was regarded by them as a transit station; the real destination was the United States.

The foundation of the communities of Hamilton, Windsor, Toronto, Niagara Falls, Brantford, Welland and Montreal may be put at this period.

All emigrants have disappointments in store, especially at the outset. The envisaged future is much more beautiful than the blunt facts of the present. Their embitterment and despair were even further increased by the great economic crisis. They had arrived only recently and had neither permanent homes nor any savings. In the "years of starvation," as the early thirties were so often called, many of them wandered from town to country, from agriculture to industry, and in the meantime they were gathering more and more in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. In 1941 Ontario numbered 22,000 Hungarians.

The Hungarian farms in Delhi and vicinity came into being as a result of economic depression. The peasants from the Szabolcs and Heves counties, being experts in tobacco-growing, moved to the farms of Belgian tobacco-growers. They had first been working there as hired men. Later this was changed by a half-and-half system. Those who stayed there became later well-to-do farmers, partly as a result of the war boom, partly because of the fantastic jump in land prices.

The number of Canadian Hungarians increased again after World War II, and especially at the end of 1956. The Canadian government then facilitated the immigration, especially for those who had relatives in the country. The majority of these immigrants were university or college graduates and well qualified skilled workers. Their adaptation to Canadian society and customs was easier and quicker than that of their predecessors.

Hungarians' emigration to Canada was a continuous phenomenon during the last century. The immigrants represented every social rank and political shade of Hungary's population. Their social organizations reflected a great variety. Hungarian immigrants founded various types of clubs, circles and associations. However, their characteristic organizations were the ecclesiastical ones, especially in Western Canada. At Kaposvar and Stockholm (Sokhalom) densely populated communities were founded by the Catholics leading a profound religious life. At the same time the Reformed did the same at Bekevar. The Hungarian Catholic church is one of the most beautiful ones in the Saskatchewan province, which is abounding in ecclesiastical buildings. But the two-steepled church of the Reformed is worthy of mention, too. That reminds us of the Great Church in Debrecen.

The first congregations in Ontario were organized at the end of the twenties amid economic depression and unemployment. Canadian churches strove to stimulate such endeavours by giving them financial and moral support. At the same time they also made efforts to get control over them.

In the middle of the thirties the leading part was taken from the churches by secular organizations, friendly societies, sick-relief funds, cultural and social circles. The oldest of them, the Canadian Hungarian Workers' Friendly Society, was formed in 1926 in Hamilton. This, by establishing provincial branches, developed into a nation-wide organization. Its seat was transferred to Toronto in 1934, and with the union of other organizations of similar purpose but different nationalities, assumed the name of Independent Sick-Relief Friendly Society. Under the guidance of the Canadian Hungarian Workers' and Farmers' Club it displayed large-scale social, cultural and political activity through its provincial branches. Many Hungarian organizations are functioning in Canada in our day, too.

The essence of the multicultural policy of Canada was put into words by Prime Minister Trudeau as follows: "Adherence to ethnical groups doesn't exclude or lessen inevitably loyalty to the nation and society." Through the Canadian multicultural program the cultural organizations of Canadian Hungarians can obtain subsidies, too. By means of this and certain subventions of the Hungarian government they have been successful in maintaining their national character. They have met with good results in the cultural field. This is reflected by a Hungarian faculty being set up at the University of Toronto; in the ever increasing interest of the second and third generations in Hungarian folk art, folk dances and songs, and as a whole in the history and present-day life of Hungary.

According to Canadian statistics, ten years ago 137,843 persons declared themselves to be Hungarians and more than 116,000 speak Hungarian in their homes too. It is natural that Hungary should not be indifferent to their fate, reserving an important role for them in developing political affiliations and cultural connections between the two countries.

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 2592)

SUMMARY OF THE SYMPOSIUM

OF THE PARLIAMENTARY AFFAIRS COMMISSION
(A.I.P.L.F.) HELD IN BRAZIL, APRIL 20-25, 1986WOMEN IN PARLIAMENTARY LIFE

In 1975, to mark International Women's Year, the AIPLF held a general discussion on the theme of "Women and Political Life". In July 1985, at the end of the decade organized by the United Nations on the problems of women, the Paris Bureau agreed to a proposal that the parliamentary affairs commission should hold a symposium on "Women in Parliamentary Life". It was thought that a study of this issue of continuing current interest would enable the sections of the AIPLF to evaluate and compare the development or stagnation, as the case may be, of the situation and role of women within legislative assemblies over the last ten years.

PARTICIPANTS:

Fourteen countries were represented. The Canadian participants were:

- The Honourable Martial Asselin, P.C., Senator
Speaker pro tempore of the Senate
Vice-Chairman of the AIPLF
Chairman of the Canadian Section of the AIPLF
- The Honourable Yvette Rousseau, Senator
- Mr. Alain Tardif, M.P.
- Mr. Jean J. Charest, M.P.
Deputy Chairman and Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House
- Mr. André Harvey, M.P.
- Mr. Nic Leblanc, M.P.
- Mr. Fernand Robichaud, M.P.
- Mrs. Monique B. Tardif, M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion
- and the staff of the Parliamentary Relations Secretariat

DEVELOPMENT OF THE THEME:GENERAL INFORMATION ON THE PRESENCE OF WOMEN IN PARLIAMENTS

The presence of women in Parliaments is determined by different realities which are influenced by historical, political and cultural factors. Before broaching any in-depth analysis on the theme "Women in Parliamentary Life", it was considered desirable to present from the beginning of the symposium and in plenary session, basic data which would be helpful in understanding and measuring the place assigned to women in the parliamentary world. In the comparative perspective which is ours, each section specified the following points, among others:

- Date on which women acquired the right to vote and the right to hold office.
- Date on which the first women were elected to Parliament.
- Presence of women candidates and percentage of women elected in the last legislative elections, taking account, where applicable, of variations according to political party.
- Presence of women in the leadership organs of assemblies and parliamentary groups.
- Sociological data on the constituencies in which women were elected (urban/rural; capital/province; working-class/residential).

This list only provided an indication, and all other significant general data could be introduced in the section reports which, taken together, provided the delegates participating later in the working groups with a good reference tool.

ESTABLISHMENT OF TWO WORKING GROUPS

"Women in Parliamentary Life" suggested the treatment of two general sub-themes which could be developed in working groups:

- Women's Access to Parliament
- The Role and Functions Assigned to Women in Parliaments

The suggested development relates to the two most classic and worrisome aspects of the theme in this symposium. Without wishing to be exhaustive, it appeared to us interesting to underline some of the questions related thereto.

1st Working Group: Women's Access to Parliament

Despite a recent evolution, the nomination of female candidates still appears to be a difficult undertaking, against which both a traditional political vision and a certain sociological sluggishness are working. Thus, in considering the impact of political factors on women's access to Parliament, a general observation emerges: very much in the minority, women are often candidates in the constituencies which are the most difficult to win. This observation raises a number of questions:

- To what extent has this situation evolved, or not evolved, over the last 20 years?
- In multi-party systems, does the nomination of female candidates vary according to the different traditions of the political parties, their ideological orientation or the age of their activists? And what role is assigned to female candidates in one-party systems?
- Has there been or is there now a real relationship between the type of electoral system and the percentage of female candidates?

The nomination of candidates is related to the more general problem of activism and the role which women play in political groups:

- Can we still speak today of women's disengagement from politics? And when this occurs, can the source of this disinterest be found in the form of political life built solely according to male canons?
- Do the "women's organizations" or "women's movements" within political parties favour women's activism and facilitate their access to nomination as candidates in legislative elections?

In defining the role and place occupied by these organizations and "movements", it seemed interesting to try to determine whether these exclusive zones, which might be called "female ghettos", are creating a danger for themselves, or whether, on the contrary, such movements help to improve the collective expression of women and give them a wider hearing within the political world.

Beyond this political impact, there exists in all societies a greater or lesser degree of sociological sluggishness which tends to dissuade the political parties from presenting female candidates, candidates judged to be liabilities vis-à-vis a certain electorate. In the face of this traditional attitude, are mindsets evolving, and, if so, what are the determining factors:

- Is there a correlation between the situation of women within society, their presence in the labour market and the attitude of voters toward female candidates?
- To what extent have actions supporting the rights of women, such as the creation at the national level of specialized ministries or the organization by the UN of a decade on these questions, influenced these attitudes and, in particular, helped to improve the presence of women in Parliaments?

Sensitized to the under-representation of women in Parliaments, generally as a result of pressure from the women themselves, political parties have been induced to propose measures favouring their nomination. It would be helpful to retrace the circumstances in which these measures were taken, their impact and their future prospects.

- What proposals were advanced and which were acted on?

—Analysis of the implementation and effectiveness of regulations in this area, according to the political situation:

- Parties announced as winners or losers
- Snap elections or elections prepared for long in advance
- Elections in a period of crisis
- Correlation with municipal, regional or supranational elections.
- Can the internal regulation of political groups lead to the militant and organizational conformity of parties vis-à-vis female candidates?
- What is the meaning and significance given by the political parties to the promotion which they give to female candidates?
- Does the absence of internal regulation in the parties signify status quo and stagnation?

2nd Working Group: The Role and Functions Assigned to Women in Parliaments

In dealing with this subject, it is necessary to consider, first, the percentage of women candidates and the percentage of women elected, and to present a socio-professional analysis of parliamentary women.

A minority in the Parliaments, do women have access to all of the areas dealt with and all the functions exercised within Assemblies:

- Are women confined to the social areas traditionally considered more feminine (culture, family, environment, et cetera) or do they have broad access to so-called "technical" or purely political areas? In this research, it is interesting to identify the committees on which they participate and the reports which they are entrusted with. Moreover, we may ponder over the nature of the debates in which they participate, and whether or not we see any evolution in this area. Finally, are there differences in behaviour according to the political groups over the course of recent history?
- Do women participate in the leadership organs of Parliaments as well as in the executives of committees? Are they asked to lead national or international missions? In what areas?
- Do parliamentary groups entrust to women internal functions of co-ordination or representation (Speaker, spokesperson, whip, et cetera)?
- The importance which the collaboration between bureaucrats and parliamentarians can have is another reason to ponder over the importance and place assigned to women within the parliamentary administration.

Beyond this analysis lies the question of relations between men and women parliamentarians.

—Are these relations established on the basis of competition or of dialogue? Although they are a minority in this traditionally male world, are women able to say “other” things or say things “differently”, in all areas? Finally, has the presence of women in Parliament contributed to the development of new modes of expression?

The symposium ended with the adoption in plenary session of the resolutions already approved by the Commissions.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 12, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

INTERIM REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS
COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-67 Tabled

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Twenty-second report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting the subject matter of Bill C-67, to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act. I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see p. 2606.)

CANADA PENSION PLAN FEDERAL COURT ACT

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-116

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-116, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I assume that the chairman of the committee feels that he has the necessary time and person-power to deal with this pre-study.

Senator Doody: As usual, honourable senators, the chairman has demonstrated himself to be completely available and absolutely anxious to get at this particular piece of legislation.

Senator Frith: He has the full support of his troops?

Senator Doody: So he assures me.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Jack Marshall, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Order of Reference of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, dated February 6, 1985, pertaining to a study on the marketing of fish in Canada and all implications thereof, be deemed to have been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries; and

That the Order of Reference of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, dated March 26, 1985, pertaining to the impact of the recommendations contained in its Report on soil and water conservation in Canada, entitled: "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future", tabled in the Senate on November 6, 1984, be deemed to have been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FARM DEBT REVIEW

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-117

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e) moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-117, intituled: "An Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-117, to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors, was introduced in the House of Commons today. The subject matter of this bill is of some concern to a great number of senators and we would like to have it referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

My problem is a minor but technical one. I have not been in a position to discuss this matter with the chairman of that committee, or with the deputy chairman, since I do not yet know who these particular people are. However, I have no doubt that they will be most happy to accept this bill.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 17, 1986, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

GASOLINE PRICING

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My question arises from a press report that appeared on June 11 of this year in Le Journal de Montréal and relates to the pricing of gasoline in Canada.

In that report a Mr. Robinson of Petro-Canada said that Petro-Canada should make a good profit this year. He went on to say that one of the reasons for that was that usually refining companies tried to make half a cent per litre net profit on their operation. He went on to state further that, because there has been a reduction in the price of crude, now, six months or more after the dramatic drop in the price of crude oil, the refining companies, including Petro-Canada, which has 20 per cent of the retail outlets in Canada and has a 25 per cent share of the market, will keep three cents per litre profit.

My concern, honourable senators, is that in New Brunswick especially, notwithstanding the fact that we have a modern refinery in our province, and the fact that we have a long sea coast and a lot of our communities, the towns and cities, are serviced by water, we have noticed hardly any drop in the retail price of gasoline since the dramatic worldwide drop in the price of crude. It has gone down by only a dribble since last year.

Would the Leader of the Government take the matter up with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who keeps mentioning a free market situation? Surely, there should be some limit to the free market and how much consumers have to pay. I am especially concerned about the amount for which the farmers and fishermen in the Atlantic provinces will be gouged by the major oil companies under this kind of régime.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I believe this subject is coming to the top of the agenda these days, honourable senators, because we know that there is a report expected from the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission in the next few days, which I am sure will comment on this matter.

We also know that the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources is looking into the energy question and has raised a number of questions along the same lines. Therefore, I am certain the matter will be at the top of the agenda before very long.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

THE ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—MARKET INTERVENTION— ROLE OF GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first of three delayed answers I have is in reply to a long discussion involving the Leader of the Opposition and the Honourable Senator Sinclair about the Canadian dollar and the economy, which took place a little while ago.

(The answer follows:)

The question was asked if it was the Governor of the Bank of Canada who was responsible for the actions of the authorities in the foreign exchange market in early February. In carrying out official operations in the foreign exchange market the Bank of Canada is acting as the Government's fiscal agent and under general guidelines from it. To reveal the tactics of the authorities with regard to foreign exchange market intervention and its timing would be less than prudent or appropriate and would run the risk of undermining its effectiveness, particularly in circumstances where the market is heavily influenced by the actions of speculators. Nevertheless, there is a continuous process of consultation on exchange rate policy matters between the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance and that in operating forcefully in the foreign exchange market the Bank was doing so with the Government's knowledge and approval.

The question was also asked: Why had not some firm but gentle response been made in the market earlier so that the very costly intervention which took place might not have at least been reduced somewhat, if not avoided? As previously remarked, it would not be appropriate to comment on the extent and timing of official operations in the market. The impression that the Government only took action to resist declines in the currency in early February is not an accurate one. The monthly press releases of Canada's official reserves, for example, while not providing details on intervention, suggest that the authorities were resisting downward pressure on the exchange rate. Increases in Canadian short-term interest rates relative to comparable rates in the United States also suggest use of monetary policy to resist untoward movements in the exchange rate.

There also seems to be some uncertainty concerning the scale of foreign borrowing recently undertaken by the Government to bolster our international reserves. In early February, the Minister of Finance announced that Canada would borrow some U.S. $2.4 billion to add to reserves. These consisted of drawings totalling $1 billion on the standby credit facilities which the Government maintains with Canadian and foreign banks, a $1 billion public issue in the Eurobond market and an 80 billion Euro-yen issue—equivalent to about U.S. $400 million.

The running or net costs of borrowing to add to reserves is much less than those associated with the borrowing alone, since the additional reserves are held in the form of interest-earning assets. If the reserves are subsequently used for intervention purposes, this adds to the Government's holdings of Canadian dollars and reduces the need to raise funds domestically.

Senator Sinclair, while expressing satisfaction at the results of the authorities' recent initiatives regarding the dollar, expressed concern that the results would be temporary unless action were taken to deal with more fundamental economic problems. It should be noted, however, that it was precisely because the decline in the dollar did not appear to be warranted by Canada's economic fundamentals, but rather to speculative excesses and short-term capital outflows based on misreadings of our economic prospects and the thrust of the Government's economic policies, that the authorities undertook the actions that they did.

PRIVACY

REPORTED GIVING OF INFORMATION RE UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my second reply is to a question raised on March 5 last by Senator Bonnell regarding unemployment and the giving out of names to Peat Marwick.

(The answer follows:)

It is true that the names and telephone numbers of some unemployment insurance recipients, but not addresses, were given to a private firm, Peat Marwick, for the purpose of conducting a survey.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration initiated an investigation into this complaint. When it was discovered that proper procedures were not followed, she took the following actions. She recalled all the information from Peat Marwick and she undertook and directed the department that this not happen again and directed the deputy minister to put in place procedures to ensure that it will not happen again.

[Senator Roblin.]

TRANSPORT

AIRPORT SECURITY—TESTING OF GUARDS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my third reply is to a question raised by the Honourable Senator Marsden regarding airport security.

(The answer follows:)

On April 28, 1986, a program of testing of the pre-board security screening personnel commenced and was carried out by Transport Canada security officials.

The test was prepared and administered by Airport and Civil Aviation Security staff, Transport Canada.

The test programs were based on the five training programs produced by Transport Canada for use by Canadian air carriers and security guard companies for training or pre-board security screening personnel;

1. "The airport security officer"
2. "Searching persons and baggage by hand"
3. "Use of metal detection units"
4. "Use and operation of X-ray inspection unit (SPL 1000 Model)"
5. "Operation of X-ray inspection unit (Scanray Model)"

The tests are made up of two sections;

Section 1 was designed to test the guards' theoretical knowledge of a security officer's job and involved a total of 40 questions (combined multiple choice, true or false, and short answers);

(a) 20 questions on authority, responsibilities and response actions.

(b) 20 Questions on use of X-ray units were extracted from Parts I, II, III IV, V of the training programs.

Candidates who obtained a pass mark of 75 per cent were permitted to undergo Section 2 testing.

Candidates not achieving 75 per cent in Section 1 written test were required to undergo additional training before being re-tested on a different questionnaire. A pass mark of 75 per cent was required on the second test.

Section 2 involved practical testing designed to evaluate knowledge of detection equipment, interpretation of X-ray images and physical search techniques. Testers evaluated candidates' ability to find concealed weapons and simulated explosives. A 100 per cent detection rate was required to pass.

The same test was given across the country regardless of the company and/or contract.

The following are the results of the combined sections 1 and 2 tests at the 10 major airports—Gander, Halifax, Mirabel, Dorval, Ottawa, Pearson, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver—as of May 23, 1986 (total combined of section 1 and 2 tests):

Successful 89 per cent

Failure 11 per cent

A thorough analysis of the test results has not been completed. Discrepancies have arisen in airport reports as a result of a number of candidates who failed the section 1 test deciding not to continue to work as a security officer and not taking the additional training and retesting.

The pay rates for the 10 major airports, as of May 29, 1986, are as follows:

Gander $4.75	Pearson $4.00
Halifax $5.20	Winnipeg $4.30
Dorval $5.50	Calgary $4.15
Mirabel $5.50	Edmonton $4.15
Ottawa $4.00	Vancouver $6.50

Because of competitive bidding on the contracts security personnel inevitably receive the minimum wage which may be as low as $4.00 per hour.

[Translation]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved third reading of Bill C-86, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[English]

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1986-87

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved second reading of Bill C-115, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending 31st March, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill before you today is the Appropriation Bill No. 2, 1986-87. The bill in its standard form was dealt with yesterday by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. This bill provides for the release of the balance of the main estimates for 1986-87 amounting to some $27.4 billion.

The main estimates were tabled in the Senate on March 4, 1986, and were immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. These estimates were discussed in committee with the President of the Treasury Board and his officials on April 23, 1986. As I said, the report has been before the Senate for some time and its adoption was moved yesterday.

Honourable senators, I also have the figures for supply to date for 1986-87 and the estimates tabled to date for 1986-87, which I will ask to be included in today's Debates of the Senate.

I would certainly undertake to provide any additional information that honourable senators might wish to have.

(The tables follow:)

SUPPLY TO DATE FOR 1986-87

One Appropriation Act has been approved in respect of estimates for 1986-87:

Supply Approved to Date

Appropriation Act No. 1, which granted Interim Supply for April, May and June including 34 additional proportions, based on the Main Estimates for 1986-87

$10,169,354,842.40

Awaiting Approval

Supply for the balance of Main Estimates for 1986-87

$27,380,819,670.60

TOTAL

$37,550,174,513.00

ESTIMATES TABLED TO DATE FOR 1986-87

Main Estimates	To be Voted	Statutory	Total
	(in thousands of dollars)
Budgetary	$37,470,047	$69,537,801	$107,007,848
Non-Budgetary	80,124	344,933	425,057
	$37,550,171	$69,882,734	$107,432,905

● (1410)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there is no reason not to pass this bill, but I would like to have a look at the schedules in case there are some comments I can make about them. I assume I have the assurance of the sponsor of the bill that there are no discrepancies between the bill and the estimates that we have already approved when we adopted the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Do I have that assurance?

Senator Doody: Yes, I have no hesitation in providing that assurance.

Senator Frith: Well, in that case, honourable senators, I will move the adjournment of the debate in order to have a chance to look at these schedules. We can deal with it next week, and I do not anticipate that there will be any difficulty in giving the bill second reading and, if necessary, third reading in time for Royal Assent next week.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Godfrey, for the adoption of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders (Membership of Cabinet Ministers on Senate Committees), presented in the Senate on 14th May, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Godfrey).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, you may recall that I adjourned this debate because I disagreed with not only the report of the committee but with some of the remarks that Senator Roblin made when he spoke.

As far as the report of the committee is concerned, of course I agree with their conclusion that cabinet ministers should not be members of a committee.

[Senator Doody.]

What I take exception to is that part of the report which makes an exception for a cabinet minister who is Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Honourable senators may recall that I originally spoke on this matter when I asked Senator Molgat, the chairman of the committee, whether he would consider this question, on October 10 last—that is eight months ago. Things grind slowly around here.

At that time I quoted Senator Flynn, and I think the immortal remarks of Senator Flynn bear quoting again.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: The immortal Senator Flynn!

Senator Godfrey: We go back to Tuesday, November 4, 1980—and this again refers to a discussion as to whether cabinet ministers should be members of Senate committees. I objected at that time. In fact, I have been objecting for some considerable time to cabinet ministers' being members of committees. Senator Flynn said:

I would join with Senator Godfrey's remarks regarding Senator Argue's being on the committee. He is a minister of the Crown and, as such, he is bound by cabinet solidarity. He is in no position to voice any independent opinion. I am appalled at the suggestion that he be a member of the committee.

Then I started to quote from Senator Roblin's remarks, and Senator Roblin is, of course, an enthusiastic supporter of Senator Flynn. He made statements to the same effect.

As I was quoting Senator Roblin, the Speaker pro tempore interrupted me. He said:

I think your preamble has gone on much too long. You should be ready to put your question.

I mention this because I want to take this opportunity to say that I really do not think that the Speaker, or the Speaker pro tempore, should interfere unless he has heard an objection. We operate on consensus. We have very loose interpretation. I think that when Senator Perrault rather stretched matters, an objection was made.

Senator Flynn: The rule of relevancy always applies.

Senator Roblin: "Consensus" means what the Liberal Party wants.

Senator Argue: That is a little unfair.

Senator Godfrey: By tradition, in this house the Speaker does not make a ruling or call a person on a matter of time unless there has been an objection from a senator. I simply want to make that point.

Being timid and shy, the interruption from the Speaker did have an effect on me and I cut short my quotation from Senator Roblin's remarks.

Senator Molgat: So give it to us now!

Senator Godfrey: So, now I will give it to you eight months later. He said:

I don't think that Senator Argue can be excused in any way from that same obligation. I don't think the leader of the house can in any way say that this rule does not apply to him—although he is not here to speak for himself—and that he can operate outside the rule of cabinet solidarity and cabinet responsibility, because I simply don't believe it.

So, back in 1980 Senator Roblin made his pronouncement, a very wise pronouncement, that the Leader of the Government is a member of the cabinet and the same criticisms would apply to him. As I think I pointed out before, my motion was not directed at Senator Roblin. I do not think there is any problem with the way in which Senator Roblin conducts himself when he attends committee meetings. What I was concerned about was the previous occasions when the Leader of the Government also represented the majority in the house. Senator Roblin can attend a committee meeting and make an objection if he wishes, but he does not command the majority. I was looking ahead two years from now when the situation will be changed and the Leader of the Government in the Senate will command the majority. In those circumstances I do not think—and I keep stressing the independence of Senate committees—that he should interfere or try to sway people. That is what I am thinking of, and that is why I object to that exception.

I have had several discussions with Senator Roblin. Senator Roblin initially said, "I don't care. It is fine by me if they change the rules." Then he said in the last discussion I had with him—and this was before the committee—"I do not think it is very fair that I should be excluded from the membership of the committee if the Leader of the Opposition is not also excluded." That is particularly true in this case, because the Leader of the Opposition commands the majority of the members of the committee. He can, perhaps, influence the independence of the committee. I thought that was very reasonable.

● (1420)

Senator Frith: What does that have to do with cabinet solidarity?

Senator Godfrey: I realize that it does not have anything to do with cabinet solidarity, but it has something to do with the independence of the committee. In the end I thought that that was not unreasonable and that if Senator Roblin was willing to make that kind of a deal, it was not a bad one.

Senator Frith: No deal!

Senator Godfrey: I put the proposition to the committee, but it did not agree. I do not believe that Senator MacEachen has turned up at any committee meeting that I have attended, so it is not a very practical thing.

An Hon. Senator: Oh, oh!

Senator Godfrey: Senator Roblin made some remarks that I do not agree with. On June 10 he said, as it is reported in Hansard at page 2575:

—I stand up for his right to attend the committee.

He was speaking about cabinet ministers not being allowed to attend, not the Leader of the Government. He went on to say:

We know that it is the right of every senator, whether he or she is a member of a committee or not, to be there, to attend the committee, to take part in the proceedings, to speak and to have full opportunity to express himself or herself, to state policy and whatever else he or she wants to say, but not to vote.

Why do I object to that statement? To begin with, one of my objections about five or six years ago was about a cabinet minister who was a member of a committee and who on one occasion turned up for a vote in the committee when he had not been at a single hearing—it was something that had been going on for a few months—merely to support the government. After the vote he disappeared and we never saw him again. Now that we have excluded cabinet ministers from voting, I do not think that they will be bothered to turn up at committee meetings, unless it is their own department that is involved. Let us face the fact that they are just too busy. Of course, if it is their own department that is involved, then they should be like every other cabinet minister, whether they are a member of the Senate or a member of the House of Commons. They should be up there giving evidence, stating their policy, subjecting themselves to questions, and when he or she is finished, he or she and his or her minions can depart. The cabinet minister should not stay behind afterwards to continue to argue his or her position. That is the reason why I do not think that Senator Roblin really gave the matter thought when he made that statement, because that is how a cabinet minister in the Senate should conduct himself or herself, and not attend the meeting and stay on afterwards to argue the matter.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT
MATTER OF BILL C-96—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Seventeenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (subject-matter of the Bill C-96), intitled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977"), presented in the Senate on 10th June, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Kelly).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday we had a brief discussion on this bill here in the chamber, and at the time I indicated that Senator Kelly was unavoidably absent. He had indicated to me that he would be prepared to have somebody else speak in his absence. I understand that Senator Macquarrie is prepared to speak to the matter.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, it is very much like sending out for the light artillery. I am very sorry that Senator Kelly is unable to be here today, but I shall do the best I can. To indicate how hard that might be, I shall recall an incident. I was going out the Senate door here with a great friend of mine from P.E.I., one of those bright lawyers who knows me well and who used to be my campaign chairman and my constituency president. Coming in the door was Dr. John Godfrey, a distinguished educator from Nova Scotia and the son of one of our illustrious colleagues. This polite young man thanked me, and my nosey friend from Charlottetown said, "What did he thank you for?" I said I had made remarks about him when he was a witness in the National Finance Committee a few days before. They were remarks of praise, which he deserved. So, this lawyer, like all lawyers, immediately lost that train of thought and said, "Good God, are you on the National Finance Committee of the Canadian Senate? Have we come to that?"

So, here we are—and, even worse, I am speaking for our distinguished deputy chairman. Not to compound the felony, I will make sure that I retain my usual brevity.

I have enjoyed more than I expected the time I have spent on the National Finance Committee—although I do not want the whip to keep me there for too long! The discussions on education have been most enlightening, most helpful to me. I had spent many years in that field, but there are people on the committee who are much more up to date on current trends. When Senator Stewart, from Antigonish-Guysborough, Senator Hicks and Senator Marsden get going with some of those visiting academics, we have a very high level seminar. It has been useful, and, God knows, it is a profoundly important problem, this whole question of the federal involvement in the educational spectrum of the country.

I suppose that all of us on the committee feel about Bill C-96 as Oliver Twist felt: We would like to have some more. But the reality of the situation is such that it is hard to look upon that as a practical expression or a practical call for performance.

I was very much impressed by the manner in which the Honourable Barbara McDougall presented Bill C-96 to the National Finance Committee. We all know that some ministers will do anything, apparently, to delay the passage of their legislation. I have seen them filibuster in the House of Commons; I have seen them turn an ordinary interested, inquisitive member of a committee into a hostile one. But that sort of thing does not happen with this minister, who is always very well informed, very aware of the importance of the people to whom she is speaking; and, I believe, comes across as a person with compassion for the totality of the measure and its effect upon our society. Indeed, there were times in the meeting we had on the twenty-first that some members of the committee and Mrs. McDougall were waxing biblical—and I thought that was not bad at 6 o'clock in a legislature that is not given to much sitting at night.

I commend to any odd few in the Senate who might not have read the National Finance Committee's report No. 51 that there is therein a very incisive discussion and explanation of Bill C-96. The report of the committee, which was tabled on June 10, is a very short one and I believe it makes itself clear. I was very much impressed by the third paragraph, dealing with the question of secrecy. It is a product of the times, I suppose, that in this tight and yet extensive interface between the provincial and federal levels of government things are given by the national executive to the provincial executive which they will deny to their own legislatures.

I regret that Senator Perrault is not here; I tried to get an innocent piece of information about Irish moss some years ago and that was denied me by the bureaucracy of the Dominion of Canada, as it then was. I actually had to go to all of the four provinces of the Atlantic region to find the information which I sought and which really could have been obtained from someone in one department of the federal government. This sort of thing is touched upon here and was dealt with at the meeting we had with the Honourable Mrs. McDougall. That is something which will be on our minds and on the minds of legislators for some time to come.

• (1430)

I think all honourable senators are aware that in terms of the operational performance of the government through the year, we have interposed an extra layer of government and it will cause misunderstandings. One of these was referred to in this committee.

I will not speak any longer, honourable senators, because I think that this matter has been handled very well by the minister and by the committee. The report was concise, explicit and definite. I commend this measure to all of my honourable senatorial colleagues.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is this not the consideration of the report rather than the adoption of it?

Senator Doody: This report is on the pre-study of the subject matter of Bill C-96. Usually, as was said earlier, reports of this sort are simply tabled, but in this particular case you wanted to consider it, so I do not know where it goes from here.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, just to be sure there is no one else, particularly on this side of the chamber, who wishes to speak to this matter, I will move the adjournment in my name until next week.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 17, 1986, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX*(See p. 2598)PAROLE ACT
PENITENTIARY ACT*INTERIM REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-67 TABLED

THURSDAY, June 12, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to table its

TWENTY-SECOND REPORT

Your Committee to which was referred the subject-matter of Bill C-67, intituled "An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, December 17, 1985, examined the said subject-matter and now submits an interim report thereon. This report is intended to supplement the Committee's interim report of May 14 1986 on the subject-matter of Bill C-67.

1. Retrospectivity of Detention Orders

The provisions regarding the detention process, as provided for in Bill C-67, would apply not only to inmates incarcerated after the legislation is proclaimed, but would also be applicable to inmates who are earning or have earned remission of sentence when the Bill comes into force. We are opposed to this retrospective application of the detention proposals.

2. Early review for day parole

In the course of visits to penitentiaries and institutions in the Prairie Region and in the Kingston area, members of the Committee had the opportunity to discuss Bill C-67 with staff members. Many engaged in resocialization made comments as to what they saw as the impracticality of the proposal to inaugurate mandatory early review for day parole at one-sixth of sentence. In their view, the National Parole Board is highly dependent on material prepared by Correctional Services Canada personnel. Such material cannot adequately be prepared in time for day parole review. This situation would not improve if such reviews should become mandatory. Thus, early review could become no more than a formal exercise. We urge further consideration to this provision of the Bill.

3. Visits to Institutions

We attach Reports of Visits to Institutions in the Prairie Region and the Kingston Region by the Honourable Senators Bonnell, Doyle, Fairbairn, Hastings, Nurgitz and Stanbury. (see appendices A and B)

Respectfully submitted,

P. DEREK LEWIS,
Chairman.

APPENDIX A TO THE REPORT

REPORT ON A VISIT TO PRAIRIE PENITENTIARIES
BY SENATORS DOYLE, FAIRBAIRN, HASTINGS, AND NURGITZ

On behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, in its study of the subject-matter of Bills C-67 and C-68, we visited four penal institutions:

1. Stony Mountain Penitentiary,
Stony Mountain, Manitoba;
2. Saskatchewan Penitentiary,
Prince Albert, Saskatchewan;
3. The Regional Psychiatric Centre,
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; and
4. Drumheller Institution,
Drumheller, Alberta.

We had the opportunity, during our visits, to discuss the proposed legislation with inmate committees, wardens, and members of the staff of the institutions.⁽¹⁾ We found all with whom we came in contact during these meetings to be helpful and well-informed; and we are grateful for their contribution to our understanding of some of the implications of these Bills.

This report is primarily intended to be a summary of the views expressed to us on the proposed legislation during our visits. The concerns of the inmates will be reviewed first, followed by a summary of those of the penitentiary wardens and staff. The report concludes with a brief account of some other matters which came to our attention as a result of our visits.

THE INMATE COMMITTEES

The overriding concern of the inmate committees is with that part of Bill C-67 which would introduce a system for "gating" potentially dangerous inmates—i.e., preventing their release on mandatory supervision, and detaining them in custody until warrant expiry.⁽²⁾ We were told that there is, among inmates, a great deal of anxiety and tension being generated by the possible establishment of a gating process. Many inmates deeply resent any further adjustment to the remission system, which is characterized as a vital safety valve in the penitentiaries, and which serves as an incentive to nondisruptive behaviour. There is a fear that gating, because it has the potential to render earned remission ineffectual, could result in a decline of order and discipline. Even inmates not directly affected by gating, such as those serving life sentences who do not benefit from remission, submit that they would suffer adverse consequences. They contend that they would have to deal with a more restive and potentially more violent population of offenders, who would react to the imposition of restrictions on release.

It was conceded by some inmates that those aspects of gating which are potentially damaging to institutional stability might be justified if their implementation genuinely served to protect the public. But they were doubtful that holding inmates for the last third of their sentences would serve to do any more than merely delay the problem. Indeed, it could result in the release of an even angrier, more hostile, and more violent inmate than one who is released on his mandatory supervision date, and in release without the benefit of supervision. In expressing these concerns, the inmates echoed the views of many witnesses who appeared before the Legislative Committee of the House of Commons.

Another submission by some of the inmates was that the gating procedures would be over-used. They fear that institutional staff will use gating as another tool to coerce appropriate behaviour, and that inmates who are not necessarily dangerous (in the sense of being likely to "cause death or serious harm" as required by the Bill) will be threatened by the process. Even if gating is used with restraint, they fear that an inevitable "failure" (i.e. the commission of a violent offence by an inmate who was not gated) will lead to its much harsher application in the future; and that other legitimate conditional release procedures will become tainted, and will be more restrictively applied.

The inmates have little confidence that the National Parole Board will fairly and thoroughly administer gating. They feel that the Board does not give sufficient consideration to information supplied by custodial officials. Beyond this, they doubt the ability of any group or person to accurately predict dangerousness. Every inmate group expressed the preference that the question of gating should be decided by the courts. They feel that the procedures in the courts are more equitable, that judges could look into the question of the detention of the potentially dangerous with more objectivity, and that the appeal procedures in the court system should be available.

Most of the inmates with whom we met agreed that there does exist a problem with some inmates who are obviously and seriously dangerous, and who, under the existing law, must be released on mandatory supervision once they earn sufficient remission. They submit, however, that the gating procedures in Bill C-67 would do very little to deal with such inmates. Holding them in a penitentiary until sentence expiry only protects society for a brief period. Some form of indeterminate sentencing, preferably administered by the courts along the lines of the dangerous offender provisions of the Criminal Code, would be preferable. In the case of mentally disturbed offenders, more effective treatment is needed. In addition, they submit that any process of detention should be effected at the sentencing stage, and not with a "shot gun" approach near the end of a sentence.

⁽¹⁾ The names of the wardens, and of the members of the inmate committees, are appended to this report.

⁽²⁾ The National Parole Board has no jurisdiction over the release of an inmate on mandatory supervision, which occurs when an inmate has "earned" enough remission of sentence—usually at the $\frac{3}{4}$ point of sentence for those inmates who are not serving minimum sentences. This is to be contrasted with release on parole, over which the Board has a discretion, and which is theoretically available, in most cases, after $\frac{1}{2}$ of a sentence has been served. It is only after an actual release on mandatory supervision that the board can reassert control by suspending or revoking the release for misconduct. "Gating" would give the Board the power to refuse release on mandatory supervision to those inmates whom it considers dangerous; thus compelling them to serve the remainder of sentence in detention. The term itself derives from an unsuccessful attempt by the Board, in 1983, to employ the existing Parole Act to prevent the release on mandatory supervision of certain allegedly dangerous inmates "at the prison gate".

One further matter upon which the inmates were in agreement was their opposition to the retroactivity of the gating procedure—the fact that it will apply to inmates who will have already started serving sentences when the legislation comes into force. They view this as fundamentally unfair, as a changing of the rules in mid-stream, directed at inmates who have been led to adjust their behaviour based on a seemingly fixed set of assumptions as to remission and sentence length.

Most of the concerns of the inmate committees have to do with the gating procedure. Less comment was made about the so-called "one shot mandatory supervision" amendments in Bill C-67, which would preclude certain inmates from earning further remission after having their release on mandatory supervision revoked.⁽¹⁾ Where comment was made as to this aspect of the Bill, it was generally to the effect that this adjustment to the remission system would also increase the level of tension in the institutions. It was also speculated that some inmates will choose not to be released on mandatory supervision (a choice open to them under subs. 15(3) of the Parole Act), rather than be subject to the imposition of the strictures inherent in "one shot" release. Another matter upon which there was comment was the proposal in Bill C-67 to inaugurate mandatory review by the Board at the 1/6 point of sentence, for purposes of day parole consideration. This was generally viewed as not having much impact on the number of day parole releases already made.

THE STAFF OF THE INSTITUTIONS

A striking feature of the views expressed to us by staff at the institutions is the large degree of concurrence between those views and those of the inmates with respect to the proposed legislation. It was generally agreed that the introduction of gating and one shot mandatory supervision may serve to increase the tensions inside penitentiaries. It was speculated that it may be necessary to create special areas within the institutions for the detention of gated inmates, in an effort to avoid a disruptive effect on the rest of the inmate population. Some of the staff with whom we spoke also agreed that gating may do little more than delay violent behaviour, and that consideration should be given to longer term custody of those who are obviously dangerous or mentally ill. However, the staff at the penitentiaries indicated that they will be prepared to implement the legislation upon its proclamation.

⁽¹⁾ Under existing law, if an inmate's mandatory supervision is revoked, he must return to the penitentiary to serve the balance of his sentence. But on his return, he is not precluded from earning further remission on that balance. Bill C-67 originally would have forbidden revoked inmates originally incarcerated for some violent offences from earning further remission after a revocation. Thus, the appellation of "one shot" mandatory supervision. It was amended in the Legislative Committee of the House of Commons to restrict its application to those inmates who are formally considered for gating but who are not, in fact, detained.

One disturbing feature of our contact with penitentiary staff was the frank admission by some officials that they viewed the proposed gating procedure as something which could be used as an incentive to proper behaviour by inmates, and to their participation in rehabilitative and other programmes within the penitentiary. The clear implication of this reasoning is that an inmate who is non-cooperative could find himself being threatened with the gating procedure. While this may be an understandable approach by staff, and while nothing in the proposed legislation would preclude this possible use of gating, it appears to be somewhat at odds with the express purpose of the legislation. That purpose is the "protection of the public".

The proposals are, in part, intended to allow for the continued detention of inmates who are not disruptive and who may participate in programs, but who are nonetheless deemed to be dangerous. If penitentiary staff are going to hold out gating as an incentive to "proper" behaviour, some difficulty might be caused when inmates who respond to this incentive are later detained, notwithstanding their behaviour in the institution. It may not be possible to use gating as both a means of detention to protect the public, and as a tool for the encouragement of cooperative behaviour, without causing some dissension and conflict within penitentiaries. If gating is to have any positive effect, its objectives and means of operation must be clearly enunciated both to the staff at penitentiaries, and to the inmates. Otherwise, a procedure ostensibly intended to protect society could result in the disruption of life in the penitentiary.

On the issue of "one shot" mandatory supervision, the staff with whom we spoke indicated that they did not think that it would have much impact on the institutions, particularly in view of the narrowing in scope of its application by reason of amendments made in the House committee. On the question of early review for day parole, few were prepared to predict how many inmates it might benefit.

OTHER MATTERS

During our visit we were shown a range of cells at a penitentiary in which there is "double-bunking"—the incarceration, in one six by eight foot cell, of two inmates. We found this to be very disturbing, particularly in light of the fact that it has been estimated that 26% of the inmate population in the Prairie Region may have to be double bunked by 1992. (The percentage, apparently, may be even higher in other regions). We emerged convinced that a solution to this unacceptable practice must be found.

We were also shown a number of inmate programmes. At Stony Mountain, we visited the industry programmes. At Saskatchewan Penitentiary we were shown the innovative programmes that have been initiated there to assist inmates who have problems with alcohol and drug abuse, as well as the Special Program Unit. Warden O'Sullivan, and Messrs. Tuck, Peters and Hicks, members of his staff, are to be commended for their leadership and support in these areas. We were also impressed with the facilities and the work being done in the Regional Psychiatric Centre in Saskatoon, which is also an accredited hospital. Finally, at Drumheller we were fortunate to be invited to attend a session of the Native Lifeskills programme, which appears to genuinely assist native inmates to overcome some of the particular problems they face in prison.

CONCLUSION

If our trip has accomplished nothing else, it has at least refuted the allegation made in the Legislative Committee of the House of Commons that inmates were not opposed, or were at most indifferent, to the changes proposed in Bills C-67 and C-68. At least in the Prairie institutions which we visited, there is a profound opposition to several elements of the proposed legislation. We also feel that our visit has served a useful purpose in both informing the inmates and staff about the legislation and committee proceedings, and to giving them a forum in which to express their concerns. This is particularly true with respect to inmates, who were not provided with an opportunity to make submissions directly to the Legislative Committee of the House of Commons.

Respectfully submitted,

Nathan Nurgitz, on behalf of Senators Doyle, Fairbairn, and Hastings

March 20, 1986

APPENDIX

Stony Mountain, Manitoba

Warden: Mr. Arthur Majkut
Inmate Committee:

Mr. Arnold Badger, Chairman
Mr. Arnold Blackbird
Mr. Don Carrière
Mr. John Lukes
Mr. Wilfrid Osborne

Individual Inmates:

Mr. Mark Johnson
Mr. Roy Trace

Prince Albert, Saskatchewan

Warden: Mr. James O'Sullivan

Inmate Committee:

Mr. George Turnbull, Chairman
Mr. Thomas Gribble
Mr. Ronald McCauley

Regional Psychiatric Centre (Prairies), Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

Executive Director: Mr. Robert Gillies

Drumheller, Alberta

Warden: Mr. Jon Klaus

Inmate Committee:

Mr. Rick Ambrose, Chairman
Mr. Tim Keating
Mr. Larry Walters

APPENDIX B TO THE REPORT

REPORT ON A VISIT TO INSTITUTIONS IN THE KINGSTON AREA BY SENATORS BONNELL, DOYLE, FAIRBAIRN, HASTINGS AND STANBURY

On behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, in its study of the subject-matter of Bills C-67 and C-68, we visited four institutions in the Kingston, Ontario, area on May 20 and 21, 1986:

1. The Prison for Women;
2. Joyceville Institution;
3. Collins Bay Institution; and
4. Kingston Penitentiary⁽¹⁾

During our visits we had the opportunity to discuss the proposed legislation (in particular, Bill C-67) with wardens, staff members and inmate committees. We also met with representatives of the Union of Solicitor General Employees, the bargaining agent of employees at the institutions; and with both inmate and public members of the John Howard Society. Our discussions with all with whom we came into contact were informative and interesting, and we thank all those concerned for their contribution.⁽²⁾

This report is primarily intended to be a summary of the views expressed to us on the proposed legislation. Not surprisingly, we found those views to be substantially the same as those summarized in the Report of those members of the Committee who visited four penal institutions in the Prairie region in March, 1986. (The text of that Report may be found in Issue No.43 of the Committee's Minutes of Proceedings, March 20, 1986 at pp.43A1-6). On all major issues, the views of both inmates and staff were almost identical to those of their western counterparts.

The following is a brief review of the inmates' submissions.

- There is a profound resentment of the fact that detention, or "gating", the endowment of the National Parole Board with the power to detain ostensibly dangerous inmates until warrant expiry notwithstanding eligibility for release on mandatory supervision (MS), is to be introduced. It is viewed as a renunciation of a "bargain" entered into between inmates and the system, whereby good behaviour would be rewarded with remission of sentence. A further particularly contentious issue is the fact that gating will have retroactive effect—it will apply to inmates already in the system, and not only to those imprisoned after the legislation would come into effect. Some inmates contend that this is not only unfair but that it may also violate certain guarantees of legal rights in the Charter.

⁽¹⁾ Senator Hastings also visited Warkworth Institution, in Peterborough, Ontario, on May 9, 1986.

⁽²⁾ The names of the wardens, members of the inmate committees, and union representatives with whom we met are appended to this Report.

- There is apprehension as to the potential use of the detention power. The inmates are not comforted by government estimates that it may affect only about 100 to 150 inmates. They are concerned as to how penitentiary staff may use gating in terrorem; and are convinced that it will raise the level of tension and hostility in the institutions.⁽¹⁾
- The inmates expressed very little confidence in the ability of the Board to make predictions as to dangerousness. If detention must be introduced, they would prefer to see it administered by the courts, where they have more procedural and appellate rights, and which they perceive as being more impartial.
- A common theme in all the inmate submissions was the insistence that certainty is vital to the stability of a penitentiary. To the extent that inmates' lives are made more uncertain, more subject to the discretion of correctional staff and the Board, the penitentiaries will become less controllable. At present, an MS release date is certain, or at least within the reasonable control of an inmate if he or she behaves. Removing that certainty, and replacing it with the possibility of detention, will affect all inmates, even those who are not eventually detained.
- The view was expressed by the inmates that detention offers little public protection. It merely delays the problem of releasing potentially dangerous persons, without supervision and without their having received much rehabilitative assistance.
- Finally, the inmates had little comment on the two other major elements of Bill C-67: early review for day parole, and "one-shot" mandatory supervision. Early review is considered to be only of marginal value, since they do not expect that the Board will grant day parole at any greater rate than it does today; and "one-shot" MS is viewed as being supplementary to detention and thus subject to the same criticisms.

Like those members of the Committee who toured the Prairie institutions, we found that there is a high degree of concurrence between the views of inmates and those of staff at the penitentiaries with respect to Bill C-67. Many staff members were doubtful as to the predictive ability of either the Correctional Service or the Parole Board with respect to dangerousness. Some echoed the views of inmates that any change which contributes to uncertainty about sentences and time to be served can have a quite disruptive effect on order in penitentiaries. Some also indicated that they saw detention as a "band-aid" solution to a particular acute problem—how to deal with inmates who are not sufficiently mentally ill to justify indeterminate incarceration, but who have extreme behavioural problems or personality disorders such that they are potentially dangerous. In their view, keeping such persons in penitentiary until warrant expiry would contribute only minimally (if at all) to public safety.

⁽¹⁾ One particular submission of an inmate group is that the gating process could be used to circumvent the procedural guarantees of disciplinary courts (i.e. tribunals within penitentiaries set up to discipline inmates for misbehaviour). Instead of proceeding to disciplinary court for an infraction, which can result in the loss of a few days remission; they contend that staff could decide to use the cumulative effect of several infractions to build a gating file, which could result in the loss of all remission before the Board, where the inmate has no distinct right to counsel, or other procedural rights. This concern may be entirely fanciful; but the fact that it is expressed is in itself significant.

Some staff with whom we spoke also expressed concern that detention will increase an already heavy workload, without any corresponding benefit. Indeed, it could have a negative effect on institutional stability, producing a more disgruntled, hostile, and restive inmate population.

This is not to say, of course, that the legislation has no support among penitentiary staff. We received indications of strongly-held views in support of detention. The view was expressed by one staff member (who indicated that he spoke for many of his colleagues) that gating would serve to protect the public, providing the detained inmates with a "cooling off" period after their detention and before they are eventually released. Another staff member perceived detention as a way to deal with those inmates who misbehave shortly before their release on MS, in the knowledge that a disciplinary court could not be convened in time to affect their remission.⁽¹⁾ A third defence offered for detention was that it would deter future offences; that an inmate eventually released after being detained would be reluctant to re-offend because the court sentencing him would take a dim view of the fact that he or she had been detained, and would give him or her a more severe sentence⁽²⁾.

One matter upon which there was virtually universal agreement among members of the staff with whom we met, was as to perceived limitations in the proposed early review for day parole. It was submitted that such early review is theoretically appealing, but that there are practical problems. The Parole Board, in its deliberations, relies heavily on information and assessments provided by CSC staff who, in turn, obtain material for such assessments from a wide variety of sources and agencies. To have such material available for the Board even at an inmate's full parole eligibility date is difficult; having it ready at 1/6 of sentence (which in some cases will be as early as 4 months after sentencing) will be, in the opinion of many CSC personnel, next to impossible. They thus conclude that the early reviews mandated by Bill C-67 would become little more than a formal and empty ceremony—since an already cautious Board will be reluctant to proceed with day parole in the absence of a complete file.

Little comment was made by staff members as to the proposed "one-shot" MS amendments, although those who did remark on it expressed approval of its limitation in amendments made in the legislative committee of the House of Commons. They were of the view that its original wide application would have caused administrative problems.

During our visits we were exposed to several aspects of life and activity in the penitentiaries not directly related to the proposed legislation. Like those members who travelled to the Prairie institutions, we were shown instances of double-bunking, particularly at Joyceville, where over 100 inmates now must share cells. Overcrowding in our penitentiaries causes many problems. Programs are curtailed or are rendered ineffective. Many inmates have no opportunity to be employed. All this contributes to the tension and pressure which already exists in such institutions. As did the Prairie Report, we would urge that measures be taken to find a solution to this problem, which appears to be getting worse.

At Kingston Penitentiary we met with a large group of men imprisoned for first degree murder, who are not eligible for parole until 25 years of their sentences have expired. They made a plea that consideration be given to providing for shorter parole eligibility periods; and that some further provision be made for programs and activities in which they could participate.

At Collins Bay Penitentiary we were fortunate to be invited to participate in part of a session of the Brentwood Program, a recently initiated program established to assist, primarily, inmates with drug and alcohol problems. From our brief contact with participating inmates and staff, we were impressed with the prospects for success of the program in assisting inmates to refrain from substance abuse. For this program, as well as the several other work and educational programs we saw at all the penitentiaries, staff and participants are to be commended.

Finally, at Kingston Penitentiary, we were given a tour of the Treatment Centre, a separate facility established for the detention and treatment of inmates with behavioural or psychological problems. We commend those employed there for their dedication and industry, and for making the best possible use of somewhat antiquated facilities.

CONCLUSION

Our trip to the Kingston area penitentiaries has established that the views and opinions of inmates and staff with respect to the proposed legislation are not substantially different from those expressed to those members of the Committee who visited the Prairie institutions. We did gain some new insights into the reasons why some staff members support the proposals, and into some potential problems associated with the

(1) Whether "gating" would invariably apply to such inmates is open to question. If it is intended that the detention process would be started merely to foreclose release for a time without a reasonable prospect of a detention order, this would be a matter for concern. One could question the propriety of such an action.

(2) It is open to question whether the fact that a person had been detained could be properly brought up before a court. Even if so, the supposed deterrent effect would seem quite attenuated.

proposal for early day parole review. In addition, our visit served a useful purpose in both informing the inmates and staff about the legislation and Committee proceedings, and in giving them a forum in which to express their concerns.

Respectfully submitted,

Earl Hastings, on behalf of Senators: Lorne Bonnell,
Richard Doyle,
Joyce Fairbairn,
Richard Stanbury.

May 26, 1986

APPENDIX

The following individuals met with the Committee:

Deputy Commissioner
(Ontario Region): Mr. Arthur Trono

PRISON FOR WOMEN

Warden: Mr. George Caron

Assistant Wardens: Ms. Theresa Decaire (Security)
Ms. Margaret Ruttan (Health Care)
Ms. Dorothy Williams (Finance & Operations)
Mr. Alex Burnett (Inmate Programs)

Inmate Committee: Ms. Linda Cameron
Ms. Linda Nothnagel
Ms. Kim Elridge
Ms. Jordan Miller
Ms. Linda Sailer

Union of Solicitor
General Employees: Ms. Robena Neil
Mr. Mike Smith

JOYCEVILLE INSTITUTION

Warden: Mr. Rémi Gobeil

Assistant Wardens: Ms. Sharon Hogan (Administration)
Mr. William Weaver (Technical Services)
Mr. Paul Kellogg (Industries)
Mr. Larry Stebbins (Socialization)
Mr. Larry Hefford (Finance)
Mr. Sam Brazeau (Security)
Ms. Donna Dixon (Senior Health Care Officer)
Mr. Jim Caird (Superintendent, Pittsburgh Institute)

Inmate Committee: Mr. Rick Ash
Mr. Tom Walsh
Mr. Steve Laplante

John Howard
Chapter: Mr. Tim O'Sullivan
Mr. Keith Burgoyne
Mr. John David Carnie
Mr. Rick Ash
Mr. Tim Greenwood (Counsellor)

Union of Solicitor
General Employees: Mr. Jack Samson
Mr. Joe Carmichael

COLLINS BAY INSTITUTION

Acting Warden: Ms. Yvonne Latta

Staff: Ms. Shirley M. Bamford (A.W./Health Care)
Mr. Tony Jean (Psychologist)
Ms. Donna Ménard (Case Management Supervisor)
Mr. Jerry Clair (A.W./Security)
Mr. Don Boone (A.W./Administration)
Mr. Keith Manson (A.W./Technical Services)
Mr. Jack Holder (A.W./Education and Training)
Ms. Janet Ethier (Classification Officer)

Inmates' Committee: Mr. Chris Hillick
Mr. John Hypolite
Mr. Fernand Robillard
Mr. Claude Brière
Mr. Steve Hunter

John Howard
Chapter: Mr. Steve Lewis
Mr. Guy Lount
Mr. Ron Lauzon
Mr. Paul Sammut
Ms. Barb Hill (Counsellor)

Union of Solicitor
General Employees: Mr. Francis Lollar
Mr. Bernie Bélanger
Mr. Bob Willis

Brentwood Program: Rev. Al Meloche
Mr. Harley Smith

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

Acting Warden: Mr. Fred Sisson

Assistant Wardens: Mr. Patrick Quinn (Socialization)
Mr. Don McBroom (Security)
Mr. Willie Gladu (Employment, Education and Training)
Mr. Jean-Guy Léger (Regional Treatment Centre)
Mr. Bob Batchelor (Technical Services)
Mr. Basil Gillespie (Finance)

Inmates' Committee: Mr. Richard W. Brooks
Mr. Chuck Armstrong
Mr. Doug J. Barnes

Union of Solicitor
General Employees: Mr. Dennis Albertini
Mr. Allan Cresswell

25^{ERS} GROUP Mr. Fred Bleich, Chairman and others

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 17, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages as required under Access to Information Act for the year ending on March 31, 1986.

[English]

PRIVATE BILL

PINE HILL DIVINITY HALL—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-7, to amend the Act of Incorporation of Pine Hill Divinity Hall, and acquainting the Senate that they had passed the bill without amendment.

[Translation]

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Lowell Murray, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce presented the following report:

Tuesday, June 17, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

SEVENTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-91, intituled: "An Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof" has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 11, 1986, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following observations:

In accordance with the Order of Reference, your Committee heard from the Honourable Michel Côté, P.C., M.P., Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and officials from the department on June 11, 1986. We had previously been authorized by the Senate on April 17, 1986 to study the subject-matter of the above-mentioned

Bill (see Appendix A for a complete list of witnesses and Appendix B for a list of submissions received).

Proceedings of the Competition Tribunal

Clause 12(2)b provides that in the event of an equally divided opinion among the members of the Tribunal, the presiding member may have a casting vote to determine the question. Certain Committee members questioned the justification for giving double weight to the views of one member of the Tribunal in these circumstances, which would have the effect of upholding applications which might otherwise fail.

Anti-competitive agreements between financial institutions

Existing law against agreements in restraint of trade treats banks differently from non-bank financial institutions. Non-banks are subject to section 32 of the Combines Investigation Act, which prohibits any agreement in restraint of trade that has the effect of lessening competition "unduly". Agreements between banks, on the other hand, are governed by section 309 of the Bank Act, which imposes an absolute prohibition against specified inter-bank agreements relating to services provided and prices charged. Bill C-91 would transfer section 309 from the Bank Act to the Competition Act (as section 33), but would otherwise retain the differential treatment of agreements between banks and agreements between other financial institutions.

In their submission to the Committee, the Canadian Bankers' Association argued that this differential treatment is not justified by the current realities in financial markets, where increasingly non-bank financial institutions provide services similar to banks and where some non-banks are larger than all but the largest banks. The distinction also makes it difficult for banks and non-bank financial institutions to participate in agreements relating to the payments system: section 309 permits banks to make agreements between themselves in relation to common systems and facilities; section 32 contains no specific exemptions that would allow non-bank financial institutions to participate in such agreements.

Extensive consultations on this issue have taken place between the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Canadian Bankers' Association. The Minister advised your Committee that this issue is still under consideration, but he wishes to wait for pending legislation concerning the regulation of financial institutions before making a final decision on the matter.

Your Committee has reviewed Bill C-91 in accordance with the Orders of Reference and, except as noted above, has no comments to make on the Bill.

APPENDIX A

WITNESSES

On the subject-matter of Bill C-91:

Wednesday, April 30, 1986: (Issue No. 44)

Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs:

Mr. Mark Daniels, Deputy Minister;

Mr. M.S. Cappe, Assistant Deputy Minister, Bureau of Policy Coordination and Acting Assistant Deputy Minister, Bureau of Competition Policy;

Mr. Morris Rosenberg, Director, Legal Branch.

Wednesday, May 7, 1986: (Issue No. 46)

Canadian Federation of Independent Business:

Mr. J. Bennett, Vice-President, Legislative Affairs;

Mr. Richard Graham, National Affairs Officer.

Wednesday, May 14, 1986: (Issue No. 47)

National Association of Tobacco & Confectionery Distributors:

Mr. William Marcus Jr., President; President, W. Marcus Enterprises;

Mr. Lucien Maréchal, Treasurer; Controller, Brault Clément Inc.;

Mr. Paul D. Tripp, Past President; Mark Tripp Ltd.;

Mr. Roland LeRose, President, West Kootenay Wholesale Ltd.;

Mr. Ronald G. Atkey, P.C., Q.C., Counsel; Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt;

Mr. Philippe H. Louette, Executive Vice President.

Canadian Bar Association:

Mr. John C. Clarry, Q.C., Chairman, Special Committee on the Combines Investigation Act;

Mr. Julian Chipman, Q.C.;

Mr. T.B.O. McKeag, Q.C.;

Mr. Bruce C. McDonald;

Mr. W.V. Monopoli, Legislation Director.

Wednesday, May 28, 1986: (Issue No. 48)

Canadian Bankers' Association

Mr. Robert M. MacIntosh, President;

Mr. T.G. O'Connor, Chairman, Legal Affairs Committee; Associate General Counsel, Toronto-Dominion Bank;

Mr. David Phillips, Vice-President, Legal Affairs.

Association of Canadian Franchisors:

Mr. John Gillespie, President; President, Pizza Pizza Ltd.;

Mr. Harold Knifton, President, Independent Grocers' Association;

Mr. Ken Fong, Member, Government Liaison Committee; Vice-President, McDonald's Restaurants of Canada Ltd.;

Mr. Wayne McCracken, Special Counsel.

Stelco Inc.:

Mr. R.E. Heneault, Executive Vice-President;

Mr. Warren Grover, Q.C., Counsel, Blake, Cassels & Graydon.

On Bill C-91:

Wednesday, June 11, 1986 (Issue No. 50)

Appearing:

The Honourable Michel Côté, P.C., M.P., Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs:

Mr. M.S. Cappe, Assistant Deputy Minister, Bureau of Policy Coordination;

Mr. Morris Rosenberg, Director, Legal Branch;

Mr. Julien Béliveau, Chief of Staff.

APPENDIX B

SUBMISSIONS

The Committee received submissions from the following groups and individuals:

ASSOCIATION OF CANADIAN FRANCHISORS,
Toronto, Ontario

BUSINESS COUNCIL ON NATIONAL ISSUES,
Ottawa, Ontario

CANADIAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION, Toronto,
Ontario

CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION, Ottawa, Ontario

CANADIAN BUSINESS EQUIPMENT ASSOCIATION,
Willowdale, Ontario

CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION OF CANADA,
Ottawa, Ontario

GOWLING & HENDERSON, Toronto, Ontario

LANG, MICHENER, CRANSTON, FARQUHARSON & WRIGHT, Toronto, Ontario

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF TOBACCO & CONFECTIONERY DISTRIBUTORS, Montreal, Quebec

PETROLEUM MARKETERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA, Toronto, Ontario

STELCO INC., Toronto, Ontario

WILSON, MR. LAWRENCE R., Ottawa, Ontario

Respectfully submitted,

LOWELL MURRAY
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator MacDonald, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later today.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-SEVENTH MEETING—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, June 19, 1986, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-seventh Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, held at Tucson, Arizona, U.S.A., from February 28 to March 3, 1986, and to the report of the said meeting.

REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I ask leave to have the report printed as an appendix to today's Debates of the Senate so that honourable senators will have it available when I speak on this subject.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix p. 2625).

YOUNG OFFENDERS

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-106

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine the subject matter of the Bill C-106, intituled: "An Act to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act", in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Question Period:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to inform the Senate that Senator Roblin is unavoidably absent today.

If honourable senators have questions which they wish me to take as notice or if they wish me to try to get information for them, I will be happy to oblige as best I can.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Argue: Give us the answer right off the bat!

Senator Bonnell: I wonder if we could ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if Senator Flynn could answer, since he usually does.

Senator Doody: I think that question could more appropriately be asked of Senator Flynn.

SECHelt INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT BILL

THIRD READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Third reading of the Bill C-93, intituled: "An Act relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band".—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask the permission of the Senate to stand this order, at least temporarily. There is a discussion in progress in the minister's office relating to this particular bill, in which, I believe, Senator Marchand and others are interested.

With leave of the Senate, we could defer this order until later this day and move on to the next order of the day, if that is agreeable to Senator Marchand and others.

Hon. Len Marchand: That is a good arrangement, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 2, 1986-87

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), for the second reading of the Bill C-115, intituled: "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987".—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as was mentioned last Thursday, I wanted an opportunity to look at the schedules that were included in the Debates of the Senate of that day by the sponsor of the bill, Senator Doody. I have done so. As honourable senators know if they have looked at the Debates, the schedules put forward by Senator Doody are quite short and simple. They set out supply to date for 1986-87.

Honourable senators will remember that under Appropriation Act No. 1, interim supply was granted for April, May and June, including 34 additional proportions, based on the main estimates for 1986-87. That left awaiting approval and subject to the bill that is before us now supply for the balance of the main estimates for 1986-87. That balance totalled $27,380-odd million. The total of the interim supply and the amount that is before us now is $37,550,174,513. I mention those figures because if senators turn to page 2602 of the Debates of June 12, they will see that the main estimates tabled to date for 1986-87—which form the basis for the bill before us and the basis, in turn, for the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance—are divided between those to be voted and those which are statutory. The statutory amounts, of course, are provided for by way of statute and are not subject to vote. Those to be voted are broken down into the budgetary, totalling $37,470,047,000, and the non-budgetary, totalling $80,124,000.

I do not think that we should hold up the bill over this, but Senator Doody may have noticed what might be just a typographical error, that is, that the supply for the balance of the main estimates for 1986-87, which appears under the heading of "Supply to Date for 1986-87", is $37,550,174,000, whereas the total to be voted on page 2702 under the heading "Estimates Tabled to Date for 1986-87" is exactly the same amount less approximately $3,000; it is $37,550,171,000. I am sure that this must be a typographical error and I do not mean to ask for an explanation of it before we grant supply, as we ought to, in my view. The Deputy Leader of the Government might at some point put on the record an explanation to straighten out what I admit is a minor discrepancy.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I assume that if I speak now, the debate will be closed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is this in answer to a question?

Senator Doody: I merely wanted to tell Senator Frith that I would try to find the answer for him. It is a relatively small discrepancy, but is, nevertheless, a discrepancy. I will try to get the information for him over the next few days and we can then put it on the record.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

17 June 1986

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Brian Dickson, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 17th day of June, 1986, at 4.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Leopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

[Translation]

CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-118, to amend the Currency Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the third reading of Bill C-91, to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, that this bill be now read the third time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, during the time since this bill received second reading in the Senate and its presentation for third reading debate today, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission published its report entitled "Competition in the Canadian Petroleum Industry".

There are three volumes to the report. I particularly recommend the volume I have in my hand, entitled "Introduction, conclusions and recommendations", and which I have had the opportunity of reading. In my view, it is a well written document. I cannot yet recommend the second and third volumes because I have not read them. I believe that honourable senators will find it quite educational with regard to the original subject matter of the inquiry concerning competition in the petroleum industry prior to 1973—it being 1973 when the director commenced his investigation. So, as I say, it is a very well written document and very educational in summarizing some of the features of the industry.

If I can make one parenthetical comment, the only stylistic criticism I have of the report is that it uses repetitively the word "address", which is now quite a fashionable word. Problems are not solved these days; they are "addressed". Questions are not answered, they, too, are "addressed".

Senator MacEachen: That applies to the Leader of the Government.

Senator Frith: I do not know whether that says something about us psychologically, but when we deal with a problem we sort of address it and say, "How do you do?", and bow to it, but we do not actually want to get ourselves "dirty", I suppose, or mixed up in actually trying to solve it.

Senator Doody: It makes it easier to interface.

Senator Frith: Apart from that, honourable senators will find this report very good reading.

While the committee was doing its work, there were a number of recent developments in this field, including Bill C-91. While Bill C-91 has no direct effect on the inquiry into competition in the Canadian petroleum industry, if the legislation that is before us now for third reading is adopted, this study will be the last report of a section 47 inquiry of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. Section 47 and the system will be replaced, as we found when we discussed this bill at second reading.

However, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission very prudently took into account these recent developments and the existence of Bill C-91, partly at the request of the minister, and in response to other requests made comments in the report about Bill C-91. Before we give the bill third reading, it would be worth while noting for our record what the commission said about Bill C-91, so that it will be clear to posterity that before we passed the bill at third reading we were aware of the fact that there was an important development having direct relevance to the legislation before us. There are not that many references, perhaps four or five. I can say that most of the references to Bill C-91 are very encouraging. Some of them have reservations.

The first reference to Bill C-91 is at page 63 where the commission is dealing with the problem of predation, spelled P-R-E-D-A-T-I-O-N, a word that most of us know in reference to predators and in the zoological context.

Senator Doody: Did they deal with it or "address" it?

Senator Frith: They say earlier that they are going to address the matter, and then they deal with it. As a matter of fact, one of my objections to the commission's talking so frequently about addressing a problem is that eventually they actually deal with it. So, I do not know why they continuously say that later in the study they will be "addressing" the problem when in fact they actually deal with it. This is what the study says on "Predation" at page 63:

[Senator Frith.]

It is important that there be a legal standard of "predation", which is to say a line beyond which conduct by one firm that has harmful effects on another firm's ability to stay in business or to compete, is unjustifiable and against the public interest.

The Commission considers that the existing law, particularly if supplemented as proposed by Bill C-91, is adequate in this regard. In view of the generality of the existing law, however, the Commission's recommendations set out guidelines for its application to pricing in a dual distribution context.

So, as far as Mr. Stoner and his colleague are concerned, that is one mark in favour of giving Bill C-91 third reading. Then at page 64 when dealing with Petro-Canada, we find:

Government ownership of Petro-Canada affords unique opportunities to correct certain market defects.

Then at the bottom of the page:

Petro-Canada witnesses testified that the company endeavours to comply with the Combines Investigation Act, and if Bill C-91 is enacted it will be required by law as an agent Crown corporation to do so. The fact that it is Government-owned, however, offers a unique opportunity to go further and to use Petro-Canada's potential to promote competition in an industry where the extent of concentration in conjunction with vertical integration continually threatens the vigour of market forces.

• (1420)

That will be of interest, I think, to Senator Flynn if he is still as interested in price competition from Petro-Canada as he was when he sat over here.

Senator Flynn: I still am.

Senator Frith: I suspected so.

Senator Flynn: In fact, I am more worried than ever.

Senator Frith: Mrs. Carney, take note.

On page 66, there appears Recommendation No. 1:

To deal with several practices in the petroleum industry and those that may from time to time arise in other industries, a section should be added to Bill C-91 that would allow the Tribunal to issue orders requiring the discontinuance or non-repetition of any conduct that would substantially lessen competition.

As I recall it, this is a power that the analogous commission in the United States has. I now continue quoting from the report:

Under such a section an order could be issued by the Tribunal whenever it could be established to its satisfaction that the conduct in question has or would substantially lessen competition. The Commission considers that such a provision ought not apply to conduct that was only "likely to" substantially lessen competition, and that it ought only apply to situations where the harm was more certain. At the same time, the proposed provision would not suffer many of the limitations currently contained in section 51 as proposed by Bill C-91.

The report then gives examples of what the proposed section could do in permitting the following types of conduct or practices in the petroleum industry to be remedied. They are given as follows:

- (a) large volume, long-lasting exchange agreements . . .
- (b) support programs or agency or other agreements where the supplier obtains complete or substantial control or influence over a customer/competitor's prices . . .

I should say that that particular passage on page 66, continuing on to page 67, is the largest section in this volume on the question of Bill C-91, and goes on further at the top of page 67:

Like much of Bill C-91, the section proposed here does not have the degree of specificity or provide the extent of advance certainty or guidance to businessmen that would be required if it were to be criminal law. But then, the great advantage of civil law review——and that is what we are looking at in Bill C-91—

—is that the public interest can be more effectively protected from conduct or practices that, while in most cases they may promote the public interest or at least not harm it, nevertheless in other circumstances may be found on review to harm the public interest.

The report then goes on to say:

The Director can, of course, be consulted to learn whether he would bring the conduct in question before the Tribunal. Additionally, it may be assumed that the Tribunal would consider all the circumstances when issuing an order and would seek to minimize unnecessary hardship.

The next reference to Bill C-91 is at the bottom of that same page, page 67:

Recommendation No. 3: Jurisdiction to grant interim orders, particularly with respect to matters affecting supply, should be conferred by legislation.

In making this recommendation the Commission notes with satisfaction that Bill C-91 proposes that a comprehensive power to grant interim orders exist for all matters within the proposed new Part VII jurisdiction of the Competition Tribunal.

Therefore again, that is another positive comment for Bill C-91.

Recommendation No. 4, found on page 68, states:

Any person who has been refused supply—

Honourable senators will understand the competitive problem when, for example, a gasoline retailer wants to make some adjustment in price or engage in a particular selling practice and is refused supply. According to the evidence given to the commission, as reported, that retailer is often in the position of having to obtain an alternative supply or getting none at all. That recommendation goes on to state:

—should be entitled to apply directly to the Competition Tribunal for relief.

The advantages of direct access are that the complainants could thereby avoid the delay of having to go through the director's office. Under the current practice, the only person who brings something before the commission is the director. So, if a person has a complaint, that person has to go to the director and the director then brings the complaint before the tribunal. The recommendation is that in some cases there be direct access to the tribunal.

The second paragraph under that recommendation states:

The concern that is sometimes expressed regarding direct public access to the Tribunal is that such access could be used to threaten or harass suppliers. These fears are based largely on experience in the United States with treble damage litigation and have little relevance here. The Tribunal could be relied upon to discourage any possible abuses of its procedure, like any other court.

That, then, is something that the tribunal is recommending as an improvement to Bill C-91, as I understand it.

Recommendation No. 5 states:

The Government should be empowered to exempt particular mergers from review by the proposed Competition Tribunal.

For example, the now famous, or in some quarters infamous, Ultramar and Petro-Canada acquisition of Gulf's downstream assets could have been brought before the Competition Tribunal had Bill C-91 been law. So, on that point the bill before us scores well. Honourable senators will all remember, I am sure, the concern shown with regard to those acquisitions and the eventual shutting down of the refinery in Quebec.

Recommendation No. 9 is simply an indirect reference as far as the commission is concerned—at least as far as the tribunal is concerned and as far as Bill C-91 is concerned—to Petro-Canada. That is found in paragraph (c) at the bottom of page 69 and states:

Petro-Canada and its employees should be made fully subject to the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, except to the extent that acts are done pursuant to specific directive or approval of the Governor in Council.

Honourable senators, those are the references in this intervening and important report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission as they relate to the bill before us. In most cases the bill scores well, but there are some reservations, and there are strong recommendations by the commission that the bill be amended to extend the jurisdiction of the tribunal, as evidenced by the recommendations to which I have referred.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is that report dated? How long was it with the minister? It is unfortunate that that report was not made available to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee while it was considering the bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the report was released on Friday. The date at the end of this volume signed by the chairman and one member is May 16, 1986. So, it would seem that for some reason the report was not released during debate on Bill C-91 in the other place, nor was it released during second reading debate here in the Senate. My notes indicate that the bill was passed by the other place on June 5, 1986. So, there was approximately a month between the date written on the report and the passage of the bill by the other house. Then, of course, there was the additional delay in its release while we debated the bill on second reading. I cannot say whether that was by design or not, but it is a fact.

• (1430)

Senator Macquarrie: That was a good address!

Senator Frith: Did I address the problem?

Senator Macquarrie: Yes.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, in view of the remarks of Senator Frith, and in view of the letter from Gerry Stoner to the minister in transmitting the report to which reference has been made here and which included the statement that the relevance of the appraisal of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission in regard to Bill C-91 was noted, there are two matters, honourable senators, that I would suggest require—if it is appropriate—an undertaking on the part of the government. The first is that at or before the resumption of Parliament in September, the minister will respond to the various recommendations made in the report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission on competition in the Canadian petroleum industry as it affects competition and Bill C-91, which by then would have become law.

Then the report that was tabled today from the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce makes reference to a submission made by the Canadian Bankers' Association and the committee's noting of that, as well as the fact that the minister advised the committee that he still had that issue under consideration, but wished to await pending legislation concerning the regulation of financial institutions before making a final decision. I hope that an undertaking can be given that the minister will respond at or before the resumption of Parliament in September in regard to the matters referred to in this report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and, also, in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, it is true that we have had the Stoner report, that is, the report dealing with competition in the Canadian petroleum industry, only since last Friday. It certainly is a report the preparation of which has occupied a great number of years, and is the result of hearing a number of witnesses and is an extraordinarily important document.

It is because of the courtesy of both Senators Frith and Sinclair in giving me notice of this particular question that I have been able to obtain the assurance from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that even though many of the recommendations in the Stoner report are covered in Bill C-91—

[Senator Godfrey.]

Senator Doody: Addressed!

Senator MacDonald: —or addressed—the government will be reviewing the other recommendations and will, I am assured, be responding before the resumption of Parliament in the autumn. I understand the response will also deal with the matter to which Senator Sinclair has referred and which is referred to in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Senator Sinclair: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-96—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Seventeenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (subject-matter of the Bill C-96, intitled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977"), presented in the Senate on 10th June, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I asked for the adjournment of this order because I knew that Senator Stewart had a particular interest in it—and I am sure many others do as well.

If it stands again, as I think it ought to, can it stand in Senator Stewart's name, if he agrees?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

[Translation]

YOUTH

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—
DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, for the adoption of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth, entitled: "Youth: A Plan of Action", tabled in the Senate on 19th February, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I will be brief. What I have to say will take six or seven minutes at most.

When my Whip, Senator Petten, asked me to be part of the Special Committee on Youth, I willingly agreed, but I warned him that I would not be able to accompany the committee in its travels throughout Canada. In spite of the fact that I was unable to attend the public hearings outside Ottawa, the oral and written testimony of the many witnesses reproduced in the minutes of the committee proceedings was and still is a mine of useful information. For months on end we tried very hard to exploit this wealth of often damning human experiences before releasing this alloy of compromises and consensus which constitutes our report on the condition of Canadian youth.

During our committee study we took the event into consideration, and more often than not the news simply confirmed our conclusions. Unfortunately, the event also occurred before our report was tabled, especially with respect to one of its major recommendations, and I quote:

—to establish a Young Canadians' Community Service Program, open to all Canadians aged 17 to 24 either by using Katimavik as a model or by giving Katimavik, now a non-government organization funded by the Department of the Secretary of State, the means to expand.

All this is history now because we found out, before the committee had an opportunity to table its report, what the government and the Secretary of State thought of this kind of program. Let that be a lesson in the future.

As a more personal contribution, I had strongly urged my committee colleagues to devote a special chapter to native youth. I do not intend to go over the reasons why we should focus on the problems and challenges facing the young descendants of the first inhabitants of the Canadian territory. You need only read this chapter a few times to be convinced of its value. Undoubtedly there has been significant improvement in the condition of native youth in recent decades. But we are lagging so far behind and the problems are so acute and obvious that, unless once and for all we settle all the basic claims of the first citizens of Canada, in 10 or 20 years the situation might very well be described as a national scandal.

The other aspect of our study which did draw my attention was the creation of jobs and equal opportunities for young Canadians, wherever they live in this country. I suggest you read and read again our comments "Barriers to Employment" and "Youth and Regional Development", in Chapter Four on page 77 and following (page 84 in the French text).

When I was a member of the House, for sixteen years I kept pushing for a policy that would really provide equal opportunities for the so-called underdeveloped areas in this country. Often our claims met with a total lack of understanding, and our severest critics said that "all the maritimes want is another handout".

Money if necessary, but not necessarily money! What we have to change are the bureaucratic attitudes and narrow minds of those who are supposed to develop policies for decentralization and regional development. Even worse are the fossilized concepts of the majority of the decision-makers in this country's wealthy regions, vis-à-vis regions whose economy and industrial activity are stagnating.

I may say that in the seventies, despite the resistance I mentioned, we had a substantial degree of success, especially in the Atlantic region. Today, however, I sense a return to that previous reluctance to develop any, with few exceptions, but the strongest sectors of our economy in the country's economically strong regions. This deliberate policy will lead to a new brain drain that will draw the best minds and most promising talents from the poorer regions to the country's wealthiest areas, thus further weakening the economic and social potential of the weaker regions.

We still need people to defend the just cause of regional development, and I do not think the solution lies in a water tight bilateral free trade policy with the United States.

In concluding, I would like to say that my experience on the Special Committee on Youth was personally very rewarding.

For some of my colleagues and myself, it was the first major task we were given as new senators.

I must say I was very impressed with the strong personality of Senator Jacques Hébert, our chairman and the founding father of the committee. A very hard worker and a very sensitive humanist, I am sure he has further untapped resources that will continue to impress us, even if he is not always understood. On the other hand, whether he is understood sooner or later has never been a problem for him.

Senator Yuzyk, the committee's co-chairman, brought an element of balance to our proceedings.

In fact, although we did have our individual differences of opinion that were often quite marked, they never became political, and once again I must conclude that the Senate is able to render a useful service to this country, which is demonstrated by this report: "Youth—A Plan of Action".

The challenge now is to keep this report from gathering dust in the Library of Parliament's second basement.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your attention.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

● (1440)

[English]

SECHLT INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT BILL

THIRD READING—ORDER STANDS

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 1:

Third reading of the Bill C-93, intituled: "An Act relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band".—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, although leave has been granted to revert to Order No. 1, I would prefer that this order stand at this point since we have no further information at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that we revert to Orders of the Day after Inquiries and Motions?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

[Later]

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell at 4:15 p.m.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I apologize for being temporarily out of the chamber. Perhaps Senator Doody would repeat what has just transpired.

Senator Doody: At this point I am asking that the Senate adjourn to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 4:15 p.m. If it is agreeable, perhaps it would be appropriate to deal with third reading of this particular bill at that time.

Senator Frith: Senator Marchand may wish to deal with it now.

Senator Marchand: I am not prepared to deal with it now, but I expect that a decision regarding this matter will be made in about 10 or 15 minutes. Senator Doody's suggestion might be appropriate, to adjourn until 4:15 p.m., which will give us a little more time to conduct further negotiations.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, it is usual that we adjourn until 4:25 p.m., but I have taken the liberty of suggesting that we resume at 4:15 p.m., which will give us an opportunity to deal with this matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1630)

At 4.30 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

SECHelt INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the third reading of Bill C-93, relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band.

She said: Honourable senators, the passage of Bill C-93, relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian band, marks the realization of the Sechelt people's dream of self-determination. Some have said that this bill is only a modest step forward. It should be noted, however, that this so-called "modest step" has behind it a decade of concerted effort. The Sechelt community and the Sechelt people have developed through consensus a vision and an approach as to how they want to govern their lives.

It is no small achievement for any community to move through its own initiative from a state of wardship under the Indian Act. As Chief Dixon has described it, it was "a prison with four walls." Now the Sechelt are moving to a system of self-government where the elected band council, not the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, is the governing authority.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

There are those who say the bill has shortcomings. They say that only by means of a constitutional amendment on self-government can the full powers of Indian self-government be realized.

Honourable senators, I point out that clause 3 of the bill reads:

For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be considered so as to abrogate or derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights of the members of the Sechelt Indian Band, or any other aboriginal peoples of Canada, under section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

As honourable senators know, the federal government has taken the position that aboriginal rights, especially the right of self-government, should have constitutional protection. Sechelt is not abrogating its constitutional rights now or in the future. Rather, it is putting into place the practical expression of self-government for its community.

Today is the historic day for the Sechelt community. The chief and members of the band council are justly proud of this occasion and of their achievement. Each of them has worked hard and long, and their efforts should be fully acknowledged. I particularly want to mention the dedication of Chief Dixon and Councillors Benedict Pierre, Lloyd Jeffries, Clarence Joe and Warren Paull.

The band's financial adviser, Gordon Anderson, and legal advisor, Graham Allen, have also played an integral part on Sechelt's team in this undertaking. They deserve praise for their work.

Honourable senators, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development also deserves full credit for his leadership and encouragement. His commitment to the Sechelt people was to make their dream a reality. His skill in steering this legislation through executive and parliamentary decision-making should be applauded.

Members of Parliament from all parties on the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development gave their support to Sechelt. We recognize the worthiness of the Sechelt bill and we will work with the Sechelt people to see it through.

Behind the scenes many officials from a number of federal departments guided the Sechelt proposal through the legislative process. Their hard work and concerted efforts should also be acknowledged at this time. Among them were Audrey Doerr of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and John Tait and Fred Caron from the Department of Justice. Many others had a major role to play in the design of this bill and in getting it to its present state.

Allow me to sum up by asking honourable senators for complete support for this worthy piece of legislation. It is something we should be proud to be involved with.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I should first like to recognize in the gallery Chief Stan Dixon, the members of his council and their wives.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Marchand: With them are Graham Allen, their legal adviser, and Gordon Anderson, their financial adviser.

Honourable senators, I want to join with Senator Robertson in the sentiments that she has expressed. I will not, in my few remarks, go over the ground that she has covered. In searching for some non-partisan remarks that I should make on an occasion like this, I have found that in looking back, in my own heart—and I am sure that the same would apply if we looked back in the hearts of the Sechelt people—there is a lot of sadness over the past. There is a lot of sadness in our history. The first hundred years of the building of this country were not very good to our people. In the last 19, we have started to move. We have made some progress. I think that Bill C-93 represents real progress for the Sechelt people. They have worked long and hard in putting it together.

In Senator Robertson's remarks she mentioned that perhaps this could have been done in another way. The Sechelt people are very much aware of that, and it was their view that if it were done by way of a constitutional amendment, perhaps it would have taken them 15, 20 or more years to go that route. Bill C-93 gives the Sechelt people some real powers of self-government. I applaud them for the work they have done and for the foresight they have shown in making the kinds of hard decisions necessary to come up with this legislation.

Bill C-93 gives them the power to make future decisions for their people—decisions they have wanted to be able to make for a long time. The legislation gives the band council legal powers, which is very important to them. They need no longer be considered as children who are not capable of signing a legal document. They can sign a legal document. That band council is now a legal entity. It now has control over its lands, and this is extremely important to them, because they are developing a lot of lands. Under this bill they will take title to their lands in fee simple. Previously, it was always Great White Father here in Ottawa who made all the decisions for them. Now, Bill C-93 makes themselves "Great White Father", although I do not think Stan would want to be called that. But I think that in some of their happier moments, the Sechelts have been talking about themselves as the "fathers" of their confederation. I think we can consider them as such in many ways, because they really are carving out new ground.

I want to wish them well, and I believe that all honourable senators wish them well; and, as they make a better life for their people ahead, they can now dream dreams and have them come true in the way that they want to have them come true.

• (1500)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Right Honourable Brian Dickson, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor

General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to implement the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (Bill C-107, Chapter 21)

An Act relating to commercial arbitration (Bill C-108, Chapter 22)

An Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Government of Canada, the Government of Ontario, Reed Inc., Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd., the Islington Indian Band and the Grassy Narrows Indian Band (Bill C-110, Chapter 23)

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act (Bill C-109, Chapter 24)

An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act (Bill C-86, Chapter 25)

An Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-91, Chapter 26)

An Act relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band (Bill C-93, Chapter 27)

An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of Pine Hill Divinity Hall (Bill S-7)

The Honourable Jean J. Charest, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987 (Bill C-115, Chapter 28)

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

DUTIES RELIEF BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-98, to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remissions of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 2616)

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-SEVENTH MEETING, TUCSON, ARIZONA

FEBRUARY 28 — MARCH 3, 1986

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

The 27th annual meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group was held at Tuscon, Arizona from February 28 to March 3, 1986. The Co-chairmen of the Canadian delegation were Pat Nowlan, M.P. from the House of Commons and the Hon. James Balfour from the Senate. Discussions took place in three Committees: Committee I: Trade and Economic issues; Committee II: Energy, Defence and Multilateral Issues; Committee III: Fisheries, Environment and Transboundary Issues.

On the Canadian side, the following delegates co-chaired the various Committee discussions with their U.S. counterparts: Committee I — Pat Nowlan, M.P.; Committee II — Barbara Sparrow, M.P.; Committee III — Senator Nathan Nurgitz. On the U.S. side the Co-chairmen of Committees were: Committee I — Senator Frank Murkowski; Committee II — Senator James McClure; Committee III — Representative Jim Oberstar.

Following the Committee discussions, the two delegations met in plenary session where the topic of discussion was an enhanced Canada-United States trade arrangement.

The United States DelegationThe Senate

Honourable Ted Stevens, Co-Chairman (Republican-Alaska)
 Honourable Edward Zorinsky (Democrat-Nebraska)
 Honourable James McClure (Republican-Idaho)
 Honourable Dennis De Concini (Democrat-Arizona)
 Honourable Mark Andrews (Republican-North Dakota)
 Honourable Arlen Specter (Republican-Pennsylvania)
 Honourable Mack Mattingly (Republican-Georgia)
 Honourable Frank Murkowski (Republican-Alaska)

The House of Representatives

Honourable Michael Barnes, Co-Chairman (Democrat-Maryland)
 Honourable Dante Fascell (Democrat-Florida)
 Honourable Sam Gibbons (Democrat-Florida)
 Honourable Lee Hamilton (Democrat-Ind.)
 Honourable Mo Udall (Democrat-Arizona)
 Honourable Jim Oberstar (Democrat-Minnesota)

Honourable Bob Traxler (Democrat-Michigan)
 Honourable Bill Frenzel (Republican-Minnesota)
 Honourable Arlan Stangeland (Republican-Minnesota)
 Honourable David Martin (Republican-New York)
 Honourable Jim Kolbe (Republican-Arizona)
 Honourable James Weaver (Democrat-Oregon)
 Honourable Bill Richardson (Democrat-New Mexico)

The Canadian DelegationThe Senate

Honourable James Balfour, Co-Chairman (Progressive Conservative-Saskatchewan)
 Honourable Henry D. Hicks (Liberal-Nova Scotia)
 Honourable Lowell Murray (Progressive Conservative-Ontario)
 Honourable Nathan Nurgitz (Progressive Conservative-Manitoba)
 Honourable H.A. Olson, PC (Liberal-Alberta)
 Honourable Richard J. Stanbury (Liberal-Ontario)
 Honourable George C. van Roggen (Liberal-British Columbia)

The House of Commons

Mr. Pat Nowlan, M.P., Co-Chairman (Progressive Conservative-Nova Scotia)
 Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, PC, M.P. (Liberal-Manitoba)
 Mr. Ross Belsher, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-British Columbia)
 Mr. Don Boudria, M.P. (Liberal-Ontario)
 Mr. Jim Caldwell, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Ontario)
 Mr. Jean Charest, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Quebec)
 Mr. Jack Ellis, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Ontario)
 Mr. Sid Fraleigh, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Ontario)
 Honourable John A. Fraser, PC, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-British Columbia)
 Mr. Jim Fulton, M.P. (New Democratic Party-British Columbia)

Mr. Darryl Gray, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Quebec)

Mr. Tom Hockin, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Ontario)

Miss Pauline Jewett, M.P. (New Democratic Party-British Columbia)

Mr. Bill Kempling, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Ontario)

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Quebec)

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Alberta)

Mr. Gordon Taylor, M.P. (Progressive Conservative-Alberta)

SUMMARY OF DISCUSSIONS

COMMITTEE I — TRADE AND ECONOMICS

Agenda

U.S. and Canadian economic conditions and policies

Specific trade issues:

- Softwood lumber
- Steel
- Fish products (East Coast)
- Tax on tourist literature
- Canadian pharmaceuticals
- Copyright law as related to communications
- Canadian provincial liquor boards in contexts of Government procurement
- Shoes
- Canadian investment policy for culturally sensitive sectors (book publishing; broadcasting)
- Visas for service technicians
- U.S./Canadian beef trade
- Canadian subsidized freight rates
- Impact of U.S. Farm Bill
- Expanded civil aviation relationship
- Cargo diversion

Committee I's discussions did not follow the agenda order and not all agenda items were taken up.

U.S. and Canadian Economic Conditions and Policies

A U.S. participant opened discussion in Committee I with a review of the state of the U.S. economy. 1985 had been a mixed year: moderate growth combined with the largest trade deficit in U.S. history. The prospects for 1986 were for overall growth of 3 to 4 per cent, unemployment falling to 7 per cent and inflation declining slightly to 3.5 per cent. Consumer debt stood at an all-time high and monetary policy was uncertain. The Federal Reserve was being cautious and holding up interest rates, for fear that a flight from the dollar might develop. More attention was being given to German rather than Japanese monetary policy, in the belief that if Germany lowered its interest rates, the way would be cleared for the United States to follow. The situation in the farm sector was bad, but no one knew how much impact this situation would have on the rest of the economy. The higher court would decide how Congress would respond and how much reduction in stimulation of the economy would follow. There were individual bright spots: the stock market was at a high point, all indicators had pointed steadily upward for eight months and the drop in oil prices would stimulate the economy. Most signs indicated that 1986 should be a strong year.

A Canadian spokesman indicated that Canada's GNP was forecast to grow by 4.5 per cent and unemployment might fall slightly to just under 10 per cent. The new budget, brought down only two days previously, projected a decline in the deficit to $29.5 billion, with a gradual reduction to $11 billion in 1991. New orders were up, there continued to be a surplus on merchandise trade and investment in plant and equipment continued to grow. Although it had been necessary to increase interest rates to protect the Canadian dollar, the projection was for a modest fall in rates in the longer term.

A second Canadian speaker commented on regional developments, noting that the economy of Central Canada was strong, but that both in the East and in the West, unemployment remained high. The fall in oil prices would hurt the province of Alberta, as well as Saskatchewan and the Atlantic provinces, where plans for developing hydro carbons on the continental shelf would be delayed.

In the ensuing discussion, Canadian interest and questions focused on prospects for the Gramm-Rudman procedure. The American lead spokesman said he thought the cuts prescribed for 1986 would go ahead even if the courts confirmed that automatic cuts were unconstitutional. Major cuts would not take place until 1987 and their application was uncertain, so it was hard to anticipate the impact of the legislation. In terms of future action, prospects ranged from a stalemate to a forced compromise between Congress and the President.

Other U.S. speakers showed equal uncertainty. One participant was afraid the court decision would allow Congress "to chicken out". It was true, however, that Congress would soon be faced with another requirement to raise the debt ceiling and that could recreate the conditions which had led to the Gramm-Rudman compromise in the first place.

Some U.S. participants showed concern that the prescribed cuts were limited to only one-fifth of the budget and claimed that the effect of the automatic cuts could be disastrous. To illustrate his point, one Senator noted that the cut in the appropriations for the Department of Transport would require an unacceptable reduction for air controllers.

Canadian speakers also asked questions regarding U.S. interest rates. Why did Mr. Volcker hold up rates so as to maintain the value of the U.S. dollar, when the Administration hoped for a decline in the value of the dollar? It was explained that Mr. Volcker continued to be concerned about inflation, which could be stimulated by a falling dollar. He was also worried about the $200 billion of outstanding U.S. Treasury bills, many of which were in the hands of foreigners. If U.S. interest rates were to fall without a comparable decline in German interest rates, there might be a huge shift out of U.S. treasury bills, which could knock the support out from under the U.S. dollar.

An American participant asked if the Canadian budget was "a cream puff". Canadian speakers pointed out how little latitude the government had, since it had discovered as a result of the last budget that it could not attack social programs and a high percentage of government expenditure involved statutory obligations which could not be cut. This explained why it had been necessary to raise taxes, even though the results were uncertain. Another Canadian participant pointed out that some regions of Canada depended heavily on government expenditure.

Specific trade issues

Agricultural Issues

All the agricultural issues were dealt with in a general discussion: most of the attention was given to the U.S. Farm Bill, with a few references being made to subsidized freight rates for Canadian grain, a glancing comment on hogs and no reference to beef.

The opening U.S. speaker on this item described the state of the agricultural sector in the United States as being economically and socially disastrous. One-third of farmers were in serious trouble, with debt to asset ratios in the range of 70 per cent. The banks and federal agencies had acquired large land holdings that overhung the market. High agricultural prices in the past had driven up the price of land, which represented the main debt of farmers. Resistance on the part of the farming community to action by the banks was taking a new and worrying violent form. One of the U.S. participants illustrated the point, mentioning that a U.S. marshall who had been in high school with him had been shot by a farm vigilante group. The reduction in farm income was also cutting into local taxes, which in turn was leading to reduced services in farm communities. These were some of the reasons why Congressmen and Senators from farm states had combined to take a new approach to farm support legislation.

In the past, U.S. farm legislation had put the emphasis on taking land out of production. In practice, however, with new techniques and seeds and more fertilizer, production had continued to grow. At the same time the European Community had subsidized its agriculture, calling up higher and higher production and displacing U.S. grain exports around the world.

Congress' response has been a bill whose object was to confront U.S. competitors and outsubsidize them. $2 billion has been set aside for export enhancement, which to date the Administration had not used. Congress was considering mandating the use of part of this amount. However, by July 1986 when newly produced wheat would reach market, the U.S. loan rate for wheat was expected to fall to $2.30 a bushel, at which level the full U.S. support price would be available to U.S. farmers. They pointed to another element of the bill which could have an effect on Canada. Farmers would be permitted to grow other crops on land previously sown to wheat, such as potatoes and rapeseed, and still receive the wheat subsidy. U.S. production of such crops could as a result go up significantly.

Canadian participants questioned the U.S. speakers repeatedly as to the cost and effect of the program. They pointed out that world demand for grains was relatively inelastic and lower prices were not in fact likely to lead to much greater consumption. Competitors such as Australia and Canada — not only the European Community — would have to match American prices so as not to lose market share. The only beneficiaries would be major importers such as the Russians who could buy wheat for $2.30 U.S. a bushel. None of the American participants contested this scenario. One observed that the United States faced a tough two year trial period, with the outcome being uncertain. "If it doesn't kill us, it's going to cure us". But the United States was not prepared to cut back production and see other countries such as Argentina and Brazil filling the gap.

In spite of the scale of the support offered, U.S. speakers noted that American farmers wanted even higher support prices. A U.S. participant explained that he had voted for the bill because he believed that farmers' attitudes would turn around once they had received their second cheque. However, he recognized that the bill was controversial and that there was great anxiety in the U.S. farm community.

It was interesting that there was only one passing reference to Canada's freight subsidy. Several Canadians responded by pointing out that prairie farmers had no alternate route to ship their grain to market, that a transport subsidy had been an agreed condition of the entry of the prairie provinces into the Canadian federation, that the U.S. government subsidized their own inland waterways and finally that the new transport subsidy arrangements in Canada not only constituted a reduction over what had been in place previously, but also involved a declining percentage of subsidy year over year.

It seemed evident that the U.S. legislators interested in farm questions were taking a world-wide approach. From this perspective a Canadian transport subsidy for grain was a matter of minor concern.

The only reference to hogs was by the opening U.S. speaker who admitted that last year's blockage of Canadian hog exports to his state of Nebraska under the guise of a medical concern was in fact a device to embargo sales. However, imports had never been significant and he was pleased the ban had been lifted. The subject was not raised again by either side.

Canadian investment policy for culturally sensitive sectors

A Canadian participant briefly introduced this topic by referring to the broad range of new legislation that was pending, especially in the field of copyright, suggesting that many of these changes would remove existing irritants.

The opening U.S. response was similarly brief. Referring to the acquisition of Prentice-Hall by Gulf and Western, he said he could not understand the grounds for the Canadian position. He hoped they were important, because Canada's actions in this matter constituted a genuine irritant. He warned that the book manufacturing clause was coming up for renewal and there was pressure not to maintain the exemption for Canada at that time. Gulf and Western had made their acquisition in good faith before the new policy on indirect acquisitions had been announced and they were faced with a reduction in the value of the Canadian assets that they had acquired.

Two Canadian speakers commented in detail on the special problems which cultural industries faced in Canada. The first remarks referred specifically to book publishing. 80 per cent of the industry was foreign owned, and these companies tended to be more interested in profit than in promoting Canadian culture. Since the population was relatively small, book runs were short and costs relatively high. In this environment it was cheaper to revise textbooks written for the U.S. market rather than to prepare material specifically for Canadian market and as a result it was difficult for Canadian writers to find a publisher for books. The Prentice-Hall decision was especially complicated because the government's general investment policy and its policy for the publishing industry were in conflict.

The second Canadian speaker spoke in broader terms. Over the years successive governments had made several moves to support Canadian culture, such as establishing the CBC, the National Film Board, the Canada Council and a number of other institutions. Ownership appeared to be the crucial factor. For example, film distribution was in non-Canadian hands and only two per cent of films shown in Canada were produced in the country. The last government's attempt to resolve this problem by offering inducements to invest in film productions had been ineffective. And in book publishing, 80 per cent of the Canadian authors whose works were published were handled by the 20 per cent of Canadian owned publishers.

With regard to book publishing, at the time of establishing Investment Canada to replace the Foreign Investment Review Agency, the government had stated clearly that the cultural industries would be treated differently and that even indirect acquisitions would have to be sold to Canadians. The Gulf and Western acquisition would be exempted, although the government was negotiating with the firm in order to find an acceptable compromise. These negotiations had not been completed.

Copyright Law

Intimately linked to the above question has been the issue of copyright. Recently a House of Commons sub-committee had completed a report on copyright, in which it recommended the application of the user pay principle for radio and cable transmissions. If the government were to adopt these recommendations, which seemed possible, the opening Canadian speaker thought this would go a long way to satisfy U.S. concerns. Similarly proposed legislation could remove the worst irritants with regard to software and chips.

Another Canadian participant, noted that the problem of border broadcasting remained unresolved. However, technological developments have been rapidly changing the nature of this problem. In the light of these developments, he wondered whether there would be any interest on the U.S. side in trying to work out a North American accord in broadcast transmission.

None of these comments evoked any U.S. response. However, a Senator from Alaska noted that in his state there were objections to direct broadcast by Cancom satellite. Local ABC stations objected to the fact that programs transmitted through the Canadian satellite were available days before the same programs were shown on ABC and Cancom was becoming very popular. The Canadian spokesman noted that Alaskan TV stations using material transmitted by Cancom in fact paid royalties for the U.S. programs which they used. Nevertheless, the U.S. Senator reported that ABC was arguing that the satellite transmissions had not been authorized by the U.S. regulatory authorities and should be banned.

Steel

The U.S. spokesman, a Senator from a steel producing state, spoke in the most general terms about jobs lost by U.S. workers to foreign imports. He had co-sponsored with Senator Heinz a proposal to place a quota on steel imports into the United States and felt that the U.S. Administration was moving too slowly to limit these imports.

The Canadian respondent described the extent of cooperation between the steel industries of the two countries. He noted that Canada imported $1.29 of materials and equipment from the United States for every dollar of steel that it exported to the United States. Canadian companies had been able to monitor their exports to the United States and in 1985 exports had actually fallen by 9.2 per cent. Canadian customs officials were collaborating carefully to ensure that foreign shipments were not being transhipped through Canada. In fact the steel industries of the two countries were closely integrated and Canada considered that it was a scrupulously fair trader.

In the face of these facts the American Senator acknowledged that specifically in regard to the steel industry, relations between the two countries were good. In support of this observation, he reported that, while Canada was the third largest exporter of steel into the United States, it was also the largest foreign market for U.S. steel.

This grudging commendation led another U.S. participant to comment that in this field relations between the two countries "were better than good". The cooperation of Canadian customs officials was a model and the Canadian industry had moved effectively to limit exports during a period when it had been recognized that formal Voluntary Restraint Agreements (VRAs) with other countries were not working.

Tax on Tourist Literature

This item was dealt with expeditiously. A Canadian spokesman expressed the opinion that the problem was on the way to being resolved. Bill C-80 would look after government publications and would apply retroactively. However, it was proving difficult to define non-governmental organizations.

The U.S. respondent indicated some satisfaction with half measures, but reminded the committee that the American government was counting on the other half of the bargain.

A second U.S. participant used the occasion to express satisfaction with Canadian efforts — principally those taken by the new Ontario government — to resolve an on-going dispute over terms of access to recreational land and water in Ontario by Minnesota residents. He attributed some of the progress to ongoing discussions at Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group meetings.

Visas for Service Technicians

The U.S. spokesman, a New York State Congressman, noted that this problem had arisen as a result of legal action taken by bricklayers against Mexican labourers. However, the legal decision was being applied across the board by U.S. border authorities and there was popular support for this action, for example from telephone repair workers in his constituency who were upset in a time of high unemployment to see Canadian technicians come across the border to repair a local system located just south of the St. Lawrence River.

The Canadian respondent noted that pending an appeal to a higher court the U.S. border authorities were limiting the exclusion of technicians to bricklayers and other construction trades. This was fortunate, since the United States would suffer far more than Canada if the restrictions were to be applied reciprocally by Canada, because six U.S. technicians visited Canada for every Canadian technician entering the United States. He suggested that, to avoid a charge of discrimination against Mexico, the problem might be handled as a part of the trade negotiations.

American participants questioned the wisdom of this latter approach, which might lead to serious delay. Their preference was for a legislated resolution. As one U.S. speaker observed, "This is one we owe you."

Canadian Provincial Liquor Boards

This item was introduced by a Canadian participant who stressed that the sales of wines and spirits fell within provincial jurisdiction and the federal government could only offer advice in this area. Even as between provinces there were complaints, so that Canadians themselves were affected by this system.

The U.S. spokesman raised two objections. First, Americans objected to discriminatory mark-ups. Secondly, they objected to the practice in some provinces where distribution was discriminatory, with only local wines being available in grocery stores. He warned that this field would complicate the free trade negotiations.

Canadian participants commented briefly that a transitional period would be needed in this area and that the only way Canada could achieve rationalization in the domestic brewing industry would be through a free trade agreement.

Canadian Pharmaceuticals

An American participant led off on this item, reporting that the two governments were close to an agreement to resolve this dispute, and that the only element still to be settled concerned retroactivity.

The Canadian spokesman reminded the meeting that there were several major actors indirectly involved in the negotiations on the Canadian side — the elderly in particular and consumers in general, as well as provincial governments, doctors, pharmacists and Canadian and multi-national producers. A year ago it had seemed that the two countries were close to reaching agreement, yet differences persisted. An additional concern of the Canadian government was that the multi-national companies should be good corporate citizens in Canada, an opinion which the U.S. side strongly endorsed.

Softwood Lumber

Just as in 1985, the issue of Canadian softwood lumber exports was the irritant which aroused the greatest concern on the U.S. side. The item was held over until Saturday morning, pending the arrival of a centrally-involved U.S. participant.

The two opening American spokesmen gave their presentation a new twist compared with previous years. They argued that the principal problem was over-production in North America. Since the depression of the early 1980s, U.S. consumption had picked up, but Canadian lumber had been the main beneficiary of the increased consumption. Not only had unemployment in the industry remained very high, but there was growing pressure on wood workers to accept major cuts in wages. Specifically Weyerhaeuser was pressing for a 35 per cent reduction in wages. While some attempt was made to attribute increased Canadian exports to "freight and stumpage subsidies", the speakers acknowledged that the differential in the exchange rate was decisive.

The initial Canadian response was to point to additional factors in Canada's success, specifically to productivity gains from recent automation of saw mills, which was elaborated in considerable detail, and to the Jones Act, which allows for waivers that have never been sought. In spite of its successes, however, the Canadian lumber industry had experienced reductions in employment equal to those in the United States.

When the Canadian spokesman reminded the meeting that, after the largest investigation in its history, the U.S. Department of Commerce had determined that the Canadian stumpage system did not constitute a subsidy, U.S. participants countered, first, by observing that the British Columbia system was calculated so as to assure a profit to an efficient producer. However, soon after, when pressed again by Canadians to account for the findings of U.S. regulatory authorities, one of them explained the results by describing the regulators "as a bunch of Easterners".

The theme of over-production, as advanced by representatives of lumber producing states, was repeatedly pressed. A Senator from Georgia noted that in his state, which was a major lumber producer, half the lumber sold was Canadian. Twenty per cent of the mills in his state had closed. Recently Georgia-Pacific, which has been a major importer of Canadian lumber, had reversed its position and was supporting restraints on imports. For him the choice lay between "voluntary restraint and involuntary restraint" and he said he intended "to use free trade to get satisfaction on lumber".

Other U.S. speakers repeated that, with over-production on the continent, something would have to be done. Recognizing that with over 1000 producers in Canada, voluntary restraint was difficult to achieve, they saw no alternative to control at the U.S. border. The message they wanted to convey was that "right or wrong, something is going to happen". This position was supported by a U.S. participant who is a strong supporter of free trade. He thought Canada should think about the way the United States has reacted to automobile, steel and textile imports. Specifically, with regard to Japanese cars, they were better made and cheaper than U.S. cars and there were no subsidies. But the United States had acted when foreign penetration had threatened to take more than 20 per cent of the market for cars, as it also did with regard to textiles and steel. With softwood lumber the figure was 34 per cent. If the two governments did not find some way to reduce the pressure from Canadian exports, Congress would sooner or later act unilaterally.

Another Canadian participant from a lumber producing region of British Columbia told the Americans that part of the reason for the success of Canadian exports was that Canada's lumber was preferred because it was physically superior for certain uses. With regard to the possibility that the Canadian government could act to limit exports or possibly reduce the allowable cut, he warned that Canadian saw mills that had not closed down needed the through-put to survive. A cutback would lead to further bankruptcies and to litigation. The effect of any such effort would be traumatic, because wood product exports were Canada's largest single export.

Running parallel to the main discussion, the Group also took up the question of redefining a subsidy. The Chairman of the trade sub-committee of the Ways and Means Committee reviewed his efforts to establish "a fair market price" for raw materials entering substantially into the cost of goods exported to the United States. His hope was that his bill would become law in this Congress, and he assumed that other countries would then pass mirror legislation. He thought it important that trade should be regulated by established principles and the rule of law, rather than being the subject of ad hoc restraints, separate deals or international cartelization. This observation prompted a member of his committee to note that, while he generally supported his chairman, he was opposed to this bill since it constituted a unilateral change in the definition of a subsidy.

The only other discussion relating to this proposed legislation was initiated by a Canadian participant who complained that with regard to lumber the draft bill was deficient in that it excluded costs other than stumpage incurred in bringing logs to market. The bill's author asserted that amendments had taken account of these concerns, and the issue was left there.

A Canadian Member of the Group, relating this specific discussion to the proposed trade negotiations, drew attention to the paradox that at a time when the two governments were about to discuss the possibility of a general freeing of trade, Congress was threatening to raise barriers to lumber imports. He wondered whether the two governments had ever considered trying to reach an agreement to manage trade in lumber between the two countries.

The main Canadian spokesman noted that the projections of the Canadian industry were for a slight reduction in Canada's share of the U.S. market in 1986. He attributed this possibility to the relative decline in the value of the Canadian and U.S. dollars in relation to the Japanese yen in particular and to Pacific Rim country currencies in general. It was hoped that Canada would be able in 1986 to move an additional billion board feet of lumber abroad, thereby relieving some pressure on the U.S. market.

This observation led a U.S. Senator from Alaska to comment that his state was currently importing logs by boom from Canada. He did not expect new export markets would bring relief sufficiently quickly. He wondered whether Canada might be prepared to ban the export of round logs, perhaps in concert with the United States. Several American participants enthusiastically joined in supporting this approach. Canadian speakers reported that this might be an easier action for Canada to undertake than for the United States. The federal government had constitutional responsibility in trade matters and British Columbia had a strong and long term commitment to limiting the export of round logs. They wondered how the United States could control the export of logs cut on private lands. A U.S. member, who has regularly sponsored a bill to ban log exports, claimed that his draft bill would prevent an exporter including any logs from federal lands in a shipment which included any logs from private lands. He thought in practical terms this would prevent the export of round logs.

The issue was not resolved, but there was a strong feeling on both sides that the possibility of unilateral, but parallel, actions to limit the export of round logs should be explored by the two governments. Canadian participants felt that Canadian action, even if not reciprocated by the United States, could slightly reduce the volume of Canadian lumber exported to the United States and would have a salutary effect in Congress.

COMMITTEE II — ENERGY, DEFENCE, AND MULTILATERAL ISSUES

Agenda

Energy

- Canadian and U.S. deregulation of natural gas
- Implication of decline in oil prices
- U.S./Canadian trade in uranium

Defence

- Arms control
- SDI; Unified Space Command
- NORAD renewal and Canadian role in North American Defence
- Canadian defence spending and role in NATO
- Defence production sharing

Space station cooperation

Multilateral

- International debt issue
- Terrorism
- Contadora Process

Energy

Natural Gas

The main point of this discussion was that Canadian deregulation seemed to be resulting in increased exports of Canadian natural gas to the United States. A U.S. spokesman pointed out that while both Canada and the United States had made remarkable progress in deregulating their natural gas sectors, U.S. deregulation was moving more slowly. Canadian prices were moving down and Canada would have full price deregulation by late 1986 but in the United States about 40 per cent of the supplies would remain regulated next year unless there were further legislation. He also noted the strong resistance of the U.S. pipeline industry to the new rule of FERC (Federal Energy Regulatory Commission) which offered the companies quick approval on applications to sell or transport gas or build new facilities if they provided access to their transportation facilities on a non-discriminatory basis. Only four companies had complied so far.

The U.S. delegate then commented that the new Canadian policy of deregulation had resulted in a significant increase in Canadian gas imports which now constituted 6 per cent of the U.S. gas import market but was capable of rising to 10 per cent. Via new pipelines, Canadian gas was displacing imported oil in the U.S. northeast and even California consumers could benefit from it. In his own district an uproar had arisen when El Paso announced its intention to purchase Canadian gas. Clearly, the industry was in trouble. U.S. producers were asking for strong import restrictions. It was obvious there were benefits to consumers and this delegate said he himself was in favour of deregulation but, in the face of the difficulties being encountered, he urged fair trade, restraint and discussions for mutual cooperation.

In response, a Canadian spokeswoman referred to the regional reference price, explaining that Canadian exporters were not selling at prices below those charged in the adjacent Canadian market. This participant was interested in whether the United States was pursuing its policy on "block billing". In Canada the price was $2.95 tcf, but in the United States the price seemed to vary enormously.

The Chairman of the U.S. Senate Energy Committee replied that Energy Secretary Herrington was undertaking consultations on this issue but had made no decision. In the United States the prices were set by the industrial market and the residual price had a major impact. He himself welcomed the Canadian deregulation and said the main trend in the United States was to free the market to give buyers and sellers the ability to negotiate. He acknowledged however that there was a high level of concern among U.S. producers over the potential for Canadian natural gas inroads into the United States. He observed that some of the zeal for deregulation in the United States appeared to be on the wane. This Senator also thought the windfall profit tax that the United States had applied several years ago had given the Canadian energy sector a competitive advantage.

A Canadian Senator hoped that governments and the industry would reflect on the long-term outlook before projects such as the Alaska natural gas pipeline project were put on hold. Otherwise both countries would leave themselves vulnerable when increased capacity would be needed.

Oil

The observation by a U.S. Senator that the gas market could be significantly affected by the price declines in crude oil turned the Committee discussions to the recent startling price changes in this sector. Various estimates by delegates as to future of crude oil prices were: $12 a barrel for 6 months; $5 to $8 a barrel until the end of 1986; or low prices that could remain low for as long as 2 years. Delegates agreed that Saudi Arabia wanted to teach its OPEC colleagues and other producers a lesson but it was difficult to know what action to take to stop the decline. North American oil companies already were feeling the effect and activity was declining. When a Canadian delegate said the Alberta-based industry needed $18 a barrel to move ahead, U.S. participants stated that the U.S. industry needed at least that level, that exploration would dry up with only known fields being worked aside from Prudhoe Bay and, under the $15 a barrel level, many of the old U.S. fields would shut down. Moreover, under U.S. regulations such fields must be cemented in and cannot be easily turned on again. One U.S. delegate predicted that consumer demand would rise with the falling price and that the 'gas guzzler' car would return.

A Canadian Senator urged that both countries plan for future years when oil supplies would again be scarce. He thought energy investment should be maintained and protected, heavy oil plants supported and other measures undertaken to preserve this resource and prepare for the 1990s. But the U.S. side was almost unanimous in its view that the United States would be unlikely to plan now for a future shortage despite "lots of lip service". It was unfortunate, said one delegate, but the United States would in all likelihood allow itself to become vulnerable once again. It would wait for another crisis and "then hit the panic button."

When a Canadian delegate suggested that one solution to the decline in prices would be a cut in international production to stabilize the price, it was generally agreed this was unlikely to happen. Nor would a non-OPEC cartel be likely to be effective since the example of the failed international wheat agreement pointed up how difficult cartels were to achieve or to run. Another Canadian suggested regulations should be imposed nationally to mitigate the price decline and to protect the existing investments.

Two U.S. Senators then spoke of the possibility that the U.S. Administration might impose a tax on imported oil although they admitted it was still a controversial issue. While one Congressman said he would rather see the tax on gasoline at the pump, most of the U.S. delegates thought the import tax was more likely. It would be the easiest to sell politically and it could be treated as a "revenue enhancement" to reduce the deficit rather than as a tax. In response to Canadian questions, the U.S. side said the revenue generated would not be recycled into energy exploration in the United States and that there could be opposition from the petrochemical industry to the higher feedstock prices. Moreover the U.S. Northeast, a region heavily dependent on imported oil would want to have the benefit of the low imported prices vis-à-vis other U.S. regions which had had a more advantageous position in the past. A Canadian observed that regional problems in Canada could be exacerbated by the low oil prices as well as in the United States.

When a Canadian Senator asked if there could be an exemption for Canada from the oil import tax, U.S. participants were doubtful. What would be the justification, the Americans asked. If Canada were exempted, Mexican and Venezuelan imports would also have to be exempted and the Administration would thus be deprived of 80 per cent of its anticipated revenue. A Congressman implied that if any exemption were made, it would be for Mexico where such a tax would have a devastating effect. The Chairman of the Energy Committee in the U.S. Senate thought an exemption for Canada might only be possible if "tied into" a bilateral trade agreement. One Canadian participant predicted that under such an agreement there would be completely free north-south energy flows but another Canadian said that transshipment factors could result in distortions which could be damaging. The almost idle Sarnia to Montreal pipeline was an example.

When U.S. delegates asked what the impact on Canada of a U.S. oil import tax would be, a Canadian Senator replied that, with 600,000 barrels a day involved, it would have an extremely serious impact on Western Canada.

Electricity

While this subject was not on the agenda, the U.S. Chairman of the Senate Energy Committee briefly raised the problem of Canadian exports of electricity from British Columbia. At present the U.S. Northwest had a temporary surplus supply of electricity which the spokesman judged would be depleted by 1991 or even earlier. California wanted to buy Canadian electricity but the Bonneville Power Corporation, competing for sales, was refusing to carry the Canadian power on its transmission lines. B.C. power, based on hydro, was slightly cheaper than Northwest power (14 mills compared to 22 mills). This delegate said he had proposed negotiations with Bonneville for a contract which would provide for Bonneville to supply the California market in the short term and B.C. in the long term, but little enthusiasm had been shown. A Canadian delegate remarked somewhat wryly that the idea sounded like a euphemism for "parking" B.C. electricity permanently. The U.S. Senator repeated that it was just a temporary glut and industrial demand would change that.

Uranium

A U.S. spokesman was quite specific in outlining the damage done to the uranium industry in New Mexico by Canadian uranium imports. There, employment had fallen from 18,000 to 900 workers. In part, the problem was due to a decline in demand caused by diminishing use and construction of nuclear power plants as well as to inefficiencies in the U.S. industry because of lack of modernization and poor management. It was also clearly due to Canadian imports he said. The Canadian industry benefitted from government assistance and was kept going by lucrative $60 a pound long-term contracts. The $15 a pound Canadian exports to the United States looked to him like dumping. Two-thirds of all U.S. uranium imports were from Canada and Canadian exporters were aggressive. Energy Secretary Herrington's recent ruling that the U.S. uranium industry was non-viable had brought some hope of relief through import restrictions, continued this delegate. There were currently four bills in Congress, three of which were bills he himself had introduced. Some protection was essential or the New Mexico industry would cease to exist, he stated.

In addition, this participant drew attention to the Canadian policy on 'further processing' which required upgrading in Canada before exporting. This deprived the U.S. converters of the opportunity to compete. Moreover it was contrary to the undertaking between the President and the Prime Minister at Quebec last year for "open access to each other's markets". While the U.S. Administration's policy was probably not going to take steps against this processing policy, this delegate warned that the grave situation was forcing him to try to legislate some restriction, probably with a rider on a bill.

A Canadian Senator said it was evident that Saskatchewan was the cause of most of the U.S. problems because its uranium finds were of such high grade and the costs of production were much lower. He maintained there was no dumping but that the Canadian industry had a very competitive price. However, he agreed that the Canadian conversion policy was protectionist and was bound to be an irritant. He personally thought it should be eliminated.

A U.S. Senator observed that there was great difficulty in determining what an unfair trade subsidy was since tax policies, investment regulations, local government practices, all had to be carefully examined. While obviously unfair industrial policies needed to be examined, the competitive advantage of rich deposits and low production costs ought not to be penalized. In addition, perhaps the high U.S. dollar was a contributing factor to the problem.

This remark led to a brief exchange on the financial and trade relations between the two countries during which a number of points were made. A U.S. delegate complained that the Canadian dollar seemed to track the U.S. dollar down so the United States could never improve the ratio. A Canadian countered that Canada did not have the reserves to continue to systematically support the dollar but that if a bilateral trade arrangement were concluded, the Canadian dollar would strengthen because of the assured market access. Several other Canadian participants differed with this latter opinion. When a U.S. Senator warned that there could be no free trade agreement without resolution of some major bilateral irritants, Canadian delegates pointed out how much more accessible Canada was than Japan and how few Americans knew Canada was the best market for U.S. goods. The Senator then pointed to a $25 million Canadian subsidy which had caused a U.S. waferboard plant to move to Canada, implying this was unfair competition.

Defence

Arms Control

The discussion on arms control was wide-ranging with firmly held opinions expressed by a number of participants. The Chairman of the U.S. House Committee on Foreign Affairs began by noting the significant cuts now being offered in the current proposals and counter-proposals for both strategic and intermediate-range weapons. The USSR had agreed to the complete elimination of U.S. and Soviet intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) in Europe as well as to verification measures. While there was posturing on both sides, this spokesman was generally optimistic that some real breakthroughs could be achieved. The United States had not rejected the latest proposals out of hand. President Reagan deserved credit for moving things forward. The fact that there was as yet no precise date for the next Summit meeting should not be considered a setback. It was better to wait for a positive agenda so the two leaders could have substantive discussions.

There was still a question as to whether SDI would remain a stumbling block, continued this participant, but both the Soviet Union and the United States had backed off a little on their original positions. President Reagan had said the United States would live within the narrow interpretation of the ABM Treaty. He thought the Russians were probably worried that the SDI system would be deployed after Reagan's term was over, and they were also nervous that the Americans would move ahead quickly in research.

This spokesman expressed regret that no progress had been achieved on a comprehensive test ban (CTB). He raised the question of the Soviet offer of a moratorium on nuclear testing and said that the House had passed a resolution urging the President to resume negotiations with the USSR for a CTB. This would be useful even if only for propaganda purposes but it was clear the Administration was not prepared to push it at this time. In addition the House has asked the Senate to ratify two earlier test ban treaties, (the 1974 Threshold Test Ban Treaty and the 1976 Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty). The United States was making good progress on verification procedures to monitor testing he noted.

The Canadian spokeswoman said she reacted favourably and hopefully to the points made by the previous speaker, except for the lack of progress on a CTB. In Canada there was great interest in the arms control and disarmament negotiations and almost a euphoria after the Geneva Summit. The latest Gorbachev proposals had been well received including the three-stage timetable for the elimination of nuclear weapons by the year 2000. She noted that the United States had responded with a three-year time frame in respect to INF elimination in Europe and Asia.

The principal Canadian concern was the ABM Treaty, this delegate continued. Distress in Canada over the earlier U.S. re-interpretation of the Treaty had given way to relief when the President had agreed to live within the narrower interpretation. But was such a policy only for the time being, she asked. The ABM was important since it was one of the few treaties in effect. Moreover, in Canada there was considerable worry that Canada could, through the NORAD agreement, get involved in SDI particularly when it was discovered that the original ABM clause of the agreement had been quietly removed by the government in 1981. External Affairs wanted the ABM clause reinserted in the agreement but the Defence Department did not. The delegate stated that she did not think Canada should be involved in cruise missile testing. Finally she said it was very discouraging to hear the House Chairman's remarks that the President would not look seriously at the Soviet test moratorium offer as she suspected there would be widespread support for a CTB.

A U.S. Senator who is a member of the Senate Arms Control Observer Group that has monitored the arms talks at Geneva during the past year began by commenting on the Soviet leadership. Although Mr. Gorbachev was an astute politician, he was still new and unsophisticated in policy matters; he had no competence in foreign affairs and no knowledge of detail in defence policy and arms control issues. However he knew that when Reagan, the more experienced statesman, had finished his term he, Gorbachev, would be the senior at the Geneva negotiating table. So he believed he could take his time. The United States, however, wanted a breakthrough in INF negotiations in a three-year period and this was why the timing was so important. As for the ABM Treaty, it was necessary to tell the Russians that the Treaty could be re-interpreted in view of the Soviet radar establishment at Krasnoyarsk which could be part of a strategic system in violation of the Treaty.

As for nuclear testing, this Senator said he thought the two earlier test treaties should be ratified by the Senate if the USSR would move on verification. However he disagreed with the emphasis put on CTB negotiations by the two previous speakers. Opening up test ban negotiations now would be "playing into Gorbachev's hands". The INF negotiations must have priority; radical reductions in the strategic area must be agreed to first this participant insisted. He predicted there would be a series of agreements achieved in Geneva but stated there should be absolutely no attempt to placate the Soviet Union.

Responding to the Senator's point about the Soviet leader's inexperience, the Canadian spokeswoman commented that when Mr. Gorbachev had visited Canada two years ago and had been questioned on agricultural and disarmament issues by a parliamentary committee he had seemed very well-versed and competent in his responses. Another Canadian Member made the point that the Canadian government supported the goal of radical reductions in strategic nuclear forces as well as the restrictive interpretation of the ABM treaty.

Several U.S. participants reiterated that timing in the negotiations was an extremely important factor and the U.S. negotiators must be fully supported. They were sincere and their role was difficult. An American Senator said he failed to understand why so many people were concerned about U.S. statements on the ABM Treaty when the USSR was flagrantly violating it. It must be remembered that the United States did not even have the one system allowed under the Treaty and SDI was only an extension of the ABM mode.

The first U.S. participant, challenged by the Senate spokesman over his original emphasis on test ban negotiations, subsequently agreed that the INF negotiations should have first priority but stated that he nevertheless hoped negotiations on a CTB would still be in play at Geneva. He also reviewed the situation in the other areas of arms control and disarmament. At the Stockholm Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), he said, the West was holding out for more substantive confidence and security building measures (CSBMs). At the Vienna meetings on Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions (MBFR), there were at last some positive developments in reductions of conventional forces after the negotiations had been stalled for 10 years because of lack of data on forces in Eastern Europe. The United States and its western allies had proposed the reduction of 5,000 U.S. and 11,500 Soviet ground troops, no increase for three years for the remaining forces on both sides and a package of verification and confidence building measures. The West had dropped its prerequisite for data information on Eastern forces and had adopted the USSR's conceptual framework in an effort to revive the Vienna talks.

As for a chemical weapons ban, this spokesman said he was very concerned because the United States was building new chemical weapons which the House of Representatives had tried in vain to stop. The United States wanted a mandatory challenge inspection regime while it continued with its research program. A chemical weapons treaty was likely to be discussed with the USSR at Geneva, particularly if the United States acquired a capability with the Bigeye Bomb which could disseminate binary chemical weapons. This delegate paid tribute to Canada's supportive role in respect to U.S. policy on arms control and noted approvingly Canada's interest in the development of verification mechanisms. He concluded by saying it would be good if Canada took a lead in this field particularly with respect to chemical weapons and ASAT testings.

Strategic Defence Initiative (SDI) and Unified Space Command

During the discussions on arms control, a U.S. Senator, Chairman of the Senate Defense Appropriations Committee, had emphasized his firm support for SDI, making the point that the USSR was very concerned and was insisting that the United States reduce its SDI research. While parts of the Soviet technology were far ahead, e.g., in radio wave technology, the Russians were still behind in numerous areas. Moreover, they could not use 20th century technology without changing their closed society. How to stimulate industrial growth with no broadly based computer capability was a serious and sensitive question for them.

A Canadian spokesman outlined Canada's response to the American invitation to participate in SDI research, that is, it had declined to take part in a government-to-government effort in support of an SDI program but the private sector was free to do so. Moreover, the Prime Minister had stated that Canada considered it was "prudent" of the United States to do the research in light of the Soviet work in this field. The decision to forego government-to-government participation was because the Canadian government wanted any increased military expenditures to be used for real defence efforts as well as on components for a space laboratory. This delegate expressed doubts that in a government-to-government arrangement the United States would really be prepared to share its research and technology with other countries such as Japan, Canada or the U.K., in view of the fact it was costing the United States Treasury $25 billion. Further, this participant questioned what type of SDI research was being planned — development for a boost-phase knock-out or for point defence. A U.S. delegate responded that it was difficult at this stage to say how SDI would develop.

A Canadian Senator was supportive of SDI and thought that Canada should be participating in SDI research on a government-to-government basis because of the spinoff of technological research. However as a former scientist, he was doubtful that the aims and objectives of SDI were actually achievable because even if only 5 per cent of the enemy's weapons penetrated it would be disastrous.

A U.S. Congressman reminded the group that SDI had been a valuable bargaining chip in the Geneva negotiations, a remark which caused a Canadian Senator to wonder if the United States was now relying on its resistance to modifying its SDI program in order to keep the USSR at the negotiating table. As for the U.S. sharing of technology in its research program, the Congressman said that the Los Alamos laboratory in his district was unable to absorb all the research funds being given it and in any case the United States was committed to share technology with its allies.

A Canadian participant said the official opposition party in Canada was strongly opposed to SDI for strategic reasons. If there were a shift from a mutual assured destruction (MAD) defence policy to an active space defensive stance, it raised the whole question of what should be done to prepare a ground-based system of defence against bombers and cruise missiles. Surely this would mean a large investment would be required to defend against such air-breathing attacks. Such a conclusion raised Canadian fears that its territory would be inevitably involved as part of the defence of continental North America. Canada was not saying 'yes' or 'no' at this stage as to whether it would want its territory to be involved in active defence but at least this question should be on the agenda for discussions.

NORAD

A Canadian Senator observed that the NORAD agreement between the two countries was due for renewal by May and the extension would probably be signed at the leaders' meeting in mid-March. A Canadian Senate Committee report in 1985 had recommended the agreement be renewed and extended to the year 2000. On the other hand, a recent report by the House Committee had recommended a 5-year renewal. One of the points of contention has been whether or not the ABM clause which would confirm both countries' commitment to and support for the integrity of the ABM treaty should be reinserted in the agreement. The Senate Committee had also presented its fourth report on Canada's defence establishment which included a costing for all the recommendations in the previous four reports, that is, for increases in manpower, in maritime defence, in territorial air defence and in military air transport equipment. The additional expense (that is, added to that already covered by the Department of Defence's allocations) over the next 15 years would amount to about 0.27 per cent of GNP. This year's expenditure would be pushed up from 2.06 per cent to 2.33 percent of GNP, and the total would constitute a 12.8 per cent annual increase in the defence budget. This delegate doubted however whether the present government would institute many of the Committee's recommendations.

NATO

A Canadian Senator stated that the majority of Canadians recognized that Canada's main defence efforts must be devoted to assisting the U.S. deterrent capability through NATO. The Canadian government and in particular the Department of Defence were currently looking at how best they could fulfill four requirements: a) to fill out Canada's forces' manpower and materiel; b) to replace and modernize equipment; c) to increase Canada's land force commitment in Northern Norway; and d) to increase force readiness for combat. In the 1985-86 fiscal years there would be an increase in military person-years to 82,700 and the Canadian capital budget for defence will rise in 1985-86 accordingly to $9.4 billion.

A U.S. Senate spokesman remarked that the Europeans were very concerned that North America would not maintain its commitment to Europe. The INF negotiations and SDI were making them anxious that the United States would cease to emphasize Europe. Everything that Canada could do in the context of NATO would give them a feeling of North American support. Another U.S. Senator made the point that if the INF negotiations were successful this would leave Western Europe vulnerable to a conventional attack and much more emphasis would need to be placed on conventional defence.

A Canadian delegate wondered whether the United States would consider making a link between U.S. agricultural problems related to European agricultural subsidies and assured U.S. defence commitments in Europe.

Defence Production Sharing

Over the past 26 years, a Canadian Senator said, two-way trade in defence goods had totalled $22 billion and the balance in the U.S. favour amounted to $1.7 billion. Sixty per cent of Canadian expenditures on defence purchases was in the United States but Canada had only 0.6 per cent of the available U.S. Defense Department market. Nonetheless, Canadian exports had almost doubled in the past four years to $1.6 billion. A U.S. Senator remarked wryly that he had seen recently a vivid example of how well the arrangement worked when the U.S. Defense Department took a contract away from the Boise Company in his state (Idaho) and gave it to a Canadian firm.

However another Canadian participant observed that there were problems in the working of the arrangement. On occasion, U.S. security requirements prevented Canadian firms from bidding on contracts and frequently it seemed that only U.S. subsidiary firms got contracts in Canada. Moreover, since Canada was buying most of its defence items off the shelf, it was fast losing its capability to offer Canadian-made defence items for sale. Finally, there were problems respecting the transfer of strategic and technological information but he noted that efforts were currently under way to reach understanding on this issue.

A U.S. Senator pointed out that the U.S. policy restricting the transfer of critical technology was targeted at companies set up to acquire the technology and pass it to the USSR. He said there had been problems with Canada in allowing transfers of important computer technology to the Soviet bloc. This Senator was doubtful when a Canadian delegate enquired whether Canadian companies which were about the same size as U.S. small business could qualify to gain exemption to the U.S. small business 'set asides'.

Space Station Co-operation

A Canadian spokesman said Canada had been asked to participate along with Japan and the Europeans in the United States' plans to spend $8 billion on a space station. Canada had agreed to look into developing a particular aspect of the station and if agreement could be reached, Canada's contribution would amount to about $600 million for a servicing and test facility although he noted some doubts had been expressed in the press about the feasibility and utility of the facility. Another Canadian asked whether the Challenger tragedy would result in a major delay in the development of the space station with less emphasis on the commercial feasibility and more on the scientific aspects. A U.S. Senator replied that while some delay might result there would be no change in overall U.S. commitment to the project and he was unaware of any de-emphasis in the commercial aspect by NASA.

Multilateral Issues

International Debt

A U.S. Congressman observed that although considerable progress seemed to have been made recently in dealing with the debt problems of the less developed countries, major problems remained. High inflation was continuing, the commercial banks had drastically reduced their lending and the Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs) were not really pushing the longer-term structural reforms needed.

This participant reviewed the elements of the October 1985 Baker proposal which called for the major debtor countries to adopt wide-ranging structural adjustments to promote growth and reduce inflation in the debtor countries; envisaged a central co-ordinating role for the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to increase structural lending by the MDBs, and urged the commercial banks to increase their lending to the principal debtors by $20 million over a three-year period. There has been widespread favourable reaction to Baker's proposal from the industrial countries, international financial institutions and the commercial banks. Even the debtors welcomed it including the Cartagena Group of 11 Latin American debtors, although they called for lower interest rates, increased commercial bank lending, a ceiling on capital outflows and increased MDB resources. This spokesman noted that when the Canadian commercial banks approved the Baker proposal they made the point that creditor governments had a role to play. The dramatic decline in oil prices had had an uneven impact on debtor countries, continued this delegate. Brazil and Argentina were benefitting but it was a horrendous problem for Mexico with an extremely serious potential impact on several U.S. banks including the Bank of America and Manufacturers Hanover.

A Canadian spokesman expressed doubts as to whether the situation was really improving significantly and whether the debts would ever be repaid unless some acceptable broad adjustments were made in the rules or a new type of Marshall Plan were tried. Otherwise, it seemed that international trade could grind to a halt and banks could fail — although he judged that governments were unlikely to allow major commercial banks to fail. This situation made governments responsible in a sense for the management of the banks. But this delegate warned that governments should not be too generous; a certain discipline and balance must be maintained and the IMF should continue to press for more economic discipline. The case-by-case approach was probably the preferable method of dealing with the problem.

A U.S. participant agreed with the more pessimistic outlook of the previous speaker and, in the course of the subsequent discussion as to whether governments should 'bail out' major banks, said he was prepared to see some major U.S. banks fail, although other U.S. delegates were clearly cool to the idea. The comment was made that it was fortunate few other debtor countries were emulating Peru's decision to severely limit its debt servicing payments. The exchange on this subject concluded on the rather gloomy and inconclusive note that the Mexican case could be a 'time bomb' which could lead to major bank failures and that, in the broader setting, there seemed to be no early prospect for easing the strain on the commercial banks which would continue to be stretched through repeated rescheduling of debt repayments.

Terrorism

The assassination the previous evening of Olaf Palme, the Swedish Prime Minister, and the fact that several of the U.S. legislators had recently dealt in Congress with new measures to counter terrorism served to heighten the Committee's interest on this topic. The Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee began by noting the excellent support which the Canadian government had extended to the United States on various anti-terrorist matters and commented on Canada's particular efforts in the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) to upgrade standards for air security. But unilateral or even bilateral approaches were not enough. What was needed was both a concerted multilateral approach and strengthened authority to the President.

A new package of anti-terrorist legislation was currently being prepared for the House continued this delegate. It included: measures to enhance security at foreign missions; air security; maritime security; upgraded nuclear safeguards under the IAEA; funds for security training in Third World countries; encouragements to other governments to issue travel advisories; and measures to deal with false passports and travel documents. The enhancement of embassies' physical security may cost $4 to $5 billion. In regard to airport security, perhaps the airline pilots were correct when they argued that if foreign airports did not comply, then U.S. planes should cease to fly there.

As for a multilateral approach, at the United Nations an international task force on counter-terrorism was proposed to exchange ideas and information on terrorism. This delegate considered it necessary to get international agreement that terrorism was a crime although he acknowledged the difficulty in finding an agreed definition of terrorism. "One man's terrorist is another man's freedom fighter". This spokesman suggested increasing the U.S. government's reward capacity. "Try a world-wide '10 most-wanted' list". Possible counter-terrorist actions by the Secretary of State would include the cutting-off of all assistance to a country if there were grounds for concluding it was acting as a safe haven or was guilty of state-supported terrorism. Despite protests from civil rights groups, perhaps some stronger safeguards were necessary on the Export Control Act. This spokesman concluded by emphasizing the need for a strong resolve by the international community to combat terrorism.

The Canadian spokesman on this subject recounted the most recent terrorist acts or threats involving Canada which included incidents at the Toronto subway, the Turkish Embassy, the Air India disaster, the Canadian Pacific Air tragedy, and the Egyptair hijacking. As a result, the Canadian government's attention was now focussed even more strongly on the subject of terrorism with the highest priority being given to work within ICAO. Canada was also taking measures related to airports, border patrols, the upgrading of its embassies' physical security abroad and consultations with relevant groups abroad.

This delegate commented that Canada had noted a deterioration in the climate, always fragile, for international law. Perhaps more attention needed to be paid to the refugee communities where persons sometimes acted irrationally in order to gain attention. This participant enquired whether American delegates considered that airport security should include the identification of every piece of luggage by a passenger before it was loaded on the plane. But U.S. delegates were doubtful that such a system would be workable.

A U.S. Senator who has taken a lead in introducing counter-terrorist legislation in the Senate described the bills he had recently introduced, some of which had become law. The bills included a bill to make it a felony for foreign diplomats in the United States to use firearms or explosives or to claim immunity after terrorist acts; a bill to provide for the death penalty for crimes of first-degree murder in hostage-taking; a bill to stop trade with Libya because of its involvement in international terrorism; and a bill to authorize the prosecution of terrorists who attack U.S. nationals abroad. The intent of the latter bill was to get more effective prosecution of terrorists regardless of where the attack against Americans occurred and make it possible to take such terrorists into custody even extraterritorially. After the U.S. 'skyjack' incident, the U.S. authorities had wanted to take the Achille Lauro hijackers into custody but were foiled by the action of the Italians. A useful legal precedent had been found in a 100-year old decision (Kerr vs. Illinois) upheld by Mr. Justice Hugo Black which supported the U.S. action in bringing Kerr back from Peru for trial. The Israelis had done the same thing when they kidnapped Eichmann from Argentina for trial although Argentina never agreed with this action.

While the first U.S. spokesman agreed on the need to broaden U.S. laws extraterritorially, he pointed out that the difficulties in such a course must be recognized as well as the dangers in hitting back indiscriminately in retaliation where innocent people could be hurt. There was even some danger that indiscriminate action could escalate into war. But he thought that diplomatic immunity should not be recognized as valid in cases such as the murder of the British policewoman in the Libyan Embassy incident. As for the imposition of economic sanctions against Libya, there had been disappointment in the United States at the lack of international cooperation although this spokesman acknowledged Canada's and Italy's cooperative responses. It was clear that economic sanctions needed to be tough, very tough, and needed international cooperation to be effective, he concluded.

A short exchange between a Canadian participant and the U.S. Senator dealt with the differing methods of obtaining indictments in Canada and the United States. Asked if the U.S. law proceeded on a 'presumption of guilt' the U.S. Senator replied that it was rather a 'presumption of probable cause' which allowed for a bill of indictment and custody within a couple of days or less.

The Contadora Process

A number of U.S. delegates commented vigorously on this topic, perhaps mindful of the upcoming Congressional votes on the President's request for $100 million worth of aid for the Contras opposing the Nicaraguan Sandinista government. A U.S. delegate began by observing that this issue was currently the single most controversial topic in the Congress. The official U.S. argument for funds was that pressure by the Contras was needed on the Sandinistas so they would resume talks with the Contras for a negotiated settlement. The Administration had said it would resume a dialogue with Nicaragua only when the Sandinistas resumed such talks. This spokesman said he basically agreed with the Administration's assessment of the Sandinistas as a pro-Marxist government but, like many critics in Washington, he was asking whether funding the Contras would actually hurt or help the reconciliation process. As long as a war went on, there would be no progress in reconciliation. As for the Contadora process, everyone said they supported it but critics were right when they said the Administration had not given it adequate support. A third draft of the Contadora agreement had been on the table for three months with provisions relating to the renouncing of force, the promotion of pluralism and human rights, provisions related to military manoeuvres and for verification and supervision. But as yet the Administration had failed to present a position on this draft.

In Canada, said a Canadian delegate, this issue was not controversial. Canada supported the Contadora process and had been asked by the governments of the region to comment on the verification and control provisions of the draft agreement, an area where Canada had built up a certain technical expertise from previous peacekeeping operations. While the government maintained it had had no invitation to join a verification and control body, it said it remained open to such an invitation if extended.

Canada was opposed to military aid to the Contras. Canadian church and aid groups had historic ties with the country. When the United States imposed the trade sanctions last year, Canada continued to trade and the Nicaraguan trade mission in Miami moved to Toronto. This delegate hoped that there was not a new U.S. strategic doctrine of "low intensity conflict" being applied to this area as a U.S. commentator had suggested. Canadians had been disappointed that the meeting of Secretary Shultz in Washington two weeks before with the Contadora Group and the Support Group had not been a turning point indicating 'real' U.S. support to the Contadora Process.

A U.S. Senator disputed the claim by some critics that the Contras were ex-Samozans and maintained they were a splinter democratic group of the revolution. On the other hand, there was no doubt that the Sandinistas were Marxists. Their deployment of tanks in the streets and the construction of an 8,000 runway raised fears of a "Cuba on the mainland". The USSR was clearly giving substantial financial support to the Sandinista regime "which could not survive a week without Soviet support". Other independent countries in the area were exhorting the United States to keep up the pressure on the Nicaraguan government.

Another Canadian spokesman reiterated the Canadian government's support for the Contadora Process but said that there was concern over the Nicaraguan government's ties with the USSR. Canada wanted to see genuine elections and the inclusion of groups opposing the Sandinistas. He noted that the Nicaraguan foreign minister had promised to bring in the foreign press one week before elections.

A U.S. Congressman made the point that Nicaragua should be pressured to live up to its earlier undertakings for a free press, economic reforms and a non-aligned policy stance. His colleague from the House disagreed with the Senator's earlier remark that the Contras were disaffected democrats. The Contra decision-makers were ex-Samozans and if they won they would want to be part of the government. The Contras had serious divisions, no political programs, and, like the Sandinistas, were guilty of many human rights abuses. There should be a free vote to dislodge the Sandinistas. The Indians should be part of any settlement. The Contadora process deserved a chance and needed multilateral support. Canada should not wait to be asked but should speak out, he said.

A senior Congressman told the group that he supported the Contadora process but he also supported aid to the Contras. Reviewing events since Samozas had been thrown out, he recounted how the United States had made a genuine effort to establish good relations with the new government, giving them funds to assist an 'economic reconciliation'. But President Carter cut off funds when it became evident the government was following a Communist blueprint. The present regime clearly did not want a free press, free labour unions or a pluralistic form of government and they are using the Contadora process as a cover to solidify their position. He thought Pastore the Contra leader was the only hope.

The first U.S. spokesman then intervened again to observe that U.S. Administration policy was not to overthrow the Sandinistas militarily but rather that pressure should be maintained on them in order to bring about democratization. Nonetheless the logical sequence to that policy was that if the Sandinistas were Marxists who were not likely to modify their views, then the pressure strategy would not work and military intervention would be the only answer. Indeed some Administration officials considered that the Sandinistas should be overthrown militarily although Secretary Shultz himself had not said this. The question was what would the next step be if this $100 million ($70 million in military and $30 million in humanitarian aid) did not work. "I do not think it will", said this delegate. Several other U.S. delegates agreed with this assessment. The spokesman continued that the United States had begun with 500 persons in the field and this had ratcheted up to 20,000. In fact, U.S. policy in the area had failed. It had meant that the USSR and the Cubans were more, rather than less, influential and that the Sandinistas were more repressive. A unilateral solution was not the answer; instead there should be a regional settlement to isolate the Nicaraguans. They were not a direct military threat to the United States, but they must be weaned away from Communism with "carrots and sticks". They would not be able to develop economically without their friends and neighbours.

The senior U.S. Congressman agreed and said he proposed that the United States conclude a series of bilateral security agreements with Nicaragua's neighbours (Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador) to protect them and to isolate the Nicaragua régime. As long as the Sandinistas kept within their own borders, their political system, even a Communist system, would be their own business. The real concern of the United States was the danger of the export of revolution and such a policy could contain that threat.

COMMITTEE III — FISHERIES, ENVIRONMENT, AND TRANSBOUNDARY ISSUES

Agenda

Fisheries

- East Coast Fishery Issues
- Yukon Salmon Fishery
- Pacific Salmon
- Minnesota-Ontario Border Fishing Issues

Environment

- The Flathead River
- Garrison Diversion
- Nuclear Waste Disposal
- Asbestos
- Toxic Wastes
- Acid Rain

Transboundary

- Great Lakes Water Quality & Water Levels
- St. Lawrence Seaway
- Alaskan Panhandle
- Arctic Sovereignty
- Maritime Boundaries

Introductory Remarks

Committee III began its deliberations with brief statements by the American and Canadian co-chairmen. The American co-chairman described Committee III issues as having the greatest significance for the two countries and referred to a comment made by President Taft of always a pleasure to have the opportunity for candid discussion with good friends and that the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group had a record of achievement.

Fisheries

East Coast Fishery Issues

The American co-chairman opened the discussion by observing that progress had been made over the hotly contested boundary dispute on Georges Bank. The issue, he said, now boils down to differences in management between Canada and the United States. The United States is less interventionist, an approach that Canada sees as loose and inadequate to protect the fishing stock. The United States fish management councils defend their record as having maintained the stocks well within conservation limits and they are strongly opposed to the Canadian approach.

A Canadian member responded by first attempting to put the issue in perspective. He remarked that both countries wish they could have settled the boundary dispute through negotiations but were unable to do so. As a result they must now live with the international court decision which may appear to take on "awesome rigidity". He remarked that he had seen headlines in Canadian and American newspapers telling opposite stories about the effects of the decision. U.S. papers claimed that American fishermen were the losers and Canadian papers said the same about their fishing industry. He went on to suggest that the "objective" Canadian view is that the World Court decision gave Canada a "very fair deal indeed".

The Canadian member went on to note that Canada had been asked by the United States to postpone implementation of the decision for one year but that Canada had refused because the court has spoken. "If we postpone implementation once we will be asked to do so again and the whole situation will be left unclear". The member then went on to argue that wherever a fishing stock crosses the border, as it does on the East Coast, it is essential the two countries get together and jointly manage the resource. He remarked that Canada feels the United States does not manage its fishing stock properly. He noted United States' complaints that Canada exports fish to the United States but reminded U.S. delegates that Canada also imports U.S. fish. He added that U.S. fishermen were unable at the present time to supply their own market.

The Canadian delegate argued strongly that the time had come to see how the two sides could cooperate in developing the fishery. He noted a major problem facing the Canadian side, namely an inability to identify who to deal with on the American side. "You know that the government of Canada can enforce agreements we reach but the U.S. system has no focal point." Nonetheless he assured the American delegates that Canadians were prepared to sit down and talk.

The member mentioned the United States countervail tariff of 6.85% as very worrying to Canada but remarked "we can live with it". The more serious problem, he suggested, were the misconceptions on both sides of the border. The United States complains of Canadian subsidies whereas in fact Canada runs its fishery on a break-even basis. He noted that while Americans saw unemployment insurance as a massive subsidy to the Canadian fishing industry, Canadian business was also taxed more heavily to provide a higher level of social services. Whatever these misconceptions, he concluded, the boundary decision is final. There are enormous mutual interests between Canada and the United States that point to the need for cooperation.

A United States Senator then entered the discussion to remark that the United States had decentralized its fishing industry and would like Canada to do the same. He remarked that "these issues do not need to be national issues". The United States had forced its states to transfer authority to local and regional councils which are sensitive to local conditions. He remarked that when dealing with Canada the American fishing industry runs into very rigid standards. The Canadian member responded that while Americans may "perceive" inflexibility in the Canadian system, there is nothing which prevents as much flexibility as we decide is desirable. The Pacific salmon treaty illustrated the point in that much of the negotiating was decentralized to the west coast. He observed that the system of stock management in Canada was not nearly as rigid as it might appear to be on paper and that its only objective was to bring back the stock. He repeated that the fishermen and commercial people in both countries must sit down and start talking about their differences. He argued that until that was done the Canadian government could only respond to the fears of its own fishermen.

The Canadian delegate went on to say that the east coast fishing stock may have reached optimal levels, a fact which was being recognized slowly in Canada. He described what he called a "sea change" in the Canadian approach to the East Coast fishery. For a long time the fishery had been seen as the salvation of the Maritimes and a huge over-expansion of plants and equipment using government money had taken place. "It is now being recognized that the fishery cannot carry the Maritimes on its back and must learn to live within the limits of its resource." As the discussion wound down, the United States Senator observed that it was time for the two countries to cooperate because there was a "freight train coming", a huge growth in demand for fish as a result of health and dietary concerns. He warned Canadian delegates that the United States would not stand by and watch its own east coast fishing industry destroyed. He appealed to Canada to help arrange for the local people in the industry to get together and not to propose another national commission on the fishing industry. The Canadian member concluded the discussion by saying that all delegates could agree on the importance of bringing fishing interests in Canada and the United States together to discuss their differences.

Yukon Salmon Fishery

A United States Senator opened the discussion by remarking that in line with the principles of the Pacific Salmon Treaty, Canada had been asking for cutbacks on the U.S. subsidized fishery so as to promote building of the stocks. He pointed out, however, that it was very hard to cut back the U.S. subsistence fishery because it was based on traditional rights of the native peoples. Even if the U.S. government agreed to such cutbacks the courts might overrule such an approach. He illustrated the incredible efficiency of the subsistence fishery by remarking that "the native people are using fish wheels which allow them to take 20 to 100 salmon per day." He expressed understanding of Canadian concerns but said this was "a very sensitive proposition" on the U.S. side.

A Canadian Member of Parliament observed that the King salmon run on the Yukon River was the largest in the world. In 1985 the U.S. had 90 per cent of the take although 50 per cent of the river and an estimated 50 per cent of the stock originated in Canada. Accordingly, he suggested that by the provisions of the Pacific Salmon Treaty Canada was entitled to about 50 per cent of the take. The U.S. Senator responded that his country accepted the country of origin principle but that some concept of an historical fishery must be added to accommodate the native people. He also expressed U.S. fears that Canada wanted to establish a commercial fishery on the Canadian side of the Yukon River.

The Canadian member reminded U.S. delegates that Canada had a traditional fishery on its side of the river. He went on to say that subsistence rights somehow had to be "dovetailed" with the provisions of the Pacific Salmon Treaty and that U.S. and Canadian approaches had to be consistent in the management of this valuable cross-border stock. He referred to two approaches which might prove valuable as guidelines in developing rules on the Yukon River: first, the Washington State Supreme Court ruling that 50 per cent of fish were to be taken by the Indian people of that state; and second the co-management approaches which had been used in the past by the Canadian government and Indian peoples. The Canadian delegate then noted two other factors which might influence the situation: first, the development of side scan gear which would allow more precise counting of the stock and more scientific management; and second outbreaks of furunculosis, a salmon disease which had appeared in Norwegian fish farms and had infected wild stock as well. Both developments pointed to the importance and opportunity for cross-border cooperation on management of the salmon stocks. The U.S. Senator agreed it was time for the two sides to get together but cautioned that "we will have to be very innovative in dealing with the subsidized fishery."

Pacific Salmon

Canadian and American delegates opened this discussion by remarking on the great success which had been achieved in negotiating the Pacific Salmon Treaty. An American Senator then remarked: "Now the real problem is the Japanese." He went on to say that the United States was convinced that the Japanese trawler fleets were hitting the very stocks that Canada and the United States wish to enhance. He reported that at the most recent meeting of the International North Pacific Fisheries Commission a Canadian scientist had said that more data was needed in order to determine the damage being done by the Japanese. "You reinforced the Japanese position". He then pointed out that the greatest environmental damage in the world today was being done by the huge monofilament nets used by the trawler fleets. "Some of these damn things are as big as 40 miles long. They pull up everything and when our surveillance people appear they are cut loose to drift around the Pacific". The United States had been screaming about this situation for 10 years. "There is no question that these are Japanese nets and that they are literally murdering whole species." A Canadian member agreed that this was an "appalling abuse" of the environment. He reported there was very strong language about the situation in a report being prepared by the House of Commons Fisheries Committee. He expressed grave concern that a Canadian scientist would have supported the Japanese position and promised to investigate the matter when he returned to Ottawa. A second Canadian member reported eye-witness accounts in Canada of the immense damage done by the monofilament nets to ocean species such as whales and porpoises as well as the damage done to kelp beds when these huge nets drift to shore. He remarked that there was now grave concern about depletion of fish stocks and the disappearance of species such as the fur seal.

Following this discussion, it was agreed by Canadian and American delegates that they would jointly prepare a statement deploring the damage done by these nets and separately issue the statements following their return to Ottawa and Washington.

Minnesota-Ontario Border Fishing Issues

The brief discussion of this issue was opened by an American Congressman who reported that things had improved considerably since the last Canada-U.S. Inter-Parliamentary meeting. He noted there were still some problems but said that the new Ontario government, and particularly Premier Peterson, had been far more cooperative than the previous government. Following a recent meeting between the Governor of Minnesota and Premier Peterson the two governments had appointed officials to follow-up their on the issues. He noted that Ontario had announced a $10.00 user fee for Ontario residents with the money to go to stock enhancement activities. This development had taken much of the sting out of the earlier user fee which had been applied only to American day-fishermen in Canada. A second U.S. Congressman concurred and mentioned that much of the trouble had been caused by the Minnesota Commissioner of Natural Resources who had quite improperly and independently given approval to various measures which the Ontario government had taken. He concluded there was a good deal of confidence on the American side that they would be able to get a "fair deal" from Ontario and that there was no need under these circumstances for the Canadian government to become more involved. The Canadian co-chairman of Committee III said that he was very pleased with this report of progress and expressed the hope that the two sides could now get on with "more positive cooperation on stock enhancement".

Environment

The Flathead River

The American co-chairman opened the discussion by asking whether Canada was really likely to mine coal on this site. A Canadian member replied that "there is no chance at the present time" of anyone mining coal there. He went on to say that even if the development takes place the Canadian position is that it would not have a discernible effect on the environment. However he urged his American colleagues to remain vigilant so as to make sure that the environment was protected. A second Canadian member remarked that the British Columbia government thinks it has lived up fully to the Boundaries Water Treaty but said that if the U.S. had concerns it should let Canada know. A third Canadian member said there was reason for some concern about water quality because the coal proposed for development was soft coal. He reported that the application for the project was now at stage 2 (approval in principle) of the new B.C. coal mining guidelines. He said that he would let the U.S. side know when the project moved to the final approval stage. Another Canadian member reminded delegates that the issue was before the International Joint Commission, because of a U.S. request that "pristine quality of water" be maintained on the river. He indicated that the IJC report was expected this spring and concluded that Canada valued the IJC very highly and would not undercut it on the Flathead issue.

Garrison Diversion

The Canadian co-chairman of Committee III opened a brief discussion of the Garrison Diversion by saying Canada was very pleased with the latest recommendations of the Garrison Commission. They would prevent any damage being done to the Hudson's Bay drainage system. An American Senator who had been a staunch supporter of the Garrison project said that he could live with the recommendations of the Commission and noted, in particular, that the report precluded any irrigation works. He remarked that future Canada-U.S. Inter-Parliamentary discussions might miss having this issue to argue over "It may well be the last time the Garrison will be on our agenda".

Nuclear Waste Disposal

An American Congressman opened the discussion by conceding there was very little enthusiasm anywhere for nuclear waste disposal facilities. Nonetheless it was a huge problem that would not go away. An enormous amount of nuclear waste has been accumulated over the past 40 years and huge additional amounts were being added each year. The United States, he pointed out, was committed to having a second facility in one of the 50 states by the year 2000 but pursuit of this objective must protect peoples rights and guarantee representation of local concerns. He noted that a key element of the legislation provides that the Governor of the State finally chosen as a site can veto the choice: the veto to be overridden only by a vote of Congress. The Congressman went on to note that although 80 per cent of nuclear waste is generated in the eastern United States, the first site will be located somewhere in the south-west. Accordingly, it was felt that fairness required the second site to be in the northeast even though there is widespread opposition. He described the sites as consisting of ceramic barrels buried some 3,000 to 4,000 feet underground. He had the impression that Canadians' were much more relaxed than Americans about the whole nuclear issue and asked what Canada did with its waste. He concluded his opening remarks by acknowledging Canadian concerns but assured delegates that the procedure being followed was a very careful one.

A Canadian Member replied pointedly that what Canada did about the problem was beside the point. "We are talking here about your problem not ours". He stated that U.S. legislation had been seriously flawed in not providing any means of taking into account Canadian concerns. The map originally published with the legislation did not even show Canada. "We did not even exist". Though the United States was now dealing with Canadian concerns seven of the potential sites were still sufficiently close to the border as to require field work in Canada. He described the selection process as highly political and, for that reason, Canada was worried the site would be in a state like Vermont or Maine with a small population and little political clout in Washington. A U.S. Congressman responded to these comments by observing that the criteria of site selection had been established by the U.S. National Academy of Sciences and not by political authorities. A number of considerations, including geology and population, made areas near the U.S.-Canadian border attractive sites. He noted, somewhat ruefully, that his own State of Minnesota continued 12 of the 20 possible sites. A second Congressman from Minnesota joined the discussion to say that 3 of the possible sites were in his Congressional district. He had received 10,000 pieces of mail against the sites and personally welcomed Canadian efforts to raise questions about sites near the border.

American delegates again asked what Canada was doing about the problem and, again, the Canadian delegate who had spoken earlier dismissed the question as beside the point. "I will tell you what we are not doing. We are not proposing to put our stuff near the U.S. border and we do not find it acceptable that you should locate sites near our border. It is not good enough to say that we will be treated as well as Americans. This is a question of sovereignty. We are not Americans." He went on to say: "This is not our nuclear waste. The United States owes us a guarantee that it is not high risk to Canadians. Why should we have to demonstrate that the site is dangerous?" An American Congressman remarked that there were many Americans in his part of the country who sympathized with such Canadian concerns. He hoped that U.S. safety standards would satisfy Canada but suggested it would strengthen Canada's case if it were doing some research and testing to substantiate its concerns. "It helped you in the case of the Garrison project. I think it is important that all of us be on top of this issue".

Asbestos

A Canadian delegate opened the discussion by arguing that the proposal by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to impose an outright ban on asbestos for health reasons was not justified by the scientific evidence. He referred to research which showed that some of the proposed substitutes for asbestos might be even more hazardous to human health and suggested that low level emissions of asbestos posed no significant health hazard. The approach being followed by the EPA, he warned, would subsequently be followed by governments elsewhere in the world. "You are deciding the fate of our industry".

The U.S. co-chairman of Committee III replied that asbestos had at one time been an issue in his own congressional district when it was discovered that the iron being mined in the region contained asbestos fibre. He acknowledged the economic impact of a ban in Quebec but said that it was only in the last 25 years that we had recognized the extreme health hazard posed by asbestos. "It causes a type of lung cancer which is highly lethal and untreatable. There can be no scientific doubt that asbestos and abdominal and chest cancer are directly linked." He argued that, contrary to the Canadian claim that some types of asbestos fibre are safe, U.S. research suggests that all types are dangerous. "The cancers will show up in 20 to 25 years". He concluded his opening statement by saying that the EPA had taken the only safe approach to asbestos.

A Canadian member responded that the difference between U.S. and Canadian research proved that there was no scientific consensus on asbestos. He made two additional points: first, that European research agreed with the Canadian approach and, second, that asbestos was already a very tightly regulated industry. The U.S. delegate pointed out that asbestos mining was less risky than were the products manufactured from asbestos. It is when the product is pulverized and made into fire-resistant materials that it becomes a very lethal substance. He acknowledged that there were problems in finding adequate substitutes for asbestos but said that private industry should come up with safe new products. He remarked that European research which found asbestos safe may have been based on a different and faulty methodology.

Toxic Wastes

The American co-chairman of Committee III opened the discussion by recalling that last year's Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Group had visited toxic waste sites on the Niagara River. At that time delegates had seen the dangers of these substances with their own eyes and Canadian concerns had been forcefully presented. A Canadian Member agreed that the visits to the Love Canal and other sites had been a unique opportunity to evaluate the problem which he described as "time bombs ticking away". He reported that the most recent development on the Canadian side had been the discovery of toxic blobs in the St. Clair River. These had been produced by the release of dry cleaner solvent which absorbed wastes in the river. He noted that Canadian authorities had been careful to keep American counterparts well informed.

A U.S. delegate acknowledged Canadian efforts to keep the United States informed. He went on to say there were continuing efforts in Congress to strengthen toxic waste management and control but that funding remained a major bone of contention. The Super Fund, he noted, was out of funds as the result of failure to resolve the funding issue. On the technical side, he reported there were major tests being conducted by the Environmental Protection Agency of two incineration techniques, one a land-based technique and the other aboard specially equipped ships. The tests were very carefully designed and monitored.

A Canadian Member described the St. Clair River incident as illustrating the importance of trans-border cooperation and rapid action by government. He reported that fines had been levied and clean-up costs assigned quite quickly. He went on to say that ordinary, municipal wastes remained a serious problem in the Great Lakes system. Cleveland remained one of the worst offenders in putting raw sewage into the lakes. By contrast Ontario had very stringent standards and was rather frustrated that the U.S. did not. An American Congressman acknowledged that municipal wastes were still going into the lakes from the American side but argued that an enormous amount of effort and money had been expended over the past decade to solve the problem. He observed as well that the United States was moving quite fast on toxic wastes so as to avoid exposing both the U.S. and Canadian people to the hazards. A second U.S. Congressman remarked that Congress was currently debating renewal of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement but expressed great apprehension about the position of the U.S. administration. "This administration has had to be prodded every step of the way."

Acid Rain

A U.S. Congressman said that it was hardly necessary to prove once again that enough was known about acid rain to justify action. "We also know that the damage may be irreversible. The real question in the United States remains, who pays?" A Canadian Member agreed that it was not necessary to repeat the basics of the acid rain problem. The purpose of the discussion, he suggested, should be to focus on the current political situation. He summarized the political history of the issue by noting the breakdown of negotiations between Canada and the United States after the Reagan administration came to office. Since that time Canadians had been unanimous in their support for action but the United States was divided on the question. In negotiations the U.S. had developed the habit of asking Canada what it had done to solve the problem and so finally Canada decided to proceed unilaterally. "We were sick of being badgered by Americans and having them use Canada's own emissions as an excuse for their inaction". The federal and provincial governments had agreed to a 50 per cent reduction of emissions in eastern Canada by 1994. The Member went on to say that the Mulroney government was clearly pro-American and valued good relations with the United States. The Prime Minister and the President had searched valiantly at the Shamrock Summit for some way to address the acid rain problem and, finally, agreed to appoint Special Envoys. The Envoys' report, he suggested, had moved the debate ahead by acknowledging that acid rain is a serious environmental problem, that it has an important trans-boundary dimension and that control programs are required. The Member concluded his statement by warning that the forthcoming meeting in Washington of the Prime Minister and the President had to yield tangible results on acid rain. "It is causing the government real political difficulty."

A U.S. Congressman commented that it had now been discovered that the south western United States is a recipient of acid rain. On a nation-wide basis he described the main problem as one of funding and went on to describe a number of different approaches which were being explored in order to blend regional interests and achieve consensus in favour of acid rain controls. Notwithstanding these efforts, he expressed serious doubt that the Reagan administration was prepared to support the Envoys' report. He reported that Lee Thomas, the Head of the Environmental Protection Agency, had recently said before a Congressional Committee that more research was needed. "My own impression is that Drew Lewis is not getting much support from the administration". Another U.S. participant agreed strongly with that observation and suggested the administration's position was not an honest one. "On the one hand they argue that more research on acid rain is needed but, on the other, they have been cutting funding for the main research centre." Several Canadian delegates were worried by these reports. One of them described the Envoys as having honestly tried to get the best possible agreement but it was now up to the President to take action. "We will be in very serious trouble if nothing is done". An American Congressman said he understood these concerns very well. He described Drew Lewis as having an excellent reputation in the United States but action on acid rain was opposed by very powerful forces. "We would like to strengthen his position but we are not at all sure that Lewis has the support necessary to implement an agreement."

Transboundary

Great Lakes Water Levels

The American Co-chairman of Committee III described American residents on the upper lakes as very concerned about the high water levels on the Great Lakes. "The upper lakes are a storage area for the whole system. We have been pounding on the IJC to increase flows and reduce levels". He remarked that to some extent the IJC has complied but there remains the danger of tremendous property damage. Another Congressman, from a district on the lower Great Lakes, remarked that the IJC was "getting a lot of pounding" from the lower lakes as well. "There is no easy solution. The Great Lakes are an immense bathtub with one small drain. This year the Good Lord has chosen to over-fill the tub." He noted there had been high water cycles in the past and both countries would just have to wait for this cycle to pass. He expressed appreciation for Canada's help in reducing flows from the Ogoki diversion. A Canadian Member remarked that, unfortunately, such efforts actually made very little difference. He feared that damage on Lake Erie would be "quite devastating" this year.

St. Lawrence Seaway

A Canadian delegate described the Canadian Government as feeling very strongly that Seaway costs had to be cut and additional revenues had to be generated through user pay or leisure craft charges. Canadians, he suggested, saw the Seaway as their country's fourth coast and as a vital transport route for inland industry. They are also beginning to see the Great Lakes system as having great recreational potential which would, eventually, be as economically important as industrial use. A U.S. Congressman agreed with these remarks but stressed U.S. fears that steep increases in tolls would make the seaway even less competitive economically than it was at the present time. He noted that the seaway had some inherent problems — small locks and seasonal operation, for example — that were increasingly undermining its competitive position. He went on to acknowledge that some U.S. interests such as the steel industry favoured maintaining or even increasing tolls on the seaway as a way of upping the price of steel imports but warned that “if the seaway has to pay its own way overall it has a major problem”.

The Canadian member who had opened the discussion acknowledged that both sides were “grasping at straws” in searching for ways to increase traffic on the Great Lakes. He was himself greatly concerned that increased tolls and user fees might jeopardize the Seaway because there were now so many alternatives. He suggested there had to be a great deal more “old-fashioned Yankee selling” of the seaway but a U.S. delegate pointed out that some 10 years earlier Congress had approved funds for seaway marketing and had taken various other steps to ease the cost of capital improvements to the system. These efforts had, unfortunately, been nullified by the inherent limitations of the Seaway and by a series of unfortunate accidents that damaged the system’s reputation.

A U.S. delegate raised another issue of concern to the United States, namely piloting of the “salty lakers” (ships which sail the Great Lakes in the summer and the high seas in the winter.) He observed that Canada and the United States welcomed these vessels as one way of increasing traffic but the two countries had different piloting requirements as the ships went through the Seaway. He suggested the Great Lakes system was sufficiently complex and treacherous as to require very experienced pilots. A Canadian delegate agreed the ships required experienced pilots but said Canada felt the requirements were sometimes overdone. The discussion drew to a close with the two sides agreeing to arrange a meeting of Canadian and U.S. interests to discuss these and other issues surrounding the future of the Seaway.

Alaskan Panhandle

A Senator from Alaska inquired about the plans of British Columbia and the Yukon to develop hydro resources and industry in the region. A Canadian delegate from British Columbia said there were very good prospects for long range economic development of the region but B.C. Hydro’s plans were likely to be realized only after the year 2000. He described the whole area on both sides of the Alaska-British Columbia border as one of the most highly mineralized on the continent. Over the long run, many mines would probably come on stream. Concerning possible hydro corridors, the Canadian delegate asked American delegates to “bear with us for a while”. Their planning would depend on many factors such as the current over-supply of hydro, environmental and other concerns about dam construction but that, in any case development would take place slowly. The U.S. Senator asked that Canada keep the U.S. well informed as priorities change.

White Pass Yukon Railroad

A United States Senator informed delegates that the Cyprus Anvil mine was to be reopened but it had now been decided to transport the ore by road. This raised questions about the maintenance of the highway but the main concern was the future of the railroad itself. He noted this was the fourth year since the railroad had been closed and it was now in the process of being abandoned and sold. He reported that Bolivia had made an offer for the rolling stock and equipment of the railroad and warned that if action was not taken soon it would be too late to preserve the line. The Senator expressed his own conviction that the railroad should be saved as “a unique piece of nostalgia” with very considerable tourist potential. He reported that 175,000 tourists had visited Skagway last year and that more were expected next year and proposed Canada-U.S. co-development of the railroad as a “living monument”. To facilitate this the U.S. government might be prepared to extend tax and other concessions to the owners of the line. Canadian delegates agreed strongly that the railroad should be preserved. One Canadian described it as “an absolutely remarkable thing” with potential benefit as a tourist attraction to both Canada and the United States. It was agreed that the Canadian and U.S. delegates would pursue this issue further in Ottawa and Washington.

Arctic Sovereignty

A U.S. Senator said that the Canadian reaction to the journey through Arctic waters of the coastguard vessel Polar Star came as a complete surprise to the United States. He noted that negotiations had preceded the voyage for two months during which time no sovereignty issues had been raised. He pointed out that Canadian vessels enter American waters at will. “Frankly it looks to us like an intemperate neighbour. We are very worried about the precedent which this action has set.” A Canadian member responded by saying that Canada is not the slightest bit concerned about American vessels going through these waters unless, as in this case, voyages carry the implied claim that these are international waters. He said it must be understood by the United States this is Canadian territory and Canada intends to control transit through those waters. “There is no compromise at all on the principle. We are prepared to go to the World Court to enforce it.”

The United States Senator took up the argument again by saying there was no basis in international law for the Canadian claim and, if the United States were to accept it, serious consequences would follow elsewhere in the world. He expressed dismay that the Canadian Government would react as it did considering the circumstances of the case. The Polar Star, he pointed out, was a coast guard, not a naval, vessel whose normal port is Seattle. Had it not gone through the Arctic passage it would have had to take the much longer route of the Panama Canal. A Canadian delegate again said there were few Canadians who would question the desirability of allowing the United States to use those waters but to do so without seeking Canadian permission was seen as a challenge to our sovereignty. "If you want Canadians to get worked up talk about our sovereignty." He pointed out the U.S. had promised earlier to respect Canadian law and to take no action that would prejudice Canada's claims in international law. "While we understand your concerns it is unacceptable for the United States to create a precedent challenging Canadian sovereignty in the way that the voyage of the Polar Star has done."

An American Congressman then joined the discussion to say this was clearly a serious problem. It was his impression, however, that the Canadian government had first "been asleep at the switch" and then overreacted. The U.S. Senator repeated his contention these were not Canadian waters though they are bounded by Canadian islands. He warned it was time for Canada to look at its "hole card": "your drill ships have to go through our waters." He then asked what Canada would do if the Russians moved a vessel through the passage to which a Canadian delegate replied "we would probably call you". It was then pointed out that part of Canada's concern to assert its sovereignty was to deny access to common enemies.

Maritime Boundaries

The American Co-chairman of Committee III opened the discussion by saying that the United States had recently appointed Edward Derwinsky to negotiate the Dixon Entrance and Beaufort Sea boundary issues with Canada. He noted that the Canadian Government had not yet appointed its negotiator and hoped it would soon do so. A Canadian member informed U.S. delegates that Canada was about to make an appointment but was proceeding very carefully because there are very strong feelings in British Columbia about the Dixon Entrance boundary. "We don't want to launch a process that falls apart." A second Canadian delegate said it was his understanding that Derwinsky's mandate included the Dixon Entrance and the Strait of Juan de Fuca but that he was unaware it also included the Beaufort Sea. He went on to say these issues would not be settled easily. The Dixon Entrance settlement will affect shares of salmon to which the two countries are entitled under the Pacific Salmon Treaty as well as gas, oil, and mineral claims. "These issues are as complex as the George's Bank and enormously important economically." He went on to suggest that the Canadian claims were based on treaties and other rights which have been uncontested for 100 years and concluded it was essential for the two countries to negotiate their differences.

Plenary Session

An enhanced Canada-U.S. trade arrangement

The principal Canadian spokesman opened the plenary meeting by reminding American participants that at last year's plenary, Canadian speakers on this same item had expressed the opinion that support among Canadians for free trade with the United States was growing and that the time for action was approaching.

Subsequently, at the Quebec Summit, the two leaders had directed representatives to examine together the possibility of the two countries undertaking trade negotiations. Those exchanges had demonstrated that sectoral free trade arrangements just could not be worked out. In September, Prime Minister Mulroney had formally conveyed to President Reagan the Canadian government's decision to seek to enter into negotiations to reduce trade barriers between the two countries.

The Canadian spokesman reminded the Group that this was an historic decision and one taken in the knowledge that it involved a number of risks. For example, in 1860 the U.S. government had denounced the Reciprocity Treaty with Canada that had been negotiated in 1856. Again, in 1911, the Liberal government of Canada had campaigned on a platform of free trade with the United States and was defeated in the next general election.

These episodes and others had revealed that two different kinds of risks were involved:

- a) even if negotiations are undertaken, they could fail; and
- b) the Canadian people might lose their nerve and reject the option.

Canadians as well as Americans recognized the economic uncertainty and the adjustments required if the two countries moved to free trade. Negotiations would be difficult and involve compromise. For example, while both sides have support programs, Canadian programs focussed mainly on helping impoverished regions of the country, whereas U.S. programs offered support to minorities. On top of these economic uncertainties, many Canadians experience an additional fear that free trade could lead to political integration with the United States, or the loss of cultural sovereignty.

The lead-off speaker told his American colleagues that the Canadian people were not united in support of their government's request to open negotiations. Specifically, although the business community was largely supportive, the majority of the trade union movement was opposed. The opposition parties were not supportive, and in some cases even opposed the government's initiative. The majority of provincial governments favoured free trade, but the two largest — Quebec and Ontario — had serious reservations. Thus, support was mixed, although the polls showed a majority of the population was favourably disposed. However, the Conservative government was solidly committed to the effort to negotiate freer trade with the United States.

In order to be ready to pursue negotiations, the Canadian government was preparing itself. Mr. Simon Reisman, who had negotiated the Auto Pact in 1964, had been brought out of retirement to head the negotiating teams and he has assembled a strong group. Arrangements were being worked out to consult with the provincial governments and with business. Provincial governments were themselves building strong advisory teams and Ontario and Quebec had retained former federal officials with trade negotiation experience.

But for the moment the ball was in the United States' court. The Canadian government was waiting for the 60 days prescribed by the U.S. Foreign Trade Act procedures to come to an end. Canada was aware that within that period Congress could raise objections to granting the President negotiating authority. Canadian delegates to the meeting had had a chance to read the U.S. Senate debates of February 26 in which almost half the Senators had expressed their concerns about lack of progress in finding an accommodation in the matter of Canadian lumber exports to the United States. They had been especially concerned by the observations of Senator Max Baucus that he would press the Finance Committee of the Senate to object to the "fast track" procedure until his objections to the level of Canadian lumber exports have been satisfied.

This prospect led Canada's spokesman to warn U.S. delegates that if such conditions were placed on the trade negotiations, there would be no negotiations. Canada understood U.S. concerns on lumber and was ready to continue trying to find an accommodation. But Canada was not ready to be blackmailed.

The spokesman went further and expressed wider concerns. Should the Congress rebuff the initiative of the Canadian government, that action would cause a powerful reaction in Canada. It could put the government under enormous pressure to rethink its current policy which involved attaching a high priority to building good co-operative relations with the United States across the board in defence matters, trade, environmental controls, and so on.

U.S. legislators were asked to consider their response carefully. After all, Canada was only asking to enter into negotiations and Congress would still have the power to decide whether to approve the package after negotiations have been completed and provided they have been successful. These negotiations would be tough enough without adding to the existing difficulties between our two countries. Both countries could gain from the process. Moreover, a successful outcome could serve as an example to others as the world begins the next round of multilateral negotiations.

Following the opening statement, an exchange of views occurred which lasted about one hour, with speakers alternating between delegations.

The lead speaker on the U.S. side was the chairman of the Trade Sub-Committee of the Ways and Means Committee. Noting that Canada currently enjoyed a surplus in trade, while the United States had a surplus on service account, and that each was the other's largest trading partner, he thought it possible and desirable for the two sides to conclude an agreement. He believed efforts were better directed toward working out acceptable principles for trade than constantly trying to resolve specific difficulties after they have arisen. In the meantime he hoped the two legislatures might avoid taking positions which could complicate the talks. It was not his intention to schedule hearings on the President's request for authority to negotiate, but he would call for statements from Members who disagreed with his procedure. In terms of issues to be resolved, he pointed to the constitutionally independent position of the Canadian provinces compared with the U.S. states. Experience in negotiating a free trade agreement with Israel showed that it was easier to start with everything on the table, with the negotiators leaving the more difficult problems to the end and agreeing to a slow phase-in in instances where the impact would be substantial. The whole process should be completed in conformity with GATT obligations. In concluding he justified proceeding to negotiate with Canada as a way to help strengthen the Canadian economy. The weakness of the Mexican economy, the United States' other neighbour, was a source of concern.

The first Canadian to respond assured U.S. participants that Canada understood that provincial governments had to be committed and that arrangements were being worked out to involve the provinces. The Canadian government was also committed to the principle that every question should be on the table, with the two principal negotiators deciding where exclusions might be mutually agreed to. However, delays in the start up of negotiations meant that the Canadian government faced continuous pressure with regard to the scope of negotiations. Almost six months had passed since Prime Minister Mulroney had proposed negotiations and progress on the United States side was slower than had been anticipated.

An influential U.S. Senator stated that he did not expect that the debate in the U.S. Senate earlier in the week, in which he had spoken, would delay the approval of the President's negotiating mandate. But he did warn that the softwood lumber issue would have to be resolved in the course of the trade negotiations. This was the message which he and most of his Senate colleagues had wished to convey. He thought the term 'blackmail' as used by the opening Canadian speaker was too strong, and could be perceived as a threat by the U.S. side. With regard to the goal of substantially freer trade, he recognized that each side had important national goals that differed, which each would wish to protect.

Another U.S. Senator who had participated in the Senate debate on lumber indicated that he had not intended to demand a resolution of that issue as a pre-condition for his agreement to negotiations. Referring to earlier discussions in Committee I, he advised the plenary that he and some of his colleagues had been much attracted by the idea that the two countries might act together to limit round log exports. A U.S. Congressman joined in supporting this proposal, noted that it should bring down stumpage costs in the U.S. North-west.

A Canadian opposition member, observing that trade with the United States had grown steadily in spite of efforts to diversify, raised three issues of concern to him. First, Canadian exporters felt harassed by contingency actions under U.S. trade law, yet the United States had made no concession to Israel in this area when negotiating that free trade arrangement. He thought the two sides should establish some limits to harassment. Secondly, the United States was pressing for "a level playing field", yet many measures which some viewed as non-tariff barriers had been introduced by both sides in order to promote social or regional policies. GATT did not define these as subsidies. How much harmonization would the United States require? The same question applied to differing tax regimes. Finally, he was interested in a cost-benefit analysis, since in his view progress toward free trade with the United States might be achieved at the price of less progress in the MTN negotiations.

A prominent U.S. participant assured him that the United States was prepared to discuss all contingency legislation and to look for reasonable accommodations. The United States also recognized that Canada had geographical problems which produced structural inefficiencies, as well as cultural policy concerns, which the United States would have to address.

The opening Canadian speaker, addressing the third question, assured American participants that Canada was fully committed to the MTN talks. He also noted that a few weeks earlier, during a visit to Canada, the Japanese Prime Minister had given his endorsement to the bilateral negotiations and the European Community was hardly in a position to object.

A succession of U.S. speakers followed. A Senator who had spoken on Canadian lumber in the Senate said this would not stop him from supporting early negotiations. With regard to those negotiations, a Congressman warned that the mood of Congress was protectionist and he would not be too optimistic.

Another U.S. Senator on the Finance Committee said he expected the issue of approving negotiations would be faced and resolved in the Senate in early April. Referring to the Senate debate on softwood lumber in which he had actively participated, he described it as a way of "getting attention". Three years earlier he had himself persuaded over 70 Senators to speak in a similar debate on the problems of egg and poultry producers and he suggested this was a feature of the U.S. political system.

Three Canadian speakers followed. The first spoke of the need to get down to negotiations to find out what was feasible. The second referred to the successful free trade that existed in cattle and noted that the bottom line was to find out how any arrangement worked on both sides of the border. A third from an agricultural constituency reported that farmers in both countries had virtually identical fears of free trade, which suggested that the approach was balanced. He thought legislators from the United States and Canada had a responsibility to explain to their electors what was intended.

The last U.S. speaker opened with a comment that the Canadian government had been slow to act, having campaigned on the goal of free trade, and implied that it lacked fortitude in the face of public criticism. He felt strongly the need for an agreement on trade between the two countries, because he feared the GATT was disintegrating. In that event, a bilateral agreement could establish rules to replace the GATT rules. He also noted that the United States was turning increasingly to voluntary restraint agreements (VRA). Once such a policy was put in place, even though Japan might be the target, Canada often was forced to comply. Or Japanese companies were forced to build plants in the United States, which would then try to export to Canada. A trade agreement could help to isolate Canada from these pressures. On the question of harmonization, he thought that neither country could be expected to negotiate away certain of their tax or investment measures not covered by the GATT. Certainly not everything was going to end up on the table. He expressed satisfaction with the way the debate had proceeded, especially the indications that statements by Senators on softwood lumber in the Senate were intended to express concerns rather than to raise reservations to negotiations.

The concluding remark was made by a Canadian participant who pointed out that free trade with the United States had not been on the Conservative platform in the last election. It had taken the new government time to think through the issue, and now they were anxious to move ahead speedily.

Respectfully submitted,

Senator James Balfour
Co-Chairman

Pat Nowlan, M.P.
Co-Chairman

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 18, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT CRIMINAL CODE PENITENTIARY ACT PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-106, to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

TENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS
APPENDIX

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the tenth report of the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix p. 2661.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Senator Tremblay, what is the subject matter of this report?

Senator Tremblay: As I understand our procedure, I thought that the clerk would read the report and that its subject matter would then be obvious.

Senator Frith: Thank you for reminding me about this aspect of our procedure. It is also part of our tradition to dispense with the reading of the report as it will be printed. This is why I asked only for the subject matter and not for the contents of the report.

Senator Tremblay: In view of this remark, I shall simply say that it is a report under the new procedure asking leave of the Senate for the sub-committee on Veterans' Affairs to travel in relation to its consideration of the report entitled "They Served, We Care".

Senator Frith: Very well.

Senator Tremblay: Having said that, we shall see exactly how the situation develops.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall we consider this report?

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I propose that we adopt this report immediately since the new procedure has been followed exactly as far as budgetary requirements are concerned. The budget appears in the attached documents, which have now been tabled to be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings and the Official Report of the Senate; this budget was approved by the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. The permission of the Senate is required specifically because of the wish of the Committee to travel and to hire the necessary personnel, but the budget has already been approved.

I repeat that the permission requested is only to travel and that, according to our new procedure, the budget has already been approved by the committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I propose that we postpone consideration of the suggestion made by the chairman of the committee until later today.

I do not mean by this that approval will automatically be granted later, but only that this will give us an opportunity to consider the proposal.

[English]

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words in support of the motion before the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Senator Frith refused.

Senator Frith: We have agreed to talk about it later this day.

Senator Bonnell: I understand all that; I don't need any help.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Doody: There are those who would differ.

Senator Frith: We want to deal with it later this day.

Senator Bonnell: I understand all that; I don't need any help. Honourable senators, I stand alone. I understand what I am trying to do. Please let me speak on a point of order.

Senator Steuart: Quit casting stones!

Senator Bonnell: Before we discuss this motion later this day, would it be possible to have someone make photostatic copies of it so that we can have it on our desks and know what we are discussing? I thank honourable senators very much.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

PROPAGANDA ARTICLES—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, the 25th June, 1986, I will call the attention of the Senate to propaganda articles written by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[English]

FISHERIES

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO PUBLISH AND DISTRIBUTE INTERIM REPORT ON MARKETING OF FISH IN CANADA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That in the event of an adjournment of the Senate which exceeds a week, the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries be authorized to publish and distribute its interim report on its examination of the marketing of fish in Canada and all implications thereof, as soon as it becomes available; and

That in the event of a prorogation of Parliament, the Honourable Senators authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate during any period between sessions of Parliament or between Parliaments, be authorized to publish and distribute the above-mentioned interim report.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): How can you supersede a prorogation by motion of the Senate?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I suggest that we should have an opportunity to look at this for a day. I believe that the motion is in the usual form. The reference to the intersessional committee is what it says it is, namely, intersessional, and would not cover prorogation. I would like to have an opportunity to look at that.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: There is some disagreement over the interpretation.

Senator Frith: In my view, an "intersessional" committee means a committee to act between sessions and not between sittings or prorogation. That is why we should have a look at it. Senator Flynn has given me excellent justification for putting off consideration for one day, because obviously there is disagreement as to how this should be interpreted. Therefore, I suggest that we adjourn this matter until the next sitting.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

FROG LAKE INDIAN NATION—SELF-GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government advise me if he received today from the Frog Lake Indian Nation a copy of their self-government proposals?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, no, I have not received that document.

Senator Bonnell: Would the Leader of the Government see that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development receives a copy of this if I send my copy over to him? The Indian Nation to which I referred cannot get an appointment with the minister. They are in Ottawa at their own expense and they have been trying to see the minister for two days. I phoned the minister's office, but he is extremely busy; and I thought that perhaps the Leader of the Government might take my copy of the self-government proposals over to him if I gave my copy to him.

Senator Roblin: I think that if it were entrusted to the ordinary postal services it might not get there for a couple of weeks. With a view to being obliging to my honourable friend, if he gives me his copy I will see that it is delivered by hand.

Senator Bonnell: I thank the Leader of the Government on behalf of the Frog Lake Indian Nation people from Alberta for accepting it on their behalf.

Senator Roblin: Let me be quite clear about what I am doing. I am undertaking to transmit the document to the minister. I am not accepting any document in any formal sense.

Senator Bonnell: I understand that. I do not expect him to act on it.

● (1410)

NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

ADVISORY COMMITTEE—ORDER FOR RETURN

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, on May 1 this house adopted a motion asking for a return having to do with the composition of the Advisory Committee to the National Postal Museum. On June 10 I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would try to expedite the tabling of that return. I now ask him if his efforts have met with any success or progress and if he has anything to report to this house.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in light of my undertaking of June 10, I have invigorated the inquiries that we are making on behalf of my honourable friend. I regret that I do not have the answer yet, but I have not given up.

THE PRIME MINISTER

BROADCAST SPEECH ON FREE TRADE—AVAILABILITY OF TEXT IN ADVANCE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if it is true that copies of the Prime Minister's speech the night before last, which were not made available to the leaders of the other parties, were made available before delivery to newspapers, particularly the Washington Post?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no information on that question, but I shall make an inquiry.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on the subject of delayed answers, I have what I think is a complete list of questions asked by me that are still outstanding. I think I could be of some help to the Leader of the Government if I told him that some of them are obsolete now, because he did not give or was unable to get the information when the subject was timely. I asked a question on September 17, 1985, which can be found in Hansard at page 1223, regarding the Canadian Commercial Bank. It is a bit passé now, so we might as well strike it. I had a question about tainted tuna which I asked on September 25, 1985, just eight days later, which can be found at page 1276 of Hansard. I raised it again on February 6, 1986, along with the previous question to which I just referred. That one has turned to dust on the shelf also.

On March 6, 1986, I asked three other questions, one dealing with shipbuilding. They can be found at page 2111 of Hansard. On March 13, at page 2151, I asked a question regarding an agenda item for the meeting between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States. On March 25, 1986, at page 2216 of Hansard, I asked a question with regard to government policy on youth. Since I have reduced the number of questions outstanding, perhaps the Leader might put some extra effort into getting answers for the three that remain.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend is helpful and I thank him.

CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon Efstathios William Barootes moved the second reading of Bill C-118, to amend the Currency Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak today to the second reading of Bill C-118, to amend the Currency Act. In short, these amendments will allow for the introduction of a new $1 circulating coin. Although Canada has had a silver-nickel dollar coin since 1935, it has never been fully circulated, and the government feels that the time has come for a high-value coin in this country. For those not familiar with the new dollar coin, it measures—and I have one here—

An Hon. Senator: Can I have one?

An Hon. Senator: Can I have one, too?

Senator Marshall: Are you giving them to your colleagues?

Senator Tremblay: Have it printed.

Senator Barootes: It is a facsimile.

For those who are unfamiliar with the new dollar coin, it measures 26.5 millimetres, weighs only 7 grams and is struck using a nickel blank coated in bronze. This means that it will be slightly larger and just slightly heavier than our current 25 cent piece.

Honourable senators, simply put, the amendments contained in this bill change the specifications for this coin from the old simulated silver to this new bronze nickel coin. On March 25 of this year the Honourable Stewart McInnes, Minister of Supply and Services, announced the government's intention to introduce a new circulating dollar coin. This decision followed an extensive process of consultation and review of all circulating coin introductions in other countries, including the United Kingdom, the United States and Australia.

Honourable senators will recall that the House of Commons Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates last year held hearings to assess the need for a circulating coin and that the committee subsequently issued a report recommending its introduction. The following recommendations emanated from that committee, and have been accepted by the government, namely:

- (1) There should be a circulating dollar coin and it should be struck by the Royal Canadian Mint;
- (2) That up to $60 million collected from the issue of the new coin during the first five years be assigned to the Calgary Olympics;

(3) That the new coin be 11-sided, weigh 7 grams, have a diameter of 26.5 mm and a thickness on the struck edge of 2.0 mm;

(4) That the colour of the new coin be yellow gold, and nickel in the coin be minted and smelted in Canada; and

(5) Finally, that the composition of the new dollar be aureate bronze plated on pure nickel.

The coin will enter into circulation in January 1987, and the active withdrawal of the $1 Canadian banknotes will occur in 1989, that is, two years later, and will be completed in that year. The initial mintage will be 300 million coins, costing some $31.8 million to produce.

As to the design of the coin, it will represent the traditional voyageur motif on the reverse and the Queen's effigy on the obverse. The mint's facilities in Winnipeg will be used to strike these coins. I should point out that the bronze aureating will be done in Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta.

This decision is consistent with the government's overall cost reduction strategy, and the taxpayers will save more than $175 million in production and distribution costs. These savings result from the fact that the lifespan of these new coins will be 20 years, whereas the lifetime of the current paper dollar bill is one year. The coin is designed to respond to the needs of both ordinary Canadians and business organizations. As you are aware, the marketplace is heavily influenced by coin-operated equipment—vending machines, telephones, transit systems and so on. More than 75 per cent of consumer transactions in this country involve coins, and the new dollar coin will greatly increase the convenience of these transactions. In addition, strong support has been received for this coin from representatives of vision-impaired Canadians.

Honourable senators, in my opinion the new dollar coin is something for which the time has come. I urge you to give swift passage to this important piece of legislation so that the introduction of the coin can take place in January of 1987, as planned. For your information, I might add that Bill C-118 was approved unanimously by agreement of all three parties in the other place, with all three readings being completed in one sitting.

● (1420)

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, before I adjourn the debate, I should like to ask the honourable gentleman whether he will do me the courtesy of allowing me to examine the coin he has displayed so that I can ascertain whether the measurements and weight correspond to the figures he has cited.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I am not stating at the moment whether I am in favour of or opposed to the concept of the new dollar coin, but I should like to ask Senator Barootes if he has considered the problem that is going to be imposed upon the male population of Canada that will result in their having to carry this coin around in their trousers pockets. From experience, I can tell honourable senators that I have used up many pockets in my trousers because of the weight of the coins we use today.

[Senator Barootes.]

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I wonder if the sponsor would be kind enough to entertain a question. I have learned that in the other place, and in various places in Canada, there has been some discussion that this coin issuance would be a most splendid time to honour the name of a great Canadian statesman, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker. I wonder if any discussion has taken place with respect to this very significant opportunity to honour our great former Prime Minister, a statue of whom will be unveiled on the lawn of Parliament Hill on September 18. It strikes me that historians and those who are nationalists, those who are humanists, those who are human rights people, those who are Saskatchewan people and those from other provinces across Canada would look upon this as a great occasion.

I am wondering if there were any discussions on this and, if so, what the result of those discussions was.

On motion of Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

DUTIES RELIEF BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the second reading of Bill C-98, to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remissions of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated.

He said: Honourable senators, in the May 1985 budget the government announced legislation would be introduced to consolidate the existing tariff relief provisions. In case honourable senators are wondering why it is necessary to consolidate the existing legislation and regulations, let me read the title of Bill C-98, which states:

An Act to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remissions of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated.

Obviously, someone has forgotten to consolidate the title of the bill, but mercifully it will be known as the Duties Relief Act.

The imposition of customs duties has been an important element of our trade policy and, indeed, a considerable source of revenue. One of the objectives of custom duty has been to promote investment, production and employment in Canada. Tariffs give Canadian manufacturers the benefit of a cost advantage thus enabling them to compete with imported goods that are similar to or substitutes for Canadian manufactured goods.

In recent years, following a number of discussions held with Canadian industries, a number of programs were established where it was found desirable to grant a remission of duty to manufacturers under certain conditions. Some provisions are contained in legislation such as the Customs Act. Others are more difficult to find, such as the orders in council and regulations made under the Financial Administration Act.

If any of you have served with the late Senator Grosart, you will recall that this was a favorite topic and complaint of his.

The benefits resulting from customs remissions have resulted in a long series of complex provisions which require considerable time and effort for potential users to discover and utilize. This often requires extensive research by those experts in the field. Needless to say, honourable senators, this often results in a very expensive search. We all know that experts do not come cheaply.

Bill C-98 will bring together in one statute sections from other acts as well as various regulations, all of which provide for duty relief programs that benefit Canadian industry. The individual measures have been in force for several years. Bill C-98 incorporates them in one piece of legislation. Canadian firms wishing to benefit from the programs should now find it easier to find the provisions and determine if they are eligible for the benefits flowing from those provisions.

The provinces, and in particular British Columbia, have requested that these customs procedures be adopted in order to attract new investment.

It is my understanding that the Province of British Columbia has created certain economic zones within the province and is especially anxious to have this legislation become law.

I would like now to turn for a few moments to the clauses of the bill which take into account the differing circumstances.

Clause 4, the customs duties reduction provision, allows for the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, to reduce or remove duties on materials, at the time of their importation, to be used in Canadian manufacturing. This authority has been used on many occasions to allow manufacturers to import materials not available from Canadian sources at reduced rates of duty in order to better meet competition. The customs duty reduction usually applies for a limited or stated period of time.

Clauses 5 to 8 are known as the "home consumption" section of the act and allow for duty to be refunded only after the imported goods have been used for the purposes specified.

Clauses 9 to 15 deal with the machinery program and provide for the inclusion of the machinery program in the bill without any change in the scope of the program. However, there will be a streamlining of procedures which implement a recommendation of the ministerial task force on program review, tabled with the May 1985 budget, to reduce the paper burden and resulting delays.

The machinery program, which has been in effect since January 1968, serves the needs of users and manufacturers of machinery. It provides for the remission of duty on machinery which falls under the program and which is not available from Canadian production. It also ensures that the Canadian manufacturers receive the protection provided by the statutory rates in the customs tariff as soon as they can demonstrate a capability to produce the relevant machinery.

Senator Frith: What clause are we at at the moment?

Senator Phillips: We are dealing with clauses 9 to 15.

Senator Frith: Part III?

Senator Phillips: Yes, Part III. The criteria for determining the availability are set out in the bill.

● (1430)

Under the current procedure, the duties are remitted by orders in council on a weekly basis. Under the procedure proposed in Bill C-98, the Minister of National Revenue would publish a list of machinery being "available" and "not available" in Canada. Such a list will significantly reduce the requirement for the processing of thousands of applications under the program. Relief will be granted immediately on goods at the time of their importation simply by reference to the fact that they are listed on the "not available" list. Consequently, it will not be necessary, other than in exceptional circumstances, to submit and process specific applications. As a result, there will be fewer cases of companies paying duty and then having to go through the procedure of seeking a refund.

Part IV of the bill, which is known as the "relief without payment" section, includes clauses 16 to 19 of the bill, which allow the processors to obtain relief from duties on goods which are brought into Canada for processing and then exported. If certain conditions are complied with, it will mean that Canadian firms will no longer have to tie up large sums of money in duty for long periods of time which, of course, adds to their costs and makes their products less competitive abroad.

Clauses 20 to 23 provide for the remission of all or part of the duties payable on certain goods which are imported for a temporary period and then exported. The goods affected will be listed in schedules established by order in council. Many of the goods are for use by Canadian companies, and others are for personal use. These clauses are related to the Articles for Special Use Regulations and the Temporary Entry Remission Order.

Clauses 24 to 28 permit Canadian firms to send goods outside Canada for repair or to have equipment added or to be further processed and to pay duty only on the value of the work done abroad. One of the conditions to be met is that this work could not have been carried out in Canada.

Clauses 29 to 31 provide for the refund or cancellation of security put up by an applicant, and also authorizes the Governor in Council to make regulations relating to certain clauses of the bill.

Clauses 32 to 35 allow for the refund of duties on imported goods found to be obsolete or surplus to the requirements by the owner or importer. The refund can also be claimed for imported materials used to make goods that are subsequently found to be obsolete or surplus. These clauses replace the Obsolete or Surplus Goods Remission Order.

Clauses 36 and 37 provide authority for the Governor in Council to remit duties on imported goods. This is similar to the authority under section 17 of the Financial Administration Act which is used for the remission of any tax, fee or penalty. This authority has been used to help such industries as manufacturers of construction equipment and of semi-conductors. It is proposed that there be a separate authority—clause 37—to deal specifically with the remission of duties and excise taxes. They also provide for up to five years to claim a refund of duties with regard to provisions in earlier clauses of the bill.

Clauses 38 to 51 relate to earlier clauses of the bill. They deal with such matters as debts owing to the Crown, the penalties for failing to comply with relevant conditions or making false statements, and the treatment accorded by-products and merchantable waste. They also provide for the payment or collection of interest by the government, and the publication in public accounts of the amount of duty relief granted.

Clauses 52 to 55 provide for amendments to the Customs Tariff and the revocation of certain orders in council. They also state that the act is to come into force on proclamation.

Honourable senators, again I emphasize that there has been no change in regulations or to any other statute, but merely a consolidation of these items into one bill. Thereby, the government hopes it will be easier for firms to take advantage of the legislation.

I am not recommending that this bill go to committee. It did not go to committee in the other place, and due to the fact that there are no changes, I should like to suggest to honourable senators that we deal with the bill in this chamber. I am willing to answer any questions honourable senators may have. About an hour ago I received from the department a briefing book which I can best describe as an attempt to explain the unexplainable, but I will be willing to provide any answers to questions from that book.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, before I make a few remarks about this bill, I should like to ask a general question of the mover, if he will entertain such a question.

He did give us general assurance that this bill does not contain any new legislation relating to customs tariffs, duties and so forth. It does, however, provide for certain procedural changes under Part III, which on the face of it would seem to make the lot of the importer of such goods having to do with machinery, for example, simpler and easier. There are also some procedural changes, I would think, in Part IV.

Before I go on to make my remarks, I ask the mover to assure me that there are no substantive changes brought about by this bill other than the procedural changes, to which I have made reference, in Parts III and IV.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, in answer to the question raised by Senator Hicks, the explanation I have received from the department would indicate that there are no substantive changes other than the procedural changes which are made in an effort to speed up applications.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, acting on that assurance, I do not think it will be necessary for me to speak at any length at all concerning this bill. I have read the bill and I also was of the impression that there were no substantive changes effected by this proposed legislation, and I hope that the changes which have been made having to do with procedure will simplify the lot of the importer or the person or persons in Canada who will be affected by the provisions of the bill. As I say, on reading the bill I came to that same conclusion, but I thank the mover for his assurance.

[Senator Phillips.]

Acting on the assumption that there are no substantive changes brought about by this bill, I think I can concede that it is a simplification of the existing law; that it does make it more convenient for persons who are affected by the provisions of this bill to operate under its aegis; and, therefore, it should be an improvement.

I must say, however, having read through the bill—though I did not attempt to make checks on all the cross-references to other legislation which the bill displaces and so on—that it is far from being a simple and straightforward bill. Perhaps it is impossible for it to be such when dealing with such complex matters as this. It is impossible for the layman or any person who is not concerned with detailed importation of goods and so on to know exactly what the various numbered items in column 1 of schedule 1 actually refer to. I can only assume that for the persons whose day-to-day or week-to-week business requires them to make use of the provisions of this legislation, previously scattered among several acts of the Parliament of Canada and now brought together under the provisions of Bill C-98, it will be somewhat easier to carry out their tasks.

Holding this view, as I have come to do on reading the bill, and relying on the assurance of Senator Phillips in relation to the bill, I do not think, honourable senators, it is necessary for me to say anything in addition to what Senator Phillips has already said about it. I do not wish, nor do I request or require that the bill be studied by a committee of the Senate, although I suppose that if any honourable senator wanted further assurance that the provisions to which I have made reference and to which I have been speaking are actually correct, it could be sought by questioning a witness from the department concerned in one of our committees. I am not making that request, however, and I propose to support the bill. Indeed, I suspect that my colleagues on this side of the house will do the same.

• (1440)

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

YOUTH

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE— ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, for the adoption of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth, entitled: "Youth: A Plan of Action", tabled in the Senate on 19th February, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Just before the opening of today's sitting, honourable senators, I met with Senators Marshall and Doody and pointed out to them that, like everybody else, I am looking forward to hearing the remarks of Senator Marshall on the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth.

On the other hand, I explained to them that we have had three months to talk about it. Should other senators besides Senator Marshall wish to speak to this issue, they should do so at the earliest opportunity. We all realize that if we do not proceed to the motion of Senator Fairbairn and adopt or reject this report before the end of the session, it will vanish in the dust of time.

I would therefore be grateful to Senator Marshall if he could tell us whether he will be in a position to make his speech Wednesday next week. This means that, immediately after, Senator Fairbairn will want to proceed with the main motion before it is too late.

[English]

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, yesterday I adjourned the debate on this motion. I would be prepared to speak to it on Wednesday. If we return on Tuesday, I will speak to it then, but I need some time for preparation. There are also others who would like to speak to this matter.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is also my impression that one or two other people on this side of the house would like to speak to the motion, but that certainly does not preclude the conclusion of the matter before we adjourn for the summer. I would hesitate to cut it off at this point when others have shown an interest in the debate and want to participate, but certainly we are not going to try to preclude the motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we do not want to cut off the debate on this motion at such short notice. However, if I understand Senator Hébert correctly, he hopes that if others do wish to speak to it, they will be ready to do so soon enough to have a vote on the motion for its adoption before the summer adjournment.

Senator Doody: Yes, I looked around the chamber, took a careful count, and I agree with my colleague.

Order stands.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-96—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Seventeenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (subject-matter of the Bill C-96, intituled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977"), presented in the Senate on 10th June, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough)).

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I believe that Bill C-96 will be coming to us before the summer adjournment. Since there was a pre-study of the bill in the National Finance Committee, it may be advantageous to look now at the report that emanated from that pre-study.

Bill C-96 relates to the transfers made by the Government of Canada to the provincial governments to help finance post-secondary education and certain health services. It will reduce the entitlement of each provincial government as of April 1, 1986, so that the annual per capita growth rate will be two percentage points less than it would have been under the formula in the present law. I ought to mention that the wording in the bill indicates that it is to become effective as of April 1, 1986. In committee the Honourable Mrs. McDougall was asked when the payments are made. The answer was that the payments are made monthly, that the Government of Canada has anticipated favourable consideration of this legislation by the House of Commons and by the Senate, that it has anticipated Royal Assent and actually already has reduced the transfers to the provincial governments as if this proposed law were already on the statute books. This afternoon I am anticipating the bill coming to us—the government already has anticipated Royal Assent.

Honourable senators, under this bill the Government of Canada will reduce—or has reduced—considerably and progressively its contribution towards health services and post-secondary education. Let me take the province which I represent as an example. For the fiscal year 1986-87, under the present law Nova Scotia's entitlement is $591 million. Under Bill C-96 it will be $580 million; in other words, there will be a reduction in entitlement of $11 million. By the year 1990-91, under the present law the entitlement is $786 million, but under Bill C-96 the entitlement will be $715 million; in other words, there will be a reduction of $71 million for that one year. For Canada as a whole in 1990-91, looking ahead to the last year for which figures have been projected, the entitlement of all the provinces will be reduced by over $2 billion for that year.

In committee the minister was asked what message the government intended to transmit to the provincial governments through this bill. Is the government saying that the present formula is too rich? Is it saying that too much money is being expended on post-secondary education and on health services? Is it saying, perhaps, that the amount of money expended is just about right, but that the provincial governments should find a larger part of the financing elsewhere, from their own resources, from increases in tuition fees charged to students or perhaps through the levying of some form of user fee? The minister replied that one should not look for a message to the provincial governments in this bill, that it is a bill which is strictly "policy neutral." "It is essentially a budget bill," said the minister. "It is a financial bill. It is policy neutral."

● (1450)

Honourable senators, I find it very difficult to believe that the minister had thought through the implications of that statement. For the year 1990-91 over $2 billion less will be transferred to the provincial governments for these services; and while the Minister of Finance may think of the measure strictly in financial or budgetary terms, people interested in health services and those interested in post-secondary education cannot be oblivious to the implications of that kind of reduction. In other words, the minister is not looking beyond her account books when she says that this is a "policy neutral" measure.

That is one of the points which is raised for the consideration of the Senate in the seventeenth report now before us.

There is another matter to which reference is made in the committee report. That is the reduction of the federal presence or visibility. This is a complicated matter, but it is one of great importance and political sensitivity.

If we look at provincial expenditures for 1984-85, we find that the provinces expended $6,449,571,000 for post-secondary education. The federal government says that its contribution to that total was made up of two parts: first, the proceeds from certain federal tax points, $2,049,663,000, and then a cash transfer of $2,169,539,000.

In other words, according to the federal figures, the federal government had provided about 65 per cent of the money expended for post-secondary education in all the provinces taken together.

In the case of the health services, the expenditure in that same year, 1984-85, was $21.753 billion. The federal government says that its contribution toward that expenditure by the provincial governments was $10.480 billion, or about 48 per cent of the total expenditure. Of the total transfer about $4,330,816,000 was the yield of tax points.

The important point to notice here is that in the present bill, Bill C-96, the tax points yield transfer is not being changed. The provincial entitlements are being reduced, but the tax transfer formula is not being changed. Consequently, what is being reduced—and that is the bottom line of the calculation—is the cash transfer.

We all know that there are provincial governments—indeed, that there are senators—who insist that the tax point money is really provincial money to start with, and that only the cash can be claimed to be a genuine federal contribution toward either post-secondary education or health service costs.

It is the cash transfer which is going to be reduced by this measure. In other words, it is that part of the transfer which is visibly federal. It is that part of the transfer which is clearly attributable to the Government of Canada, to the taxpayers of Canada, which is being reduced by this bill. As the years go by, the federal presence, the federal visibility, will decline.

[Senator Stewart.]

It may be that to some people this is desirable. However, I am sure that those honourable senators who believe that it is desirable that the Government of Canada should have a visible presence in these fields will be made uneasy by the fact that the cash portion is declining.

If the tax point yields were to increase dramatically, the cash transfers might become virtually invisible—in which case health care services would be seen to be financed entirely by the provincial governments, post-secondary education would be seen to be financed entirely by provincial governments, and the federal financial involvement would have disappeared. That is a possibility which would be more likely in the case of Quebec than of the other provinces, because Quebec takes a larger portion of its entitlement in the form of the yield from tax points. This then is the second consideration which honourable senators might bear in mind when they study Bill C-96.

There is a third point that I believe we should notice. It relates to the kind of information given to members of the House of Commons and senators in support of bills of this kind. On the one hand, here the provincial governments' entitlements are being reduced. On the other hand, as a result of measures set forth in the two most recent budgets, there have been changes in taxation. Some of them have flowed through to provincial revenues in the form of a reduction in provincial revenues. Others have produced new money for provincial governments. The obvious change causing a reduction relates to the taxation of capital gains. On the other hand, the change in the indexation of the personal deduction produces new revenue for provincial governments.

So, although this measure brings about a reduction in provincial income, it may well be that in some provinces, taking the changes in taxation into account, the provincial governments are just about as well off, in terms of money, as they would be if Bill C-96 were not enacted.

That, of course, may please provincial treasurers, but it probably will not please provincial ministers of education, because the money the provincial governments get as a result of changes in taxation is free money, in the sense that it is not earmarked. The provincial treasurer cannot be confronted by his colleague, the Minister of Education, demanding that the money from Ottawa be used for the purpose for which it was intended.

All in all the result of the changes that we have seen in the past two years leads me to believe that some provincial governments are not entirely unhappy to lose money through Bill C-96, and to recover some of it as a result of certain tax changes made here in Ottawa.

But I speak speculatively. When we asked for information about the incidence of tax changes, we were told that it was not the practice of the government to give out that information because it was regarded as provincial information. That is why the report calls attention to the need for greater candour in dealing with Parliament when measures relating to federal-provincial transfers are brought before Parliament.

● (1500)

My conclusion is that this bill is of considerable importance. It reduces provincial entitlements and, perhaps more importantly, it reduces the cash transfers, which is of great significance insofar as a federal presence in the financing of these programs is concerned. The government presented this bill simply as a means of reducing its deficit. It insists that it did not look beyond that point to the implications for the provincial governments or for the people eligible for the services provided under the programs. I call the concern of the committee on these specific points to the attention of honourable senators in anticipation that we will receive the bill next week.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about this report. I anticipate that we will get the bill next week. I anticipate that Parliament will recess next week. I anticipate that somebody may even suggest that since we have pre-studied this bill, it should not go to committee at all. I anticipate that many other bills will come before the Senate next week, and I anticipate that I may not have too much of an opportunity next week to tell you that I believe that Atlantic Canada is getting it in the neck again. Therefore, I am taking this opportunity, during the debate on the report of the committee, to tell you that I believe that this is another way to widen the division between those who have and those who have not.

We are not only dividing the people of this country, but we are starting to divide it by region. This bill will begin the destruction of Atlantic Canada as far as education and health care are concerned. We will end up second class citizens. As long as we are Canadians, I think we should be given the opportunity to have as good a health care system, as good an education and as much opportunity as those in other parts of Canada. I hope that before this bill reaches third reading in the other place, the minister will realize that not only has the government jumped in one year too early—because the legislation enacted in 1977 does not come to an end until next year—but it is taking $20 million from Prince Edward Islanders over the next five years through its cuts in contributions to education programs. The government is taking about $30 million away from the programs for health benefits to our people. That is a total of $50 million for health care and education. It might not mean too much to some of the provinces, because they have extra tax points and because they have industry, but in my province we only have six inches of soil and the sea around us from which to make a living. We do not have any mines, big corporations or businesses with 100 employees. Therefore, we do not get big tax dollars and big incomes.

To give us two more tax points on the income tax and to take away $40 million or $50 million from our economy and expect us to provide equal rights in the fields of education and health care with those in the more prosperous provinces is to expect the impossible. This bill is a bad bill, and it will have the effect of dividing our country.

The medical societies of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick appeared before the Atlantic caucus in Ottawa to protest against this type of legislation. The Medical Society of Prince Edward Island sent me a brief, which I have before me, indicating that they oppose this type of legislation. The Canadian Medical Association itself presented a brief to the House of Commons Legislative Committee on Bill C-96. Even they—that great organization that is represented from coast to coast, from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island—suggest that Prince Edward Island and Atlantic Canada are different from the rest of Canada. They say in the second recommendation in their brief that the financially disadvantaged Atlantic provinces should be excluded from the provisions of this legislation, and suggest that they continue to receive increasing financial support for health care programs on the basis of the existing established program funding formula. That point is supported by every medical man from Vancouver Island to St. John's, Newfoundland. They realize that we have a different economy in Atlantic Canada. Why cannot our politicians realize it? The association is concerned that the availability, accessibility and quality of health care for Canadians in that part of the country will deteriorate and that we will be unable to keep up our hospital standards or to provide proper medical care, because we are being destroyed by this legislation, and it is turning the people of Atlantic Canada into second-class citizens. Not only is Prince Edward Island affected but New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland are in the same boat. The Canadian Medical Association recognizes that fact.

When it comes to education, we in P.E.I. do not have the high incomes to afford the added cost of higher tuition fees. We do not have in Atlantic Canada the job opportunities to earn big money during summer vacation to pay those fees. Worse than that, our unemployment rate is so high that there are no jobs that pay even a small wage. So, raising the fees of university students is just not the answer for our people, who are just as bright as other Canadians, but who will be held back because of the economy in which they live and because they do not have enough dollars in their pocket. All Canadians, whether rich or poor, should have equal opportunity in this country, if they have the brains and ability to go forward. No Canadian should be held back simply because he or she cannot afford an education.

Where is our good liberal principle of equality for mankind so that we can provide a fair and equal education to all Canadians? I can remember John George Diefenbaker talking about his great vision for the Canadian people. Now we are going to destroy even John George's vision.

Honourable senators, I did not intend to speak today, but I thought I should take this opportunity to say what I wanted to say. University professors, students, student councils and others have come to me pleading that I speak out in Parliament and say that Atlantic Canada should not be allowed to be destroyed by cutbacks in equalization payments to our education facilities and our health facilities. We in the Atlantic provinces do not have the opportunities to tax our people any higher. If we cannot make an exception for these provinces in this legislation, then let us do something with the equalization payments to give them the opportunity to attain their rightful place in this great country of ours. Those in the outposts of Newfoundland, on the farms of P.E.I., in the forests of New Brunswick and in the fishing boats of Nova Scotia and their children are just as important as those who come from central Canada.

● (1510)

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I will have a more detailed statement to make on this bill when it comes to the Senate for passage. However, I want to join with my colleagues from Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia in expressing not only my own feelings but the feelings of all the people of New Brunswick regarding this measure. I intend to do this in a very humble way, and in doing so I make an appeal to my colleagues on the government side of the house in the Senate from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, because I know that at least three of my colleagues from New Brunswick on the government side of this house are fully aware of what this measure will do to us in New Brunswick. I am sure that they have been supplied, as I have, with the facts and figures from the Conservative Minister of Finance for the Province of New Brunswick, appealing to all of us to see what we can do to prevent this measure. I know that my colleagues, Senator Robertson, Senator Simard and Senator Sherwood, were all involved at one time or another in the provincial government of New Brunswick, and they are especially cognizant of what this bill will mean to us in New Brunswick.

Very briefly, therefore, I appeal to my colleagues on the government side of the house in the Senate, to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and especially to the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate who understands the situation, having been at one time, as I understand it, the Minister of Finance in his province. I appeal to these colleagues to ask the Government of Canada to make an exception in this bill.

I remember, two or three years ago, the former government was looking to this kind of measure and I remember pleading with the senior ministers in the government not to proceed. Honourable senators, there is no rush to pass this legislation now. As was pointed out by Senator Stewart, the government has already taken the measures; they have already cut down on the payments. Because of that, therefore, I plead again with my colleagues to see if there is not some way to make an exception for the Atlantic provinces, as was so eloquently pleaded by my colleague from Prince Edward Island.

At one time, when I had the responsibility for Health and Social Services in New Brunswick, the formula, at least for Health Services, was that the federal government paid 50 per cent of the average national cost of health services, which was of great benefit to us in New Brunswick and in the other Atlantic provinces. I remember when the Liberal government, of which I was a supporter, changed that formula, and I opposed the change. I and my colleagues from the other provincial governments in the Atlantic provinces joined together and we tried to prevent it, but Ontario and Quebec had their way.

The situation is indeed serious. In New Brunswick we have not yet reached the level of higher education that we need so desperately. Also, in New Brunswick, as in most other provinces, the cost of health services will increase tremendously within the next 10 to 15 years because of the aging factor of our population. No one knows this better than Senator Robertson. Because of our limited tax base and because of our high unemployment figures, we will not be able to increase the provincial revenue to provide those services that are so desperately needed.

Having said that, honourable senators, I close my remarks by pleading again with my colleagues from the government side of the house to try and have this bill stayed for a while, so that the government can take a look at the possibility of doing something special for us in the Atlantic provinces.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak to this order, it is considered debated.

[Translation]

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

TENTH REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The House proceeded to consideration of the tenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Unless I am mistaken, honourable senators, this is the order item we stood earlier today. I have had an opportunity to study the report. The procedure is quite correct, in the sense that we have followed section 2:07 of the regulations governing the financing of Senate committees. Therefore I would suggest that we adopt this report.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Good speech!

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I agree, honourable senators, the report seems quite in order.

Therefore on behalf of Senator Tremblay, I move the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX*(See p. 2651)SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY*TENTH REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

WEDNESDAY, June 18, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

TENTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on December 12, 1984, to review and update the recommendations contained in the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on 20th October, 1981, and to enquire into any matter related thereto, respectfully requests that it, or any subcommittee so authorized by the Committee, be empowered (i) to adjourn from place to place within Canada for the purpose of such study; and (ii) that it be authorized to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the "Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees", the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR TREMBLAY,
Chairman.

APPENDIX A TO THE REPORT

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SUB-COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS

APPLICATION FOR BUDGET AUTHORIZATION FOR THE PERIOD

1st APRIL 1986 TO 31st MARCH, 1987

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate, Wednesday, December 12, 1984:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bielish:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to review and update the recommendations contained in the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on 20th October, 1981, and to enquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence taken on the subject and the work accomplished during the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

CHARLES A. LUSSIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, Tuesday, February 5, 1985.

"That a Sub-Committee be formed to consider the recommendations contained in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on October 20, 1981 as well as all other related questions; and

That the documents and testimonies gathered regarding this matter and the work accomplished during the first session of the 32nd Legislature be referred to the Sub-Committee."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

ANDRÉ RENY,
Clerk of the Committee.

SUMMARY

Professional and Special Services	$ 15,000.
Transportation and Communications	13,935.
Other Expenditures	1,400.
TOTAL	$ 30,335.

The foregoing budget was approved by the Steering Committee on May 1, 1986

The undersigned or an alternate will be in attendance on the date that this budget is being considered.

Jack Marshall

Chairman of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs

Date: May 13, 1986

Remarks:

M. Lorne Bonnell

Deputy Chairman, Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology

Date: May 28, 1986

Remarks:

Approved by:

Guy Charbonneau

Chairman, Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Date: June 5, 1986

For Information Purposes only

Budget authorized for the period 1st April, 1985 to 31st March 1986	$15,000.
Budget requested for the period 1st April, 1986 to 31st March 1987	$30,335.
Budget to be requested for the period 1st April, 1987 to 31st March 1988	$35,000.

EXPLANATION OF COST ELEMENTS

Professional and Special Services

Research and Administrative Assistance
(to be hired)

A contract will be signed for the period
1st May 1986 to 31st March 1987
(30 weeks at $ 500. per week)

Transportation and Communications

1. Travel Expenses

a)- Trip to Charlottetown

i) Air Transportation

Ottawa-Charlottetown-Ottawa

Air fare, to one city at $ 370. each for:

— 5 senators

— 1 Clerk

— 1 Secretary

— 1 Researcher

— 1 Messenger

$ 3,330.

9

ii) Hotel Accommodation

9 persons, 3 days

at $ 75. each

2,025.

iii) Per diem allowance

9 persons, 3 days

at $ 40. each.

1,080.

iv) Ground Transportation

By limousine, bus and taxi

for 9 persons

600.

v) Contingency:

300.

$ 7,335.

b) Anticipated expenses of Senators responding to invitations to speak on the work of the Subcommittee $ 6,000.

2. Telegrams and Telephones 300.

3. Postage and Freight 300.

6,600.

TOTAL

13,935.

Other Expenses

1. Purchase of publications, books, reference materials,
periodicals and the like $ 400.

2. Contingency: to cover unforeseen expenses arising out of Committee
business 1,000.

TOTAL

$ 1,400.

APPENDIX B
TO THE REPORT

THURSDAY, June 5, 1986

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and approved the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its review and update of the recommendations contained in the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: "They Served—We Care", as authorized by the Senate on December 12, 1984. The said supplementary budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 15,000.
Transportation and Communications	13,935.
All Other Expenditures	1,400.
	$ 30,335.

ATTEST:

GUY CHARBONNEAU,
Chairman

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 19, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE RICHARD B. HATFIELD, P.C.

TRIBUTE ON TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION TO NEW BRUNSWICK LEGISLATURE

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, June 19, 1959, was a significant day in the political life of New Brunswick, and today marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of that day and of the election of the Honourable Richard Bennett Hatfield to the New Brunswick Legislature representing Carleton County. Mr. Hatfield's election 25 years ago was to fill the Carleton County seat made vacant by the resignation of the late Honourable Hugh John Flemming, former Premier of New Brunswick, with whom I had the privilege to serve and who became Canada's first Minister of Forestry in the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker's cabinet on October 11, 1960.

June 19, 1961, also marks the formal beginning of a remarkable political career for Mr. Hatfield, one unique in the annals of Canada as well as for New Brunswick. After being re-elected in the general elections of 1963, 1967 and 1970, he was sworn in as Premier of New Brunswick on November 12, 1970, a position he has held ever since, winning elections in 1974, 1978 and 1982. He was sworn of the Privy Council on April 17, 1982. Mr. Hatfield's contribution to the political, economic, social and cultural life of New Brunswick cannot be matched and covers a wide range of diverse issues and areas.

Honourable senators, Premier Hatfield, with continued effort and exceptional vision during this past quarter of a century, has created broad new goals and horizons for New Brunswick and its people. I know honourable senators will join with me in extending to him sincere congratulations and personal good wishes on this important anniversary.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

YOUNG OFFENDERS

REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-106 TABLED

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the twenty-third report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. It deals with the subject matter of Bill C-106, intitled: "An Act to Amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act".

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SIXTH CONFERENCE ON EUROPEAN COOPERATION AND SECURITY, HELD AT BONN, WEST GERMANY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, June 26, 1986, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Cooperation and Security, of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, held at Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany, from 26 to 31 May, 1986.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday next, 25th June, 1986, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE—ITEMS FOR NEGOTIATION

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. For some considerable time now we have been told that negotiations with regard to a comprehensive trade agreement will be a "clean launch"—without restriction. Yesterday it became apparent that that was not going to be the case, that the Americans had withdrawn one of the most important elements of modern business, namely, all financial institutions from the negotiations.

In light of that statement—which has been confirmed by a representative of the United States Embassy in Ottawa—could the Leader of the Government tell us what items Canada will take off the table, and when it will be done?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am not sure that my honourable friend has interpreted correctly what has happened in the United States, because my view of the matter does not coincide with his. My view of the matter is that the Americans have stated that the negotiator for matters concerning the Treasury shall be somebody from the Treasury rather than Ambassador Murphy. So, it is not that these matters are not on the table, but that a different authority will do the negotiating.

That is their privilege, of course, but, as far as we are concerned, we think the item is on the table and will be negotiated by our sole negotiator, Ambassador Reisman.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, if that is so it means that issues such as provisions for foreign interests in Canadian banks will be subject to discussions between the Treasury Department of the United States and our Department of Finance, and does not indicate in any way that they will be part of the comprehensive trade agreement. That is made abundantly clear from the statements that were made, so I can hardly understand the point the leader makes when he tells us that these matters will involve different negotiators, but still be in the same agreement.

Senator Roblin: I think I will stick to my original statement, because insofar as negotiations on this topic are concerned they will be between Ambassador Reisman and whomever the American authorities decide will do the negotiating for them. As far as we are concerned, they are on the table and will remain part of Ambassador Reisman's mandate.

Senator Sinclair: And they will be part of the comprehensive trade agreement, if one is reached? Is that what you are saying?

Senator Roblin: All I know is that the subject will be negotiated by Ambassador Reisman, as far as we are concerned.

Senator Sinclair: That is not the question. The question is: Irrespective of who the negotiators are, will the question of financial services be part of the comprehensive trade agreement, if one is reached?

Senator Roblin: As far as we are concerned, the answer is yes.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): On the trade question may I ask whether the Leader of the Government would clarify for me comments made by the Prime Minister in his speech made earlier in the week? He referred to the benefits which Canada had derived from the auto pact and said that it would be his wish to recreate—I think that was the word used—these benefits in other sectors.

Because of the comments made in that speech and earlier by the Prime Minister when he seemed to refer to the possibility of dealing with sectors, I ask whether the government has ruled out the series of such agreements as a result of the trade negotiations.

Senator Roblin: Our policy has not changed, honourable senators. We are seeking a comprehensive trade agreement; we are not seeking sectoral agreements.

[Senator Sinclair.]

Senator MacEachen: May I ask then, in view of the high praise which the Prime Minister bestowed upon the auto pact—and rightly so—would the auto pact be regarded by the government as a suitable model for various sectors which might be included in the comprehensive trade agreement?

Senator Roblin: I think we would prefer to deal with each particular problem as it arises and see what arrangements can be made with respect to it. That is what the negotiations are all about.

Senator MacEachen: I understand that. I conclude that the model which the Prime Minister praised so highly could be put forward by the government in the negotiations with respect to certain sectors.

It seems to me that if the Prime Minister finds that model so attractive—and I would agree with him—surely it would be reasonable to put it forward as a possibly suitable model to deal with a particular industry which might be included in an overall agreement, taking into account the fact that the Leader of the Government has stated that the government is not looking at a series of sectoral agreements. I accept that as a statement of government policy, but the fact is that even though whatever is agreed will be included in one agreement, nevertheless that agreement must deal with a series of industries and sectors. My purpose in saying this is to point out or to ask if the auto pact would not be a desirable model to try to follow in whatever sector it might fit.

Senator Roblin: The reference to the auto pact was to illustrate the advantages of enhanced trade arrangements with the United States; it is not necessarily to say that that was the only way of doing it. I do not think I could make any comment as to the possibilities as we emerge from these trade negotiations, because obviously there are several.

Senator MacEachen: Would the minister make inquiries to find out whether the government has ruled out, for example, the model of the auto pact as it might be applicable to a particular industry included in the negotiations? I don't, for example, see why it would not be in Canada's interests to pursue enhanced trade and greater access, which is provided for both countries in the auto pact, while at the same time pursuing production safeguards in Canada. If it is in Canada's interest, why not go for it? Why not suggest it to the Americans?

I, therefore, ask if the government is saying, "No, we will not even think of putting that up." All I am inquiring about is whether a judgment has already been made, or whether the government is still open to doing something of that kind which might accelerate the acceptance of their initiative among the Canadian public.

Senator Roblin: My friend is asking me to speculate on the outcome of the negotiations which, of course, I think would not be appropriate for me to do.

We will look at whatever proposals Ambassador Reisman is able to arrive at with his American counterparts, and on the basis of those decide whether or not they are acceptable to the nation.

Senator MacEachen: Perhaps the minister has misunderstood. I am not trying to speculate on the outcome nor am I asking him to speculate on the outcome. What I am really asking about is the approach that Canada will take. Will the approach taken by the negotiators be broad enough to include the model of the auto pact for a particular industry as being of benefit to Canada? Would it be possible in the mind of the government for the negotiator to pursue that model, if appropriate, within the negotiations?

Senator Roblin: I can only say that we will seek the negotiations which best protect the interests of the country, whatever they are.

Senator MacEachen: I am not saying that such an approach would work; it may not work, because it might be rejected by the United States. But from the Canadian point of view, I really want to know whether the government would have an open mind in pursuing the model, which the Prime Minister quite rightly praised and put forward as embodying the type of benefit that Canada might derive in the future. I do not see anything wrong with that. I am saying to the government, "Don't close your mind to that possibility," or have you, in fact, closed your minds to it?

Senator Roblin: We are closing our minds to no possibilities. We expect there will be many variations that we will have to consider.

Senator MacEachen: So, the auto pact model is a possibility to which the government has not closed its mind. I am thankful for that.

● (1410)

Senator Roblin: I am not making any commitment in that respect.

Senator Doody: Under cross-examination.

AGRICULTURE

WHEAT—DOMESTIC PRICE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. A committee report presented to the House of Commons recommends an increase in the domestic price of wheat to the level of $10 per bushel on August 1. I believe it was a unanimous report to the House of Commons and to the government. My question is: Can Canadian grain producers—those in western Canada as well as others—look forward to the establishment on August 1 of a domestic price for wheat of $10 per bushel?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the government is giving careful consideration to that report from the other place and expects to make an announcement on it very soon.

Senator Argue: I have a couple of comments. Is it possible, or is it in the realm of consideration, that since the Prime Minister, in outlining the policy some time ago, said that the domestic price might go up as high as $11 per bushel, is that figure of $11 being considered, or is it only the $10 figure; and when the Leader of the Government says that there will be an announcement "very soon", does he have in mind an announcement by the end of the month or by the time that Parliament adjourns for the summer?

Senator Roblin: As soon as the matter has received consideration by the cabinet, an announcement will be made. It has not yet been considered.

Senator Argue: All I can say is that this is a very important question for grain producers. The domestic price today is $7 per bushel for wheat, as the Leader of the Government well knows. The suggestion is that the price should go to $10 per bushel, which is an increase of $3. To the producer it represents 30 cents per bushel in round figures. That is not a lot of money, but, in view of the state of the agricultural economy, it is an important amount of money; and I hope that the Leader of the Government will give it his best push forward, because an increase in the price of wheat is very important. There may be other ways to do this in a more improved fashion, but that is the recommendation.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am very much aware of the strain being placed on the cash flow position of western farmers. The question is to decide how best to help them, and that will receive our prompt consideration.

WHEAT—EFFECT OF TWO-PRICE SYSTEM ON BAKING INDUSTRY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, when the Leader of the Government is considering that matter, perhaps he will see whether he can give some assurance to the 2,000 people in the baking industry in British Columbia and Alberta whose jobs will be in great jeopardy if that two-tier price is put into effect. What action will be taken to preserve their employment and to allow those bakeries to remain competitive with $5 wheat from the United States bakeries?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend has raised one of the real problems in connection with the policy, and the point he makes has not escaped our attention.

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, we are drawing close to the end of this session. Last week I asked the Leader of the Government whether he could report to me on the incident at Goose Bay, Labrador. He has not yet done so, and I wonder if he would be good enough to bring me up to date on the question I asked.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have not yet received a definitive reply on that matter. As soon as I have, I shall bring it to the Senate.

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, it has now been several days since the incident occurred and several days since I first asked my question. Since we only have a few more days left of this session, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could be a little more precise as to when he could bring a report on that incident.

Next week I will be in British Columbia on business, a trip that I have planned for some time now, and therefore I will not be here in this chamber. I wonder if the Leader of the Government would report to the Senate next week on that matter.

Senator Roblin: I always give my friend the latest information I have, and that is all I can tell him.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: I, too, would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate about questions that have been put to him and that remain unanswered, going back as far as March 12, 1985. Some of these questions have been overtaken by events, but others have not. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could give some indication as to when he plans to respond to the questions that I have asked.

Furthermore—but perhaps I should let the leader respond to that question first.

Senator Roblin: Let's have the "furthermore"; I can take it.

Senator Marsden: I would like to ask whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate also plans to report on questions which have been overtaken by events.

Senator Roblin: I intend to report on all questions that have been put to me, except those that the questioner specifically allows me to regard as answered, such as was done the other day by my honourable friend, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Hardly—I did not say that you need not answer them; I said there was no longer any point in answering them.

Senator Roblin: If there are questions—

Senator Doody:—addressed.

Senator Roblin: Was the word "addressed"? I am sorry. The point is that if there are questions that have been overtaken by events, that does happen, and if members want to let me know which they are, it will save the odd dollar if we do not have to table replies formally. However, that is not an important point and I certainly intend to table a reply to each question that has been asked. I have one today for my honourable friend on one of her topics which I hope will be of some use to her.

We simply have to pursue these things as vigorously as we can through the labyrinth of the bureaucratic system that exists and has grown up over the last 115 years, because that is the means by which these questions are answered. They do not get answered as quickly as I would like, so my honourable friend can rely on me to keep on pushing.

Senator Marsden: I might just say to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the question going back to March 12, 1985, asks when the order in council for the 1986 census would be tabled. Of course, everyone here will know that the census collection is now over, but I wonder if that accounts for the fact that neither I nor any other member of my household has received a census questionnaire.

[Senator Marchand.]

Senator Roblin: I will report that fact to those in authority, because we would not like my friend not to be among those counted and enumerated.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the same subject of questions that are in abeyance, I would presume. On February 12 of this year I asked him a question with respect to the booklet: "How Canadians Govern Themselves" and my honourable friend replied at that time with alacrity and, in fact, enthusiasm, because he said that I had come to the right place because—and I am quoting him:

I will certainly get an answer for him if he cannot get it anywhere else.

In fairness, the Leader of the Government in the Senate did give a reply a few weeks later, indicating that the booklet was in the course of being reprinted because of some editorial changes in order to bring it up to date and that he would let us know when it might be available. There was a caveat that there might be a charge—a topic that I will be prepared to debate when the matter comes up. However, perhaps the Leader of the Government could tell us at least when we can obtain the booklet.

Senator Roblin: I well remember answering my friend's question in the first instance. I must confess that I, personally, have lost track of the fact that there was more information promised. It may be in my book, I will have to see. However, I will take the question as a new one and see whether I can obtain the answer.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—INDIVIDUAL NEGOTIATORS FOR SPECIALIZED AREAS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: My question follows upon that of Senator Sinclair regarding the decision of the American government, apparently, to have another negotiator involved in the trade negotiations. I would like to know whether the Canadian government is giving any thought to having another negotiator when we reach specialized problems such as, for example, agriculture, or does it intend to stay with only the one negotiator, in view of the American change?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, every question before this body represents a specialized problem. How did my honourable friend think otherwise? The problems are very specialized, very difficult and require a lot of background information. That is why we have set up an elaborate system—which my friend is aware of—to provide the negotiator with the opinions and views of all of the people who have a right to be heard on this matter, which takes in a lot of territory. Just the same, we think it advisable that we should work through the one negotiator, and that is our policy.

CORRECTIONS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

● (1420)

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Before putting it, however, I should like to commend him for the prompt way in which he responded to my request for the tabling of the report of the corrections investigator. I made that request on Thursday; the document was tabled on Friday. I thank him very much. Perhaps that is an indication of what he will continue to do with respect to my request of two months ago that the government lay on the table certain documents and papers.

Honourable senators, the government has been on notice three months for those documents. I appeal to the Leader of the Government to tell me whether the Xerox machines are not working or whether there is some particular reason why the government does not wish to table these documents.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the documents will be tabled.

Senator Hastings: They will be?

Senator Argue: They will be; he did not say when.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers to questions.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

MISSION TO CHINA—COMPOSITION OF DELEGATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Molgat will be delighted to know that I have a delayed answer in response to a question he asked in the Senate on June 11 last regarding the Canadian Wheat Board.

(The answer follows:)

MINISTERIAL VISIT TO CHINA, JUNE 8 (ARR)— 16 (DEP) 1986 PARTICIPANT LIST

The Honourable Charles Mayer, Minister of State
(Canadian Wheat Board)

Mrs. Elaine Mayer

Murray Cardiff, M.P. Huron-Bruce

Mr. Pierre Blais, M.P. Bellechasse, Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture

Cam Brown, Vice-President, Marketing, Feed-Rite Ltd., Winnipeg

Rick Dobranski, Vice-President, Allstate Grain Co., Ltd.,
Surrey, B.C.

Henry Poehlmann, Manager, Process Engineering, Carling O'Keefe Breweries of Canada Limited, Toronto

Ted Bilyea, General Manager, International Trade Division, Canada Packers Inc., Toronto

S. Monte Daniel, President and General Manager, Cambrian Engineering Group Ltd., Mississauga

David Clarke, Manager, International Business Development, John Labatt Limited, Toronto, Ontario

Graham Hinton, Vice-President, Marketing, Food Machinery Engineering Ltd., Toronto

Ms. Maggie Liu, Director, Price and Foreign Competition Analysis, Canadian Wheat Board, Winnipeg

Henri-Paul Trudel, President, Conseil Canadien de la Coopération, Lévis, Québec

Mrs. Jean MacGillivray, Second Vice-President, Cooperative Union of Canada, Ottawa (Also President Co-op Atlantic, Moncton)

Allan Macpherson, President, Alberta Wheat Pool, Calgary

Lorne Hehn, President, United Grain Growers Limited, Winnipeg

Roger Lemp, Vice-President, Loblaw Companies Limited, Toronto/Vancouver (Also Vice-President of Intersave Buying and Merchandising Service and of Western Commodities, both of which are wholly owned Vancouver based subsidiaries of Loblaw Companies and responsible for all of Loblaw's domestic and import buying including imports of foodstuffs from China.)

Mrs. Dee Derby, Private Secretary to Minister.

Ms. Jody Aylard, Special Assistant, Minister's office

Dennis Gibson, Deputy Director General, Grain Marketing Bureau, Department of External Affairs

Yu-Lin Ho, Translator

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 27 last by the Honourable Senator Marsden regarding summer youth employment.

(The answer follows:)

The evaluation report on Challenge '85, is only one of several sources used for developing policy on future summer employment programs for students. The report is currently being examined with respect to the interpretations of some of the findings.

Similarly, the report by the Community Coalition to Save our Summer (CC-SOS) must be seen in the approprate light. Naturally, this group is interested in ensuring maximum activity in the social service sector to facilitate the programming that its member organizations have planned for the summer. While sympathetic to this objective, the Government has sought to achieve a balanced summer program allowing both the public sector and the private sector opportunity for a fair share of the funding and jobs.

It is important to realize that in the past, the private sector has been more or less deprived of this opportunity with the result that non-profit or public agencies received most or all of the funding available. The present government recognized, that many thousands of potentially excellent summer jobs were being missed because the private sector was not participating. The private sector therefore was given an opportunity to participate. However, 64.9 per cent of funds are still going to the non-private sector.

An important consideration which is often overlooked by criticism directed at Challenge '85/'86 is that the purpose of these programs is the provision of quality work opportunities with a view to the student's later school to work transition. Community benefit, while welcome, is not the purpose of summer student employment programming. The private sector provides a wide range of occupations for students of all ages and educational levels and, it would seem, jobs which more reflect the demands of the real world of work, in which students will work after completing their education.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons as follows:

Ordered—That, notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Tuesday, May 27, 1986, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations be empowered to present its report not later than Thursday, June 26, 1986; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to request that the Senate unite with this House for the above purpose.

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Tuesday, May 27, 1986, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations be empowered to present its report not later than Thursday, June 26, 1986; and

[Senator Roblin.]

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that the Senate do unite with that House for the above purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-103

Hon. Lowell Murray, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-103, intituled: "An Act to amend the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act in respect of certain regulatory matters," in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

He said: I believe, honourable senators, that this motion was canvassed by the leadership on both sides.

Honourable senators will be aware that this bill is now in the other place. At the rate they are going, it would be highly unlikely that even if the bill cleared that place the Senate could dispose of it by June 27. The purpose of moving the pre-study now is to enable the committee next Wednesday afternoon to hear the Minister of State for Finance, Mrs. McDougall. What she has to say should give us some food for thought over the summer months. We will resume our consideration of the subject matter of this bill in September.

Senator Frith: We will think of little else.

Motion agreed to.

DUTIES RELIEF BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill C-98, to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remissions of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Barootes, seconded by the Honourable Senator

Robertson, for the second reading of the Bill C-118, intituled: "An Act to amend the Currency Act".—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, Bill C-118 does not require a lengthy intervention on my part, because yesterday Senator Barootes gave a detailed explanation which necessitates no elaboration.

The rationale for the new $1 coin is well known to all honourable senators. This understanding was reflected in the broad all-party consensus this bill received in the other place.

However, this is not to deny that some inconvenience and adjustment costs will be associated with the introduction of the new $1 coin. It will require an adjustment on the part of consumers, banks and, most acutely, those presently involved in the production of the $1 bill. Those adjustment costs are regrettable but inevitable. We hope that the gradual phasing out of the $1 bill will mitigate at least some of those adjustment costs.

Although the Canadian people will rapidly become used to the $1 coin, I am a little concerned about the $2 bill. I am not convinced that in the long run there will be maximum use of the $1 coin as long as we retain the $2 bill. In my opinion, we may want to withdraw that bill at some time in the future. However, this is a trial-and-error proposition, and we will have to wait to see what effect the use of the $1 coin will have on the $2 bill, particularly in eastern Canada.

On the positive side, the advantages of the new $1 coin are overwhelming. The Government of Canada will realize significant savings in production costs. Transit authorities will save on operating expenses. The new coin will be more convenient for consumers and for vending machine operators. Furthermore, the coin will be produced using metal mined and smelted in Canada, thereby increasing demand and income in those industries. We are delighted with the proposed design and size of the new $1 coin. I believe that it is in keeping with the high standard of aesthetics and beauty associated, both in Canada and abroad, with Canadian money and Canadian postage stamps. I am confident that Canadians will be proud of their new $1 coin.

● (1430)

I hope that those who are responsible for choosing the subject to be portrayed on this coin will use it as an opportunity to honour Canadian pioneers and former prime ministers by embossing it with their images. In that way, Canadians will become aware of the valuable contribution that those persons have made to Canadian society and to Canadian history.

On behalf of my party I would like to go on record as saying that we support the government in the initiative contained in Bill C-118. We all look forward to seeing the new coin in circulation. I hope that the new coin will not perforate the pockets of Senator Robichaud's trousers, a fear that he expressed yesterday. Should he decide to carry a lot of $1 coins in his pockets, I suggest that he have his linings reinforced.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Barootes speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I wish to thank those honourable senators who have remarked so cogently and helpfully on this currency bill. I wish to address, if I may use that term, some of the problems that have been brought to our attention. Both Senator Bosa and Senator Macquarrie were kind enough to speak of using the embossment to portray some of our leading personalities, prime ministers and so on on the new coin. I must point out that we have reserved our paper money for adulating and honouring past prime ministers of Canada. It has become a tradition in Canada to honour them in that way. For example, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's likeness appears on our $5 bill, Sir John A. Macdonald on our $10 bill, Sir Robert Borden is on our $100 bill and William Lyon Mackenzie King is on the $50 bill. I am also informed that there is a likeness of one of our prime ministers on the $1,000 bill, but, coming from where I do and never having handled or seen a $1,000 bill, I shall have to ask others in this room to verify that it exists.

On the other hand and in a more serious vein, those countries of the British Commonwealth which hold the Crown and the Queen as their head of state have all depicted a likeness of the King or Queen on their coins. I am informed by Senator Heath Macquarrie that at least three of them do. Those countries, of course, that do not have the Queen as their head of state portray some other figure. But it has been our tradition to portray the King or Queen.

I would also like to address the problem that Senator Robichaud raised yesterday about whether we should consider the weight of the coin and its wear and tear possibilities on pockets. I would point out that four quarters weigh more than one of the new coins. As a matter of fact, the new coin weighs only slightly more than the 25-cent piece now issued by the mint. Therefore, I suggest to those who might be in the habit of carrying around a lot of dollar coins as well as other coins in their pockets—and who have expensive tailors—that they reinforce their pockets with slightly sturdier cloth.

Senator Steuart: Rich Tories!

Senator Bosa: Or carry a purse.

Senator Barootes: Those who come from my part of the country shop at Eatons and the Army and Navy, and they do not make special pockets.

I think that this coin will gain great respect and use in Canada, because so much of our industry today depends on coin-operated machines. It is very difficult to carry around enough change using existing coinage to be able to obtain an article which is desired. In fact, according to those who are allowed to smoke—and I understand that there are fewer and fewer of them in our society—

Senator Macquarrie: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes:—it is almost impossible to find enough 25-cent pieces to obtain a packet of cigarettes.

Senator Tremblay: That is a good point.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have had the opportunity to introduce this bill. I thank my friends in the chamber for their wholesome and worthwhile support.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Barootes, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT CRIMINAL CODE PENITENTIARY ACT PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the second reading of Bill C-106, to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

She said: Honourable senators, it is my privilege to speak to Bill C-106, to amend the Young Offenders Act. This bill was given third reading by the Commons on June 17, 1986, a matter of weeks after its introduction by the Solicitor General of Canada. This, perhaps more than any other fact, highlights the importance and sense of urgency that characterizes this legislation.

The Young Offenders Act was the product of a lengthy examination of the Canadian juvenile justice system that began in the early sixties. When proclaimed some two years ago it repealed the Juvenile Delinquents Act of 1908 and introduced wide-ranging reforms. The principles upon which this new legislation is founded reflect contemporary Canadian social values and aspirations rather than those of society one hundred years ago. At the turn of the century it was recognized that children and adults who committed crimes should not be handled in the same manner, that the young required special treatment separate from adults. Accordingly, Parliament adopted legislation in the form of the Juvenile Delinquents Act that required the courts to deal with juvenile delinquents as children in need of society's protection, not as criminals requiring punishment.

● (1440)

The Young Offenders Act, on the other hand, is founded on very different principles. First, it holds that young people are responsible for their acts and should be held accountable before the law and, like all Canadian citizens, that they enjoy the rights that are protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Second, it recognizes and affirms that society has a right to be protected from crime.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

Finally, it recognizes and attempts to deal with the fact that young people have "special needs" because they are at various stages of development and maturity.

Today our society recognizes that young people, although they may not be fully mature, are responsible for their deeds, and Parliament in passing the Young Offenders Act declared as a matter of principle that they should be held accountable for their criminal acts in a manner appropriate to their age, maturity and independence.

In accordance with that principle, the Young Offenders Act introduced several major reforms:

Adolescents age 12 through 17 inclusive are subject to criminal prosecution in youth court for violations of the Criminal Code and other federal laws;

The police now apply the same investigative rules, arrest and detention powers to youths as to adults, except that the young person must be detained separately from adults;

The rights of young persons are afforded protection in the juvenile process;

The juvenile justice system has a safety valve: Young persons may be transferred to adult court if the charges against them are serious enough that the youth system cannot deal with them appropriately;

In the past, juvenile courts were, for all practical purposes, closed to the public and the media. The Young Offenders Act has opened the courts to the public and the media and the only limitation imposed on the media is that the name or identity of young offenders must not be published;

The youth court has the power to impose dispositions ranging from fines to secure custody, and, in so doing, consider not only the responsibility and accountability, but the principles of needs of young persons, protection of society and rights of victims;

Where young offenders are subject to custodial dispositions, those dispositions can only be shortened by the courts.

As can be expected of any such reform, the implementation of the Young Offenders Act was difficult, even stormy, simply because it had introduced very significant changes. Regrettably, the expected difficulties were aggravated by the discovery of serious problems in some provisions of the act itself. These problems were of such magnitude that some commentators, including provincial attorneys general, voiced concern that public confidence in Canada's juvenile justice system could be seriously jeopardized if action were not taken.

The Young Offenders Act, despite the problems that have been encountered, is positive legislation. Its fundamental principles are broadly supported. The problems encountered do, nevertheless, undermine the potential of the legislation to achieve the positive effects for which it was designed.

While it appeared some months ago that there was an urgent need to act to resolve these difficulties, it was equally important that any solutions accurately reflect the problems that were being experienced in practice. To examine these problems in detail, consultations with a cross section of Canadians across the country who face the challenge of dealing with young people in conflict with the law, as well as with representatives of the communities that are affected by both crime and the criminal justice system took place. These consultations, and others that were held with provincial governments, confirmed that the principles upon which the Young Offenders Act had been founded are widely supported.

In short, the proposals for amendments contained in Bill C-106 were developed through a process of consultation involving a broad cross section of juvenile justice officials and concerned citizens.

It is apparent that police, correctional authorities, citizens groups, youth service agencies and many others are not opposed to the act; rather, they are anxious to ensure that it functions in the way that Parliament intended. The amendments that are now before us respond to the problems that have been identified. They will serve to enhance the ability of the juvenile justice system to meet demands for public safety and reinforce the values that are fundamental to the high standards we strive for, including the full recognition of the special needs and circumstances of youth in contemporary communities.

More recently these amendments have been examined by members of Parliament in a legislative committee. Interested groups and organizations such as the Canadian Council on Children and Youth and the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police have appeared before the legislative committee to express their views on the proposed amendments. In addition, written submissions were made by media interests and others. This process has reinforced that these amendments enjoy the support of a wide range of concerned groups and individuals and will respond to urgent needs for public protection and for the restoration of confidence in our justice system.

The amendments need not be reviewed in great detail at this particular time; however, with your indulgence, I will highlight some of the more important ones:

The act currently relies on a "review" process to deal with young offenders who violate probation orders or other non-custodial dispositions. This innovative process has been found to be inadequate. Correctional authorities and law enforcement officers have been handicapped in their ability to respond quickly and effectively to these situations. The amendments will streamline the process and allow quick interventions by way of arrest and detention where there has been a breach of a non-custodial disposition. The modifications will mean that the juvenile justice system and the adult system will deal with probation breached in much the same way. When young people are involved in street crimes, drug abuse, prostitution and the like, the ability of police to arrest may be a crucial factor in preventing crime and in ultimately helping a young person to achieve a different lifestyle. It might be noted that the ultimate consequences for the young person have not really changed, but means to that end have been simplified.

An additional amendment deals with the evidence given by a child. Under the current law the evidence of a child must be corroborated by some other material evidence. By deleting the requirement for this corroboration, the proposed amendment will ensure that children who are victims—for example, victims of sexual abuse by a young offender—do not find that their age alone denies them the full benefits of criminal law.

There has been a fear that so-called "Fagins" will be able to commit crimes and avoid prosecution by using children. An amendment to the Criminal Code will ensure that individuals who counsel or aid children under the age of 12 to commit crimes will themselves be liable to vigorous criminal prosecution. While there is no evidence that there has been any increase in the incidence of crimes in which children are abused in this way by adults, these amendments ensure that it will not happen.

A number of other amendments will deal with shortcomings of the Young Offenders Act. For example, the changes that have been introduced will help resolve technical difficulties in the custody provisions and emphasize that custody is a disposition of last resort intended to enhance the protection of society. Other changes will improve the application of the laws governing the pre-trial detention of youth, and ensure that the limitations on publication do not compromise the protection of society when offenders are at large.

Honourable senators, I am pleased to say that I believe that the government has brought forward proposals for juvenile justice reform that will ensure that the need to protect society and the other principles of the act can be achieved. Importantly, these changes have been achieved without diminishing the rights of young people or exposing young people to punishments out of proportion to their behaviour.

I understand that there is interest and commitment on the part of the government to continuing the process of consultation and discussion that has culminated in the amendments presented today. It is important that the process of criticism, study and change continue to be the goal of the federal and provincial governments as well as of concerned citizens across Canada.

In conclusion, honourable senators, let me urge the speedy passage of these changes so that the benefits of the Young Offenders Act can be quickly and more fully enjoyed by Canadian communities.

On motion of Senator Lewis, debate adjourned.

● (1450)

FISHERIES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO PUBLISH AND DISTRIBUTE INTERIM REPORT ON MARKETING OF FISH IN CANADA

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bielish:

That in the event of an adjournment of the Senate which exceeds a week, the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries be authorized to publish and distribute its interim report on its examination of the marketing of fish in Canada and all implications thereof, as soon as it becomes available; and

That in the event of a prorogation of Parliament, the Honourable Senators authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate during any period between sessions of Parliament or between Parliaments, be authorized to publish and distribute the above-mentioned interim report.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Marshall's motion appears to have some very legitimate ancestors. We had some concern yesterday about the reference to the intersessional committee, and particularly the question of prorogation, so Madame Tomka in the Journals Branch has looked into the precedents.

One that I found was contained in the June 27, 1984, Debates of the Senate. That would have been just before what turned out to be a dissolution. I moved that:

In the event of an adjournment of the Senate which exceeds a week, the following Senate Committees be authorized to publish and distribute their reports with respect to their orders of reference as soon as the reports become available, namely—

Then there was quite a string of committees. The second paragraph of that motion read:

In the event of a prorogation or a dissolution of Parliament, the Honourable Senators authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate during any period between sessions or between Parliaments —that is the so-called intersessional committee—

be empowered to authorize the publication and distribution of any Report of the above-mentioned committees requiring no further activity by the committee.

In the debate on that motion on June 27, 1984, I explained its purpose. Then Senator Flynn, who at the time was Leader of the Opposition, raised some questions about the appropriateness of providing for the event of prorogation. His concern was not as to whether that was technically or constitutionally possible, but, rather, that since the practice had become almost invariable recently not to have lengthy prorogations but to have a prorogation of one day, he felt that there was not much significance in a paragraph dealing with prorogation.

Dissolution, he points out at page 821, would raise a problem because:

... the intersessional committee would have the power to authorize committees to publish their reports, but it is doubtful that they would in the event of a dissolution.

Which, incidentally, turned out to be the event. Then he said:

[Senator Robertson]

However, with those remarks, I will not mind the motion's being adopted, but the next time that we are sitting on the government benches maybe we will draft it in a better way.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: What I then said was:

Honourable senators, I agree with the "maybe."

Then Senator Roblin joined in and shared Senator Flynn's reservations about the motion. He had two problems, namely, the problems of distribution and another problem, and he said that he hoped that the intersessional committee would take factors into account. Eventually it was passed.

Back on March 29, 1972, in the Senate Journals at page 98, I found the grandfather of the whole procedure. It states:

Pursuant to Order, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Smith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Carter:

That, during any period between sessions of Parliament or between Parliaments, the Leader of the Government in the Senate and a Senator to be named by him from time to time and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or a Senator to be named by him from time to time, be authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate; and

That within fifteen days of the commencement of the next ensuing session there shall be laid on the Table, by or on behalf of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, a report covering in reasonable detail all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate arising during any such period.

And that was adopted. Now that which I believe is the "grandfather" does not mention prorogation. But it is not the first time, as I have pointed out, that prorogation was mentioned in such a motion.

I think the authority for using the word "prorogation" would arise from the fact that the original order setting up the intersessional committee used the terms:

... any period between sessions of Parliament or between Parliaments.

So that if the committee should have the authority between Parliaments, one would think that it ought to have it on prorogation. We have no way of knowing whether the government in this case intends to break with the previous practice and have a longer prorogation, but whether it does or—

An Hon. Senator: Perhaps there will be dissolution.

Senator Frith: Yes, please make us an offer. On the question of whether it does or does not, it seems that it is appropriate to have the word "prorogation" there, and therefore having established, I hope, to the satisfaction of honourable senators the legitimacy of Senator Marshall's motion, we should pass it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Not to my satisfaction.

Honourable senators, it is abundantly clear that this practice has developed in the past. Senator Frith has cited the precedents, and undoubtedly it has occurred, but what bothered me is whether any motion which is passed can have any legal and constitutional effect once the body which passed that motion has been dissolved. That is my question.

Senator Doody: Is the Senate dissolved?

Senator MacEachen: Or whether a motion passed has any legal or constitutional effect once the body which passed it is dismissed.

I don't know the answer to that question. I know that in order to have continuing effect, edicts must be passed in the form of statute law; but on motions I do not know. I am not objecting to this procedure—it has obviously happened in the past—but there still lurks in my mind a question as to the constitutional and legal validity of the continuing effect of a motion passed by a body which has either been dissolved or dismissed by Her Majesty.

Senator Frith: Well, honourable senators, in a court I suppose it would be reported thus: "Senator MacEachen dubitante."

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I think there is an interesting point at issue here. I have in my office a legal opinion on it which I have not looked at for several years, I am sorry to say, and I cannot recall the details of it now.

The question, of course, is whether when Parliament is dissolved the Senate ceases to exist or function. I would make the argument, and have made the argument in the past, that certainly between sessions of the same Parliament the Senate is a continuing body, and there is nothing wrong with a motion such as the one before us now to enable Senate committees to continue to function during this interval and, indeed, to publish their reports. I agree that this is not universally acceded to and that the reservations which Senator MacEachen has just placed before us may have some validity. Personally, I would like to contend and see the precedent established that so far as the Senate is concerned even a dissolution of the House of Commons does not prevent the Senate or the committees of the Senate from still functioning. I am sorry that I have not refreshed my recollections by a reading of this legal opinion within the last three or four years, but I will certainly keep it close by my desk so that if another motion of a like nature is placed before us I hope that I may be able to speak to it with somewhat more authority. In the meantime, I propose to support the motion now before us.

● (1500)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in passing the motion we might invite Senator Hicks, when he has dusted off that opinion, to bring it to us on a point of order.

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, I have listened very carefully, but I am not much better informed than before about the legality, constitutionality and practicality of this motion. This is a question I have been asking myself for a long time. If Senator Hicks would like to air his views, it might enlighten us. I have been requesting this information for a long time.

I found the comments of Senator MacEachen very impressive coming from such an experienced parliamentarian, especially as I share them myself. The views which we share always impress us more than others. There is no disagreement on that point.

If we pass such a resolution and Parliament adjourns, I wonder whether the question which was so well-defined by Senator Hicks would be settled by this resolution. It will no longer be constitutional if Parliament adjourns. Whether before or after expressing this opinion, the problem will remain in suspense.

In this regard, since I have some doubts, I support Senator MacEachen, without disapproving Senator Frith, however, as I would not wish to do so.

[English]

Senator Frith: Well played, sir.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

THE SENATE

OFFICE OF SPEAKER—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Riel, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to his tenure as Speaker of the Senate, his experiences and his recommendations to the Senate.—(Honourable Senator Riel, P.C.)

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, I would like to say that, if today is not the last sitting day of the Senate, it might be the penultimate. I imagine that Senator Tremblay agrees with the use of the word penultimate.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: It is the antepenultimate.

Senator Riel: You are right, it is the antepenultimate sitting. I see that Senator Le Moyne also approves. I therefore have the support of the two grammarians of this assembly.

I have been absent from this Chamber often this year as I have been under the weather.

I want to give you a last chapter on my tenure as Speaker of the Senate before we adjourn for the summer. I plan to conclude this inquiry, not because I have extraordinary things to tell, since they are ordinary and common, but because I think it is my duty to tell you about them so that they may be printed in Debates of the Senate for posterity.

About the motion introduced by Senator Frith, I would like to ask him whether all senators can sit on this intersessional committee as on all other committees of the Senate.

Order stands.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-SEVENTH MEETING HELD AT TUCSON, ARIZONA,
U.S.A.—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. R. James Balfour rose, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, June 17, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-seventh Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, held at Tucson, Arizona, from February 28 to March 3, 1986, and to the Report of the said Meeting.

He said: Honourable senators, on Tuesday last I tabled the final report of the official parliamentary delegation of the Canadian section of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. This year, the Twenty-seventh Annual Meeting of the Group was held in Tucson, Arizona, from February 27 to March 3.

The Canadian delegation consisted of seven senators and 17 members of Parliament. The United States delegation numbered 21 in total, eight from the Senate and 13 from the House of Representatives.

The meeting was broken down to three committees, one dealing with trade and economic issues, the second with energy, defence and multilateral issues, and the third with fisheries, environment and trans-boundary matters.

At the conclusion of the committee meetings a plenary session was held on the topic of an enhanced Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

During my time both in the other place and in the Senate I have had occasion to participate in numerous parliamentary delegations, including the Inter-parliamentary Union, the NATO Parliamentary Association and others. However, this was my first opportunity to serve as a delegate to a meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. Speaking for myself, as well as, I believe, for my colleagues in the Senate who attended the meeting, I found the whole experience to be stimulating and very worth while.

Discussion with our American counterparts was frank, friendly and informative, and I think that both we and they emerged from the meetings with an enhanced understanding of our mutual problems and concerns.

Full details of the discussions are contained in the report and I will not take up the time of honourable senators in reciting them. I urge all honourable senators to include the report in their summer reading program, in particular that part dealing with the topic of an enhanced Canada-U.S. trade agreement. Whatever one's personal view may be on this topical subject—and I recognize that a wide range of opinion exists—I believe that it is important to understand the attitude and opinions held by our counterparts in the United States, who also carry a heavy burden of responsibility in representing their constituents in this matter.

[Senator Riel.]

In conclusion, honourable senators, I considered it a great privilege to take part in those meetings as a member of the Senate of Canada.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

• (1510)

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. P. Derek Lewis, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, June 19, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-62, intituled: "An Act respecting employment equity", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, May 7, 1986, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment but with the following observations and recommendations.

The Committee is of the view that the legislation does not achieve its declared purpose. The Committee shares the view of the Native people, visible minorities, and women who appeared before us and the people with disabilities who briefed us in writing, that this Bill will not improve their situation, cannot be properly enforced, and is not an employment equity bill.

The Committee wishes to inform the Senate that it took every available step to persuade the Minister to make the Bill an employment equity bill through amendment. The Minister refused substantive amendments and amendments re-titling the Bill as the Employment Equity [Information] Act and clarifying the section defining the purpose. Without such amendments, the effect and substance are not accurately represented by the title and purpose of the Bill.

The Committee calls on the government to bring in legislation or amendments to this legislation in September 1986. Such legislation should provide proper coverage of workers in the federal domain, should be clear in its terms and definitions, should enforce the legislation reasonably and clearly, and should contain the capacity to produce results. Such legislation should replace Bill C-62 and be in place by December 1986.

Respectfully submitted,

P. DEREK LEWIS
Chairman

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. There is a word missing from the form of the report that was settled upon by all members of the committee. It is interesting that the word that is missing was underlined—"Information". In any event, since I am sure we are in agreement that that word was there, the simplest way to deal with the matter would be to insert the word.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The chairman certainly agrees with you that that should be done.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the report be amended by inserting the word "Information" in the fourth paragraph so that the sentence now reads:

The Minister refused substantive amendments and amendments re-titling the Bill as the Employment Equity

Information Act and clarifying the section defining the purpose.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The report as printed above includes the word Information, the insertion of which was agreed to.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend used the expression that the wording had been settled by all members of the committee. That may be the case, but I would not like him to infer from that that it was agreed to by all members of the committee.

Senator Frith: That would not be a correct inference, and any such implication was not intended.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, June 25, 1986, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-96, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

MARINE ATLANTIC INC. ACQUISITION AUTHORIZATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-88, to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ENTITLED "OIL MARKETING: 1986"
TABLED

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources entitled "Oil Marketing: 1986".

On motion of Senator Hastings, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS

REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY
COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-90 TABLED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the eleventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology regarding the subject matter of Bill C-90, intituled "An Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses."

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-111 TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the eighteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce respecting the subject matter of Bill C-111, intituled "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff".

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 2695)

[Translation]

CANADA PENSION PLAN FEDERAL COURT ACT

REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY
COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-116 TABLED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the twelfth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology regarding the subject matter of Bill C-116, intituled "An Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act".

[English]

BELL CANADA REORGANIZATION

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED
TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-19

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine the subject-matter of Bill C-19, intituled: "An Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

WORLD CUP SOCCER

CONGRATULATIONS TO TELEVISION SPONSOR AND NETWORKS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Is it the intention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate to congratulate and thank the Labatt Co. Ltd. for sponsoring the televising of the World Cup Soccer games now being played in Mexico, and to express the same thoughts to the CBC, MTV, Channel 47 of Toronto and TSN for carrying those games, thus making it possible for millions of Canadians to enjoy this world event in the comfort of their homes?

May I add, however, knowing of the many demands made upon the Leader of Government in the Senate, that if it is not possible for him to convey this message to the presidents of the companies I have mentioned, I will be pleased to do so myself and to express the appreciation and gratitude of the multitude of Canadians who, along with their confrères in the rest of the world, have been given the opportunity to watch what has been defined as a "Soccer Spectacular".

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am not likely to be asked a nicer question than that for some time. I tell my friend that I might assume the authority to mandate him to convey our wishes in the manner in which he has suggested.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have three delayed answers, honourable senators.

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The first answer is in reply to a question by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition of March 6, 1986, regarding shipbuilding.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May I hear that, please?

Senator Roblin: It is a long answer. Do you really want to hear it?

Senator Frith: How many pages is it?

Senator Roblin: It is one page.

Senator Frith: I would like to hear it.

Senator Roblin: Very well. This answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on March 6, 1986.

The Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program consisted of two components:

- Production Subsidies to shipbuilders in Canada at a rate of 9 per cent of production value a year; and
- Performance Improvement Grants, under which Canadian shipbuilders earned credits equivalent to 3 per cent of annual production which could be used by the industry to fund up to 50 per cent of investment in shipbuilding plant and equipment.

It was the decision of the previous administration to have shipbuilding production subsidies end as of June 30, 1985.

The present government, following the recommendations of the Ministerial Task Force on Program Review, announced in the May 1985 Budget the termination of the second component of the program—the Productivity Improvement Grant—also as of June 30, 1985.

The termination of the Productivity Improvement Grant component was undertaken from the perspective of program rationalization and simplification. It was not intended, nor does it represent a federal government decision to no longer extend investment support to Canadian shipbuilders.

Indeed, Productivity Improvement Grant credits already banked and available to the industry amount to some $100M or, as noted in the May 1985 Budget documentation, an amount sufficient to support productivity improvements for another seven years, at current rates of investment.

In addition, as also noted in the May 1985 Budget documentation, the shipbuilding industry will still have recourse to other grant programs such as the Industrial and Regional Development Program (IRDP).

Senator Frith: Having heard the answer, I can imagine that my question is more learned than I thought it was.

Senator Roblin: The answer is fully equal to the question. So, it is a stand-off.

Senator Frith: And the same to you, sir.

AGRICULTURE

WHEAT EXPORTS TO REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 19 last by the Honourable Senator Austin regarding the wheat exports to the Republic of China.

(The answer follows:)

After four good crops in a row, China is now the largest wheat producer in the world. Nevertheless, with their population at about a billion people and the growing demand for bread and wheat products, there remains great market potential.

China had another good 1985 crop and wheat imports from all sources are expected to be about 7.0 million tonnes. Canada's Long Term Agreement with China, which provided for between 3.5 and 4.2 million tonnes of wheat annually through 1984/85 has expired as have a number of Chinese agreements with other suppliers. Contracts have been concluded since that time, and ongoing sales are anticipated.

For the two past years, Canada has been China's largest supplier of wheat. China's total wheat imports have dropped from 13.8 million tonnes in 1980/81 to 7.6 million tonnes in 1984/85. Canada's share, however, has increased from 20 per cent to 35 per cent over that same period.

Since 1982/83, Canada has sold more wheat to China than the U.S. has and we have maintained our position as China's major wheat supplier.

Canada has had six grain agreements with China over the past 24 years, and yet not all sales have taken place under agreements. The records show that sales have been strong even in years when there were not agreements. In fact, our second largest wheat sale to China occurred in 1972/73 in a year when there was no formal sales arrangement between our two countries.

Over the past quarter century, Canada has sold over 60 million tonnes of grain to China. More than a third of that grain was sold without the benefit of long-term agreements.

AVAILABILITY OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS PROCESSORS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 4 last by the Honourable Senator Argue regarding the availability of financial assistance to agricultural products processors.

(The answer follows:)

Historically, provincial government priorities and the circumstances surrounding financial assistance programming for agricultural processing development have displayed differences in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Furthermore, many economic, demographic and other factors which influence processing development and location are different in the two provinces. Consequently, the establishment of programs over the years has occurred quite differently.

Since 1975, when the first Canada/Alberta Nutritive Processing Agreement was established, various other federal/provincial and unilateral programs have existed which provided for assistance to processing development agreements. Also during that period the Regional Development Industrial Assistance program, which funded various aspects of processing, was available in all of Saskatchewan but only selected parts of Alberta.

In 1983, the Industrial and Regional Development Program (IRDP) was established by DRIE to succeed the Regional Development Industrial Assistance Program. Initially this program provided financial assistance for agricultural processing throughout the province; recently, because of the tier system the major centres and developed areas of the province have been excluded.

In 1984, the Western Transportation Industrial Development Program (WTIDP) was established. In Saskatchewan this program has been used to assist several agricultural and food processing initiatives.

In the recent past agriculture related requests for assistance under the IRDP and WTIDP have been modest relative to available funding, suggesting that there may not be an urgent need for new programming of this type for agriculture processing. This may change with the development of a more diversified primary agriculture, potential irrigation development, potential changes to freight rates for primary versus processed products and the like.

The Canada/Saskatchewan Agricultural Development Subsidiary Agreement was negotiated ($60 million, 50:50 cost shared) in 1984 under the Economic and Regional Development Agreement (ERDA). During the negotiations several circumstances mitigated against the inclusion of a major program for agricultural processing and marketing although the agreement makes modest provisions to assist market development activities. At the time the provincial government placed a very high priority on irrigation development and soil conservation. Those program components were strongly supported by the government of the day, particularly the regional minister. In terms of future federal-provincial initiatives under the ERDA, the province has continued to place priority on further irrigation development and other initiatives such as rural transportation, potash, et cetera.

However, the province has had several programs, such as the Agricultural Market Development Fund, which have assisted agricultural processing. The recent pork industry initiative has been a unilateral venture via the Saskatchewan Economic Development Corporation.

Finally, in Saskatchewan, a number of federal-provincial initiatives under the ERDA have the capability to provide limited assistance to promote agricultural processing. The Community Water Infrastructure Development agreement ($32M) provides financial assistance for necessary water and sewage. The Subsidiary Agreement on Advanced Technology ($33.2M) can assist related technology development and the Northern Economic Development Sub-Agreement has provided assistance to wild rice processing.

CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Senator Barootes, moved third reading of Bill C-118, to amend the Currency Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

● (1410)

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Senator Robertson, moved third reading of Bill C-62, respecting employment equity.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

MOTION RE MESSAGE TO HOUSE OF COMMONS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Hastings:

That the message which is to be sent to the House of Commons on Bill C-62, intituled: "An Act respecting employment equity", contain the following observations and recommendation appearing in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, as follows:

The Committee is of the view that the legislation does not achieve its declared purpose. The Committee shares the view of the Native people, visible minorities, and women who appeared before us and the people with disabilities who briefed us in writing, that this Bill will not improve their situation, cannot be properly enforced, and is not an employment equity bill.

The Committee wishes to inform the Senate that it took every available step to persuade the Minister to make the Bill an employment equity bill through amendment. The Minister refused substantive amendments and amendments re-titling the Bill as the Employment Equity Information Act and clarifying the section defining the purpose. Without such amendments, the effect and substance are not accurately represented by the title and purpose of the Bill.

The Committee calls on the government to bring in legislation or amendments to this legislation in September 1986. Such legislation should provide proper coverage of workers in the federal domain, should be clear in its terms and definitions, should enforce the legislation reasonably and clearly, and should contain the capacity to produce results. Such legislation should replace Bill C-62 and be in place by December 1986.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one question of a technical nature. Obviously, we are not going to try to stop the Senate from sending a message to the House of Commons. It has that right. My concern is about whether this motion is a substantive one or a procedural one. It seems to me that it might be a substantive motion and that, as such, it would require two days' notice. I would also point out that since leave was not requested, we may not be in a position to deal with it at this point.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He did not ask for leave.

Senator Doody: No, the honourable senator did not ask for leave.

So, honourable senators, I rise on a procedural question rather than a substantive one, and I would ask for some direction in this matter.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I take it that the point raised by the Deputy Leader of the Government is whether or not notice is required under the rules.

Senator Doody: Two days' notice.

Senator Frith: The honourable senator referred to the motion as a substantive motion. I do not think that it falls under that heading. However, if it does, it only requires one day's notice as opposed to two days' notice, according to rule 45(1)(h), which reads:

One day's notice shall be given of any of the following motions: . . .

(h) for the making of a substantive motion;

It is hard to find exactly the right "pew" for this motion under the headings that we find in rule 44, which deals with two days' notice for motions, rule 45, which deals with one day's notice, and rule 46, which provides for no notice. It could be argued that it is a substantive motion but, as I say, it does not fall comfortably into that category.

Therefore, honourable senators, it seems to me that the best answer is to turn to the precedents, and there are precedents for such a motion. When the situation involved a bill originating in the House of Commons as distinguished from a bill that originated in the Senate, no notice appears to have been given in accordance with those precedents. Therefore, it seems to me, honourable senators, since we cannot find a comfortable home for this motion under rules 44, 45 or 46, the precedents govern. In fact, in these previous cases rulings were made by the Chair to indicate that it was a proper motion. There is no indication that notice was given, and it was held to be, in all cases, a regular motion, except where it involved a Senate bill as distinct from a House of Commons bill. If someone wishes to hear specifically about those precedents, I believe that Senator Stanbury has them in hand.

For those reasons, honourable senators, I think the motion is in order without notice.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): This is a point which I think could stand a little discussion. I have read the precedents that might be referred to, one of which was, I think, some time in 1979—

Senator Frith: As well as some previous ones.

Senator Roblin: Yes—in which a motion of a similar character was moved. According to Debates of the Senate, there does not appear to have been any request for leave, nor does there appear to have been any complaint that notice was not given. At any rate, if there was, I have not been able to find it. I wondered why that should be. Perhaps the answer is that notice of the intention was discussed in the committee prior to the committee's reporting and third reading being given so that, to that extent, it was not a new matter in the Senate.

My impression is that the subject matter of the present motion was not reviewed in the committee in the sense that we find contained in the proposed motion of Senator Stanbury, so there may be that difference. Whether the difference is important or not is the question. I myself would not be unhappy if anyone were to ask the Speaker to rule on this matter, because it will probably come up again. However, I would say this, that if it is decided that it is in order, I think it would be incumbent upon the government side to adjourn the debate at least today so that we would have an opportunity to study the motion, which we have not yet seen.

The reason we must give notice in this chamber is so that people will know what we are talking about. It seems to me to be elementary, regardless of what has taken place in the past, that when a motion of this kind is presented, the Senate should have the opportunity to look at it, if there is any disposition to question it. In this case I suppose there might be, and I would be happier if Senator Stanbury were to ask the Speaker to advise him on this point. If the Speaker decides that it is in order, then I for one would think that we on this side ought to adjourn the matter, at least until tomorrow, so that we might have a chance to read what is in this motion and decide how far we can go in supporting it.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, my own feeling is that the custom has already been developed. There have been three occasions in the past, so far as we have been able to find, on which this point was raised, and on none of those occasions was there any question of notice raised—

Senator Frith: Nor was the debate adjourned.

Senator Stanbury: As my friend points out, nor was the debate adjourned.

I appreciate that the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate may be correct that there might have been some expression of intention in committee to do something of this kind, but from what I have seen of the proceedings of those committees, there is no evidence that it was raised as an intention of the parties.

[Senator Frith.]

• (1420)

When Senator Langlois moved his motion in 1979, Senator Roblin said:

—is my honourable colleague going to explain what he is up to here?

In other words, it was certainly a surprise to Senator Roblin at that stage of the game, yet nothing was done about delaying the consideration of the motion, nor was there any suggestion that notice should have been given.

I think we can move to a point of logic here, honourable senators, and that is that even though the motion is supplementary to the motion for third reading, the motion for third reading would not be complete without the addition of this motion, because there is a desire indicated by the moving of this motion that the message to the House of Commons be completed by the addition of the content of this motion.

So, I do not think it requires additional notice. The report of the committee is and has been on the Table for several days now. There is no doubt in anyone's mind about what it contains. As a matter of fact, Senator Roblin said in 1979, in speaking of a similar motion—and I am sure he will not mind if I quote him—that:

I think it is timely and well taken. I think it should lead to good results.

Senator Langlois indicated at that time that it was a good idea and that it should probably be followed more frequently by the Senate.

I do not think anybody has been taken by surprise. As a matter of fact, I noticed that the idea was mooted in the Globe and Mail. So, this is not exactly a surprise. I do not think it calls for either a delay or any notice.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, can I suggest a compromise? The difficulty I have with Senator Roblin's suggestion to adjourn the debate for another day is that that has the effect of putting the motion under rule 45, which requires one day's notice. However, I think there is something to his point that we should not call for a vote on this motion immediately. If he wants to give it a little more thought, especially in view of the comments that he made in 1979 on the suitability of such a procedure, why not adjourn this motion to later this day?

Senator Doody: In view of the fact that notice has not been given—

Senator Frith: Because it does not need to be given.

Senator Doody: —has the senator prepared copies of the motion so that they can be distributed to all honourable senators? We may be very enthusiastic about the content, or it may be identical to the report of the committee. I do not know that—

Senator Frith: It is.

Senator Doody: If it is, the problem may disappear. It would be better if all honourable senators had copies of the motion so that they could read it and perhaps deal with it later today.

Senator Stanbury: The motion simply moves that the wording of the comments and recommendations in the report be added to the message to the House of Commons. There is nothing complex about it. All honourable senators are quite welcome to have a copy of the motion, but it is that simple.

Senator Doody: I do not disbelieve you; I simply do not have a copy of the motion.

Senator Frith: I thought we had circulated the report last evening.

Senator Stanbury: Yes, we had. Everyone is aware of this.

Senator Roblin: It is not as simple a matter as my honourable friend suggests. The motion is very critical of the government.

Senator Frith: As it was in the previous case.

Senator Roblin: That is right, and that is probably why I was so pleased with it on the previous occasion.

Senator Frith: It was in December 1979!

Senator Roblin: I want to make one thing clear. It is not our intent to stall. This is not a device to prevent this matter from coming to a conclusion. Anyone who thinks what we are doing on this side is designed to delay the matter to such an extent that the Senate could not express its opinion on the point is mistaken. We are quite content that it should come to a resolution before we rise. I think that is an important point.

I suggest that if we proceed with it now, or later this day, we would still want to adjourn it until tomorrow. But we would be prepared to propose no further adjournments after that. After we have had a chance to look at the matter more carefully, we can decide what to do. We can resolve the matter tomorrow.

So, if honourable senators do not want to appeal the matter to the Speaker, I would be happier if that were done, because in reading the record, and in spite of the wise advice I chose to give in 1979, I am not entirely sure that I was right then. I have frequently been in error, and that may have been the case on that occasion. If you do not want to refer to the Speaker—and I think we should—then in view of the nature of the wording, which is pretty tough, I think we on this side should be given the opportunity to consider the matter and we can return to it tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Well, honourable senators, as long as it is clear that we are not changing the previous precedents in any way, and that this is not developing a new precedent.

I agree that the report is very critical of the government, and if the government wants to have another day to digest that—because it has already been on the menu, on the plate, on a previous occasion—and as long as it is not considered a precedent, in effect placing it under rule 45, then I think that we should proceed on the understanding that it should be placed on the Orders of the Day tomorrow. Perhaps we can agree that it be the first order.

Senator Roblin: I do not like to parse my friend's arguments too closely, but he must recognize that although I am told the wording—which I have not seen—is the same as the wording of the committee, we did not know at that time that it would be subject to this kind of treatment. So, that makes it a substantially different case.

With respect to whether—

Senator Frith: Nor did they in the previous cases.

Senator Roblin: Well, in the previous cases we were given notice, at least in one of them, that the committee intended to do it when it was in committee; that is the difference.

Senator Doody: In the Transport Committee, yes.

Senator Frith: I don't know of any evidence of that.

Senator Roblin: In the Transport Committee Senator Smith gave the full story—he was chairman of the committee—as to what happened in the committee. It was clear from that record that the committee was put on notice that they intended to do that at the time. So, there is this difference; this is something that we did not expect.

Senator Frith: I don't think that is so.

Senator Roblin: I have read it carefully and I may be mistaken, but I think I am correct.

However, my point is simply this: The fact that we adjourn it does not create a precedent one way or another, because we always have the right to adjourn propositions in this house regardless of the previous proceedings. So, I think we have the right to adjourn it, and that does not create any precedent. That is merely what we usually do.

Senator Frith: Well, subject to the fact that it is not that we always have the right to adjourn, but we always have the right to ask that it be adjourned and that courtesy is almost always given.

Senator Roblin: Well, I am glad to hear that.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Roblin, are you moving the motion to adjourn?

Senator Roblin: No. Has the motion been presented?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Roblin: If the mover does not wish to speak to it, then one of us on this side will adjourn it.

Senator Frith: No, he has spoken to it.

Senator Roblin: He spoke on it. All right.

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, debate adjourned.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Heath Macquarrie moved the second reading of Bill C-96, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, I may say that for once in my long and antique career I will be using more substantial notes than it is my custom to use when addressing legislatures. I thought that a finance bill should not provide an occasion for me to take flights of fancy with my unorthodox views on finance, both public and private.

Specifically, honourable senators, this bill amends Part VI of the act, which determines federal financial contributions to provinces under the terms of the established programs financing or EPF arrangements. Under these arrangements the federal government provides financial support to provinces in the important areas of health and post-secondary education. Clauses 17 through 28 prescribe how EPF entitlements are now calculated.

● (1430)

The EPF arrangements were first introduced in 1977-78. A base year, 1976-77, was established and the federal per capita contribution for specified provincial programs was identified for that year. This per capita contribution is adjusted from year to year by an escalator.

The escalator links per capita contributions to change in the nominal gross national product, known to us aficionados as the GNP. The resulting per capita amount is then multiplied by provincial population to arrive at each province's entitlement for that year. Growth in EPF transfers, reflecting both economic and population increases, has been substantial, rising from $6.7 billion in 1977-78 to $15.7 billion last year.

EPF entitlements are calculated by the Department of Finance, and, quite appropriately, this bill stands in the name of the Minister of Finance. Because transfers to provinces represent such a large proportion of federal expenditure, they are necessarily an integral element of the government's fiscal plan to restore stability to federal finances. The purpose of this bill is to moderate the rate of growth in EPF to yield annual savings of $2 billion by 1990-91. The relevant clause is clause 2 of Bill C-96, which sets the escalator, beginning in 1986-87 and for future years, at two percentage points less than the existing escalator.

Clauses 1 and 3 may be described as consequential amendments. Clause 4 introduces a special adjustment payment provision. In the event that the rate of growth in EPF is exceeded by the annual inflation rate, these provisions provide for special equal per capita payments to all provinces. However, the EPF transfer plus special payments would not be greater than the amount which would have been transferred had the old formula remained in effect.

I would like to emphasize, honourable senators, the magnitude of EPF transfers and the substantial growth foreseen for the coming years. On the basis of Bill C-96 it is estimated that EPF transfers will grow by about $1 billion each year, or from about $16.7 billion in 1986-87 to close to $20.7 billion in 1990-91. These transfers will total more than $90 billion over the course of the next five years, or $25 billion more than over the past five-year period. If I may say so, as a poor guy from the impecunious province of Prince Edward Island, these strike me as substantial and massive—albeit much needed—sums.

[Senator Macquarrie]

Provincial health care and post-secondary education will be receiving more federal support than almost any other area. This is in keeping with the high priority the federal government attaches to health care and post-secondary education.

Transfers to the provinces are not the only support the federal government provides for health care and post-secondary education. Because provinces have the primary responsibility for providing these services, the bulk of federal assistance is, naturally, provided through EPF transfers. However, there are also other federal transfers and direct federal contributions in these areas.

In the health area an additional $1.5 billion is provided in the various health service programs carried out by the Department of National Health and Welfare and other departments. On the post-secondary education side there is a further $1.1 billion in funding of provincial bilingualism in education programs, support for university research through the granting councils, the Canada student loan program and other forms of support.

The tax system also provides support in the form of various tax deductions and exemptions for medical and education expenses and for certain goods used in the health and education fields.

In addition to these contributions the federal government provides further assistance to the lower income provinces in the form of equalization payments. This now amounts to over $5 billion annually, which can be used to support important public services like health care and post-secondary education.

Honourable senators, there is another measure of the federal government's commitment to these vital services, and that is through comparison of the rate of growth in EPF with other categories of federal expenditure. It can be demonstrated that the rate of growth of EPF transfers will continue to compare very favourably with other categories of federal expenditure. EPF transfers are expected to increase at an average annual rate of about 5 per cent. I will set forth a few comparisons: First, total federal program spending last year experienced the first absolute decline in over 20 years. Second, over the next five years overall federal program spending is expected to rise at an average annual rate of just over 3 per cent. Third, there is expected to be virtually no growth in federal non-statutory program spending this year and next. Finally, total federal expenditures—including debt charges—are projected to grow at an average annual rate of about 4 per cent for the remainder of the decade.

We all know that the federal deficit represents a serious obstacle to continued economic growth. Reducing this obstacle to growth is of benefit to both levels of government. Provinces now enjoy the benefits of Canada's strong economic performance. Provinces will continue to benefit from lower interest rates, increased employment, rising housing starts and a growing economy, to which statistics attest every day.

As I indicated, the federal government first reduced spending on other federal programs. Surely, it is now reasonable that provinces be asked to participate, however modestly, in the broad national effort to restore stability to federal finances. Even after the passage of this bill, EPF transfers will continue to exceed the growth in total federal program spending.

Honourable senators, this measure has been carefully considered over a prolonged period. The possibility of moderating the rate of growth in transfers to provinces was first proposed in November 1984. The decision to moderate the rate of growth in EPF was subsequently announced in May 1985. EPF was discussed with finance ministers on at least six separate occasions, and by first ministers in November 1985.

Following the conclusion of these federal-provincial consultations, the bill was drafted and given first reading in the other place in February of this year. A House legislative committee studied the bill extensively and received submissions from a variety of groups representing labour, medical practitioners, consumers, educators, students and other interests. The bill was reported without amendment and received third reading last week.

Last month the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance began a pre-study of the legislation and in the course of its hearings received testimony from the Minister of State (Finance) and expert officials of the Department of Finance. Earlier this same committee had heard from the Secretary of State on the related question of federal support for post-secondary education.

● (1440)

I therefore urge all honourable senators to approve this measure expeditiously. As we all know, the federal financial situation remains serious, and this measure is as important today as it was when it was first proposed. Nothing would be served by delay or indecision.

The EPF transfer has grown substantially in value since 1977 and 1978, and that will continue under the bill before us, Bill C-96.

In summation, I believe we can say fairly and confidently, honourable senators, that the bill is equitable in that all provinces can expect to receive about the same per capita rate of increase in EPF. The bill is fair to less wealthy provinces, which traditionally receive equalization and combine part of this large additional federal contribution with EPF for their health and post-secondary education programs.

Finally, honourable senators, given the serious federal fiscal situation, the bill is reasonable, because it will result in a rate of increase in EPF which exceeds the growth in overall federal program spending.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, by way of a short comment, may I say that politics makes strange bedfellows in terms of people and issues, because when I was sitting on the other side I well remember during the debate on the six-and-five program hearing Senator Macquarrie talk in quite a different tone about the effect that that program had on the very subject with which this bill deals. However, I admire his flexibility and his ability to cross the floor and cross positions on the issues accordingly.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Is not my honourable friend now going to display the same degree of flexibility? I expect he will. He was in favour of it before and he is going to be against it now.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have always been perfectly flexible and have taken a position—

Senator Doody: Talking like a good Liberal!

Senator Frith: That's right. I have always tried to do so. Certainly, I would be glad if any honourable senator would call me to order if at any time I become unconscious of the fact that anything I may have supported over there I am usually against over here—and it will be vice versa when we get back over there.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, would Senator Macquarrie permit me to ask a question? In his learned address he said that the EPF payments to the provinces would continue to rise at a fast rate. When the honourable senator refers to the EPF transfers, is he including the money which the federal government says it transfers to the provincial governments by reason of the tax points, or is he simply talking about the cash payments which, under this bill, will be reduced by two percentage points a year?

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am sorry that my colleague was not faster off the mark, as he usually is, because in a great burst of generosity I have just said "yes" to the page who asked me for my notes—and honourable senators know very well that I have no intention of defending the brief if I do not have it under my hand, as the saying goes. But I will take a stab and say that the former rather than the latter would be what I had in mind. I am surprised that Senator Frith would be prompted by me to give a little homily about people changing. All I have done in those recent years is change from one side of the Senate to the other, and not at all on the issue. I am a great pro-education man.

Senator Roblin: Any side.

Senator Stewart: I want to make sure that I understand the senator correctly. He is telling the Senate that it is true, in fact, that the rate of increase in the visible part of the federal government's transfer, the cash transfer, to the provincial governments for post-secondary education and health services is, in fact, being reduced.

Senator Macquarrie: I think it would be unfair of my honourable colleague to want to pin me down on the specificity of this after I have surrendered my notes. I will review them to see if I can sort out from what I said what it was that prompted his question.

On motion of Senator Hicks, debate adjourned.

MARINE ATLANTIC INC. ACQUISITION AUTHORIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill C-88, to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, a very brief description of the purpose or principle of this bill is that it will change the name from CN Marine to Marine Atlantic Inc., and it will give it official status as a full crown corporation.

That might be sufficient explanation for those who come from the Atlantic region who are familiar with the operation of the ferry and freight services of CN Marine, but I believe that a more detailed explanation is required for those who are not familiar with such operations.

CN Marine was established in 1979 as a wholly owned subsidiary of the Canadian National Railways. Prior to that it was the Canadian National Railways which operated the various ferries on the Atlantic coast for the Government of Canada.

Honourable senators, the Government of Canada has been involved in the operation of ferries for a long time. For example, the ferry service between Borden on Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine in New Brunswick became a constitutional obligation of Canada under the terms of the Order in Council of June 28, 1873, by which Prince Edward Island entered Confederation. I believe it is of some historical interest to note that in part that Order in Council stated that the Dominion government "shall assume and defray all of the charges for an efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers to be established between the Island and the Mainland of the Dominion, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the railway system of the Dominion."

I do not know just when the service began or when the CNR became responsible for it, but, in any event, it was operated by the CNR and CN Marine for many years.

When, in 1949, Newfoundland joined Canada, another constitutional obligation was undertaken by Canada. Sections 31 and 32 of the terms of union of Newfoundland and Canada are not only of historical interest, but of very practical interest. In part, section 31 says:

At the date of Union, or as soon thereafter as practicable, Canada will take over the following services and will as from the date of Union relieve the Province of Newfoundland of the public costs incurred in respect of each service takeover, namely

(a) The Newfoundland Railway, including steamship and other marine services.

Section 32 says in part:

(1) Canada will maintain in accordance with the traffic offering a freight and passenger steamship service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, which, on completion of a motor highway between Corner Brook and Port aux Basques, will include suitable provision for the carriage of motor vehicles.

Subsection (2) reads:

For the purpose of railway rate regulation the Island of Newfoundland will be included in the Maritime region of Canada and traffic moving between North Sydney and Port aux Basques will be [regarded] as all rail traffic.

• (1450)

Honourable senators, I mention these constitutional obligations assumed by Canada to show that the primary purpose of these ferry services is to provide a service. Consequently, the obligation to provide that service must be honoured regardless of cost. It is nowhere stated that the service must pay for itself in whole or in part. Indeed, the subsidies required to maintain the ferry service between Borden and Tormentine and Port aux Basques and North Sydney is a small price to be paid for having these regions become part of Canada—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Macdonald:—and in my opinion, honourable senators, it is a very small price to pay for such valuable additions to Canada.

Over the years the ferry services have become very large industries. I am familiar with the service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques. At one time there were over 800 stevedores employed at the North Sydney terminal. That number gradually diminished with mechanization, container traffic, roll-on roll-off traffic and the lessening of railway freight traffic. The whole traffic pattern has changed and now, as the new ship, the "Caribou", becomes fully operational, I understand the stevedore force will be 150 men with an extra 30 on call. Of course, there is in addition the office staff, the reservations staff, the mechanical staff and the like.

Yes, honourable senators, it has become a large industry. CN Marine operates various services, and perhaps it would be of interest if I mentioned them briefly. They have what are called the Gulf Services. They run between North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, and also between North Sydney and Argentia, Newfoundland, which is a summer service from mid-June to mid-September. Then there is the Newfoundland and Labrador coastal service which is broken into the Northern service and the South Coast service. The Northern service serves 52 points during the ice-free period along the northeast coast of Labrador. The South Coast service serves 17 points the year round between Port aux Basques and Terrenceville. There is the Prince Edward Island service. The year round service runs between Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, and Borden, Prince Edward Island. There is a ferry service in the Bay of Fundy area which runs between Digby, Nova Scotia, and St. John, New Brunswick. There is the Yarmouth, Nova Scotia-Bar Harbor Maine service and the Grand Manan service which runs between Block Harbour, New Brunswick, and Grand Manan Island.

I expect it was on account of the growth of the service that it was decided to set up CN Marine in 1979 as a wholly owned subsidiary of CNR. And now it is felt that CN Marine should become a separate crown corporation under the name of Marine Atlantic Inc. The change in name is only to identify the company with the region and to disassociate it from the CNR. It is anticipated that as a crown corporation the same service can be provided at a lower cost, as apparently CN Marine had to make various payments to the CNR. Of course, I am always a little doubtful about anticipated savings, as somehow they frequently fail to materialize for one reason or another. We must remember this, that while, for example, the stevedore force has diminished, these new ferries cost a tremendous amount of money. The "Caribou" cost $120 million, and the tender for a sister ship has already been awarded at, I believe, a cost of $130 million. However, I can see that from an administrative point of view and from a practical point of view, it would be advantageous to have the ferry services operated as a separate crown corporation. For example, it can deal directly with the Minister of Transport without going through the intervention of the Canadian National Railway.

Honourable senators, the bill provides, as I said, for making CN Marine a crown corporation under a new name, and most of the clauses of the bill deal with the technical details of doing so. If honourable senators want more detail on the matter, they could send the bill to committee, but if they are satisfied with the study on the matter which has been given by the House of Commons, then I recommend it for favourable consideration.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak, but I listened with great interest to what Senator Macdonald had to say. One of the reasons I want to say a word is that the ferry linkage with Prince Edward Island originated in my former riding of Westmorland-Kent at Cape Tormentine, so I have a sentimental attachment to this service. As a young child, the greatest adventure I could have was a trip, once a year if I behaved well, on the ferry from Cape Tormentine to Borden. We would simply disembark in Borden and then come back on the return trip. For me as a boy growing up in New Brunswick, this was quite an adventure, particularly because the pie on board ship was so good. In those days they had a good cook.

On a more serious note, I worry about two things in this matter. First, if the disengagement of responsibility from the CNR is to be interpreted in any way as down-grading or down-playing the role and responsibility of CNR in the Atlantic region, I think it should be resisted. I am worried about the events of the past ten days with regard to the divesting of CN shops to Canadian General Electric, which can only mean considerable uncertainty for the work force in that region. I happen to know that a few years ago CN Marine, with very little consultation—certainly none with the members of Parliament for the region—decided to move its headquarters from Moncton to another city. The reason given was that since it was a marine operation, it should be on the waterfront. When the regional ministers offered the company three alternative choices, it was found that they actually did not want to be on the waterfront all that much.

I would like to find in the bill or in the regulations that will come before us, or that should come before us, something saying that the authority to move the headquarters of this new crown corporation will not be left only to the board of directors, but will be ensured by the political masters who are creating this crown corporation. Too many times we have taken the position in this country that somehow crown corporations, which are intended to serve the public good—otherwise why have them?—should in some way have this mysterious arm's-length relationship with political authorities. My experience has been that the arm's-length relationship quickly becomes an out-of-reach relationship and that these crown corporations develop a satellite life of their own without any real political direction, especially when they provide services such as those which Senator Macdonald spoke about.

I was quite happy to hear the honourable senator change somewhat the position in the theology of the new government that has been preached, that these are services that should not necessarily be paid for on a full recovery basis, because they are services guaranteed by the Constitution, and that where other Canadians enjoy the advantages of highway linkages, those who for better or for worse or who are lucky enough—depending on one's point of view—to be living on an island should be guaranteed full linkage with the other provinces. I think the philosophy that the user must carry whatever the cost happens to be is one which would render disservice to the Atlantic provinces, and particularly to those Canadians who live in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island where there is a constitutional responsibility in Confederation terms.

● (1500)

Therefore, honourable senators, I wish that we had an indication that the authority over this new crown corporation which is replacing CN Marine was to be clearly in the hands of the minister and not in the hands of the management, which tends to become more and more estranged from those whom it should serve.

On motion of Senator Rowe, debate adjourned.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT CRIMINAL CODE PENITENTIARY ACT PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Simard, for the second reading of the Bill C-106, intitled: "An Act to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act".—(Honourable Senator Lewis).

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to make a few brief observations on this matter, which has been so very well dealt with by the Honourable Senator Robertson.

Senator Robertson has described the change in principles which were effected in the Canadian juvenile justice system by the repeal of the Juvenile Delinquents Act of 1908 and the enactment of the Young Offenders Act in 1982. Such change was effected after much consultation with the provinces and all groups interested in such matters.

Although the act was passed by Parliament in 1982, it was not proclaimed until early 1984, mainly because a few provinces had failed to enact complementary provincial legislation.

Following its enactment and implementation, it was found in practice that there were some problems which needed to be corrected, if full effect was to be given to the principles upon which the act was based.

It is gratifying that the government has finally thought fit to bring forward this bill to, in some way, solve some of these problems. I cannot agree, however, that the sense of urgency was, in fact, as apparent as Senator Robertson implies since, although many interested parties were pressing for changes, this bill was only given first reading in the other place on April 30 past, and second reading was not brought on until May 27. There was some complaint that not enough time was being allowed for due consideration. It is a wonder that it received third reading on June 17.

In any event, the bill is before us now and since it is an attempt to, and will, in fact, overcome some of the problems that have become evident from experience over the last two years in the implementation of the Young Offenders Act, in my opinion it needs to be given quick passage. In this respect it is to be noted that the bill provides in clause 53 that it is to come into force on a day to be proclaimed. It is to be hoped that after enactment, it will be proclaimed without delay.

It must be remembered that although there is provision for some substantial changes in the act which Senator Robertson has so clearly described, the bill does not change the basic principles upon which the act is based. Be that as it may, there were some doubts expressed about some aspects of the bill as originally tabled in the other place. It is to be noted, however, that by the time it received third reading, most of those doubts had been resolved and some amendments were made to the bill.

I do not intend to elaborate on the very clear explanation of the bill which Senator Robertson has given us, but I feel I should mention a few matters which may give rise to concern in some quarters.

Under the Young Offenders Act there was an absolute prohibition against the publication by any means of a report of proceedings which identifies, or which contains information that serves to identify, an alleged offender, a witness or a victim of an alleged offence by a young person.

The bill provides three exceptions to this prohibition. They are: A disclosure in the course of the administration of justice that is not intended to make the information known to the public; publication permitted by a court order after application, for the purpose of assisting in the apprehension of a dangerous youth; and, publication permitted by court order on the application of the young person in issue whether the offender, witness or victim.

[Senator Lewis.]

It has been suggested that this absolute prohibition should be subject more to the discretion of the court. This safeguard seems, however, to be the case where such publication is subject to court order after application. On the other hand, such publication, after application to the court, of the identity of a party to proceedings might adversely affect, or have the effect of identifying, some other party—either the offender, witness or the victim of the offence, no one of whom had been party to the court application. This will remain to be seen. If it does have this effect, further amendment may be necessary.

The provisions of the bill which do away with the requirement of the act that evidence of children under 12 years of age must be corroborated may be viewed as an erosion of safeguards against acceptance of evidence from vindictive or disturbed children.

However, there is still a safeguard, as this will bring into play the provisions of the Canada Evidence Act dealing with the evidence of children under 14 years of age and leave it to the court to decide upon the credence or weight to be given to children's uncorroborated evidence.

Surely we can rely on the courts in this respect. It must also be realized that this provision may permit more proceedings to be taken successfully than is now possible in cases of offences committed by young persons against other young people.

Honourable senators, this is an important bill which needs enactment and, as you are aware, it has already been given pre-study by our Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. That committee, in its twenty-third report tabled in this house on Thursday last, recommended the bill. In view of that report, I suggest that the bill be approved without the necessity of its being again referred to committee.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): On behalf of Senator Robertson, who is not present today to conclude the debate on second reading, I commend this bill to all honourable senators.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

YOUTH

REPORT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, for the adoption of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth, entitled: "Youth: A Plan of Action", tabled in the Senate on 19th February, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, since Senator Marshall will not speak today and perhaps may not speak at all on this report, and since I may be the last speaker on the government side to speak to it, I thought it advisable to make some rather extended remarks on this important topic.

The proposition that the Senate should adopt this report as it is places the careful reader in a rather uneasy quandary.

Senator Frith: I am sorry, could you repeat what you have said? "places the—?"

Senator Roblin: I did not know you were following me so closely.

Senator Frith: I always do.

Senator Roblin: I am flattered.

Senator Frith: I always do. I want to hear everything you say.

Senator Roblin: Would you like me to start from the beginning?

Senator Frith: You said "places the—something—in an awkward position"?

Senator Roblin: "...places the careful reader"—in which class I include myself.

Senator Frith: I thought you might have said "careful leader".

Senator Roblin: No, no.

Senator Frith: That description might also include you.

Senator Roblin: That is a matter of opinion. In any event, to put it in colloquial language, I am having trouble with this report. Like the second reading of some of the bills that we get, we must decide whether we can give approval to a principle while we may have rather serious reservations about some, if not many, of the specifics that may be included in the bill.

● (1510)

That is my position on this report. But I take the report seriously for what I think are two very good reasons: First of all, the report has given the problems facing young Canadians high profile and wider public notice than I suspect would otherwise have been the case, and that certainly serves the interests of the Canadian society; second, it has provided an important medium, a platform, if you like, from which young Canadians can tell it as it is in accordance with their views. They can express their feelings, and I underline the word "feelings", because a sense of emotion comes through strongly from a reading of the testimony that was presented to the committee. It gives young Canadians a platform from which to express their feelings about how society ought to recognize their situation, how society might mobilize itself and how it might direct its efforts so that we could more effectively and in a more effective way give young Canadians who need it a better start in life. Those are the two reasons for my regarding the report as being an important document.

But leaving aside those redeeming factors, there are some particulars of the report which I must frankly say leave me questioning and unsatisfied. It casts a very wide net; it covers so wide a spectrum that I think one might say the focus is inclined to be blurred, and its recommendations often dissolve into generalities and platitudes rather than specific points to be taken into account. That is not to say that all 26 recommendations can be characterized in that manner, but there are a sufficient number to give me cause to note that.

Some of the specific recommendations seem to be blind or oblivious to the fact that there are programs already in place, and to such an extent that the practical problems of government are excluded from the report's considerations; the counsel of perfection sometimes obscures the art of the possible.

I think the report could have been much more helpful and much bolder if it were a little more hard-headed; if it had some notion of the priorities that it wanted to espouse, because in a sweeping review of an enormous problem of this nature the question of priorities has to be resolved by somebody, and who better than the members of the committee?

If the committee had accepted some need to assess the implications of what it was calling for, the costs that are inevitably involved—which perhaps could be realistically compared to the limited resources which are available in the state and in society—the committee might have been able to recommend how the money could be spent in the best possible way.

Looking at the report from another angle, we are asked to consider, amongst other things, issues of lifestyle, problems of morality and codes of conduct, which are basically personal in nature. Politicians can rightly rail against these defects in our social organizations, as they should, but it is the philosophers and the preachers who are more likely to lead the way to solutions. We see the dilemma which faces us in this domain when we consider the pornography debate, for example, and come to the conclusion that laws are hard to frame, if they are to work in reforming the lifestyles of people. That certainly is a very important aspect of the concerns that this committee has.

But even in the area of human conduct, I submit to you that governments and laws can help to establish better terms and conditions for life and for the future, and some of the recommendations of this committee bear on that aspect of the matter, although it is true to say that some do not. But, surely, the recommendations would have had more force if they were related to what governments are already doing, if they were related to the world as it is, if they took note of the measures that are at hand now to deal with the very aspects the committee found so painful. We do not live in a vacuum, and governments—not only this one, but all governments—have been trying to do things for youth, and this government is trying to do something right now.

How are these programs working? How could they be made better? What are the terms of a more effective activity? These surely are questions which arise when one considers the problem at hand, but the committee seems to have paid little attention to such questions. The committee has no dividing line between private actions, municipal government responsibilities, the constitutional jurisdiction of provinces and what the federal government is doing. The areas of action are certainly poorly delineated and are often muddled and lumped together. You may not like it, but our society does have distinct and separate levels of activity, particularly in the field of government. I do not think the committee can profitably ignore the Constitution.

I do not say that as being in any way a harsh rebuke, but merely to say how much more valuable it would have been if we had sorted out some of the areas that belong to specific jurisdictions and pinned the responsibilities a little closer when analyzing what governments were doing—whether they be municipal, provincial or federal—to have a grasp of what is going on and a better feeling for what really needs to be done, if we are to make this world a better one than it is now.

I would have liked the committee—and this is my own personal view, of course—to have better identified whom they wanted to do what. Over and over again the report seems to be ignorant—or if it is aware, it ignored them—of actions and policies that are under way by governments even in the very areas in which they find the greatest need for action and in which the recommendations are pointed. As far as I can tell from reading the report, the committee made little effort to find out what is being done. The committee did not seem to be interested.

Now, that is a point of view which is sustainable. The committee members may have decided that their task was to see the great problem and elucidate the great areas in which work needed to be done and to give us some fairly sweeping recommendations as to what to do without reference to what is going on in the world. That is a legitimate point of view. However, it would have been more profitable if it had taken a more focused and direct view of what is being done, what is wrong with it and how it could have been made better.

The committee members, for example, had under their noses the significant reduction in the number of unemployed youth. The committee members were working with figures which were certainly not up to date; maybe that is fair, I do not know. Certainly, no matter what figure one uses for youth unemployment, it is too high. It is distressingly high, but it is not the 700,000 that the report speaks of. There has been a substantial improvement in recent years. I say “years”, because there has been a substantial improvement in the situation of youth unemployment over the past two years. There are now tens of thousands more young people working than there were two years ago. There has been a substantial reduction in youth unemployment.

I would have thought the committee might have said to themselves: Why? What has happened? Is it merely because of better economic times? Has the government produced better economic policies which have helped to reduce the pressures on youth? Do the government's policies for youth in particular have any relation to what has been going on? How should we look at and judge these activities that are to be found in our midst? The committee did not seem to feel that that was part of its mandate.

There has been an important switch in dealing with the unemployment problems of young people in the policy measures put forward by the current administration. I submit—and there may be a debate about this—that there has been a swing from the short-term, make-work policies—which have been a prominent part of our youth-help projects in the past—towards a policy which is more focused on creating permanent jobs which, I suggest, the private sector is best positioned to provide. But it disturbs me that this report has been written without any consideration for the policy changes which are going on at the present time. What about the new programs for youth? What about the Canadian job strategy? There have been 15,600 young people employed in the past year or so in the Job Entry Program; in job development the figure is 40,000; and another several thousand in skill shortages, community work and skill improvements—76,000 altogether in this selection of programs, which is by no means the whole menu of programs that the government has on its palette, with expenditures of some $235 million. What about the 225 Youth Action Councils which have been established across Canada? That fits right in with one of the recommendations of the committee, as I see it.

● (1520)

I think we would have appreciated it if the committee had given thoughtful consideration to these important new directions in government policy. I want especially in this connection to make a comment about native youth. If there is an area in our nation which I think is particularly grave—and there are several—the condition of native youth in our country has to stand out as being one of the most difficult, yet one of the most demanding of the problems which we face in the polity and the public organization of our country.

There are 65 per cent of natives in Canada under the age of 25, and conditions on the reserves and conditions of employment are, indeed, tragic. Yet, the committee does not seem to have asked anybody in the federal government what they were doing about it. One gets the impression that it is not very much, but I think if we had had an examination of the policies of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which as far as I can tell was not asked to appear before this committee and was not questioned at all, we would have found that a good many things were being done.

We would have found, for example—and this relates to one of the recommendations of the committee that the Indian people should take charge of their own programs—that in the program expenditures in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development right now, 57 per cent are managed by the Indian people themselves directly; and this is growing rapidly. The Department of National Health and Welfare has been hell bent on transferring control of health services to the bands on the reserves; 21 per cent of the native youth nowadays are attending band operated schools, not government operated schools. The figure is rising, and so it should. There is a whole group of other programs. I have a list at hand here, but I will not go through the whole list with you.

In the field of preserving Indian culture, in the field of Indian language promotion, in the field of Indian self-government, we are not standing still. There are extensive and, I think, effective programs; perhaps not enough, but a start has been made on all those things. How valuable it would have been if the committee had heard testimony on those to see which one of them works and which ones do not. If there is anything we have learned in dealing with native people, it is that it is not very easy for those who are not natives to devise programs that work; it is the native people who can best do that. The theory that this responsibility should be given to them is one which the government wholeheartedly supports, but in the meanwhile those programs which we are implementing with them could well have stood a little examination, and we could have made up our minds whether we like them or not.

It would have served the purposes of the committee if they had called the Department of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of State, who is also concerned with this problem, to explain what initiatives they had in hand, and receive the benefits of the committee's view on that.

There is one particular recommendation respecting native people which I think the Senate should take note of, and that is the proposal that there should be a standing Senate committee on native issues. That is an attractive idea in many ways.

They add to that something which is novel, as far as my knowledge of the Senate goes. It calls for First Nation members being ex officio members of the proposed standing Senate committee on native affairs.

This concept of people who are at risk, let us say, who are concerned with the issue, being ex officio members of the committee is an interesting idea, and I do not dismiss it out of hand. But it raises a larger question. It raises the question as to whether or not persons who are members of interest groups should become part of the Senate committee dealing with that interest, because if it is good for one, other people will think it will be good for them. You might find that—well, to go from the sublime to the ridiculous—the bankers might want to be on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce—and I do not think that anyone would feel very happy about that. There are other committees that deal with womens' affairs and, surely, if ex officio native people are a good idea on one committee dealing with native affairs, one could hardly resist the claims of others, whoever they might be, for similar treatment. This concept raises a larger issue, one which I think has not been fully considered in the Senate, and if we were to adopt it, it surely would be the subject of a special debate. It would seem to me that there are complications here which are not fully realized in the report that the committee has put before us. What sort of a precedent would it create? What are the practical problems and the problems of principle that are involved?

I think a recommendation of this broad character and with its wide implications can hardly be accepted by the Senate on the basis of the argument, or the lack of it, that is set forth in the committee's report. It may be a good idea, but I do not think that the committee really makes its point.

I debated some time as to whether I would make any remarks about Katimavik, because I know that this is a highly emotional issue, and it has certainly been espoused with a legitimate passion by Senator Hébert. I wish to be clear in my assertion that he approaches this problem with a depth of sincerity which is unchallengeable. But that does not mean that one could not talk about it, and it seems to me that there are a couple of things that I might say about Katimavik which I do not find reflected in the report of the committee.

Of course, we all recognize that this is one of several roughly similar projects all of which are now defunct. We know that other programs—and I have three of them in front of me here, one is called Opportunities for Youth, the other LIP, the other the Company of Young Canadians, which were founded by Liberal ministers and axed by Liberal ministers—have, perhaps, a family resemblance to Katimavik, though they are far from identical.

I think that the fate that Katimavik received and that the committee noted means that it can be the subject of a serious review. We have to ask ourselves whether the philosophical and the practical merits of that program outweighed its significant defects, was it cost effective in times of budget stringency and, indeed, would we borrow to keep it going?

But these points were not developed by the committee. They heard from people who were active in Katimavik. They liked it; they liked it fine. So did the committee; so it put in a pretty strong plug. It seems to me that it would have been possible to have developed a little more objective consideration, especially as the program was due to be cancelled next year anyway, so if you wanted it continued, this was an ideal chance to establish, in an ironclad way, its bona fides. That was not done to my satisfaction.

There was plenty of material available. The Katimavik people did self-analyses; they did two of them that I know of, one in 1980 and one in 1981. I hope I am fairly summarizing that by saying it got a low passing mark in 1981. Then, it conducted another study in 1984, in year eight of the program, which was not entirely encouraging. According to this self-analysis by the young men and women who took part in it, 36 per cent were dissatisfied with the work projects; 39 per cent of the sponsors said that the project would have gone ahead anyway without Katimavik; 42 per cent said there was insufficient work for them to do; 63 per cent said that there was no increase in other Canadian cultural or international projects; and there were a lot more comments.

• (1530)

Honourable senators, I have said nothing about the headline grabbing allegations that were made about the conduct of these young people in their personal affairs, simply because I think that is irrelevant. I have no intention of bringing that in as part of the argument. It seems to me, however, that if we had had a good look at the in-house self-analysis, if we had had a good look at the outside studies that were made—and there were three of them, which had mixed results—we might have decided what we really thought about Katimavik. We might have decided that it was a good thing which ought to have some changes made to it, or we might have decided that it was not good enough to continue. But I do not think that it got the in-depth examination that it should have got.

What really brought the matter to my attention was the reaction of the leader of the Manitoba Métis federation, who wrote a letter to the paper about Indians and Katimavik. The headline is: "The Children of Despair". He makes the point that whatever else it did, Katimavik did not help them and perhaps it was never intended to. He refers to it in rather extravagant language!

Katimavik, an Inuit name, is a nodding recognition of this grim fact, but it remains an empty and superficial gesture.

I do not go that far, but this man, who represents people in need—the segment of our society in greatest need, I suggest—was not encouraged.

It is not a question of lack of compassion for the senator—talking about Senator Hébert—it is a question of responsibilities and priorities.

He went on to say some other things that made me feel that Katimavik really needed to be recast in terms of its form, its effectiveness and its openness, if it was going to do anything for what I regard to be the most deserving section of our population, that is, the 65 per cent of the Indian people of Canada who are under 25 years of age.

Honourable senators, there was an opportunity missed here. It is easy for me to sit back at this stage of the game, after the committee has laboured long and hard, travelled a lot, heard from many people, and offer this kind of comment with respect to it. I know that that is the case. And I know that it is terribly easy to be clever after the fact. I want senators to discount that; I do not intend it in that way. What I mean to say is that there were some opportunities which we failed to grasp, and I say "we" because I refer to the Senate.

As for the report, it contains 26 recommendations which cover an extremely mixed bag of problems. Some of them ignore what governments are already doing, while others are certainly valuable contributions to difficult problems, and I am glad of that. I say that all of those recommendations, whether they are good, bad or indifferent, should be carefully considered by the government. The government should earmark those which touch upon federal responsibilities, and it should identify those which overlap with programs which are under way. But we should be ready and willing to approach constructively the useful initiatives we find in this report. We should evaluate them to see what best could be done about them.

The report, in a sense, is a disappointment, because not all of its recommendations are acceptable—some of them, in my view, are not even sensible—so it does not have my unqualified approval, nor is the government likely to accept it holus-bolus. But I do not want it to be rejected. I want to support it, because I am going to take the opportunity, insofar as I can, to ferret out those golden nuggets—and there are a number in this report—that become the basis for improvement on this question of dealing with the young people of our country. This report has performed a service, because it has given to the problems of youth a higher profile, and that has to be good. It is good, because it has given youth the chance to speak, the chance to occupy a platform which is national in its scope and compass. I say that whatever the defects we may see—and all of us will have our own opinions on this—we must do our best to see that some good comes of all of the labour and dedication that has gone into this report on the youth of Canada.

[Senator Roblin.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I, too, intend to vote in support of this motion. However, I want to record one reservation in doing so. On page 105 of the report there is a recommendation that reads as follows:

Our Committee recommends that a Standing Senate Committee on Native Issues be established with ex-officio members from the First Nations. As a first item of business, this Committee should clarify the situation of young Native people and define the opportunities which now exist and can be created for young Canadians in both the First Nations and non-Native communities to further a peaceful process of change.

While I am not against the spirit and principle of that recommendation, I do not want to be confronted at a later date with the assertion that by voting for the adoption of this report, I have agreed to the establishment of such a standing Senate committee. While I think that may be a desirable thing, I would like to consider the timing involved. Further, I would not want it understood that I agree with the principle of non-senators serving as ex-officio members of a Senate committee. I am just not sure about that. Apart from that and in the same spirit as Senator Roblin, I mean to vote in favour of the adoption of the report.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin's comments do him honour. He had to speak partially against the report and partially in favour of it. He had to express some reservations, yet not kill it. He was his usual decent and gentlemanly self. He does feel compassion for those people whose plight is described in this report, and that compassion was obvious. He is a good man and we all like and respect him. However, while he did have to make some points—and, in his shoes, I would have made them too—they somehow do a certain injustice to the members of the Special Senate Committee on Youth, some of them very distinguished representatives of his own party.

Honourable senators, we did talk to the administration. We did hear from the minister. We kept up a constant dialogue with the people in the Department of Employment and Immigration and in the Ministry of Youth. Wherever we went officials from those departments followed us and informed their departments of what we had heard in our consultations and of the information we were given. We exchanged information with these people.

In my view Senator Roblin was stretching the facts to the breaking point—and I am sure that he did not want to stretch the facts, that it was due to the briefing he received—to say that we did not consider the government's programs. We did consider them, but we did not take shots at them. It was very difficult to say good things about some of those programs, and therefore we preferred not to say anything at all about them. If he wanted to hear the views of some of the people who have to examine and apply these programs, he could have attended a conference of the deans of continuing education, who deal with training and placing youngsters in school. The minister spoke to them. Afterwards there was a session at which what she said was analyzed by the participants. It really was not very favourable.

Certain programs on CBC and various other surveys have asked those young people about all of the famous jobs that industry is supposed to be creating for them. What often turns out to be the case is that these young people push a broom, fetch coffee or have a certain part of their anatomy pinched by the denizens of certain enterprises where they work. The findings are that they have learned less than in community projects that were financed earlier. That is the evidence that is now coming out. I understand that Senator Roblin has to defend the record of his government, and he does that with decency and restraint. He did say, and I have to say the opposite, that we did not look at those programs. Yes, we did, but we did not want to have a report rife with partisanship. So, we decently kept quiet.

● (1540)

He did say at the end—and this is a very significant contribution that he made to the debate—that he wants the government to look at the report and decide what it can and what it cannot accept, what goes along with what it is now doing and what does not. That is exactly what the members of the committee want the government to do. That is exactly why we want this report adopted by the Senate.

We say very clearly in the report that what we are putting forward is a gamut of recommendations, knowing full well that all of them are not applicable everywhere and that various levels of government and various communities will find some of the recommendations more useful than others.

We are very conscious of the fact that it is very difficult to sit centrally, whether one speaks of a government or a Senate committee, and say, "These are your priorities," to a village in Nova Scotia or in the north of Saskatchewan, "this is what you should put your resources to." It is not sound management to do that. The locality knows what is the best use of the resources. And the strong point in the report is that the localities should take the initiative and that there should be general co-ordination—but it should be from the bottom up and it should work locally.

That is all that we have asked. We have not tried to impose a policy on the nation's communities, because such policies in other countries, when they have been centrally devised, have not worked. Even those countries that believe most in such programs and apply them the most, such as Sweden, are totally decentralized. It is the local municipalities and school boards and the representatives of labour and management locally that make those decisions. They choose the priorities, and the programs have to differ according to the circumstances. Only then can they work.

That is the spirit that permeates this report. Therefore, I see encouragement in the fact that the Leader of the Government toward the end of his speech, having done his duty as Leader of the Government, in effect understood and accepted the spirit, and on behalf of my fellow members of the committee I thank him for his expressed support.

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words on this subject, which concerns young people in the north. In committee I said a prayer a couple of times for some of those who were affected by the Katimavik program. The purpose of the Katimavik program was to create jobs for young people. The Leader of the Government said that some of the larger organizations were more controlled within the community. There may be control over young people in some of the Indian reserves. Our communities in the north are no different from any other place in the south. We work through some of the municipalities, just as they do in the south. Sometimes we are concerned about the young people leaving school and who wish to work during the summer. Our way of life is somewhat different from that of the south. Many times young people who leave school have nothing to do in the community and they get into trouble. They simply do not have jobs. In the communities in the south many young adults, after they leave school or who want summer jobs, drive to another city. But in the northern communities young people cannot do that. Some of them cannot afford to get out of the community; they simply cannot afford to travel to other places. There is also the matter of the quality of schooling in the northern territories. I've seen young people coming out of school and getting jobs outside of the territory. Many times they are unable to get jobs in the south. The Katimavik program helped many of the young people who, if they were unable to get permanent jobs, were at least able to get jobs during the summer break.

Many times there is a difference in our cultures. Often families do not encourage their children in their schooling, because they feel that they should learn how to live off the land in order to survive in the future and to maintain their culture. These days, in order to learn anything, one needs to have money. In the past our parents would instruct us in growing up, but now it is necessary to have a teacher to teach us how to grow up. When I first came to Ottawa, some of the communities received government funds, but since the new government took over communities have not been able to get that funding or they cannot get any increase in funding. I support any grants given by the Secretary of State, because I know they will be used for people in the community. During the past few years, summer jobs have been created in some communities but not in others. Since the new government took office, some of the funding has been cut off. Some communities need funds in order to create jobs for people. However, I believe that the committee did a good job. Young people are concerned about the future. There is concern for the people in the community.

I think that Senator Hébert's efforts in the hunger strike were well received across Canada. At the time of his hunger strike I received some inquiries from CBC in the north. I would tell them that this was the only way he could let the public know about the government's lack of concern for young people. I told them that it was his hope that the government would come up with something else. I hope that the government will continue the Katimavik program. I think that the name "Katimavik" is a good one.

● (1550)

Many people think that this organization does nothing. It has done very well over the years. Like any other organization that is started, it takes some time for people to become aware of it. In conclusion I want to say that I support all those who spoke in this debate.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I have nothing further to add to the remarks I made earlier this session, and would simply ask again that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 2678)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

REPORT ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-111
"AN ACT TO AMEND THE CUSTOMS TARIFF AND TO AMEND AN ACT TO AMEND THE CUSTOMS TARIFF"

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

EIGHTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-111, intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 3, 1986, examined the subject-matter of the said Bill and now reports as follows:

In accordance with the Order of Reference, your Committee heard from officials from the Departments of Finance and National Revenue (Customs and Excise) on June 4, 1986, and from the Canadian Advanced Technology Association and the Canadian Business Equipment Manufacturers Association on June 18, 1986.

Among the provisions of the Bill are amendments to the Customs Tariff Act to eliminate the tariffs on imports of semiconductor devices and computer parts. These amendments would make statutory a situation that has existed since January 20, 1986, when, pursuant to an agreement between Canada, the United States and Japan, the Government, by Order in Council, reduced to zero all import duties on semiconductors and computer parts. Prior to that agreement, tariffs on computer parts were 3.9% ad valorem, while tariffs on semiconductors of types produced in Canada were 5.4%. Semiconductors of types not produced domestically were already being imported duty-free.

Last year, Canada imported about $1.1 billion of computer parts and $1 billion of semiconductor devices. Of the semiconductor imports, only $33 million were dutiable, the remainder belonging to categories not being produced domestically.

As part of Canada's response to the U.S. imposition of a 35% duty on imports of red cedar shakes and shingles, the Minister of Finance announced, on June 2, that the Government proposed to reinstate the import duties on semiconductors and computer parts as of June 6, when the U.S. tariffs on shakes and shingles were to become effective. Amendments to Bill C-111 have been proposed to effect this decision.

In testimony before the Committee, the Canadian Business Equipment Manufacturers Association and the Canadian Advanced Technology Association strongly opposed the decision to reinstate tariffs on semiconductor devices and computer parts. Both organizations expressed support for freer trade with the United States, and voiced concern that the move may set back recent initiatives for trade liberalization between our two countries.

They also argued that the reimposition of the tariffs would cause more harm to Canada than to the United States, against which it is directed. The tariffs will not divert purchases of computer parts and semiconductors from the United States, since purchase decisions concerning these items are based overwhelmingly on technical performance specifications and availability, not price. Canadian producers of computer parts and semiconductor devices, therefore, will not be helped. On the other hand, the costs of assembling electronic products in Canada will rise. Canadian consumers of computer products will face higher prices unless manufacturers absorb the increased costs. Producers who export their products can receive remission of duties paid on imported parts, but the paperwork involved in the process will raise their costs as well.

The departmental witnesses admitted that the reinstatement of duties would have some effect on Canadian producers and consumers, but explained that the choice of measures to use in response to the U.S. imposition of tariffs on Canadian shakes and shingles was severely circumscribed by provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). Except in countervailing duty cases, a country's ability to raise tariffs is confined by GATT provisions to unbound products or products on which existing tariffs are below the bound rates. The Committee recognizes that, having made the policy decision to respond to the U.S. tariff, the Government had to resort to this narrow range of products, semiconductors and computer parts being principal among them.

Your Committee has reviewed the subject-matter of Bill C-111 in accordance with the Order of Reference and has no further comments to make.

Respectfully submitted,

LOWELL MURRAY,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 26, 1986

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-45, respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, honourable senators, later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before giving leave in this particular instance, I should like to raise a matter which is of some concern to me, and that is the extent to which employees of the Senate have had an opportunity to be heard on the contents of this bill or, alternatively, whether the provisions and the implications of the bill have been explained to the employees of the Senate by the administration of the Senate.

The bill, as we know, applies to employees of the House of Commons and to employees of the Senate. It is well known that representatives of employees of the House of Commons have appeared several times before the committee which examined that bill in order to give their views and to be heard. I believe that it would be reasonable for us to assure ourselves that Senate employees have had an opportunity or will have an opportunity to give their views. The bill will affect them in precisely the same way as it will affect employees of the House of Commons.

I should also like to ascertain whether some system has been put in place which can assure us that the employees of the Senate have been informed about the implications and provisions of the bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration for pre-study some time ago, but it never did reach that stage in committee. We have been told from time to time that certain amendments would be coming forward and it might be premature to become involved in the study at that time.

A subcommittee of the Internal Economy Committee did track the bill in the other place and in the departments to make sure that the legal implications, such as appeals to the Labour Relations Board and so on, as they affect the Senate, were studied and looked after.

As to the concern of the employees of the Senate, I fully appreciate what the honourable senator is saying. I think it might be appropriate if we were to refer this bill to a committee of the Senate, whether it be the Internal Economy Committee or another, after second reading to make sure that employees have an opportunity to be heard.

I am informed, and our Speaker who is chairman of the Internal Economy Committee—and my friend opposite, the vice-chairman, can correct me if I am wrong—that no applications from staff for a hearing have been received at any time. However, that certainly does not alter our desire to hear from them.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we could, of course, proceed with second reading and then refer the bill to committee, but, alternatively, because of the stage we have reached in our legislative calendar, we might consider forming a Committee of the Whole and inviting some members of the staff and others not, of course, to make full representations such as were made on the other side, but simply to bring us up to date on their thinking and to express their views and so on. That is another possibility. We might find that we have time to do that while awaiting legislation from the other place.

Senator Doody: That is certainly one possibility that I would not rule out. It is something that we should discuss, I would suggest; it may be more appropriate that a smaller forum should handle the legislation and could do it more expeditiously. My first thought was that the Internal Economy Committee or the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee might be in a position to handle the bill more quickly and more thoroughly than would the Committee of the Whole. However, we will see what happens as we go along.

Senator Frith: On that point, honourable senators, my reason for suggesting Committee of the Whole was to bypass the two steps of sending the bill to committee and receiving the report of that committee here. It seems to be more expeditious in this case to do it all in one stage. I agree, however, that it will depend on the timing. That will determine the more appropriate course to take.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would draw to the attention of honourable senators rule 18, which states:

When a bill or other matter relating to any subject administered by a department of the Government of Canada is being considered by the Senate or in Committee of the Whole, a minister, not being a member of the Senate, may on invitation from the Senate enter the Senate Chamber and, subject to the rules, orders, usages, forms and proceedings of the Senate, may take part in the debate.

This rule does not specifically state that employees of the Senate cannot do so, but I would take it from this rule that they may not be allowed in the Senate chamber in Committee of the Whole.

Senator Frith: Yes, I take the point.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I draw to the attention of colleagues the importance of ascertaining whether employees of the Senate do have views on the bill and, if they do, that we make a reasonable effort to hear those views before we pass the bill. That is my only point. I think that it is important to ensure that if there are views to be heard, we try to hear them.

Senator Doody: We are in full agreement with that.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted for second reading later this day?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

[Translation]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-111, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN FEDERAL COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-116, to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ENTITLED "INDEPENDENCE AND INTERNATIONALISM" TABLED

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the final report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations entitled "Independence and Internationalism".

[Translation]

With your leave, honourable senators, perhaps I may add a few very brief comments.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Simard: You will see that my remarks are strictly non-partisan. The report contains about 130 recommendations, and 95 per cent of these received the unanimous support of committee members.

The exercise in which we were involved for nearly a year covered a variety of situations and a variety of subjects. However, we insisted on looking at our whole foreign policy in terms of six specific themes, which also appear as chapter headings.

First of all, safeguarding peace and security in the world. Second, expanding international trade. Third, international development. Fourth, promoting human rights—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Senator Simard, not so fast, please.

Senator Simard: I'm sorry. Fifth, improving relations with the United States. Sixth, the importance of the North to Canada's foreign policy.

I would like to thank all my fellow senators who took part in this study, especially Senator Flynn, who was a member of the committee during the initial phase, and also Senators Doyle, Grafstein, Stollery and of course the senator whose attendance was exemplary, Senator Gigantès.

In fact, I want to thank all my colleagues for their tremendous co-operation.

● (1410)

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have only one purpose in rising, and that is to welcome the completion and release of the work of this special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. It comes at an opportune time, when the country is engaged in a major debate with respect to both concepts included in the title of the report, independence and internationalism. It is to be hoped that the report will clarify some of the current issues that are under debate, particularly with respect to the question of additional trade with the United States. Senator Simard has mentioned that a portion of the report understandably deals with the United States. Presumably that could not be dealt with at the present time without throwing some light upon this major issue relating to Canada and the United States. The report will be read very carefully by many Canadians who are interested in foreign policy and particularly to determine whether among the many recommendations there are new directions or new thrusts of an imaginative nature that can become part of Canada's future foreign policy.

I congratulate Senator Simard, his colleague from the House of Commons, Mr. Hockin, and all members of the committee on their work. I take it that this report concludes the work of this joint committee, that it will, having completed its work, disappear and that a future continuation of any such work would require a new mandate from both the House of Commons and the Senate.

FISHERIES

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 2745)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Marshall, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, presented the following report:

Thursday, June 26, 1986

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

[Senator MacEachen.]

SEVENTH REPORT (Statutory Instruments No. 34)

1. In accordance with the Order of Reference approved by the Senate and the House of Commons on December 18, 1984, your Committee wishes to inform both Houses of the satisfactory resolution of the matter raised in the Seventh Report of the Joint Committee for the 1983-84 Session (S.I. No. 26).

2. In its Seventh Report, the Joint Committee recommended that the Government consider the advisability of amending section 221 of the Income Tax Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 63, so as to clearly specify the circumstances in which retroactive regulations may be made by the Governor in Council.

3. At present, subsection 221(2) of the Income Tax Act provides that:

"No regulation under this Act has effect until it has been published in the Canada Gazette but, when so published, a regulation shall, if it so provides, be effective with reference to a period before it was published."

This provision permits the Governor in Council to make regulations retroactive to any point in time irrespective of the reasons for doing so. In its earlier Report, the Joint Committee stated that: "an unlimited power to legislate retroactively is inherently dangerous: what is involved is not whether those at present administering the Income Tax Act and Regulations would seek to go beyond the bounds of fairness and propriety in making a retroactive regulation, but that the potential for abuse exists".

4. In a letter dated July 15, 1985, the Minister of Finance advised that he shared the concern of the Committee and that the Government was prepared to introduce an amendment to the Income Tax Act which would restrict the making of retroactive regulations to the following circumstances: where the proposed regulation provides relief to taxpayers; where it implements a budget or other public announcement; or where it corrects an ambiguous, incomplete or deficient enactment. This proposal was set out in the Budget Papers tabled by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on May 23, 1985, at which time the Minister undertook to consult the Joint Committee as to the actual wording of the proposed amendment before its introduction in Parliament.

5. A first draft of a new subsection 221(2) of the Income Tax Act was submitted to the Joint Committee by the Minister of Finance on July 15, 1985. After a preliminary examination of this draft, the Committee sought and received comments on the proposed amendment from the Joint Committee on Taxation of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants.

6. These representations and your Committee's further examination of the Minister's proposal led the Committee to conclude that the proposed amendment did not meet its request for an amendment designed "to clearly specify the circumstances in which retroactive regulations may be made by the Governor in Council".

7. As a result of the Joint Committee's deliberations, the Department of Finance agreed to reconsider its proposal and, by letter dated May 22, 1986, the Minister of Finance submitted a revised draft subsection 221(2) of the Income Tax Act for the consideration of the Joint Committee. The text of the proposed amendment is appended to this report.

8. In his letter, the Honourable Michael Wilson noted that: "In keeping with the essential observations of your Committee, the proposal has been revised to prevent retroactivity of a regulation implementing a budget or public announcement to a time before the beginning of the year in which the announcement is made. The reference to an "incomplete" enactment is also removed from paragraph 221(2)(c). Other changes were also made to clarify the application of the subsection."

9. Having examined the revised proposal put forward by the Minister, your Committee wishes to report its agreement with the substance of this proposal. While it will remain possible for the Governor in Council to make retroactive regulations, such as when a regulatory change announced in the course of a taxation year is made effective to the beginning of that year, the Minister's proposal represents an important limitation of the regulation-making powers now vested in the Executive. In the judgment of the Joint Committee, the proposed subsection 221(2) of the Income Tax Act strikes a fair and reasonable balance between the need for an orderly and manageable taxation system and the right of the taxpayer to be protected against retroactive legislation. If it is adopted by Parliament, the proposed subsection 221(2) will clearly limit the Governor in Council's authority to make retroactive regulations to circumstances which are agreed to be acceptable and proper.

10. Your Committee would be remiss if it did not record its appreciation for the prompt and positive response of the Minister of Finance to the Seventh Report of the Committee and for his willingness to meet the concerns expressed by the Joint Committee as a result of its examination of the Minister's initial proposal.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Joint Chairman
APPENDIX TO REPORT

221(2) A regulation made under this Act shall only have effect from the date it is published in the Canada Gazette or at such time thereafter as may be specified in the regulation unless the regulation provides otherwise and it

(a) has a relieving effect only;

[Senator Nurgitz.]

(b) corrects an ambiguous or deficient enactment that was not in accordance with the objects of this Act or the Income Tax Regulations;

(c) is consequential on an amendment to this Act that is applicable before the date the regulation is published in the Canada Gazette; or

(d) gives effect to a budgetary or other public announcement, in which case the regulation shall not, except where paragraph (a), (b) or (c) applies, have effect

(i) before the date on which the announcement was made, in the case of a deduction or withholding from an amount paid or credited, and

(ii) before the taxation year in which the announcement is made, in any other case.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Selection, presented the following report:

Thursday, June 26, 1986

The Committee of Selection has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 66(1)(b), your Committee submits herewith the list of Senators nominated by it to serve on the Special Committee of the Senate on Terrorism and Public Safety.

The Honourable Senators Bosa, Cogger, Fairbairn, Hays, Kelly, MacDonald (Halifax), *MacEachen (or Frith), *Roblin (or Doody), Sinclair, Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough). (8)

*Ex officio members.

Respectfully submitted,

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder whether Senator Phillips or any other person who is knowledgeable on this subject could advise us when it is intended that this committee will complete its work. I have supported the establishment of this committee and its revised terms of reference, but it would certainly be much appreciated if the committee managed to complete its work within a limited timeframe in order that its conclusions would not in the meantime be overtaken by other more urgent questions.

In asking the question, I express the opinion that if the committee wishes to have an impact upon the Canadian public, then I think it is essential that it complete its work well before the end of 1986.

• (1420)

Senator Phillips: In reply to the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition, the reference from the Senate stated that the committee was to report no later than December 19, 1986. I would further point out to the members of the committee that an organization meeting is scheduled when the Senate rises today. I, too, share the hope of Senator MacEachen that they will be able to complete their work by the date specified in the reference; however, I think they will have a hectic schedule if they do complete their work by that date.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a motion to put dealing with the adjournment. When I present it I will deal briefly with the order of business. I understand that Senator Roblin has a pressing engagement, so in deference to him, I will stand aside and allow the Senate to proceed to Question Period.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—COMMITMENT TO HALT PROTECTIONISM

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I will not delay Senator Roblin unduly, but I wish to return to a question I asked some days ago respecting the implications of the Quebec accord on trade.

I was interested at that time in knowing whether the commitment to halt protectionism in cross-border trade of goods and services was an absolute commitment or whether there were exclusions. That question has now become even more relevant by an announcement contained in the Financial Post that the corn producers of Canada are launching a countervail action against the corn producers of the United States.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

What I really wish to ask is: Is such an action excluded by or included in the commitment to halt protectionism made by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not have the answer to that question to hand at the present time. I know the point my honourable friend is concerned about; I admit that I am also concerned about it. However, I do not have an answer at the moment. I will try to obtain one expeditiously.

NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I should like to refer once again to a matter to which I directed the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate some time ago arising from an order of this house dated May 1 asking that certain information concerning the Advisory Board of the National Postal Museum be tabled in this house.

I reminded the leader of this by questioning him on June 10, and I further reminded him by questioning him on June 18. It is now June 26. It is expected that the Senate will adjourn for the summer tomorrow, June 27. Obviously, this return will not be tabled by then.

Honourable senators, I resent this very much. I think this house should resent this. I concede that the matter is of little importance generally, but it is of importance to a few people in Canada, perhaps to a group of people who provide support for the only portion of Canada Post Corporation that operates at a profit, the Philatelic Division. It is not difficult to obtain the information; it is there; it only requires someone, not even three rungs up the ladder of the hierarchy of the Civil Service or the Public Service or those in the service of the Canada Post Corporation, to write a letter listing the names of eight or nine people. This is a deliberate affront to this house by the minister in charge of the Canada Post Corporation who does not want me or other philatelists in Canada to know who the members of the Advisory Board of the National Postal Museum are. I think this is a dreadful affront to the Senate, and I shall continue raising the matter until I receive a reply. I am sorry that by this device of just refusing to obey an order of this house the minister in charge of the Canada Post Corporation has been able to keep his machinations, if they are that—and the longer he keeps us in the dark the more I am inclined to think that they are indeed that—under cover until the end of the summer.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, perhaps I may make the unwarranted assumption that I can proceed to Delayed Answers in view of the time on the clock. I can mollify my friend, because I have in my hand today—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: —a statement—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It is too late, but we hope that it is not too little.

Senator Roblin: —under the signed manual of the minister in charge, the Honourable Michel Côté, disclosing to my friend and to the world what he has been up to in connection with the appointments that have been made to the board in question.

Senator Frith: Well, let us hear it.

Senator Roblin: The National Postal Museum Advisory Commission. So, I have that for my friend.

Senator Frith: Can we hear it? Let us hear it.

Senator Roblin: Well, do you really want to? I really have a—

Senator Frith: Well, let Senator Doody do it, then.

Senator Roblin: No, I will read it to you if you insist. I am always an obliging soul.

The members of the National Postal Museum Advisory Committee are as follows:

Chairman: The Honourable Judge René J. Marin, Chairman of the Board of Directors of Canada Post Corporation; Ottawa, Ontario; appointed 16 October 1981

Members: Mr. Richard M.H. Alway; Toronto, Ontario; appointed July 1982

Mr. Bernard Beaupré; Richelieu, Quebec; appointed July 1984

Mr. Frank Corcoran; Ottawa, Ontario; appointed October 1983

Mr. Matthew Dale; Rockliffe, Ontario; appointed October 1983

Mr. Laurier Durand; Trois-Rivières, Quebec; appointed 15 May 1985

Mrs. Leslie Forbes; Riverview, New Brunswick; appointed 1 January 1986

Mr. Robert McGarry; Ottawa, Ontario; appointed 1 July 1984

Mrs. Ellen Easton McLeod; Ottawa, Ontario; appointed 1 July 1985

There is currently one vacancy.

An Hon. Senator: Great Canadians.

An Hon. Senator: All Liberals!

Senator Roblin: What a bunch of skeptics we have in this house, honestly. When I see these sittings—

Senator Frith: And, with good cause.

Senator Roblin: I think perhaps that remembrance of things past is probably the theme that occupies their minds at this moment when it comes to appointments.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: Recent past.

Senator Marshall: Are there no senators on the list?

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers.

CULTURAL HERITAGE AND NATIONAL IDENTITY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on September 25 last by the Honourable Senator Davey regarding Cultural Heritage and National Identity—Government Policy.

(The answer follows):

(1) The Government supports the objective in the 1968 Broadcasting Act that the Canadian broadcasting system should be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians.

(2) & (3) The Minister of Communications is awaiting the report of the Broadcast Policy Task Force, known as the Caplan-Sauvageau Task Force which will address the issue of public broadcasting in general and specifically the mandate of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as well as current Canadian content policy requirements.

(4) The Minister of Communications is examining the policies and programs regarding the publication of periodicals in Canada, including the impact of Bill C-58, which amended Section 19 of the Income Tax Act, under which expenses incurred by Canadians for advertising in foreign periodicals intended for a Canadian market cannot be deducted for tax purposes. The Minister of Communications recognizes the importance of this legislation to Canadian publishers and intends to protect their interests in the overall Canadian economy.

(5) The Treasury Board policy, issued in directive 1985-30, states that all government advertising must be done by Canadian controlled firms. These new guidelines were instituted by the present government and are more thorough than those guidelines of its predecessor.

(6) The Minister of Communications is awaiting the report of the Caplan-Sauvageau Task Force which will undoubtedly address this issue of cable substitution.

(7) The Minister of Communications announced on June 18, 1986, a new Book Publishing Industry Development Program which will provide $13 million in assistance to the Canadian book publishing industry in 1986-87. The February 1986 budget of the Minister of Finance allocated $13 million a year over five years for book publishing assistance. This represents an increase of 25 per cent over previous years. Of the $13 million allocation, 2 million will be transferred to the Canada Council in 1987-88 and 4.8 million in 1988-89 to maintain the current level of cultural support to book publishing.

(8) The Minister of Communications reviewed the report of the Film Task Force, the Roth-Raymond report in December 1985. He is studying the report very carefully and will bring forward recommendations to his cabinet colleagues.

(9) This question is speculative.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—TARIFF DISCUSSIONS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on June 4 last by the Honourable Senator Olson regarding Canada-United States Relations—Trade—Tariff Discussions—Request for Information

(The answer follows):

Ambassador Gotlieb's consultations with the U.S. Secretary of Commerce on June 4, were held in an effort to persuade the Commerce Department to reject the countervailing duty petition filed against imports of Canadian softwood lumber by certain U.S. lumber producers. It was the view of the Canadian government that the allegations of subsidy made by the U.S. petitioner were essentially the same as those covered by the 1982-1983 investigation which was decided in Canada's favour. Furthermore, there were no changes in Canadian practices or in U.S. countervailing duty law since 1983 which would warrant the initiation of a new investigation.

There is currently only one other U.S. countervailing duty investigation which, although initiated against a number of countries, includes Canadian exports of cut flowers (carnations). Canada is a marginal supplier ($250,000 out of total U.S. imports of approximately $171 million). This investigation is still in its preliminary phase and the government is assisting the Canadian industry in its attempts to have the Canadian product excluded from the investigation.

EMPLOYMENT

LONDON, ONTARIO—STATUS OF CN COMPUTER EXPRESS TERMINAL

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on June 4 last by the Honourable Senator Turner regarding Employment in London, Ontario—Status of CN Computer Express Terminal.

(The answer follows):

In order to compensate for jobs that were being moved to CN Route headquarters in Toronto, the company decided to concentrate its rating function in London and to establish this rating office in that city. There are presently 30 highly specialized jobs for rating and computer analysts in London.

The new owners of CN Route have not indicated that they are considering any reorganization of their London office.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on June 5 last by the Honourable Senator Steuart and the Honourable Senator Everett regarding Canada-United States Relations—Trade—Imposition of U.S. Tariffs and Canadian Tariffs—Mitigation of Harmful Effects—Government Policy and Programs.

(The answer follows):

The books which are included in the package of tariff increases in the Canadian response to the U.S. tariff on red cedar shakes and shingles are those for which the duty has been suspended since 1979 in exchange for an exemption the U.S. had granted Canada from the "manufacturing clause" of its copyright law. The GATT has ruled the manufacturing clause to be a violation of U.S. obligations under GATT so it was felt that Canada should not continue to provide a tariff concession for an exemption from a measure that is in violation of the GATT.

The Government reimposed tariffs only on those books which were free of duty under the custom duty on books remission order of 1982. That order in council was introduced to implement the concession for the exemption from the U.S. manufacturing clause and it has been revoked, effective June 6, 1986.

Certain other printed materials have come into Canada without duty for many years and the free rates of duty on them are "bound" against increase under GATT. These materials have not been affected by the tariff measure and are still coming in free of duty. One of the tariff provisions that is bound under the GATT, and has been for a number of years, is that one which provides free entry for "books, periodicals and pamphlets—in any other than the English language."

Most non-English language printed matter would not be coming into Canada from the United States, the country which is the focus of the tariff increases announced by the Minister of Finance on June 2, 1986. Perhaps more important, however, is the fact that Canada could not have imposed a duty on non-English language books without violating our GATT commitment to maintain the free rate of duty on these products. If a tariff had been imposed, we would have been faced with demands from our trading partners for compensation in the form of tariff reductions on other products being imported into Canada. In the absence of any agreement on such compensation, our trading partners would be in a position to take retaliatory action under the GATT against our exports.

The tariff increase could not have been applied to imports from the United States only. Increases or decreases in most-favoured-nations tariff rates have to be applied multilaterally, in accordance with article I of the GATT.

In addition to books in any other than the English language, there is a broad range of books and other printed matter which is still accorded duty-free entry. These include: newspapers and periodicals printed four times a year or more; reference works and textbooks included in the curriculum of any school, college or university in Canada; books for libraries; manuscripts; books more than twelve years old; books for the promotion of medicine, the fine arts, law, science, technical training, and the study of languages; government publications; and religious literature.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on June 10 last by the Honourable Senator Olson regarding the Economy—Increase in Interest Rates.

(The answer follows):

Since March 1980 the Bank rate has been set at 25 basis points above the latest average rate established in the weekly tender for 91-day treasury bills issued by the Government of Canada. This year this rate has shown high variability, reflecting a broad range of financial and monetary policy developments. In the first two months of the year, the Bank rate increased by 231 basis points (to a peak of 11.8 per cent in early March) as the exchange rate came under strong downward pressure and as the Bank of Canada tightened policy to curtail unfounded negative sentiment against our currency. Since early March, the trend in short-term interest rates has been reversed as speculative pressures subsided, and the Canadian dollar has gradually gained strength against the U.S. unit.

In the final week of May, short-term Canadian interest rates were at their lowest levels thus far in 1986, with the Bank rate at 8.43 per cent. In early June, short rates rose and then fell back slightly, due to similar, but less pronounced, movements in U.S. rates, and to pressures in exchange markets which saw the Canadian dollar first decline and then strengthen against the U.S. currency. These weekly interest rate movements in June however, have not been largely compared with movements observed earlier this year, and do not signify any change in monetary policy. The 34 basis point increase in the Bank rate observed in June 4 and the subsequent 13 basis point decrease of June 11 are well within the normal range of variability experienced by short-term money market rates in the past.

Consistent with the view that the upward movement of market rates in early June would not be permanent, the chartered banks did not alter their prime rates. The prime rate is at 10.25 per cent, where it has been since May 16. Typical 5-year mortgage rates at chartered banks did, however, increase by 50 basis points in this period to their current level of 11 per cent. This adjustment reflected demand pressures in the mortgage market as borrowers sought to lock in the relatively attractive long-term rates of recent weeks. More recently, shorter-term mortgage rates at several of the major lending institutions have fallen 25 basis points; 1-year mortgages can now be obtained at 9.5 per cent, their lowest level since 1979.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFFS AND CANADIAN TARIFFS—MITIGATION OF HARMFUL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND PROGRAMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on June 10 last by the Honourable Senator MacEachen and the Honourable Senator Steuart regarding Canada-United States Relations—Trade—Imposition of U.S. Tariffs and Canadian Tariffs—Mitigation of Harmful Effects—Government Policy and Programs.

(The answer follows):

The first question is why the Government imposed a tariff on tea in tea bags when the United Kingdom and not the United States, is the major supplier. The government has, in the past, received requests from the Canadian tea packaging industry for an increase in the duty on imports of packaged tea from free to 6 cents per pound, the rate at which this product is "bound" under GATT. One of the factors influencing the government's decision not to act on the request from the industry to increase these duties was the Canada-U.S. commitment to halt protectionism in cross border trade, as set out in the Quebec Summit trade declaration. However, in view of the failure of the shakes and shingles case to live up to this commitment, it was felt that it would be appropriate to implement the industry's request as one of the measures taken in response to the U.S. tariff on shakes and shingles. The import figures mentioned by Senator MacEachen on June 10 appear to be accurate.

Another question raised is why books were not included in the ways and means motion tabled by the Minister of Finance on June 2, 1986. The reason is that the government did not need to amend the customs tariff to impose a tariff on books because the duty, which was in effect prior to 1979, had been suspended by order in council pursuant to the Financial Administration Act. Therefore, it was only necessary to revoke the order in council (the custom duty on books remission order 1982). That order was revoked effective June 6, 1986.

A question has again been asked as to why a tariff was applied only to English books. The Government was not in a position to impose a tariff on books in other than the English language, and certain other categories of printed material, because the tariff items covering these are "bound" at free under the GATT and have been for a number of years.

It was also asked if the Government will reconsider its action on books since they have been free of duty from the United Kingdom since 1906. It is unfortunate that the tariff on books must also apply to imports from the United Kingdom. However, the tariff increases could not have been applied to U.S. imports only. Increases or decreases in most-favoured-nation tariff rates have to be applied multilaterally, in accordance with Article I of the GATT.

The last question is which tariff rates being increased are not bound under GATT. Essentially, all of the products on which tariffs have been raised are covered by unbound tariff items or tariff items where the rates are bound at levels higher than those being applied. An example of the latter is the item covering tea in tea bags which is bound at 6 cents a pound but which had an applied free rate.

It should be added that while the free rates under the affected tariff items covering books are bound under the GATT, that commitment was conditional on an exemption for Canada from the "manufacturing clause" of its copyright law. Since the GATT has ruled the manufacturing clause to be in violation of U.S. obligations under GATT, it was decided that Canada should no longer provide a free rate on these products as a concession for an exemption from something that is illegal in GATT terms.

Hon. H.A. Olson: All those questions and answers will be printed in Hansard, I presume.

Senator Roblin: As is our invariable custom.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): We much prefer to hear your replies.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF POST OFFICE AT SPRINGHILL JUNCTION, NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I did not intend to ask a question after Delayed Answers, but I will now since the delayed answers dealt with the question concerning the Post Office, and my question has to do with Canada Post as well.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could speak to the Postmaster General at Canada Post to see if he could not do something about the closing of the Springhill Junction Post Office in Nova Scotia. It has been 30 years since a Post Office has closed in the maritime provinces, and they are closing this Post Office which requires only $13,000 a year to keep it open; just a week in the New York hotel for the Prime Minister!

Senator MacEachen: A week?

An Hon. Senator: A year!

Senator Frith: A night!

Senator Bonnell: A night.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: Get your facts straight.

Senator Frith: An Arabian night!

Senator Bonnell: The salary is $13,000; so it is the equivalent of a week in the hotel for the Prime Minister. Therefore, perhaps you could speak to the Postmaster General to see if the Springhill Junction Post Office could not be maintained—

Senator MacEachen: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: —because people in that area will have to drive 25 miles to get their mail if this office happens to close. There are not that many people there, but the post office has been in service in Canada for a long time, and the Province of Nova Scotia, being a part of Atlantic Canada, once again is getting it in the neck.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CORRECTIONS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Before the Leader of the Government in the Senate leaves, I wonder if he would check his file to see if he has the papers that I asked to be tabled in the Senate about two months ago. In these dying moments of the session I would appreciate having them. You indicated that they would be tabled. If you do not have them, I wonder if you would assure me that they would be tabled before we adjourn tomorrow.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my friend that I will pursue the matter.

Senator Frith: Only two months? You are being a little rash.

● (1430)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to give you briefly some idea of the disposition of the order paper at the present time in terms of legislation.

Bill C-96, the fiscal arrangements bill, is before us for second reading. Although during the course of the debate on second reading I may be proved wrong, I believe there is a disposition to refer this bill back to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. If so, an arrangement has been made for that committee to meet this evening.

Bill C-116, the Pension Bill; Bill C-111, the Customs Tariff Bill; and Bill C-45, dealing with employee labour relations in the Senate and House of Commons, are also before us, and in each case second reading will be moved today.

We have been given reason to understand that Bill C-90, the other Pension Bill, and Bill C-117, the Farm Credit Bill, will be sent to us from the other place this afternoon. If so, we will be asking leave to move second reading of those two bills as well. We feel fairly certain that we will receive those today.

We are also given to understand that we will be receiving Bill C-121 which deals with the judiciary in Newfoundland. Incredible though it may seem, I understand they are hoping to improve on the judiciary system in the province of Newfoundland.

Senator Frith: A new chief justice, the former attorney general.

Senator Doody: I understand they are having some trouble drafting the bill, but that we will get it as soon as possible.

There is every possibility that we will also receive, either today or tomorrow, Bill C-112 which deals with energy administration.

Bills C-94 and C-92, which are two energy-related bills, are still out there somewhere. One deals with the offshore accord with Newfoundland and the other with the Energy Administration Act generally.

I also refer, honourable senators, to Bills C-67 and C-68 of Senator Hastings' fame and Bill C-75 which deals with the Canada Steamship Act. I cannot honestly say whether or not we will receive these, but we may possibly receive them tomorrow.

Bill C-19 is also out there somewhere, and there is a possibility of receiving that.

With that in mind, honourable senators, we discussed the possibility of meeting this evening. It seems it may be more sensible to meet tomorrow morning since it occurred to me that those people who will not be prepared to proceed with second reading this afternoon would not be any more prepared this evening. In that event, it is suggested that we sit tomorrow morning, if that is agreeable to honourable senators.

Therefore, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Friday, June 27, 1986, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on this request for leave, I did not take a note of all the bills which the deputy leader has suggested may come from the House of Commons, but I think he mentioned two energy bills, the Atlantic Accord and an energy administration bill.

I simply want to say that if they do come from the House of Commons, it would be unlikely that the Senate could deal with those bills in a day or two. My friend opposite should not be disappointed if it were found that in the unlikely possibility that they do arrive the Senate would need further time to study them, and, in particular, further time to study the implications of the Atlantic Accord about which very little study, if any, has been undertaken by the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. I merely want to advise the deputy leader of that fact.

Now that he is dealing with the business of the government, I wonder whether he has set down Royal Assent for tomorrow and whether he has any idea as to when the government might have that Royal Assent.

I would also ask whether the government proposes to bring an end to the session by prorogation.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if Bills C-92 and C-94 do come before this place, I cannot promise my friend that I will not be disappointed if they are not passed, but, having heard him, I can tell him that I will not be surprised. Both these bills have been before the Energy Committee for pre-study, and I must admit that Bill C-92 has been given more attention than Bill C-94 up to now. Nevertheless, they have been before the committee for some time, and the committee has been working on them.

With regard to Royal Assent, as is the custom in this place, we are at the disposition of both houses in terms of when Royal Assent will take place. When we have learned that the last of the legislation is dealt with in the other place and when we have had an opportunity to deal with it here, then we can put a specific time on Royal Assent. All the machinery is in place. The deputy of the Governor General has been informed that we will require a Royal Assent tomorrow, but we are not in a position to say right now what time that will be. If my memory serves me correctly over the past few years I have been here, it could very well be in the evening rather than in the afternoon.

With regard to prorogation, it will come as no surprise to honourable senators to hear from me that I have not been informed or consulted as to this particular matter.

Motion agreed to.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT CRIMINAL CODE PENITENTIARY ACT PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Senator Robertson, moved third reading of Bill C-106, to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third and passed.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL

MOTION RE MESSAGE TO HOUSE OF COMMONS ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stanbury, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hastings:

That the Message which is to be sent to the House of Commons on the Bill C-62, intituled: "An Act respecting employment equity", contain the following observations and recommendation appearing in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, as follows:—

"The Committee is of the view that the legislation does not achieve its declared purpose. The Committee shares the view of the Native people, visible minorities, and women who appeared before us and the people with disabilities who briefed us in writing, that this Bill will not improve their situation, cannot be properly enforced, and is not an employment equity bill.

The Committee wishes to inform the Senate that it took every available step to persuade the Minister to make the Bill an employment equity bill through amendment. The Minister refused substantive amendments and amendments re-titling the Bill as the Employment Equity Information Act and clarifying the section defining the purpose. Without such amendments, the effect and substance are not accurately represented by the title and purpose of the Bill.

The Committee calls on the government to bring in legislation or amendments to this legislation in September 1986. Such legislation should provide proper coverage of workers in the federal domain, should be clear in its terms and definitions, should enforce the legislation reasonably and clearly, and should contain the capacity to produce results. Such legislation should replace Bill C-62 and be in place by December 1986."—(Honourable Senator Nurgitz).

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have but a few brief comments to make with respect to this motion.

Yesterday Senator Stanbury cited a precedent for proceeding in this fashion, that is, by appending to the message sent to the House of Commons the critical comments made by the committee. Although he may well have a precedent, I should like to point out that the tradition has been that while we may well have critical comments, we have not sent those along. In fact, the last time this was done was in 1979.

When we consider the 1979 precedent, it is bothersome to note that at that time Senator Haidasz had made quite an effort in committee to point out that when the bill was reported without amendment, the comments of the committee would be appended. In fact, I have the transcript of the committee hearing and it appears that a fair amount of time was spent on that question. I would point out that in this instance it was never raised in committee. When the report was discussed in committee, nothing was ever said to indicate that it would be sought to have those comments added to the message. I point that fact out as a distinction between the precedent arising out of the Transport Committee in 1979 and the present proposal. Yesterday just before noon I spoke to Senator Lewis, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, about this matter of the appending of the comments to the message, telling him that someone had called me because he had noticed this in the Toronto Globe and Mail. I should like to say to Senator Stanbury that I live in Winnipeg.

● (1440)

Senator Stanbury: It was in the national edition.

Senator Nurgitz: That may be. Senator Stanbury has indicated that publication in the Toronto Globe and Mail constitutes notice. Although I have the greatest respect for him, I would say to the honourable senator that it is poor notice. It is, indeed, no notice.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): None being required.

Senator Nurgitz: None being required, but it was indicated by Senator Stanbury in his argument for acceptance of those comments that notice did appear in that newspaper.

Perhaps we are all making much ado about nothing. I recognize the insistence of the majority to have the critical comments appended to the message; so be it. I assume that the majority will have its way. I assume, as well, that through some indication, whether by division or otherwise, others will indicate as I have that they are not in favour of that motion. I thank honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Stanbury, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hastings:

That the Message which is to be sent to the House of Commons on Bill C-62, intituled: "An Act respecting employment equity", contain the following observations and recommendation appearing in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, as follows:—

"The Committee is of the view that the legislation does not achieve its declared purpose. The Committee shares the view of the Native people, visible minorities, and women who appeared before us and the people with disabilities who briefed us in writing, that this Bill will not improve their situation, cannot be properly enforced, and is not an employment equity bill.

The Committee wishes to inform the Senate that it took every available step to persuade the Minister to make the Bill an employment equity bill through amendment. The Minister refused substantive amendments and amendments re-titling the Bill as the Employment Equity Information Act and clarifying the section defining the purpose. Without such amendments, the effect and substance are not accurately represented by the title and purpose of the Bill.

The Committee calls on the government to bring in legislation or amendments to this legislation in September 1986. Such legislation should provide proper coverage of workers in the federal domain, should be clear in its terms and definitions, should enforce the legislation reasonably and clearly, and should contain the capacity to produce results. Such legislation should replace Bill C-62 and be in place by December 1986."

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-96, intituled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977".—(Honourable Senator Hicks).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I listened with interest to the speech of Senator Macquarrie in moving this motion, and must congratulate him on acquitting himself of what must have been a not too pleasant task in the able tradition which he has established and which we have come to expect from him here. I also want to refer at the outset, so that I will not have to repeat the points, to the speech Senator Stewart made in this house on June 18, to be found at pages 2657 to 2659 of the Debates of the Senate, in which he dealt with the details of this legislation as a result of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which had conducted a pre-study of the bill.

To illustrate the points that he made, Senator Stewart used the figures that would apply to the province of Nova Scotia as a result of the passage of the legislation now before us. As I have said, they are not very comforting to those people who are interested in post-secondary education, and this should include every thoughtful Canadian and certainly does include, I think, every thoughtful Nova Scotian. Senator Stewart brought to our attention the fact that the province of Nova Scotia in the immediate year will suffer a drop of $11 million in transfer payments, which are calculated with respect to the support of post-secondary education but, I quite agree, are not transferred to the province with any stipulation that they have to be used to support post-secondary education. Senator Stewart also pointed out that by the end of this five-year period, the year 1990-91, under the present law Nova Scotia's entitlement would be $786 million, but under Bill C-96 it would drop to $715 million, which constitutes a loss for that province of $71 million in that one year alone. Of course, the figures for all of the provinces of Canada would result in a loss in the transfer payments calculated, but not made with the stipulation that they be used for post-secondary education, to amount to over $2 billion in the year 1990-1991.

Honourable senators, on that analysis alone this is not legislation with respect to post-secondary education; it is financial legislation. The only virtue in the bill that I can see is that it will save the federal treasury some money which, presumably, will be applied towards reducing the annual deficit of the Government of Canada, or really of the people of Canada; provided, of course, that some other emergency situation does not arise which will cause the government to use the money to bail out some banks or to bail out the creditors of banks, as it has done during the past few months.

Honourable senators, for many years my arguments have been critical of the provisions of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977. I was not happy when the legislation which was then enacted transferred money to the provinces, calculated on the basis of cost of and support for post-secondary education, but transferred to the provinces in such a way that they could use it in whatever manner they liked. We have already had it stated in this chamber—by myself some few years ago and more recently by other speakers—that in fact a number of the provinces of Canada do not use the moneys which they received under the 1977 legislation in support of post-secondary education at all, but use them as part of the general revenues of the province, and thus for other purposes. The universities and post-secondary education institutions are the ones to suffer. This, of course, is not the fault of the legislation before us. Indeed, it is not the fault of the present Government of Canada. It is a consequence of an action which was taken, and to which I was opposed, in 1977 and which has governed the federal financial participation in the support of post-secondary education for almost the past ten years.

It was my hope, honourable senators, that when this legislation was amended, it would be amended in a way that would improve it and thus improve the lot of the universities and other post-secondary educational institutions in the several provinces of Canada. I would have been prepared to support fairly sweeping changes in order to bring that about.

• (1450)

Unhappily, this legislation does not do that at all. It does just the opposite. I have felt that the federal government had a right to have a presence in the support of post-secondary education and of Canada's universities. I know all the arguments that have been made, that education is a matter assigned by the British North America Act to the legislatures of the provinces, but as the late Dr. Alex Corey pointed out, and as I quoted for the first time in this house back in February 1973 and have referred to once or twice since, the clauses in the British North America Act, if they are read carefully, state that education in and for each province is the subject of legislation and the responsibility for legislation by the legislatures of each province. But that does not mean—and the late Dr. Corey argued very forcibly—that it left it free, and it was even expected that the federal government would concern itself with education for the country as a whole and for the support of projects which were of national significance and which could not readily be accomplished in a country like Canada without the participation of the federal government.

Well, as I say, I am sorry that this situation has obtained for so long and that we are not taking any steps at the present time to improve it. But indeed, as Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough) pointed out in his June 18 speech, it indicates that the federal government is beginning, not to have a higher profile in the support of post-secondary education, but to withdraw from post-secondary education and its support. He pointed out that the cutbacks here would not come out of the tax points but would be in the cash transfer payments, and that if they continued at the level which this legislation commences, in due course the federal government would not be supporting post-secondary education at all, except by the transfer of tax points; and while I do not agree with the arguments of the provincial politicians, I think that Senator Stewart is perhaps more generous toward this interpretation than I am. I do not agree that the transfer of tax points is giving to the provinces money which was theirs anyway. It was money which under the British North America Act was properly collectible by the Government of Canada, and which was assigned to the provinces as part of the device for supporting post-secondary education when the changes were made from the beginnings of support, going back to the 1950s, when there was no question that it was entirely federal money that was granted to the universities—and let us not forget that in the original support of post-secondary education under the St. Laurent government in the 1950s the money was paid directly to the universities in each of the provinces of Canada. It is true that they used the CUF, the Canadian Universities Federation, as it then was, to distribute the money, but the payment was a direct payment of federal money to the universities of the provinces of Canada. The Pearson government wanted to please some of the provinces who did not like that arrangement; so they resorted to other devices—but I must not start to give a history of this situation at this time. If anyone is interested in it, I can direct him to the speech that I made some years ago in which I did trace this long history. It resulted eventually in the 1977 legislation, which is the subject of the amendment we are now considering. In that legislation the moneys were transferred to the provinces, as I say, although calculated on the basis of the cost of and support of post-secondary education—and, I must not forget, also of health services. Payments were calculated with respect to them, but were transferred to the provinces with no strings attached.

It is no wonder, and it should have been contemplated by the Canadian government and the legislators of Canada back in 1977, that this money in some instances would not be used for the purposes which motivated the federal government in making the transfer payments. It was certainly foreseen by me, but my views did not prevail then, nor have they prevailed since; but I shall keep on trying, and I shall keep on speaking in the manner in which I am speaking today.

So, the transfer of moneys with no strings attached leads us to the situation in which we find ourselves today, where we are amending the 1977 legislation, but not in any manner that will help and certainly in a manner which is likely to harm the universities and other post-secondary education institutions in Canada.

I would point out that it is not the provinces that are going to suffer as a result of this amendment to the 1977 legislation. Ultimately, of course, it is Canada's universities that will suffer. I would also point out that Canada's universities, generally speaking—in fact, I do not believe that I really need to put in that qualification—are not in a position where they can be squeezed much harder. Compared with other developed countries, and certainly the countries of the OECD, Canada is not supporting its universities in an extravagant way, but is doing far less. Canada's universities are hard put to make ends meet; and certainly Canada is not supporting research and development, either in the universities or anywhere else in the country, including research establishments and industry, at a level comparable to the support which is being received in the other developed countries.

I would point out that this bill not only decreases the federal government's payments under the established programs financing transfers but it does so at a time when the federal government is cutting back on support of research and development throughout the country; by the amount of moneys that the federal government is making available to the granting agencies, particularly the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, and even the Medical Research Council. So, if the financial situation of the universities is further constrained, then their ability to conduct research and development and to participate with others in the important aspects of R&D is diminished thereby.

As I said before, I had hoped that when the 1977 legislation was amended some of these inadequacies would have been addressed and that assurances would have been provided that federal funds transferred in support of post-secondary education would, in fact, be spent for post-secondary education.

I have not dealt this afternoon with the question that this is, of course, in most respects a lump sum transfer as between education and health, and it is impossible to say whether moneys transferred for health are in one package and those for education in another. Indeed, it is impossible under this legislation for the federal government to insist that the moneys be expended in that way, although it is true that the federal government, when it introduced the six-and-five program, did attempt to give the impression. I do not know whether or not it worked out to be much more than that—that the six-and-five applied to the universities or post-secondary education support, but did not apply to the support of health services in the provinces.

Second, I had hoped that if there were any funds saved by the federal government as a result of amending the 1977 legislation, they might be specifically directed by the federal government to support a category of graduate education, for example, which nearly all provinces—in fact, I believe all of the provinces—would permit the federal government to do without resentment; and certainly that some of the moneys would be directed toward research in the universities, and that they would be directed toward the support of research and development generally.

Well, honourable senators, my sentiments with respect to this legislation are well known and I do not think it is necessary for me to say any more than I have already said. I am disappointed, because it does nothing to improve the state of post-secondary education or the federal government's support thereof. I am disappointed because it will almost certainly result in tightening the financial squeeze on our universities rather than on the provincial governments. I am disappointed that it will do nothing to help research within the universities or, indeed, research and development in Canada's industries and research institutions and in Canada generally. This legislation does only one thing that some would regard as virtuous, and that is it saves some money for the federal treasury. I am glad that money is being saved, because I agree that we should try to reduce the deficit of the country, but I am sorry that this saving has to be made by bearing down so heavily on those institutions which are, if not the least able to afford it in our country, not well able to afford the squeeze that will certainly result as a direct consequence of the diminution of these transfer payments to the provinces of Canada. To me, this legislation is disappointing in the extreme.

● (1500)

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, the other day I said that I would place on the record of the Senate some of my reasons for being so disappointed with this legislation. I commend Senator Hicks who made a case for the universities. This has been his field for most of his life, and he knows the subject probably better than anyone in this chamber, if not in the country. I would like to place on the record my position, especially with regard to health services for the province of New Brunswick.

I do not share the delight expressed by Senator Hicks over the reduction of the deficit. I am not one who believes that deficit financing is necessarily always bad. Nor am I one who believes that at times deficit financing to promote areas in need in this country is something that should be avoided at all costs. I place more importance on the services that are provided to the people of my area of the country than I do on the deficits of the country and of the provinces.

This government has taken the approach that deficit financing is crisis number one. It is as if the Government of Canada is the only government in the western world that used deficit financing over the past few years. That is not the case. For instance, every provincial government of this country—and most of them are Conservative governments—has had higher and higher deficit financing over the past ten years. Our neighbour to the south and most of the countries of the western world have had higher deficits. I do not think that we will see an end to this type of financing for a number of years yet. I shall not try to explain the reasoning behind the statements I have just made. I shall simply suggest that those of us who are involved in Parliament should read, at least once a year, the speech made by Senator Everett in this house just three or four weeks ago on this subject.

Having said that, I would like to place on the record of this house a few facts and figures. They are not my facts and figures. They are facts and figures provided to me by the Minister of Finance of the province of New Brunswick. His name is John Baxter, and he is the Minister of Finance for the Conservative government there. His father was a past Conservative premier of New Brunswick. I must say that I have never met a better Conservative in my entire life.

Senator Frith: That is not so tough.

Senator Thériault: He puts his province ahead of his party, and he wants those of all political parties in New Brunswick to support him in his demand to the Prime Minister of this country that Parliament not proceed with Bill C-96 at this time. I have here his letter which includes charts, and which I would like to table when I have finished with it. Chart 3 of this letter shows that the 1986 EPF formula provides some growth in EPF cash each year, but that growth is much lower than growth under the 1982 formula. Mr. Baxter says that the anticipated growth rates under the 1986 formula are also much less than the cost of health and post-secondary education programs which EPF was designed to help finance. In fact, for 1986-87 and 1987-88 EPF cash under the 1986 formula will grow by less than the inflation rate assumed in the recent federal budget. He goes on to say that this is contrary to what the Prime Minister said last November at the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax. He says that the cumulative effect as a result of these two changes in the original EPF formula will amount to a loss of approximately $465 million to New Brunswick over the period 1982-83 to 1990-91.

Honourable senators, those of us who live in New Brunswick and those of us who have seen the progress made there in higher education and in health services since the federal government became involved, as was stated by my colleague from Halifax, in the days of Prime Minister St. Laurent know that had it not been for the provision of this funding in the Atlantic provinces and particularly New Brunswick—I shall not try to speak for Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia—the services now provided would not be available. What does this legislation do in the long run? How does it affect the ability of the citizens of New Brunswick to make what they would like to be a normal, natural contribution to the welfare of Canada and to the payment of taxes? Post-secondary education in New Brunswick, particularly in the francophone part of the province, has come into its own only in the past 20 years. We are still catching up. We have only one francophone university, and it is only 20 years old. We are trying to compete and provide an education for our people at the University of Moncton so that they will be in a position to go out into the world and compete with students from other parts of the country who have attended universities that are much better established than the University of Moncton and some of the other universities of the province.

Why can the Government of Canada not see what we are trying to do? Why this government is completely blind to the regional disparities that exist in this country is beyond me. In listening to the Prime Minister campaign in New Brunswick in 1984, I was convinced that he understood this country well, particularly the Atlantic provinces and the problems we face there. I thought that for once here was somebody who will really do something.

Senator Frith: It was Norm Atkins.

Senator Thériault: For this entire week I have been sitting in my place in the Senate and in my office looking at the legislation that is currently before the Parliament of Canada. It is obvious that if the Government of Canada was going out of its way to pass a series of bills to directly hurt Atlantic Canada, it could not have done a better job. In fact, four or five of the bills that this house will be asked to pass within the next two days will have a detrimental effect on the well-being of the people of New Brunswick and of Atlantic Canada generally. I am a politician; I have been a politician all of my life. I am a supporter of the Liberal party, but at times I have taken independent positions. In fact, when this legislation was first passed in 1977, I took the position that I thought it was wrong, and I agree with what Senator Hicks has said. At times when the Liberal Party formed the Government of Canada I have taken positions in this and in other places, and I am especially surprised that my colleagues, Senator Simard and Senator Robertson, who are so knowledgeable of the current problems faced by the province of New Brunswick and the government of that province and of what this legislation will do to that province, did not stand up in this chamber and protest this legislation. I know that they have their reasons, but I am surprised they are not here today.

● (1510)

Yesterday I listened carefully to what Senator Macquarrie had to say. I want to say at the outset that I have nothing but the greatest respect for Senator Macquarrie's dedication to a great many causes that I, too, support. I know that education has also been his field. However, I must disagree with him when he says that because of the equalization payments the Atlantic provinces will be treated in the same way as the other parts of Canada. I say to Senator Macquarrie that that is not the case. In the Atlantic provinces, and in particular in New Brunswick, we cannot make do on our own in the fields of education and health services as they can in Ontario, Quebec or all of the western provinces. New Brunswick does not have the tax base or the revenues, and we depend so much more on the Government of Canada for our revenue.

As I said earlier, one of these charts which I have in my possession shows that federal transfers to New Brunswick from 1972 to 1982 averaged 47 per cent of the total expenditure of the Government of New Brunswick. In other words, 47 per cent of those expenditures or revenues came from federal sources and 53 per cent came from provincial contributions. However, if you look at the chart for 1985-86, just one complete fiscal year after the Conservatives took over in Ottawa, you find that the federal transfer share has gone down to 41 per cent and the provincial share has gone up to 59 per cent. Honourable senators, this is happening at a time when the economy of New Brunswick, unlike the economy of central Canada, has not improved. Unemployment in New Brunswick is higher now than it has ever been, apart from the years of the depression in the 1930s. Revenues are more difficult to come by for the Government of New Brunswick for the simple reason that the taxpayers of New Brunswick cannot afford to pay as much tax, because they do not have jobs. That is also the case in Prince Edward Island; it is the case in Newfoundland and, to a large extent, it is also the case in Nova Scotia.

While these events are taking place, the present government, after having been elected with a massive majority of members from the Atlantic provinces, is passing legislation that is directly detrimental to the welfare of the people in those Atlantic provinces. As I said earlier, I do understand loyalty to a party, but I have a hard time understanding why members in the other place and in this place who represent Atlantic Canada have not stood up and protested what I think is a very dangerous trend, as far as this government is concerned, for the people of the area we all represent here and in the other place.

As I said at the outset, the Conservative Minister of Finance for New Brunswick, with whom I shared a seat in the legislature for almost 20 years, sent me a copy of this report. He knew I was going to use it; in fact, he told me to use it. I cannot understand why more people have not used this report. However, I do say to my colleagues from all parts of the Atlantic provinces, watch the legislation, particularly Bill C-75, Bill C-96 and one bill that was passed yesterday. There are three pieces of legislation that directly hurt the economy in an area of this country that is already economically very weak. While I understand that from time to time government supporters are asked to toe the party line, I would hope that even after this legislation has passed our colleagues from the Atlantic provinces who have an "in" with the present government will remind the Prime Minister of his promises during the election campaign. Furthermore, I ask those same colleagues to try to impress upon the Prime Minister, or even upon the Minister of Finance, that there is something lacking here. Somehow in this government the point of view of the Atlantic provinces is not being advanced with as much strength as it was during the terms of past governments.

Honourable senators, I say in closing that for one who has watched this country grow and who has for a number of years participated in provincial governments, I know that it is a long hard struggle for the Atlantic area to remain a part of this great country of ours. I remember when the late John Diefenbaker was Prime Minister of this country and during his term of office legislation was passed creating the Atlantic Development Board. At that time it struck me that at last someone up there in Ottawa realized that the Atlantic provinces were part of Canada and that at last something was going to be done about it. At least it was a beginning. Mr. Diefenbaker was not there very long, but at least he made a beginning; at least he recognized the problem.

Since that time progress has been made, and in 1968 under Prime Minister Trudeau there was a commitment for the advancement of all of the regions of this country. However, looking back now I see that these measures happened because there were people from the Atlantic provinces, such as Allan MacEachen, Romeo LeBlanc and Don Jamieson, who had power, and this, I am afraid, is what is lacking now in the present government. There do not now seem to be any ministers with the power to have their say in that government with respect to the Atlantic provinces, and unless something is done about it I am afraid we are in for a long, tough ride in the Atlantic provinces.

As I said, honourable senators, I will make this paper available. I have permission for the tables to be used. I did not quote from all of the tables, because it would take too long. However, it stresses the point that in 1990-91 we will receive $60 million less in one year than we would have been receiving had the formula not been changed.

Honourable senators, I will not be able to vote for this bill. I would not be able to vote for it even if it had been presented by my party. I hope that other senators feel the same way as I do.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: I wonder whether the honourable senator would be kind enough to entertain a question.

● (1520)

Senator Thériault: Certainly.

Senator Barootes: Thank you. In 1977 when the previous formula based on national averages was replaced by the Established Programs Funding under a Liberal federal government, there existed in this chamber a substantial Liberal majority. Could the honourable senator tell us what that substantial Liberal majority did about that objectionable measure at that time?

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I was not a member of the Senate at that time; I was a member of the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick. I made my views known in the forum in which I had the privilege to sit. I do not know what the Liberal majority in the Senate did at that time, but I can tell my honourable friend that the formula that was passed in 1977 was advanced in 1968 and in 1969 when I was a minister in the government of the province of New Brunswick. That formula was being advanced at that time by the Province of Ontario. To my knowledge it was not a Liberal government that was in power in Ontario at that time. It was also advanced by the Province of Quebec which, I think, had a Liberal government in 1968 and 1969—but in any event a Liberal government was not in power in the province of Quebec when the formula was introduced in 1977.

This measure was agreed to by the majority of the people of Canada, and perhaps served your province and other provinces in central Canada well. I could not object at that time to what the majority of the people of Canada wanted; I was speaking for the people of the Atlantic provinces, but had I been a member of the Senate or a member of the other place at that time, I would have opposed the legislation, as I did in the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, at that time I had something to do with the measure. I was Deputy President of the Canadian Medical Association. We met at the unfortunate time the Minister of Finance, who is now the Leader of the Opposition in the other place, resigned from government. We voiced the same objections to changing to Established Programs Funding that you are voicing today. Our main thrust was that those provinces which were underprivileged resource-wise should be assisted to the greatest extent possible. It appears to me that it was the introduction of the EPF that has led us to these difficulties in these difficult economic times. That is why I asked the honourable senator what this house did with its Liberal majority at that time if they felt it was not sufficient.

Senator Frith: We did the right thing! Whatever we did, it was the right thing.

Senator Thériault: I can tell my honourable friend that if EPF was bad in 1977, it is being made worse today. I hope the honourable senator will support my stand when it comes time to vote on the bill.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I want to stand in my place and say that I cannot support this bill. I am very surprised that my good friend, whom I generally agree with, Senator Heath Macquarrie, has put this bill forward, because he is an Islander and understands the educational system very well, but then I have an excuse for him—it was not his speech. This is the only speech he has ever given from a prepared text in his life. Once the text was removed, he did not know what he had said. That being the case, he was only reading what was given to him, he was a puppet of the government, what he had to say were not his own thoughts and did not come from his heart, because his heart is with the Island, with the people, with the educational system, and is certainly not to see us robbed of $21 million for health care and $40 million for educational costs. He knows, as do all Canadians, that we do not have the opportunity to get more benefits as a result of tax points. He knows, as all Canadians know, that we, as Islanders and Atlantic Canadians, are getting it in the neck again. Even Senator Barootes, that great physician who has just sat down, knows that we should be given special consideration in Atlantic Canada.

What bothers me is that our children will not have an opportunity to obtain a proper education, not because they are not bright and brilliant, because that is what we export most of from Prince Edward Island—brains—but because they will not have the funds available to go on to higher educational institutions. Again, we are being made second-class citizens because of where we live. Again, because we live in that part of Canada, we have to do without new modern equipment in our hospitals, we cannot expand our hospital services and the better specialists do not want to go to that part of Canada because we cannot afford to pay them sufficiently. To have our educational costs and health care benefits cut by the federal government every time we turn around is a slap in the face to the people of Prince Edward Island, not to speak of its hospitals and educational institutions.

I must tell honourable senators that I cannot support this legislation. I would love to be able to support it for Senator Macquarrie's sake. I hope that when the time comes to vote on this bill he will find some reason to buy himself a new shirt so he will not have to support it at that time, because Prince Edward Islanders have asked me to tell them what Prince Edward Island MPs voted for the legislation. I told them I would find that out. They are going to want to know what Prince Edward Island senators voted for this legislation. I do not want Senator Macquarrie's name on that list, because I want him to be with his people.

Honourable senators, I am against this legislation. I could go on for an hour, but I know there are others who want to express their views. I want to voice my concern, because I can see that those planning to go to university in Prince Edward Island will be unable to obtain student loans, that we will be unable to bring in foreign students to our universities, that we will be unable to have any research and development in our universities and that we will be unable to have any of our hospitals upgraded with new equipment in a time of technology change.

I know that my dear, late friend, Florence Elsie Inman, if she were here, would stand and support me. I look forward to Senators Phillips and Macquarrie supporting me.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, Senator Macquarrie spoke in his usual eloquent and elaborate way about this measure. He said that he is convinced that this is a fair bill because all the provinces are to be treated alike, the wealthy and the less wealthy. He said that it is a reasonable bill because, and I quote him:

—it will result in a rate of increase in EPF which exceeds the growth in overall federal program spending.

● (1530)

In other words, he is saying that this is a reasonable bill because it compares favourably with overall federal spending.

I should have thought that a man from Prince Edward Island would have considered the appropriateness of the amount proposed to be spent in relation to the end to be achieved rather than in relation to some other criterion, which may or may not be relevant.

In his speech Senator Macquarrie was so elaborate and eloquent that at times he was obscure. He told us that EPF was discussed with the finance ministers of the provinces on at least six separate occasions and by first ministers in November of 1985. In other words, there was plenty of consultation.

We all know that when there is that much consultation, there must be disagreement. However, the fact of disagreement was not disclosed by Senator Macquarrie.

Then he went on to say that following the conclusion of these federal-provincial consultations the bill was drafted and given first reading in the other place in February of this year. A house legislative committee, he said, "... studied the bill extensively and received submissions from a variety of groups representing labour, medical practitioners, consumers, educators, students, and other interests. The bill was reported without amendment and received third reading last week."

Well, the implication is that at least some of these people who appeared before the committee in the other place supported the bill. He did not tell us how many of the groups who appeared supported the bill and how many were there to attack it vehemently, as did the representatives of the medical practitioners, the representatives of the students and the representatives of the universities. The implication of what he said was that the bill moved through the other house with applause and general support. We all know that that is not true; it was forced through the other house by the use of time allocation.

However, what I really want to say this afternoon is that Senator Macquarrie failed to deal with the content of the report of the National Finance Committee. It is not that he was ignorant of the content of that report, which was made to the Senate on June 10, 1986, because he is a distinguished and active member of the committee. I thought that we would be entertained and enlightened by an explanation of how the government can regard a bill such as Bill C-96, one which cuts hundreds of millions of dollars, indeed, billions of dollars from the support for post-secondary education and health, as "policy neutral". If that is neutrality, let us not have any more of it.

I am sure that the people in the universities, the doctors of the country and the people responsible for financing the hospitals of the country will agree with me that if that is neutrality, it ought to be terminated. But Senator Macquarrie did not deal with that matter, though it was raised, as I said, in the committee. Nor did he deal with the point that what is taking place here is a reduction in the cash transfer. Senator Hicks referred to this earlier.

We know that some of the provinces regard the funds that come from the tax points as part of their general revenue. Consequently, it is the cash transfer which is distinctively the federal contribution to post-secondary education and health service costs in the minds of most people. It is that part of the federal contribution which is being cut by this bill; I thought that we might be shown by Senator Macquarrie that in some way this legislation was not having that damaging effect.

The third point made in our report dealt with the kind of information the government was prepared to put before the Senate. We complained that we were not given adequate information, and I thought that perhaps Senator Macquarrie would have dug out the kind of information that would have enabled us to give this bill passage without sending it back to committee. He has not done that.

This information is important, because it is very difficult to discover exactly what the government is doing through this bill. On the one hand, the government is reducing its contributions under the existing legislation for post-secondary education and health services.

I have made some calculations for certain provinces. The figures I am using are the ones provided by the government in the document entitled "Amendments to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, Bill C-96, An Explanation." It is dated May 1986. There is a table in that document which shows what the entitlements would be under the existing legislation, and what they will be if Bill C-96 becomes law.

I find that during the five-year period 1986 to 1990-91 this bill will cost Newfoundland $131 million and, of course, the costs will go on beyond 1991.

Senator Doodly: Shame!

Senator Stewart: It will cost Prince Edward Island, Senator Macquarrie's home province, $29 million.

Senator Nurgitz: Well said; he ran out the back.

Senator Frith: We got to him.

Senator Stewart: He saw that figure coming. It will cost Nova Scotia $197 million; it will cost New Brunswick $159 million.

Senator Barootes spoke about the bill a moment ago. In order to satisfy him, let me tell him that this bill will cost the province of Saskatchewan $229 million over the next five years. This is how much worse off the government of the province of Saskatchewan will be if Bill C-96 passes than it would be under the flawed legislation to which he referred.

In the case of the province of Quebec, it will cost that province $1,457,000,000 in the five-year period—

Senator Denis: Shame!

Senator Stewart: —for which we have been given figures. That is as far as the projection provided by the government goes.

The Government of Canada is cutting its total contribution to all the provinces and territories by some $5,689,000,000 over the five-year period. Honourable senators, I find it very difficult to think that that is a policy neutral cut.

On the one hand, that is what has happened, but, on the other hand, in two budgets the government has changed the federal basic tax on both persons and corporations. As a result of these changes, some of the provincial governments, probably all those with tax collection agreements, will reap new revenues. The effects of the two Wilson budgets on the revenues of those provinces with tax collection agreements with the Government of Canada were discussed in the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, and we were told that those effects would be positive. In the year 1986-87 the May 1985 budget would produce an overall negative result. It would cost the provinces $75 million, but in that same year the February 1986 budget would give the provinces a positive result of $125 million, so that taking the two budgets together for that one year the result would be that the provincial governments, taken together, would be $50 million ahead. In 1987 the May 1985 budget would produce $170 million more for the provincial governments, and in that same year the February 1986 budget would produce $310 million more for the provincial governments, for a total in that year of $480 million.

● (1540)

We were not given projections for the revenues of the provincial governments beyond those two years. So, on the one hand, we have projections of the costs of Bill C-96, but, on the other, we do not have projections of the revenues flowing to those provincial governments with tax collection agreements beyond 1987-88.

We ought to look at what took place in the legislative committee on this bill in the other place. On June 9, 1986, representatives of the Government of Manitoba appeared before the House of Commons legislative committee to oppose this legislation vigorously. At that time the Honourable Jerry Storie, the Minister of Education in the province of Manitoba, said that the member—and I quote:

—makes the point that the Manitoba government makes before this committee. That is what we are asking for. We do not know, and I challenge the federal government to put on the table, its study of and its assessment of the implications of this bill. It has not been done. It should have been done and we are asking that it be done before the bill proceeds.

That was on June 9, 1986, notwithstanding those many conferences to which Senator Macquarrie referred.

If the Government of Manitoba does not know the implications of the bill, how are members of the Senate to vote on it with confidence when we have not had the benefit of those prolonged consultations?

Then Mr. Don Blenkarn, a member of Parliament, intervened to put, as he said, "some tax implications on the table." He went on to say:

Just to give you a breakdown of that, our figures are that the effect, the impact of our budgetary changes on provincial revenues were at least $200 million in 1986-87, and will be at least $450 million in 1987-88.

To him, the Deputy Minister of Finance for the Province of Manitoba replied:

I guess the first question raised by the member has to do with the numbers regarding the impact of the federal budget on provinces, and I think he quoted a $200 million annual number for 1987. I have that number on a table provided by federal finance to provincial governments on May 23, 1985.

The question I immediately ask is: Why do we not have that table? Why was a table available to provincial governments on May 23, 1985, relative to the impact of those tax changes and yet it is not available to the Senate of Canada?

The assistant deputy minister went on to make other points based on that table, and Mr. Blenkarn disagreed with his interpretation of the table.

Mr. Gannon said:

In 1990, the federal estimate of the impact of the May budget changes on provincial income taxes is to add $1.1 billion to provincial income tax revenues, reduce federal cash payment obligations under health and higher education financing by $650 million, reduce equalization payments to the have-not provinces by $6 million. Now, the net total that one can arrive at from the impact of that 1985 federal budget is positive to the tune of $470 million on provincial revenues by 1990—before the $2 billion cut back.

Mr. Blenkarn replied that the Deputy Minister of Finance of Manitoba did not know what he was talking about when he said there was a small positive result before the $2 billion was subtracted.

Honourable senators, since this is a bill which was introduced in Parliament as a financial measure, I think we should know what the truth of the matter is in this regard.

Mr. Blenkarn went on to say to the representatives of the province of Manitoba—and he speaks with the kind of authority one could have only if one had had access to the financial calculations—that Manitoba had not even mentioned the 1986 budget; then he went on to state:

For example, the change in the personal income tax calculations, as a result of the February budget, increases personal income taxes in the 1986-87 year by $80 million, and in the 1987-88 year by $230 million. It increases the corporate revenue to the provinces by $25 million in 1986-87, and a further $30 million in 1987-88.

Now, I would ask honourable senators to listen to this next statement from Mr. Blenkarn. He said:

What we are really saying to you is that you are getting every bit of cash you are, except what we are trying to do is recapture some of our tax increases so that we can put it toward our deficit.

There we have the cat out of the bag. The Minister of Finance wanted to increase federal revenues, but because of the tax collection agreements with certain provinces, this inevitably meant that those provinces would have increases in their revenues.

Well, he could not allow that to happen. He immediately became covetous—"How am I going to take those increases away from them?"

Senator Frith: "Get my hand back into their pockets."

Senator Stewart: "How are those net increases to be prevented?" Instead of trying to deal with the increases in a direct manner, he decided to attack them through the post-secondary education institutions, the hospitals and the doctors of this country. These are the institutions, these are the people—along with those people who enjoy their services—who are going to pay the costs of recovering from the provincial governments at least a large part of the money that will go to those provinces with tax collection agreements as a result of the tax increase changes brought about by the Minister of Finance. That, honourable senators, is what is really happening here. This is not simply a measure to decrease the deficit so much as it is a means by which to withdraw money from the provincial governments, money which went to them because of the tax collection agreements. Instead of attacking it directly, the Minister of Finance and the government are cutting the cash for health services and education. That is what is happening.

• (1550)

Let us imagine that there is a province in which the balance is perfect, in which the money that goes to the province because of the tax changes is exactly the same as the amount that is taken away because of the reduction made through this bill in the cash transfers for established program financing. The Minister of Finance, the provincial treasurer of that province, may be entirely happy. In fact, he may be quite happy, because he can say to the Minister of Education, "I am sorry, but there has been a cut in the money that you would have got under the previous legislation from Ottawa, and you will just have to do with what you have. It is true that because of the increase in taxation which flowed from the Wilson budgets we are going to have some more money, but we have other things to do with that." So, the money moves from the hospitals, doctors, universities and the beneficiaries of those services to various other provincial programs. That is what is happening under this legislation.

I am surprised that Senator Macquarrie is not on his feet protesting vehemently against this legislation. Indeed, I expect that he will rise and do just that as soon as I have concluded.

Honourable senators, Mr. Storie, the Minister of Education from Manitoba, after these exchanges in committee in the other place, said:

Mr. Chairperson, I am reluctant to enter this debate, but I think the points Mr. Blenkarn is making illustrate the need for further dialogue. The fact is, there are clearly diverse points of view in terms of what is actually happening in terms of transfers to the province.

He is absolutely right. We have been told pretty explicitly what the cost to the provincial treasuries of Bill C-96 will be. But we have not been told, except in very general terms and then for only two years, what the provincial governments with tax agreements—I do not mention Quebec—will get by way of benefit from the two Wilson budgets. As I have said, this legislation has been brought before Parliament as a financial measure. It is defended on the ground that it helps to reduce the deficit. If it is indeed a financial measure, then we ought to be told all the financial facts. We ought to be told the amount of money that will flow to the provinces as a result of the two Wilson budgets, as well as the amount that will be taken away from them as a result of Bill C-96. That is the reason, honourable senators, for my view that we ought to give the government another chance to come clean, another chance to be explicit in the Committee on National Finance.

I will mention the situation of the province of Quebec only in a very general way. The government of the province of Quebec is going to lose $1 billion and more over the next five years; yet, because it does not have a tax collection agreement with the Government of Canada, there will be no direct change in its tax revenues as a result of the two Wilson budgets. That situation has to be explored. I am sure that Senator Macquarrie will join us in the committee in trying to get to the root of this matter. Thus far the government has not put all the facts on the table so that we can know whether this is, indeed, a fair and reasonable bill.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I believe that all honourable senators would agree that this is an important debate and that some very valuable contributions have been made to it. It does seem to me that representatives of those areas of Canada that do not share the general wealth of the nation to the extent to which it is shared by residents in the central provinces are most upset about the provisions of this legislation. While the figures can be argued about a little one way or another, I think that those placed on the record by Senator Stewart indicate that there will be a major loss in revenue for post-secondary education and health services for all of the provinces over the next few years.

Honourable senators, it seems to me that the government has placed far too much emphasis on reducing the deficit. The deficit is part of our problem, but surely a major part of the problem is the fact that we have unused resources and widespread unemployment in this country. Surely there is no substitute for real wealth and for real production. I think that what we need to have in place is a plan for expansion, a plan for growth, a plan for development, a plan for an increase in export markets and a vision for the country in terms of improvement rather than what we are now having to do because of the initiative taken by the government to cut back in expenditures on post-secondary education and on health.

As has already been said, in addition to cutting back expenditures at the university level, we are also cutting back expenditures on research and development. It seems to me that this is a false saving, because, as we cut back from our universities, we are going to pay very dearly in terms of real production and growth because of the falling off in the training that universities can and do provide to Canadians.

It also seems to me that with regard to health care services, this legislation embodies a major move in the wrong direction. Instead of cutting back on expenditures for health, which puts pressure on the provinces to cut back on health expenditures or to increase taxes in a way that might not be helpful to their economies, the emphasis should be directed towards maintaining our contributions to the health care services of this country and to improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the delivery of those health care services.

Honourable senators, I think there is a growing body of public opinion in Canada that takes the view that we are imprisoned by an emphasis upon therapy based on drugs, surgery and hospitalization; that we depend on that sort of therapy to a far greater extent than is warranted. Practitioners in the medical profession in this country have the people as their captives. Their assumption is that they have a near monopoly on the health services that are effective in Canada. Too many of them seem to think that if they can make $100,000 per year, the most important thing is to open it up so that they can make much more than $100,000 per year.

Senator Phillips: Did you check that with Senator Bonnell?

Senator Argue: I suppose that I do not check many things that I say with many people—I wouldn't dare, sometimes. I believe that the evidence put before the House of Commons committee inquiring into this bill demonstrates that there is vast room for change, improvement and increased effectiveness of our health care services.

● (1600)

I believe that some of the best testimony was put on the record by the Canadian Health Association and the Canadian Nurses Association. The Canadian Health Association is a group of Canadian organizations that have banded together to take an interest in the health care field. Its membership includes representatives of health, education, the co-operative movement, the church, social development, labour, consumers, senior citizens, women and agricultural groups, totalling some two and a half million Canadians. The Canadian Nurses Association has a membership of 127,000. Therefore, when they come with proposals to improve the effectiveness of our health care system, they warrant a good deal of attention. They have made many points, two of which are significant. They protest the reduction in moneys for health services, and they put forward suggestions on how the moneys that are there can be spent more effectively.

They have emphasized—and I also emphasized this in a speech I made in the Senate in March of this year—that there needs to be far greater emphasis on preventive health services; that we need to try to keep Canadians healthy, and we need to endeavour to restore their health on a long-term basis, without their being so tied to prescriptions of one drug after another.

Another suggestion is that there should be community health centres. When I was a member of the cabinet I had the honour to propose, and to have accepted, the setting up of a task force to inquire into the present role of co-operatives and their future role, on how they might render improved services to the nation in the years ahead. That task force found that among other things there was much room for co-operatives to play a role in the dispensing of health services on a community basis.

Those organizations further recommend that there should be community or home care programs for the elderly, disabled and post-psychiatric patients, which would improve their lot, their health and their well-being. They also recommend that there should be a cost-shared funding of research programs into the whole medical care system.

It has been advocated that health care professionals—not just medical doctors but a very wide range of health care professionals—should have a role to play, and that health care professionals should include nurses, physiotherapists, nutritionists, psychologists—and, I would add, people dispensing acupuncture, acupressure, meditation, adjustments, massage, nutrition counselling, naturopathy and so on. Those are the kinds of health services that do not always carry a high price tag, but they can be effective in preventing ill health and in restoring the health of many people. Therefore, I believe they should have much greater recognition than they have at present. I would say that those types of procedures are not only efficient in improving the health, longevity and the happiness of Canadians but they can also be dispensed at lower cost.

There should be emphasis on changing life styles, on improved nutrition, and the whole field of improved health services.

There is a growing body of opinion that health services should be increased, that there should be a wider range of health services generally available to the public. There is promotion of health clinics where a wide range of services would be available. There is a growing demand that Medicare should provide coverage for health services of a very wide nature.

During the Easter recess I had the privilege of visiting Whitehorse in the Yukon and discussing this broad question of how health care services could be improved and extended. While I was there I was honoured to learn that a resolution was brought to the Yukon legislature—if we want to use labels—by a Liberal MLA. It was amended by a representative of the NDP government. It was also supported by the Conservatives in the legislature, and so the resolution was passed unanimously. It was framed in such a way as to indicate support of the Yukon legislature for a broadening of health care services in the Yukon over a wide basis. I believe it to be a major first step by one legislative body in this country to make a wide range of health services more readily available.

Dr. Donald Branigan, the Mayor of Whitehorse, was in trouble with the Yukon medical profession because of the type of medical practice in which he was and is engaged. Charges of malpractice, or whatever, were brought against him, and some months ago the first board that dealt with the case was ruled by a judge to be ineligible or unfit to hear the case because, I believe, of a conflict of interest. Therefore, a new board was set up comprising medical people from the province of Alberta, and on June 9 the case was heard in court before a judge, a deputy justice of the Supreme Court of the Yukon Territory. The result is that Dr. Branigan's licence has now been restored. The judge, Judge Stephen Borins, stated that the members of the Yukon Medical Council—I believe three particular members—had a conflict of interest and their accusations fell by the wayside because of that conflict of interest. It was stated also that the Medical Review Board, comprising medical people from the province of Alberta, did not have any jurisdiction over the laws of the Yukon and therefore it was incompetent to hear the case; and the case was dismissed. Dr. Branigan's licence has now been restored. Since that time I have read in the press that the three doctors named by the judge and three additional members of the Yukon Medical Council have resigned.

So, the Yukon Medical Council itself is in rather a sad state of disarray, and my information from sources within the Yukon government is that it is felt that because of the wide-ranging judgment in favour of Dr. Branigan, there is unlikely to be new charges against the type of medical services that Dr. Branigan has been giving. He has the largest practice in the Yukon. Dozens of people have said to me that the kind of health services he dispensed were very effective in improving their health, that when his licence was suspended they had to go back to the regular procedures, involving many prescriptions for drugs, and as a result their health deteriorated. In addition to normal medical practice, this doctor—and he is a full-fledged medical doctor again as of June 9—provides treatment by manipulation, adjustments of the same type given by a chiropractor—and he has his chiropractic certificate—acupuncture, meditation, hypnosis and nutrition. He treats people for candida albicans with nutrition and the drug nystatin. It is the general attitude of many in the medical profession, including medical associations, that this drug has not been scientifically proven for treatment and that doctors who dare treat for candida albicans should have their medical licences suspended. One target of such harassment is Dr. Christopher Scott in Saskatoon.

● (1610)

If I may say so as a layman, I think that there is a lot of very learned medical evidence to the effect that yeast infections destroy the natural immunity system to the point where people suffer and are attacked by various diseases, that there are almost countless people suffering from allergies, yeast infections and this kind of affliction or difficulty which can be treated in very large measure by nutrition, by the administration of one drug instead of many drugs, and that people who have been seriously ill and incapacitated—almost total invalids—for many years often improve miraculously because of this treatment. I am not in any way downgrading, belittling, undercutting or demeaning the major accomplishments of the medical profession of this country. The doctors of this country perform miracles literally every day, and we need their services. However, I do think that the time has arrived for this nation to change or extend its emphasis to promote and provide a wider range of health services to give the consumer a choice, services that in my judgment are preventive of disease and ill-health and that in many ways will restore good health to countless Canadians. All of this can be done under current expenditures and will be more effective on a cost basis than what we are doing today.

This bill is a retrograde bill. It should be opposed. It has been opposed generally by Canadians, and I hope that in the future the mistakes that are made in it will be corrected.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I rise as well as a representative of a have-not province to deplore the actions of the government in regard to this bill. I feel very sorry for the mover of this bill, Senator Macquarrie, who, I believe, shares the concerns of those of us who come from provinces that need the kind of equalization support which followed as a result of the great depression. At that time the Rowell-Sirois Commission proceeded to analyze the finances of all Canadian governments and realized that many of the provinces simply did not have the taxation base to provide the kinds of services which Canadian citizens across the country had the right to expect. The development of federal government grants to provide this equality across Canada was an essential part of keeping this country together. I am surprised when I see some of my colleagues on the other side taking the position that they have taken. For example, there is Senator Doody who was a minister of finance for the province of Newfoundland and who must share the same concerns that we have, knowing the financial situation of his province and the dire needs there. Yet, we see this kind of legislation coming forward.

I am sorry that Senator Roblin is not here, because I have had the opportunity in past years to discuss with him frequently the matter of equalization payments to the provinces. When Senator Roblin was the Premier of the province of Manitoba, he fully understood the absolute necessity of that kind of sharing. Yet, here we are putting the weaker provinces back into a more difficult position. I know that it is said that they will be getting more money, more dollars, but the dollars will not match the needs, because the needs are ever increasing. They are increasing at a more rapid pace than what some provinces can fairly collect from their own sources, and that is the big problem.

Once again we have legislation that protects central Canada to the detriment of the provinces that need help the most. That comment is not made only by people in opposition to the government.

[Translation]

On March 11, 1986, the President of the National Research Council of Canada, Dr. Larkin Kerwin, said the following in the newspaper Le Droit, and I quote:

Canada is on the verge of bankruptcy—

If it keeps going the way it is now, Canada may be bankrupt before the end of the next decade.

—the situation in our universities and research laboratories is not a rosy one and equipment is often obsolete.

"I visited my alma mater last week, and I saw students using the same equipment I used when I was a student 30 years ago"—

[English]

That is the head of the Research Council stating the needs and the problems of the universities. Yet, we find the government withdrawing assistance. The former Minister of State for Science and Technology, the Honourable Tom Siddon, said in an article in the Toronto Star on February 11, 1985, headed "Science Minister Warns of Research Gap":

"The rest of the world is moving ahead of us," said Tom Siddon. "If our economy remains dependent on our major primary resource industries, we're going to go down the tube."

Then he went on to stress the importance of research. Where does much of our initial research begin? In the universities. Research that is not done in the universities is done by the products of the universities, the students who come from the university system. Yet, here we are reducing the national input into those areas. We are reducing it particularly in those provinces that need help the most, the have-not provinces. This course of action is contrary to the real needs of this country.

I understand the problems of the government insofar as the deficit is concerned, but this is not an area in which the government should be trying to recover dollars, because in the long run the cost of what it is doing will be much greater in that it will prevent and retard future development in this country.

Therefore, it seems to me that the senators on the other side of this chamber should at this time be putting pressure on their caucus to ensure that in this particularly vital field of research and university development the poorer provinces shall not be placed in a worse position than they already are.

● (1620)

Therefore, Senator Macquarrie, I do not envy your position. I note that yesterday in your comments you indicated that there had been discussions with the provinces. In fact, I believe you said that there had been six meetings with the provincial ministers of finance. However, if my memory serves me correctly, those provincial ministers of finance did not support this measure. It may be that there were meetings held with them, but I do not think that they were in favour of what is being done. You also stated that the premiers of the provinces had been consulted at the last federal-provincial conference. There again, I do not think that there was support from those premiers.

This government, which stated that one of its great purposes was better understanding with the provinces and better dealing with the provinces, is now doing the very reverse of what they said they would do.

Therefore, I appeal to my friends opposite not to proceed with this legislation. It does not need to be passed today. Let us give it some further thought.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have no intention of unduly delaying adopting the second reading stage of Bill C-96.

However, I feel I must say what I think of the government's decision to adopt this measure that provides for tax transfers to the provinces.

I come from a part of New Brunswick that is certainly not the most developed area of that province, and New Brunswick is certainly not the most developed province in Canada. I do not say this as an excuse for our poor economic performance on the national level, because there are all kinds of historical factors involved, many of them beyond our control. However, at least as legislators we can exercise some control by speaking out against the kind of measures contained in Bill C-96 in its present form.

Earlier, Senator Norbert Thériault referred to a letter he received from the Minister of Finance of New Brunswick. The Minister had, if I am not mistaken, written to all members and senators from that province, because I also have a copy of his letter containing some material that very explicitly supports the position he was taking on behalf of the province of New Brunswick.

Senator Thériault also referred briefly to the precarious financial situation of our French-speaking Acadian university in New Brunswick, the University of Moncton. He could have gone even further, although I am not blaming him for not having done so, but he could have said that the impact of this measure will not stop at the University of Moncton, Moncton as such, because the University also has campuses in Shippegan, in the Acadian peninsula in northeastern New Brunswick. It has another campus at Edmundston, usually referred to as St-Louis-Maillet, because it was the result of a merger of two colleges, one the erstwhile St-Louis University and the other a girls' school called the Collège Maillet.

Therefore the University of Moncton whose main facilities are located in the city of Moncton itself will certainly feel the negative impact of this bill and, needless to say, the consequences will be even more serious on these campuses which, since the university was established about twenty years ago, have been trying to acquire adequate facilities so as to be in a position to provide education for the young francophones of these two regions with a large Acadian or French-Canadian population, as the case may be.

New Brunswick francophones are in a more difficult situation because we do not have access to the financial resources which most English universities in Canada have received through donations and foundations; they have other income that what is available only through governments. We are a young university and, over the past 20-odd years, we have been unable to collect enough trust funds to secure our monetary basis, eventually to be able to have the required facilities, faculty, etc. to compete in the university world.

More than that, Moncton University graduates, like those of the two campuses—Shippegan and Edmundston, because I include them in Moncton University—must compete to earn the few rare places made available to them in Quebec universities. Our young Moncton University graduates—if I may use the term—can only attend Quebec institutions to continue their studies for master or doctorate degrees in particular, although in certain cases the University of Moncton does award such degrees.

Without going into great detail, Quebec universities have set quotas on the number of Acadians or French Canadians that may be admitted to Laval University and the Universities of Sherbrooke, Quebec and Montreal. This situation has been in existence for some time. We can't do anything about this decision, because the Government of Quebec tries to serve its own population first, the young men and women of the Province of Quebec, before opening the doors of its universities even wider to Francophones from other Canadian provinces.

This Bill has a double impact on the remote campuses of the University of Moncton. In very specific terms, this means even less money for facilities on the campuses at Shippegan and Edmundston, less money for the teaching staff, less money for the library; everything is connected. The multiplier effect of this measure may have a devastating effect on the poorest areas in our country. They may never recover.

[Senator Corbin.]

It is absolutely unacceptable that the eastern provinces should be in the situation they are in now and that they should suffer the brunt of the attack. And that is why I want to speak out on their behalf. The government is making a serious mistake, as my colleague, Senator Molgat, said earlier. The impact may not be felt right away, but over the years, we will see a reduction in the student population and university graduates, especially in the poorest areas. A serious lack of funding will be reflected in a drop in the number of people who will be able to get post-secondary training. This is a very cruel way to strike at less fortunate regions. We realize we are not as prosperous.

We joined Confederation to be able to benefit from the advantages of a national union where the rich provinces give more to the poor provinces. The formula suggested by the government does nothing to fulfil the mandate contained in the Confederation agreement.

Another area we have reason to complain about is that of transportation. We survive by the skin of our teeth. It is difficult to produce goods in the Atlantic region when one first has to bring in the raw materials and then ship out the finished product to the markets in central Canada or elsewhere. Despite the relative generosity of the federal Government—we survive thanks to subsidies—we have a very serious problem with transportation.

Some people are going to say: There is another senator from eastern Canada who is holding up his hands to Ottawa. To put this kind of interpretation on my words shows no understanding at all for the desperate economic situation today in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. The government has no right to strike this harshly. For this reason, I oppose this legislation, and I thank you, honourable senators.

• (1630)

[English]

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Macquarrie speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, as one reaches one's anecdote age, if not one's dotage, there are some things that are somewhat amusing. I have always been amused by the warning which Speakers in both houses give about, "If so-and-so stands up, he closes the debate." I have never heard a member say, "Oh, for God's sake, don't let that happen." In any event, shall we say it is a very gentle warning?

I take it that some of my colleagues, notably those who spoke, have certain reservations about my oration of yesterday. If I were docile and easily led, I might take a vow. "After this, it is ad lib all the way." But I am not going to go quite so far. I do sense what is being said. In the olden days when we told jokes they were clean jokes, and the cleanest person you could think of was a clergyman. One of the standard jokes was about the poor old fellow who came to the pulpit and who had left his notes at home. As he floundered, he said: "My dear congregation, today I have left my notes at home. I must depend on God, but I promise you that next Sunday I will be better prepared." With me it is just the opposite. Yesterday I was fully prepared and massively briefed. I am sorry that not all of you were enthusiastic about what I had to say.

I have always thought that Senator Hicks was a man who made short speeches, but was never short on logic and intelligent contribution. I was interested in what he had to say and appreciated very much his comments.

Senator Thériault, with that experience he picked up in New Brunswick and that verve which makes Maritimers what they are, I think also made a great contribution. In a moment or two I may deal with one or two aspects of his eloquent comments.

My old friend, Senator Bonnell, with that sharp partisanship that only Island Liberals really raise to the ultimate in perfection, almost said that because I had surrendered my notes I could not answer Senator Stewart's questions. Now, that was an exaggeration, honourable senators, but not a massive one, if I may say so.

Senator Stewart is a most—I won't say aggressive, because that does not go with his personality—persistent, constant questioner in all of the committees on which I have the honour of sharing membership with him. He is in good form again today. I suppose I could say to him, if I were a man of nasty bent and inclination, that some of his questions might have been processed in the many committee meetings we held. I remember the evening the Honourable Barbara McDougall was before the committee. Questions were asked and answered fully. We adjourned early, I thought, even for an old timer like myself. We could have gone on for two or three more hours. She had a battery of officials with her. All of these things might have been entered into. I could not possibly have been expected to come in yesterday with all of the formulae and all of the great projections in what my colleagues here would say was the ante-penultimate day of this session. That is not the kind of thing you do when you feel the clammy hand of adjournment getting close to you, so I did not do that. If I am remiss, I am also remorseful.

Senator Argue talked about a very interesting trip he had to a place I have never been, the Yukon. I do not know about the value of meditation, but some people think it is a good thing, and some people think massage is a good thing, but I am much too old for that. I believe that his suggestion of enlarging the bounds, to use John A. Macdonald's words about another subject, might be the kind of thing which could be considered. But perhaps not under Bill C-96.

Senator Molgat also made an interesting and short speech. I agree with him about the Rowell-Sirois Report. I do not know of any document that has been more productive and conducive to the development of this country than the outpourings of those excellent people, but, my God, there was nothing in that document that even approached the enormous figures involved in this bill. We have enhanced our generosity and our concern for education, health, and so forth, far beyond those careful days of my fellow Presbyterian, Mackenzie King. But I want to say to Senator Molgat, who is a very skilled reasoner and debater, that I am not upset nor surprised that at all these meetings between the two levels of government the provincial people did not come out and say, "Oh, my God, they are wonderful. We got exactly what we wanted." If you ever hear of a group of provincial politicians coming out from a federal-provincial meeting saying that, you are either dreaming in technicolour or they are talking about something highly unimportant. They always want more, honourable senators; they always want more. Isn't that the nature of the system? As the former Prime Minister used to say, "Isn't that the domestic countervail? Isn't that what makes a federal system work?" Of course they want more. It would surprise me if they went back to their people and said that they were totally satisfied.

I did not say that I believed that the participants at these six meetings were unanimous. But, surely, you cannot say the issue was not canvassed if there were six meetings. They were all there to talk and ask questions. Nobody was taken by surprise. Respecting all of the meetings held over yonder in the other place, I have not suggested everyone thought they were a great thing, but somehow something must have happened to bring about the numerical support of the people in the other place. So, something must have been discussed, something must have been agreed upon and, I guess, something must have been accepted.

● (1640)

Of course, as I said in a recent speech, I would have liked to have more. I do not remember a single curtailment that ever went before either this house or the other that I thought was a good thing. I am, shall we say, an economic expansionist. I like more for the wharves of Prince Edward Island and for the provinces of the west, of course I do.

Senator Olson: You used to support them.

Senator Macquarrie: I would like more for environment, but we cannot really, if we are going to be candid about this, say that "deficit management is a good thing, but not here, and not there, and not there." If everybody advances his particular close-to-the-heart project and says, "Do everything else but that," and of course that applies to us, too, since no one likes salary curtailment, then we will not have a massive effort to bring the finances of this country into order.

After what has happened, surely, whether you are an orthodox economist or unorthodox or nonorthodox, or whether you do not have any belief at all but are just an economist, I do not think that you can make a strong case that it is a bad thing to put the finances of the country in order. I think that every sector must accept that. That is why, after having said that, I believe that it is of enormous importance to remember what—if I may be so immodest to say—I said yesterday, namely, that of all the sectors this part of our economic expenditure in these fields has been sustained to a very high degree.

My good friend, Senator Bonnell, suggests, laughingly of course, that I should be in sackcloth and ashes when I go to Prince Edward Island. As a—I will not say old-time educator—long-time educator, I have had some figures extracted, and it seems to me that they are not all that bad. The figure for Prince Edward Island spent in education in the year 1984 was $21.1 million. That is quite a little sum in P.E.I. In 1985-86 does it go down? No, it is $22.7 million. And, then, the figure for 1987-88—and I am not going to weary anyone by continuing for years and years, we will stop there—is $25.5 million. You cannot say that we are being tied down, harassed, pushed in penury. Is it that bad? I think not.

Senator Thériault is in the category we used to call a “tub thumper”, and that is what we need—a good rousing speaker. He talked about the Atlantic provinces. The Atlantic provinces are far dearer to me than the Conservative Party, although I like it pretty well, too, but I have no hesitation in defending the grand old party of John A. Macdonald, because I have lived long enough to see a Conservative government or two in—although they are never in too long.

The government that brought new hope, new spirit to Atlantic Canada was the government of John Diefenbaker. Senator Thériault mentioned the Atlantic Development Board; I would say first the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Act. If anyone wants to think of reviving those, they will have one here who is all in favour of it.

We were given an inspiration, because someone up here saw that injustices had crept into the working of the system, and we benefited from many measures of that time, such as the Roads to Resources and the tremendous assistance to our technical schools. Then by—I will not say devious—interesting ways, we were assisted through other forms of education. Our provinces were moved forward and given a chance to move themselves forward. So, I do not believe that this PC government is one which has a hard attitude toward the needs of my part of the country, and I will never feel that it is necessary for me to apologize for them.

To indicate, honourable senators, that I took very seriously Senator Stewart's question, I sent the inquiry up on high—well only as high as the Department of Finance; this is not a sermon on the mount—and I have a tremendously good answer for him. The memorandum reads:

As prescribed in the legislation, the total contribution under EPF consists of a cash and tax transfer. The provinces and the territories are expected to receive over $9 billion from the federal government in EPF cash payments in 1986-87, and $7.7 billion in tax transfers.

The tax portion of the EPF contribution represents the value of taxes which the federal government reduced at various times in the past in order to allow provinces to increase their taxes to finance these programs without increasing the total burden on the taxpayer.

The final paragraph states:

The cash transfer is the difference between the total entitlement and the currently estimated value of 13.5 points of personal income tax and 1.0 points of corporate income tax plus the equalization associated with these tax points which is paid under the general equalization formula.

Senator Frith: Divided by item A.

Senator Macquarrie:

Quebec's tax transfer is 16.5 points, which is proportionately larger than other provinces, because this province took advantage of contracting-out arrangements in the mid-1960s.

That is the end the memorandum, for which I am somewhat thankful.

Senator Frith: After that it gets complicated.

Senator Macquarrie: I conclude by restating my appreciation of the excellent addresses I have heard, and for the generous, and I am sure sincere, commiseration that was extended to me, and by repeating what I said yesterday: Despite the fact that we would like more, it seems to me that in the realities of the situation in mid-summer 1986, perhaps there is not much better we can do than expedite the passage of this reasonable, equitable, fair—

Senator Frith: Steady.

Senator Macquarrie:—piece of legislation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, will Senator Macquarrie answer a question? If the bill receives second reading, does he propose before third reading to send it for reconsideration by a committee, namely, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance?

Senator Macquarrie: I will refer this to someone higher up again; but I think that is what we will do.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if I may take advantage of the opportunity to stand, the committee is certainly willing to accept the legislation and look at it a second time. However, I had hoped that Senator Macquarrie's very brilliant and informative address would have solved all the problems and stilled all the questions that honourable senators might have had.

Senator Muir: He was very convincing.

Senator Doody: That's right. He certainly convinced me. I was starting to get a bit worried about Newfoundland's position, having heard from Senator Molgat, but Senator Macquarrie stilled that fear and I am much more relaxed right now.

If it is the Senate's wish to re-examine the bill, a room has been provided in which the committee can meet at 8 o'clock this evening. If he so wishes, Senator Macquarrie can refer the bill to committee rather than move third reading.

● (1650)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, following the remarks of Senator Doody, I would point out that although a room has been provided for 8 o'clock, the committee does not have authority to sit while the Senate is sitting. If the Senate is still sitting at 8 o'clock, that matter will have to be considered at that time.

Senator Doody: I have a motion which would cover that, if necessary.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

MARINE ATLANTIC INC. ACQUISITION AUTHORIZATION BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, for the second reading of the Bill C-88, intituled: "An Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto".—(Honourable Senator Rowe).

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I hope no one is intimidated by the fact that I have a batch of notes, because I will not be using all of them. I recognize that we all have an obligation at this particular time to try to expedite our business—without, of course, taking too drastic measures.

I want to extend my congratulations to Senators Macdonald and LeBlanc, who have spoken on this matter and who, indeed, drew attention to certain points which I intended to deal with when my turn came. I will proceed with one or two others which I think need to be dealt with at this particular time.

I do not think there is any need to go into any great detail in this matter, because that has already been done by the Newfoundland representatives and by other representatives from eastern Canada in the other place.

I do want to say a few words about Canada's obligations under the Terms of Union. Some reference has already been made to that and I want to go into that further. The Terms of Union, which came into force on March 31, 1949, contain a direct clause dealing with this matter which is embraced by this legislation and also contain an indirect obligation which was inferential or implicit rather than direct.

One of the direct clauses or statements was that the Government of Canada would undertake to put into service between North Sydney, Cape Breton, and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, a ferry when the Government of Newfoundland had completed a modern, paved highway from Port aux Basques to Corner Brook. That, by the way, although it was not recognized as such, was the real reason that in the initial building of the TransCanada Highway in Newfoundland concentration was put on the west coast of Newfoundland where there was a relatively small population at that time. Corner Brook, of course, was an exception. The reason for that was quite obvious: If you were going to have a transinsular highway, then you had to start at the point where the ferry from the mainland of Canada reached Newfoundland. Canada had the obligation to build that ferry and put it in service. This was stipulated in the Terms of Union. It was to be a ferry that would, in addition to carrying passengers, be capable of carrying a reasonable number of motor vehicles.

The other implication in the Terms of Union—and I have to be careful with my words, because lawyers have already spent hours arguing about this point—was that Canada would take over the new railway and would operate it. The words were, "that Canada will assume the responsibility for the operation of the Newfoundland railway."

There was never any doubt in the minds of Newfoundlanders that implicit in that clause the operation of the railway would be continual. I will make a statement here right now which I may have made before, and it is this: If on March 31, 1949, the people of Newfoundland had known that the Newfoundland railway was going to be closed down or seriously curtailed, then I can state without any qualification whatsoever that, number one, Newfoundland would not have become a province of Canada and, number two, it would today be a state of the United States of America.

I will make a few further comments on the matter of the ferry services. I and many others from Newfoundland have been pretty critical of Canada's approach to Newfoundland. The railway is only one example of my criticism, but there are others. For some reason—and I do not know what it is but I think most Newfoundlanders would agree with me—the Government of Canada has always leaned over backwards to try to give Newfoundland a good ferry and coastal service. Yesterday Senator Macdonald referred to one ferry service from North Sydney to Port aux Basques. He also referred to one that is still in operation from North Sydney to Argentia, which is in the southeast portion of Newfoundland and which is a much longer route than the one to Port aux Basques. In addition to that, Newfoundland has had to and still does rely to a great extent upon a coastal service. I think I am only being fair when I say that Canada's general attitude towards a coastal service has been a good one. I would go so far as to say that it is almost beyond reproach.

• (1700)

Honourable senators, one reason for my view that this bill should be given a chance—and I think that most of the Liberal members of the Senate are likely to vote for it—is that it will give the Government of Canada an opportunity to rectify some of its errors, some of its mistakes of omission and commission, particularly of omission. The legislation, if implemented, will give Canada an opportunity to do what it should have done several decades ago.

I believe that in an earlier speech I referred to the MacPherson Royal Commission on Transportation, which was carried out in the early 1950s. That commission drew to the attention of the people of Canada and the Government of Canada the uniqueness of Newfoundland. I will not go into great detail, because I think that most senators are familiar with its findings, but the commission stated without any equivocation that Newfoundland required and was entitled to special treatment in respect of transportation, not just in respect of a ferry service. It was pointed out that there was no way in which Newfoundland could ever play its potential role in terms of its resources—the fisheries, forests, water power and minerals—unless special consideration were given to Newfoundland's development.

Honourable senators, beginning in the early part of this century, Newfoundland has suffered a great emigration to the United States and, to some extent, to Canada. As a matter of fact, the Governor of Massachusetts once told me that the biggest group in that state—and this was some years ago—was made up of Newfoundlanders and their descendants. One might ask the question: Why would this be so? Why would there be such a tremendous emigration over the years? The reason is very simple: The opportunities did not exist in Newfoundland, and people left to pursue those opportunities elsewhere, particularly in the area around Boston. As a matter of fact, save during the two world wars, there has never been any period during which there has not been a relatively vast emigration of Newfoundlanders to New England. Apart from the two wars, there has always been this haemorrhage of Newfoundland talent and ability to the United States and to other areas of Canada—Toronto in particular. Honourable senators, that haemorrhage is going on again right now. Newfoundland has the highest unemployment rate in Canada. Thousands are being turned out by its great university, and these students, many of them with graduate degrees, have no opportunities in Newfoundland so they take off. I am sure that most Newfoundlanders and most Canadians hope that they would remain, but the opportunities are just not there.

The charge has been made that apart from changing the name and one or two other minor things, this proposed legislation will not accomplish anything. Perhaps that is a slightly harsh criticism. The least we can do is to give it a chance to work. I do not know what its effect upon Newfoundland will be if it becomes law—the effect may be negative. One or two of the speakers in the other place expressed their fears in that regard. The effect may be purely innocuous; the legislation may mean nothing one way or the other.

I regret that I am concluding on a negative note, but I have to do so. I say again that if the ultimate effect is to leave Newfoundland with fewer jobs, as has been charged, and with higher transportation costs, then the people of that province will once again be baffled, disappointed and frustrated. If that happens, honourable senators, I do not know what it could lead to, but I fear that it could bring about far more undesirable developments than we have seen in the past.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

[Senator Rowe.]

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I do not think there is much I can usefully add at this point. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of Senator Rowe, just as I did to those of Senator LeBlanc yesterday. Senator LeBlanc was especially concerned with two points. One was that the management might change the location of the head office without prior consultation with government or anybody else. And that is a concern, because when you are dealing with a crown corporation in these matters you are in a very delicate position. If you tell them that they must do this or that, you are criticized for using political influence; if you do not do so, the people who are affected criticize you for not doing something about it. So, we shall have to wait and see what we can do. If such a thing might happen, then we may see whether it can be prevented. I do not believe there will be any change from the present setup. At one time they located the Marine office in Moncton and it operated out of there for a good many years. I might say that I was somewhat surprised myself when I found that it was operating out of St. John's. In those days I was more active in politics than I am now and I sent a letter to CN Marine. I received a most courteous answer, but that reply came from St. John's whereas I had sent the letter to Moncton.

● (1710)

I listened to Senator Rowe with a great deal of interest, because certainly he has a vast knowledge of Newfoundland, its history, its present circumstances and its hope for future development. I do not believe that this bill will have much effect on Newfoundland. It merely changes the name to Marine Atlantic Inc., making it a crown corporation rather than a subsidiary of the CNR, and I do not expect that there will be much difference in the present situation. Certainly it should not affect the employment situation adversely.

However, on the other side of the picture, I should like to add that I hope that if and when it becomes a crown corporation it will retain its close connection with the CNR, and that the CNR will continue to put most of its freight through the port of North Sydney rather than through some other port in Nova Scotia or the Atlantic provinces.

Of course, the bill has little to do with the railway system in Newfoundland. I fully agree with Senator Rowe that under the Terms of Union Canada is obligated to maintain the railway as a going concern. Recently I was glad to see that the Minister of Transport had provided funds to upgrade the railway and to keep it in operation.

Senator Hastings: For how many years?

Senator Macdonald: For five years, or something like that. I hope that if the bill becomes law there will be no adverse effect on either Newfoundland or Nova Scotia.

Senator LeBlanc expressed his concern that user fees might be put into effect through this legislation or through some other proposed legislation. I believe he is right that there should be no question of user fees in connection with any of these ferries, particularly those that have been set up because of constitutional obligations assumed by Canada. Certainly the Atlantic provinces would be opposed to any kind of user fees in connection with these ferries.

In conclusion I wish to thank those honourable senators who have spoken to the bill, and particularly Senator Rowe for his contribution to this debate. He is always interesting. He is a knowledgeable person who readily shares his knowledge with us.

With those few remarks, I recommend second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, we are, of course, pressed for time. I believe the subject matter of the bill has been well covered and, unless Senator Rowe insists, I suggest that we not send the bill to committee but that we give it third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Robert Muir moved the second reading of Bill C-45, respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament.

He said: Honourable senators, I am rather pleased to introduce the second reading of Bill C-45, respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament, because it is a progressive step toward reforming the labour relations process on Parliament Hill. It is based on legislation that was first proposed by the Standing Committee on Management and Member Services of the House of Commons and unanimously supported by all three political parties. It is an historical step in that for the first time parliamentary employees will be able to enjoy a modern and responsible statutory framework within which a positive approach to labour management relations can be achieved.

Given the subject matter of the bill, I think it only appropriate that I begin my remarks by acknowledging the tremendous contribution of all parliamentary employees, for it is their professionalism and dedication that makes this institution function.

● (1720)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Muir: Each employee, whether he or she is employed in the Senate, the House of Commons or the Library of Parliament, plays a unique and vital role in the effective operation of this institution. I refer to the Hansard reporters, to those who polish the brass and wax the floors, to the security staff, the messengers and all others involved in the many facets of employment on the Hill. I am unable to refer to all of them at this moment, but they can rest assured that I feel toward them as I have indicated.

If I may, I would like to relate a short anecdote. Some years ago, while walking through the tunnel to the West Block to a committee hearing with a member of my party from the Toronto area, various people passing us, whether a security guard, a messenger or someone from Public Works or whoever, would say, "Hi, Mr. Muir," and I would respond. After a while, this sharp young man from Toronto turned to me and said, "You talk to everybody. Who are they?" I said, "Some of them I know and some of them I do not." He said, "You are like the village idiot; you talk to everyone." I said, "Hold on. Let's stop right here. Just a moment. You are a newly elected member. These people who have been passing by are just as important as you will ever be, and as any senator or elected member, because they do a job for people and they do it well. I trust and hope that you do not act like that in your riding, because if you have that attitude you are a 'one-termer'." He did not appreciate my comment. I went on to tell him that where I come from we talk to everyone; we appreciate what people do for us and we try to do what we can for them. But I told him that he would be a "one-termer", and I am happy to report that he was defeated in the next election.

Honourable senators, Parliament has grown rapidly over the past several years. It is now a large and complex institution. Unfortunately, this growth has not been paralleled by the creation of a modern system of labour relations. As a result, parliamentary employees do not enjoy the benefits of a contemporary labour relations regime tailored to the special circumstances of Parliament. This bill will resolve that problem in a fashion.

I would like at this time to review some of the history that has led us to this important moment, for it is that history that provides the context for the action we are taking today. The subject of collective bargaining rights for employees of Parliament has been under discussion for some time. In the formal sense the subject was first considered in 1967 by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service during the committee's deliberations on Bill C-170, the Public Service Staff Relations Act. In its report of February 3, 1967, the committee stated:

Your committee recommends that consideration be given to the introduction of legislation to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Library of Parliament Act to extend to the employees thereunder advantages and rights similar to those provided public servants under Bill C-170.

Unfortunately, no further action was taken with respect to this recommendation.

On a number of occasions since 1967, private members have tabled bills in the other place that would have provided a legislative framework for collective bargaining by parliamentary employees, and questions have also been raised in the other place. One such question prompted the undertaking of a study on this matter in 1982. The report that followed, known as the Weir Report after its author Robert Weir, was tabled in the House of Commons in February 1983. That report analyzed the issue and outlined a number of options, but made no recommendations.

The Weir Report was referred to the Standing Committee on Management and Member Services of the House of Commons for further study in February of the same year. In late 1983 that committee, with the assistance of the Privy Council Office, developed draft legislation on this subject. Events leading up to the election in 1984 and the change of government which resulted precluded immediate action on this matter, even though the then President of the Privy Council, the Honourable André Ouellet, promised to move swiftly in the new Parliament with such legislation.

Honourable senators, Bill C-45 has three principal aspects. First, it provides a collective bargaining framework for parliamentary employees that is very similar to that contained in the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Second, it makes Part III of the Canada Labour Code applicable to parliamentary employees, whether or not they are organized. Part III regulates labour standards, including such items as vacations and hours of work. Finally, the bill makes Part IV of the Canada Labour Code applicable to all employees. As most of you know, Part IV regulates such items as occupational and safety standards.

As indicated, the bill itself is based very closely on the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The logic of this parallelism is readily apparent. Notwithstanding the special place Parliament occupies in our governmental system, the role of parliamentary employees is similar to that of public servants generally. It is my view that the labour relations framework that governs the Public Service commends itself very strongly to the parliamentary scene because of this fact. With specific exceptions, the bill provides that parliamentary employees are entitled to organize and bargain collectively. The exceptions are with respect to persons employed in a managerial or confidential capacity, to persons employed in the offices of senators and members of the House of Commons, all of whom are members of Parliament, and to caucus research groups. They will not have access to the bargaining provisions set out in Part I. These exceptions are in line with the all-party recommendations of the House Standing Committee on Management and Member Services, based on its assessment that such persons occupy positions of particular trust and sensitivity. However, I wish to emphasize that in an effort to protect employees excluded from collective bargaining, we have included additional provisions to those included in the all-party recommendations to which I have just referred.

Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code will be made applicable to all parliamentary employees, whether they are organized or not. In this way, honourable senators, minimum protection with respect to working conditions and labour standards will be available to all.

[Senator Muir.]

• (1730)

Part I closely resembles the Public Service Staff Relations Act which presently governs labour relations in the federal public service. The Public Service Staff Relations Board is established as the advisory body to administer this legislation.

Parliamentary employees will now have the right to present a grievance concerning various matters relating to the terms and conditions of their employment, and Part I provides that certain of these grievances may be pursued through to adjudication.

The certification process under Bill C-45, which is also located in Part I, will be very similar to that which exists under any modern labour relations statute. Certification applications will be made to the Public Service Staff Relations Board. The PSSRB will conduct hearings and have the power to determine the appropriateness of the bargaining units and the certification of bargaining agents.

Honourable senators, this bill has undergone careful study in the other place and has been amended following representations made in that all-party committee. What we have before us today is a fair and progressive piece of legislation, as far as it goes—and I will go further into that a little later—that addresses the concerns of Parliament Hill employees in the area of labour relations. As my colleague, the President of the Privy Council, stated when he introduced this bill:

The government believes that this legislation strikes a careful balance between the legitimate expectations and aspirations of parliamentary employees with the public expectation that the central institutions of government be able to function without disruption.

Honourable senators, parliamentary employees have waited long enough—indeed, as far as I am concerned, they have waited far too long. They have been more than patient and they continue to serve us with the same spirit of co-operation and dedication. If I may, I would like to refer to what was said in the legislative committee on this bill. During a wind-up session Mr. Lewis from the Conservative Party had this to say when referring to this bill coming before the committee:

I think the system has worked and I think we have come out of here with a much better bill than we came in with, as a result of the system working.

Madam Mailly of the Conservative Party had this to say:

I would also like to congratulate my constituents who work in the House of Commons, and particularly the clerks of the House as well as the two library employees who have done such a thorough job on this and helped us to come up with a bill which, I believe, will provide our employees with the protection they have needed for a long time.

Mr. Cassidy from the New Democratic Party said:

Mr. Chairman, I would like to echo the comments made by Mr. Lewis and by yourself and by the members, and thank you for chairing the committee. While I think members know I have still my party reservations about the bill, it is certainly improved a good deal from what was there before. Even if it is far from perfect, at least it gives a start on something that should have been done many, many years ago.

Ms. Cops of the Liberal Party said:

... I would like to say that although everybody has reservations about everything, I have certainly enjoyed the experience.

I listened to the debate in the other place last night until approximately 8.45 and there were many amendments proposed and different discussions that took place. However, the bill passed in the other place and I, personally, would like to commend Senator MacEachen for his comments earlier this afternoon, which were most important. I bow to the wisdom of a person who has been the Minister of Labour and has held many portfolios in government. This afternoon he brought up an extremely important point that had previously been discussed with our Deputy House Leader, Senator Doody, and with Senator Frith. I have personally discussed this bill with different employees and they seem to feel that we are moving in the right direction. However, as Senator Frith said yesterday during another debate, and said it as eloquently as he does so many things in the course of debate—and I am paraphrasing: "Politics makes strange bedfellows." Situations make strange bedfellows.

I find myself in the situation of a person who has been involved in the labour movement for many years, as Senator MacEachen knows. I have helped organize unions; I have organized the signing of cards; I have been on strikes—legal and illegal; I have been on wildcat strikes, picket duty and so on. Throughout my activities in the labour field the one thing I always opposed was compulsory arbitration. In this instance, as you all know, for many different reasons there is no right to strike contained in this bill and all disputes shall finally be settled by compulsory arbitration. That creates a bit of a dilemma for me, but as Senator Frith said: "Situations make strange bedfellows."

Honourable senators, I have done a great deal of soulsearching and I do believe that this bill is the best that can be achieved at the moment. I therefore urge all honourable senators to support this bill and to give it speedy passage through the Senate so that the collective bargaining process on the Hill can begin without further delay.

To repeat again, I understand that arrangements are being made to have this bill considered in committee. I hope that that takes place as soon as possible, because we should not waste any more time in passing this most important bill. Therefore, honourable senators, when the bill comes back from the committee, where I am sure it will be gone into very thoroughly, I will commend its passage to all honourable senators.

With those few words, I move second reading of this bill.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it has been suggested that it might be convenient for the Senate to ignore or stop the clock before it reaches six o'clock so that we can attempt to dispose of some of the business we have before us this evening. If we do that, perhaps we can manage at least to introduce the second readings of the bills that have reached us this afternoon.

Therefore, if it is agreeable to honourable senators, we will move on with our work and stop the clock at six o'clock.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, politics may make strange bedfellows, but certainly the choice of Senator Muir to sponsor this bill on behalf of the government was not an example of the operation of that maxim as far as competence and appropriateness are concerned. Perhaps on the issue of compulsory arbitration, which was the point upon which Senator Muir raised the principle, it may be "strange bedfellows," but otherwise it was an excellent choice. I found his intervention straightforward, informative and impressive, and I mean that sincerely. When Senator Muir speaks on labour matters, he speaks from a great deal of experience—experience that commands respect and support—and we on this side of the house mean to support him on his motion.

• (1740)

If I can just make one parenthetical comment about politics making strange bedfellows, I do not know how many of you remember when Governor Wallace was prevented by the Constitution of his state from running for a third term. So, he nominated his wife. She in fact won. When he nominated her, the story in Time magazine was headed, "Bedfellows Make Strange Politics".

Honourable senators, the reservations that we have with respect to the immediate passage of this bill were expressed by Senator MacEachen when leave was sought earlier this day to proceed with second reading later today. Those reservations can be given attention if this bill is referred to committee. I understand that the committee prepared to accept the bill—and I think it is the appropriate committee—is the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, since the legal status of the employees of the Senate can best be explained by the members of that committee.

Honourable senators, with the assurance from Senator Muir that this bill will be referred to the said committee before receiving third reading, we should immediately give it second reading for all of the reasons he has explained, and which I support. The committee can then consider the bill tomorrow morning and report to the Senate when it meets later in the morning.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Muir, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard moved the second reading of Bill C-111, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

He said: Honourable senators, amendments contained in Bill C-111 fall into three categories: first, provisions which provide for preferential duty-free entry for goods imported from the Commonwealth Caribbean; second, miscellaneous amendments to tariff nomenclature and rates to respond to recommendations from the Tariff Board and the needs of the private sector; third, an amendment to Bill C-38, an act to amend the Customs Tariff relating to the prohibition on the importation of obscene material and hate propaganda.

Honourable senators are aware that Canada has an important role to play in assisting developing countries to meet their economic development goals.

[Translation]

As honourable senators also know, Canada's external policy acknowledges the existence of a "special relationship" between Canada and Caribbean Commonwealth members countries. The commercial and economic ties between Canada and those countries date back to the days before the advent of Canadian Confederation. These historic ties are re-inforced by the fact that Canada and the Caribbean countries share a common language, that their democratic institutions are similar, and that they are members of the Commonwealth.

[English]

Because of this "special relationship" this government has responded positively to a request made to the Prime Minister. The Commonwealth Caribbean heads of Government asked Canada to institute a package of trade, development assistance and double taxation measures to assist them in their economic development efforts.

This bill makes provision for the cornerstone of Caribbean, as these measures are to be known. It provides for the duty-free entry of the vast majority of imports from these countries.

In deciding on the scope and coverage of the duty-free provisions of Caribbean, Canada had to balance its foreign policy objectives to assist developing countries with the interests of certain sensitive sectors in our economy.

Generally, our consultations with Canadian industry revealed that there was broad support for this initiative among Canadian manufacturers, provided that certain safeguard mechanisms were integrated into the Caribbean duty-free provisions. Specifically, manufacturers wished the government to ensure that only goods which were actually produced in the Commonwealth Caribbean qualified for duty-free entry. They also wished to be able to make their case to have duty-free rates withdrawn should imports of particular products under Caribbean cause Canadian-produced goods to become uncompetitive in the domestic market.

This bill responds to these concerns by providing for "rules of origin" to be established and by allowing the Governor in Council to withdraw duty-free rates in cases of injury, or threat of injury, to domestic producers.

[Translation]

The Tariff Board will be asked to accept and examine applications for the withdrawal of duty-free entry from Canadian manufacturers. All parties concerned, including manufacturers from the countries involved—Caribbean Commonwealth members countries and (or) their governments—will have an opportunity to make representations to the Tariff Board when it holds public hearings to consider these applications.

[English]

Although there was, as I have mentioned, broad support for providing duty-free entry under Caribbean, there were some manufacturers, however—notably in the textile and clothing, luggage and handbag and leather garment sectors, and in two sub-sectors of the petroleum industry—that expressed strong reservations. They felt that duty-free imports from the Commonwealth Caribbean could cause them injury. In view of this concern, these sectors are excluded from duty-free entry under Caribbean.

With the exception of these exclusions, duty-free access is being extended to all other imports, including a large number of goods which currently are not manufactured in or exported to Canada from the Commonwealth Caribbean. When combined with other aspects of Caribbean—for example, training seminars for the trade commissioners of these countries—there will be an opportunity for Commonwealth Caribbean countries to identify new opportunities in the Canadian market and to increase their export earnings over the medium term.

[Translation]

Since the Caribbean duty-free provisions stray from the basic GATT principle of non-discriminatory treatment—or the most favoured nation clause—Canada is now seeking an exemption from this GATT commitment so as to be able to follow up on this initiative. There are precedents for this kind of preferential trade agreement, so we are confident that our endeavours will be successful.

[English]

The Prime Minister gave an undertaking to his Commonwealth Caribbean counterparts that trade would begin to flow under Caribbean by mid-1986. Therefore, these provisions of Bill C-111 are effective as of June 15, 1986.

Honourable senators, I should like to turn now to other provisions of this bill which make a number of amendments to the Customs Tariff, most of which were effective as of February 27, 1986. The most important of these I will now outline:

[Translation]

Honourable senators are also aware of the importance this government attaches to the removal of barriers which hinder disabled citizens. Consequently, this bill provides for the duty-free entry of articles specially designed for guide-dogs for the blind. Similarly, to ensure that Canadians of all religious denominations are treated equally, religious ancestral shrines will also enter the country duty free, as was already the case for previously identified religious articles not available from Canadian producers.

The Customs Tariff is also amended to implement a number of recommendations in Phase II of the Tariff Board's report on tariff items applicable to goods not manufactured in Canada.

● (1750)

[English]

Furthermore, a technical amendment to section 15 of the act is being proposed to ensure that the government can respond quickly to the needs of the agriculture community in the implementation of seasonal rates of duty on imports of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Several other amendments take action on representations received from the private sector for tariff changes which respond to evolving needs.

For example, Canadian tourists returning from the United States who are entitled to the annual $300 duty and tax free "tourist exemption" will now be able to ship goods and claim them as part of their exemptions. Previously, only Canadian tourists returning from countries beyond the continental limits of North America were entitled to claim shipped goods.

Large size off-highway tires will be accorded duty free entry, as will backhoes and power shovels used in mining operations, none of which is available from Canadian production.

Honourable senators, when this bill was introduced into the House it contained provisions to provide for duty-free entry for certain semiconductor devices and computer parts. These amendments were proposed as part of an agreement between Canada, the United States and Japan to eliminate tariffs on these goods effective January 20, 1986, but as was announced in the House on June 2 by the Minister of Finance, these provisions were deleted during the consideration of this bill by the House and the previous rates of duties on these goods were reinstated as part of the measures taken in response to the U.S. tariff action affecting Canadian exports of red cedar shakes and shingles.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, you have in your possession the Eighteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce which was tabled yesterday. This report mentions a number of apprehensions on the part of the Canadian manufacturing sector, which objects to the measure I referred to earlier, namely, the re-imposition of a 3.9 per cent and 5.4 per cent tariff on semiconductors and computer parts.

I will go into this very briefly, and in fact, I quote:

In testimony before the Committee, the Canadian Business Equipment Manufacturers Association and the Canadian Advanced Technology Association strongly opposed the decision to reinstate tariffs on semiconductor devices and computer parts. Both organizations expressed support for freer trade with the United States . . .

That makes at least two major associations who are speaking out in favour of free trade, and we are delighted. However, both associations voiced concern that the move may set back recent initiatives for trade liberalisation between our two countries.

They also argued that the reimposition of the tariffs would cause more harm to Canada than to the United States, against which it is directed. The tariffs will not divert purchases of computer parts and semiconductors from the United States, since purchase decisions concerning these items are based overwhelmingly on technical performance specifications and availability, not price. Canadian producers of computer parts and semiconductor devices, therefore, will not be helped.

However, the departmental witnesses admitted that the reinstatement of duties would have some effect on Canadian producers and consumers, but explained that the choice of measures to use in response to the U.S. imposition of tariffs on Canadian shakes and shingles was severely circumscribed by provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

In concluding, the committee recognizes that, having made the policy decision to respond to the U.S. tariffs, the Government had to resort to this narrow range of products. I insist, the effect will be minimal. This is indeed a very small range of products, semiconductor and computer parts being principal among them.

[English]

Finally, honourable senators, this bill extends the period of effect of Bill C-38, to amend the Customs Tariff. This bill came into force on April 3, 1985, as an interim measure to allow customs officials to continue to intercept obscene material and hate propaganda.

As members of the Senate are aware, on March 14, 1985, the Federal Court of Appeal ruled that, and I quote:

Tariff Item 99201-1 is not a reasonable limitation upon the freedoms guaranteed by section 2(B) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and is of no force or effect.

That tariff item had been worded ambiguously. So, in response to this ruling and to ensure that the Canadian market would not be flooded with obscene material, the government moved quickly to amend the Customs Tariff to provide more specific definitions of what constitutes obscene material and hate propaganda by tying these to existing definitions in the Criminal Code. This measure was rapidly, you will also recall, and unanimously agreed to by the House of Commons and by the Senate last year.

These amendments were to remain in effect until the 1986 summer recess of Parliament, since it had been anticipated that new legislation relating to pornography would be developed and would be law by this time.

As honourable senators are aware, this proposed legislation was introduced into the House on June 10 by the Minister of Justice.

While this legislation is being considered, the government wishes to ensure that customs officials will continue to have the powers that they possessed prior to and following the Federal Court of Appeal ruling.

This bill, therefore, introduces a technical amendment, the sole purpose of which is to extend the period of effect of Bill C-38, to amend the Customs Tariff until December 1987.

In conclusion, honourable senators, this bill takes action to assist those countries of the Commonwealth Caribbean with which Canada has a special relationship by providing them with duty free-access to the Canadian market for the vast majority of their exports.

Second, this bill also responds to the evolving needs of Canadian manufacturers and identifiable groups in Canadian society.

Third, it ensures that custom officials will continue to intercept obscene material and hate propaganda at the border. As such, in my opinion and in the opinion of honourable senators on this side, Bill C-111 deserves the support and timely consideration of all honourable senators.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the mover of second reading of this bill? I understand the intention was that duties would be removed from semiconductors and certain computer parts as of January 1 of this year, but that as a result of the action of the Government of Canada following the American tariff on shakes and shingles, the duties are to be re-imposed. Therefore, there must have been a period when these items were allowed in duty free, and I should like to know as of what date the duty is to be re-imposed. I should also like to know what happened to these goods during the period—though the legislation was never passed—when they would have been duty free. Has that matter been looked after in the bill?

● (1800)

Perhaps the matter is too complicated and ought to be taken up in committee. I wonder, however, if the mover can answer.

Senator Simard: I do not want to take too long to answer. Although I will give the honourable senator my own view at this time, I will check and give him a complete answer before third reading.

As yet I have not received another answer which I expected to receive, although I have been promised that I will have it in my hands by 9 o'clock tomorrow morning. That answer relates to the additional revenue involved. When I bring in that answer, I also hope to have an answer to my friend's question.

However, to the best of my knowledge, the goods were exempted sometime in February of this year, and the minister introduced the legislation to re-impose this tariff in the middle of June. The minister may wish to collect revenues from the time he introduced the legislation in June, and to the best of my knowledge that date was June 6. At that time he served notice on Canadians that the tariff would be re-imposed on imports after that date.

Senator Hicks: I will be happy to wait for the answer. My reasoning was that duties under the present law are payable on these items, and that this legislation originally intended to remove the duties and then the minister changed his mind and re-imposed them. I wondered if there was a period when there was uncertainty. Senator Simard has given me reasonable assurances, and I am satisfied.

I have one other question. Can he, without too much difficulty, tell me where in this bill is contained the explanation of the provisions against the importation of obscene material which, my honourable friend tells us, has now been extended from the rising of this Parliament until December 31, 1987?

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Simard for his clear explanation of Bill C-111, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an act to amend the Customs Tariff. The title is a bit confusing, but I do not take any objection.

Perhaps I might in my explanation give Senator Hicks the information he was seeking. I realize that the original bill, as Senator Simard has mentioned, has been before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for pre-study, and that committee has filed a report commenting on just one aspect, namely, the matter of the elimination of duty on imports of semiconductor devices and computer parts which had been agreed to by the Governments of Canada, the United States and Japan, effective January 20, 1986. Further, it pointed out that as a result of the imposition of a duty by the United States on red cedar shingles and shakes on June 1, 1986, the Government of Canada unilaterally decided to re-impose the duty which had been in place prior to January 20, 1986. The only reason for this, as far as I can determine, is that it is a knee-jerk response, because there was little else that could be done to inform the United States that the Government of Canada was annoyed.

In my humble opinion this reaction hurts nobody but Canadian businesses and the Canadian consumer. It re-imposes a tax on Canadian consumers by making them pay the extra duty, and it puts Canadian businesses at a disadvantage by requiring them, that is, the importers of semiconductor devices and computer parts, to file for refunds on these materials when they are exported in the form of assembled machines and to carry the extra costs until the refunds are received. It also puts the Canadian manufacturer at a disadvantage vis-à-vis competitive imports. In other words, some Canadians were hurt by the imposition of duty by the United States, and the Canadian response is to penalize other Canadians. To me and to many others it does not make sense, but apparently this is government policy.

The other two items which should be mentioned are the elimination of tariffs on items imported from the Caribbean countries, the duty on which, based on current imports, would amount to $500,000 forgone. This would appear to be, however, a step in the right direction, and I believe there is sufficient protection, as Senator Simard has said, for Canadian businesses in the event of demonstrated unfair competition.

Lastly, the bill extends to December 31, 1987, the effect of existing customs tariff provisions to intercept imports of obscene material and hate literature. That is found in clause

10. These provisions came into force on April 3, 1985, through the enactment of Bill C-38, and are scheduled to expire on June 30, 1986, that is, the end of this month. They were adopted in order to meet objections of the Federal Court of Appeal. The provisions of Bill C-38 were introduced as an interim measure while new legislation dealing with pornography and hate literature was being prepared.

As the bill has had pre-study by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I see no need to refer it to a committee and I am prepared to support it as it is.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

● (1810)

[Translation]

CANADA PENSION PLAN FEDERAL COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur Tremblay moved the second reading of Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the legislation I have the privilege of bringing forth today concerns the well-publicized matter of pension reform in Canada.

In a way, it is the end product of a long negotiation process with the provinces. It is in a sense the crowning of a whole series of measures that have been or are being enacted by Parliament. I would therefore like, if I may, to recall some of those measures.

I have in mind for instance the broadening of the Old Age Security Act which since September 1985 has extended the coverage of the spouses allowance to all low-income widowers and widows aged 60 to 64.

I also have in mind the introduction of tax measures to promote retirement savings through registered retirement savings plans.

And there are the amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act that alone involve a significant number of participants in private and public pension plans and that provide for better pension portability, increased spouse coverage, equal benefits for men and women and coverage for part-time workers. There are other measures I could mention, but I will stop there.

With respect to Bill C-116 itself, it is a protracted piece of legislation that adds up to 76 pages and 63 clauses. Its language is relatively abstruse. Repeated readings are needed to understand the exact meaning of its wording. Finally, what we have here is a bill that is technical in its wording and its approach, if not its content. As far as contents are concerned, I will attempt to outline its main points in light of the objectives pursued by this government in proposing a bill such as this one, in the terms in which it is written.

The first of those goals is to ensure the financial stability and soundness of the Canada Pension Plan. To that end, contribution rates to the plan will be gradually increased over the next 25 years.

Let me emphasize in passing that such increases in contribution rates were originally considered. It was expected that at a certain stage, which would be around this point in time, increased contributions would most probably have to be put into effect in order to have the financial health of the plan on a solid footing. This therefore is not a novel idea having been there at its very outset. The time has now come to implement that change.

Also, funds in the plan would be maintained at the approximate level of two years of benefits, which should be sufficient to cover economic and population changes, at least over the short or medium term. I have difficulty in choosing between those two terms, because under this legislation contribution rates will be reviewed every five years. This means that every five years, the situation will be reviewed and conditions adjusted based on studies included from time to time in the Auditor General of Canada's report and on longer term projections. So much for the first goal.

In order to achieve the second goal, improving the plan benefits, the legislation comes up with the following changes:

First, there is the provision for greater flexibility in the plan, at least as far as the age of retirement is concerned.

This means, for instance, that a contributor will be able to receive his retirement benefits at any time between the ages of 60 and 70, while the amount will depend of course on actuarial adjustments.

There is also the improvement made to the disability benefits, first because the benefits will increase, and second, because the requirements related to disability protection will be relaxed.

The third improvement is that survivor benefits will remain payable upon re-marriage, with the possibility for former recipients whose benefits had been withdrawn to have them restored on application. Finally, there is the improvement of children's benefits, especially as concerns eligibility requirements. This is the second objective of the bill, to improve or enrich the benefits of the system.

The third objective is perhaps not as far-reaching, but it remains important for certain groups and it certainly deserves mention. This objective is to facilitate the sharing of pension credits between former spouses.

● (1820)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What term are you using?

Senator Tremblay: Former spouses, after a divorce, a separation or the breakup of a common-law union, or interruption of the real pensions.

Senator Frith: Is this an amendment?

Senator Tremblay: I did not hear your comment.

Senator Frith: Was this the object of an amendment in the other place?

Senator Tremblay: These are all basically modifications.

The fourth objective which I mentioned in the beginning was perhaps not exactly an objective as such, but more the result of the first three objectives being reached, namely that there will be better harmonization between the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. If I may say a few words in this regard, since I am a representative of Quebec in this assembly, this aspect seems to deserve some comment. In the history of federal-provincial relations in this country, honourable senators will recall the laborious negotiations which took place at the time of the Lesage government during what was called the "Quiet Revolution", in the early sixties. Following the very difficult negotiations held at the time, it was finally decided that a province could establish its own pension plan on the condition that it would respect certain general principles such as transferability, public financing, the contributory system, and so on. I forget the details, but there were three or four principles, I think. The Quebec Pension Plan or the pension plan of any province had to comply with these principles.

As far as I know, Quebec was the only province to make use of the possibility provided by the legislation. Quebec therefore gained a certain freedom which the other provinces did not have and did not want to have. This was the freedom to improve its own system.

Naturally, Quebec was not free to change benefits by reducing them. But it could make improvements such as those contained in the legislation introduced by the Federal Government; in other words, it could make its own system better.

And so with the passage of time some improvements were made to the Quebec Pension Plan, to such an extent that the Canada Pension Plan gradually fell behind the Quebec Pension Plan. Naturally this fact was of some concern not only to the federal government but also to the governments of the other provinces.

It so happens that the main amendments I mentioned will change the federal system along the lines of improvements made to the Quebec Pension Plan in recent years. As of January 1987, for example, the date the proposed legislation will come into force, for all practical purposes similarity and correlation between the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan will be achieved, at least with respect to the following points.

Certainly, the rates of contribution will be the same for the next five years. As I emphasized earlier, they will be reviewed every five years and this might change the situation.

Both plans will offer more flexible retirement provisions to contributors. We have in mind the question of age, as I said a moment ago. Such flexibility has been a fact since January 1984 in Quebec, for example.

[Senator Tremblay.]

The period during which premiums are payable will be the same under both plans, as will the actuarial adjustment factor.

With respect to disability benefits, by 1987 the federal plan will offer the same amount as that offered under the Quebec plan. In both cases the survivor's benefits will continue to be paid even after the remarriage of beneficiaries.

In short, as a result of amendments proposed in the bill, in a way we will be back to the original situation. At the beginning both plans were practically the same, but over the years, because Quebec gained more leeway thanks to the flexibility allowed under the federal legislation, some improvements were made. They will now apply to Canada as a whole.

On the other hand, I wonder whether it is necessary to point this out in a concluding remark, but nowadays . . .

Senator Frith: You are still referring to the fourth point?

Senator Tremblay: No. I have covered the four points.

Senator Frith: Concerning the fourth?

Senator Tremblay: No, I'm through. This is something else.

On the other hand, as far as these objectives are concerned, including the fourth one, perhaps I may add that the cost of funding the plan and any costs connected with the proposed amendments will have no impact on the deficit because they do not appear in the budget. All payments will be made using the Canada Pension Plan Fund, not the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Honourable senators, I have tried to give a very brief summary of the principal objectives and issues concerned by the amendments proposed in Bill C-116. I think this bill will greatly improve the Canada Pension Plan, especially where it brings the CPP and the Quebec Pension Plan into line with each other.

Honourable senators, I trust that you will give this bill the support it deserves and that you will adopt it expeditiously, thereby giving the provinces enough time to confirm their concurrence. Following the adoption of this legislation, they will be called upon to express officially their agreement with the amendments. I do not remember exactly just how many provinces are required to reach a consensus. Let us note only that the acceptance of a number of provinces is required. We must therefore allow them the necessary time to confirm their concurrence, because they had already indicated during the negotiations that they agreed. Yet, they have to indicate officially their agreement. We have to consider also the time necessary for the federal administration to set up the administrative mechanism required to implement the legislation by January 1, 1987.

Honourable senators, such are the reasons for which I feel justified in moving without hesitation the second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we congratulate Senator Tremblay for his presentation of the provisions, purposes and characteristics of this bill.

He is so well-versed in this subject that he certainly deserves to be considered as an "expert" in the fourth purpose, which is to harmonize the Quebec and federal plans.

As I just said, he has described perfectly the provisions and purposes of this bill. We support it, and we do so without hesitation, as Senator Tremblay who has sponsored this bill himself has said. Of course, like a number of Canadian men and women, some of our colleagues would have preferred a 100 per cent enhancement of benefits at age 60. If I have understood him well, however, it is now 70 per cent at age 60, 100 per cent at age 65, and 130 per cent at age 70.

In the final analysis, it is a case where half of a good thing, while not perfect, is better than nothing. The principle is certainly desirable, but we feel that the steps taken, in our opinion and in the opinion of a number of our colleagues here and in the other place, are not enough. Just the same, it is much better than nothing; for these reasons, we support the second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Concerning the motion for third reading, honourable senators, I also want to congratulate Senator Tremblay and emphasize some of the comments he made as he was about to conclude. He has persuaded me that we have to expedite the adoption of this bill, considering that there must be a period of time between the moment a bill is passed by Parliament and the implementation of its provisions following their acceptance by the provinces.

There is also the fact there must be an administrative process following this acceptance. For all these reasons, I feel that it would not be useful to refer this bill to the committee; we could then proceed to the third reading of this bill at the next sitting of the Senate tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Tremblay, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

● (1830)

[English]

ENERGY ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-112, to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

SECOND READING

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise in support of the amendments to the Energy Administration Act regarding natural gas pricing, Bill C-112. This is essentially a housekeeping bill and does not involve any change from the policy presently in effect.

On October 31, 1985, the federal government and the oil and gas producing provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia signed an agreement on natural gas markets and prices. The objective is to make an orderly transition to a competitive market for natural gas by November 1, 1986. Since 1975 the wholesale price for natural gas sold in interprovincial trade has been set by government under the federal-provincial energy agreements. The provincial governments are now working assiduously to amend legislation required to meet the objectives of market sensitive pricing by November 1, 1986. Alberta, for example, has prepared extensive amendments to its legislation to ensure that the objective of the agreement is met in that province.

Provincial governments have also taken the steps necessary to facilitate direct sales between producers and consumers or, if you will, end users, and have undertaken competitive marketing programs during this transition year. In both Ontario and Quebec the provincial regulatory boards have taken major steps to ensure that large consumers of natural gas can have open access to distribution systems. The bill to amend the Energy Administration Act is needed to fulfil the Government of Canada's commitments under the Natural Gas Agreement of October 31, 1985. The bill will permit the Governor in Council to continue to approve negotiated domestic natural gas prices during this transition period. It will also remove any ambiguity surrounding natural gas pricing and arrangements that have already been negotiated. Without these amendments, the agreement on Natural Gas Markets and Prices could be in jeopardy. Without these amendments, the policy of negotiated prices for domestic gas prices could be impeded and, indeed, these agreements could even be halted. Without negotiated prices, western natural gas producers could not effectively compete in the marketplace and could lose sales to competing fuels, especially imported oil.

Loss of sales, particularly in the key industrial market segment, would create economic hardships for the west. Large eastern Canadian consumers of gas would be denied access to attractively priced domestic natural gas supplies. To date the large petrochemical, manufacturing, mining and forest product companies have negotiated natural gas cost savings which are in excess of $100 million.

● (1840)

The industry, together with the producing and consuming provinces, wants the ambiguities removed and the regulatory process streamlined. These amendments will meet their concerns.

Honourable senators, this bill does not introduce any new policy initiatives, and its passage is important to all Canadians. I respectfully request the approval of the chamber for this bill today.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to congratulate Senator Barootes for the clear and concise way in which he has just described the provisions of Bill C-112. I have no objection to his explanation, nor indeed to the provisions in Bill C-112. However, I must say immediately that I object very strenuously to the policy that gives rise to the need for these amendments to the Energy Administration Act which is, of course, heading us down the same road in natural gas pricing in Canada that has already proven to be so disastrous with respect to oil prices paid to Canadian producers. I predict that the same kind of disastrous effects will be felt by the producers of natural gas, and perhaps even more severely, honourable senators, because what will happen as a result of that policy is that Canadian producers of natural gas will be subjected to the lowest common denominator of all competitive fuels from anywhere in the world.

We know what has happened to the prices that are paid by a number of purchasers or refiners of oil. We know that we have received anywhere from $3 to $6 per barrel less than even the domestic producers of oil in the United States. This is because the so-called deregulation is a farce.

It is true that the government is withdrawing from setting the rules under which this source of energy is priced, as far as the producers are concerned. But what they have done is they have allowed some major multinationals to move in, make the rules and then set the price, and that has been a disaster. It is a phony policy base on which it is made, and that is why I must say a few words about Bill C-112, because now Senator Barootes, notwithstanding a good explanation of what is asked for, is asking for the amendments to the legal base on which these policy changes have taken place for the transitional period from November 1, 1985, to November 1, 1986.

Honourable senators, I believe that that policy will be a disaster for all the people who are involved in the natural gas production industry, and far beyond November 1, 1986, which is the projected date on which this so-called deregulation is to take place. For example, honourable senators, we know that there is enough so-called surplus gas in Canada now—and by that I mean surplus to Canadian requirements—for many years to come—probably a 25 or 30-year supply. As far as I am concerned, for the federal government to completely move away from having any influence on what the prices will be is really a cop-out. It means that this government intends to stand by and watch. I have asked many questions with respect to this matter and the Leader of the Government has answered my questions. They have a watching brief, whatever that means. In the early stages when oil prices started to fall that had some validity, but now, six or eight months later, they are still watching while the losses accumulate in the oil industry; while there are shut-downs of exploration, lay-offs of crews and the loss of employment not only in Alberta and Saskatchewan or in the great western sedimentary basin but also on the east coast and every other place in Canada, including the Beaufort Sea. In all of these places production is almost down to zero. That is a result of this government's policy, and we still hear them say that they are holding a watching brief.

Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak for a particularly long period of time on this matter, although there is a great deal of detail that could be put on the record as to what we can expect from this deregulation of the gas industry. As I said, one result is that after this so-called deregulation comes into effect we can expect the lowest possible price, because this gas will be put in a competitive position with the lowest competitive fuel that can be imported from anywhere in the world. That means that our natural gas will be up against residual bunker sea oil that is usually the first component of crude oil that falls in price. However, we know that a great deal of the natural gas that is being produced is competitive and, indeed, there are a great many firms that require fuel for space heating that can use either residual oil or natural gas for that purpose. That, honourable senators, will be the lowest priced oil in the world.

Another thing that is wrong with this bill is that the government and the industry have failed to come up with a comprehensive policy that will make this so-called free market work. A free market means that someone can offer their production—in this case, natural gas—for sale and that there is someone who can receive it. However, that natural gas must be carried for a distance of 2,000 to 4,000 miles between the producer and the consumer, and a plan has not yet been agreed on with respect to that. What we have at the moment is a monopoly, namely, TransCanada Pipelines, that takes all of that gas from the producer to the consumer in eastern Canada and, indeed, a very large portion of that which is exported to the U.S. as well, although there are some other pipelines that carry the gas into export positions.

Therefore, honourable senators, what will happen is that we will see Alberta selling off one of its primary resources, one of the most important resources that Alberta and British Columbia have, and that is the natural gas reserves that have been 'proved up' at the lowest possible prices for the longest period of time. To put it bluntly, that is stupid. That means that the gas companies and this government are setting up the arrangements for this to be done and thereby they will start to act like farmers. For a long time farmers have depended on a so-called free international market to set the price of their products, particularly cereal grains. The reason I say particularly cereal grains is because that is one of the farm products that can be produced that is dry and storable and can be kept and shipped all over the world. That, honourable senators, is what we are facing, and I for one hope that it is not going to happen. However, I am not the only one who is of the opinion that it will. The Director General or Research Director of the Canadian Petroleum Association predicted within the last few days that the price of natural gas at the wellhead will go down by at least 30 per cent as soon as the so-called deregulation of prices comes into effect.

● (1850)

There are many people, including other experts in the industry, who agree with my observation that 30 per cent may be modest. I think that natural gas prices will decline by as much as 40 or 50 per cent, for the very simple reason that there is a surplus. There is now a desperate need for cash flow or revenue by a number of these oil and gas companies. In many cases they are the same companies, because in most fields there is both natural gas and oil. Therefore, in desperate need to increase their cash flow and revenue, they will be offering natural gas at lower and lower prices. I think the mover of second reading of this bill understands all that.

Why this government clings to a philosophy and policy that is going to guarantee the lowest possible returns for the next number of years, whether that be five years or twenty years, completely escapes me. This government ought to do what a government is supposed to do, that is, govern the country in the interest of all sectors. That is not what this policy is going to do. I hope that some attempt will be made by this government to take its responsibility seriously and to start governing this country.

What is going to happen is that some oil exporting countries—and I am not sure whether they will be members of OPEC; as a matter of fact, members of OPEC cannot agree now on their own interests—are going to determine the price of natural gas in Canada, and that price will be the lowest possible one, if there is a repetition of what happened in the crude oil industry, and I have every reason to believe that that is exactly what is going to happen.

As I have said, honourable senators, I hope that this kind of foolishness can be stopped, but holding up Bill C-112 is not going to do that, because what I have been describing is the policy of this government. Bill C-112, of course, gives the government some authority to legalize, if that is the right word, deals that have already been made since November 1, 1985. I understand that and will not stand in the way of passage of the bill, but I hope that Senator Barootes will use the good sense that I know he has—I know he is a pragmatic person—to try to persuade his colleagues in government to get off this phony Conservative deregulation policy, because he can plainly see what the results will be. I ask him to persuade his colleagues to start doing what they ought to do, and that is govern this country in the interest of all Canadians.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable Senator Barootes speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: A very desirable result.

Senator Barootes: A very desirable result. Thank you.

Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Olson for his usual analytical and thoughtful consideration of those matters that affect western Canada with which he has been so closely associated for so many years in so many capacities. He is afraid that this policy, which he is quick to criticize, is a road to disaster because he feels it will result in extremely low prices for western Canadian gas producers. It may result in lower prices, but we did try bucking the world trend in oil not too many years ago. We tried to resist world market forces in oil, and what did that do for us? It resulted in an even more serious disaster for our producers in western Canada who sold their oil at a price well below the world price. If our industries are going to produce, and if they are going to compete in world markets, it is obvious that we must go with the flow. We are too small, we are not powerful enough to resist and buck everything that is going on in the world.

I agree with Senator Olson when he says that if we do not seek energy that we can produce at world and competitive prices we are going to end up having other people export to us, and we will import cheap oil and other types of fuel in the energy cycle. If we wish our gas to be competitive in Canada and to be competitive elsewhere, that is what we have to do.

I regret to say on behalf of the people of western Canada that we would, indeed, like to have much higher regulated, if you will, or fixed, or legislated, prices for our gas. That is fine, but if we do that we will have to keep it in the ground, because no one will want to buy it. They will substitute the kinds of fuels my honourable colleague spoke of, such as hydro energy—which is even cheaper in some instances—and we are not going to do very well with our producing gas companies out west or with our producing oil companies out west. So, we cannot have it both ways. We cannot have cheap energy for the domestic users and for the industries that use gas and, at the same time, ask for high prices for producers. We cannot have it both ways; we have to go one way or the other, and the only way we should go is to have competitive market prices in Canada and elsewhere. It is axiomatic that you cannot have a high price here and a low price there; you have to go in the modern scheme of competition.

I should also add that although the price for gas may fall and may become competitive, there are some benefits not only for the domestic users of gas, but benefits relating to the production of jobs in the rest of Canada. Industries are high users of this energy, and that may make us competitive in the international field for the export of our products. We cannot continue to subsidize this type of thing. We cannot continue to make one side of the country poor while making the other side of the country rich. It is for that reason, honourable senators, that I say we do not want to cripple Canada with the kinds of policies that existed a few years ago and which, as a matter of fact, were such that they were artificial. We must go with the flow, and I urge honourable senators to give speedy passage to Bill C-112.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the orders of the day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS BILL, 1985

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-90, respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Doyle, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved second reading of the bill.

● (1900)

He said: Honourable senators, it should never be the fate of a junior senator in this house to have to follow Senator Tremblay, who has already spoken today on pensions and so eloquently that he makes my words seem inadequate to the chore; but I am enthusiastic about the chore, sir, and I say that to all senators.

I am pleased today to move the second reading of Bill C-90, a bill which reforms the Federal Pension Benefits Standards Act in a fundamental and far-reaching manner.

I am proud to be able to say that the legislation before us today is based on consensus—a consensus involving compromise to be sure, but a genuine consensus.

Honourable senators, this government has acted decisively to improve pension benefits, a key component of the quality of life of Canadians not only in their retirement years but in their years of anticipation of retirement, which for so many for such a long time have been periods of frustration and concern.

The Pension Benefits Standards Act sets basic standards which pension plans subject to federal jurisdiction must meet. We are proposing to improve those standards in so many fundamental ways that the existing legislation has been completely rewritten. Since the act was passed 20 years ago, social standards have changed, the economy has changed, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has established a new legal touchstone. Bill C-90 reflects those changes.

Before describing the main features of the bill, I want to situate the place of employer-sponsored pensions in Canada's pension system and the principles which underline that system.

First, we share a collective obligation to ensure that Canada's elderly do not live out their lives in poverty. This is our social responsibility, a responsibility which this government accepts as fundamental. Old age security benefits combined with the Guaranteed Income Supplement provide their basic security to those over 65. Spouses' allowance help others in need who have not yet reached 65. Only last year the government extended such help to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64; one of the very first actions of this government.

On this base is built the Canada Pension Plan, and its parallel in Quebec, the Quebec Pension Plan. These are compulsory plans to which all Canadians in the paid labour force must belong. But beyond these basic building stones of the pension system, Canadians retain the freedom to decide for themselves, individually or collectively, what additional amount of income will satisfy their needs in retirement. This freedom, of course, means that Canadians must accept the responsibility to see that they are building enough pension savings to maintain their chosen standard of living.

What the government can do is encourage additional retirement savings. We are taking significant steps of this kind. As you know, the scope of tax assistance for retirement savings is being significantly extended. And with this new Pension Benefits Standards Act that I am speaking about here today, pension plans provided by employers will have to meet basic standards that are higher and fairer than has been the case in the past. As a result, many more Canadians will be eligible to join such plans, and will want to do so. And many more Canadians and their spouses will receive better pensions from the plans they already belong to.

I want to emphasize that this legislation sets basic standards in what is essentially a voluntary system, not a compulsory system. Employers are not compelled by this legislation to offer pension plans. But if plans do exist, they must meet standards of fairness and adequacy. Employers are free to exceed these standards, and indeed, many already do. Unions are free to negotiate better benefits and, indeed, many already have done so. The system is a flexible one in which employers, employees and unions can work out specific arrangements which best suit their circumstances and their expectations.

The government recognizes, of course, that what Canadians consider adequate today will change as society itself changes. For this reason, there may be a need in the years to come to review the legislation again. The changes being proposed now, however, reflect today's realities. Honourable senators, they will put an end to the uncertainty of the past several years that has caused many employers to delay reforming their plans and others to delay introducing plans. Employers and employees will know where they stand.

The changes being proposed to the Pension Benefits Standards Act reflect extensive consultations with the general public, with employers, labour, womens' groups, pensioners, and with the pension industry. The changes reflect lengthy and close consultation with provincial governments.

The federal pension standards legislation applies directly to some 650 employer sponsored plans covering 500,000 people. Indirectly, the terms of the legislation will apply to a further 500,000 public servants, because the government has undertaken to see, in consultation with the public service unions, that public servants' pensions will generally meet these standards. Provincial legislation applies to more than 14,000 employer sponsored plans covering some 3.5 million people.

For pension reform to serve the needs of Canadians—both employers and workers—we and the provinces must enact similar pension standards. Fundamental to our efforts has been our view that Canadians, no matter where they live, should have the same opportunities to build pensions. They must not be deterred from moving freely between provinces because of concerns about their pensions, and companies operating in more than one jurisdiction should not face needless and costly administrative burdens having to conform to different pension standards.

● (1910)

In view of the importance of having a high degree of uniformity across the country, I am particularly gratified that many provinces are planning to implement parallel legislation at an early date. This government will continue to work closely with the provinces until pension reform is translated into reality.

It is estimated that for employers the proposals in this legislation will increase the costs of average pension plans by about 5 per cent to 10 per cent. This, in turn, will increase payroll costs by about one-half of 1 per cent. We have taken great care to avoid imposing retroactive costs.

Let me now outline the key changes contained in this bill. This will illustrate clearly to this chamber that the government's proposals are indeed significant.

Current pension standards on vesting specify that persons do not acquire rights to the part of their pensions contributed by their employers until they reach 45 years of age and have ten years' service or membership in their pension plan. This is clearly a Draconian standard. Although many employer sponsored plans have not been that rigid, the standard, nonetheless, has deprived many young people and people who left the labour force or changed jobs even after considerable time with employers of a good part of their pension benefits.

Employees will now be entitled to vested benefits two years after joining a pension plan. They will then be able to leave their jobs if they wish without jeopardizing their pensions. As a result, the amount of pension which today's mobile Canadians can accumulate over their working lives will be significantly increased. Because women tend to move in and out of the paid labour force more often than men, the proportion of women benefiting from this change will be particularly high.

Vested benefits will also be locked in after two years of participation in a pension plan. This means the funds will remain in a pension fund or be transferred to a locked-in RRSP to provide for retirement income as they are intended.

Early vesting and locking-in will, therefore, result in more persons having private pension coverage at retirement and many persons having increased pension coverage at retirement.

Pensions will be portable in the future, allowing Canadians who change jobs the option of leaving their pension entitlements with their former employer; transferring them to their new employer; or locking them into an RRSP. Very few pension plans in the private sector now have portability features.

This long-awaited pension reform will remove a major obstacle that has stood in the way of many Canadians making significant career changes. Also, by encouraging a more mobile labour force, portability will enhance the competitiveness of our economy and the country's prosperity. People will be more willing to move to where job opportunities open up.

The new legislation will require for the first time that in all circumstances employers pay for at least 50 per cent of the value of pensions earned by their employees. This usually happens now with long-service employees, but not with those who spend shorter periods with an employer. This change will, once again, particularly benefit young workers and mobile workers, many of whom are women.

In the case of pension entitlements which employees have earned when they change jobs, the same objective can be met by indexing these deferred entitlements. This alternative provision will encourage pension plans to provide inflation protection.

The government's proposed amendments will also ensure that more workers will have the opportunity to join plans.

Of major importance are the provisions which will require employers to allow part-time workers to join pension plans currently available only to full-time workers, provided they have earned at least 35 per cent of average wages or met an equivalent hours-related criterion for two consecutive years. As you know, increasing numbers of people, especially women, are taking part-time jobs. For the first time, many of them will be able to build up pensions.

Also important is the provision that all full-time workers in any group for which a pension plan exists will now be eligible to join the plan at any time provided they have at least two years of service. At present some plans have more restrictive eligibility requirements.

The new standards being proposed in the legislation before us will permit employees more choice in deciding when to retire. Canadians will be able to elect early retirement any time within a ten-year period before the normal retirement age specified in their pension plan. Should they do so, their pension will be appropriately adjusted to reflect the longer period over which the benefits will be paid.

This change is in keeping with evolving patterns of retirement and may be particularly attractive to many working women who are younger than their retired husbands and who may wish to join them in retirement.

Another major thrust of the amendments is to encourage pension plan members to be more knowledgeable about their plans.

Since I always throw in a complimentary remark to the press of this country when I have the opportunity to speak in this chamber, I must say that I have never seen a story that was given poorer coverage from coast to coast. My remark includes the coverage of the National Defence Committee which, I think, struck rock-bottom.

The amendments will require pension plan sponsors to provide members and their spouses with regular information about the amount of benefits earned, their accumulated contributions, and the plan's financial situation. This will help them to plan responsibly and knowledgeably for retirement.

As well, representation of plan members will be required on pension committees if the plan has 50 or more members and if a majority of the members request representation. In a similar manner, pensioners will also be able to elect a representative to sit on pension committees.

In Canada today pension policy must recognize that working patterns for many women have changed dramatically and will continue to change. At the same time, pension policy must recognize that many women will continue to choose more traditional family roles. The pension needs of both must be met.

● (1920)

In describing the foregoing changes I have mentioned that while they are designed to deal with fundamental shortcomings affecting everyone, several of them will be of particular significance to women, because women on average change jobs more often than men and hold more part-time employment than men. There are a number of other changes, however, which are explicitly intended to remedy the failures of present standards to meet women's pension needs.

One such change will ensure that women and men who retire under similar circumstances will receive the same monthly pensions. Many plans meet this standard now. But others pay lower monthly benefits to women than to men because a woman's life expectancy is longer than a man's. The change is fair, because it costs women just as much to live month by month as it does men.

The new provisions concerning survivor benefits are of major significance to women. Many women now find themselves totally unprovided for, or inadequately provided for, by their husband's pension plan if he dies. The new standards will require pension plans to offer survivor benefits that will provide surviving spouses with at least 60 per cent of the pension that would have been paid had the retired plan member lived. And these benefits will not be ended if the survivor remarries, as has been the case in the past. If the plan member dies before being eligible to retire, the full value of the pension that has been earned will be transferred to a locked-in RRSP for the spouse.

The new standards will also ensure that women do not lose their share of pensions or pension savings if their marriage breaks down. Pensions already being paid, or the value of pensions earned during marriage, will become part of the family assets to be divided on breakdown of the marriage, according to the provisions of provincial family law legislation. This new provision is in step with the new family law practices.

[Senator Doyle.]

The government has also addressed—there is that lovely word again, “addressed”—the issue of employers' rights to withdraw surplus funds from defined benefit pension plans. This bill, for the first time, clearly establishes the government's authority to regulate withdrawals—to set the terms and conditions under which funds which are truly surplus to the needs of such pension plans can be withdrawn.

Because it is important that standards in this area be as uniform as possible across Canada, the Minister of Finance is discussing with his provincial counterparts exactly what the standards should be. The overriding objective will be to ensure that workers' pensions are never put at risk—that funds will be available to pay the pensions they have been promised when they come to retire.

Finally, I would like to deal with the question of inflation protection. As honourable senators well know, it is a question which over the years has been of persistent concern to the architects of pension reform. Indeed, no other issue has been such a source of disagreement and such an obstacle to reform.

The government recognizes the need to maintain the purchasing power of pensions provided by employer sponsored pension plans. However, many business groups continue to be opposed to mandatory inflation protection because they do not believe that it can be afforded. There is no provincial consensus on this matter, either. We therefore must acknowledge that to mandate inflation protection at this time could have serious negative repercussions on the willingness of businesses to establish or to continue pension plans for their employees. This outcome would certainly not be in the interests of employees. As well, it has proved impossible to achieve any agreement on what method or formula might be appropriate for providing inflation protection.

We cannot delay pension reform solely for want of agreement on mandatory inflation protection when there is agreement in so many other areas and when the need for reform is so great. We have, therefore, adopted a voluntary approach to inflation protection. I want to stress that the majority of large pension plans already provide inflation adjustments which amount to about 40 per cent of the increase in the consumer price index. We will build on this by encouraging all firms under the jurisdiction of the federal government—especially crown corporations—to provide such inflation adjustments both to pensioners and to the pension savings of persons still working.

These firms will be required to report regularly on the adjustments they make and the source of the funds they use for these purposes. Information on both the inflation adjustments and the sources of funds will be submitted to the Superintendent of Insurance, and resulting statistical information will be made public.

The government will be monitoring closely the response of pension plans to this voluntary approach. As we gain a clear picture of how well this approach is working, we will be consulting with the provinces, with business, and with other groups with interests in effective pension arrangements to determine what further action is necessary. Clearly, there will be a need to review the question of inflation protection on an on-going basis, and that is just what we will be doing.

Honourable senators, Bill C-90 will increase the workload of the Department of Insurance, which supervises private plans in the federal jurisdiction. The resource requirements of the Department of Insurance will therefore be reviewed to ascertain if additional staff are required. I can assure honourable senators that the government will take every step necessary to ensure that pension plans in the federal jurisdiction continue to be adequately monitored.

Canadians have been awaiting reform of the pension system for a long time. A consensus has finally been reached—a consensus which reflects the realities and values of the Canada of today. I believe that all Canadians will welcome the significant achievement which this bill represents and will be anxious to see the changes take effect. I am proud to present this bill, and I hope that all senators will support it wholeheartedly so it can receive speedy passage. Canadians will be eager to see this legislation take effect at the beginning of 1987, as proposed, and this can only happen if the measures are in place in sufficient time before that date for employers to make the substantial adjustments in their plans that may be required.

● (1930)

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak at any length on this bill this evening or tomorrow. I would first like to congratulate Senator Doyle, who has done an excellent job of explaining a rather intricate and detailed bill. It is one that has been in the process of study for approximately ten years. Since it required a consensus of the federal authority with the provinces, it has had a difficult road. However, that consensus has been reached.

Today there have been some amendments made to the bill on the floor of the other place. I would like to have an opportunity to study those amendments and their effect before continuing my remarks further on the bill. I should say immediately that it will not be my intention to ask that the bill be referred to committee. It has already had pre-study and there has been extensive questioning of departmental and other witnesses. Therefore, I feel that probably tomorrow morning, with very little further discussion, it could have second and third reading. At this point I would like to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Senator McElman, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit at 8 p.m. today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

FARM DEBT REVIEW BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-117, to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I do not believe that the bill has been distributed. I certainly do not have it. Is it the intention of the powers that be to make the bill available to us immediately?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is the bill not yet ready for distribution?

Hon. Hazen Argue: I have the original of Bill C-117.

Senator Corbin: I do not have it.

Senator Argue: I have the original bill, but I do not have the amendment.

Senator Corbin: Where did you get it?

Senator Doody: Are copies of the bill available?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I do not have it in my stack.

Senator Corbin: It is not in my stack of bills.

Senator Doody: I do not have it either. If it is the wish of the Senate that we stand this until tomorrow morning, then I have no objection. On the other hand, honourable senators may wish to go ahead with it this evening.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps it would be a good idea to have it understood that we will continue second reading debate tomorrow, but that we should have Senator Sherwood explain the bill to us this evening. When we do get copies, that will help us to understand it. Senator Sherwood could proceed and we could then adjourn the debate until tomorrow.

Senator Sherwood: Thank you, honourable senators. During the past century our farmers have made an enormous contribution to the nation's wealth and economic development. As a result of their hard work and determination, Canada is one of the great food producing nations in the world. Today, however, a number of circumstances—most beyond the individual farmer's control—have dealt serious blows to this country's agriculture industry. Indeed, the legislation now before us comes at a crucial and very difficult point in time for our farmers. Heavy financing for expansion in the 1970s, followed by very high interest rates in the early 1980s, combined to force many producers off the land. In addition, many farmers have been pushed to the brink of insolvency by low world prices for a wide range of agricultural commodities and tough international competition in some of our traditional export markets.

This responsible piece of legislation offers financially troubled farmers an opportunity to pull back from the edge, to seek footing on more solid financial ground. The act will provide for the establishment of at least one Farm Debt Review Board in each of the provinces. The legislation provides that before debt-recovery actions against an insolvent producer can be initiated, secured creditors must give notice to the farm family of their right to appeal to the Farm Debt Review Board. Immediately after an insolvent farmer applies, a 30-day stay of proceedings will take effect, thus preventing any action by creditors against the farmer. The stay can be extended should more time be required to deal with the case.

The review board chairperson will establish a three-member local review panel headed by a board member. Both the board and the panels will include people from the agri-business sector—farmers and farm management specialists. The farm family, after all, is in a very sensitive situation, and I am sure that they will appreciate the presence and involvement of people from backgrounds similar to their own.

A field staff person will be hired to talk with the farm family and the creditors, to make an independent assessment of the farm operation and to report back to the panel. The panel, in turn, will make every effort to bring about a meaningful arrangement between the farm family and their creditors. Any negotiated settlement becomes legally binding.

As a major farm lender in this country, the Farm Credit Corporation holds a number of loans that could be involved in the process. Therefore the FCC will be provided with funds to participate without having to pass on the cost of negotiated settlements to other FCC borrowers in the form of higher interest rates.

● (1940)

In September of last year the Minister of Agriculture placed a moratorium on all FCC foreclosure actions. It will remain in effect not only until the Debt Review Boards are in place but also until the Rural Transition Program is operating. Details of this program will be announced soon. It has been estimated that anywhere from 4,000 to 8,000 farmers who are in financial difficulty could benefit from the Farm Debt Review Board process over the next two years. In addition, farm families who are not insolvent but who feel they can benefit from a review of their operations can also apply to a board for assistance. Of course, no stay of proceedings will be issued in these cases, but the panels will provide advice and attempt to arrive at arrangements between a farm family and their creditors to prevent deterioration of the family's financial position.

For these types of farmers and for those facing insolvency, the legislation before us today offers hope. It strikes a responsible balance between two vital requirements in the farm community—the need for a strong debt review process and the need for a secure, continuing line of credit. The act will open new options for highly indebted farmers without jeopardizing the future availability of farm credit. In Saskatchewan, where a voluntary debt review process is in place, both farmers and creditors are generally receptive. Even on their own, farmers and creditors have often been able to reach reasonable settlements. This gives me good reason to believe that a voluntary process can and will work across Canada.

But the Minister of Agriculture has offered an additional assurance. The Debt Review Boards will be closely monitored. If the process is not meeting the need, changes will be implemented to make it work. Certainly these boards will not correct every problem in agriculture. Rather, they will target a specific need, a need to help farmers with the potential to be viable, to remain in business.

Many other initiatives introduced by the Government of Canada have effectively targeted other programs in agriculture. For example, special drought assistance for the last two crop years was extended to western crop and livestock producers, an interest rate reduction program assisted about 5,600 FCC borrowers who had been locked into high-interest loans, amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act allowed for record spring payments in two consecutive years, all federal sales and excise taxes on farm gas and diesel fuel were effectively removed under a system of rebate, grain freight rates were frozen at current levels for the 1986-87 crop year, farmers have been given more flexible credit options through new FCC programs, crop insurance has been improved to increase coverage for producers faced by successive years of losses, and responsible economic policies by the Government of Canada have led to lower interest rates for farmers. In fact, the rate on a five year FCC mortgage is down from 14 per cent in September 1984 to 10.75 per cent today.

This act represents one in a series of important initiatives taken by the federal government on behalf of our farmers. Timing is of the utmost importance now. The farm community needs a review process to be put in place as soon as possible. I am advised that within a month of this legislation's being enacted, Farm Debt Review Boards can indeed be put in place. Therefore, I strongly support this legislation, and I would urge its passage.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Sherwood on his very lucid explanation of the provisions of this bill. Senator Sherwood brings to this house a great knowledge of agriculture. I had the experience of working with him when he was the distinguished deputy chairman of a committee of which I had the honour to be the chairman. Senator Sherwood has enunciated a long list of things that the government says it has done in the interests of agricultural producers. The minister has said, after listing that long series of initiatives which the government says it has taken, that the farmers are worse off now than they were a year ago. So, the rate of decline or the decline is still there.

This bill leaves much to be desired. It is a bill with virtually no teeth. It provides no power to any board to roll back debts or to put in place settlements in the interests of the farmers and by which creditors must abide. The minister said this afternoon in the other place, as I was watching him on television, that probably 25 per cent of the farmers of this country are in serious financial difficulty. The federal government has provided a moratorium on farm credit loans. I appreciate this effort and I am glad it was done. The same kind of moratorium should have been applied to other creditors. I am very pleased that the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, the Right Honourable John Turner, has stated that he feels the government should provide a moratorium on all farm foreclosures until the end of the current crisis. That widespread action would help solve in a very major way the financial problems of those farmers who are in difficulty.

I have read the House of Commons Debates of last Friday. The honourable member for Algoma, Maurice Foster, has had a very major impact on the bill that is now before us. Because of his tenacity, the bill was amended to extend from 5 days to 15 days the amount of time that a farmer has to launch an appeal once he receives notice from his creditors that they are going to take action against him. Because that amendment refers to business days, it works out to about 21 days, which is quite a bit better than the original 5 days. Senator Sherwood has said that there is a provision to delay before the review board the foreclosure proceedings for up to 30 days. It is possible under the act to have further extensions. My understanding is that because Mr. Foster's ideas were accepted by the minister the maximum extension has been increased to 120 days.

Conditions out there amongst the farmers are very difficult indeed. The figure of 25 per cent with respect to the number of farmers who are in financial difficulty is probably a conservative one indeed. One of the saddest things about the whole situation is that some of the best, most productive and technologically most efficient farmers are in the greatest trouble. These are the farmers in their 30s and early 40s who are well trained, well qualified and great producers. I am sure that when you look back, you will see that many of them entered their farming operations at the worst possible time. The stress out there is tremendous. I read the other day that on this continent the most frequent cause of farm death is suicide. Suicide is now a more frequent cause of death than farm accidents, and farming is one of the most hazardous occupations in the country in that the death rate because of accidents amongst farmers exceeds the death rate because of accidents in our police force.

● (1950)

It is important that action be taken. I understand the Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable John Wise, has agreed to appear before the Committee of the Whole at 10.30 tomorrow morning, and I think his presence will be most welcome.

Speaking as a person from Saskatchewan who knows our situation out there very well indeed, I can tell you that there is one break. I think it is just a beginning crack, but it could develop into a very major break for many farm families. Up until now the Canada Assistance Plan has virtually been unavailable to farmers. There has been no Unemployment Insurance for a self-employed farmer, and farmers asking for assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan have been told: "Spend your last year's income; use this year's crop insurance cheque instead of paying your creditors, or sell your farm." Up until recently the same test has not been applied as is applied to city persons who ask for help under the Canada Assistance Plan, namely: "Do you have any money? Are you short of cash? Have you money for essential services for your family?" These are not the criteria that have been used for farmers.

However, as I say, there is a break and it is beginning to be said now that if a farmer does not have cash to meet his or her obligations, then the Canada Assistance Plan can be made available, and in some cases is being made available. That plan will pay a family anywhere from $600 to $1200 a month in cash, and that is a very major benefit. It is my opinion that rural people should have access to the same kind of benefits under the same kind of rules as are available to people in the cities.

As I have said, this bill lacks teeth. It provides for a delaying process; it may or may not have very much success. Like the experience we have had in Saskatchewan, it will perhaps have a 50 per cent rate of success or a 50 per cent rate of failure, and I think that is far too high. I hope that the boards will take an attitude that it is different from the attitude that I have perceived as being taken in at least some instances by the board in Saskatchewan, namely, the attitude that the solution to your problem, Mr. Farmer, is to sign off and give up rather than to have your debt written down and rescheduled on a fair basis.

Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Argue, debate adjourned.

JUDGES ACT AND RELATED ACTS

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-128, to amend the Judges Act and other acts in relation to judicial matters.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have the same problem with this bill as we had with the previous bill in that the bill has not yet been printed or distributed. If it is agreeable to honourable senators, I would suggest that Senator Nurgitz introduce the bill at second reading in order to acquaint us with the content and in order that the bill can be studied tomorrow morning by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Lewis will be speaking for our side and I think it is his intention to suggest that the bill go to committee, because the committee is ready to receive it tomorrow morning along with Bill C-45. Therefore, I think that in this case we should complete second reading and send it to the committee, because the same purposes will be served with relation to this bill as were served previously in that the committee can explain to us what the bill is about. Then, if we have something to say about it, it can be said on third reading.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I will attempt to be brief, although not quite as brief as has been suggested by my whip. His suggestion was that the short title would suffice!

Senator Frith: That is a good start.

Senator Nurgitz: With that in mind, I should point out that I believe that Senator Lewis, who will be responding, does have a copy of the bill and he and I have had several discussions with respect to this matter.

However, I will be very brief and point out that this government is committed to making the judicial system in Canada more efficient and to that end the federal government is co-operating with two provinces, namely, the province of Prince Edward Island and the province of Newfoundland, to improve the administration of justice in those regions of Canada. One example of that commitment is the government's policy of responding positively to the initiatives and requests of those two provincial governments to re-organize their provincial superior, district and county courts to best suit and improve the administration of justice in those provinces.

Having said that, I would like to point out that there are six features to the bill, honourable senators. First of all, I should point out that the bill in itself not only amends the Judges Act but it amends the Canada Pension Plan, the Northwest Territories Act, the Yukon Act and Statute Law, being the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms Amendment Act and, in fact, several other acts. For example, in statutes such as the Criminal Code and the Divorce Act, when reference is made to certain courts, this bill has some ancillary types of amendments where the proper phraseology would be used.

In brief, the bill first gives effect to the decision of the Government of Prince Edward Island to divide the Supreme Court of that province into an appeal division and a trial division. That makes the court structure in that province more similar to that of all other provinces in Canada.

Second, this bill gives effect to the decision of the Government of Newfoundland to merge the province's District Court and the Supreme Court, trial division.

Third, this bill removes the authority of the Governor in Council to suspend the salary of a judge.

Fourth, the bill permits the appointment to the Pension Appeals Board of temporary members to be drawn from the serving or retired judges of the Federal Court of Canada and provincial superior, district and county courts.

Next, this bill provides for the varying of tenure of office of deputy judges of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory from that of termination at the pleasure of the Governor in Council to that of holding office during good behaviour, but removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and the House of Commons.

Last, this bill ensures conformity between the English and French versions of the name of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada.

Honourable senators, that explanation, in brief, covers the purpose of this bill. I do not think I could have been any more brief—

Senator Barootes: I think you have done very well.

Senator Nurgitz: I wish you could have followed that example.

Senator Doody: You should have been on before Senator Barootes.

Senator Nurgitz: With that, honourable senators, I want to say that none of these provisions is very complex or, in fact, major. All of the provisions might be described as technical, yet each contributes to the more effective functioning of our legal system in those provinces.

Therefore, honourable senators, I urge upon you, as I said as briefly as I can—and I think in keeping under four minutes I have been very brief indeed—to give this bill second reading in order that we might give some consideration to it at the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs tomorrow morning.

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I did not realize that Senator Nurgitz would be quite as brief as he has been. However, I think that the short explanation he has made has been followed by all honourable senators.

This bill is quite important in certain areas of the country as it deals with consequences to the composition or recomposition of certain of the courts in some of our provinces. It is quite important. Senator Nurgitz has explained briefly the points that are contained in the bill. I do not intend to go over them. I will be supporting the bill. I think it should be enacted as quickly as possible, particularly from the point of view of my own province of Newfoundland. We now have ten District Court Judges there. Under provincial legislation regarding the courts, those district courts are to be merged into the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. As a consequence, the District Court Judges will become Supreme Court Judges. Of course, this bill provides for and covers this situation. I believe that the legislation is to come into effect on September 1. So, I believe it is important that this bill be enacted to provide for that.

● (2000)

As I said, there are ten District Court Judges in Newfoundland, including the Chief Judge who has the burden of the administration of the district courts. As a consequence of that, he is paid slightly more than the other District Court Judges. With the merger, of course, under the present act he would receive a reduction in his salary. I am pleased to see that under this bill his salary will be protected. The Chief Judge's salary will stay the same until the other judges' salaries reach that level.

There are only two other things I should like to say. It seems to have become the habit that in the final days of a session we have amendments to the Judges Act. I do not know why that is; perhaps Senator Nurgitz will be able to explain that to the members of the committee tomorrow.

I suggest that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. The committee has planned to hold a meeting tomorrow morning to consider Bill C-45. I believe the members of the committee can deal with this bill at that time. Although I recommend that the bill be referred to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, in actual fact most of the provisions of the bill deal with financial matters, but I believe that committee can deal with the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

CONSIDERATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources entitled: "Oil Marketing: 1986", tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, June 25, 1986.

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I should like to speak to the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources entitled: "Oil Marketing: 1986". In view of the late hour, I wish I could undertake to speak tomorrow; however, I will be unable to be present tomorrow. I consider this to be an important matter, so I will proceed now.

Since March 28, 1985, the date of signing of the Western Accord, unexpected and remarkable changes have occurred in the energy business. What I have to say is a criticism of the present government's failure to vary its energy policy in light of these changes so as to provide in a timely way for the short and long term needs of the petroleum industry, for the oil and gas producing provinces and for Canada as a whole. Before proceeding, however, let me first acknowledge that the problems our country encounters in the energy sector are difficult and solutions not easy to discover or implement.

This government's energy policy has some objectives in common with the policy of the previous Liberal administration. Both policies have been concerned with Canada's energy security, for example, although the approaches to achieving that security are very different. The old policy called for a major government role as manager of the energy economy; the present policy calls for a minor role and, most significantly, no role whatsoever with respect to the pricing of crude oil. This government's policy bets everything on the world market as the only regulator of the price of oil—that we will meet our objectives of a high degree of Canadian self-sufficiency in oil and gas with majority Canadian ownership in the industry by doing nothing about prices.

I think both approaches are wrong. The two extremes are not our only choices. Let me add that I do believe that a free and fair market is the preferable determinant of price. There are circumstances, however, that call for intervention by the government, and the fall by more than 50 per cent in the price of oil within four months, with those low prices persisting, is just such a circumstance.

Regrettably, and notwithstanding the fact that we are some months into the crisis, we do not have a response from the Minister of Energy to the serious problems created by the collapse in oil prices. Certain problems for all of Canada will occur if nothing is done.

Speaking as an Albertan, I am shocked that this government takes its political support from Alberta so much for granted that we have yet to receive a response to the cry of distress from our energy sector. Albertans have elected almost nothing but Conservatives to the Parliament of Canada for 30 years. It is obviously considered so politically secure, symbolized by the single visit to Alberta by the Prime Minister since the election, that it can be virtually ignored. I believe that the Conservative Party support is at risk, and their failure to deal with the collapse of the oil price will see the huge majorities of Alberta Progressive Conservative MPs melt away and, in some, if not many, cases, disappear. The Pembina by-election, which must be called as a result of the resignation from Parliament of Peter Elzinga, will be an important early test of this view.

There are many ways of quantifying the problem we face, but for me the most vivid is to think of it in terms of the study by Woods Gordon, commissioned by the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, and dated January 1985. That study concluded that for every billion dollars spent on exploration and development in the conventional oil-producing area, there would be 30,000 person-years of work created in Canada. You may recall that this study was the basis for the "engine-of-growth" view which maintained that new spending on oil and gas exploration and development could create 200,000 to 250,000 new jobs by early in the next decade. All of us hoped for that result.

The government fashioned an energy policy for the then relatively stable and high-priced world crude market. The problem is that the policy is designed only for that scenario and the government refuses to adjust its policy to our present circumstance.

What we are in fact facing, due to the remarkable decline in prices, is an estimated reduction in capital and exploration expenditures in 1986 of about $4.5 billion compared with 1985, and a potential loss of 135,000 jobs within a few years, using the Woods Gordon study as a guide. Of these, 11,000 jobs have been lost in western Canada's oil well service industry alone since the end of March, adding to the rapidly growing number of jobless in the industry as a whole.

Our need is for a policy that accommodates the abrupt changes we experienced first in the 1970s, and now in the mid-1980s, to provide some stability in times of rapidly changing prices. The problem is the abrupt change in price as much as the price itself, because this change leads to the uncertainty which is today so damaging the industry.

This being my complaint, the government's position that it does not want to alter policy until prices stabilize is most disconcerting.

To me, this is an unacceptable failure to address the most damaging aspect of the problem, the instability in price itself. This unstable commodity price causes equity investors to lose confidence, and bankers and others financing that business to believe they are not capable of valuing security or assessing credit risks.

What should have been included in the government policy is not only the commitment to consult, contained in Part 1, Clause 9 of the Western Accord, but a commitment to act quickly if "a sharp change to crude oil prices" occurred.

For example, if the price of crude oil lost or gained more than, say, 30 per cent of its value over a period of three months, the government would intervene. In any event, oil lost half its value in four months—a sharp decline in price, I submit, in anyone's opinion. This is a suggestion only, and an appropriate triggering mechanism would have to be determined with additional consultation.

● (2010)

As it is, neither producers nor consumers know whether there will be a revision to policy in response to the current crisis, when a response might be announced, or what kind of response we might expect.

What Canada deserves, needs and wants is an energy policy which takes into consideration inputs from all components of that economic sector and a policy which best serves the full spectrum of interests involved. In this context, I would like to emphasize that I think it is wrong to suggest that consumer interests are necessarily contrary to producer interests.

The policy we have today seems to have been in response only to the disenchanted large-producer sector and the producing provinces objecting to the National Energy Program. Not enough attention was paid to the overall Canadian interest and what might happen to our objectives of secure energy supplies to meet our long-term needs and of majority Canadian ownership in the resource sector, in the kind of situation in which we now find ourselves.

The problem is one of failing small energy companies, as well as some large Canadian companies who were favoured under the National Energy Program, who have not had sufficient opportunity to adjust to the level playing field of the Western Accord in combination with current low price levels. Large companies with potential for increased exploration in development activity are seriously hampered by the petroleum and gas revenue tax, a gross revenue tax at the production level, and by high provincial royalties which were justified only in the former high energy price environment. The Energy Committee has not recommended a change in the phase-out period for the PGRT. My own view is that that should be looked at very carefully, and immediate consideration should be given by the government to accelerating the phase-out on the basis of, and conditional upon, the provinces correspondingly lowering their high royalties. The government increase in the amount of production income exempt from the PGRT, from $500,000 to $2 million, was a welcome step in that direction.

For reasons ranging from severe financial stress to prudent decisions to proceed only with minimal exploration and development activity in this pricing environment, energy companies are not attempting to replace oil reserves being exploited. This is a threat to our security of oil supply. At the same time, Canadian ownership of the industry is jeopardized because previously favoured companies need time and some help to adjust to lower prices.

The oil and gas producer organizations have been calling for immediate action, although not necessarily the same action. There are independent agencies, such as the C.D. Howe Institute, calling for extraordinary government financial assistance to the oil industry, as well as the agriculture sector, on grounds that enormous and long-lasting economic harm is inevitable if the west's two largest industries are in dire straits simultaneously.

We now have the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, tabled yesterday, which recommends government action to deal with both producer and consumer problems arising out of the dramatic decline in oil prices.

The report presents four recommendations: First, that financial assistance, limited in amount and duration, be extended to producers of conventional oil through a program which will ensure that smaller producers receive the principal benefit; second, that financial assistance be extended to producers of nonconventional oil. This assistance could take the form of a floor price for all existing production and limited loan guarantees for new projects; third, that the federal government monitor Canadian posted prices to identify any significant deviations from Chicago postings. If Canadian producers consistently receive lower values for their oil, the government should consider instituting an administered price; fourth, that a monitoring group be charged with scrutinizing petroleum product prices in the interest of maximizing competition and minimizing costs to the consumer. Findings should be made public on a regular basis.

The report justifies its recommendations of federal intervention on the sharing nature of our country, exemplified when prices moved up rapidly and the cost of oil was held down, allowing consumers across Canada an opportunity to adjust. There are no figures in the report, but numbers, I understand and have heard, range from $20 billion to $60 billion in forgone revenues to producer interests to the benefit of consumers.

The most important justification for the recommendations, however, is that if Canada wants to avoid being lured into the trap of becoming dependent on imported oil with the attendant risk that exporters of that oil will once again exploit that situation to our detriment, we must have a policy designed to provide us with as secure a supply of oil into the future as we can reasonably afford.

We must have a policy which takes into account that while we in Canada and the United States have about a ten-year supply of oil at current rates of production, the Saudi Arabians and several other Gulf producers have over a 100-year supply. They have demonstrated through the rapid price decline we are now addressing, and through earlier rapid increases in price, that they have the power to manipulate the market.

We must recognize the fact that we live in a world of unpredictable energy prices. The premium price recommended by the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for the first 1,000 barrels per day of production for two years would help the smaller oil companies adapt to lower world prices. If prices rise, the program would, of course, end. If the price remains low, the time to adjust provided by the program can be used to consider and develop an adequate program within the discipline of lower prices.

An important comment to be made on this aid to the industry is that it should be administered so as to ensure that the expenditure will in fact achieve the results sought, which is additional exploration and development activity. The aid program should not become simply a conduit for government aid to banks through the energy industries.

The recommendation for tar sands and heavy oil is to provide an incentive adequate to ensure production from existing facilities and provide reasons for the industry to continue working on plans to bring into production more oil from these sources. This new oil production is essential to replace production from our declining conventional reserves.

My own feeling regarding the tar sands, heavy oil and frontier production is that we should concentrate more on direct expenditures, and/or indirect tax expenditures to ensure that we do not lose our technical and engineering ability to discover and develop these high-cost reserves quickly, if necessary, in response to an energy crisis such as the one we experienced in the 1970s. I am not sure that we can afford a program at this time which provides enough incentives through price support to bring on this type of oil production. I am sure, however, that we must do what we can within our means to maintain as much momentum as possible to ensure production in the long term from these sources.

The report's recommendation on the price-to-producer problem is of great importance, and I gather from recent reports of Canadian posted price that it is quite possible that the airing of the issue has helped alleviate some of the difficulty oil marketers are having in a market that is now decontrolled for the first time in more than ten years. The reference to the Chicago market for a formula determination of the price range outside of which the Government of Canada should consider implementing an administered price is a good choice. As the report states, Chicago is a market supplied by many sources of oil and in which there are many refiners with a substantial market for refined products.

Addressing consumer problems was a difficult task for the committee. Unlike the price-to-producer problem, product retail marketing has been on the basis of a free market for as long as I can remember. The concerns consumers have about price reduction in response to lower crude oil costs is a real one; monitoring and publishing prices with all taxes excluded will provide an opportunity for informed consumers to make the best judgment on what problems exist in the pricing of transportation fuels and heating oil.

For the reasons stated earlier, I find the government's lack of vigilance and sensitivity surprising and of great concern. The government is implementing what I guess it thought would be a carefree policy for energy. The market would govern. Buyers would be buyers and sellers would be sellers, the Minister of Energy told us. There seemed to be no thought at the time of developing their policy of the price collapse that we have experienced.

The Western Accord states that:

In the event of international oil market disturbances that result in sharp changes to crude oil prices with potentially negative impacts on Canada, the Government of Canada will take appropriate measures following consultation with the provinces to protect the Canadian interest.

We have had a sharp decline in prices. The Canadian interest is at risk, but we have had no response from the government.

• (2020)

It did not occur to me at the time of first reading that provision of the Western Accord that the government had in mind only a sharp increase in price. On re-reading the press release which accompanied the Western Accord, however, there may be an indication of that position on the part of the government. It states:

Canadian consumers will be protected from the volatility of the international markets. If world prices escalate rapidly, or if security of supply is threatened, the Federal Government, in consultation with the producing provinces, would take appropriate measures to protect Canadian interests.

No reference is made to a rapid decline in prices.

The most concrete evidence of the government's intention seems to be its lack of response to the request for help from the industry. We are seeing an abandonment of the Canadian pragmatism that we have been able to rely on in the past. We have a government which apparently feels the solution to the crisis is to stick to the letter of the non-interventionist ideology from which its policy originated.

Westerners are becoming increasingly frustrated, anxious and annoyed at the government's lack of commitment for action within a stated time frame. The government must awaken to the reality that its work is never done. To carry on with the household analogy, the energy policy kitchen is in a mess; it is a danger to our health; and it is time to clean it up.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. H. A. Olson: I rise, honourable senators will be pleased to hear, to support briefly what Senator Hays has just said about the report that was brought in and, more particularly, about the government's policy with respect to the energy sector since it took office.

I spoke earlier about what I am sure is going to happen to the natural gas industry as a result of that policy. Senator Hays has just outlined what the committee found as the result of the deregulation of the oil industry and the disastrous consequences, if I may put it in another way, associated with that.

I think what Senator Hays has said is accurate, but he has said it too softly. This government has copped out as far as governing this country with respect to energy policy is concerned. I think it is a despicable display of dereliction of duty, if you like, because they simply have not faced up to the necessity of keeping that industry viable in this country. It is not good enough to say that we will watch it while it collapses, until it stabilizes, and so on, because, honourable senators, there are a whole lot of people in western Canada, and particularly in Alberta, who are being severely hurt because of this. Their jobs are being lost at the rate of about 200 per day. Some of them have absolutely no other skills. Yet, Canada needs the energy sector to stay in place. Therefore, there is no hope of their finding another job reasonably equal to what they had.

There are Canadian companies going into bankruptcy regularly and the prospect of that accelerating is high indeed unless this government takes its responsibility to set up rules so that that part of our economy is not going to be sacrificed.

I just want to add to what Senator Hays has said so well, but I think it should be put in far more blunt language and perhaps, somehow, we can get the message across to this government that they have a responsibility to the people in Alberta even though, as he said, they have been sending Conservatives down here for 25 or 30 years. That is going to change and change dramatically when they find out how callous this government is towards the economic depression in Alberta.

On motion of Senator Hastings, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 2698)

FISHERIES

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, June 26, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on February 6, 1985, to examine and report upon all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada and all implications thereof, respectfully requests that it be empowered to adjourn from place to place outside Canada for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the "Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees", the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

JACK MARSHALL,
Chairman.

APPENDIX (A)
TO REPORTTHE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE
ON FISHERIESAPPLICATION FOR BUDGET AUTHORIZATION FOR THE FISCAL YEAR APRIL 1, 1986—MARCH 31, 1987

Authority

1. Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Wednesday, February 6, 1985:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bielish:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada, and all implications thereof;

That the Committee have power to travel from place to place in Canada; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

CHARLES A. LUSSIER,
The Clerk of the Senate.

2. Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate on Thursday, June 12, 1986:

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Marshall moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bonnell:

That the Order of Reference of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, dated February 6, 1985, pertaining to a study on the marketing of fish in Canada and all implications thereof, be deemed to have been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries; ...

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

CHARLES A. LUSSIER,
The Clerk of the Senate.

Transportation and Communications $16,800

The foregoing budget was approved by the Committee on May 6, 1986.

The undersigned or their alternates will be in attendance on the date that this budget is being considered.

May 6, 1986	The Honourable Jack Marshall, Senator
Date	Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries

Remarks:

Approved by:

June 5, 1986 The Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Senator

Date Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Explanation of Costs

Transportation and Communications Outside Canada

Seafood Trade Show

Boston/Dallas/Los Angeles or Orlando

- a) Air Transportation
Ottawa-Boston/Dallas/Los Angeles or Orlando-Ottawa

Air fare to 1 city at approximately $700 for:

- 8 Senators
- 1 Clerk
- 2 Research Officers
- 1 Secretary
- 1 Messenger
- 13

$9,100

- b) Hotel Accommodations
i) 13 persons, 2 days at $150 each

3,900

- c) Per Diem Allowance
13 persons, 2 days at $50 each

1,300

- d) Ground Transportation
By limousine, taxi and bus for 13 persons 1,500
- e) Contingency 1,000

TOTAL $16,800

APPENDIX (B) TO REPORT

THURSDAY, June 5, 1986

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and approved the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries (formerly entitled the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry) for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its proposed trip to the Seafood Trade Show in the United States in connection with the Committee's examination of all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada, as authorized by the Senate on February 6, 1985. The said supplementary budget is as follows:

Transportation and Communications $16,800

ATTEST:

GUY CHARBONNEAU,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 27, 1986

The Senate met at 10 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-67, to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: No.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I want to make sure that I heard correctly. Is my friend, Senator Hastings, declining to grant leave to proceed with this bill?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I feel constrained to explain, speaking for my colleagues on this side of the house, that Senator Hastings' reservations, to put them mildly, about this bill find a good deal of support on our side. I personally support, for example, his concern that the so-called "gating" should not be left to the Parole Board but that it should be a judicial process. He has other reservations that are well known, because he has taken his position for a matter of—I guess years rather than months.

However, I must explain that, notwithstanding our support for his position on the bill, we would not have refused leave to proceed with second reading at this stage and we would have entered into the debate and supported him in that way on the points that I assume he would have made.

Therefore, I want to make it clear that this is not a Liberal caucus or opposition caucus initiative, but is Senator Hastings' initiative insofar as the question of leave is concerned.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, briefly I wish to assure the Leader of the Government that he did hear me quite correctly, that I am refusing to grant leave for second reading of this bill later today.

This bill is one year old today. It was presented in the House of Commons on June 27, 1985. It received second reading on September 23 and was referred to the legislative committee. It came back to the House on January 29; the report stage was on June 17; third reading was moved on June 18, and it was passed as the last order of business of this session, I presume, last night in the House of Commons.

So the bill is a year old today. But during all that time when it was under consideration in the House of Commons there was absolutely no concern for haste. It was not a priority bill throughout all of that time. Yet in the dying moments of this session it becomes a bill of prime importance. During the third reading stage, in the other place, just before coming to the Senate, the Solicitor General stated:

Every further day of delay jeopardizes innocent people. When we continue to talk, it is their safety that is at risk.

Was their safety at risk for the past year? Was their safety at risk for 139 days when it was at the report stage and not called in the House of Commons? Does their safety become at risk simply when it comes to this chamber, with two or three hours to give three readings and to hold a committee meeting?

Honourable senators, the overpowering evidence that was given to our committee does not support that view. In fact, Mr. Outerbridge, the then Chairman of the National Parole Board, stated before the committee:

—the action we are taking is not going to have long-term or substantial impact on the incidence of violent crime in the community.

No evidence supports the view of the Solicitor General that public safety is endangered should this bill not be passed.

Senator Flynn: What about next week?

Senator Hastings: Let the legislation take its course and let it be considered by the committee, if for no other reason than for the primary fact that this bill deals with the freedom of the subject.

Senator Flynn: You have been dealing with it for months and months.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, is Senator Flynn speaking on a point of order?

Senator Flynn: Yes, I could.

Senator Molgat: I wish Senator Flynn would get up, ask to raise a point of order, be recognized and then speak, instead of interrupting speakers constantly.

Senator Flynn: Did the honourable senator mention when he rose himself that he was raising a point of order? I did not hear him.

Senator Molgat: I asked a question.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, the objectionable feature of this bill has to do with the freedom of Her Majesty's subjects. It is for that reason that I think it is worthy of this house to give further consideration to the impact of this bill and the authority which we grant to the National Parole Board to keep an individual in custody, notwithstanding the fact that according to the laws of this Parliament he or she is entitled to be released. We have granted this authority to a board, and this chamber has explained its opposition to this procedure. Senator Flynn was present at the committee meeting when we agreed that this should not occur.

Senator Flynn: I was.

Senator Hastings: The Senate has not been consistent in this matter. In 1974 the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Carl Goldenberg, said in its report that the Parole Board should not be the sole decision maker when it comes to dealing with violent offenders. When a similar bill was presented in this house in 1983, we amended it to provide for judicial resolution of any continuance of an individual sentence in custody. We repeated it again, for the third time, in the report of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee dated May 14, 1986. It says in part:

The first issue has to do with the question of what is the appropriate body to make decisions with respect to the detention of allegedly "dangerous" inmates beyond the date of their eligibility for release on mandatory supervision. It is the opinion of the Committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32, An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act (on June 6, 1983 . . .), namely, that the courts, rather than the National Parole Board, should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates who would otherwise be eligible for release on mandatory supervision. We have heard the comments of the Solicitor General with respect to the appropriateness of the Board taking on this responsibility, but with respect we must disagree.

Senator Flynn was a member of the committee that made that report.

It is for these reasons, which deal with the freedom and liberty of the individual citizen, Her Majesty's subjects, that this bill is worthy of more consideration than three or four hours today to satisfy the government. I must be loyal to my convictions, loyal to my conscience and deny unanimous consent to proceed.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think that I should make a comment to explain the stand that the government takes on this matter in view of the rather extended explanation given by my honourable friend.

The first thing I have to say is that I respect his right to refuse consent for any deviation from the regular procedure in this house. It is the right of any member, and it is there to protect members' interests. Nobody on the government side is interested in trying to abrogate that right in any way. However, I think I should explain to the house why I take a different view of the time constraints that have been referred to. The suggestion has been made that the government is interested in passing this bill without proper debate or discussion, or in too short a period of time. I do not see it that way because I am aware that this bill received what is called pre-study, and it went to the committee approximately six months ago. I know that the committee has had very extensive hearings on the whole matter. It has had numerous meetings and has spent a lot of time on it, and the points that have just been raised were all very thoroughly ventilated. The committee received the testimony of ministers. Not only that but, if I am correctly informed, the committee went on various inspection trips that bore on the subject matter of the bill, to some extent at any rate, in order to get a first-hand view of what was going on. Therefore, it seems to me that with that very considerable study, perhaps a more extensive study than I can recall for most bills, there has been a pretty thorough ventilation of the issues involved, which of course is the whole aim and object of pre-study.

[Senator Molgat.]

We do pre-studies because we, on this side, have no more taste for being asked to pass bills in a hurry than does anyone else and, in order to make sure that that does not happen, we have pre-studies so that we do have a substantial grasp of the issues involved.

We on this side recognize that governments produce legislation in the other place, but they do not dispose of it. It is only disposed of by the opposition, so that we cannot deal with it in any official way until the opposition in the other place have dealt with it. They, too, had distinctive views on this bill and spoke on it at some length, and I know that my honourable friend, Senator Hastings, is aware of some of those debates. Therefore, it is a fact that a bill only comes to us when the people on the other side in the other place agree that that should happen.

I merely want to say that there is no intention on our part to act in a hurried or unseemly manner. That is why we have had the pre-study; that is why we have spent six months on it, off and on; that is why there have been the most extensive discussions in the committee. We felt that it would not be trespassing on the rights of this house, or indeed on common sense and good order, to proceed with the matter in the way that has been suggested by my colleague, the deputy leader.

However, we have been told that unanimous consent is not available. We accept that and we will just proceed in the normal way.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, since unanimous consent has not been granted, the bill will be placed on the order paper for two sitting days hence, namely, July 2 next.

Senator Frith: I suppose, strictly speaking, we should merely say two days hence, since we do not know yet whether or not we will be sitting on July 2.

Senator Doody: That is two days hence.

Senator Frith: I agree that it is in sitting days, excluding July 1. But I suppose that for the sake of the record it should be two sitting days when you make your adjournment motion. In any event, it is a small point.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, July 2, 1986.

PAROLE ACT AND RELATED STATUTES

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-68, to amend the Parole Act and related statutes.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, honourable senators, later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, since leave is not granted, this bill will be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading two days hence, which should be Wednesday, July 2 next.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, July 2, 1986.

● (1010)

FARM DEBT REVIEW BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Sherwood, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, for the second reading of the Bill C-117, intituled: "An Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors".—(Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I recognize the fact that this is not a great day for asking for leave. Nevertheless, I would ask for leave to proceed to Order No. 6 respecting Bill C-117, since the minister is present.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, do we have available to us a copy of the bill as passed by the House of Commons?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): A copy of the bill, as passed by the House of Commons, was distributed last evening.

Senator Argue: I do not have a copy in my hands.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I spoke on second reading of this bill last evening. I will have some further remarks to make when the minister arrives. Are we going to hear from the minister now?

Senator Roblin: We have to have second reading before we go into Committee of the Whole to hear the minister. The minister is present. If we have approval for second reading, I will escort him to his seat.

Senator Argue: I am very much in agreement with that procedure.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I had indicated last evening—at least to the leadership of my party—that I wanted to say a few words regarding this legislation.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Corbin is quite right; he did indicate last evening that he wanted to speak on this order. If he wishes to proceed now, he should do so, but before that he may want to know that Senator Argue also wants to make further observations on the matter. I believe that he intends to make those further observations at the third reading stage, after he has had an opportunity to question the minister. I wonder if Senator Corbin also would like to make his observations on third reading, after he has heard the minister. Of course, if he prefers to proceed before he hears the minister, he will do so.

● (1015)

Senator Corbin: Well, I am quite open to Senator Frith's suggestions, honourable senators. I have a number of questions I wish to put to the minister as well, but there are comments of a general nature that I feel I should make. I do not want to make them at the last stage of the bill because when we reach that stage things are pretty well tied up in a package with ribbons and what-have-you. There is no point in making remarks on third reading following examination of the bill in detail, but if the house will bear with me I can make those general remarks in Committee of the Whole, so I do not see any problem.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole, and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., that this bill be now referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Hazen Argue: I wonder if the bill with the amendments can be made available. I do not have it; nobody else has it that I know of.

Senator Doody: Will the Clerk please tell us if Bill C-117 is available with the amendments, and can he have it distributed, please?

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand that we will have the amendments in about five minutes, but first reading copies are being distributed now.

• (1020)

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable John Wise, P.C., Minister of Agriculture, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, now that we are prepared to proceed in Committee of the Whole, I know that I am entitled, on behalf of the chamber, to welcome to our proceedings the Honourable the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: One of the very practical rules of the Senate, dear colleague, is that, when we see fit, we have the right to invite ministers from the other place to join our proceedings, where they will be not only cordially welcomed but also entitled to take full part in the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole—although, I would point out to the minister, you will not be able to vote. Mind you, you do not have to come when you are invited, but we are pleased to see that you have decided to attend and we are happy to see you here.

I believe the minister has some officials with him and, with the permission of the Committee of the Whole, I would ask that those officials be seated in front of the minister so that if he needs expert advice he will have it close at hand.

With those few words of introduction and welcome, we can now proceed with the Committee of the Whole procedure.

Senator Argue: I should like to add my words to those of Senator Roblin in welcoming our distinguished Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable John Wise, who this morning is going to give us his position and information regarding Bill C-117.

I made my contribution last night at the second reading stage. I know from experience in the past that it is customary in the House of Commons, on clause 1, to have a somewhat wide-ranging debate. For my own part, if my colleagues would agree, I think it would be in order to invite the minister to make a general statement immediately and to inform us of the amendments that have been made. I am sure he will appreciate that we have just been handed them. Following that, I know some of my colleagues may wish to make a brief general statement on clause 1, if that is agreeable.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, before the honourable minister makes a brief statement, should we proceed in the normal fashion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is now in Committee of the Whole to take into consideration Bill C-117 intituled: "An Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors."

Shall consideration of the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall consideration of clause 1 of the short title be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Argue: Perhaps Senator Olson and I are following old procedures but our understanding is that in regard to clause 1 there should be a general discussion and, after the general discussion, the practice in the past has been to call each clause.

The Chairman: I am merely asking if it should be postponed. Clause 2 is the clause the minister will be speaking to. I would ask the honourable minister to make a short statement.

Hon. John Wise, P.C., Minister of Agriculture: Thank you very much, honourable senators. First, I want to tell you that it is a great pleasure and, indeed, an honour to be invited to this chamber. As well, it is a unique occasion for me because, although I have come to the Senate from time to time with visitors—since I think it is one of the most beautiful spots in Ottawa to which we can take visitors from across the country and, particularly, from our constituencies—previously I have either been seated in the gallery or have stood on the other side of the bar. This is the first opportunity I have had to step beyond the bar.

Senator Frith: There is a seat open in Ontario, Mr. Minister!

Mr. Wise: They tell me that my competition is pretty keen there, senator.

In any event, I deem it an honour to have the opportunity to appear before this chamber this morning. Many senators who have served in the other place and who represent those regions of the country that have an agricultural component within them will fully appreciate that 1985 was one of the toughest years the Canadian agricultural sector has experienced in over 50 years.

To understand why that came about, I think that we have to look into history. We need not go back very far—not to the turn of the century or anything of that nature. If we were just to go back to the early and mid-'70s, we would find that all of the so-called experts in this country, the U.S. and, indeed, around the world, in financial and agricultural communities and from every other walk of life were meeting together and making predictions about what the future might hold in terms of world agriculture and North American agriculture. We were always interested in the reports of their recommendations in respect of the future of Canadian agriculture.

It is interesting to note that most of those studies that looked into the future were sending out very positive signals. They indicated that interest rates in the '80s would remain stable. Well, they were wrong—dead wrong. They indicated that input costs in terms of farm production would also remain level. Of course, they were dead wrong there. They indicated that energy prices would remain stable throughout the '80s. Indeed, they were dead wrong there. They indicated that the demand for food production around the world would be greater than the supply, and they were dead wrong there. They concluded that we would be going through a period of shortages, not surpluses, and, indeed, they were dead wrong there. Governments, provincial governments as well, were introducing production incentive measures and programs, sending out into the farm community signals to produce to beat the band, because they believed in some of the predictions and findings that were made by the so-called experts of the day, and of course they were dead wrong there.

There was another problem, too—I think that the financial community has to bear some responsibility here: farmers were listening to those so-called experts whose studies seemed to be fine; they were reacting to the positive signals and were following those directions. They thought that there was no tomorrow in the primary sector of the agricultural industry, so they went to the financial institutions. Those institutions were interested in expanding their lending portfolios in the agriculture community during that period of time. I suppose that they were caught up in the same observations and reacting to the same recommendations. At the risk of some criticism, which I will accept, I am going to say that during that period of time the financial institutions made available too much credit to the primary sector of the agricultural industry.

Where are we today and where have we been over the last two years? Statistics Canada indicates that there are about 318,000 farmers in this country. Many honourable senators will recognize how Statistics Canada defines a farmer. There are some farmers in this chamber. If we put our definition on how many farmers there are in this country, I believe we would agree that there are about 200,000. We have to recognize that about one third of those farmers have no debt at all. We have to realize also that about another third have at least 74 per cent of equity in their operations; and the remaining third will be taken up in the group from 73 per cent equity in their operation down to about 2 per cent to 3 per cent—one cannot really get an accurate handle on it here, but let us be safe and say that it is probably around 5 per cent—whose debts exceed their equity, and I believe that is slightly high.

● (1030)

There are then a number of producers, probably about 20 per cent of the nation's farmers, who are in trouble. But probably between 5 per cent and 10 per cent are in serious trouble, and, more than likely, about 5 per cent will come forward today to use this piece of legislation.

We have to be optimistic, but, on the other hand, we have to be realistic. Some people tell me that they can see some light at the end of the tunnel. They might have better eyesight than I do. I am asking those people if they can tell me whether they can define whether that really is a light or whether it is a light in front of a freight train. I would like to know. So I am not very optimistic—I am realistic—when I look at factors on which I may comment a little later.

As we look down the road for the next two years—and no one has a licence for accuracy in crystal ball gazing—I would think that more than likely over the next 24 months more farmers rather than fewer farmers will go into this farm debt review process and will utilize the rural transition program. More than likely we could reach 10 per cent.

The purpose of the bill is as follows: It establishes a provision where we can set up farm debt review boards. There will be at least one farm debt review board in each province. If the workload and the region, in conjunction with the federal government and the provinces, determine that we can establish more within a province, then the legislation will allow us to do that. For a variety of reasons, I hope that it is not necessary. I do not like to talk about my own province—I would rather talk about another province—but I will do so in this case. Honourable senators will realize that there is quite a marked difference between northern Ontario and southern Ontario; that there is a difference between southwestern and eastern Ontario. The northern part of Ontario is much different. So it might well be that there could be a decision to establish, for an interim period, a second farm debt review board to deal with conditions in northern Ontario. If that is the case, then the legislation will allow us to do that.

The provincial review boards will be made up of 10 members plus a chairman. They will be order-in-council appointees. Each review board will have a small secretarial staff to be hired by the board, and each review board will also have some field staff—not many, but whatever is required—and they will be hired by contract.

In addition to the review board, I have invited farm organizations and all members of the House of Commons—and I extend the same invitation to all honourable senators—to forward to us the names of people competent in financial management, knowledgeable of the special conditions that we find in the agriculture industry, that we do not find in other industries in this country, who, upon request, can serve from time to time on the individual review panels; and I hope that I will receive a positive response.

We have made a few changes in the bill—and Senator Argue has referred to them—in co-operation with the two opposition parties. At present there is a lot of unfairness and inequity across the country. The way that the individual farmer is used now depends largely on where he or she might be located. There is a difference in the way that two almost identical farm cases are dealt with, given the absence of any legislation, within a distance of two or three miles. In fact, they could share a line fence, but one may deal with the bank of "X" in "Y" village and the other may deal with bank "A" in village "B" or urban area "B." The cases are almost the same. That is what exists at present, and we want to avoid that.

What will now happen is that if a creditor wants to serve a foreclosure notice on a farmer, he will be required to serve notice to that farmer in writing, explaining the farmer's rights—that is, the right that he has to appeal to the review board; and the farmer will have to do that. We first suggested five days. The matter was discussed in our negotiating meeting and a recommendation came forth from the honourable member for Algoma. He presented what I thought was a legitimate argument of a case in his region of northern Ontario and suggested that five days was perhaps inadequate for that area as well as for many other areas, such as western Canada and elsewhere. He suggested that five days was far too inadequate. I asked him whether 15 days would do and he said, "Yes, it would." I could not see any harm in that, so we accepted it, because I thought it made sense.

Nothing can happen within that 15-day period. The farmer has the option of not applying to the review panel; but more than likely he will. So he will have a 15-day period within which to make application to the review board.

There will automatically be a 30-day stay of proceedings. We had recommended that a 90-day stay of proceedings should be the maximum. However, we have watched quite closely the Saskatchewan experience, which provides for a 120-day stay of proceedings. Again, we thought that seemed to make sense.

During that period of time a review panel will be appointed. It will assess the individual's financial position. It will attempt to reach an arrangement on a voluntary basis. That is important, because it comes down to the nub, to the crux of this piece of legislation. If honourable senators look at the Saskatchewan experience, they will find that the track record there is very good. We have been told that the success rate there is probably somewhere in the neighbourhood of between 50 per cent and 60 per cent, which is pretty good.

Senator Frith: How do you define success?

Mr. Wise: Where an arrangement has been reached, the information that we have received from that project is that it is between 50 per cent and 60 per cent.

Senator Frith: An arrangement between the debtor and the creditor?

Mr. Wise: That is correct. If an arrangement is reached, the arrangement is ratified by the review board and becomes law; it becomes legal and binding; it becomes a contract. If they do not reach agreement, then the normal foreclosure and disposition process takes place.

[Mr. Wise.]

● (1040)

It is unfortunate, but we must recognize that all farmers will not survive. I get a little concerned sometimes when farm organizations and other individuals say, "Look, the only thing we need is 6 per cent money. That would solve the problem." It will not solve the problem in many cases. We have taken the time and trouble to look at many of these cases on an individual basis. We could give many of them 6 per cent money—in fact, many of them are on 6 per cent money and some of them are on 5 per cent FCC loans. Those loans are before my time, but perhaps the honourable senator remembers those days.

Senator Olson: They are before my time, too.

Mr. Wise: In some of these cases, we could provide interest-free money and they would still not have a chance to survive. We could write off half the farmer's debts and provide him with interest-free money to cover the rest of it and he would still go under. It is unfortunate, but that is a fact.

It is also a fact that the government does not want to ignore or walk away from the troubles faced by these farmers. That is why in the last budget we introduced the Rural Transition Program. Over the next two years approximately $50 million will be put into the Rural Transition Program to assist those people who will not and cannot survive under the current process or any other process. This program will provide opportunities for these people to move out of farming into some other way of life. Until this program was introduced, this situation was largely ignored. Many people were walking around in a fairyland world thinking, "Something will happen to turn things around. Commodity prices will go up and all the problems will go away," when in fact they will not. To think in such terms is to ignore the obvious.

The point, nub, crux or crossroads of any piece of similar legislation is whether to take that extra step and provide in it the authority, either to a court or a review panel, to unilaterally impose settlement. Much of the debate on this bill has surrounded this subject. It has gone on in the public forum for about a year and a half. About 10 per cent, giving the benefit of the doubt, of the people eligible will use this legislation. It is hoped that its success rate will be equal to that of similar legislation in Saskatchewan, and perhaps better. I think that it will be better because there is more of a humanitarian or compassionate attitude today among the lending institutions with regard to the plight of farmers. It is not as good as we would like it to be, but it is better than it was 24 months ago. But even if 10 per cent of the farmers take advantage of this legislation, we must not forget that 90 per cent of the farmers are relying heavily on their continued good relationships with their lending institutions for full and immediate access to the credit that is necessary for them to operate. We do not want to risk the financial institutions limiting farmers' access to credit, because farmers are large users of bank credit. The debate on this provision has gone on across the country. I am not throwing this point out forever. I am merely throwing it out for now because I firmly believe that now is not the time to introduce it in legislation. An amendment to this effect was put forth by the opposition parties, but we rejected it.

However, there is a review clause within this legislation. Originally the review clause was a conventional one, but considering the government's support for some type of effective review, we got together with representatives of the opposition parties, with our officials and with officials from the Department of Justice and amended the legislation to provide for an annual review. There will also be a review in January 1987. At that time the review boards can be called before a committee of the House of Commons, which is the proper forum for the review of the efficacy of the legislation. This review will provide an opportunity to the committee to call witnesses from the agricultural community and the financial community to determine whether or not the legislation is working. If the legislation is not working as effectively as we think it could work, the committee will put forth the required recommendations.

Honourable senators, that is my general, somewhat rambling, off-the-cuff explanation of this legislation. It is important that this legislation receive final approval to allow us to put in place during the summer the review boards and panels and to put into the mill some of the cases as early as possible to determine whether or not the legislation is working and to assess it in general. I realize that the first review does not take place until 1987 and that that may seem like a long time to some. I would ask those individuals to bear in mind that we accepted an amendment from the opposition parties allowing for a total stay of proceedings for 120 days. The assessment process will probably not begin until September, because of the workload and for various other reasons, so the panels will probably not begin to exercise that 120-day stay of proceedings for some time. It will probably be December before we have much of a track record to examine.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, as you all know I am not an economist, but that may be a redeeming quality. I would also like to think that, over the years, I have had a pretty good understanding of agriculture, even though I am not a farmer. However, I have lived in close association with people who live off the land and therefore I feel that I am qualified to say some of the things that I want to put on the record this morning, especially as they apply to New Brunswick and particularly, as the minister may have already guessed, with respect to the potato industry, which I will come to in a moment.

● (1050)

I think this bill reflects an ill that has been growing over the years. I will give credit to the minister for having produced this legislation. I am sure that, for one thing, it certainly will do no harm and it will certainly help a lot of people. However, the debate is open as to whether or not we could have had different legislation, or whether or not we could have modified this legislation to improve it even more. Unfortunately, because of time constraints, I for one have not had an opportunity to follow the debate in the other place and, indeed, this bill arrives in the Senate with some pretty serious time constraints. But we have no choice; we must adopt the legislation.

Nevertheless, I think that some fault must be applied to the present administration in Ottawa and to past administrations to some extent in light of the fact that the problem developed in their time and has grown in our time. I am not sure that the legislation, inasmuch as I understand it in the short period of time I have had to examine it, will have the same beneficial impact straight across Canada. I think that it may please certain sectors of the agricultural industry in certain areas of the country to a great extent, but will not apply equally well in other parts of the country that are pre-occupied with other types of produce, because of the way those sectors are structured, because of the way they do their financing, because of the longer-term implications of their decision or, indeed, because of the short-term life of the goods that they produce. So the rules of the game, in my opinion, cannot possibly affect equally every producer straight across the board in Canada unless special consideration is given to particular problems in each individual sector. I realize that the legislation provides for provincial boards to set up their regulations, and the minister is at liberty to brush those aside and impose his own regulations. At least, that is my understanding of the text as I read it rapidly last evening and this morning. I could be right or I could be wrong. That is inasmuch as we are talking about the same type of regulations, but we will come to that during the question period. I am sure the minister will want to elucidate that if it is a problem of understanding that I have.

I said a moment ago that these problems have developed to the serious state they are now at because of a historical pattern that has grown worse over the years. For example, take the potato industry, especially in eastern Canada. Again, I will give credit to the minister for supporting attempts by potato growers straight across Canada to come to a meaningful understanding amongst themselves on a province-by-province basis to establish a national marketing board. The minister will recall that, at their meeting this winter in Ottawa, the potato growers met informally and decided that they would give their final best attempt to achieve the establishment of a national potato marketing board.

The minister will also recall that, in the dying days of the previous administration, the government decided to establish a royal commission of inquiry into the potato industry to look at all aspects of that industry. We all know that there were some in the industry who opposed the establishment of that royal commission, as indeed they had opposed the establishment of Canagrex, and we also know how both were handled in the interim. The present government and the present minister decided that we needed neither one. In other words, we did not need Canagrex and we did not need the commission of inquiry into the potato industry, and I venture to say that the potato growers, who have had their most hellish year that I can remember in my many years as a parliamentarian, would probably have their heads above water today if that royal commission had been allowed to proceed and to report to the government, and if the government had, indeed, wanted to implement some of the probably very reasonable and practical recommendations that would have come out of it.

When the government decided to sack the royal commission of inquiry into the potato industry, the minister said at the time that there were other ways and other means of setting right that industry. However, to this day, I have not seen anything very dramatic in that respect. In fact, Senator Roblin, in speaking for the government in reply to a number of my questions in the months that followed my entrance into this house, said that the government's decision was final; that there would be other ways to tackle or confront those perennial and structural problems but, to this day—perhaps with the exception of this bill—I have not seen anything dramatic happen. I am not suggesting that we should have drama, but we should at least have clearly-set orientation so that growers know where they are going.

I am not talking about the big boys here—the big boys out west or the big boys down east. They can handle themselves pretty well. McCain Foods can handle themselves pretty well and they handle themselves very well indeed. They create employment in our region and we are all grateful for that. However, they have a monopoly that crushes the small producer. That is what is wrong with the industry as it now operates in New Brunswick, and someone must have the guts and the courage to tackle that problem once and for all.

The small, family potato-farm operation cannot possibly survive unless it gives itself body and soul to the big corporation. Is it the policy of the federal government to just let the family farm disappear into limbo? If that is the case, just keep on allowing to happen what is going on today. That is why I say that the decision to scratch the royal commission of inquiry was probably one of the most negative decisions ever taken by the current administration. The only redeeming factor that we have is this bill, Bill C-117, to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors. Unfortunately, many of our farmers will go under, as many other farmers have during the past 18 months and previously. I say that because we have not had the fortitude, the determination, the will to look in depth at these problems.

• (1100)

I could not give a darn about committees of provincial and federal bureaucrats which meet regularly and which make recommendations to the federal Minister of Agriculture. They live behind closed doors. The bureaucrats out in the field operate with blinders on most of the time. They do well in their administrative responsibilities and duties, but they do not have a fundamental and long-term understanding of the industry, and that is the weakness.

If the government will not establish an inquiry into the potato industry, perhaps the Senate will. I will recommend that to the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I think that is one area that we should explore during the coming months. Indeed, I would attach some urgency to that.

[Senator Corbin.]

So, here we are today with a bill to bail out the worst affected producers in the agricultural sector of Canada. We are trying to help those who are drowning as well as those who are barely keeping their heads above water. I do not want to be derogatory, because a number of farmers do manage to survive on their own. In fact, I would say the majority of them, even in hard times, manage to operate because they have managed their financial affairs over the years rather well and have kept funds in reserve and avenues open with financial institutions, but there is more to it than that.

A number of farmers feel betrayed because they were led into specialized, intensive production at the behest and at the recommendation of so-called technical experts and specialists. Farmers from Prince Edward Island, for example, have been encouraged, through generous subsidies and through federal-provincial agreements, to overproduce their potato acreage. They have increased their acreage tremendously and they are partly responsible for the glut we have had in the market over the past year.

I wish to thank the minister, as I thanked his predecessors, Senator Olson and Eugene Whalen, for coming to the aid of potato growers during dire times.

I had predicted 14 months ago in questions I put to the Honourable Senator Roblin that the farmers again would come to Ottawa with extended hands. Why? Because we have failed to attack the disease at its roots—the structural problems. So, farmers feel betrayed. They were led down a garden path. They have made important capital investments; they have completely changed their machinery; they have been told to tear down their old potato warehouses and build new ones with better ventilation, but unless there is a market at the end of the line, unless there is some control on production, and unless we come to some agreement with our neighbours down south who, from time to time, are attempting to cut our two legs off, these problems are going to persist.

Honourable senators, without carrying on with my general comments, I will reserve a number of points I wish to make during the question period.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have a number of questions I should like to put to the minister. I appreciate the attitude he has taken in his initial statement and his frankness in assessing the general agricultural situation. When the minister talks about farmers who are going to go down the drain and farmers who are going to be saved with this initiative, and having the same success as Saskatchewan has had, I hope he will do a lot better than Saskatchewan has. Saskatchewan is not a good example, and I will get to that later.

I think it would be an error to look at the future optimistically. I see the European Economic Community continuing to do what it has done, and I see the United States continuing to do what it has done. I am sure the minister is aware that there is a vote likely to take place by United States wheat producers relating to whether or not they will have a higher support price for wheat in 1987. So, the prices may be going up rather than down. Of course, that makes it even more difficult for us to compete.

I want to put to the minister something that I think is very positive. It is not in his jurisdiction, but I ask him to look at it and to use his influence with provincial governments to expedite what I will refer him to if he agrees with it. I am talking about the Canada Assistance Plan, and the various assistance plans in the various provinces.

I have made a study of this, and the attitude of provincial administrations with regard to applications from farmers for Canada Assistance Plan benefits is abhorrent. They do not use the same criteria for farmers that they use for somebody from the city. Somebody from the city asking for benefits under the Canada Assistance Plan is asked, "Do you have any money?" If they do not have any money, they are given a cheque, and that is usually on the day they tell their story. When a farmer applies, they ask, "What was your income last year?" They do not ask whether they have any money, but whether they received a crop insurance cheque in 1986—which would relate to income from 1985 because of the way that is paid. They do not ask farmers if they have current liabilities against that payment. They then say to the farmer, "Take your crop insurance cheque and spend it on living and don't pay the grocer, who has advanced you groceries on credit, or the local fuel dealer, or the local fertilizer dealer." The third thing they say is, "Sell the farm!"

Farmers do not receive unemployment insurance benefits. Farmers are generally denied, by the administration, access to the Canada Assistance Plan, in most instances, although there are a few exceptions.

The unemployment rate in our country is anywhere from 10 to 20 per cent, depending on where you are talking about. Those people either receive unemployment insurance or benefits under the Canada Assistance Plan. If farmers were made eligible for benefits under the Canada Assistance Plan on the same basis as everyone else, my judgment is that from 10 to 20 per cent of the farmers would be eligible. That would mean a cheque would be coming in in the amount of $600 to $1,200 a month. That would do a lot to bring stability to the farm industry and would help those people who are having a difficult time.

I put it to the minister that that plan is there for all Canadians. I ask him to use his very important influence to talk to provincial people when he has an opportunity, because I think the principle of what I have said is sound and farmers should not be denied that benefit.

I also ask the minister to take into consideration getting the review people together and educate them about their job and giving them some understanding. I ask him to try to have them come out of the chute 100 per cent on the side of the farmers and not on the side of the large financial institutions. I think that is very important. They have to be sympathetic to the farmers, and not sympathetic to the financial institutions.

• (1110)

I would ask you—and I think you hinted that you may be doing it—if this is not really working, will you give consideration to putting some teeth into it, something like the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act that we have had in the past? A former colleague of yours, Jed Baldwin, campaigned for that years ago, as a private member, before this terrible crisis arose.

I would also ask you what your attitude is towards and what you are doing with regard to the Farm Credit Corporation. I believe you have a moratorium. Is that in effect? Is there any possibility of a farmer who has a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation getting any write-down of anything he owes the corporation, not in negotiations under this but in negotiations that have happened to date? Or is this restructuring program and this so-called commodity 6 per cent interest the feature of that program, namely, that the debt is just carried on to some future date and there is no write-down? Because I would plead that a write-down is absolutely necessary.

I advise you—and this is just free advice; we give everybody free advice in politics—do not let the financial institutions hoodwink you. I do not think if you got tough and reduced the debts and had a judge, or had some legal authority write them down, that they would get out of the field. They love to make money. They know that some farmers are still pretty good risks; they are not going to withdraw. If they are threatening to withdraw, then we should know that they are threatening to do this, and we should know exactly who is doing the threatening.

They are not a bunch of little innocents out there. I had one case of a farmer who was being foreclosed by the Royal Bank. His story, undenied by the Royal Bank, was that the Royal Bank took over his indebtedness two or three years ago and gave him a chunk of new money. But in taking over the new indebtedness, the farmer was called upon to pay a $75,000 interest penalty because the Toronto Dominion Bank wanted a payout because he had a loan from them at a high rate of interest, and they were going to lose that advantage. Well, isn't that great! He really got sucked in!

My experience with the Saskatchewan Review Board is that they are very much on the side of the creditors. I have had personal experience in this. I took in one farmer. They looked over his accounts and they said—these are the words they used—"The solution for you is to sign off. That is your solution." The solution they wanted him to take was signing off so that he would not go to the newspapers and get some adverse publicity for somebody in the newspapers. They said, "Well, you can have your buildings at home, and so on," but the Saskatchewan law says that they cannot take the home quarter section.

That is why I am saying: Get your people together and talk to them and let them come out of the chute on the side of the farmers.

Those are the series of questions I put to you. I apologize for the length of time I have taken in putting them forward.

Senator Denis: Mr. Chairman, I have only one word to say about this bill. It seems to me that it consists only of the establishment of a dozen boards to act as counsellors or advisers to farmers who are in bad shape—that is all. They have no authority at all. They can do nothing but counsel; and there are a dozen of them.

The existing Bankruptcy Act could do the job of helping the farmers as it helps storekeepers, or grocery stores and the like.

What can the boards do in this bill? Nothing at all. They give advice, and if some creditor does not accept it then there is nothing left. But you can go to the sheriff, the licensed trustee and the judge. In Quebec we have a law called La Loi Lacombe. Here the pros and cons are studied, le bilan, the state of affairs of the debtor, what he owes, and the judge decides what he needs to live on; the rest is placed in the hands of the court. Then after three months, or six months—it all depends on the amount he has to pay—they distribute that money proportionately among the creditors.

For me personally, that bill could be replaced by an amendment to the current Bankruptcy Act in order to deal with the farmers' position with the same results. If a farmer can pay $100 a month, or $100 or $1,000 a year in order to pay off his creditors, he could make a deposit in the court. The creditors cannot take further action, they have to wait and they are paid at regular intervals. Then, after some years, when 50 per cent or 75 per cent of the debt is paid, the judge decides if the person can be free. In the meantime he has to rely on someone who controls the money he has; the money he owes; and the money he has coming in.

For me, this bill deals only with the establishment of boards, a dozen boards; two or three lawyers in each province with their salaries, staff, and everything—all kinds of expenses that could be avoided by amending the Bankruptcy Act in order to cover the situation of farmers.

Senator Olson: I want to say a few words about clause 1 in response to the minister's opening statement.

First of all, I think that he gave a very clear and concise description of his intentions for what these review panels will be expected to do under Bill C-117.

I might also say that this encourages me to suggest to the minister, and to his colleagues, that they use this facility to come to the Senate more often to explain in their own words, and in as much detail as they see fit, the purpose of their legislation.

It was refreshing, if I may say so, to hear the minister be as objective and as frank as he was in stating what he expects from these review panels—and, of course, it is short of what the judicial process would be in the bankruptcy proceedings that are already on the books. I understand that. I am ready to support him in his efforts. I think he said that he expects something in the area of about a 60 per cent success rate, and then he defined "success" as being a situation where there is almost a voluntary reaching of an agreement that then constitutes the new terms under which the creditor and the debtor are to proceed. I agree with the minister's statement when he says that he is not optimistic about the ability of agriculture to climb out of the slump that it is in, because, as far as Canada is concerned, a very significant change in international price levels for cereals, grain, potatoes and other agricultural commodities would be required. There is no indication on the horizon that that is going to happen soon.

[Senator Argue.]

● (1120)

I am discouraged by the minister's prediction that perhaps 10 per cent of the farmers would use this legislation within the next 24 months. To me, that sounds like a high estimate and, indeed, it would be much more severe than I perceive the situation to be at the moment.

Mr. Wise: I think I may have been "Conservative" on that estimate.

Senator Olson: I hope so, because, as severe and as serious as the situation is, I sincerely hope that 20,000 farmers across Canada, which is 10 per cent of the 200,000 farmers which he defined as being practical farmers, would not need to make use of these review panels in order to sort out their problems with their creditors at the present time.

I think it would be a useful experiment to try to have more uniform treatment of farmers who are in essentially the same circumstances. However, as the minister pointed out, the treatment of them and the solutions can be very different, depending on the bank or whatever other financial institution the farmer may be indebted to. That certainly would be an improvement.

I know that these panels do not have the authority to impose a settlement. That is not provided for in Bill C-117. Perhaps we should have a period of experimentation in order to see whether or not some people on these boards will be experienced and will gain more experience in trying to reconcile the problems so that the farmer has an opportunity to pay off his debts and to get back on a realistic basis.

However, I am not quite sure what these review panels will have to do with the rural transition programs. Will they be involved in that? Perhaps that is not the intention of this bill, but the minister mentioned another program called the "Rural Transition Program" that is funded at the level of about $50 million over the next two years. We could see whether or not some recommendations come from the hearings these review panels hold and whether they can make some recommendations to the people who will be administering the Rural Transition Program.

By and large, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity we have had of talking directly to the minister. I hope this will be repeated, because I think we can get to the nub of the real problem of trying to find practical solutions. Again, I would congratulate the minister on his frankness and objectivity in his explanation of this bill.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, does any other senator wish to speak?

Senator Molgat: Mr. Chairman, I presume that, of course, we will have an opportunity to question the minister, and that if he speaks now it will not preclude other comments.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Wise: Honourable senators, I appreciate the remarks and, indeed, the observations and advice I have received from all honourable senators who spoke.

Let me just respond to Senator Denis. As you know, the Bankruptcy Act will apply only for a 30-day period. This bill will put into effect a stay of proceedings of up to 120 days. The Bankruptcy Act only protects unsecured creditors; it does not protect secured creditors.

In our consultations with provincial counterparts, if I had to pick one province which was more sensitive and more cautious over even this piece of legislation, I would pick the province of Quebec. They are very cautious and, indeed, we will be consulting with them—as we consult with all provinces—more frequently and on an ongoing basis to work out any of the federal-provincial problems that we have in order to simply put this voluntary process in place.

The message I get from you, sir, is considerably more hawkish in terms of extending the power of the court or a review board regarding a proposed settlement than what I get from the Province of Quebec.

I appreciated Senator Argue's observation. We look to Saskatchewan simply because it is the only province which has in operation legislation which has some persuasive powers in matters of this nature. As Senator Argue indicated, that province has the Saskatchewan Land Security Act which allows for a little additional power. As I understand the Saskatchewan provision, the referral to the court really does not extend the power of imposing it right now; it is simply a stay of proceedings for the home quarter section, I believe.

In response to your question about whether the review boards and the review panels would come out of the same chute with the same marching orders, I would say, yes, obviously that has to be the case.

Senator Argue: On the side of the farmer?

Mr. Wise: I would think it would be obvious that the vast majority of people on the review panels could be farmers. I would even go so far as to say that perhaps all of the people on the panel would be farmers, because the possibility of that is there. Most likely in practice they will at least form the majority on the review board at the provincial level. However, we will have to be certain that we have people on the review boards who are knowledgeable about financial management.

We have done a number of things in the farm finance area. As you know, I have introduced a moratorium on farm foreclosures on the Farm Credit Corporation. We have secured approval from the government to pick up the losses on the previous government's Special Farm Assistance Program which would result, if we are not able to get the money, in losses amounting to about $30 million. As you know, under the legislation, to participate in that Special Farm Assistance Program the losses had to be picked up by additional interest rate charges on clients of FCCs. We have gone through the process and our government is paying back to the Farm Credit Corporation losses under that program.

We have introduced the Interest Rate Conversion Program. That program is a $80 million commitment over the next three years. It brought all clients of the Farm Credit Corporation—not on a selected basis—that is, 5,600 of them, down from a rate of 16.75 per cent to 12.75 per cent. We introduced the shared risk mortgage program that caps the interest rate increases and decreases—we have to take the good with the bad—to 2.5 percentage points. We introduced the commodity based loan that ties the ability to pay with commodity prices. We may have to change that. That program was designed last August, presented to the farm community in September, finalized in the fall and introduced in the February budget. Well, times have changed. But I met with the board of directors of the Farm Credit Corporation a couple of weeks ago. They told me that they thought from their experience at this early date that all of the dollars assigned to the commodity based loan would be fully utilized. I said that if that were the case, fine and dandy; if it is not, we will amend the criteria, because we want to make certain that the dollars allotted to us in the last budget are totally used.

● (1130)

In the future the federal-provincial task force will continue to develop the equity financing scheme. I am a little concerned about whether we will ever get enough feathers on that bird so that it can fly.

I think that we should revisit the agribond issue and proposal. I also think that we should look at areas where the government could guarantee mortgages. In keeping with the recommendations of the two-price wheat committee, we should be looking at additional stabilization payments and/or some type of deficiency payment. But it is too early for that. We cannot yet define what the requirements will be in that regard.

We have done many things in the area of farm credit. If we have not done enough, we are prepared to do more. I think our track record is pretty good. I think you would be hard pressed to match it. I think we have passed more agriculture legislation in our 20 months in office than most governments—perhaps all governments—who have been in office for 20 years. We have taken 260 initiatives—that, honourable senators, is an initiative every other working day—since we were sworn into office. We have directed over $5.2 billion into the agricultural community. So, I think our record is pretty good.

In response to Senator Argue's question, yes, we do have dollars set aside that will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to participate in write-downs. I think we will be heading for disaster, not success, if at this point we extend the power of unilateral write-downs, that is, imposed settlements by a review board or a court. I think two things are going to happen at this time. One is that a disservice will be done to 85 per cent of Canadian farmers who are still doing all right. The other is that the courts will probably come down pretty much on the legal aspects of the case. When an individual borrows from a traditional lending institution, that should still be a legal binding contract. At this time, if I were given the choice, I would just as soon take my chance at a review panel on a voluntary basis, because we know that the banks and other creditors are writing off large amounts right now. The problem, as Senator Olson indicates, is one of inconsistency—you get it here but you don't get it there. The honourable senator and former Minister of Agriculture knows the situation extremely well. He has been there—indeed, he has never left—and understands the situation very accurately. On the other hand, he is not blindsighted by taking the other step. I am sure that he recognizes that we do have an obligation as a government to do something for the one 5 per cent, for the other 5 per cent, and so on, but we also have an equal obligation to ensure that whatever we do for one person will not cut somebody else's throat. I appreciate that recognition very much.

Senator Corbin is still making good speeches on behalf of the potato industry in his province of New Brunswick. I have had the good fortune over the last 14 years to discuss that problem in that commodity group, but I will not get into the Canagrex debate or the Carter commission; that is behind us. I think that we made some progress in 1979. I believe that the only answer to the potato industry is supply management. That may come as a shock to some honourable senators, but I believe that is the only solution. They know that I know that, but it must be appreciated that a federal minister in a federal government cannot impose a marketing system—even though you and I may believe it would be a perfect solution and, perhaps, the only solution—unless that marketing system is accepted by a majority of the people of that industry. We have sent a strong signal to them this time indicating that we will participate with the provinces in a diversion program in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. They are facing the same financial disasters as those faced in western Canada due to the drought, there is no question about that. But we are not going to come back and offer yet another $40 million, another $50 million or another $20 million. This diversion program will involve participation on a 50-50 cost-sharing basis with the provinces.

If it were thought desirable to enter into a tripartite stabilization plan, that is an available option because we amended the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The federal government, the provinces and the producers could enter into a tripartite stabilization system. But if they get themselves together and lay on the table a supply management marketing system for potatoes, then we are also in the ball game. I believe that tripartite stabilization is do-able, but we have to be a little more optimistic than that at the moment. Through talking to people in the industry, I have found that they believe that the market system is do-able. I hope it is, but I am not so sure. We have been through that process before, as has the honourable senator; he knows as well as I do, perhaps even more so because of his location and his history with the industry, that there is a lot of division on this point. We cannot put them together. The industry has to put them together.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I appreciate the minister's response. I would ask him to make some comment about my questions with regard to the Canada Assistance Plan, although I know it is not in his jurisdiction. It would seem to me that the aspects of this plan—the federal government's contribution of 50 per cent with the administration left entirely in the hands of the province—make it an instrument that if administered in the farm community on precisely the same basis as it is now administered in the urban communities would be of major help to the agriculture industry. I would ask him whether he can dispute the figures I am about to use.

[Mr. Wise.]

Let us take the $50 million for this Rural Transition Program. That sounds like a lot of money, but I suppose it is not that much when we consider the problem. Let us say that 3 per cent goes out of farming, and let us use the minister's figure of 200,000 farmers, although I would point out to him that there are 140,000 permit book holders in western Canada. Sometimes there are two farmers—and very legitimate farmers—in the same family. So, your figure of 200,000 may be small, but 300,000 may be large. Anyway, let us take the 200,000. If we take 3 per cent of that, we have 6,000. If I make a calculation in connection with the $50 million—I could be wrong here—I calculate that it represents only $8,000 per farmer. Is that right? I had better review my figures. Anyway, I think it works out to a very small amount per month, if we spread it over a period of two years. I do not know what it is for. It is about $8,000 per farmer, or perhaps it is a little bit more. If we spread that over two years and we divide it by the number of months, then the farmer has $350 per month for a transition. Big deal! If he can come under the Canada Assistance Plan, a family would get probably $1,000 per month if the family has two or three children. That is good money, and it would help the family greatly.

● (1140)

I do not think that I received a precise answer to my question. Are there any write-downs of capital and accumulated interest in the case of persons who have Farm Credit mortgages? Can you explain to me how that comes about? I am not talking about interest write-downs, and so on, but of the write-downs of the farmer's obligation—and I think that has to come.

I am pleased that the minister has a moratorium on farm foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation. Why would it not be equally possible or fair to have that kind of moratorium extended to the financial institutions? The minister is worried about the 85 per cent. He may do so, but I do not know what he is worried about. If you are going to help out the 15 per cent, I do not think that you have to help them out in a way that is detrimental to the 85 per cent.

I therefore ask those further questions. If the minister does not want a general moratorium; if he does not want to have a judge with authority—as judges had under the Farm Creditors Arrangement Act—to write down debts, as I believe they should have, and reschedule them, then I believe it should be considered. The best of farmers in the country should be given a chance. But the banks, who were their financial advisers, said to them when they thought about buying a piece of land for $500 per acre, "Look, you had better grab it, because don't you know that in the next few years the price of wheat will go up, and don't you know that they don't make any more land?"

The bankers all of a sudden became very wise. They said, "It does not matter if you have to pay $500 now, because two or three years from now it will be worth $800 per acre." That was the line. The farmers said, "Gosh, these high financiers imported from Toronto and who came into town last year must know all about it, and we just know how to grow wheat. We don't know all this financial paraphernalia." So they took their advice. Now, what do those same deep thinkers say—some of those deep thinkers who were the authorities for the banks? Some of them went out and followed their own advice, and now some of those high-priced officials are themselves before the review boards. Of course, they have other income, so it is not quite so bad with them. They were smart enough to stay on the bank payroll while they dabbled around and bought some land—and I know some of them individually, when I say that.

In any event, why not do that? What is the downside of this? To say to those review panels that they would be given the power to provide an individual moratorium, not of 120 days but over such period of time as the review panel thought might be necessary to bring about what it thought was a reasonable and proper settlement, bearing in mind all of the facts?

The banks can go to sleep for 120 days, and then foreclose. In the meantime some people come around and talk to them and smile at them while down in Toronto they send them their marching orders. So, all of these fine little negotiations may not come to anything.

You can refer to a success rate or a failure rate, but I say that if the failure rate of farmers who apply is 50 per cent—in other words 50 per cent go down the drain and are booted off the farm—then I think that represents failure and not success. I would see a rate of at least 80 per cent, probably 90 per cent, as being necessary to consider it a success. I can visit my farm neighbours—I live among them—and find that many of them are in deep financial trouble. Yet, technically they are the best farmers in the district. They know how to use ammonia nitrate and ammonia phosphate; they know how to use the best varieties; they constantly read literature—they are reading the Grain News from the UGG that tells them how to improve their agriculture equipment; they produce the greatest amount of wheat per acre—and they are going bankrupt, and they need help; and a 50 per cent failure rate is far too high.

I ask the minister to think very carefully about what I do not think would be a very revolutionary suggestion, namely, that the individual review panels, through the proper bureaucratic and authoritative process, have the authority to see to it that 30 days can be added on to 30 days, to be added on to 30 days, to be added on to 30 days, and so on, so long as they see that there may be some hope that an arrangement can be signed. That would be a big message to the banks.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have just one comment to make. I hope that the minister will use his influence to make certain that Hazen Argue is not on the short list as a successor to Gerald Bouey.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I do not know whether the minister wishes to proceed by answering individual comments or would prefer to leave that until the end. My point is very short. It is one that I raised in my initial remarks with respect to the power or the ability of the minister to overrule the provincial boards. I should like to refer the minister briefly to clause 10 on page 4 of the bill, specifically to paragraphs (1), (2) and (3). The clause says:

10.(1) A Board may make rules respecting the management of its internal affairs and generally for the conduct of its activities.

(2) The Minister may make rules respecting the management of the internal affairs of a Board and generally for the conduct of its activities and the members of the Board shall comply with any such rules made by the Minister.

(3) In the event of any inconsistency between any rules made by a Board under subsection (1) and any rules made by the Minister under subsection (2), the rules made by the Minister shall prevail . . .

That is what I was alluding to in my remarks, that you have—how shall we call it—the overbearing power of determining what the rules will be. What is the initiative of the local boards with respect to rules? It seems to me that they do not have very much latitude, from the way that I interpret this particular article. In the final analysis, will it be the bureaucracy that will run the boards, as it usually is?

The Chairman: Before calling on the minister, it is the intent of the Chair to call every clause, and any senator who wishes to ask a question on that clause will have the privilege of doing so. I will now call on the minister to reply to the two questions that have been asked.

● (1150)

Mr. Wise: Honourable senators, I shall respond to the questions raised by Senator Argue first. I began my career in politics at the municipal level in 1960. I spent 12 years on municipal council before coming to Ottawa. I draw that to your attention because, indeed, for the first six years of my tenure, the municipal council actually administered the Canada Assistance Program. After that point, the program went to the county, where it is now. I agree with Senator Argue that given the rules that now apply, farmers do not qualify in most cases. With regard to the honourable senator's question about the FCC and write-downs, we have not been able to do any write-downs, because the act does not allow us to do so. If it did, our losses would have to be picked up by increasing the interest rate. We have set money aside in the budget package to allow for FCC losses as a result of the voluntary process to set aside loans, to write them down and so on.

With regard to the moratorium, there may be some question as to whether I have the appropriate authority to impose it. However, I have not been challenged so far. I think that I made a good move in imposing that moratorium. In fact, it is the second moratorium I have imposed in the 20 months I have been in office. The honourable senator will know why I imposed a moratorium in September 1985. That moratorium will remain in place until such time as the review panels are in place and the Rural Transition Program is working. The honourable senator will have to make his recommendations with reference to a general moratorium to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would ask him to remember that this legislation applies across the country, and that any bank serving foreclosure notice must face the possibility of a stay of proceedings for up to 120 days.

I accept the honourable senator's mathematics on the $8,000 per family. This is not a pension plan or severance pay. The honourable senator knows as well as I that given an opportunity to retrain for six months, twelve months, or perhaps even less than that through bridge financing, most people in farm families will find a job. I realize that $8,000 is not a lot of money, but with a $30 billion deficit, the government is cramped for cash from time to time. I am sure that the honourable senator knows that.

Senator Argue: Financing is tough.

Mr. Wise: At least this legislation recognizes reality and for the first time ever provides financial support in this situation. The honourable senator complains, quite rightly, about the inability of the farmer to receive payments under the Canada Assistance Program. However, this bill provides for bridge financing to certain individuals who do not qualify for anything else.

Senator Argue: And who are leaving the farm.

Mr. Wise: Yes, that is right. That point goes back to the point Senator Olson made about 10 per cent of those eligible taking advantage of this legislation. I indicated that 10 per cent was a liberal estimate, not a conservative one. Indeed, I hope that it is high.

Senator Olson: So do I.

Mr. Wise: I say "high" because if, for example, somebody calculates it at 9 per cent, then the 10 per cent figure appears to be way out. Honourable senators realize that included in that 10 per cent are farmers who will use this service before they are served a notice of foreclosure. I indicated that about 20 per cent of farmers are in financial trouble of some sort. If a farmer feels that he is in trouble and that he would like to get together with his creditors to work out a financial arrangement that reflects his ability to pay off his debts in advance of receiving the notice of foreclosure from the bank, he can simply apply to the review panel.

Senator Frith: So the application can be triggered by the individual?

Mr. Wise: That's correct.

Senator Frith: So jurisdiction does not depend on receiving a notice of foreclosure from the bank. A debtor can do it because he or she wants to do it.

Mr. Wise: That is correct.

[Mr. Wise.]

Senator Frith: I had not realized that.

Mr. Wise: Too often the lines of communication between the farmer and the bank break down, and therein begins the division, the hard feelings and the lack of understanding and appreciation of the individual's case.

There is one more thing that I would like honourable senators to consider. We as government have an obligation to the total farming community. Sometimes, and perhaps it is more than that, perhaps it is most of the time, the first losses suffered by a farmer are the lowest losses. Here we are bending over backwards and providing government funds, and this, that and the other thing, to keep the farmer on the land for another 12 or 24 months. Too often, when looking back and asking whether we did the individual a favour, we find that we have not done that individual a favour at all. This is the sort of haunting realization we all face when we say that we want to take another step, and provide more money to keep the farmer afloat for six months, twelve months or even longer, that in the final inning, when the game is over and all things are considered, it is possible that we will not have done that individual much of a favour. Perhaps he will have nothing but what he receives from the Rural Transition Program. Perhaps if that individual had walked off the farm 12 months or 24 months earlier he would have had a lot more cash in his pocket.

So, to answer the honourable senator's question, a farmer does not have to wait for notice from a bank to go before the board. He may go there on his own initiative to seek their help.

Senator Frith: So, it is a bit analagous to a voluntary assignment and an involuntary assignment in bankruptcy. I thought that your answer earlier was that the farmer could trigger the mechanism of his own accord, which would not put into effect the stay of proceedings provision. A stay of proceedings would not be initiated in such a case since the farmer initiated the action himself. There would be no proceedings to stay.

● (1200)

Mr. Wise: Senator Corbin, there is a necessary but normal section in the act which simply authorizes the minister to establish the rules and the criteria of the review boards and panels to ensure fairness and equity across the country. I believe that I do not have the ministerial authority to intervene, second guess or impose settlements of that kind. However, we can change the rules as we go along and as we see fit, but I want to send the signal that if there are any major changes over and above what is set out in this legislation, I believe that it should come after the boards have had a track record and after the process has been reviewed by the standing committee.

Senator Corbin: Thank you for that explanation, Mr. Minister. However, it does raise another question. I seem to detect in that reasoning a lack of flexibility. If you are going to have the same basic rules across the country, you may not then be in a position to address particular sectoral or regional situations.

They may be rare and far apart, but would you not prefer to ensure flexibility rather than to have statute rigidity?

Time is of the essence in legislation of this type. Time will be of the essence to applicants who apply to these boards and committees, and unless you have built-in flexibility your patient may go under by the time they resolve his case.

Mr. Wise: Honourable senators, I know exactly the point Senator Corbin is making. However, I would like to say that my involvement in establishing the rules is to ensure that fairness and equity apply across the country and that has to be first and foremost. On the other hand, after discussion with my provincial counterparts, there could well be people within the industry from one region or another who have particular concerns. For example, let us look at Atlantic Canada. At one federal-provincial meeting that we had on this subject it was suggested that perhaps there might be a board for Atlantic Canada. Then, at the next meeting I was told by my colleague from Nova Scotia that after second thought he was of the view that it might be better if they had a separate review board for the province of Nova Scotia. Therefore, while I would like to accommodate you, I wonder if the same thing could be achieved by the people and by the personalities who make up the review board and review panel, because they will be coming from those areas.

I was a little mystified, sir, by the concern you expressed that this bill would not represent the potato industry. I would like to say that this bill is not commodity oriented; it is financially oriented. Therefore, you cannot write different rules for dairy farmers and for potato producers, as I see it, and still maintain that fairness and equity. However, I am certain that given the opportunity to work, the people who will be sitting on that review panel will not be from Alberta; they will be from New Brunswick, and although they will not be next door neighbours, or from the same county as the farmer whose case they are reviewing, for obvious reasons, the people who will serve on those panels and boards will have that provincial background.

Senator Corbin: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Your comments practically opened up another can of worms, and I am very glad that you have decided not to take the approach of a regional board for the four eastern provinces. I say to you that that just cannot work. There are already too many people lumping the four eastern provinces into a so-called new province called "Atlantic Canada". No such animal exists in any statute. There is no Atlantic Canada. There are four provinces: New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland and, as individual provinces, they all have the very same constitutional rights as have Quebec, Ontario, the three prairie provinces and British Columbia. I do not particularly fault you, Mr. Minister. You have been led down the same garden path as have many others here in Ottawa. We are not Atlantic Canada; we are four individual provinces and our provinces are very different. The composition of the population in those provinces is very different. You could not have a very happy marriage between the people of Madawaska and the people of Cape Breton, with all due respect to Senator Muir. I think he knows what I am alluding to.

Senator Muir: They are all good people.

Senator Corbin: I say that for all sorts of historical reasons, patterns and present factors. In any case, honourable senators and Mr. Minister, I say that as an aside. I am glad that you intend to follow the other route and have individual boards for each province.

With that in mind, may I make the following remark now rather than having to write to you six months down the road: Make sure that in New Brunswick you have people of both French and English capability on that board, otherwise you will run head-on into very serious criticism and your board will just not work. I am sure that is what you have planned, but I want to flag it at this time.

Senator Molgat: Before we proceed, honourable senators, I would like to make some comments, and before I talk about the bill, I would like to join in the welcoming of the minister. We appreciate your being here, Mr. Minister.

By the way, I noted in one of your comments the glowing sales pitch with respect to the present administration and all that it has done for agriculture. I might tell you that if your comment has not raised a partisan response from this side of the house, it is merely because we are a much less partisan operation than is the other place.

Senator Doody: From time to time.

Senator Molgat: Otherwise, I assure you that you would have found substantial response from this side, and not necessarily agreement with the sales pitch. For example, you might have been asked why it is that if this is such an important subject—and we agree that it is—and one that has been building up for some time, why then is the bill just arriving in this place today and why was it introduced in the other place only some two weeks ago? However, those are partisan questions and I really want to get to the substance. But that is merely a reminder that we should not be aroused to partisan response.

Mr. Minister, I am concerned about the degree of consultation with the provinces, because, as we know, agriculture is a shared responsibility between the federal and provincial governments. You have mentioned the fact that the province of Saskatchewan is now the only province in which a bill respecting these matters has been passed. I understand that in the session of the legislature of the province of Manitoba which is presently going on, there is a bill of this nature under debate. Can you tell us what consultations there have been with all of the provinces, including those two, respecting these matters?

Mr. Wise: Senator Molgat, I appreciate your point of view, but I would like you to relax. I was not citing any political document when I talked about the 206 initiatives and the $5.2 billion. I was simply reading the actual record of what we have achieved, so there is no partisan reference in that at all.

Senator Argue: The income continues to go down.

Mr. Wise: Yes, the income continues to go down. I can talk about some of the reasons why we are experiencing those conditions. I have already talked about some of the domestic ones, but I could talk about some of the international ones as well.

However, with respect to consultation, there has always been on-going consultation, sir, between my provincial counterparts and myself. On this very subject, we met as a group here in Ottawa in January and had a full discussion of where we were going and where we were coming from, and the type of legislation that we expected to introduce.

• (1210)

Again, it all hinged on how far we were going to go. Once they were told how far we were prepared to go, then there was agreement. I told my provincial counterparts in January that we were laying everything on the table, that we wanted them to know exactly where we were coming from and how far we were prepared to go. That is what is reflected in this bill.

There was some debate on that, and I indicated to them that this was so important to the federal government that I would not move to the next item on the agenda until I had a clear message from them as to whether or not they would accept this. We canvassed the people at the table, and eight out of ten said that they would accept legislation of this kind, but that they would not accept any piece of legislation at the federal level that would allow or extend the power of the court or the review panel to impose debt write-down unilaterally. The two exceptions were the minister from Newfoundland and the minister from Manitoba. The minister from Newfoundland thought that he could accept something stronger than that. What is stronger than that? The court or the review panel. There is nothing fuzzy about this at all.

The minister from Manitoba thought that he, perhaps, could go beyond that point. The score card was eight to two.

Then we met again in May and dealt with this and other subjects.

Now there has been a change of government in Prince Edward Island, but they have just introduced a review panel that has absolutely no reference to a court in its operation. That panel does not have the power to impose any settlements.

I thought you had another question, senator.

Senator Molgat: I had asked a timing question regarding the bill, but I did not expect an answer. That is not necessary, because that might get us into a partisan discussion and I am not seeking that.

Senator Denis: This bill is intended to protect farmers. In protecting farmers you limit the delay in clause 24 to 30 days. You add another 30 days in clause 30, and another 30 days in clause 31. That gives farmers 90 days of protection as far as the bill is concerned, but farmers are not paid by the week or by the month. Depending on whether they produce cabbages, radishes, wheat or hay, they are paid at different times of the year.

Let us say that a farmer got involved in financial difficulties in February or March; what can this bill do to protect that farmer? Nothing at all.

The bill gives 30 days' protection at the outset, and if the farmer discovers that that is not enough time, there is another 60 days' delay. Why not make the delay a one or a two year delay? As long as the trustee takes care of the assets, that would be fine.

Under the Lacombe law of Quebec farmers deposit their profits in the court every month, every two months or once during the growing season. When there is a sufficient amount of money in the court, it is divided amongst the creditors. That is sensible. This law protects farmers for only 90 days and, in my view, that is not long enough.

Mr. Wise: I appreciate your observations, but at the moment we have absolutely nothing. We were left nothing and we have nothing, and we want to put something in place. Now a bank can serve notice of foreclosure and the game is over.

Senator Denis: There is the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. Wise: In that case there is 30 days. The bill gives a 90-day period, and we accepted an amendment in the House of Commons for another 30 days which allows for a period of 120 days.

I believe that an indefinite stay of proceedings is not very helpful to anyone. I would think that it is in the best interests of all to sit down at the table and in a spirit of co-operation, goodwill, fairness and equity attempt to arrive at a decision. I believe you will find that the membership of the review panels will be able to assess what the future holds for a particular operation fairly. If they can arrive at an arrangement, fine and dandy. That arrangement becomes law and is binding, but there is no magic here. We should not try to mislead each other or think that there is some magical way around this, or that every time a group sits around a table an agreement will be reached. The reality is that in many cases no decision can be reached because nothing can be done to save the individual operation. Therefore, some decision should be made. Again, if the operation cannot survive, then the operator is eligible to take advantage of the Rural Transition Program.

I know we all want to do more. I know that our hearts and heads are out to save the individual farmer and, indeed, that is the direction in which we should be going, but we will find that none of us has magic wands that will bring about a solution to all problems. We will have to accept the fact that in some cases there is no other answer except an exit. Unfortunately, there will be failures. The fact that we have kept them there for 120 days means they will leave with less cash in their pockets than if they had left 120 days earlier.

Senator Denis: Why not grant one year's protection to the farmers? That would cover the four seasons. What would be wrong with that? Why limit it to 90 days or 120 days? What is wrong with giving the farmer an opportunity to sell his products in order to settle his debts? If the farmer's financial troubles start in January and that farmer is producing wheat, how can this review panel do anything to help him if he has only 120 days' delay?

Mr. Wise: Honourable senators, I am not rejecting that. Again, it is like other measures that may well be included in this bill.

● (1220)

First of all, the recommendation of the advisory group was 30 days, and that you do not do anybody any favour if you go beyond 30 days. However, common sense indicates that you cannot get the job done in 30 days so we went to 90 days. Then we went to 120 days. Now the honourable senator is suggesting 365 days.

I believe that we should decide these changes in the act at the time of review. That review is going to commence in January of 1987. The review panel will take into consideration that there is no hope, the farmer cannot survive, and they certainly will be taking into consideration—if it happens to be six weeks from harvest—that no disposition of assets will occur. That is simply a common sense decision that will be taken by the panels, namely, that the individual will at least be allowed to harvest his corn, or his soya beans. Now, it may be that considering the price of corn, or soya beans, that you are not asking him to fork over as much any way.

Senator Argue: We are certainly at the nub of this whole question and this whole debate. Because the review panels have authority to prevent action for only 120 days, I think the legislation is most inadequate and, from my point of view, most disappointing.

The argument that the minister has made is that it would be unfair, I guess, to have someone in authority who can arbitrarily write-down the amount of obligations that a given farmer has and reschedule those obligations. I disagree with that.

I think Jed Baldwin, who was a distinguished member of the Conservative Party for many years in the House of Commons, was 100 per cent right when he moved, on three different occasions, changes to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, which would do precisely what I have been saying.

However, perhaps there is some kind of a middle ground. Senator Denis, I thought, made a very good contribution. Perhaps instead of this 120 days, the review panel should have the authority, as it now says in clause 30, paragraph 2:

Where a Board considers an extension of the period referred to in section 24 as extended under subsection (1), to be essential to the formulation of an arrangement between the farmer and his creditors, the Board may extend that period for a further period of thirty days.

Since I am not a lawyer, I will try to formulate the kind of amendment that I would like to see in this act in layman terms. I realize that the Senate has the authority, but there would be many constraints to our doing it at this time. However, it would amend the bill I have in my hand, which is the first reading copy, on the top of the page where that particular clause which I have already quoted in part ends,

"may extend—". At the end of clause 30, paragraph 2 it states:

—the board may extend that period for a further period of thirty days.

Then I would like to suggest the following amendment:

And further, there is no limit as to the number of consecutive thirty-day extensions that may be provided.

Now, that might not be Senator Frith's legal language, and it might not do the job, but—

Senator Frith: No.

Senator Argue: —in layman's English—

Senator Frith: No, that is good.

Senator Argue: —from the hills south of Moosejaw—

Senator Frith: No, no, no—

Senator Argue: —that is the best I could do in a very short time.

Senator Frith: Peace! I was not criticizing your wording at all.

Senator Argue: The idea is that the board would have authority to continue the process and to postpone foreclosures, or postpone procedures—

Senator Barootes: Forever.

Senator Argue: Forever, if necessary, all right; but they would have that authority, as long as they thought that such authority was essential to the making of a fair arrangement. You are putting confidence in them now by this amendment. In fact, you are placing even greater confidence in them. Wouldn't this be some message to the banks?

Senator Frith: Sure it would; they would not loan anybody any money.

Senator Argue: No, I do not agree with that at all; not at all.

Senator Frith: Make your point.

Senator Argue: The minister has said that a third of the farmers are in great financial shape. There is no way that a bank will turn down a loan to a farmer if he goes in there and he has clear title to, say, two sections of land and he has no debt. My God, they will lend it to his kids, to his wife, and to anybody else if he co-signs, and it will take ten minutes to get it!

Senator Frith: And forever to get the money back.

Senator Argue: Oh, no. The bank assumes that people are generally honest. People do not just go in and are given money. I do not think that would dry up all bank credit for agriculture; I do not.

Senator Frith: You know the west.

Senator Argue: That would not be the authority to write it down. If the board then decided that it was impossible for a given farmer, for whatever reasons, to repay a loan, then they would just wind up his affairs and let it go.

Then, when you come to a review of this in a few months' time, you would have a bit of a track record, and you would not be putting the board, and everybody else, in the position that when 120 days are over they have the farmer's hide and he is driven off to the city, and he is in the transition scheme after that.

Nothing is forever. Parliament can amend any legislation from session to session, and I would ask the minister to make a response to that particular suggestion.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 2 carry?

Senator Argue: I would ask the minister to make a response to that particular suggestion of a series of 30-day indefinite extensions.

Mr. Wise: Honourable senators, I have heard that argument before, and I have responded by saying that an indefinite stay of proceedings really does not help the client, or the creditor, as far as I am concerned, at the moment.

We are all anxious to have some type of experience, some type of a track record; that is what we have to have so that we can review it.

We have accepted an amendment that allows for a 120-day stay of proceedings. That will mean that at least by the beginning of January we will have something in our hands to place on the table in the other house, and something that can be referred from the table to a standing committee.

If we go for an indefinite 30 days plus 30 days, plus 30 days, I do not know what is going to happen. At least we have retarded the time in which we will have something to review by accepting the amendment from 90 days to 120 days; we have set it back. We will not be able to review that until January. So, if we go to indefinite 30-day rollover periods, it is going to go on, and on, and on.

So, honourable senators, I am going to have to reject it now for those reasons. But again, I think that it is something like the core provisions that are not in the bill—they are important points that should be considered at the time that the bill, and the track record of the bill, is reviewed in January.

• (1230)

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, the question I had asked of the minister regarding provincial consultation was prompted by a Manitoba government Information Services news release, which I had received, entitled, "Farm Debt Review Act Criticized by Uruski." On reading it I can only describe the position of the provincial minister as being highly critical, in fact, scathingly critical of the bill. It starts off by quoting the minister as having said:

... "failing to provide meaningful support to farmers in financial trouble."

At the end of the news release it quotes the minister as having said:

"In summary, the federal Farm Debt Review Act is a weak, timid and toothless piece of legislation, which will provide little benefit to farmers in financial distress," . . .

[Senator Argue.]

Mr. Chairman, as a representative from that province I am, frankly, concerned. The news release refers to the Manitoba bill which is presently before that house. I have not had a chance to see that bill since I only received this information this morning. The news release outlines four items where it claims the provincial bill is far superior to the bill now before us.

What concerns me most is the following statement made by the minister:

"Ottawa's legislation could interfere with the implementation and delivery of more effective provincial legislation, namely, Manitoba's proposed Family Farm Protection Act," . . .

If that is the case, then I find myself in an impossible situation at this point.

Has the minister received this information; has he had these complaints from Manitoba; and are there grounds for them?

Mr. Wise: Senator Molgat, I am aware of the comment by my provincial colleague. I would take you back to the discussions we had regarding this piece of legislation in January, March and in May when I indicated to you that there were two ministers who thought they would go beyond that point. In all fairness and accuracy, I said that one was the minister from Newfoundland who thought he could, and the minister from Manitoba, Mr. Uruski, thought he could go beyond that point as well.

If he can, then let him go ahead and pass this legislation, but it is clear that what we are proposing here at the federal level will not interfere with that in any way whatsoever.

It is interesting that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture clearly went on record as wanting the reinstatement of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. That was the official position of the CFA.

I had the good fortune to attend their annual meeting. This debate has been held first and foremost across the country and in most general farm organizations, but it did not hold prominence at the annual meetings of commodity organizations. At the CFA annual meeting we debated this very point which is: Do you go to the courts or do you not go to the courts? The official position of the CFA was that, indeed, you do go to the courts. At one time I held the position that we should go to the courts, and I got a message loud and clear from across the country—make no mistake about it. I said it in July, I said it in August, I said it in September and I said it at the annual meeting of the NFU, but after I said it I sure got the message loud and clear from all across this country: "This type of legislation; this type of legislation only at this time. No referrals to the court."

At the annual meeting of the CFA I informed them that two provinces would probably go to the courts. If you are going to take another step, that is where you go. I was asked which provinces and I told them that one was Manitoba and the other was Newfoundland.

After I had mentioned the province of Manitoba, the first person to the floor microphone was a chap called Jack Penner,

President of the Manitoba Keystone Agricultural Movement. I am sure you all know that organization and the individual. When he came to the floor he said, "Before I pose my question to you, Mr. Minister, I want to make one thing clear and doubly clear—that if my minister is suggesting that he could go one step further than what you are suggesting here and enact legislation that would refer the matters to the courts, he is not speaking on behalf of the farmers and the farm organizations of Manitoba."

I have been contacted by a number of farm organizations and by individual farmers in Manitoba. Our members have also received calls from credit unions and so on. There is a great deal of caution in this regard, and it spreads even to this area. It is not our bill; it is the Manitoba government's bill. The minister in Manitoba will have to deal with that himself. There is no interference whatsoever from here.

Simply by tabling a bill and going through the process yet falling short of final proclamation, you have nothing.

Senator Molgat: Do I have the assurance of the minister that this specific statement by the Manitoba minister that this legislation could interfere with implementation and delivery of more effective provincial legislation is not correct; that nothing we are doing here will interfere or prevent the Province of Manitoba from proceeding with whatever legislation it wishes?

Mr. Wise: Honourable senators, there is nothing in this bill which would prevent the Manitoba legislature from proceeding with its piece of legislation.

They have asked us, through a representative, I am sure, of the New Democratic Party, to propose an amendment to extend specific authority to them. Law officers of the Crown advise me that we cannot accept that amendment because it would be unconstitutional. Although I stand to be corrected, I believe it would be in conflict with section 16 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Senator Frith: You could, eventually, have a constitutional argument about it.

The Chairman: Shall clauses 2 to 39 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the short title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Sherwood: Honourable senators, as the sponsor of Bill C-117 in this chamber, I should like to go on record in commending the minister for his presence here, his willingness to discuss the legislation, and for answering a broad spectrum of questions on agricultural matters.

We are fortunate in having a minister so closely associated with the industry, so interested in the industry and so well qualified and experienced, because the matters he has to deal with pertaining to Canadian agriculture are, indeed, complex and far-reaching. We are fortunate in this country to have a minister as knowledgeable as the honourable minister who has brought all of this information before us. I commend him for doing so. We are grateful that he could come before this chamber to deal with this matter today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

● (1240)

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I just want to go on record as agreeing wholeheartedly with the sentiments expressed by Senator Sherwood. We have passed the bouquets around in here and we never really get too tough, but I thought that Senator Roblin was very effective in taking the message to the minister, and his response pleases us. We think it constructive that he has come here today and I hope that he will be prepared on future occasions to return. I also hope that others of his colleagues, on request, will be prepared to come and take their places in the Senate to answer questions.

I wish the minister good luck in all of the things that he is trying to do with which we agree. In other cases, we hope that he may change his opinion from time to time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred the Bill C-117, to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) presented the following report:

Friday, June 27, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

EIGHTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-96, intituled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977", has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Thursday, June 26, 1986, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following comments:

Your Committee regrets:

(1) that the government has chosen to make changes through this Bill which the Committee considers to be of a retrograde nature in Canada's contributions to the provinces for health services and post-secondary education;

(2) that the reduction for Quebec, about 1.5 billion dollars for the 1986-91 period, is even more retrograde since this amount will not be offset by any revenue increases caused by the budgets of May 23, 1985 and February 26, 1986; and

(3) that since it is the cash component of the federal contributions which is being reduced from what it would be under the present law, both the presence and influence of the federal government in these programs are being diminished.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM M. KELLY
Deputy Chairman

He said: Honourable senators, that particular report, which was prepared after the committee met last evening, was adopted on division. There were some senators in the committee who did not agree wholeheartedly with the tenor of the report and there were some, indeed, who did not agree with the report at all. However, the committee decided to send the report in the name of the committee rather than to say that some senators sent it or that a majority of senators agreed, which is the way it has been done many times in the past.

I simply want to put on the record that some senators—and I include myself among them—were not as enthusiastic about the wording of this report as was the majority of the committee.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, now.

[Senator Doody.]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, might I ask a question? Will copies of the report of the committee be distributed?

Senator Doody: I think copies are being made in both official languages, but they have not yet been circulated. If honourable senators prefer to stand this matter until they receive copies of the report, that is perfectly agreeable to us.

Senator Sinclair: I have a copy.

Senator Doody: Perhaps Senator Molgat has been left out again!

Senator Molgat: I have received the report of the Rules Committee.

Senator Sinclair: I suppose I got mine from another friend.

Senator Doody: Is Senator Sinclair satisfied with that one?

Senator Sinclair: Yes.

Senator Molgat: It is such a fine document that I would like to see it.

Senator Doody: It is finely phrased, although there are those of us who disagree. If senators wish to stand this matter until the report is circulated, we can move on to deal with other business.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps that would depend upon whether some senators would be ready to speak now at third reading while others, perhaps, wish to wait for copies of the report. If any honourable senator wishes to speak now, why not let him do so?

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask the government leader whether he has a timetable for the rest of the day. Is he proposing that we break for lunch and come back later, or is it the case that we will be working to the point of exhaustion?

Senator Doody: It is not my desire to exhaust the house. As a matter of fact, I am prepared to leave as soon as all of the legislation is passed. If the honourable senator could accommodate me in the next ten minutes, I would be the happiest man in the building. However, that is unlikely, and to prevent exhaustion we have ordered sandwiches, which are now in the Reading Room. With the goodwill of the Senate, we could continue with our business and take sustenance from time to time in the Reading Room.

● (1250)

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Since the vote may not take place right away, I would like to inform my colleagues in the Senate that I will be voting against third reading of this bill.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Do I understand that the motion for third reading has been moved? If so, I would like to say a few words. I do not propose to speak for very long. Yesterday I made some comments on this bill. They were made on the basis of an assumption which I thought was valid but which at our committee meeting last night turned out to be invalid. I was led to believe, as a result of a discussion which took place in a committee of the other place, that those provinces with taxation agreements with the Government of Canada were gaining considerable new revenue as a result of the federal budgets of May 23, 1985, and February 26, 1986. I was led to believe—here I borrow language used by Mr. Blenkarn, a member of the other house—that this bill was designed to recapture the moneys that were going to the provincial governments as a result of tax increases made at the federal level.

As honourable senators know, the Senate sent the bill back to the Committee on National Finance. It was the third meeting of that committee at which the bill was considered. I believe that all honourable senators who participated in those three meetings will agree that they were unusually good meetings. The Minister of Finance had the good sense not to come himself, but to send the Honourable Barbara McDougall, who is a very good apostle to the Senate.

Senator Frith: And has an unforgettable name.

Senator Doody: She is policy neutral.

Senator Stewart: I would not go that far. The minister brought with her two very knowledgeable public servants in the persons of Mr. Fournier and Mr. Gregg. Altogether it was a team that was well informed and quite candid.

What emerged at our meeting last night was that although the effect of the budget of May 23, 1985, is to reduce slightly the revenues of all the provincial governments in 1986, by 1987 that budget will have had a positive effect on the revenues of all the provinces except Quebec and Saskatchewan. Then, in 1988 the budget of 1985 will have had a positive effect on all the provinces except Quebec. Thereafter—that is, in 1988 and onward—chiefly as a result of the modification of the indexation of the personal or individual income tax, the revenues of all of the provincial governments will increase considerably year after year after year.

But what will be the situation in the last year for which we have reasonable figures? In 1990, despite this increase, the cost of Bill C-96 to the provincial governments will be about $2 billion. The effect of the budget of May 1985, together with the effect of the budget of February 1986—the latter having a much less considerable effect—will have been to increase provincial revenues by about $669 million. In other words, Bill C-96 will in 1990 cost the provincial governments about $1.330 billion. That is the net. If we subtract from the $2 billion the increases in their revenues achieved as a result of the budgets, the cost to the provincial governments is about $1.3 billion. That, I think, is deplorable—and that point is made in the report produced today.

The situation in Quebec is particularly bad. Not only will the Province of Quebec be losing about $590 million in 1990 as a result of Bill C-96 but it will be losing at least another $300 million as a direct consequence of the budgets of 1985 and 1986. That is one of those flow-through results which follow from the fact that Quebec does not have a tax collection agreement with the Government of Canada. So, Quebec is being particularly hard hit by Bill C-96, and given the fact that education and health in that province have become truly a public matter only relatively recently, the requirements in that province for expenditures tend to be unusually high. The Government of Canada is withdrawing money from the people of a province which needs it very badly. That is truly deplorable.

The government has argued in defence of this measure—and this is the only argument that has been made by the government in defence of the measure—that this is a bill which has as its purpose the reduction of the deficit. It has made the reduction of the deficit the summum bonum. It has argued that it has cut the growth of other government expenditures drastically. Consequently, it has argued that it is reasonable to cut back the growth in expenditure for health services and post-secondary education.

That might be an attractive argument, it might have some merit—but what are the facts? Let us take the figures. By means of this bill the government is effecting a reduction in the deficit for 1986 of approximately $318 million. But what is the increase in the government's deficit for that same year as a result of the change in the personal income tax with regard to capital gains? It is not $300 million. It is $550 million, according to the figures produced by the Minister of Finance. Let us move on to the next year. A figure of $681 million is what this bill, C-96, will save the Government of Canada at the cost of the health services and post-secondary education. Yet, at the same time he is quite prepared to put out $700 million in order to change the law with regard to capital gains. I could go on and give the figures for '88, '89 and '90 as to the savings for the Government of Canada effected by Bill C-96. We do not have the projections for capital gains, but it is a fair assumption that they will continue to track considerably higher than the savings to be made as a result of Bill C-96. The argument that the reduction of the deficit is indeed the summum bonum of this government is simply not borne out by the facts.

● (1300)

I do not know what the hidden message of Bill C-96 to the provincial governments is. Perhaps they are saying, "We think that you are spending too much money on health services." Perhaps they are saying, "We think you are spending too much money on post-secondary education." Perhaps they are saying, "We are not saying that you are spending too much but we think that you should find other ways of financing at least part of the cost." If those are the messages, they are certainly messages which the government has managed to conceal very deeply. They have insisted that the sole, only or lonely purpose of this bill is to reduce the deficit, and they have said in a sense, "Regardless of the impact on health services and post-secondary education, the reduction of the deficit is so important that the provinces and those people who need the services of the health and educational facilities must bear that burden." Yet, as I said, they are quite prepared to make reductions in their income of a considerably higher order so that persons making capital gains will not have to pay the tax on those gains up to a certain level. Consequently, I do not think that it can be argued that this is a reasonable approach. If there are reasonable arguments, they have not been adduced so far.

Senator Doody said that the eighteenth report of the committee is a majority report. I do not think that there is anything remarkable in the fact that we did not append a minority report. The eighteenth report spells out what I have just said, that the committee decided democratically—and I concede that there were two dissenting opinions—that this is not a retrograde measure, but I must say I find it difficult to understand how those senators could take the position that these cuts are not retrograde. The committee report goes on to call attention to the plight of Quebec. Again, I find it difficult to understand why the two senators could not agree with the majority on that point.

The third point made in the report is that the effect of the bill is to cut the cash component of the transfers. As we all know, it is the cash component that is the obvious federal contribution to health services and post-secondary education. I would have thought that all members of the committee could have deplored a reduction of that cash component.

However, the situation is as it is. Perhaps on another night earlier in the session we could have been unanimous. But that is the situation, and I think I have explained why, despite what I said yesterday, I feel that this is a good report and why I do not propose to be enthusiastic in favour of the motion now before the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

JUDGES ACT AND RELATED ACTS

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. P. Derek Lewis, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Friday, June 27, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-128, intituled: "An Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in relation to judicial matters", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 26, 1986, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

[Senator Stewart.]

Respectfully submitted,

P. DEREK LEWIS
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move third reading now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

● (1310)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with respect to Bill C-45, which is also Senator Lewis's bill, we need a translation of the report before we can proceed, so perhaps we should stand it until the translation is ready.

[Translation]

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

TWELFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders presented the following report:

Friday, June 27, 1986

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

On October 9, 1985, a suggestion was made by the Honourable Senator Godfrey that your Committee consider an amendment to the Rules of the Senate whereby the government would table a comprehensive response to a committee report, if requested to do so by the Committee.

Pursuant to Rule 67(1)(f), your Committee agreed to consider the matter.

On November 6, 1985, your Committee presented its Sixth Report, recommending that the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding, immediately after Rule 78(3), the following:

78. (3.1) Within 120 days of the presentation of a report from any committee of the Senate, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

On December 19, 1985, the Senate agreed to the motion in amendment by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., that the Report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the Committee for further consideration.

Your Committee held meetings on May 5, June 12 and June 26 to reconsider the report and now makes the following recommendations:

Your Committee is of the view that this matter should not be the subject of a rule of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,

GILDAS MOLGAT
Chairman

[English]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I am prepared to deal with the matter now, but I understand we are to meet next Wednesday, and so I would prefer to hold my comments until Wednesday next.

On motion of Senator Molgat, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration on Wednesday, July 2, 1986.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday next, 2nd July, 1986, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers.

CULTURAL HERITAGE AND NATIONAL IDENTITY GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Davey on October 15, 1985, regarding cultural heritage and national identity.

(The answer follows:)

The Minister of Communications has already demonstrated his commitment to the Canadian cultural industries. The current review of policies and programs affecting the publication of periodicals in Canada including examination of the impact of Bill C-58, which amended Section 19 of the Income Tax Act, under which expenses incurred by Canadians for advertising in foreign periodicals intended for a Canadian market cannot be deducted for tax purposes. The Minister of Communications recognizes the importance of its legislation to Canadian publishers and intends to protect their interests in the overall Canadian economy.

In regards to the specific case of Comac Communications, according to the Minister of Communications there is not now nor was there in the immediate past an official proposal by Comac Communications to establish a Canadian edition of Time magazine.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CULTURAL HERITAGE AND NATIONAL IDENTITY— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to questions asked by Senator Davey and Senator MacEachen on November 5 regarding cultural heritage and national identity.

(The answer follows:)

The publishing policy, as announced in July 1985 in Baie Comeau, Quebec, by the Minister of Communications, represents the policy of the government as regards the acquisition of Canadian publishing firms by foreign interests. The policy was applied to acquisition applied for after the date of the policy announcement.

As regards the inclusion of the publishing industry in the trade negotiations with the United States, the Prime Minister stated on September 26, 1985, in the House of Commons that "... our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations." (September 26, 1985 Hansard, p. 7056). That was the position of the federal government then, as it is now.

The Right Honourable Joe Clark, Secretary of State for External Affairs, stated very clearly in the house on June 19, 1986: "We are not discussing cultural industries and cultural policy in the context of trade negotiations—

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN PUBLISHING AND CANADIAN MAGAZINES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Grafstein on October 16, 1985, regarding bilateral trade negotiations.

(The answer follows:)

On October 1, 1985, the U.S. Interagency Group on Copyright met with officials of the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Communications and the CRTC to discuss the issue of retransmission of U.S. broadcast signals.

The group met as well with representatives of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters and the Canadian Cable Television Association.

The group is comprised of U.S. officials from the State Department, the Federal Communications Commission and the NTIA.

TRANSPORT

TRAVEL TO UKRAINE—REFUND OF RESERVATION DEPOSITS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Olson on June 11, 1986, regarding travel to Ukraine.

(The answer follows:)

On May 5, 1986, Air Canada advised all travel agents that passengers who were either ticketed or had made deposits on Air Canada flights to Eastern Europe could change their reservations or be given total refunds until May 31, 1986.

The Canadian Transport Commission advises that they have no record of charter flights to Ukraine having been filed with their offices.

Should the honourable senator care to provide further details, a more in-depth investigation could be undertaken. The operations of travel agencies are within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1986-87

ANSWER TO REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we leave this particular part of the agenda, this might be an appropriate time to put on record some information which was requested by Senator Frith on June 17 respecting the variance of $3,000 in the statements accompanying the Appropriation Act No. 2, 1986-87. I have been provided with the following information.

The variance is the result of the use of two separate tables from Part II of the estimates as the basis for these statements. Specifically, the statement—"Supply to Date for 1986-87" is based on the "Proposed Schedule to the Appropriation Act" (pages 1-29 to 1-50 inclusive) which is presented in "dollars" and shows a total of $37,550,174,513. On the other hand, the statement—"Estimates Tabled to Date for 1986-87" is based on figures taken from the General Summary table (pages 1-12 to 1-19 inclusive) which is an information only table and is presented in "thousands of dollars". The rounding of each figure in this table to the closest thousand dollars results in a situation where the total of the figures listed is $37,550,171,000. This difference therefore is the result of the presentation of the same information using two different bases and is essentially due to rounding.

[Senator Roblin.]

If there is any other information necessary, I would be glad to try to provide it, but I think that answer covers the matter pretty well.

MARINE ATLANTIC INC. ACQUISITION AUTHORIZATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John M. Macdonald (Cape Breton) moved the third reading of Bill C-88, to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-111, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, in response to Senator Hicks' question, I would like to say, after looking into the matter and further to what I said yesterday, that under Bill C-111, the government would collect no revenue for the entire period as of January 20, while the minister stated that certain goods would be duty free, so that from January 20 until June 2, the goods would not be dutiable.

Second, I made further enquiries about this bill, and I can inform you that it will mean a drop in revenue of between $4.5 and $5 million per year. Senator Hicks also asked me where in Bill C-111 one could find the clause extending the amendment to Bill C-38 until December 31, 1987. It is Clause 10 on page 5. Honourable senators, that is the extent of the information I was asked to provide.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN FEDERAL COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur Tremblay moved the third reading of Bill C-116, to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

• (1320)

[English]

ENERGY ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes moved the third reading of Bill C-112, to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I am not going to take the time now to rebut or comment on the statements that Senator Barootes made when he wound up second reading debate on this bill, except to tell him that his conclusions respecting Canada's failing to follow world oil prices were wrong in most cases, and that the basis on which he reached the conclusion that the National Energy Program was a program that was not working toward world oil prices was wrong. It was a delayed action for the most part.

In any event, honourable senators, I want Senator Barootes to know and understand that that argument was fallacious in many respects. I will not take the time of the Senate to deal with this today, but he has a treat in store and it will be coming sometime later.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS BILL, 1985

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doyle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, for the second reading of the Bill C-90, intitled: "An Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses".—(Honourable Senator McElman).

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I shall hold you only briefly. I do not plan to try to cover all of the aspects of this bill as detailed so eloquently and precisely by Senator Doyle. I commend him again for the effort that he put forward last evening.

I believe it must be stressed that this bill, the Pension Benefits Standards Bill, 1985, is legislation that applies only to pension plans instituted by Canadian companies operating in Canada under federal jurisdiction. There seems to be some misunderstanding that it is broader than that; it is not. It is important, however, that such legislation be made as compatible as possible with similar legislation either now in place or proposed at the provincial level of responsibility.

Bill C-90 is the best-effort result of some ten years of study of pension plan proposals at the federal level, detailed and lengthy consultations with the provincial governments, representations and briefs from companies affected, public hearings across the nation some three years ago by a Parliamentary Task Force under the chairmanship of the Honourable Doug Frith, and the lengthy legislative drafting efforts of both the recent Liberal government and the current Conservative government. The bulk of the studies and hearings was conducted under the former Liberal government and brought to this stage under the current administration, reflecting the best efforts of both.

Bill C-90, as presented to Parliament by the Minister of Finance on December 17, 1985, has been extensively amended and improved through the efforts of MPs from all parties sitting on the legislative committee of the other place, yet none of the three parties is satisfied with all aspects of the bill. But it is the best that could be achieved with provincial support.

For example, I believe it is fair to say that all three parties would have liked to achieve the requirement that upon marriage breakdown there would be a 50/50 division of pension benefits or credits between the two spouses. That provision has been incorporated in the bill now amending the Canada Pension Plan. That was possible only because provincial agreement had been obtained in advance. Consequently, such division of benefits under this bill is subject to provincial legislation, which is not uniform.

The minister has agreed to put this on the agenda for the next federal-provincial conference of ministers in the expectation that agreement can be reached for later appropriate amendment of this legislation. On the other hand, MPs from all three parties agreed upon and made an amendment in committee that should be of benefit to pensioners under this legislation. Currently, the management committee of such a pension plan is composed of representatives of management and the employees who are under the plan. The result has been, in many instances, that plans have been managed to benefit the employer and the future pensions of working employees to the detriment of those who are already pensioners under the plan. Provision is made in this bill to enable those who are already pensioners to have a representative on the management committee to protect and enhance their interests, which is a marked improvement.

One area that has not been covered to the satisfaction of many is the practice that has recently developed or accelerated in the removal from the pension funds by employers of so-called excess credits, which I like to refer to as "stripping". Employee participants in such pension plans and their representatives make the claim that these funds, the result of high interest and investment rates in recent years, are the property of the pension fund and should not be available for removal by the company or employer, that they should be used for the benefit of current and future pensioners, a proposition for which I and many others have considerable sympathy.

Senator Frith: These are in cases where the employees contributed?

Senator McElman: Exactly, and not only their own contributions but those of the employer should accrue to their benefit.

This bill does spell out more specifically the current requirement that prior to such removal of excess funds from the plan, the company must first obtain approval from the federal Superintendent of Insurance. I was concerned, however, when the Director of the Pension Benefits Division of the Federal Department of Insurance, Mr. Mick Cohen, gave testimony before the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology to the effect that the department is already short of staff to carry out current audits and duties, and that this bill will add even more to the workload of the department.

• (1330)

I then asked Mr. Pierre H. Vincent, MP, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, if the department is aware of this situation and is giving it consideration. Mr. Vincent replied:

The department certainly takes into account future needs in the legislation. It will organize everything in due time.

I must admit that his reply was not really the kind of assurance that I had sought.

I hope that the Minister of Finance will act immediately to provide for the additional person years required for staff to meet current and projected needs in that department.

The recent evidence that insufficient staff with the Inspector General of Banks was a contributing factor to the events that led up to the collapse of two of our chartered banks gives one food for thought in this instance.

I should add, with respect to the stripping or removal of excess funds by companies from pension funds, the Minister of Finance recently promised that a thorough study of this problem, in co-operation with the provinces, would be undertaken very soon.

Honourable senators, this bill does provide for more rapid eligibility for membership in pension plans for employees, improved portability, enhanced vesting requirements, improved women's pensions, improved survivor benefits, removal of sex discrimination in the level of pension benefits, early retirement, annual accountability by fund managers to employees and pensioners, and all in all, it is a good bill. Like all bills, it is not perfect; but it is a good bill, bringing major improvements to the legislation governing pension plans under federal jurisdiction. As a model, it should also lead to improvement in pension plans under provincial jurisdiction.

Bill C-90 has had pre-study in our Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. The several amendments since made in the other place were not, in my view, after studying them last evening, of sufficient consequence to require that this bill be referred to the committee.

Honourable senators, I join in recommending second reading of the bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators—

[Senator McElman.]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doyle speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doyle: I move second reading, honourable senators.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON HERBICIDE PRICING CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Fourth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, entitled: "Herbicide Pricing", tabled in the Senate on 13th February, 1986.—(Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.).

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry having to do with herbicides, I think, was a very important report. It indicated, I believe, that farmers are paying too high a price for herbicides and that the patents that are available to companies which bring forward a new herbicide are unduly restrictive. They last for a period of 17 years. New regulations put in place a few years ago require that a company wishing to compete by manufacturing a similar product, after the 17-year patent has lapsed, must resurrect and obtain the total data base that was obtained by the company originating the herbicide in the first place, and at a cost of between $5 million and $15 million. It was felt by all members of the committee that those restrictions were far too severe, and that there should be an amendment to the regulations so that the effective patent would remain in place without restrictions, not for a period of 17 years but for a period of between 4 and 10 years. After the fourth year, if that is the year that is decided upon, a company that wishes to compete should be able to obtain a licence to manufacture that particular herbicide, pay a reasonable fee for the licence, and get in the business of competing.

Herbicides, as honourable senators know, are very important to the agricultural industry. They are used to control weeds, and have made possible chemical summer fallow, permanent or more permanent cropping and have reduced the necessity for so many operations with blade implements on summer fallow. The excessive use of implements on summer fallow can be a contributor to soil erosion.

Herbicides are very important. Evidence was presented to the committee that certain companies with certain herbicides have been able to charge what was believed to be an undue levy—an undue price—because they have taken advantage of the market. They have said that they are charging virtually what the market will bear. For the herbicide "Roundup", the figures indicate that the charge to Canadian farmers is 50 per cent more than what is charged to farmers in Australia. There is evidence of very severe price gouging, and the recommendations of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture would go a long way towards rectifying that situation and to bringing some real competition into the industry.

● (1340)

Honourable senators are very often ridiculed and downgraded by members of the other place. The NDP supports the proposition—it is just a ritual which they go through at every convention—that the Senate should be abolished. They may want the Senate abolished, but they pay very close attention to our Hansard, because when we ask Senator Roblin a question—and I will not comment on the kind of answer we get—on an issue that may not have been raised in the House of Commons for weeks or even months, all of a sudden they get the idea that that particular question should be raised.

Lorne Nystrom, the member for Yorkton-Melville, is not the agriculture critic of his party, so I read someone else. Either Stan Hovdebo or Vic Althouse is the agriculture expert. However, academic Lorne has a great way of getting publicity. He had produced by the law officers of the House of Commons a private member's bill based precisely on the recommendations of the Senate Agriculture Committee having to do with herbicides. What is the chance of a private member's bill being passed in the House of Commons? It does not have a snowball's chance in Hades, or whatever the word is.

It used to be the case in the other place that when you filed a public bill in the name of a private member it would, periodically, receive some attention. In my early days in the House of Commons I introduced a private member's bill, the intention of which was to put a ceiling of 12 per cent per annum on interest rates affecting the small loans companies. I was never successful in having that bill passed but I was always successful in instigating debate, because there were not so many private bills in those days and they used to revolve about every two or three weeks so we would get another kick at them.

There is no doubt about the fact that Stanley Knowles has left his impression on Parliament. Question Period evolved when Stanley Knowles learned how to use it. Question Period in the House of Commons in the 1940s, when I was there, was specifically for a question of urgent public importance. There had to be almost a catastrophe before we would consider asking a question on the Orders of the Day. If you asked one a month, or four or five in a session, you were in the big league.

Stanley soon found out that he could dream up a question a day. I do not know when he slept, because he seemed to work around the clock, seven days a week. Then Stanley got even better at it: He could dream up three questions a day. I did not wish Stanley to get too far ahead of me so I stayed up nights, too, and I did my best and, lo and behold, soon I, too, was able to ask three questions a day. The real content of Question Period had been changed.

It is the same with private member's bills. There have been so many private member's bills that you would have no hope of having a bill considered at all, so a member would put forward ten bills in the hope that at least one of the ten would be dealt with. Now they have a lottery over there, so a private member's bill usually does not mean very much in the House of Commons. The chances are that it will not be debated at all. After that, if it does come up for debate, it can be talked out, because I guess the rule is still the same: One hour twice a week. Most bills are killed by faint praise. Everyone is for the bill, but they do not get around to having a vote on it, so it amounts to nothing.

The situation in the Senate is different. A senator can introduce a public bill in his own name and usually, with the attitude all of us take collectively, that bill can be thoroughly studied, passed and sent on to the other place.

I have had prepared by the law officers of the Senate a bill based on the Senate report on herbicides, and it is my intention in the next session of Parliament in the fall to move such a bill in the Senate; to recommend its passage to my colleagues on both sides of the house; and I hope it will receive the same approval as the questions dealt with in the report. Perhaps then we can approve it and send it over to the House of Commons and let them deal with it in any way they see fit. We will be doing our job in sending them a private member's bill on a major issue for their consideration.

While driving up to Parliament Hill this morning, I learned on the radio that the government is introducing first reading of a bill that would eventually, as I understand it, eliminate generic drugs. Apparently that move is in response to pressure from the United States or President Reagan on the current government to get rid of our provision for generic drugs to be produced under licence to provide competition and to bring about lower prices for drugs, because Americans feel that this has provided undue competition for them.

Honourable senators, I like competition. I like genuine competition. I hope that we do prorogue this fall and that that bill will die on the order paper along with all the others, because I think it would be a most retrograde step.

I think the many Canadians who rely so much on prescription drugs would rise up in arms—I am including pensioners' associations and all of those who take an interest in the health field—and raise such a storm that the government, in listening to the opinion of Canadians, would let that particular initiative die. Because the provision for generic drugs and their manufacture under licence has helped Canadians generally and has reduced the general cost of many drugs sold in this country, I believe that the same kind of principles applied to the production of herbicides would have the same general beneficial result.

The bill for herbicides for farmers, as I read it, is something over $.5 billion. The major reduction that I feel would be possible in the cost of herbicides would also be an important economic contribution to the well-being of agriculture.

● (1350)

I am, therefore, happy to approve the report of the committee and to inform my colleagues in the Senate that I feel the Senate can play an even more useful role in proceeding with the substance of this report by way of a Senate bill in a manner that will bring it to the attention of the country and, perhaps more importantly, to the attention of the government.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this order is considered debated.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SIXTH CONFERENCE ON EUROPEAN CO-OPERATION AND SECURITY, HELD AT BONN, WEST GERMANY

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, June 19, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security held by the Inter-Parliamentary Union at Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany, from 26 to 31 May, 1986.

He said: Honourable senators, I am glad to be given the opportunity to report to the Senate on the Bonn Inter-Parliamentary Union conference on the CSCE process.

The Canadian delegation to the Sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Cooperation and Security was led by Mr. Benno Friesen, MP, the chairman of our group. I had the honour to be the vice-chairman. The other members of the delegation were the Honourable Allan Lawrence, MP, Mr. Stan Hovdebo, MP, and Senator Paul Yuzyk. We were accompanied by Mr. Stephen Knowles of the Parliamentary Relations Secretariat and Mr. Roger Hill of the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Affairs and Foreign Trade, who acted as our advisers.

Before leaving for Bonn, we were given some excellent briefs by various officials from the Department of External Affairs on east-west relations and on the various CSCE issues we would encounter. At Bonn we received further briefings from Canada's ambassador to West Germany, Mr. Donald McPhail, and his staff on various topics, including Canadian-German relations, the relations between the two Germanies, the effect of the Chernobyl accident and the CSCE process. We are indebted to Mr. Richard Têtu, a counsellor at our embassy in Bonn, and his staff for the invaluable support, advice and assistance they gave us during our stay.

Before reporting on the conference itself, I must mention the superlative hospitality which we were accorded by our German hosts. I must especially thank the head of the German delegation, the Honourable Michaela Geiger, for her warm welcome to her country. The delegates were treated to a brief excursion along the Rhine River from Bonn to Linz, which was most enjoyable.

[Senator Argue.]

The conference was held from 26-31 May, 1986, as a follow-up to the last full conference of the IPU on European Cooperation and Security held in Budapest in 1983. Many smaller conferences of experts have been held since the Budapest meeting, and our gathering in Bonn was intended to consider the work they had done.

Before the conference started, members of the Canadian delegation participated in the preparatory meetings of NATO delegations and the 12-plus group. At the NATO meeting Mr. Friesen proposed that some members from the 12-plus countries should seek to chair the first and second committees while others should attempt to be rapporteur for the other committees. Both the NATO and 12-plus groups considered the texts of the draft resolutions that would arise and discussed various questions on the organization of the two groups.

The conference was opened on the morning of May 26 by the President of the German Bundestag, Mr. Philipp Jenninger. Among those addressing the conference at its opening ceremony was Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany.

Mr. Kohl reiterated West Germany's desire for peace. He pointed out that his country sits, literally, in the middle of the east-west conflict and that it remains divided because of the lack of international co-operation. Mr. Kohl expressed the hope, in his words, for:

... a peaceful order for Europe, within which borders would lose their meaning as dividing lines.

He went on to urge the leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union to hold their promised second summit this year and to achieve substantial results at that meeting.

Mr. Kohl expressed the belief that the CSCE process is a good method of ensuring greater co-operation between nations and respect for human rights within them. He did feel, however, that greater honesty and openness between nations would be needed. He therefore decried the lack of information out of the Soviet Union during the days following the Chernobyl accident.

During the plenary session, Mr. Friesen was the first Canadian to speak. He noted that many countries had used high sounding words when they first signed the Helsinki Accord 11 years ago and that since then all subsequent conferences have discussed the treaty. He wondered, however, why so little attention was being given to the results of the effort. He discussed the attempts for greater family unification as set out in the Helsinki agreement and then went on to give two examples of cases where efforts to unify families have been frustrated by the very governments who signed the accord.

I was the second Canadian to speak at the plenary session. I spoke of the world's desire for peace and the role the CSCE should play in bringing it about. I also urged the two superpowers to meet in an effort to make real progress towards disarmament. I decried the continuing ideological competition between them that is making this goal so difficult to reach. Finally, I expressed Canada's interest in promoting human rights amongst the CSCE countries, particularly the Soviet Union and its East European allies.

Mr. Hovdebo was the last Canadian participant to speak at the plenary session. He concentrated his remarks on agriculture and trade. He deplored the various protectionist measures which have been taken by the United States and the European Economic Community against agricultural products and which have hurt Canadian farmers so severely. He felt that these measures went against the Helsinki agreement by contributing to global destabilization. This, he believed, was not the way to give food security to the world's population.

Besides the plenary session, Canadian delegates were also involved in the conference's four committees. Mr. Allan Lawrence worked in the first committee dealing with the questions of détente and disarmament. Mr. Lawrence joined other western delegates in his call for a strong reference to human rights in the committee's work. He advocated a clause indicating that a state's treatment of its citizens could no longer be considered a purely domestic matter. This item revealed an outstanding difference of opinion between East and West concerning what exactly constitutes "human rights".

Mr. Lawrence, with Mr. Stan Hovdebo, also participated in the second committee on behalf of Canada. This committee dealt with the topics of economics, science, technology and environmental problems. Discussions were concentrated on the issue of nuclear safeguards, particularly the responsibilities and liabilities of a state after a nuclear accident such as the one that occurred recently at Chernobyl in the Soviet Union.

In the third committee Canada was represented by Senator Paul Yuzyk, who was also named to its drafting group. The committee looked at co-operation in humanitarian and other fields and discussed the encouragement of contacts among the citizens of the various nations, the need for greater dissemination of travel information to a state's neighbours and the desire for more cultural and educational exchanges between countries.

● (1400)

The fourth committee was the Working Group which carried out its work, with Mr. Benno Friesen acting as its rapporteur. I also had the honour of representing Canada at its sessions. That committee was responsible for preparing the General Part and follow-up recommendations for the conference resolution. Canada's efforts in the Working Group were principally directed at ensuring that human rights issues were addressed and set out in the final resolution. With the support of other western countries, Mr. Friesen proposed to add a clause to the preamble that would state:

... that the state's treatment of its citizens is the legitimate concern of other states.

As in the first committee, that proposal caused sharp divisions between delegates from East and West. A compromise was ultimately reached that changed the clause to read:

... state treatment of its citizens must comply with the principles established by the Helsinki Final Act.

Canadian delegates also contributed to efforts to insert a clause recognizing a role for individuals and nongovernmental organizations in achieving the aims of the Helsinki Final Act.

The Bonn conference made a significant contribution to the CSCE process carried forward at various conferences over the past ten years. Perhaps its most important contribution was that it continued the dialogue between East and West on a different level.

The conference succeeded in arriving at a consensus, agreeing on a useful text which examines the international situation and discusses many specific issues of security and co-operation in Europe. Governments meanwhile, as represented in such gatherings as the Ottawa Experts Meeting on Human Rights and the Berne Experts Meeting on Human Contacts, had not succeeded in agreeing on new concluding statements.

The Bonn conference provided another opportunity to review the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act and the Madrid Concluding Document—for example, giving delegates a way of raising specific human rights cases in their speeches and in informal discussions. This was partly because new issues had arisen in the previous few months and partly because delegates were trying to improve upon the CSCE text already worked out by governments and parliamentarians, including the Helsinki Final Act, the Concluding Resolutions of the 1983 Budapest IPU Conference on European Co-operation and Security, and the Madrid Concluding Document of September 1983.

When one compares the Bonn Concluding Resolutions with previous texts, one has to refer mainly to the Madrid Concluding Document, because that was the last previous major statement on CSCE issues. Comparing Bonn mainly with Madrid, one notes the following significant additions: a new paragraph on human rights in the preamble to the General Part of the text, which is not a new principle but an important agreed comment on the principles. This text is based upon some wording originally suggested by the Canadian delegation, to which I have already referred and which was modified in committee drafting in order to obtain general consensus. The text reads as follows:

"Convinced that the CSCE has made major contributions to the development of human rights especially by establishing the concept that a State's treatment of its citizens must comply with the principles established by the Helsinki Final Act". In other words, the Final Act gave new life to the legal concept that a State cannot treat its people just as it likes simply because they happen to be within its domestic jurisdiction;

The conference also made important contributions in other areas. The topic of nuclear energy and a state's duties in handling it was in the past the subject of somewhat dry, theoretical debate. One month before the conference it was made a frightening reality, following the nuclear reactor accident at Chernobyl. This gave added impetus to our discussions on the topic. The conference therefore contributed a whole new section to the various resolutions of the CSCE process which deal with the control of nuclear power, the dissemination of information about nuclear accidents, and a state's duties in such a situation. No other conference had considered this question with such urgency or to such a degree.

To sum up, it is these modest but significant improvements which, taken all together, make the Bonn conference on the CSCE process a really successful one.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak on this order, it is considered debated.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

27 June 1986

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 27th day of June, 1986, at 5:00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Leopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we come now to the last remaining item on the today's order paper, namely, Bill C-45. We have been waiting for the French translation of the committee's report. It has not yet arrived, and we have been told that we will not receive it until at least 3 o'clock. If it is the wish of the Senate, we could proceed with the second reading of the bill and the consideration of the report, or we can wait until we receive the translation. As always, we are in the hands of the Senate. I understand that the sponsor and the respondent are ready to proceed, but we can only do so with leave.

[Senator Bosa.]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, we have been subjected to so many atrocities during the past 24 hours that I do not think that this one will make much difference. In any case, I have read the twenty-sixth report and I agree entirely with its contents.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the document that has been circulated, namely, the twenty-sixth report of the committee, is evidently a settled-upon report. However, it is not in the form that it will eventually be before us, because, as you know, these reports usually take the form of a side-by-side column presentation of the French and English in parallel form. However, I believe that the chairman is ready to present this report if, with leave, we accept it in the meantime, knowing that it will be replaced by one in proper form and in both languages. I will have some observations to make about the report; I believe Senator Nurgitz and Senator Muir will also have some observations to make. We are ready to proceed if the Senate agrees.

Hon Senators: Agreed.

• (1410)

Hon. P. Derek Lewis, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Friday, June 27, 1986

The Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-45, intituled "An Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament", has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Thursday, June 26, 1986, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following comments:

Your Committee is greatly concerned that Bill C-45, while commendably taking care of the needs of the employees of Parliament, fails to take care of the needs of Parliament itself, and, in particular, embodies a substantial and perhaps unnecessary erosion of the independence and rights of both Houses of Parliament and of their members.

The exclusive jurisdiction of the Senate and the House of Commons, each over its own staff, without interference by any outside body, including the courts, is an aspect of the privilege of each House to manage its internal affairs. In the 1960's Parliament affirmed, by removing the staff of the Senate and the House of Commons from the operation of the Civil Service Act and returning to the Houses exclusive control over their staffs, that control over staff is important to the ability of the Houses to function independently of each other and of the government.

The Bill in its present form may be interpreted as derogating from that affirmation. Notwithstanding clause 4 of the Bill, the exclusive control of the Houses over their staffs is substantially and perhaps unnecessarily impaired by powers given to outside authorities such as the Minister of Labour and his inspectors, the government-appointed Public Service Staff Relations Board, the Governor-in-Council and the Federal Court.

What protection clause 4 does afford the Senate, the House of Commons and their members, by being limited to Part I of the Bill, is by implication denied them with respect to the operation of Parts II and III thereof. The powers conferred by the Bill on outside authorities may be sufficient to allow them to affect the ability of the Senate or the House of Commons to operate without hindrance.

In addition, the Senate, the House of Commons, the members of the Houses and the Library of Parliament, each in the capacity of "employer," will, under Bill C-45, be made subject to being impleaded in a court of law, to being tried in a court of law, by way of summary conviction or even indictment, to being convicted by a court of law and to being punished by a court of law. These measures seem excessive in view of the identity of the institutions in question and are measures that the Federal Court of Appeal has warned should be avoided because of the potential they have for confrontation between Parliament and the courts.

In the view of the Committee, Bill C-45 should be the subject of early study, review and amendment in the light of the above comments.

Respectfully submitted,

P. DEREK LEWIS
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the report that you have heard read is, as you have probably noticed, for non-lawyers a bit lugubrious; Senator Roblin offers the word "turgid". I do not mean that as any criticism of its drafter.

Senator Roblin: That is a legal style. It is no fault of the author.

Senator Frith: The report was drafted for the committee by our Parliamentary Counsel. As I have said and as Senator Roblin has said, it is understandably in a legalistic style, particularly when we remember something that all honourable senators may not know, that what gave rise to this report is an opinion by Parliamentary Counsel along the lines of, but in greater detail than, the report.

● (1420)

So, in a few moments I think I can explain the essential ingredients of this report as I see them. It amounts to a caveat or a signal to you all as legislators that there are certain legal consequences that follow from the adoption of Bill C-45 that touch particularly on the traditions, privileges and independence of Parliament. In that context this bill represents a sort of hybrid of two legal streams. The first stream could be considered as all the law of labour relations, because this bill, on its own and with two other codes that it incorporates by reference, sets up and applies to Parliament a legal regime of employer-employee relations—that is the stream of labour relations law. The other part of the hybrid—and I recognize that I am mixing metaphors as between "stream" and the botanical expression "hybrid"—

Senator Doody: We will fix it up in the "blues."

Senator Frith: —is parliamentary tradition, the principles of the independence of Parliament through its traditions and privileges. That second element, of course, was subject to quite a long exercise before the Labour Relations Board and before the courts. The matter ended up in the Federal Court of Appeal, which held that the regime that applies to the government under the administration of the board and other boards does not apply to Parliament because of its principles of independence, traditions and privileges. So this bill tries to bring together two, to get back to yesterday's expression, uncomfortable bedfellows. However, the bill must do something of that kind in order to achieve the objective that I believe senators share, that of putting employees of Parliament in a better position, or at least bringing them up to date with reference to employee rights and employee-employer relationships existing in other sectors of Canadian life.

Simply put, Bill C-45 has three basic parts. The first part is original in the sense that it is the portion of the legislation drafted to apply to employer-employee relations in Parliament—that is, the Senate, the House of Commons and the Parliamentary Library. In its second part the bill takes a part of the Labour Code—it is Part III, but because it gets confusing as between parts, let us put that aside for a moment—and incorporates it holus-bolus into the bill. Then it takes another part of the Labour Code and does the same thing. So, in effect it starts out with Part I, which is the original section, then it takes the code, which I have here, and inserts it in two parts.

What are those two parts? The first part of the code that the bill incorporates by reference is the part dealing with minimum employment standards—such things as hours of work, rates of pay and all the things you can think of that would normally be in a collective agreement relating to minimum standards. Part III of the bill brings in the part of the Labour Code dealing with safety standards. It seems to me that we cannot reasonably object to any of those elements applying to our employees, certainly not to the Part II dealing with minimum employment standards or the Part III dealing with the maintenance of proper safety standards. The regime that will apply to our employees is the regime that applies to government employees. In a sense, this is where the problem begins to arise, because the government regime has a system for what we might call monitoring the implementation of employees' rights and all aspects of employer-employee relations.

Essentially this system operates on an internal basis. That is, we have the government, the employees and the board, which looks after monitoring and which is a government agency. So, in effect, the whole process is handled within. However, when we take that regime and apply it to Parliament as an employer, as is the case with this bill, the monitoring agency, the Labour Board, becomes external to Parliament because it is a government agency. So, the external-to-Parliament monitoring authority will, in effect, be the government. That is why the committee felt that we should explain to our colleagues the consequences flowing from this bill.

Of course, the monitoring is of Parliament's compliance with the provisions of Parts I, II and III of the bill. The consequences were anticipated by Mr. Justice Pratte in the Federal Court of Appeal while looking at the jurisdiction of the Labour Board over Parliament in the case I referred to earlier. He expressed the concern that even if they found that there was no jurisdiction over Parliament, Bill C-45 in effect establishes such a jurisdiction, even though constitutionally it would not be there. He says:

First, the application of the Code—

And he is talking about the Canada Labour Code.

—to the House of Commons would in many instances compel the House—and this applies equally to the Senate and the Library of Parliament.

—to obey the decisions of the Minister of Labour and the regulations of the Governor in Council; this is a result which I find difficult to reconcile with the independence of the House. Second, and more importantly, the application of the code to the House would, in many instances, lead to a confrontation between the House and the Speaker, on the one side and the Board and the Court, on the other; this is certainly to be avoided.

Now, I would like to quote from a document I mentioned earlier which led to the committee report that is before us.

The collective bargaining regime established by Part I of Bill C-45 is the regime established by the Public

[Senator Frith.]

Service Staff Relations Act for the Government of Canada. It essentially consists of an employer, an employee organization and a third party board.

Then, as I mentioned previously:

In the case of the Government staff relations, the third party board is an agency of the Government appointed by the Government; in other words, Government staff relations are being handled internally. In the case of Senate and House of Commons staff relations, the third party board will be an agency, not of Parliament or of the Houses, but of the Government.

• (1430)

In other words, parliamentary staff relations will not be handled internally but—and I am not quoting exactly here; I stopped quoting in order to rephrase it—will include an external dimension that does not exist in the governmental regime.

Specific results then follow from the fact that this document, the Canada Labour Code, is so incorporated, and I will give you a few of those examples. First, remember that the Senate is an employer so that when I use the word “employer”, you can read the word “Senate”. In fact, I may just read it exactly that way. However, let me first go to one element that could lead to some of these consequences, and is in itself a consequence.

Quoting from section 66 of Part III of the Canada Labour Code, under the heading of “Information and Returns”:

(1) Every employer shall furnish such information relating to the wages of his employees, their hours of work, and the general holidays, annual vacations and conditions of work of his employees, and make such returns thereon from time to time as the Minister may require.

That means that the Minister of Labour from time to time can come to the Senate and say: “I want the following documents.” I should remind honourable senators that there is no reason why we should not furnish documents in order to implement the regime that is being established, but—

Senator Nurgitz: We make everyone else do it.

Senator Frith: Yes, exactly. This all has to be taken in the context of the principles of parliamentary privilege and independence. I say that because I want to leave open the question of whether we should surrender these rights and privileges, but I want it to be understood, as does the committee, that that is what we are doing. I know many honourable senators treasure these principles, these traditions and these prerogatives and, therefore, we should understand that by enacting this bill we are definitely giving them up in the way that I am explaining them, in my opinion, and for the purposes that I am also explaining.

Senator Nurgitz: And not unhappily.

Senator Frith: I am not sure whether or not I am happy about it. I am very happy about the objective, but I am not sure that I am as happy about giving up the parliamentary privileges. I think I will have to struggle a little more before I am happy about it, if ever, but I do not mind your being happy about it, Senator Nurgitz. Geh gezunt!

Of course, as you can imagine, honourable senators, what will also happen is that the inspectors will naturally be entitled to make sure that all of the provisions of the Labour Code are being complied with. For example—and I know that I am being extreme in using this example—there would be nothing in the legislation, if passed, to prevent some inspector from walking into the middle of a session because he considered that we were not treating our pages properly. He could walk in and I do not think, under the act, that we could bar him.

Senator Hastings: He would be a stranger in the house.

Senator Frith: Yes, but when we say that he is a stranger in the house, what are we doing? We are invoking our privileges, and I am saying that if this bill is passed, to that extent we will be giving up those privileges.

It is an extreme scenario, and the likelihood of its happening is so remote as to be useful only for illustrative purposes, I am sure.

An Hon. Senator: Ha, ha, ha—

Senator Frith: You will notice that some honourable senator laughed at that point.

So, with these obligations that we undertake, honourable senators, we give up, in my view, some of our independence; in addition to the fact that we give up part of that independence to permit inspectors and other agencies to enforce the provisions; in addition to the fact that we give to the Minister of Labour, a member of the government, the right to ask for further information, there are some pretty Draconian penalties for noncompliance, and let me just scare you a little further—

Senator Nurgitz: Do you think that going to jail is Draconian? It happens all the time.

Senator Frith: I do not know, sir. I have never been there.

Senator McElman: It depends upon one's experience.

Senator Frith: That is right. Honourable senators, I would like to point out that these are examples I am giving you. This is not an exhaustive treatment.

Section 69 of the Canada Labour Code, Part III, says that:

(1) Every person who

(a) violates any provision of this Part or the regulations, other than a provision of Division V.2, subsection 66(2) or any regulation made pursuant to section 60.2 or paragraph 76 (a),

(b) violates any order made under this Part or the regulations—

—
Therefore those orders and regulations, I take it, would be made by the minister or the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the minister—

—or

(c) discharges or threatens to discharge or otherwise discriminates against a person because that person

(i) has testified or is about to testify in any proceedings or inquiry had or taken under this Part, or

(ii) has given any information to the Minister or an inspector regarding the wages, hours of work, annual vacation or conditions of work of an employee, is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars.

Then:

(2) Every employer—

And that refers to us—

—who violates any provision of Division V.2 or of any regulation made pursuant to section 60.2—

So even the regulations cannot be violated—

—is guilty of

(a) an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable to a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars; or

(b) an indictable offence and is liable to a fine not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars.

(3) Every employer who

(a) refuses or neglects to keep any record that by subsection 66(2) or any regulation made under paragraph 76 (a) he is required to keep, or

(b) refuses to make available for examination by an inspector at any reasonable time any such record kept by him, is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars for each day during which any such refusal or failure continues.

Senator McElman: That would require approval by Internal Economy.

Senator Frith: If we happened to be the accused, yes. Then, continuing:

71. (1) Where an employer has been convicted of an offence under this Part in respect of any employee, the convicting court shall, in addition to any other penalty, order the employer—

That is us—

—to pay to the employee any overtime pay, vacation pay, holiday pay—

And I think that is understandable. Continuing again:

(2) Where an employer has been convicted of an offence under this Part in respect of the discharge of an employee—

And that section sets out the additional orders that can be made in that case.

Honourable senators, what it comes down to is this—and let me back up for a moment: It is clear that if we are going to adopt the principle of having parliamentary employer-employee relations governed by a modern regime, then it is difficult to argue with any of these principles; namely, that there should be a system for grievances, a system for parliamentary employer-employee relations, that there should be a system for minimum standards of employment, and that there should be a system for safety standards. Certainly, once that door is open it is very difficult to argue with any of the consequences as being provisions necessary for the implementation of the original and desirable objective.

● (1440)

But that does not change the fact that in order to do so we have to, in my opinion, give up—and we have to recognize that we are giving up—many of the principles, privileges and traditions that we have cherished, treasured and guarded very carefully for many years.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few comments on third reading of Bill C-45. I will be brief, but it is important to add a few thoughts and respond to some of the concerns raised in the committee and to some of the considerations raised by Senator Frith during his intervention.

First of all, I should say that this is a memorable occasion for Parliament. For the first time in the history of Parliament, its employees will be able to enjoy the benefits of what I think is termed contemporary and progressive labour relations which are tailored, in many ways, to the special circumstances of Parliament. Not only will employees of Parliament be able to enter into collective bargaining but they will be protected for the first time under the two parts of the Canada Labour Relations Act, as Senator Frith has pointed out. Part III regulates, as has been pointed out, the minimum labour standards, including such matters as vacations and hours of work; Part IV regulates such things as occupational health and safety standards.

Honourable senators, certain concerns were raised in committee concerning the provision of penalties or fines, and we have just gone through the whole question of what Senator Frith calls Draconian measures. In the first instance, one should bear in mind that when we had officials from Labour Canada before the committee it was explained how the process works. The process is not one of fining someone for providing inadequate lighting or for having someone work in a building with a structural defect; the process is a negotiation process. If something is pointed out to the employer, efforts are made to rectify it. Perhaps inspectors will come in and say, "Not good enough," but until you hit the employer who says, "I don't care if the lighting is inadequate; I don't care if the building is structurally unsound," there should be no difficulties. If some honourable senators believe that the Senate of Canada, the House of Commons or the Library of Parliament is going to be the kind of employer who is not going to be concerned with the health and safety of its employees, is not going to be concerned with providing a minimum standard of vacation, pay and hours of work, then what can I say except that we would have a problem then. But I cannot believe that has ever been the standard, that it is the standard or that it will ever be the standard.

I would also like to point out that it has been difficult facing employees and telling them that the traditional rights enjoyed by millions of Canadians are something that they cannot have because there are certain privileges and traditions. Honourable senators, this is 1986. Employees deserve the security of knowing that they are protected and that they have options to pursue in the event of unfair treatment. This bill will afford them that protection, if they wish it.

[Senator Frith.]

Members of the Senate Protective Staff appeared before the committee this morning. Reading between the lines, I think they said: "Perhaps we would like to keep the status quo. We do not seem to have a problem." Well, the simple answer is that if they want to keep the status quo, they do not form a bargaining unit. If they do not form a bargaining unit, they have the status quo. Things remain as they are for them.

I should also like to comment on concerns raised in committee this morning regarding the various aspects of collective bargaining, but I think in the end, honourable senators, the employees who did appear before the committee, and those employees who appeared before the House of Commons committee, indicated a willingness to move forward with legislation that brings them into a situation comparable to that afforded to their friends who do not work on Parliament Hill.

I also repeat what Senator Muir mentioned yesterday, that there has been some talk of bringing in this kind of legislation since the 1960s, that we could not continue to legislate for the private sector, for various aspects of the public sector, and say we do not have to have that kind of legislation here. That is not different from what Senator Frith pointed out, that Labour Canada or the Minister of Labour can demand that the Senate or the House of Commons provide certain statistics on hours of work, wages, and things of that nature. I think that if we are prepared to impose requirements on others, we should be able to look at ourselves and say, "This is a reasonable imposition and we will impose that on ourselves," as I think we will be doing if the bill is passed.

I have one final concern relating to the question of jurisdiction. Concerns were raised that by passing this bill Parliament would be allowing an outside body to interfere with its internal affairs. I believe Senator Frith adequately covered that.

If there is one message which was received loud and clear by the members of the committee of the other place, it was that employees themselves wished to see an independent, third party as the body overseeing this legislation. By naming the Public Service Staff Relations Board as the body governing this legislation, parliamentarians have ensured that our employees will be well protected.

Honourable senators, members of Parliament come and go. Parliamentary committees come and go, and it was felt because of that, and because an effort should be made to guarantee some form of continuity, the Public Service Staff Relations Board, a body of knowledge and experience, was deemed to be an appropriate choice.

I agree that in discussions this morning with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council we leaned on him to take a look at some of the concerns raised. I think he did reply that some would be looked at. I agree that they should be studied and reviewed. I am not absolutely certain that I agree with the report of the committee which says, "Early study, review and amendment in the light of the comments" made before the committee. In any event, I think they should be looked at. I am not sure that things are as bad as they appear. I think that is what Senator Frith was attempting to highlight for us. We are bringing in certain measures which could have some consequences different from what we are used to. It is difficult to foresee how they, in fact, would come about, though.

● (1450)

I have a final comment concerning employees themselves before I complete my remarks.

Too often we forget the service, dedication and pride of those who serve us so well in the Senate. We forget the long hours they put in, and yet they are an integral part of our daily operation and of the important work done here. They deserve a modern legislative framework for labour-management relations, which should be implemented without further delay.

I think Senator Muir pointed out adequately yesterday the lengthy process which has been undertaken to get to this point today. Honourable senators, as I said before, we impose it on others; I think we ought to impose it on ourselves. We owe it to our employees, and I hope that we shall see third reading soon.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to add a few comments.

I read the Twenty-Sixth Report of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs with great interest, and I subscribe wholeheartedly to the views expressed therein.

I believe parliamentary privileges are not a luxury but a necessity. They are the outcome of a long historic evolution, involving repeated struggles for basic rights, which started on the day the Magna Carta was proclaimed in England. They are reflected in our parliamentary practice which is based on the British tradition.

While I am quite prepared to give employees of the Senate and the House of Commons the right to free collective bargaining and all the attendant procedures, I think it is deplorable that we, in full possession of our mental faculties, have virtually agreed to restrict our personal parliamentary privileges, both here and in the other place, and those of our staff. I am of course referring to certain officials and officers of the Senate and the House of Commons.

We are making this decision, as I said only a moment ago, with full knowledge of what is involved, but it is a decision that erodes the traditional concept, often very difficult to define, of parliamentary privilege. There are certain ramifications that are sometimes hard to explain, even for parliamentarians. While I am not opposed to giving our employees all these rights to which they are entitled, I fail to see why we are about to voluntarily restrict the hard-won privileges we have acquired over the centuries.

God knows we have not had much time to discuss the substance of this question! I may refer you to Erskine May, 19th edition, where the concept of privilege is explained at length and illustrated with a host of examples. My point is that privilege is sacred in the parliamentary system. It allows us to do our work with the utmost freedom and the utmost honesty, without being vulnerable to external pressures.

This legislation, in its second and third parts, imposes or perhaps I should say this generation of parliamentarians is imposing on itself and on future generations, the obligation to have our actions and our relations with our employees examined by outside officials, by people who in the past have shown they do not have much respect for parliamentary tradition.

And this is how, gradually, people start to lose respect for Parliament. Legislation is being allowed to confirm a number of trends that have been growing over the years. People are starting to lack respect for the Senate. Editorial writers like to laugh at members of the House of Commons and what they do.

People talk about the usefulness or the uselessness of the Senate. I am telling you that the day we yield on the question of privileges we will deserve to be the laughing stock for behaving like stupid people. These privileges do not belong to us personally but to the British parliamentary system to which we voluntarily subscribe.

One might suggest—without convincing me, ever—that this kind of situation might develop, that it is a possibility, but that it will probably never happen. I am saying that when we go to the trouble of opening the door and confirming the fact in legislative statutes, the possibility often turns into reality. One of these days we will realize that Parliament is led by the nose by public servants below Parliament Hill.

For this reason I do not support some of the provisions of this bill. I deplore the fact that we do not have more time to debate the basic principles of this question.

[English]

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I do not think there is much I can add to what I already said yesterday on second reading, other than to say that I had the privilege of attending the meeting this morning of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

As Senator Nurgitz said, we had a representative from the Security Staff Association there—and he explained the present situation to us in certain detail. However, I should like to enlarge upon his comments. After Senator Frith explained a great number of things pertaining to the bill, they left and seemed to be quite happy, in my view, with the bill.

We also had a representative from the messenger service and he, likewise, seemed to be happy with the bill as far as it goes. But nothing is perfect, as has been said earlier today by Senator McElman regarding another bill. In spite of the imperfections, I think that we have made a start in the right direction. Certainly, all the fine people who work on the Hill should have the privilege and right to negotiate, to bargain and so on.

● (1500)

I listened very carefully to Senator Frith who explained most eloquently the provisions of this bill. I also listened carefully to Senators Nurgitz and Corbin, and I find myself agreeing with all three of them. I do not think we should have any of our rights or privileges interfered with. It is important that Senators Frith, Nurgitz and Corbin brought this to the attention of individual senators in this forum.

Honourable senators, does this not illustrate once again what has happened a great number of times in the past? Bill C-45 has been before the other place for many weeks and it has been studied by a committee of the other place. Undoubtedly this bill was drafted by the Department of Justice. Those of us who came from the other place, including Senator Corbin, will recall that no matter what government was in power, when bills came before the other place, all of a sudden the members would find a great number of things wrong with them, despite the fact that they had been examined with a fine-tooth comb. Now the bill is before the Senate and able senators—excluding myself—such as Senators Frith, Nurgitz and Corbin have found things to be wrong with this bill.

Honourable senators, although I certainly do hope we vote in favour of this bill, we should bear in mind the warning contained in the last paragraph of the committee's report which states:

In the view of the Committee, Bill C-45 should be the subject of early study, review and amendment in the light of the above comments.

It is amazing that those matters that have been pointed out here today could escape the scrutiny of those whose profession is the drafting of bills, and in view of what Senator Frith said about court decisions, how could this be missed by all the lawyers on the committee in the other place who reviewed the bill? All I can say in this chamber today is that I take back anything derogatory I have ever said about the legal profession; I have great respect for them, although I hope I never have to ask any of them to defend me.

Senator Barootes: You are going too far.

Senator Phillips: Think it over.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I have been asked questions by employees in the various professions on the hill, some employed in the Senate and some in the House of Commons. As I said yesterday, I think it is a good bill as far as it goes, although I think it should have included some other matters. It is definitely a step in the right direction. Of those who made inquiries of me, some were a little concerned as to whether they would be worse off or better off after this bill comes into force and negotiations take place. I believe the employees will be better off. I am, and have always been, a firm believer in collective bargaining. As I said yesterday, in all my years in union activities in the coal mines, in the labour movement and since coming to Ottawa 29 years ago, I have always opposed compulsory arbitration. What was said by Senator Frith about bedfellows is quite correct.

[Senator Muir.]

I have given a lot of thought to this bill. I believe that we must and should go along with it for the benefit of these fine people who serve us and that we must not deprive them of anything that may be forthcoming for them.

I feel that Senator Corbin hit the nail on the head, as has Senator Frith—Senator Nurgitz not so strongly—when they said that we do not want to interfere with any of the rights or privileges of this place.

With those few comments, I support third reading of Bill C-45.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, just before third reading, I should like to put three points on the record that I ought to have mentioned. The first arises out of what Senator Muir has just said. As he has pointed out, the last paragraph of the committee report before you states:

In the view of the Committee, Bill C-45 should be the subject of early study, review and amendment in the light of the above comments.

I believe honourable senators should know that Mr. Lewis, a member of Parliament who came before the committee representing Mr. Hnatyshyn, gave an undertaking that before proclamation of the bill—because the bill only comes into effect upon proclamation—the government would look into the questions raised in committee. That included all the material contained in this report, plus the material given to the committee.

The second point is that I ought to have explained what was meant by the phrase:

Notwithstanding clause 4 of the Bill, the exclusive control of the Houses over their staffs is substantially and perhaps unnecessarily impaired . . .

So that the record will be complete, that is a reference to clause 4 of Bill C-45, which reads as follows:

Nothing in this Part . . .

That is Part I, not the other two Parts.

Nothing in this Part abrogates or derogates from any of the privileges, immunities and power referred to in section 4 of the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Whether that clause achieves its objective or not, I want honourable senators to know that that clause is in the bill and it does attempt to ensure that the bill does not abridge the privileges. That, in any case, applies only to Part I and not to the other Parts to which I referred.

My third and last point is that Senator Nurgitz picked me up on the use of the word "Draconian." I would cite the Oxford Illustrated Dictionary which states that the origin of Draconian comes from Draco who was an archon, that is, a chief magistrate in Athens in 621 B.C. who was said to have established a severe code of laws. So far, I think my use of the word "Draconian" was all right. The dictionary then states:

. . . of Draco or his code of laws.

It then gives the following synonyms: "rigorous"—and I think that is all right—"harsh"—perhaps I went a little too far—and "cruel." Well, I would not say "cruel" in the human sense.

To the extent that those additional definitions may be a little excessive, I withdraw the word "Draconian", but not entirely, because I think it has some application.

● (1520)

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, I would just like to state that this bill is the result of the bosses' refusing to listen to the complaints of the employees of the House of Commons and the Senate. As a former government whip in the other place, I can tell honourable senators that the employees were lined up outside my office with all kinds of complaints. Senator Corbin and Senator Muir knew all about this and nothing was done. The employees were forced to do something on their own behalf. Thus, they sought out the services of a union to air their grievances. Now they have a system, and I think the House of Commons and the Senate have brought this upon themselves.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1700)

At 5 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remissions of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated (Bill C-98, Chapter 29, 1986)

An Act to amend the Currency Act (Bill C-118, Chapter 30, 1986)

An Act respecting employment equity (Bill C-62, Chapter 31, 1986)

An Act to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act (Bill C-106, Chapter 32, 1986)

An Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors (Bill C-117, Chapter 33, 1986)

An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 (Bill C-96, Chapter 34, 1986)

An Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in relation to judicial matters (Bill C-128, Chapter 35, 1986)

An Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto (Bill C-88, Chapter 36, 1986)

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff (Bill C-111, Chapter 37, 1986)

An Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act (Bill C-116, Chapter 38, 1986)

An Act to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto (Bill C-112, Chapter 39, 1986)

An Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses (Bill C-90, Chapter 40, 1986)

An Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament (Bill C-45, Chapter 41, 1986)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

● (1710)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, may we have leave to revert to Notices of Motions? In line with discussions which have been held between various members of the Senate relating to next Wednesday's meeting, it has been agreed that we would meet at 9.30 a.m. rather than at 10 o'clock to facilitate the order of business that has been arranged.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g),

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday next, 2nd July, 1986, at nine thirty o'clock in the forenoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Doody, I would ask you to rescind your original motion before we proceed with this one.

Senator Doody: I certainly will, if I can have leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Having received leave, I now ask for rescission. If I have received rescission, I move the new motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, could the Deputy Leader of the Government tell us if, when we come back to deal with, I assume, Bills C-67 and C-68, the House of Commons will be available for Royal Assent?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I honestly cannot answer that question. My responsibilities are exclusively those of the Senate, and I have received no communication from the House of Commons. I can only tell my colleagues about the order of business projected for next Wednesday in this place. I do not know what the House of Commons has planned in terms of Royal Assent.

Senator Frith: I take it that that means that the honourable senator is unable to tell us that we are being brought back on Wednesday to give Senate consideration to a bill that may not receive Royal Assent, because he cannot give us any assurance that if we pass the bill it will become effective for the summer in the absence of the House of Commons.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I cannot give any accommodation to the question as to what the House of Commons will do. I can only assure my colleagues here that the government is anxious that we deal with these bills. I think it is incumbent upon us as members of Parliament to give our attention to the bills. I assume that the other house will apply itself just as assiduously to its tasks as we will to ours on Wednesday.

Senator Frith: That sounds like a rather dangerous assumption. I do not know that it is quite fair for the deputy leader to say that he is totally unconnected and in no way responsible for House of Commons action, especially as it relates to Royal Assent. I take it that he made contact with the House of Commons today to find out whether they were coming and what time they would be coming for Royal Assent. I can understand the honourable senator's desire to wash his hands of any connection with the House of Commons, but I do not think it is really justified, particularly with regard to Royal Assent. Of course, he deals with the other place also with regard to bills that are coming. Surely he would know if they are going to be available for Royal Assent, communicating with them as he does often when Royal Assent is the issue.

Senator Doody: I appreciate what the honourable gentleman is saying, but our objective is to deal with Bill C-67 and Bill C-68. If honourable senators would rather deal with them now, perhaps we could postpone Royal Assent today on bills C-67 and C-68 and deal with them this evening. I do not think that that suggestion is a practical one. We will deal with the bills on Wednesday. As Wednesday progresses, we will see what happens in terms of Royal Assent. I cannot tell the honourable gentleman what will happen on Wednesday with regard to Royal Assent, but as soon as I get some information on the matter I will be only too happy to pass it on.

Senator Frith: So, it is fair to say that the government is asking the Senate to return next week to deal with these bills without the government representative in the Senate having made any arrangement or being able to give us any understanding as to whether the House of Commons will be here so that the bills may receive Royal Assent, if they are passed by the Senate. The honourable senator is asking us to come back without any undertaking or any knowledge whatsoever of whether Royal Assent will follow approval in the Senate.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, with respect, I think that the honourable gentleman has gone off on a tangent.

Senator Frith: Perhaps it is a different tangent from the one you would like me to be on.

Senator Doody: The government is not asking the Senate to do anything, because the Senate has its own duties in dealing with its own business. The business before the Senate involves Bills C-67 and C-68. The Senate will be meeting next Wednesday to deal with these bills. It is up to each individual senator to determine whether or not he or she will be here. The business is before the house, and we will deal with it when the time comes.

Senator Frith: I am not talking about whether honourable senators have the duty or right to be here. Of course they do. I simply want it understood that the government is asking us to come back to deal with Bills C-67 and C-68. I am not saying that it is a good thing or a bad thing. I merely want to get the facts. The fact is that the government has made no arrangements of any kind for Royal Assent for these bills, if they are passed by the Senate.

Senator Doody: I do not know how the honourable gentleman can reach that conclusion.

Senator Frith: Just listen.

Senator Doody: I am not a member of the government and I am not passing on what the government has done or not done. I am passing on my knowledge of the situation, and as of this moment I cannot tell the Senate whether or not there will be Royal Assent next Wednesday. I trust that as the days progress between now and next Wednesday, things will become a lot clearer, and I hope to be able to give honourable senators more information when we convene on Wednesday. That is why I asked for permission to revert.

Senator Olson: Then what is the urgency?

Senator Frith: It seems to me that the answer to my question is that the honourable senator is not able to tell us.

Senator Doody: The honourable gentleman had that in mind before he stood up, and I agree. Yes, the answer is I do not know.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, my version is that the government does not consider these bills to be urgent at all. My version is that there will be no Royal Assent next week.

Senator Flynn: If you want to debate the bills, it is okay with us.

Senator Argue: There he is, interrupting again. Mr. Interrupter, the best we have. He is the best. He is consistent and he never lets anybody talk without interrupting.

Senator Frith: Practice makes perfect.

Senator Flynn: You are talking through your hat.

Senator Argue: My version is that the government is in no rush to get the bills, that Royal Assent is not likely to occur until the House of Commons comes back in September.

It seems that the members of the government are tweaked that a member of the Senate would use his right to delay the onrush of these bills so they are going to discipline the Senate by bringing us back, even though the bills are not urgent as far as the government is concerned.

Senator Frith: Not urgent enough to make arrangements with the House of Commons anyway.

Senator Argue: They are all upset over the fact that the Senate in this instance did not rubber stamp the bill according to the government's plan.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman is making all sorts of assumptions, none of which I accept. The government may very well have all sorts of plans made. It certainly cannot complete the plans until the Senate has dealt with the business at hand. Perhaps when we get closer to doing that, the information will reach us. To say that the government does not consider these bills important is obviously too specious to discuss.

Senator Argue: I said "urgent."

Senator Doody: "Urgent" and "important." As for the Senate's respect for the honourable senator's right to withhold consent, it was demonstrated today that everybody in this chamber respects his right to withhold consent by arranging special meetings next week to facilitate him. We are looking at a Committee of the Whole, which is something that I did not see too much of in the days when we were on that side of the house and you were on this. It was a rarity, indeed. I thought the Honourable Minister of Agriculture who was here this morning was most understanding and patient in giving of his time and information, and we are looking forward to the same thing next Wednesday. If the honourable gentleman will just be patient and bear with me, the universe will unfold and we will all live happily ever after.

• (1720)

Senator Frith: It is still a bad way to run a railroad.

Senator Argue: It would be nice to know what the Prime Minister's orders are to his representative in the Senate, but since the Prime Minister attends so little in the House of Commons anyway, I suppose it is very hard to get some indication of his thoughts.

Senator Doody: If the honourable gentleman wants me to stand up here and start talking about the Prime Minister's attendance in the house, he is fishing in the wrong brook.

Senator Argue: You cannot talk about something that does not happen very often.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I would just like to point out that if the Senate had proceeded with the discussion of the Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, dealing with the matter of Royal Assent, which is presently standing in the name of the Leader of the Government, we would not be having this debate at all, because we would have proceeded to a change in procedure which would eliminate this problem that recurs fairly regularly.

Senator Argue: This is a problem that we can live with.

Senator Doody: I stand to be corrected on this, since I always say that I am a humble little fellow from Newfoundland trying to find his way in the big city, but as far as I am aware, that order stands in the name of Senator John Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough). I would point out to the Honourable Senator Molgat that it is Item No. 20 on the order paper and reads as follows:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Davey, for the adoption of the Fourth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders (Royal Assent), presented in the Senate on 6th November, 1985,

And on the motion in amendment thereof of the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, that the Report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the Committee for further consideration—

And that motion is standing in the name of the Honourable Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough). May I have a retraction?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, yes, I retract. It was the amendment of the Leader of the Government. My regrets.

However, had the Senate dealt with the matter—

Senator Doody: Well, that is different!

Senator Molgat: —we would now be able to proceed in a much more practical manner.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: We will adopt it, but it is not our pleasure.

Senator Argue: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, July 2, 1986, at 9.30 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 2, 1986

The Senate met at 9.30 a.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE LOWELL MURRAY, P.C. THE HONOURABLE DUFF ROBLIN, P.C.

FELICITATIONS TO NEW LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT—
TRIBUTES TO FORMER LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to draw attention to the changes to the cabinet announced by the Prime Minister on June 30, particularly insofar as they affect the leadership of the government in the Senate. Naturally, I wish to extend congratulations to the new Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Murray, to welcome him in his new responsibilities and to assure him that, insofar as it is possible to make a commitment, his life will be interesting and action-filled in the remainder of this Parliament. We have great expectations which we hope will be realized as his career in his new capacity develops.

I must say that Senator Murray is well equipped to take on his new responsibilities. He certainly chose the right part of Canada as his birthplace, namely, New Waterford, Nova Scotia; he chose the right universities, St. Francis Xavier and, later, Queen's. His judgment at that point began to deteriorate, however, and we find him serving a series of federal cabinet ministers; and at one time he served as deputy minister to the Honourable Richard Hatfield.

He has been one of the political persons around Ottawa for some time. Like Senator Davey and Senator Kirby, he has occupied a place in the shadows, where it is easier to influence and manipulate without public scrutiny or public criticism. That, however, has now changed for Senator Murray and he will have to justify more publicly some of the advice that he will be giving to his colleagues in the government on political matters—and, no doubt, that is one of the reasons why at this critical time, this unfortunate time, this unfavourable time in the history of the government, his services have been called upon to attempt to give a necessary fillip to the political standing of the government.

I assure Senator Murray that we on this side welcome his accession to his new office. We are satisfied that he will apply himself in the same industrious way to the work of the Senate as he has done in the past. He has been given, as the Prime Minister has indicated, responsibilities in the field of federal-provincial relations. The Prime Minister said:

This appointment strengthens the government's capacity to engage constructively with the provinces on important issues of common interest. In his capacity as Minister of State, Senator Murray will support the Prime Minister in his responsibility for constitutional affairs.

So it is useful, I believe, that we now have in the Senate a person who, with the Prime Minister, has a special responsibility for federal-provincial matters and constitutional affairs. As honourable senators realize, there is a very deep interest in this institution in these subjects, and I believe that that aspect will lend additional interest to our proceedings.

I can only thank Senator Roblin for his contribution to the work of the Senate. In this regard the press release reads:

The Prime Minister also expressed particular appreciation for the contribution of the Honourable Duff Roblin as Government Leader in the Senate, noting that his retirement from the Government followed a distinguished career in public service to Canada and to his native province.

We thoroughly support that particular tribute by the Prime Minister to Senator Roblin. He has discharged his responsibilities in the Senate with courtesy, industry and at times a flare for rhetoric which no one on this side could possibly hope to emulate. We hope that that feisty spirit, which he demonstrated so frequently as Leader of the Government, will continue as he takes his new seat on that side of the chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I am sure he knows that each of us on this side of the house, and, I am sure, every senator, wishes him continued distinction and success in his career as a political figure in Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my first words in my new place must be to express my personal appreciation of that most admirable of public men, my immediate predecessor, the Honourable Duff Roblin. Eulogies would be premature and, I think, unwelcomed by him. As honourable senators know, he is at the top of his physical and mental form. Indeed, Senator Nurgitz and others have tried without success for 25 years or more to defeat him on the squash courts. So he has many years of valuable service to his country ahead of him. I simply want to say that his leadership over the past two years has added lustre to a distinguished Roblin family tradition of public service and has done honour to the government, to the Senate, to Manitoba and to Canada.

Honourable senators, I wish to thank the Honourable Leader of the Opposition for his kind welcome and his generous comments. I have long been a friend and admirer of the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition. When he mentioned those of us who have been in the shadows in politics—Senator Davey and others—I recalled the speech that he made in this chamber a few months ago on the sad occasion of the passing of the Honourable Tommy Douglas. In that speech, Senator MacEachen spoke of the bureaucratization and the professionalization of politics and how greatly to be admired was a man like Tommy Douglas whose concept of political activity was to go to the country, take a stand and fight for the things one believed in in public life. It occurred to me at that time, while listening to Senator MacEachen, how apt the description was of himself and of his own career in the public life of this country.

In any event, he is still here; we are both here. He will continue to fight for all the things that he believes in. Some of them, as we know, are expensive but, at the rate at which the government is improving the state of the Canadian economy, the time may not be far off when we will be able to afford even some of Senator MacEachen's ideas.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, although I do not intend to present a petition, nor do I suppose there is any item on the scroll which allows me to stand at this moment, perhaps it would be agreeable to the Senate if I were to acknowledge the kind words that have been expressed by the Leader of the Opposition and by my colleague, the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I would like to inform the Senate that I intend to observe the proceedings in this house with some diligence and to attend to my duties. I also intend to pay particular attention to what has been an absorbing interest of mine, one which I have not pursued with outstanding success to date, and that is the reform of this august body. I think there are a good many people in this chamber who are perhaps not all agreed as to the exact manner in which reform should be carried out. Nevertheless, I am one who thinks that a body which is unelected, which is responsible to nobody, which represents nobody, really needs to examine its constitution and powers and its way of doing business in order to be, not less powerful but more effective in the operation of the federal system of government.

● (0940)

So, I still have that target in front of me and it is a goal that I should like to make progress towards. However, I really rose to say something else. I am very confident that with the leadership the government has in the Senate in the person of Senator Murray we have an excellent mentor, we have a man who understands government as few in this country have understood it, and who has a depth of understanding of the nature of our Constitution and the shape of our nation that few senators can claim. Not only that. Senator Murray has the same gift of the gab as I have always ascribed to myself. I also think that his knowledge of people and his capacity to lead will be amply demonstrated.

So, although the Leader of the Opposition has some qualms as to whether the government will be able to conduct its affairs with the dispatch the nation requires, I have none. I think that we have an excellent leader, and those of us on this side will be happy and proud to follow him.

CORRECTIONS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I join my leader in congratulating Senator Murray on his appointment to the cabinet. But I rise to say that I have had a request before the Senate for the tabling of certain papers and documents with respect to the Correctional Service of Canada. My request has been outstanding for four months. I have been waiting patiently for those papers and documents in order to prepare my representations on Bill C-67. The former Leader of the Government assured me that they would be tabled. I wonder if I could ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to expedite the tabling of those documents and papers.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am aware that a request has gone to the Correctional Service of Canada for those papers and documents. I will do everything I can to expedite their tabling. The honourable senator will have an opportunity shortly to make representations in person to the minister responsible for the Correctional Service of Canada.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FORTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Royce Frith, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Wednesday, July 2, 1986

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

FORTY-FIRST REPORT

Your Committee recommends that during the 1986 summer adjournment of Parliament, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or a Senator named by him, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or a Senator named by him, and a Senator nominated by the Leader of the Government in the Senate be authorized to act for and on behalf of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration in matters requiring action pertaining to the administration of the Senate, subject to ratification by the said Committee upon the resumption of its meetings in the autumn.

Respectfully submitted,

ROYCE FRITH

Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Frith: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the purpose of this motion is to give to the persons named the power to act for the committee during the summer adjournment of Parliament in urgent circumstances or in any case requiring action by the full committee. As is mentioned in the report, any such actions taken are subject to ratification by the main committee when that committee reconvenes. The motion does not, of course, eliminate the possibility of the main committee's being called.

This subcommittee, if it can be called that—it is called the Intersessional Committee—has been established for some time to deal with similar matters between sessions, which means during dissolution and during prorogation; but it requires special authority to so act during an adjournment, and that is the purpose of the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question that relates to the business of the Senate and the business of the government.

We have on the scroll today Bill C-67 and Bill C-68. In order to assist us in determining the urgency with which we ought to proceed in dealing with these bills, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate when it is the intention of the government to have Royal Assent, and whether he can give us an assurance that Royal Assent will take place soon—certainly before September.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have nothing to add to the information that was given by the Deputy Leader of the Government the other day—

Senator Frith: Which was zero.

Senator Molgat: He didn't give any.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Frith: Nothing; it amounted to zero.

Senator Murray: I can only say that no decision has been made as to the date of the next Royal Assent.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I accept that answer and simply add that Senator Doody did undertake on Friday—at least, he expressed the hope; I should not say it is an undertaking—

Senator Doody: No undertaking, that is right.

Senator MacEachen: He expressed the hope that he would be able to give honourable senators more information when we convened on Wednesday. Of course, the Leader of the Government has now told us that there is no additional information. I conclude that the government will operate in the normal course and that Royal Assent will take place in September. It is on that basis that we will consider the bills before us.

Senator Murray: I must say that I do not know that it is proper to draw the conclusion that the Leader of the Opposition has drawn on this matter. He will be aware that since Senator Doody expressed his hope on Friday there has been a change in the administration. In particular, there is a new government house leader in the other place. There is a cabinet meeting planned for today, and other meetings are planned for the immediate future.

I repeat that no decision has been taken as to the date of the next Royal Assent. That is the only information I can convey, and I think that no other conclusions can be drawn from what I have said.

I do, however, make the point that in the view of the government it is prudent for the Senate to pass this bill before we adjourn for the summer.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question? I wonder what position the Leader of the Government takes on the proposal that a bill which has passed the House of Commons and the Senate, should be left for several weeks before being presented to the representative of Her Majesty for Royal Assent. Is it not quite improper for a bill from these two houses to be left resting like that throughout the summer?

● (0950)

As I recall, bills always went forward for Royal Assent immediately, or just as soon as there was a convenient group of bills ready for Royal Assent. They were not left over for weeks as if the decision of the two houses of Parliament could be put in a kind of summer limbo.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is asking a question which, at the moment, is still hypothetical.

Senator Stewart: Surely, honourable senators, we are here on the assumption that senators are going to act on the bill the government has put before us. Surely that is obvious.

Senator Murray: Yes.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF SENATORS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Will Senator Murray convey a message, on my behalf, to the former leader? I thought the former leader, Senator Roblin, represented the embodiment of civility in this chamber. He enhanced the image of the Senate, and when answering questions, mine, at any rate, he did so in an eloquent and erudite manner.

However, I wonder if Senator Murray is aware that I have only one complaint and one disappointment in terms of the former leader, that is that he did not accept my advice to appoint parliamentary secretaries from among senators to assist him in answering questions which are put to the leader by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate aware that, notwithstanding what Senator Roblin said earlier, the Senate has played an important role in previous parliaments when the government of the day did not have representation in certain parts of Canada? At that time, ministers were appointed from the Senate to fill those positions which could not be filled through the electoral process, thereby enabling senators to ask questions of those ministers.

Armed now with the experience of the past, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate reconsider the question of the appointment of parliamentary secretaries whom he could choose from among his very able backbenchers and those who sit beside him?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am aware of my honourable friend's position on this, since he has made his representations in this regard on previous occasions.

I would be less than candid if I encouraged him to believe that parliamentary secretaries would be appointed from the Senate by the present government.

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE-CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, with the appointment of a new minister of state responsible for multiculturalism, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether the former minister's recommendations to his government concerning compensation for displaced and dispossessed Japanese-Canadians during World War II have been rejected by the government?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will ask my colleague, the Honourable David Crombie, to prepare a considered reply to that question and I will see that the Honourable Senator Haidasz receives a copy.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. May I begin by joining in the comments of the Leader of the Opposition in congratulating him on his new appointment. We welcome him to his new post.

I am particularly sorry, of course, to see Senator Roblin leave that post because of our long association in this place and in another political forum previously.

My question is a follow-up to one I previously asked Senator Roblin about matters still outstanding. I referred on June 10 to a written question I had put on the order paper on April 3, 1985. I wondered whether the reply could be produced. Senator Roblin said that he was hastening all replies. Could the new government leader give us the same assurance and tell us when we might expect an answer?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I thank my honourable friend for his kind words and I assure him that I will honour the undertakings made by my predecessor in that respect.

CAPE BRETON

LABOUR RELATIONS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I join with others who have spoken this morning in expressing to our new leader my best wishes for every success. Since he is a Cape Bretoner—I think most senators know what a Cape Bretoner is, since the Leader of the Opposition is a Cape Bretoner, as is Senator John Michael Macdonald, Senator Al Graham, Senator Finlay MacDonald, Senator Marshall and myself—may I ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate, in view of the representation from Cape Breton and the interest that I am sure is shared by all senators in the betterment of conditions on that island, whether he would take it upon himself in his new role to express to the cabinet the concerns of the people of Cape Breton Island regarding the lack of proper industrial relations between the workers and one Derek Rance of the Cape Breton Development Corporation? I hope that as a result of those representations we will not have to present Mr. Rance with a copy of the book, How To Win Friends And Influence People.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I thank Senator Muir for his kind remarks. I was reflecting this morning that Senator Muir and I go back a very long way—almost 30 years—to his first election campaign in what was then Cape Breton-North Victoria. He knows that I am a senator from Ontario and that I have no direct mandate to represent Cape Breton, which is very well represented in this place, in the other place, and, indeed, through two cabinet ministers from the province of Nova Scotia. He also knows that I will always have a particular affection for and interest in the island of my birth. I hope, expect and am determined that that interest and affection will be reflected in whatever I do at the cabinet table.

PROVINCIAL STATUS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in view of Senator Murray's esteem for Cape Breton and his new responsibility for federal-provincial relations, is he giving some consideration to creating provincial status for his native island?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): It is only 150 years now since we were deprived of that status. I am not sure whether that was a sad day for Cape Breton or a happy one. In any case, notwithstanding its political status as part of a larger province, it is one of the great things about Cape Breton and, indeed, about our country that an island like that has been able to preserve its own distinct culture and identity within Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is that the answer? At least it didn't take 150 years to get it.

● (1000)

THE HONOURABLE BARBARA McDOUGALL, P.C.

COMMENTS MADE AT NATIVE BUSINESS SUMMIT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a further question of the Leader of the Government. It concerns a headline in the Toronto Star on June 25 which, frankly, disturbed me. The headline read: "Learn to be greedy, minister urges natives", and it quotes the Honourable Barbara McDougall as follows:

"There's one underlying motive in business shared by all—it's greed," McDougall said at the Native Business Summit in Toronto yesterday. "There's nothing wrong with that.

"We support it wherever it happens," she added.

I wonder whether the Leader of the Government indeed subscribes to that kind of advice to any Canadian and whether it is indeed the position of the government that that is the advice that should be given?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, obviously my honourable friend's attention has not been drawn to a subsequent statement made by the Honourable Barbara McDougall in which she pointed out that her remarks had been made in a lighter vein and deplored the lack of a sense of humour on the part of the Toronto Star.

SMOKING PROHIBITION BILL

STUDY OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL S-8 BY LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the chairman of the Standing Senate [Senator Murray.]

Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. What steps has the committee taken to consider the motion adopted by the Senate on May 28, 1986, to study the subject matter of Bill S-8 which I proposed and introduced on February 13, 1986 in order to protect the rights of non-smokers?

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, the committee has been engaged in studying many of the bills which have been referred to it. We have not as yet progressed to the honourable senator's motion, but no doubt we will do so in the fall.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF CROSS-PARTY CAUCUS COMMITTEES

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Is it his intention to encourage the formation of cross-party caucus committees from the various regions of Canada as a way to establish a mechanism to communicate with the provinces, which communication is lacking at the present time and which will be fulfilling one of the most important objectives of the Fathers of Confederation in establishing the Senate of Canada?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am aware of the initiative taken by my honourable friend in this respect in some correspondence that he has had with the Premier of our province, the Honourable David Peterson. Any such contacts are, of course, to be welcomed and encouraged, but the government will not be acting as official sponsor of those contacts.

Senator Bosa: Although the government will not be acting as official sponsor, would the Leader of the Government encourage the establishment of such a committee?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is a matter for members of Parliament and senators to consider and reflect on. I would not like to make a firm commitment on that at the moment. I see no objection to that kind of process going forward in the informal and often constructive way that we have among legislators of all parties at different levels of government in this country.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Second reading of the Bill C-67, intituled: "An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act".—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder whether it would be appropriate for us to deal with the second reading of Bills C-67 and C-68 at the same time. They are both closely connected. We could perhaps deal with them simultaneously in committee and perhaps on third reading we could deal with them independently. Is that agreeable?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: No. I think the bills should be dealt with separately, as they were called and dealt with separately in the House of Commons.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have no problem with that. It would mean that we would have to go into Committee of the Whole on two separate occasions. We had a commitment to have the minister here for an hour, from 10.30 a.m. to 11.30 a.m. We are ahead of our schedule at this point, but if we are able to handle both bills in committee at the same time, it might be helpful, unless honourable senators wish to devote half an hour to each bill, which does not seem to me to be appropriate.

Senator Hastings: As I understand it, the request is to refer both bills, Bill C-67 and Bill C-68, to Committee of the Whole at the same time.

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Hastings: I have no objection to that.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that both bills be studied together?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is it understood that each bill will get second reading separately?

Senator Doody: Absolutely.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): And that the sponsor, or those speaking to the bills, will address their comments to both bills—that is, to Bill C-67 and Bill C-68? I cannot see any other way of dealing with both bills in committee.

Senator Doody: That is satisfactory.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it the wish of honourable senators that I should put both motions at this time, but that the sponsors speak to them separately?

Senator Doody: We should deal with Bill C-67 first.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I move second reading of Bill C-67.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, that this bill be read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, because I see there is still some confusion, I assume that the understanding is that I will first deal with Bill C-67, which will then receive a response from the opposition, and the bill will then be referred to Committee of the Whole. Bill C-68 would then be called and dealt with. Is that the understanding?

Senator Frith: Before we go into committee.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, before we go into committee. The minister should then address both questions.

Senator Hastings: Provided that they pass second reading.

Senator Frith: Provided they both get second reading.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, on that assumption. Thank you, honourable senators.

At this point I do have some comments to make. I should like to indicate that at the very heart of this bill are important amendments to both the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act.

In the event that the bill becomes law, the program of conditional release known as mandatory supervision will become subject to some very drastic changes. Provisions in the bill will tighten some of the features of that program for penitentiary inmates who obviously, in the opinion of the National Parole Board, would pose a high risk of further violence.

Perhaps the most pressing matter dealt with in the bill is that the existing law compels the automatic release of an inmate under what is commonly known as mandatory supervision, as a result of what we call "earned remission".

Honourable senators, if there is one law with which we are all confronted by members of the public, who have some difficulty in understanding it, it is mandatory supervision. The notion that we tell people who talk to us about this matter that the last third of a sentence must be served outside of the institution is, I confess, foreign to most people with whom I talk. We get into arguments such as "Why is not a term of, for example, five years a sentence of five years?" One then has to start explaining how the system works; and, without going into a long discussion, I believe all honourable senators are aware that at approximately the one-third point of a sentence an inmate is entitled to apply for parole and that the application is heard by the National Parole Board. In the event that the inmate is refused—that is, does not gain parole—then at the expiration of two-thirds of his sentence he must be released on mandatory supervision. That is, he must be released to serve the last one-third of his sentence in the community. The purpose of the provision with regard to the last one-third of the sentence was not to afford inmates a free ride. The purpose was to be in a position to impose conditions that would afford that inmate a better opportunity of fitting back into society, through the normal rules or what we call laws of society, and to provide an opportunity for some rehabilitation. Such a release must be granted even if there is a consensus—and here is the problem—among the correctional and parole officials that the inmate is the source of an imminent risk of violence to the community or, indeed, to himself. For example, an inmate who is serving a nine-year sentence, who displays all kinds of hostility and who is even indicating openly that he would commit another crime of violence at the end of two-thirds of his sentence, that is after six years, must be released. I think that this is where the public has some difficulty with us as legislators in that they wonder how that provision can remain in our law and want to know why such inmates are not kept until the expiration of their warrants—that is, for the full nine years in my example.

● (1010)

At the same time, honourable senators, I do not want to leave you with the impression that this bill is merely a tightening of the screws, that we are dealing with one side of the matter. There is in Bill C-67 a bit of a balancing effect in that there is a greater clarification of what is generally referred to as day parole. This provision might apply to people who are serving a lengthy sentence, and even though the imposition of the lengthy sentence may be considered a good thing it is not considered particularly beneficial to the individual to be confined for a lengthy period.

Senator Frith: Or society.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes. So this provision clarifies day parole and allows for it to begin as early as at the expiration of one-sixth of the sentence. This is a balancing feature of the legislation.

Many hours of thought went into the pre-study of this bill by our own Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and the major issues, I believe, have been thoroughly discussed and debated in the House legislative committee and, indeed, in our own committee. As a result, I do not want to take too much of the Senate's time today, but I do want to raise the four very primary concerns expressed by our committee in the pre-study report of May 14 of this year. The central question of using the courts rather than the Parole Board for detention decisions has been discussed on many occasions by the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and was dealt with in its report of 1983. The government has given careful consideration to this matter. The matter was thoroughly and ably debated in the House of Commons and in the legislative committee. The government has opted to give this responsibility to the National Parole Board because it believes that it is best suited for this type of decision. The Parole Board makes thousands of similar decisions a year based on risk assessment. It is important to remember that a detention decision will affect the manner in which the sentence is served, not the length of the sentence, which is clearly a matter for the courts.

The government fully recognizes that the offenders affected by this decision will be released one day, and it wants to give the authority to detain to a body that has the flexibility to lift the detention order or change the conditions if there is any positive change in the person or the circumstances. This will give inmates the best chance to make the transition to the community when it is safe to do so. There is no question that a court would offer all the guarantees of due process and would rigorously review all relevant matters of fact and law in every case. This case has been made by many honourable senators.

However, the government has stated that for the courts to make a decision on the way the serving of a sentence is to be administered would be outside their normal role. Moreover, to give this power to the courts would presume a lack of confidence in the National Parole Board which is not justified by its performance in similar conditional release decisions. The case being made against the legislation is that the courts should impose the sentence and should also determine how the serving of the sentence is administered. In other words, the analogy I would draw in some ways is that it is an appeal to the same body as made the decision—that is, the court. So, to take the Honourable Senator Hastings' argument, the judge would impose the decision, and you would then go back to the court, and to that same judge who would indicate how that sentence will be served. I think that that is another compelling reason for leaving the question of risk assessment in the hands of the National Parole Board, as we have opted to do over a long number of years.

Inmates brought to the detention review process will be afforded the most thorough procedural safeguards possible. In this regard I can advise the Senate that the second issue raised in the Senate standing committee's interim report—that is, the entrenchment of decision-making guidelines in the legislation as opposed to by regulation—was put forward by the government at report stage and, I am pleased to report, was accepted. The bill was amended before it was sent here to make those particular guidelines which ordinarily would have been in the regulations part of the legislation.

The third issue raised by the committee in its interim report was the limiting of the application of the one-chance mandatory supervision provisions. The committee expressed the view that one-chance MS should be limited to those offenders who are convicted of a new criminal offence while on release. That is, this government, as was its predecessor, is attempting to stop what is called by the correction system the "revolving door." In other words, a person receives a lengthy sentence, after serving two-thirds of that sentence is released under mandatory supervision, breaches the conditions of the release, is returned to the penitentiary and the clock starts ticking again. You then go through the same process where that person must be released at the expiration of two-thirds of sentence. I suppose, given a long enough sentence, an inmate who refuses to obey what we consider to be simple rules could keep going through that door of mandatory supervision several times.

From the time the bill was originally proposed until now, there has been quite a narrowing of the scope of the one-shot mandatory supervision. That is, it does not apply to the entire 11,000 or 12,000 inmates in our correctional system in Canada but only to a limited number. The committee has discussed this matter thoroughly and you will have ample opportunity when the minister is here to find out how that provision works. However, I reiterate that it does not apply to the thousands and thousands of inmates who will be released on mandatory supervision.

● (1020)

I note that the one-chance mandatory supervision provisions will now apply, as I said, to a much more restricted group than when the bill was first tabled. To further restrict the application of the provisions is unworkable, given the length of time which may—and usually does—elapse between arrest and conviction. Honourable senators, the latter is of great concern. Our committee was of the view that the only time a mandatory supervision ought to be revoked was not in the instance when an inmate breached the condition but when he was convicted of a new offence. What makes that unworkable is that, as honourable senators who have had any experience with the criminal justice system will know, there is a lengthy period of time from the moment of arrest to the moment of trial, and I have not even begun to get into questions of appeal. However, that is what makes that particular recommendation difficult. I see Senator Frith's frown of concern.

Senator Frith: I see there are two facts, but I do not understand the connection.

Senator Nurgitz: The connection being, for example, that an inmate who is serving a three-year sentence is released on mandatory supervision for his last year. While out, he commits a crime. His mandatory supervision cannot be revoked until he is convicted of the crime. Moreover, it is not unusual, and especially in major centres of this country, for a criminal trial to take a lengthy period of time—

Senator Frith: I get your point now, thank you.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I think perhaps I have covered that point.

The government maintains its commitment to preventing the "revolving door" syndrome operating to the benefit of offenders who perpetrate violent crimes. As I have said, this concern was raised not just by Mr. Beatty before our committee but, as I recall, in previous legislation by the Honourable Robert Kaplan who had a great deal of concern about this continuing "revolving door" syndrome in connection with mandatory supervision.

The fourth issue raised by our own committee concerns the review and termination of the legislation. A review clause was added to the bill following the deliberations of the House of Commons committee. The clause does not provide for the automatic termination of the detention and one-chance mandatory supervision provisions, but rather retains the flexibility of review that is necessary to ensure that the safety of the public remains our primary concern. Moreover, the provision in the bill provides for the review to be undertaken by a committee of the House of Commons, or by a committee of both Houses of Parliament, which would include this chamber.

Honourable senators, no one has suggested that the detention of an inmate beyond his or her expected release date resulting from earned remission is anything other than a remedy of last resort. Moreover, this government is sensitive to the criticism that extended detention may simply postpone the problem. However, Correctional Services and the Parole Board will have at their disposal some extra time to intervene with these few dangerous offenders and attempt to reduce the risk that they pose to society.

Honourable senators, we have had this argument placed before us time and again. Some members of the committee used it themselves, and that is that eventually that inmate must be released. We cannot hold him forever and if, eventually, he is going to commit a crime, what are we doing just keeping that person inside? Honourable senators, if that be the logic, then I suppose one could make the case that one ought never to incarcerate a dangerous person because eventually one must let him out.

I would like to make the point that if you added up the number of days, weeks or months that one can keep a violent person inside, and added up all those numbers of persons who are involved in violent crimes, I suspect that we would have that many fewer victims in this country.

Therefore, honourable senators, I am urging upon all of you the concern, especially that expressed by victim groups who appeared before the committees of both houses that, for many of these dangerous people, the longer they are inside, the less often this kind of crime will occur. It is difficult to explain to victim groups, for example, that a Clifford Olsen was a mandatory supervision case, notwithstanding the fact that, indeed, he was out on mandatory supervision for a crime that was not particularly violent. However, the fact remains that he was a mandatory supervision case. He was a person serving his sentence on the street while he was committing those 12 or 15 dreadful murders.

Honourable senators, the question of reducing risk is really at the heart of this bill, and I suggest we ought not to lose sight of that in our deliberations. The safety of the public is of primary concern. In the past, there have been too many victims. Admittedly, there may be other ways to achieve this essential goal than that which the government has proposed, each with their own strengths and weaknesses, and their relative merits could be debated indefinitely. The government has listened to a great many of these suggestions and, in my opinion, has acted responsively. It is confident that the legislation before us is reasonable and balances the interests of the many divergent groups that will be affected by it. No one pretends that the passing of this bill will end all senseless, violent acts by released inmates. There is only one guarantee: every further day of delay jeopardizes innocent people and puts them at risk.

This bill has been debated; it has been studied. I suggest, honourable senators, that it is time for us to act. I seek the co-operation of all honourable senators, as I believe do all law-abiding citizens in this country, in ensuring that we give this bill speedy passage.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, my first words must be of commendation to the mover of the bill this morning on behalf of the government. I have worked very closely with him over the past three or four years on this bill, and in the process we have both become very knowledgeable of it. I listened very closely to his presentation in defence of the government bill and to some of his views, and I will have an opportunity to discuss them with him more fully when we proceed to study the bill in Committee of the Whole.

I wish to deal first with the observation that the mover made in his last closing remarks about the protection of the public. I think all of us here are concerned about the protection of the public. That is why we pass laws. However, let me deal first with the observation in that same light that was made by the former Solicitor General in the House of Commons at third reading of this bill. It was the last item of business of the day on Wednesday, June 18, 1986. He said:

—that every further day of delay jeopardizes innocent people. When we continue to talk, it is their safety that is at risk.

I am suggesting to honourable senators that there is not one iota of evidence put forward to the committee that this bill extends any great deal of protection to society, and I suggest to you that, indeed, it is just the opposite. Some of the evidence that was offered means that the community will indeed be called upon to pay a price for unjust custody. When a man has served his sentence according to law, and then is forced to remain in custody on the basis of the finding of a government board, we may find that society will be called upon to pay an additional price at the time of final release.

Honourable senators, this bill was in the House of Commons for one year. There was no great panic to have it passed to protect the public. The public's safety did not seem to be considered to be at risk during that year; it was only when it came before the Senate that we were told, "The public's safety is at risk. Pass the bill in two hours." We were asked to pass the bill on the day on which Parliament was scheduled to adjourn for the summer. I could not give leave because the treatment of the subject is at risk.

● (1030)

This bill was referred to the legislative committee of the House of Commons. The committee reported the bill back to the house and the bill then just sat there for 139 days, from January 29 to June 17. It is evident that the public's safety was not at risk during those 139 days because any responsible minister believing that the public's safety was at risk would have brought the bill forward much more quickly.

What was the House of Commons doing for those 139 days when the public's safety was at risk? For one month the house discussed the Employment Equity Bill, a bill which is simply a census or a statistics-reporting bill, as the Senate found out when it was considering that bill. The public's safety was said to be at risk, yet the house dealt with that bill.

Then the house discussed the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other acts. Those were crucial pieces of legislation when the public's safety was at risk.

What else was the House of Commons considering? Amendments to the Canada Deposit Insurance Act. That bill was given third reading. It was crucial to put that ahead of public safety when all that bill did was increase payments paid by members of the CDIC. An Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts was given third reading. That was very crucial and was put ahead of the public's safety. That act provides that government assets be sold to the private sector. That was absolutely vital when the safety of the public was at risk.

[Senator Hastings.]

Then the house dealt with the Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization Bill. That received third reading in the House of Commons on June 20. I am sure that it was vital and crucial to all Canadians that that bill go ahead of this bill. That was simply a bill to change the name of CN Marine to Marine Atlantic Inc.

Then the House gave third reading to the Competition Tribunal Bill. That took precedence.

A bill respecting the Archives of Canada was given second reading on June 11, yet we are told that the public safety is crucial.

Then the House dealt with an Act to implement the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards. That was given third reading. The Currency Act was given third reading. It was more important to provide the operators of vending machines with a silver dollar than it was to deal with this bill that impacts on the safety of the public. Of course, there are other bills that the House dealt with, and all of them were put ahead of this bill that we have been told impacts on the safety of the public. Honourable senators, as I have said, there is overwhelming evidence to the contrary.

This bill finally came up for third reading on June 18. If the bill is so vital and if the public's safety is at risk, why was this bill not called for third reading on June 19 or June 20 and sent to the Senate so that adequate consideration could be given to it? Why was the bill not put up for third reading on June 26 when the House of Commons was in session? All of this was not done, yet we have been told that this bill is vital to the public's safety and that every day that goes by without passage jeopardizes innocent people. Finally, after six months before the House of Commons, the bill was referred to the Senate and within hours of adjourning for the summer we were told, "Pass it!" I suggest, honourable senators, that the action of the government in asking this chamber to pass a bill which impacts on the freedom of Her Majesty's subjects in one hour is an affront to this chamber and certainly an affront to the committee which has been making a pre-study of the bill over the past months and which has not yet completed its considerations.

As I have said, honourable senators, there is overwhelming evidence to the contrary, that we are not, in fact, protecting the public by passage of this bill. That was the evidence of Mr. Outerbridge. He said that this bill has no great impact on the public's safety. That was also said by others. That was said by the victims, to which the Honourable Senator Nurgitz referred.

Let me put on the record an article written by Bob Robinson. He is a victim himself and a member of the Alberta Victims of Violence. He says exactly and precisely what this bill will do. He states:

The public outcry will be placated at least until it is discovered that ending or changing Mandatory Supervision will not change the nature of the problem one iota—such a change would be cosmetic at best.

The public has every right to be concerned with rising incidents of violent crime in society. It is justified in criticizing the justice system when a significant number of these violent acts are committed by those recently released offenders—but the solution to the problem does not lie in attacking MS. Such a solution would in effect avoid the real problem altogether. The present danger is that MS will be used as a scapegoat at the expense of seeking real solutions.

I suggest, honourable senators, that that is what this bill is all about.

We have had evidence from approximately 90 per cent of employees of penitentiaries. The Senate committee took the time to go to the wardens and the on-line staff in these institutions to obtain their views on the bill. Their opinion represents years of service in the corrections field, years of service and of direct contact with the people we are talking about, and I can tell honourable senators that they do not support the bill. All of the agencies that appeared before the committee when it was considering Bill S-32 in 1983, and when they appeared before the legislative committee of the House of Commons, and when they appeared before the Senate committee on its pre-study of this bill, did not come forward in support of this bill. Not one witness came forward in support of this bill except the civil servants and the minister, who are obliged to support it. Not one independent witness supports the bill. Those witnesses include the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society and the Canadian Bar Association, associations which have years of experience in dealing with the corrections field. All of their advice will be ignored if this bill is passed.

Let it pass if it must, but let the record indicate that everyone in corrections—from those who work in our institutions to those who provide after-care—oppose this bill and are not hesitant to advise us that there is not one iota of public safety in this bill but an overwhelming element of political symbolism and tokenism.

● (1040)

Senator Nurgitz dealt with remission adequately, but I would just point out to him that he used the term “automatic release”. Let me, if I may, deal for one minute with the concept of remission so that it will be clear and understood by all concerned.

Remission of sentence is a procedure that has been practised in Canada for over 100 years and is in use in every enlightened jurisdiction in the world. In Canada we remit one third, 33 per cent, of the sentence, but in some countries 50 per cent of the sentence may be remitted for good behaviour. Here, remission is granted by act of Parliament, namely, the Penitentiary Act, section 24. Why does remission exist? It is a valuable tool in the administration of penal institutions. It gives the inmate an incentive to be on good behaviour; that is why we grant it.

I maintain that it is a deal made between the authorities and the inmates whereby if any inmate coming into an institution behaves himself and applies himself to the best of his ability in the programs available in the institution, he will then be awarded 15 days off for every 30 days he serves. It is very valuable. But when the man has served his time, his two thirds, and it is time to go, there is nothing automatic about it, and it is not “early release”; he has earned it. He has earned it by behaving in custody as we asked him to do.

He is told of the amount of earned remission every month. For example, he is told, “You have earned 15 days’ remission,” or “You have not earned this remission.” He knows as his sentence progresses that his remission is building.

There are two dates an inmate is given on arrival in an institution. He is told, “This is your parole eligibility date,” and “This is your mandatory supervision date.” We tell him at the beginning, “Behave yourself. Do this, and we will give you that.”

So, what this does for a typical prisoner is that up until that point, the two thirds of the sentence has been served according to the law and he is entitled to be released. But it is not early release and it is not automatic.

Everyone knows, except, it seems, the secretariat in the Department of the Solicitor General, what his sentence is and how it is going to be served. The judge knows when he gives a man six years that he will serve four in custody and two out in the community, if he behaves himself. The prosecutor knows, the defence knows, and the inmate knows. Everyone knows.

In fact, I can recall Senator Nurgitz telling us at one committee meeting about a discussion he had had with a judge, who had told him how he decided how much time a man should stay in custody. For four years he added 50 per cent: six years was his sentence. So, the judge knows perfectly well how much time the inmate will serve. You can say, as some seem to want to say, “Well, the judge cannot do that.” Judges are not fools. Judges can add a third. Judges can divide by three. And that is what they do.

When it reaches that point, every inmate knows that he has served two thirds of his sentence. What this bill does at that two-thirds point is a breach of contract. You have made an agreement with men and women. They have done their part. They are entitled to be released. The sentence has been served according to law, and yet this board says, “No way. You are not going anywhere.” It is a breach of contract—based not on something he has done but on something he might do.

In this country do we put people or keep people in custody for something they might do? Is that the new order? Or is a man, once his sentence has been served, entitled to his freedom? That is the first issue.

We have 11,000 inmates in custody in Canada today who have earned their remission. They have done their part as you have asked them, as the Parliament of Canada has asked them. If you pass this law, you put it all in jeopardy; you break your contract; you introduce retroactively a cancellation of that contract. Many members of this house had a lot to say about retroactivity when it came to energy policy, and it did not take long to change that. I submit, honourable senators, that what was good in energy policy is just as valid in corrections policy—even though the constituents you are affecting do not have the resources the Canadian Petroleum Association does to mount a campaign in this institution. But breaking an agreement is breaking an agreement. By what procedure? That is the second issue I wish to discuss, I hope briefly.

The Commissioner of Corrections will refer to the Parole Board any inmate he thinks is likely on release to commit a violent offence. The board will hold a hearing; but, make no mistake, that hearing is a trial. It is a trial after the sentence has been served. It is a trial without an offence having been committed. It will be a trial to decide whether we keep someone in custody because of something he might do. If we are going to put people or keep people in custody on the basis of something they might do, we are going to need much bigger institutions.

The board will hold its hearing. The board will decide what information is to be supplied to the inmate in the form of a statement. It will also decide what information it can withhold from the inmate and it will decide whether or not the inmate may have counsel present, or some friend, but if a friend or counsel is present, all they will be permitted to do is make a statement to the board.

Think of the power you are going to give this board with this bill. Think at the same time of the observation of Chief Justice Bora Laskin who said:

The plain fact is the Parole Board claims a tyrannical authority that I believe is without precedent among administrative agencies. It claims an unfettered power to deal with an inmate almost as if he were a puppet on a string.

The former Chief Justice told you of the power this board has, but what he said will be ignored as we seek to give the board the power to judge an inmate on something he might do. How convenient! It will all be done in the backroom of a penitentiary where the inmate faces all the power of the state. The requirement will not be for proof beyond a reasonable doubt. He will be found guilty not on the basis of proof beyond a reasonable doubt but on the basis that we think he might do something.

● (1050)

Honourable senators, what basic elements of justice prevail in that type of administrative hearing when you are affecting the freedom of Her Majesty's subjects? The Senate of Canada has been consistent about this procedure. It was in 1974, after we had studied parole in Canada under our former colleague, Senator Goldenberg, that the Goldenberg report was issued. Many reforms in the parole system came about as a result of that excellent report completed after a two-year study. One of the recommendations in that report indicated that the Parole Board should not be the sole decision maker with respect to violent offenders. Honourable senators, we are ignoring that recommendation. In 1983, when we studied Bill S-32, honourable senators had a great deal to say in support of that recommendation. We said it again when Bill S-32, which provided that the board would make the decision, was under discussion. We argued this point; we discussed it; and we put it to the minister. I appreciated the great support my colleagues opposite offered at that time. We were successful in having the Solicitor General at that time, Mr. Kaplan, amend the bill. Mr. Kaplan acceded to our request, which we thought was legitimate, and amended that bill in June 1983. Honourable senators, that was a unanimous decision and it has been a unanimous decision every time the Senate has had occasion to discuss it.

[Senator Hastings.]

We said it again when we put forward our interim report in May 1986. In our report we stated that we had listened to the arguments of the minister, but, with respect, we could not accept them. Honourable senators, according to our committee report, signed on behalf of Senator Nurgitz on May 14, we could not accept the arguments of the minister, but we could accept them on June 27.

Honourable senators, in our report dated May 14 we stated quite clearly that the first issue we had to deal with was the question of what is the appropriate body to make the decision. In this regard we stated the following:

It is the opinion of the Committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32 . . . (on June 6, 1983), namely, that the courts, rather than the National Parole Board, should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates . . . We have heard the comments of the Solicitor General with respect to the appropriateness of the Board taking on this responsibility, but with respect we disagree.

Senator Frith: Who presented that report?

Senator Hastings: This is the twenty-first report of the committee over the signature of Senator Derek Lewis for Senator Nurgitz. Senator Nurgitz, as I recall, was chairman of the committee in question. Senator Baroote was present at the meeting during which that decision was made. Senator Flynn, a former Minister of Justice, was also present at the meeting when that decision was made. Senator Doyle was present when we decided, on May 13, that after hearing the views of the minister, we could not accept them. On May 13 we could not accept them, but today they are not bad.

In 1983, when we were successful in persuading the former Solicitor General to accept our amendments, Senator Nurgitz replied on that occasion:

The original proposal of the minister who came before us was that the National Parole Board could rule, if, in their judgment they thought a person might be dangerous, that that person serve the rest of his sentence within the institution. We thought that that was harsh and not that much different than the gating, which has now been determined by the Supreme Court of Canada to be illegal. I am more than satisfied with the amendments proposed by the minister—

In 1983 Senator Nurgitz said that he was more than satisfied with the minister for proposing those amendments. Later on in his observations Senator Nurgitz went on to state:

I might say as well that an accused has an opportunity, following a finding of the court against him, to appeal to the provincial court of appeal. It could be an appeal based on fact, or law, or a mixture of both.

A person's civil liberties are well protected under the present proposed amendments. I know my good friend, Senator Hastings, was deeply concerned about this.

I was and I am today.

Senator Bosa: That is obvious.

Senator Hastings: What about other sources with respect to the judicial decision? I refer honourable senators to a document entitled, "Mandatory Supervision: A Discussion Paper", issued by no better source than the Solicitor General himself. Honourable senators, this is not my own view. This is the view of men who have had years of dedicated service with respect to corrections in Canada. They range from wardens of institutions to parole officers. Their view is stated as follows:

This sub-option has the disadvantage that the "dangerousness" label is serious enough to warrant being judicially reviewable, both on its substantive merits and the procedures by which the finding was made.

That is the staff telling the government what should be done, and it is what our committee found when we travelled through the institutions. They go on to talk about the benefits of this program and, I admit, there are some slight benefits. They state:

Finally, the ultimate benefits of this option are actually rather limited. Half the offenders entering penitentiary have a sentence of three years or less, and three-quarters get less than 5 years. The average amount of additional time served (that would have been earned as remission) in penitentiary as a result of this option would be about a year.

That is what we were told. This goes on to state:

While society would be protected by the incapacitation of the offender for the additional time, his recidivism may only be delayed and in fact he may—as a result of the labelling, additional time served, bitterness and possible symbolic status in the penitentiary—be more likely to recidivate than under the present system.

This is the element that I want to draw to your attention. When we say we are protecting society, these men are telling you that you may not be protecting society, but that you may be creating an attitude towards even more violence on the release of that inmate on warrant expiry.

Honourable senators, the idea is put forward that we will have another year to work with the inmate. I do not know whether the people making those statements understand the men we are working with. Senator Doyle and I had an opportunity to talk to these types of people. All we can do with this type of man and the only program this man can participate in—and there are many—is valium three times a day to keep him calm and functional. So, what is his program for the next year? Valium three times a day. For the others, the evil men—and there are evil men—we haven't money enough to buy a program. But we will make them worse by keeping them in for another year.

● (1100)

What will happen during that year? When, in five years, nothing has happened, how can they expect that something is going to happen in that last 12 months? Will the inmate be struck by the hand of God? Most of these people are sick. Out of the ten men and one woman who were gated, seven were mentally disordered individuals, and that is the ratio we will be working with. They are mentally disassociated; they are mentally ill, and they should not be detained in a penitentiary. But society will not provide any other form of custody. I understand the problem. They should be in custody and will have to be in custody for many years, but my point is that they should not be held in the penitentiaries. All they do is disrupt the entire penitentiary and they spend their time, honourable senators, in the hole because of that disruption.

I want honourable senators to think for a moment about this: When this individual is gated, do you think he does not know who has gated him? He knows that it was the men in that penitentiary who have been working with him, that that is where it started. And do you think he will come near them or have anything to do with them for that 12 months? Do you think they will be able to work with him during that period? Do honourable senators not understand the problem they are going to give to their custodial officials in detaining this sort of inmate for that 12-month period? He knows who has triggered this; he knows who has put the finger on him. He will be a problem the whole time he is detained in custody in prison. We know that; the men in the penitentiaries told us that.

I asked one individual: "Would this man understand the procedure of gating?" He said, "He certainly would." I asked what would be the result of that. He said, "I would not want to be near him." I asked a custodial official on another occasion whether he foresaw any problem with this sort of inmate once he is detained and kept in custody. The man replied that there would be no problem if there were three or four such inmates. I asked him what would be the case if there were 100—and, honourable senators, that is just a guess. There will be 200 such inmates and the maximum security institutions will have 30 of them. In reply to my question he said that that will be a problem. So, honourable senators can ignore his advice if they wish and put more pressure on the institutional staff—as if they do not have enough already, with all of the violence they have to put up with in those institutions. Pass this bill and we will put 100 more problems on their shoulders. We will destroy any of the work they have been able to do during the time those inmates have been in custody.

Honourable senators, I have said that the staff do not support this legislation. I just wish to read a recommendation contained in a study entitled "Release on Mandatory Supervision of Mentally Disturbed and Dangerous Inmates". This study was prepared by the Evaluation and Special Projects Division of the Corrections Service of Canada. Recommendation No. 6 states:

That CSC encourage the Ministry to retable, at an early date, the proposed legislation to allow for a court review of the MS release of dangerous offenders. It should be noted, however, that this only postpones the problem until Warrant Expiry, at which time it is no longer possible to make supervised release plans for these offenders.

Finally, honourable senators, I wish to quote from a decision of the Federal Court of Canada regarding one Howard, an inmate in Stoney Mountain Penitentiary, and a presiding officer of an inmate disciplinary court. The inmate asked for and was denied counsel, so the Federal Court was asked to adjudicate the matter. This is the judgment of Mr. Justice Thurlow and Mr. Justice MacGuigan.

An inmate's liberty is at stake... because his earned remission is in jeopardy... In this case, the appellant's entire earned remission was in jeopardy... He was entitled to counsel to adequately present his defence.

Honourable senators, that is what this detention hearing will do—it will place the inmate's entire earned remission at risk. The judge has ruled that according to the basic fundamentals of justice, in answering the charges against him this man was entitled to counsel. He was entitled to counsel where an offence had been committed, but the legislation we are passing here will provide that although he might have counsel at that hearing, his counsel will only be able to make a statement. He will not be able to cross-examine. Surely one of the basic fundamentals of justice, as I, as a layman, understand it, is the right of the inmate to know the charges against him and the right to respond to them. That right to respond carries with it the right to counsel and his ability to cross-examine. I repeat that counsel will be unable to cross-examine at these hearings. He will only be able to make a statement at the end of the hearing, saying that he does not think Johnny will be a bad boy. That is all he can do. He cannot ask those on the other side to prove beyond doubt their allegations.

Again I quote from Mr. Justice Thurlow:

—in a social system which recognizes the right of anyone to counsel in any of the ordinary courts of law for the defence of any charge, no matter how trivial the possible consequences may be, it seems to me to be incongruous to deny such a right to a person who, though not suffering from any physical or mental incapacity to defend himself, is faced with charges that may result in a loss of his liberty, qualified and fragile though it may have been, for some 267 days.

Finally, Mr. Justice MacGuigan on the same point:

It is sufficient for the present that revocation of earned remission was a possible punishment—although in fact here it was also the actual punishment and not merely a possible one. In such circumstances penitentiary inmates are entitled not to be deprived of their right to liberty except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice... The right to counsel would... include the right to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses...

Honourable senators, I might have spoken for too long. We have worked together on this legislation for four years now. I do not think I have wavered in my views with respect to the inadequacy of certain portions of the legislation as explained by the sponsor. I intend to continue with all my capability to enlighten the government, with respect to these hearings, on the need to amend this legislation, to make it a better bill, to appeal for understanding, logic and reason. I have done all I can in loyalty to my conscience to convince honourable senators and to convince the government of my conviction that this legislation is inadequate. As an appointed official, I cannot block the will of an elected government. But insofar as I have been able to as an appointed official, as a senator of Canada, I think I have done my duty. I make no apology for this sitting today or for the sittings that will be held in the future as we continue to discuss these bills. In those days I shall continue to appeal for logic, reason and understanding when the freedom of the individual is placed in jeopardy.

• (1110)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform honourable senators that if Senator Nurgitz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a few brief comments. I should like to thank Senator Hastings for his thoughtful presentation. No one is asking him to apologize for exercising his right in expressing a view which we all know he strongly holds. That has not been an issue on this side or among his colleagues in committee.

The honourable senator referred constantly to the liberty of the subject. I am sure that none of us here wishes to take any steps which would interfere drastically with the liberty of any subject. The question really is one of striking a balance between public safety and measures which have to be taken.

I have a few brief comments to make on the substance of the honourable senator's remarks. One concerns the question of appearing before the Parole Board with all the power of the state against a particular individual. Honourable senators, from the moment that a man or woman is arrested for an offence and faces trial, possible appeal and whatever else, he or she is facing, I would hope, the very power of the state. That is how the system works.

The honourable senator asked, "Where is the urgency; where is the great risk? This bill was sitting in the House of Commons for many months." The honourable senator is well aware that from September to June the Senate committee was urged to produce a report and to deal with the minister on it. I regret to say that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was urged, pushed and pressed. I believe the Solicitor General gave all kinds of indications that he wanted the bill to move ahead quickly.

Senator Hastings, in referring to the term of the sentence, mentioned that according to law the inmate was entitled to release after serving two-thirds of his sentence. Honourable senators, we are changing the law, but we are not changing the law for 11,000 inmates, as one could be led to believe; we are changing it for 150 high-risk, obviously violent inmates. I believe Senator Hastings put it best when he said they were sick.

I do not know what the problem is either technically or medically. I do not disagree with anything that the honourable senator said at the conclusion of his remarks. The people to whom I referred are those who, in the words of Senator Hastings, at the urging, I believe, of Senator Frith, "should be in custody, but not in a penitentiary." I stand to be corrected, Senator Hastings, but I believe those were your words. But having said that there is no place where they can be put in custody, is the answer to the problem to put them on the street? Is it the answer to put small children or innocent women, or other law abiding citizens at risk? Is that the answer?

I quite agree with the honourable senator that those people are not normal by the ordinary test of human behaviour. I accept that, and so, I believe, does the committee. The question is: What do we do? Honourable senators can take the view that because keeping them in the penitentiary does not cure them—and I accept that also—then "let us just put them out on the street." But, honourable senators, I am afraid that the response of the public to that would be something less, I would suggest, than Senator Hastings would like to hear.

There was some discussion concerning retroactivity. This bill has been introduced because of the fear that there is within Canada's prison population—in committee we were given the figure of 150 out of a population of 11,000—150 very dangerous and obviously very violent high risk people. To say that this bill will not apply to them is to say, "We are going to release 150 inmates and let the chips fall just where they may; just keep off the streets."

We have been given an assurance—I believe by the minister and certainly by officials—that there is an opinion given by the Department of Justice that this legislation does not breach the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I confess to honourable senators that it is an important matter and one that quickly comes to mind, without attempting to give a legal opinion. It may well be that the courts will decide that we cannot impose this on people who are already sentenced. That may be so, but I do not know that it is for us to play lawyer in this matter. I am simply saying that we have been assured that the legislation does not breach the Charter.

The minister and officials have come forward and said that there is a high risk, that there are dangerous people in the institutions. Let it be for the reasons which Senator Hastings has described—I accept that. But what is the answer? I suggest, honourable senators, that we move ahead with this piece of legislation, but that Senator Hastings should continue to do what he is doing. We bless him for what he is doing, that someone like him is mindful of the situation and will be monitoring this type of legislation; and if improvements have to be made, then they will have to be made. In the short term I do not have an answer, but I suggest, honourable senators, that to put violent inmates out on to the streets is not an answer.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Would Senator Nurgitz permit a question?

Senator Nurgitz: Certainly.

Senator Molgat: If I understood the honourable senator correctly, I believe he said that there had been pressure applied to or requests made of the Senate committee to produce a report. Did that in any way prevent the government from proceeding with the bill in the House of Commons? Were they waiting for the Senate report?

Senator Nurgitz: No, honourable senators. It could have come to the Senate and been amended here. The Solicitor General was very clear: "Let me know your amendments." In fact, the inclusion of the regulations, as honourable senators know, was a topic very close to the heart of Senator Godfrey, who, I believe, joined the committee almost for that purpose, namely, of urging us to get the provision in the bill and not in regulations. It was also one of the items to include a provision to have the Senate as part of the review committee—another recommendation of the interim report of the committee—made part of the bill. So, we were urged. However, I quite agree with Senator Molgat that it could have gone ahead the other way.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a further question. I thought I had understood from Senator Nurgitz that some of the witnesses who appeared before the committee had been favourable to the bill. However, I thought I heard Senator Hastings say that none of the witnesses, except departmental people, supported the bill. Could Senator Nurgitz clarify that for me?

Senator Nurgitz: Certainly. In reviewing the matter over the weekend—I am thinking now particularly with respect to Bill S-32—a lady by the name of Mrs. Clausen, who appeared with a victims' group, was supportive of this kind of legislation. She clearly was supportive of a gating type of legislation—without going into particulars of this kind of process. This was supported by the Citizens United for Safety and Justice, who made a presentation to the House of Commons committee. It was supported by a group called Victims of Violence, by a group called Victims of Justice and by the Queen's University Correctional Law Project.

● (1120)

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole later this day. The hope is to deal with both Bill C-67 and Bill C-68 in Committee of the Whole at the same time.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Committee of the Whole.

THE PAROLE ACT AND RELATED STATUTES

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, moved the second reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatory Act and the Criminal Code.

He said: Honourable senators, I have some comments to make with respect to Bill C-68 which, like Bill C-67, also received third reading very late in the proceedings in the House of Commons. While Bill C-68 addresses concerns of a more technical nature, it nonetheless contains important changes to the conditional release statutes which are long overdue. The last significant amendments to the Parole Act, Penitentiary Act and Prisons and Reformatory Act were made in 1977, some nine years ago. There is some suggestion that oversights at that time are in need of correction.

The amendments in this bill are intended to clarify the calculation and administration of sentences, as well as to facilitate the operation of the National Parole Board, the Correctional Service of Canada and provincial correctional departments. Some of the proposed amendments have appeared along with more substantive amendments in previous bills which were not adopted by Parliament, and we have discussed some of those today. During the review of Bill C-68 before the Commons legislative committee, a number of witnesses offered comments and suggestions on various provisions in the bill. As a result of these suggestions, a number of motions to amend the bill were put forward and adopted by the committee. The government is confident that the bill before you reflects the best possible effort to provide for the effective administration of custodial sentences imposed by courts throughout this country.

Regrettably, this bill did not receive the same attention in our Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee as Bill C-67. I would like to take a few minutes to highlight for honourable senators a few of the features of the bill. First, I shall deal with the Parole Act. It provides for the calculation of sentences for inmates in federal penitentiaries, as well as for release of those inmates on parole or under mandatory supervision. Since its proclamation in 1959 the Parole Act has been subjected to periodic amendments, largely initiated in response to immediate pressures and events. The board has grown from five members to close to 26 permanent members and approximately 75 temporary members, from a centralized establishment in Ottawa to a more mobile service that now operates across the country, and from reviewing parole applications on paper to review by hearings, with all the safeguards that are inherent in that process. Since the Honourable Senator Hastings has referred to several cases involving the penitentiary and parole service, I would point out that it also handles a heavy caseload of litigation.

[Senator Doody.]

Senator Hastings: There will be more.

Senator Nurgitz: Senator Hastings has just assured us in good faith that there will be more such cases.

In many cases correctional authorities are attempting to cope with the current situation with an inadequate and out-of-date framework. The amendments address, I believe, some of the shortcomings of the existing law.

A primary concern in the Parole Act which Bill C-68 addresses is that of ensuring that sentences of inmates confined in federal penitentiaries are calculated so as to reflect accurately the intent of the judge who sentenced the offender. Section 14 of the Parole Act was originally enacted to facilitate the calculation and administration of sentences by correctional authorities. The section attempts to achieve that purpose by deeming different terms of imprisonment which were imposed either at the same sitting of a court or on separate occasions, and for which there would normally be different parole eligibility dates and release dates, to constitute one single sentence for which there is only one parole eligibility date and one release date. I emphasize that the deeming provision does not modify the duration of the sentences imposed by the courts. The single sentence it creates begins on the earliest day on which any of those sentences commenced and ends on the final day of the last to expire.

Although there is no doubt that section 14 has been of great assistance in the administration of the majority of sentences, its present wording suffers from certain shortcomings which limit its application and prevent correctional authorities from giving the full and proper effect to sentences imposed by the courts. For example, under the present section 14 situations have arisen where a judge has sentenced an offender to a substantial term of imprisonment only to find that the offender is immediately eligible for, or indeed is released on, parole due to the effect of combining the new sentence with the old. Such anomalous results are a source of great concern both to the public and to correctional authorities, and this bill clarifies that situation.

Other amendments to the Parole Act will not so much correct oversights as they will eliminate redundancies and obsolete provisions. I do not wish to get into all of them, but, for example, the definition of a magistrate has been deleted, since the substantive section to which it related was repealed by previous legislation. There are other such housekeeping amendments. Some of these amendments pertain to the Penitentiary Act, the act which provides for the administration of our federal penitentiaries. These amendments do not embody substantive changes in policy. Rather, they are attempts to correct some longstanding technical problems. For example, the name of the Canadian Penitentiary Service will be officially changed to Correctional Service of Canada to reflect in the statutes the amalgamation of the Penitentiary Service and the National Parole Service which took place some nine years ago. This long overdue amendment will permit the official use of the designation Correctional Service of Canada, which has been used in practice since 1977.

There are other such related amendments. For example, there has been some disagreement between federal and provincial authorities. There is a practice where certain inmates serving provincial sentences—that is, a sentence of two years less a day or less as opposed to federal offences of two years or more which are served in federal institutions—who would ordinarily be in provincial institutions serve their time in a federal institution because of proximity to family and for other reasons. There are amendments to those acts which clarify many of those kinds of arrangements.

● (1130)

Some of the amendments also deal with terminology. For example, the use of the terms “rules” and “regulations” will be made consistent throughout the act. There is also a good deal of repeal of obsolete provisions. Lastly, one amendment will be made to the Criminal Code in consequence of the amendment to the Penitentiary Act respecting the limited designation of certain members of the Correctional Service of Canada as peace officers. As honourable senators may recall from another piece of legislation, there is a very lengthy designation of “peace officers” in the Criminal Code and for the purposes of the administration of the Penitentiary Service, some of those members will be included.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I am sure that you will agree that those who are charged with the onerous duty of dealing with convicted offenders on a day-to-day basis need up-to-date legislation in order to carry out their duties. In my opinion, this bill is a good beginning to modernizing the correctional law and eliminating technical obstacles to understandable and efficient correctional programs. This bill will update and streamline the legislation in this field and for that reason I urge support for it now.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I would like to say briefly that whenever I hear a minister or anyone else introduce a bill by saying, “These are merely technical amendments,” I always feel I have to take a second look. I agree with Senator Nurgitz: It is a technical clean-up of some matters with respect to the operation of the Parole Board and the Correctional Service of Canada. However, whenever we try to, in your words, reflect the judgment of the court, it seems to me that it always results in a lengthening of sentence. It also seems to me that the Correctional Service of Canada and the Parole Board are obsessed with the lengthening of sentences and, in that connection, I would like a very careful scrutiny of clause 14 of this bill with the sentence administrator when we come to deal with it in Committee of the Whole.

Other than that, I think I must agree with Senator Nurgitz. This bill takes care of a great many technical amendments. However, with respect to amendments that lengthen the sentence, it seems to me, as I have said, that we are obsessed with lengthening the sentence. When a man is sentenced to five years by a judge and he has six months left on his old sentence, it seems to me that there is great attention paid to the adding on of that left-over six months, notwithstanding that the man will be in custody for five years. In other years, we seemed to place more importance on getting that sentence lengthened instead of adopting the view, as I suggest we should, that five years in custody is plenty for any inmate. In my view, we do not need to be so concerned or so obsessed with lengthening sentences.

As Senator Nurgitz has indicated, computing sentence has become a growing industry within the Canadian Penitentiary Service. We have amended bills and changed bills, and we are preoccupied with what kind of sentence it was, depending on what the judge has said. I understand now that we have a sentence calculator in every institution and an auditor in every region. We have confused the issue so badly over the years and, while I hope that this bill will clarify this area, I have some doubts that it will, in fact, add much to it. Perhaps it is time the Solicitor General gave some consideration to a complete overhaul of all the acts pertaining to this subject in order to make it one act with one regulation instead of the present situation, which creates confusion among inmates and among staff in computing sentences.

With those few remarks, I would like to support the bill, but it is in bad company with Bill C-67. However, we will give consideration to it following an explanation of clause 14.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Nurgitz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I stand on the same good faith as Senator Hastings, and, like him, I urge you to give speedy passage to this bill, notwithstanding its friend.

Senator Frith: It has fallen amongst evil companions.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole, and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering Bill C-67 and Bill C-68.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., that this bill be now referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Committee of the Whole.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

BILL TO AMEND CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on Bill C-67, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable James Kelleher, P.C., Solicitor General of Canada, was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I have the great honour and pleasure of welcoming on your behalf to the Committee of the Whole, for the first time, the Honourable James Kelleher. Mr. Kelleher is a distinguished member of the Bar of Ontario, and a Q.C. still. He is the Member of Parliament for Sault Ste. Marie, and has been since September 1984. He was the Minister for International Trade until Monday last, when he became the Solicitor General of Canada. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is now in Committee of the Whole to give consideration to Bill C-67, intituled: "An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act."

Shall consideration of the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: I ask the honourable minister to make a short statement.

Hon. James Kelleher, P.C., Solicitor General of Canada: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I listened carefully to the remarks of Senator Murray in which he said that I still have my Q.C. I regret to say, Senator Murray, that when I expressed to my colleague, the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Crosbie, my concern over the proposed amendment from the Ontario government, he assured me not to worry, that as long as I supported his measures for Newfoundland I could, indeed, be given a federal Q.C. I am now in double jeopardy because he has since been moved!

● (1140)

I have with me today, honourable senators, two members of my staff: Mr. M. Dion, Senior Counsel, Legal Services Unit, Correctional Service of Canada; and Mr. R. Zubrycki, Acting Director General, Corrections Policy, Ministry of the Solicitor General. As honourable senators are aware, my appointment is of recent vintage. I will be the first to admit that notwithstanding my legal background, I have not as yet mastered and will not for quite a while master the intricacies of this department. So, I trust that you will bear with me. I will certainly do my best to answer every question, but obviously from time to time I am going to have to look to them first for assistance.

I should like to reiterate that it is indeed a privilege to be appearing before the Senate today. I know that some honourable senators are sorry that this is taking place in July, but I think we all agree that the bills before the Senate are, indeed, very important to society. While I will be brief in my remarks, I should like to express at the outset my appreciation for this opportunity to address the Senate with respect to Bill C-67 and Bill C-68.

Honourable senators, in government, as in life, there is a time to listen and a time to act. What we have heard from ordinary citizens is this: They want us to look to alternatives for incarceration of offenders who are not dangerous, but they also expect their government to do everything possible to protect them from dangerous criminals who have clearly exhibited that they are a risk to the public. These bills, and Bill C-67 in particular, will help achieve that goal, and Canadians deserve to see them enacted.

There have been too many victims of dangerous criminals for us further to delay passage of these bills. The House committee heard from those victims and their families. They have written to members of Parliament, many of whom have listened to them in person. Nothing is more painful than to hear their stories and to know that we, as legislators, have it within our power to take the steps to reduce this needless violence.

Honourable senators, we have that power and that responsibility and we must act on it. Every further day of delay jeopardizes innocent, law-abiding citizens and Canadians across this country. A full year has now passed since Bill C-67 and Bill C-68 were introduced in the House of Commons for first reading. Since that time I have seldom—at least in my short tenure—seen bills receive such scrutiny and discussion in committees of the House of Commons and the Senate. The House of Commons committee studied these pieces of legislation from September to December of last year. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has conducted a pre-study of the bills since the beginning of February of this year. The honourable members of the committee have not only called on several occasions the former Solicitor General and departmental officials to appear before them but they have visited penitentiaries and have talked with staff and inmates.

I sat in the gallery earlier this morning and listened in particular to the Honourable Senator Hastings. I know the deep feelings that all of you have with respect to the subject matter dealt with in these particular bills.

As a result of this process, the government has taken into consideration the comments and suggestions of the members of both houses. I am grateful for their work. I am confident that the bills before the Senate reflect the best possible effort to provide for the safety of Canadians and for the effective administration of custodial sentences imposed by the courts of the country.

Some of the amendments which have been made touch on particular concerns of honourable senators. For example, the decision-making guidelines, which will be used by the National Parole Board in the detention review process, have now been entrenched in the Parole Act rather than forming part of the regulations. As well, the one-chance mandatory supervision provisions have been substantially narrowed since Bill C-67 was first introduced in the House of Commons. The provisions will now apply to a much more limited group of offenders and will not be retrospective in effect. By that I mean that the provisions will only apply to those inmates who are reviewed and released by the board after the bill comes into effect.

To further restrict the application of the provisions, as some honourable senators have suggested, would be unworkable and, in our opinion, ineffective. It should not be necessary to wait until after an offender released under mandatory supervision has been convicted of a new crime before active steps can be taken to ensure that he or she is returned to custody to serve the full sentence in a penitentiary. We must act to end the revolving-door syndrome from operating to the benefit of offenders who perpetrate violent crimes.

Some honourable senators have also expressed concern about the review and termination of the proposed legislation. Following deliberations in the House of Commons committee, a review clause was added to Bill C-67. The clause does not provide for the automatic termination of the detention and one-chance mandatory supervision provisions but, rather, provides for the opportunity for a parliamentary committee to review the effectiveness of the provisions three years after their enactment to determine if any changes are necessary. By amending Bill C-67 to provide for automatic termination of its provisions we would, in our opinion, be running the risk of a gap in legislation. I believe we cannot afford to allow public safety to be subject to that risk.

Finally, honourable senators, some honourable senators have expressed concern about the use of the National Parole Board rather than the courts to make the detention decision. This issue has been discussed on many occasions and in many forums. Honourable senators, the government has chosen, after much deliberation, to keep this responsibility with the board because it believes that it is best suited for making this type of decision. The National Parole Board makes thousands of similar decisions a year based on risk assessment. The courts determine guilt and assess punishment. That is their job and their responsibility. I have confidence in the board's abilities, and I have confidence that Bill C-67 and Bill C-68 provide the most thorough and fair tools to enable them to make these decisions.

In addition to changes that were made to the bills with respect to concerns of honourable senators, the government has responded to comments and suggestions on a number of other issues. The Schedule of Offences, for example, has been reviewed in detail and has been tightened up in the House committee through the elimination of summary conviction offences. As was mentioned earlier in the debate, the bill is balanced in that day parole has now been made easier, and an inmate will become eligible for that after the serving of one sixth of a sentence.

Honourable senators, these bills have been debated, these bills have been studied, these bills have been amended where amendments were required. Now is the time for us to stand with the vast majority of Canadians in saying that we will do everything in our power to stem the tide of needless violence. Canadians ask no more of us than that, and, surely, they have the right to expect nothing less.

● (11:50)

That concludes my remarks, Mr. Chairman, and I will certainly do my best, in the time that is left, to answer the questions that are put to me.

I would like to say one thing further. It has always been my objective in serving as a minister of this government to make myself available to you at any time, and I make that pledge to you today. My office door is open. I am prepared to see you at any time and in any place that you would like to see me, and I am happy to discuss with you your concerns.

I have been a member of the Bar now for some 30 years. I have a great, deep and abiding respect for and interest in the law, and I am certainly prepared to do what I can to try to make our society a little better to live in. Thank you.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, before calling on the honourable Leader of the Opposition either to ask questions or to make a speech, it is the intent of the Chair to let any senator who wants to ask questions or make a speech do so.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I begin by congratulating the minister on his new assignment as a member of the government. Personally, I thought he had conducted himself as Minister for International Trade in an effective and useful manner. He appeared before the Senate committee in that capacity and was very candid in his responses and threw additional light on the subject we were discussing at that time. So, as he undertakes a new responsibility, I hope he believes, as I do, that he did perform successfully in his past function.

I must say that I am somewhat surprised that the minister would have come to the Senate to deal with this bill so soon after his new appointment. This is a complex bill. It has been studied extensively by members of the House of Commons and of the Senate, and I must say that no bill that I know of in my short tenure in the Senate has attracted as much concern as this particular bill.

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs devoted itself carefully to this matter and made some recommendations to the former Solicitor General. It is my understanding that the Senate committee did not receive a formal response from the former Solicitor General as to the reasons why those proposals were not accepted.

Now we have the situation that the Senate has been called back to sit after the House of Commons has adjourned—and I personally have no complaint about having been obliged to return here today if, indeed, it is necessary and if, indeed, these two bills are to be enacted into law very rapidly. But we have no assurance of that. The House of Commons has been adjourned; it is not present, and in the normal course of events it will not return until September. This bill cannot be made law until there is Royal Assent, and that requires the presence of the House of Commons. We have had no indication that if the Senate gives third reading to this bill, the government proposes to summon the House of Commons so that the bill can receive Royal Assent and become law.

I should have thought that in those circumstances it would have been prudent for the minister to take the opportunity provided by these months to contemplate and reflect and make his own judgments upon the validity of the amendments that were proposed by the Senate committee. I think that is a matter that is still open to the minister, because there is no point, honourable senators, in pushing this bill to third reading and having it passed if it stands until September before being made into law—which can only happen with Royal Assent.

Earlier I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether there would be an early Royal Assent and the answer was that no decision had been taken. So, we do not know. I infer, in the absence of a decision, that the normal evolution will occur and we will return and give Royal Assent to this bill in early September. So why, honourable senators, does not the minister take advantage of the time available to him—nothing suffers—and reflect upon this matter and give himself a chance? I do not think it would be a reflection on any minister to say, “Well, I am not quite prepared today to make a final judgment; I would like to look at this,” because, after all, any minister who has been discharging the complex work of the Department of Trade would need some time to master the intricacies of this particular bill.

What I am asking is: Is there to be Royal Assent? If so, when? Or are you going to let these bills sit until September? If you intend to let them sit, then why do you say that it is important to society to have these bills passed, but not important enough to have them made into law until September?

At one time the minister himself stated that these bills should not suffer further delay. Well, the fact is that unless we are given assurance that Royal Assent will take place and that the House of Commons will be brought back, these bills will be delayed until September. I have that very much in my mind and so do my colleagues as we face what has been presumed in our minds to be an urgent desire on the part of the government to pass the bills in the Senate, but not to have them made law until some indefinite time in the future. That is an important factor.

I want to add further, honourable senators, to the minister, that it is all the more important that the minister consider these proposals from the Senate carefully and give himself time to consider them, because the Senate has had a consistent attitude on this particular subject with respect to the role of the Parole Board and the courts. It is not a question that has suddenly arisen with the new Government of Canada; this question was dealt with when the former government was in office, at which time the Senate insisted and re-insisted unanimously, every part of it, until Mr. Kaplan, the minister of the day, accepted its views. The question I and other honourable senators should ask ourselves is: Why should the Senate now swallow itself and say that those principles which motivated it so strongly should be abandoned and the bill should go through the Senate unamended?

[Senator MacEachen.]

• (1200)

I do not reproach Senator Nurgitz for his new-found support for principles which he previously found unacceptable—that is his problem—but I believe that the Senate must ask itself: Have we any honour? Do we stand for anything? Are we prepared to force one minister, on principle, to amend a bill and then, when it comes around the next time, to say to the new government that it does not mean anything to us any more? Do we decide at this stage to back off?

I quite sincerely welcome the Solicitor General to his portfolio. I believe him when he says that he has sincere intentions. I think it would be an evidence of those sincere intentions if he were to listen to the Senate, to listen to what is said in the Committee of the Whole and to say that he is going away to consider our views and that nothing will suffer in the next several months, because the bill is not going to be made law in any event. If that time is used to consider the matter, then I think the minister could put forward a much more credible defence of his decision than, as he is forced to do today, to defend a decision taken by his predecessor and which he, despite his best intentions, has not had the opportunity to consider in all its ramifications as have members of the Senate.

There is no person who ought to be listened to more carefully than Senator Hastings. There may be others who merit attention, but none more so than Senator Hastings, who has probably put more thought into this matter than anyone else, including the present and former Solicitors General.

Honourable senators, I am in quite a difficult position by being asked, as a matter of urgency, to pass two bills today and tomorrow, knowing that they will sit until September before they become law, when that intervening time could be used by the minister to reflect. He could come back in early September and tell us that he has listened to our proposals and that he does not find them valuable. Then the Senate could act in accordance with its own responsibility at that stage.

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Chairman, in listening to the words of my friend, Senator MacEachen, I was reminded of Shakespeare's Julius Caesar with respect to certain praise I was receiving which, perhaps, contained another message for the government. However, far be it from me to suggest anything of that nature.

I would like honourable senators to know that I do not feel pushed. I am quite prepared to stand here today and defend the bill to the best of my ability. I think that my predecessor and, indeed, both houses have conducted extensive studies with respect to the provisions of this bill and I do not feel, with the greatest of respect, that anything will be gained by my sitting down and spending time studying this bill further.

I can tell you that because of my background I am familiar with the subject. I certainly may not be familiar with it to the extent that many of you here are, and I will be the first to admit that. In my earlier career I spent a number of years as a crown attorney and as defence counsel. I believe I understand the fundamental issues contained in this legislation and can tell you quite openly, frankly and honestly that I agree with the legislation before you. I have no problems with the provisions contained in Bill C-67.

As far as passage at this time is concerned, it is my intention to discuss this upon securing third reading by the Senate. I intend to contact the new house leader and, if required, the necessary members of cabinet to try, to the best of my ability, to make the arrangements for a necessary sitting of the House of Commons this summer so that, indeed, Royal Assent can be given.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, we have a new house leader. He, as a member of cabinet, is in Saskatoon attending a meeting this week, and it was not possible to discuss this matter with him. He, as have I, has just taken up his new duties. Mr. Chairman, I can give you and, through you, honourable senators my assurance that I intend to raise this matter with him immediately and to impress upon him, in my opinion, the necessity and urgency for the passage of this legislation, because I firmly believe it pertains to the safety of our citizens and requires speedy action. That is the assurance I give, Mr. Chairman, to honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think that assurance is not a very solid one. The minister is saying that once the bill has received third reading in the Senate, he will then go to his colleagues and say that the bill should be given Royal Assent.

I believe that the minister ought to go to his colleagues before the Senate gives this bill third reading and come back and tell us whether the government is prepared to proceed with Royal Assent; otherwise, it would be quite possible to adjourn the debate until September and proceed with third reading then. The minister would then be pushed, unwillingly possibly, to take what I consider to be the necessary time to consider the reflections of the Senate committee.

I believe it is somewhat disrespectful to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for the minister to come in so breezily and say, "I have mastered this in 24 hours and I am ready to rubber stamp what the previous minister has done." That is his conclusion. My conclusion is that the Senate should, if possible, provide the minister with that opportunity which will necessitate his further examination of these points.

● (1210)

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat the assurance that I have already given, that after passage by the Senate I will immediately proceed to contact the House leader and, if necessary, other members of cabinet to see if a sitting can be arranged so that Royal Assent can be given as expeditiously as possible.

Senator MacEachen: May I ask why the minister will not do that immediately? I understand that the "powerhouses" are meeting today. I understand that the Priorities and Planning Committee is or will be assembled. Why can we not find out before third reading whether there is to be Royal Assent? What the minister is saying is quite clear. He is saying that this bill ought to be passed, that public safety demands its passage, but that he is not sure that the government shares his view, because he will ask after third reading in the Senate whether it is possible to have Royal Assent. Honourable senators, I do not think that that is a very solid assurance. We have had no assurance today that this bill will receive Royal Assent at all until the House of Commons comes back in September. That is the situation. The minister has simply said, "Give me the bill. You go home when you give me the bill and then I will see whether the government will have Royal Assent."

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I join with other honourable senators in welcoming the new Solicitor General. He has all of my sympathy as he embarks on his new duties. I have some knowledge of the problems and the pitfalls awaiting him, and I can easily say that I think it is a no-win position to be in. I want to assure him of all of my co-operation, for whatever that may be worth. I regret that we disagree on these two or three issues contained in Bill C-67, but my disagreement is not reserved for him. I also opposed Mr. Kaplan, who is of my own political faith, with just as much vehemence as I have opposed Mr. Kelleher and his predecessor, so it is nothing personal.

I want to say that I, too, have every sympathy and consideration for the victim, whose plight was eloquently put forward by the Solicitor General. I have dealt with the victims in these cases to the best of my ability. In trying to straighten out lives I have also dealt with the mothers and the wives of inmates who are also, Mr. Minister, victims of crime. Concern over the victims and concern over the violence in our society is not confined to those who support this bill.

I should like to ask the minister his views on the remarks of representatives of his own department when they said, in one report, "It will only delay the bill." Another report of his department stated, "It will only delay the problem; there is no solution." I would ask him, incidentally, to read the views of a victim of violence in Alberta, Mr. Bob Robinson, who says that such a change is only cosmetic, at best, and that you are only going to placate people for the future. I would say to the minister that this is what we do so often. I am not criticizing him; I am criticizing all of us in this room. We are inclined to take what Mr. Outerbridge has described as being only a band-aid approach. The director of parole on the prairies, Mr. Fagnon, has said that we are only tinkering and, if it doesn't work, we will tinker again later. This is the approach we seem to adopt with respect to corrections, and we mislead the public in doing so.

We misled the public when we passed mandatory supervision. There was another solicitor general in the place of Mr. Kelleher at that time making the same argument for mandatory supervision as that which is being made today: We are going to protect the public.

Mandatory supervision was supposed to protect us from the violent offender. We have seen the results of mandatory supervision. We are now going to have legislation that is going to protect me from the mandatory supervision inmates. I have no doubt that if this legislation passes, in two or three years we will have another piece of legislation to protect us from the detainees.

In any event, we pass these laws and we tell the public that we are protecting it, but all we are giving is short-term protection—protection of two or three months. This is not only my view. I can tell the minister that it is the view of representatives of his department and of his employees throughout the regions. It was the view of the former chairman of the National Parole Board, Mr. Outerbridge, when he said:

—the action we are taking (gating) is not going to have long-term or substantial impact on the incidence of violent crime in the community.

One of the minister's predecessors, Mr. Kaplan, said:

It (gating) is a postponement. It may be also a worsening, in my view, of the chances that the community will be safe from him.

Mr. Kaplan said:

Our conviction is that if mandatory supervision was taken away from this group and they were held behind bars until warrant expiry, their crime statistics would be worse.

In the light of all of that evidence, there is great uncertainty respecting what we are doing here. We are passing a bill to placate the public for the moment, but, believe me, it solves no problem whatever—just as mandatory supervision solved no problem whatever. The public will be resentful and will reject us even more. We do a disservice in providing these band-aid solutions, this tinkering, only to broadcast to the public later that we have provided protection. I ask the minister whether he would give us his views with respect to this uncertainty that has been expressed by so many witnesses, by so many of his employees and by reports of his department. Would he care to give us his views with respect to this uncertainty that is prevailing?

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I would like to clear up any misunderstanding if the honourable senator thought that I had implied in any of my remarks that he was not concerned about the victims of these crimes. I know that that is not the case. I know that he, too, is just as concerned as anyone else about the victims. I would not want to have it implied or suggested that he did not share that concern with everyone else.

If I may go to the heart of his question, honourable senators, when he said that we should not be attempting to bring this legislation in just to placate the public, I can only say in the strongest terms that we are not bringing this legislation in to placate the public. We are bringing this legislation in to protect the public. We have a deep concern for the safety of the public. We can only look at the statistics. In 1983 only eleven prisoners were gated, as the term is used, before the court intervened and said, "No, they must indeed be released." Of those eleven, upon their release six went out and were involved in further crimes against the public—six of the eleven. I believe that is a very telling statistic and one that we should be concerned about.

[Senator Hastings.]

• (1220)

I would be the first to admit, Mr. Chairman, that there is no perfect solution. Since the earliest history of mankind, when we started to control violent behaviour in our society, we have been searching for the right and perfect solution. I do not think that a right and perfect solution is possible. At least, to date the best minds in the world have not found it. But simply because we have not found it is not to suggest that we should stop trying or that we should not impose a solution that the majority of people think is the best possible solution at this time, although not perfect—because we must always keep in mind the safety of the public. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the House—a duly elected body, elected by the people—after a good deal of discussion, of debate, of hearing the views of witnesses across the country, decided that at this time this is indeed the best solution that we can come up with in order to control those people. I accept the opinion of the House; I accept the opinion of the public in that respect; and it is my strong belief that we should proceed with the bill as written and as approved by the House.

Senator Hastings: If I understand the minister, he accepts the opinion of the House and the opinion of the public, as misguided as it may be, but he is rejecting the opinion of his own department, of the officers who work for him, who have dedicated years of service—such as a man like Mr. Outerbridge, who is one of the best correctional men in Canada. That is the minister's right, if that is his opinion.

Concerning the eleven gated inmates, you correctly stated, Mr. Minister, that six of them, when released by the court, committed further crimes. I am glad that you did not say "violent crimes". I believe that only one was returned for committing a violent crime. But what the minister did not speak about was the fact that five were able to complete their sentence in freedom, which represents 45 per cent—which is just about the rate of misguessing or misprediction of the Parole Board. It is wrong about 50 per cent of the time. There is not much consideration given to the five who would have been kept in custody because of the ingenious procedure of gating which will now be continued as a result of the bill. I guess the difference between you and me, sir, is that when we are talking about the 150, if I apply 50 per cent there will be 75 inmates who will be involved. I am not criticizing. It is simply that it is impossible to predict future human behaviour. It is an untried science and, according to all of the information we have available, we are wrong about 50 per cent of the time.

If this bill passes, it means that there will be 150 inmates involved. I notice that the figure has crept up. For a few days it was 100, but now it is up to 150. I rather suspect, Mr. Minister, that it will be about 200 or 300, and 50 per cent of 300 is 150 men who will be kept in custody because of the inability to predict accurately—and those are the 150 about whom I am concerned, and the reaction of those 150 who have been unjustly detained and confined in custody.

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Chairman, I understand that of the eleven who were released six of them did, in fact, commit other crimes. It is my understanding and information that they were reconvicted for crimes against the person, and those are indeed the kinds of crimes and offences that we have set out in the schedule to the amendments. As I said earlier, I will be the first to admit that nothing is perfect in this world and that undoubtedly errors have been made; and so long as man exists on earth errors will continue to be made. But in this particular case I believe that if errors are to be made, then I would prefer that the errors be made in favour of the safety of the public—and that is my firm belief, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Hastings: I can only conclude from the minister's remarks that it does not matter that 75 men will remain in custody. We are going to have 75 who would commit a violent offence—and that is the price that we are going to have to pay. Seventy-five men will be kept in for 11 months, as the average term, while we keep in for that same period of time the other 75 who will likely commit a violent offence. That does not take into consideration the fact that the ones who will commit a violent offence will be out in 11 months, and the ones who have been unjustly kept in for 11 months will also get out. All of the 150 will be worse off and a bigger problem for society when they do get out.

However, I accept that it is the view of the minister that it is worth the price—that it is worth the price that we may have a much bigger problem at the end of the term. I cannot say much more. That is the whole basis of the legislation. In that respect, I again join Mr. Outerbridge and others in saying that this legislation involves the short term. It is merely tinkering. It will give us 11 months' protection, but at the end of that period we will be back into the same situation. We will be going round and round again and the incidents of violence will have no effect whatsoever on the public.

I now turn to the decision-making process. Mr. Minister, both you and Senator Nurgitz must have had the same speech writer, because you have both said that you believe that the board is the agency most capable of making these decisions because it makes thousands of such decisions. But, Mr. Minister, it does not make any decisions like this. It has made only 11 decisions, but it has never made any decisions like this. Being a releasing body, the board makes decisions on who will be released, and not who will be kept in jail. This is where you are placing in further jeopardy the credibility of the Parole Board.

Honourable senators, I can never understand why we cannot reach the conclusion that the Parole Board should look after parole. This is how the credibility of the board is being destroyed, by you and me and other legislators, namely, by asking this board to do work that it is incapable of doing. We have piled on to it the administration of mandatory supervision, and it has to take all of the criticism directed against that. The board must hold hearings with respect to revocation of mandatory supervision. It must deal with the Criminal Records Act. All this is because each successive minister thought that it was the logical body to carry out these functions. When we studied the parole process, we said that it was the most logical, reasonable and best way of releasing inmates into society. If we left the Parole Board to do that function—and it does a very good job of it, contrary to all the criticism it has received—they would be doing what they should be doing and what they were created for, assessing whether the best inmates can be released into society and how quickly. Making decisions as to who should be released is much easier than making decisions about who should remain incarcerated. Determining who will not commit violence is much easier than determining who will commit violence.

● (1230)

So, I suggest, Mr. Minister, that the board has not made these decisions—at least up until now, and only then if we give them the authority. It is not quite factual to say that the board has made such decisions and that therefore it is well qualified. The chairman of the board repeated before the Senate committee that the board has no magical powers and has no ability to predict violence accurately any more than anyone else. I believe that if the truth were known, the National Parole Board does not want this job, because their whole purpose, as I have said, is to release inmates. By giving the board this job it will damage the credibility of the parole process and of the Parole Board. It is just not capable of doing the job. The job would be much better done by judicial review than by this board which, time after time, has taken on additional assignments until it has no credibility with the inmates or with the staff.

Mr. Minister, Senator Nurgitz said, and you repeated it—as I said, you two seem to have the same speech writers—that the judicial decision was outside the role of the courts. We ask the courts to make decisions with respect to preventive detention of dangerous offenders. The courts will be making decisions with respect to those serving life or 25 years when they come up for 15-year review. These are administrative decisions that we have felt comfortable designating to or being persuaded that they can be made by the court. Surely the court is the only body that should be making such decisions with respect to the freedom of subjects—not the board. I do not think that the minister is correct in saying that such decisions are outside the role of the judiciary or, in other words, that we have never thought of this idea over the years as we have discussed the matter.

I come back to that decision-making process and repeat what my leader has said, that the Senate has never wavered in its point of view. In 1974 we conducted an extensive review of parole in Canada under the then chairman of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, Senator Carl Goldenberg. We said in that report that the Parole Board should not be the sole decision-maker. We repeated that point in 1983 in our discussions on Bill S-32, and we repeated it again in our report of May 14, 1986. The Senate has never wavered in that view. Therefore, I must ask myself: Why should we waver now, and why should I surrender my conscience on that point just because the minister has asked me to do so? So, I ask the minister, would you consider, as did your predecessor, the Honourable Robert Kaplan, in 1983, an amendment to the bill to move this review process to judicial resolution?

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Chairman, the short answer is no, I will not. I shall follow in the steps of my immediate predecessor, the Honourable Perrin Beatty. What we have here is the classic case of where we have a problem—and I think that everyone would agree that we have a problem—and someone will have to be nominated, so to speak, to deal with the problem. Our government, after careful consideration by a duly elected body, has decided that the best way to deal with this problem is through the use of the Parole Board. I think it is quite fair to say that the Parole Board presently makes decisions respecting and restricting the freedom of inmates. Every time parole is revoked, which is a function of the Parole Board, all remission is lost; in other words, the rest of the mandatory supervision is suspended. Every release decision presently made by the Parole Board is indeed based upon risk assessment. This will continue to be the major consideration under the power that we now wish to give to the board.

I would also like to point out to the honourable senator that the board, of its own volition, started gating. Gating was not started at the request or direction of a solicitor general. There has been a great deal of debate as to who should have this authority. As I say, the government is elected to act after due consideration or after hearing from all parties. I am sure that all members of this chamber would agree on that point. Indeed, a great deal of opportunity has been afforded to all parties and we have now made our decision, as the people expect us to do. That is what governments are elected for, to make decisions. We have given final reading to this bill and, therefore, I am not in any position at this time to give reconsideration to moving the process from the Parole Board to the courts, nor do I personally feel that I should.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, on this point I draw to the attention of the minister the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, dated May 14, 1986. That report was submitted on behalf of the committee by Senator Lewis, for Senator Nurgitz, the deputy chairman. I think I understand what the minister's decision is. He has said that he will not accept an amendment that would constitute the court as the body for deciding the question of detention, that in his view this responsibility should be placed with the Parole Board. That is the issue. I want to understand the reasons for that stand taken by the minister and the government. I understand that the decision is final, but I want to understand it because, while it is true that governments are elected to make decisions, presumably legislative bodies exist to pass legislation, to reject it or, indeed, to amend it. However, simply to say that governments are elected to make decisions does not remove from the Senate the responsibility to deal with this legislation and approve it, reject it or amend it. I understand that the Senate committee was clear and unanimous on this point, and I quote:

● (1240)

The first issue has to do with the question of what is the appropriate body to make decisions with respect to the detention of allegedly 'dangerous' inmates beyond the date of their eligibility for release on mandatory supervision.

[Senator Hastings.]

The question is: Which body should make that decision? It is not only a fact, honourable senators, that the Senate committee as recently as May of this year made a unanimous recommendation on this matter; it is also a fact that with respect to Bill S-32, passed by the Senate on June 9, 1983, the Senate as a body decided that this decision-making authority should rest with the courts and not with the Parole Board. Therefore, it was not just a committee of this Parliament; it was the Senate itself which passed a bill designating the court as the decision-making body. Let me quote further:

It is the opinion of the Committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32, An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act (on June 6, 1983 in the First Session of the Thirty-Second Parliament), namely, that the courts, rather than the National Parole Board, should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates who would otherwise be eligible for release on mandatory supervision.

I am quoting from the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs dated May 14, 1986, which states that a bill, Bill S-32, was passed by the Senate giving effect to a principle, namely, that the court rather than the National Parole Board should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates, et cetera. I was not a member of this chamber when all the Senate came together in support of that principle, but many of you were here when that bill was passed. Senator Nurgitz keeps nodding and objecting, but his report states that Bill S-32, incorporating this principle, was adopted by the Senate. Therefore, honourable senators, we are faced not only with a committee report of this Parliament but with a bill passed by the Senate and sent to the House of Commons saying that the court should have this responsibility. It is not a whim; it is not "Hastings Incorporated"; it was the whole Senate that passed a bill in the last Parliament saying that it should be the court who should have this responsibility.

The Senate committee then reconvened and repeated its conclusion, and the government says "no." The government has said "no" once through Solicitor General Beatty and now through the new Solicitor General, an instant decision-maker. The government is saying "no" to a decision made by the Senate as a whole—the Liberals, Conservatives and Independents.

Therefore, in laying that foundation, I ask why the court should not have this job. What I really want to ask, with reference to public safety, is whether anyone believes that if the court exercised this authority public safety would be affected any more than it might be affected by the exercise of the judgment of the Parole Board.

I understand that vague term, "It is more appropriate . . ." Bureaucrats and others—including politicians—when forced to state a reason when they have none often say, "It is more appropriate . . .”—whatever that means. They say, “It is more appropriate . . .” In this case, the “appropriateness” favours the National Parole Board. To me, that is vague. I want to know why it is better for the board to have this authority rather than the court. If the minister were to say to me, “I fear that if the court had this authority, they would endanger public safety or they would be reckless or heedless,” then I would pause. However, there is no question here of avoiding the responsibility of making a decision. A decision will be made. The question is: Will it be made by the Parole Board or by the court? The Senate passed a bill saying that it should be made by the court. Furthermore, the Senate has always held that view. Not only Grits; even Tories have held that view—

Senator Molgat: Even them!

Senator MacEachen:—which should impress the minister.

Senator Frith: If nothing else has to date.

Senator MacEachen: What reason exists in the mind of the government to turn aside the total wisdom of the Senate, that chamber of sober second thought, now exercised so frequently? Why should the Senate now say, “We were all wrong in 1983”? Why should all the senators who were here in 1983, including Senator Hicks, Senator Molgat, Senator Frith, Senator Denis, Senator Nurgitz and others, now say, “We were wrong”? I have not heard a single reason, except the one dealing with “the appropriateness”. Later today in our caucus we will be considering what we are to do about this bill, and I would like to know whether there is a good reason for this change. Certainly, it can be a question of fashion; one’s taste can change or it can be a difference of judgment.

Senator Frith: Or it is caprice.

Senator MacEachen: One can say, “In my judgment, it is better that the Parole Board do this,” while in another man’s judgment it should be the court’s responsibility, and that would be reasonable. In that event, one could certainly judge that situation. However, I am wondering whether there is a deeper reason rather than merely judgment. In other words, I am asking whether public safety is involved in this decision. Would it suffer or be better, or would you say that the judges would be more reckless than the members of the Parole Board?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I would like to add something here, because much has been made out of two decisions of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. The decision made to amend Bill S-32 was a decision wholly disagreed with by the then Solicitor General, Mr. Kaplan. He took back that decision of the Senate to the government, of which a senior member at that time was the now Leader of the Opposition, and from June 1983 to June 1984 we never again heard of the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act. Honourable senators, that is the reality, so that the decision of the Senate that the court, and not the National Parole Board, should have the authority was rejected out of hand by the Honourable Robert Kaplan, the then Solicitor General, for reasons which he gave us.

I recall at that time as well that when the Senate committee met in June 1983, it was not a unanimous decision of that committee. In other words, there were some dissenters to it, and the dissenters were on the other side of this chamber. Therefore, I merely want to point out, honourable senators, that this great decision that we have been sitting here for some time waxing eloquent about was a decision made by the Senate committee which was rejected by the then government of the day, and that rejection is evidenced by one year of never again having that bill introduced after it was amended in the Senate.

● (1250)

Senator MacEachen: I must not permit Senator Nurgitz to obfuscate the clarity of his report which we received on May 14, and which stated that the Senate had passed Bill S-32. I was not arguing what the government should do; I was arguing what this body ought to do today.

Senator Nurgitz: I was arguing what the government did not do.

Senator MacEachen: But that is a new argument. Confront your own conscience about your support of Bill S-32 and not the conscience of a government which is no longer in existence. I am not debating what the government did. I think the senator is wrong on that point as well, but I am not debating that. The fact of the matter is that despite what Senator Nurgitz is saying now, the Senate passed a bill incorporating the principle that the court should make this decision. What the government did with it is another matter. What this government might do with a decision of the Senate is unknown to me and is another matter. I am asking: What is the duty of the Senate? To swallow itself? To accommodate the government, or to take a stand on principle?

Senator Nurgitz may have great difficulty in giving any credit to the former government, but that is not the issue; the issue is what we do about this particular question in light of the Senate committee recommendation of the judicial determination of detention. In asking what we ought to do we ought to remind ourselves that the Senate has dealt with this in the most solemn way possible open to a legislative body, by making a decision through the passage of a bill. The Senate did that in 1983. It may be teetering on the verge of swallowing itself.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of Senator Nurgitz, I just wish to restate what happened in 1983. Bill S-32 was introduced in the Senate in December 1982. It was immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs with the idea that it would be passed by Christmas because, as was said then, “We have to save lives.”

Honourable senators will recall that as we studied that bill, we found some faults with it. As the committee continued studying the bill in the months of January, February and March, the committee found faults with which all of the members of the committee agreed. Senator Nurgitz was a member of that committee, as was Senator Flynn and others. The one thing all of the members of the committee agreed upon was that it should be the court that makes that decision. We pleaded with the minister, a more reasonable minister at that time, and on May 24, 1983, the Deputy Solicitor General, Mr. Gibson, stated before the committee:

Thank you, Madam Chairman. I have indicated to you that the minister has authorized me to indicate to you this afternoon that as a result of further consideration of representations made by honourable senators during the last meeting of this committee at which the minister appeared and as a result of a number of discussions since that time, the Solicitor General has given further consideration to the draft amendments regarding gating which he tabled in the committee. You will recall that some discussion at that time centred around the locus of authority to make the gating decision and the nature of appeal or judicial review which flowed from a decision of the National Parole Board with respect to gating. Following those considerations the Solicitor General, with the agreement of his colleagues, is prepared to modify those motions to amend to vest gating authority in a superior court of the province in which the gated inmate is incarcerated, rather than in the National Parole Board.

So, it was done as a result of the committee meetings and the recommendation to the minister. You said two years later. That is three months of consideration. So, it was as a result of the work of the committee that the more reasonable minister accepted that recommendation, that it should be made by a court and not by the National Parole Board, which was "more appropriate". The National Parole Board is always "more appropriate" when dealing with inmates. It is certainly "more appropriate" to make a decision in the back room of a penitentiary with an inmate having no counsel. It is "more appropriate" when the accuser can decide whether the inmate should have counsel or a friend present, and all the counsel or friend can do is, at the end of the hearing, make a statement. It is "more appropriate" to make these decisions in that way with no court record. The decision makers do not have to be accountable to anyone. I reject that as I rejected it in 1983. The appropriate decision-making authority is the court, and I will continue to discuss it with my colleagues in that sense.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I did not mean to mislead the honourable senator. The amendment to Bill S-32 was made in June 1983. From June 1983 until June 1984, when that administration was still in office, no bill was presented. That was my point; one year, no bill.

Senator Frith: What has that to do with our decision?

Senator Nurgitz: I thought that Senator Hastings was correcting my timing.

Senator Hastings: The bill was approved by the Senate and sent to the House of Commons. It did not get passed by the House of Commons. The report was adopted by the Senate.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, we have been reminded several times during the course of this discussion that this is not a new issue. Quotations have been placed on the record from our former colleague, Senator Goldenberg, from 1974, and at various times since then. Bill S-32 has also been referred to. Since that time there have been at least two solicitors general and two governments. This is not a situation in which the historic role of the Senate as a place of sober second thought really comes into play, because, notwithstanding the recommendations that our various committees have made at various times, and notwithstanding the bill to which my honourable friend refers, governments—and it is the current government taking the responsibility—and the House of Commons of Canada, having had an opportunity to reflect on those recommendations, have decided otherwise. That is the situation that is before us today.

[Senator Hastings:]

That is one good reason I believe all honourable senators should reflect on our role in modern times. In modern times we have tried to influence the course of legislation and the course of public policy not by exercising to the full our theoretical Constitutional powers but by way of quiet diplomacy and by way of persuasion. It will be clear to my honourable friends opposite that in this case—and I am not really discussing the merits of the arguments put forward so passionately and eloquently by Senator Hastings—it is very clearly going to take a little longer to persuade, if they are going to persuade, the government and the other place as to what they regard as the wisdom of their position on this matter.

It has been a very, very long time since the Senate has attempted to exercise its full theoretical Constitutional powers on a matter of legislation, and I would hope that honourable senators would reflect over the lunch hour, and when my friends are meeting in caucus, on the modern role of the Senate, which is one, as I said, of quiet diplomacy. It is one of persuasion rather than resort to the majority in the Senate when the elected majority in the other place, after reflection, has taken a different position. I simply place that thought before honourable senators for their consideration over the lunch hour.

• (1300)

In conclusion, I wish to thank the minister for having appeared in the committee this morning to explain his bill and for answering the questions of honourable senators with such candour and forthrightness.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I will not deal at this moment with Senator Murray's elaboration of the modern role of the Senate, which I find to be quite unacceptable and evidence of the transformation that suddenly occurs when a person becomes a minister. That protective attitude immediately emerges and former instincts of robustness are then imprisoned.

Senator Frith: An occupational disease.

Senator MacEachen: So, I will deal with that another time.

However, the minister will not be with us this afternoon, and I want to know, concerning the court versus the Parole Board, whether it is a question of public safety at all, or if it is a question of appropriateness.

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is possible to give a definitive answer to that. I think the honourable senator knows that if I feel I can give a clear answer I will.

I think it is a combination of matters, but basically what it comes down to is that the House of Commons studied the bill for many months, heard the evidence of witnesses, evaluated that evidence, evaluated the appropriateness of the court versus the Parole Board, and decided on the basis of the evidence that, indeed, it was their judgment that this could best be, and should indeed be, handled by the Parole Board.

I cannot get into the minds of the members of the House of Commons. Having sat there for only two years, I doubt that if I sat there another thirty I could ever get into the minds of all of the members and what made them reach their decisions. But I think it is fair to say that they did make a reasoned and rational decision after hearing all the evidence.

Senator MacEachen: Well, I understand the minister's principal argument is that the House of Commons has examined this and reached a certain conclusion—

Senator Murray: Having considered our opinions, having considered our view.

Senator MacEachen:—and that is what he puts before the Senate—that they have reached a conclusion. There are a number of factors involved, but the principal one is the fact that the House of Commons has deliberated. It is true that the House of Commons has deliberated—and no one has more respect for the House of Commons than I do, and I am hoping to develop and maintain some respect for the Senate as well—but it is not appropriate, I think, to state that simply because the House of Commons has reached a conclusion that conclusion should automatically be accepted by the Senate.

Senator Frith: They did not feel that way about our conclusions, apparently.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, having said that, I want to ask a question on another point: Is the situation any firmer on Royal Assent now than it was an hour ago?

Mr. Kelleher: I will come to your last question later, but I would like to affirm to honourable senators that indeed the House of Commons, in arriving at its decision, was well aware of your interim report of May 1986 and did, in fact, consider your interim report and your decision that indeed it should be the court. So, it is not as though the House of Commons made its decision in the absence of your interim decision. That was before our house. We were aware of it and it was taken into consideration.

With respect to the last question put to me by the honourable senator, again the simple, short answer is no. During the course of this hour, which I have enjoyed very much and have found instructive, the debate has not been such that it would in any way make me change my mind.

Senator MacEachen: On Royal Assent?

Mr. Kelleher: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: We have no assurance that Royal Assent will take place before September.

Mr. Kelleher: What I have said I will repeat, Mr. Chairman, that upon passage of this measure by the Senate—which I hope will be forthcoming—I will immediately contact the house leader and, if necessary, pursue it with the appropriate members of cabinet to do everything I can to see that the House is called back to obtain Royal Assent.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have two quick points because I know the minister wants to get away. It seems to me that as a principle, the question of our taking into account the fact that the House of Commons has deliberated would apply to the House of Commons to take into account that we have deliberated. So, that ends up as a standoff, it seems to me.

Senator Murray: Which they did.

Senator Frith: Yes. We are now considering what we should do, and they may take into account again that we have deliberated, and so on, and we may take into account that they have deliberated. That is a standoff, it seems to me.

The other question I want to ask, which I think is important, is further to what the Leader of the Opposition has just asked. I think I do have it clear, but I take it that the minister does not intend to make a phone call to western Canada until he hears that the bill has been passed. Is that correct?

Mr. Kelleher: Yes.

Senator Haidasz: Too bad!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the time is 1.15 p.m. It has been suggested that we could have the committee rise and report its progress and ask for leave to have it sit again later this day. I think it would be more appropriate to recess for an hour and come back at the call of the bell at 2 o'clock than to have the committee rise, and so on. Perhaps we could allow the committee to sit again when we come back at 2 o'clock.

Senator MacEachen: At 2.15 p.m.

Senator Doody: 2.15 p.m.?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Doody: So, Mr. Chairman, with the Senate's permission we will now adjourn until 2.15 p.m., to the call of the bell.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 3.00 p.m. the sitting of the Committee of the Whole was resumed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, unfortunately, the minister is unable to attend this afternoon, and Senator Nurgitz, the mover of the bill, will answer any questions.

Senator Frith: Nurgitz for minister!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, before the bill is put to the Committee of the Whole clause by clause, I wish to give notice that I intend to move an amendment to the bill. The amendment will be as follows: That clause 5 of the bill be amended by adding immediately after line 5—

The Chairman: Which bill?

Senator Hastings: Bill C-67. Bill C-68 is not too bad.

In any event, my proposed amendment will be:

An inmate who is in custody pursuant to an order made under subsection (4)—

That is, an order made by the Parole Board.

may appeal against that order to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction on any ground of law or fact or of mixed law and fact.

Senator Doody: Could we have a copy of the amendment?

Senator Hastings: It pertains to clause 5. I merely wanted to give notice that when we reach clause 5 I will introduce that amendment.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we are dealing with Bill C-67. Shall clause 1 of the bill carry?

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the sponsor a question. This provision raises the number of members on the National Parole Board to 36. As I understand clause 1, dealing with section 3, the board will now be comprised of 36 members. As I understand the situation, the board has members in the regions of the Correctional Service of Canada. How many members of the board serve in each region?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, in the province of British Columbia there are three members of the board serving; in the prairie provinces there are three members of the board serving; in the province of Ontario, there are four members serving; in the province of Quebec, there are three members serving; and in the Atlantic provinces, there are three members serving. Although that may seem all very good, the arithmetic is not very good.

Senator Hastings: How many are located in the Ottawa office?

Senator Nurgitz: There are four in the Ottawa office.

Senator Hastings: As appeal?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes.

Senator Hastings: That makes 20.

Senator Nurgitz: Under the existing legislation, there are currently three vacancies.

Senator Hastings: How long have those vacancies existed?

Senator Nurgitz: I do not have that information.

Senator Hastings: I wonder why we are increasing the board by ten members when we do not seem capable of keeping the vacancies filled.

Senator Nurgitz: I think the increasing number is self-evident in the hope and expectation of getting some legislation through so that there will be a greater caseload for those members to deal with.

Senator Hastings: I can assure the honourable senator that with the present caseload the board members are kept very busy. It seems to me that the government cannot keep the vacancies filled, some of which have existed for years. Why are we in such a hell-bent need to increase the board by ten members?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I do not have a ready answer. I do understand that the government is attempting to fill the vacancies and that they will be filled as soon as possible.

Senator Hastings: When Mr. Outerbridge appeared before the House of Commons committee, he indicated that members had to be appointed fairly quickly and be trained for the job. Is there a shortage of capable, skilled men in corrections? Why are we appointing people who are unskilled and require training? Would it not be much more of an advantage to the government to seek professional men in the field who are now in the service? We have many professional people in the Correctional Service of Canada and in the parole service who are quite capable, knowledgeable and able to serve on that board. We would not have to waste government money in training people for the job.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Senator Haidasz: In relation to clause 2, I should like to ask our witness whether he can give us the number of inmates who are imprisoned for more than two years and those who are imprisoned for less than two years.

Senator Nurgitz: I take it the honourable senator is asking how many inmates are inmates of federal institutions serving sentences of two years or greater.

Senator Haidasz: In essence, that is right.

Senator Nurgitz: There are approximately 12,000 men and women.

Senator Haidasz: Twelve thousand men and women who are imprisoned for longer than two years?

Senator Nurgitz: Two years or more, not "longer than two years."

Senator Haidasz: Twelve thousand such prisoners.

Senator Nurgitz: There are approximately 12,000. As honourable senators will appreciate, that number changes daily, if not hourly.

Senator Haidasz: Could our witness also tell us what is the cost to the taxpayers of Canada for keeping one such prisoner incarcerated for one year?

Senator Nurgitz: I have no idea, but I will certainly make every effort to obtain that information.

Senator Haidasz: Could the officials whisper the answer to Senator Nurgitz?

Senator Nurgitz: There is a guesstimate of $40,000 per year per prisoner.

Senator Hastings: Perhaps I may add to that answer for the benefit of my colleague. It varies according to the type of custody. The least expensive type of custody is maximum security which costs about $22,000 a year; and the most expensive type of custody is for those who are detained in psychiatric centres where it costs up to about $120,000 a year.

Senator Haidasz: With reference to the population of inmates incarcerated in our federal penitentiaries, is the number increasing or decreasing in this decade?

Senator Nurgitz: The number is increasing in this decade.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, could the honourable gentleman explain to me what the rationale is for having inmates who are sentenced to two years or more sent to federal penitentiaries and those who are sentenced to two years or less in provincial penitentiaries?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, my understanding is that there is not a rationale and that it is a historical factor that was considered at the time, somewhere about the formation of the first British North America Act, in determining what responsibility the provinces would have in the keeping of prisoners and what responsibility the federal government would have.

You must remember that in institutions in which the provinces have prisoners there are many prisoners who are there for non-criminal offences, that is, they are not there as a result of breaches of the Criminal Code or the various drug offence acts. They are incarcerated for breaches of provincial statutes, for example, provincial liquor laws and offences of that nature. But there is no jurisprudence or philosophical meaning behind the two years and two years less a day distinction.

● (1510)

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Senator Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I have a question respecting the mandatory conditions in clause 4. Can the witness tell us whether the retroactivity applicable in this bill has been checked with the Department of Justice in terms of its constitutionality, especially as regards the Charter of Rights and Fundamental Freedoms?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I am sure that when Senator Haidasz rereads the Minutes of the Proceedings of the committee, he will see that that question was put specifically to the minister, who stated that an opinion had been obtained from the Department of Justice indicating that the retrospectivity of this bill does not in any way breach or violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to move an amendment to clause 5. I move:

That clause 5 of the Bill be amended by adding immediately after line 5 on page 10 the following:

(8) An inmate who is in custody pursuant to an order made under subsection (4) may appeal against that order to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is moved that clause 5 of the bill be amended by adding immediately after line 5 on page 10—

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, on a point of order. We do not have the French version of the proposed amendment, although in the circumstances, there may be a good reason why it could not be submitted to us. I also realize that my colleagues are entirely free to present amendments in the language of their choice. However, the interpreters do not even have copies of the English version so they can render it correctly in French. Could we have the text of the amendment and the bill sent over to the interpreters so that they can provide an interpretation that conforms to the letter and the intent of the legislation we are trying to amend?

The Chairman: Would the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod be so kind as to provide interpreters and senators with copies of the French version of the amendment?

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I am sorry it was not available in French, but I think the document will be translated in a few minutes.

[English]

Perhaps we could stand clause 5 and return to it when the translation is ready.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we stand clause 5?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Senator Hastings: Could the witness provide an explanation of the implications of clause 9? It is to be found at page 16 of the bill.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, my understanding of the reason behind clause 9 is that the section as presently worded allows for the remitting of any statutory remission which was previously taken away from the inmate. The proposed amendment would make any such remitting subject to two exceptions: First, where a detention order is made against an inmate, he or she forfeits all remissions standing to his or her credit. That remission shall not be recredited, pursuant to section 23. Second, where an inmate is subject to one-shot mandatory supervision and that is revoked, he or she loses all remission standing to that inmate's credit and that remission shall not thereafter be recredited, pursuant to section 23.

As honourable senators will recall, there will be identified amongst the 12,000 inmates certain persons for whom one-shot mandatory supervision will apply because they have been designated as risks. This clause has to do with the recrediting of their time after they are back in.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I want to be perfectly clear on this. The clause applies to an inmate who has been referred to the board for gating, as I understand it, where the board has decided not to gate him; in that case, he is recredited with his remission and released on mandatory supervision. Am I correct in my understanding?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes.

Senator Hastings: Should his mandatory supervision be revoked and should he be returned to custody, he can no longer earn remission. Is that correct?

Senator Nurgitz: That is correct. That is the limiting focus of one-shot mandatory supervision, which was originally to apply to the population of 12,000 inmates. It will now apply to—

Senator Hastings: It will now apply to 500.

Senator Nurgitz:—whatever number.

Senator Hastings: Suppose that an inmate has been referred to the board as being allegedly dangerous, yet the board finds he is not dangerous. The board will recredit his remission and release him on mandatory supervision. When he comes back, why can he not earn remission?

Senator Nurgitz: I think that the Honourable Senator Hastings is missing the point. There is the general fear that a portion of the prison population—I believe it is a small number in comparison to the whole—is potentially dangerous. But, although these inmates are designated as such, a hearing must still be held to determine that that is so. Surely my friend is in favour of that.

Senator Hastings: Yes.

Senator Nurgitz: A person who has a record of some sort of violence while in prison, in addition to a violent criminal record of his own, might show some predictability of further violence. But at the hearing the Parole Board in its wisdom will decide that perhaps there is not quite enough evidence to revoke that person's mandatory supervision, so the last third of his sentence may be served outside. That person has already been looked at sideways, if you like.

● (1520)

The situation is that the Parole Board will now take a chance, but just one chance. I do not know of any other way to put it, but that really is what it amounts to. That does not affect the other 11,000 or 12,000 inmates, who will go out on mandatory supervision, perhaps commit a breach of the terms of their mandatory supervision, in which case they will come back in and they will be treated like everyone else in that they again earn their remission, and so on.

Senator Hastings: But my proposal is: Why cannot he be treated like everyone else? The honourable senator is quite correct. He has gone before the board, which has decided that he is not dangerous and it has let him out. He has been given back his remission and he goes out on mandatory supervision. When he returns, he can no longer earn remission. Why is he not treated like everyone else? You said that at the hearing he is the same as everyone else—

Senator Nurgitz: No. With respect, the honourable senator is trying to put words in my mouth. I am not saying that he is like everyone else. I am saying he is not like everyone else. I am saying that there is some possibility of some risk. I recall Senator Fairbairn's telling us—and I do not want to invoke Senator Fairbairn's name as a supporter for my side, because I believe that she is a supporter of your side, Senator Hastings—that she met an inmate who was talking about having to go to Winnipeg to kill someone. Perhaps at a hearing it would be decided that if that inmate could be kept away from that location, there would not be a danger—but here is a targeted person, if you like, a person with a propensity for violence. He is not the same as the other 11,000 or 12,000.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 15 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we revert to clause 5?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is moved by Senator Hastings, seconded by Senator Petten, that clause 5 of the bill be amended by adding immediately after line 5 on page 10 the following:

(8) An inmate who is in custody pursuant to an order made under subsection (4) may appeal against that order to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak to the amendment. We have discussed who is the best authority to make decisions with respect to keeping men in custody ad infinitum. We have heard the words of the minister this morning that he would not entertain an amendment vesting that authority in a court of competent jurisdiction, where an inmate would have the benefit of counsel, of cross-examination and of appeal. The minister and the government feel that it is more practical to have these decisions made by a board—political appointees—made, as I said this morning, in the back rooms of penitentiaries, where the accuser decides whether or not the inmate should have counsel “or a friend to assist me”; where the accuser decides what evidence shall be given to the inmate to examine; and where there is no appeal.

Honourable senators, it is repugnant to me to have these decisions made when it affects the freedom of an individual who has earned his remission. I have argued to the best of my ability to impress upon my colleagues my belief that the court is the best forum in which that decision should be made.

I am putting forward for the consideration—and I hope approval—of honourable senators an amendment to the clause, which is very simply stated. Any inmate who was ordered detained under the act would have the benefit of appealing that detention order to a court. It is just a simple appeal from an administrative tribunal to the court, where the inmate would have the benefit of counsel, where he would have the benefit of the information that is used against him; and if—which may be practical—the board has information which it does not wish to show to the inmate or his counsel, at least a judge will make that decision and will be a better arbitrator of what should be shown to the inmate. The judge would then either confirm or deny the decision of the tribunal.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, as has already been stated, it is the view of the government that the Parole Board, dealing on a daily if not hourly basis with the question of risk, is really in a position to make a further assessment of risk. The court, whose normal responsibility is finding people either guilty or not guilty, is in a different situation. As I mentioned in my comments earlier, the court determines what the length of the sentence should be. The administration of that sentence falls within the correctional system, within the Department of the Solicitor General—and, I am suggesting to honourable senators, it should properly fall within the purview of the National Parole Board.

I should mention, for the information of honourable senators, that there is a section of the Federal Court Act—section 18—which provides for certain procedural safeguards for all matters affecting the rights of individuals who come before administrative tribunals under federal jurisdiction. That section does provide a form of protection. Any hearings that are held in contravention of those rules allow for an appeal to the Federal Court. I repeat that there are judicial safeguards already within the system, as set out in the Federal Court Act. I have just been reading the proceedings of our committee held in April 1983 where the then Solicitor General made a rather impassioned plea by saying that to remove this authority from the Parole Board would indicate a lack of confidence in that body which has, I understand, not a bad track record over the last number of years.

• (1530)

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, with respect to the observations of my distinguished colleague, the court, too, deals with the liberty of the subject and renders on an ongoing basis thousands and thousands of decisions in that regard. All appeals to the Federal Court must be on the basis of law. That is, on such questions as: Did they hold the hearing properly? Did they hold it on the right day? Did the individual involved receive notice? And so on. They do not deal with issues of fact. I do not think it is any reflection on the Parole Board if their decisions are appealable. I do not understand how it would be considered a reflection on the board. The individual is entitled to counsel, as I said, at the hearing and any administrative board should be able to withstand the public scrutiny of a judge as to the decision it has reached.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, before the committee votes on this amendment, there are some things that I believe I should say to you as the Leader of the Government in this place. It has been a very long time since the Senate has taken the initiative to amend in any substantial way any important government bill coming to us from the House of Commons. The last occasion of that kind that I can recall took place during the days of the Diefenbaker government when a customs and excise bill was amended by the Liberal majority in the Senate. The fate of the customs and excise bill was that when it returned to the government, the government chose not to proceed to re-introduce it as amended into the House of Commons. It chose not to do so, I surmise, precisely in order to avoid a confrontation between the two houses of Parliament, the majority in the House of Commons having passed the bill some time previously. I do not know, none of us knows what will happen to this bill if the Senate takes it upon itself to amend it, although I must say that I suspect that it will have the same fate as the customs and excise bill. I think we have to ask ourselves at what risk we may be taking this quite unusual step. If we pass an amendment to this bill, what are the implications?

First, there is at least a potential danger to the public safety. I am not familiar, nor do I believe are many senators, with the individual cases of inmates that will come up in the next little while for release in the absence of this new law.

Senator Frith: Law? You have to bring the House of Commons back for it to become law.

Senator Murray: I understand the procedural position taken by my friends.

Senator Frith: It is a fact, not a position.

Senator Murray: I repeat, we do not know the individual cases that will come up within the next little while. I repeat, there is at least a potential danger to the public safety. There is also—and I believe that this point should be weighed carefully by honourable senators—a perceived danger from the public's point of view to the public safety in the failure of Parliament to pass this bill.

The first job I had in this city 25 years ago was executive assistant to the then Minister of Justice, the Honourable Davie Fulton. At that time the Penitentiary Service, the Parole Board, the RCMP and the numerous other agencies now found in the Solicitor General's Department, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Justice were all grouped under the Ministry of Justice. During my time in that position, I visited every federal penitentiary in Canada. I was present when the first major initiatives were taken by the government of the day in the field of correctional reform. Reflecting upon that experience, I was most impressed this morning by what the Solicitor General had to say about the evolution of attitudes and the evolution of policy in the field of correctional reform. Certainly, it is true that none of us has the ultimate wisdom in these fields and we do not know where it resides.

Many times I had the experience of visiting penitentiaries across the country, particularly in the maritime provinces, where I found people whom I knew personally and with whom I had grown up in a small town in Cape Breton. I must say that it is quite an experience. I have wondered ever since, and I think I will wonder until the day I die, how it is that in a small community, such as the one I grew up in or the one Senator MacEachen grew up in, where virtually everybody is working for the same industry, for the same company on the same wage rate, comes from the same social and cultural background with pretty much the same economic opportunities, some people go in one direction and others go in quite another direction. Over the years anthropologists, sociologists, psychologists and members of all the other behavioural disciplines have tried to find out. Perhaps we are closer to some answers in that field now than we were then. Certainly, much has been done in the past 25 years, but there are a lot of unanswered questions in that whole field, and I am the first to admit it.

• (1540)

Certainly, the experience which the committee has had quite recently of visiting these institutions is valuable—and I recall one day having quite a lengthy discussion with Senator Fairbairn about the experience. One never comes away from that experience without a strong sentiment of "There but for the grace of God go I."

[Senator Murray.]

Honourable senators, I do not intend to wander too far afield, but my experience at that time has also given me a very clear understanding of the depth of public concern in this field, and my honourable friends are well aware of this. Senator Robertson, who lives in the city of Riverview a few miles from Dorchester Penitentiary, will know what I am talking about. I well recall the public outcries that would arise on occasion when we had to decide on the location of a young offenders institution, or some other kind of correctional institution in a particular community. Nowadays, of course, the pressure is to do something about the release programs that are in existence, and I cannot over-emphasize the public concern that exists about their safety. Even allowing for the fact that over the years there has been laudable and widespread public support for the reforms that successive governments have undertaken in this field, there is still—and I cannot stress it too strongly—a great deal of public concern about safety.

Honourable senators, I told the Senate earlier today that no decision had been taken on this matter of Royal Assent, and no decision has, indeed, been taken. I do not know the date of the next Royal Assent. I tell my friends, because I know that they know it, that decisions on such matters as Royal Assent are not taken by way of one telephone call from Ottawa to Saskatoon, or Ottawa to anywhere else. If we are to have a Royal Assent within the next little while during the adjournment, it means that the House of Commons will have to be called back. I believe that to call the House of Commons back, the government must persuade the Speaker of that chamber as to the urgency of the matter and must persuade him to do so.

Again, I am not familiar with the individual cases that may be coming up in the correctional system within the next little while. I do know that the government, the minister and the responsible authorities will have to reflect on that in coming to a decision as to whether an early Royal Assent should be sought from the Speaker of the House of Commons and from Her Excellency, the Governor General.

I simply say to honourable senators, as I said this morning, that it is the government's view that the prudent thing for the Senate to do would be to pass this bill now. We have had from the minister, the Solicitor General of Canada, an expression of what his view is, and that is that there should be an early Royal Assent. That is his view, and he has made it clear that he intends to make the appropriate representations to the new government house leader in the other place.

Honourable senators, as I say, I believe that substantively we are running some risk only to our own reputation in putting the government and the other place in the position where this bill will not have been passed by Parliament before the summer adjournment. I also ask you, honourable senators, to consider and reflect on what it does to the Senate if we take this unusual step of amending a government bill that has come to us from the House of Commons. As I have said, it has been some considerable time since the Senate has done that. There is no question about its constitutional powers; they are there.

However, it has been more than 40 years, I believe, since the Senate has defeated a bill.

As I said this morning, that is not the way we have proceeded in this place in modern times. We have not proceeded by way of bringing in important amendments to government bills from the House of Commons. We have not proceeded by way of defeating bills; we have relied on quiet diplomacy and on persuasion. In fact, I am not at all sure—and I do not think that my friends opposite are at all sure—that this kind of amendment, or any kind of amendment, to this bill would have much public support.

In any event, we do not address ourselves directly to the public. We are not the house which primarily addresses itself to the public and tries to persuade them. Our audience, if you will, is the House of Commons and, in particular, the majority in the House of Commons which, in this case, is the government and the ministers of the Crown in the House of Commons. That is our audience, and we are addressing them.

Honourable senators, as you know, I have been here for seven years and, quite apart from the fact that I have come to enjoy and cherish the personal associations I have made here, I have a very high regard for and I set a very high value on the work that we do in this chamber and in its committees. Senators will know that I have been for the past two years chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Senators will also know, because that committee has brought in many reports on government legislation, that we have proceeded by way of comments—and sometimes quite pointed and critical comments—about government legislation, but we have not moved to amend government bills.

Senator Frith: Yes, we have.

Senator Murray: We have not amended government bills coming to us from the House of Commons in any important respect.

Senator Frith: Yes, we have.

Senator Murray: I agree that it has happened occasionally on the initiative of the government, who have asked us to correct some glitches in legislation, but I ask the Honourable Deputy Leader of the Opposition to examine the statement I made when I opened: We have not been amending in any substantive way on our own initiative important government bills coming to us with the approval of the House of Commons.

Senator Frith: You certainly tried when you were on this side. You often moved amendments when you were on this side—

Senator Murray: Yes, and we had good debates on them, and we had votes.

Senator Frith: And you never expected them to be passed?

Senator Murray: The answer to that is a resounding no. I was well aware of the solidarity, let us say, that existed amongst my friends opposite.

However, let us proceed. The point was made this morning that Senate committees and senators have been expressing their concerns about particular matters that are found in this bill for some considerable time, in fact, for more than ten years, and that now when we are confronted with a piece of legislation that goes against the grain of the thinking of senators in the committee and elsewhere on this matter, we must, if we are to be true to principle, take a stand and vote against it or amend the bill accordingly. There is an analogy in the committee which I have had the honour to chair recently. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, for quite a few years, took a particularly dim view of provisions in financial legislation that were retrospective or that had the effect of being retrospective. The committee complained more and more pointedly about that and urged the government not to proceed in such a way on various occasions and asked the government to reconsider, and so forth.

● (1550)

One assumes that the committee was listened to as time went on, but it was not until quite recently—the budget before last—that committee members again found themselves facing retrospective legislation. At that time the committee not only decided to take a strong position but to speak informally with the Minister of Finance and to insist, before it would pass the legislation, that he give the committee an undertaking that he would consider certain matters and, after consideration, to try, if he could, to bring in the necessary amendments. The committee finally succeeded in getting that kind of undertaking from the Minister of Finance.

Time and again the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, and other committees of this house, have drawn the attention of ministers to undesirable or perhaps even unintended effects of legislation that they have brought in, and more often than not, honourable senators, the committees, while expressing their reservations, and the Senate in receiving those reports, have been satisfied with an undertaking from the government that it would consider the proposals and the representations made by the Senate and its committees and, if necessary and appropriate, would propose amendments in the future.

The last report I brought to the Senate as chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee had to do with amendments to the Customs and Excise Act. Some members of the committee took a very dim view of the retaliatory measures that were being proposed in the bill in connection with the so-called shakes and shingles affair. They brought in quite a stern report on the matter. They did not, however, try to amend the bill; they did not try to defeat the bill; the bill is law.

The other day the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee dealt with the Employment Equity bill. Honourable senators know how that matter was treated. The committee made some comments about the bill, which were not flattering, and called on the government to take further action and appended those comments to the bill. As I understand it, the Senate passed the bill with that message to the government and to the House of Commons, which had passed already that bill.

That is the way the Senate has operated in modern times. That is the way of this place. I want to say, as I hope I have demonstrated to some extent, that the Senate is not entirely without influence in these matters. Far from it. I read a speech given in the Senate by Senator Argue in which he spoke about recommendations that were made by a committee of this place concerning herbicides. He practically accused my friend, Lorne Nystrom, MP, of plagiarism. The point he was making was that many of the recommendations that turn up in reports of the Senate and elsewhere are grabbed by members of the other place, both in government and in opposition, and they make them their own. That is a very telling point Senator Argue made the other day, and I appreciated it. I ask honourable senators to bear that in mind.

In connection with the influence that senatorial opinions have on the government and on members of the House of Commons, I want to remind my colleagues of the statements that were made by the minister this morning. It is obvious to me that he is going to take very seriously the views that all senators, in particular Senator Hastings, have expressed on this matter. He has made it very clear that while he wants the bill, and wants the bill as it is now, he does have an open mind, he does have an open door and he does not believe that this is the last word or that anybody has said the last word on this extremely complicated matter of correctional reform. So, I ask honourable senators to give the minister a chance.

I suggest to honourable senators that the idea that is behind Senator Hastings' amendment has been canvassed by the government, has been canvassed by others in the House of Commons and has not been accepted for the moment. That is the case with other objections that senators have made to this bill. The government and the members of the House of Commons acted in full knowledge of the views of the Senate committee and other senators on this matter. The government and the members of the House of Commons acted fully aware of senatorial views.

What do I say? Obviously, it will take my friends a little longer to persuade the government and the members of the House of Commons in this respect. It will take a little longer for honourable senators opposite to persuade them, but the record of senators and of the Senate in this respect is not bad; it is not bad at all. I ask honourable senators, therefore, to continue with their work of persuasion. I ask honourable senators, before they vote in this committee on this amendment, to respect the limitations that we have placed on ourselves as a legislative body in modern times. Honourable senators know what I mean. I ask honourable senators to stay on the path of moderation, conciliation, quiet diplomacy, persuasion and of common sense in the Senate's relations with the members of the other chamber, and with the majority of the members of the other chamber. I ask honourable senators to stay on the path that has been so productive in the past for the political and legislative process of this country. I ask honourable senators not to put the Senate in the position of appearing to be casual about matters where there is a potential danger to public safety.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Frith: The government will be in that position, not the Senate.

Senator Murray: I ask honourable senators, finally, not to run the risk of an unnecessary confrontation with the members of the elected House of Commons. I ask honourable senators to defeat this amendment.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the first point I want to make is that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has not dealt at all with the substance of the amendment which has been proposed by Senator Hastings. That in itself is illustrative, I believe, of the support which this concept has, in fact, received from the Senate in the past. One listening to Senator Murray might conclude that the Senate, in moving this amendment, was embarking on a reckless course, that it had left the path of moderation and was now treading a dangerously radical, unsenatorial course. Well, I think all of us, upon reflection, realize, if we refer back to the debate of this morning, that the Senate itself, and particularly the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, has been consistent and unrelenting in its repeated view that in the matter of deciding the destiny of incarcerated prisoners, the role of the judiciary is preferred to that of the Parole Board. That was, as I outlined this morning, the view of the Senate as a whole in the passage of Bill S-32 in 1983, which incorporated within its substance the preference for judicial review of this particular procedure.

● (1600)

So, instead of departing from the path of moderation, the Senate is staying on course.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: The Senate is consistent with its own attitudes in the past, and Senator Hastings in moving this amendment is true to the traditions of the Senate. As Senator Murray said, "It is our way," and he has stayed with the way of the Senate.

Let us be quite clear. When Senator Murray says, "Give the bill a chance," of course the bill will get a chance. The bill, whether amended or unamended, will come out of the committee and receive third reading, if appropriate consents are available—and we think they will be—and it will receive third reading today, amended or maybe unamended, depending upon the decision of the Committee of the Whole. So, we will give the bill a chance and we will have dealt with it rapidly, because it first appeared on the Scroll of the Senate on Friday last.

Senator Frith: The last day we sat.

Senator MacEachen: The last day of the session. The Senate was called back here today by the government, and we are here ready to deal with the bill in all its stages today.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: From June 27 to July 2: that is the speed, the commendable dispatch, with which the Senate is ready to deal with the bill.

I think it is unfair of Senator Murray to raise the question of public safety and say, "If you delay passage of the bill, if you do anything immoderate, you are creating a potential danger to public safety." The fact of the matter is that potential danger to public safety, if it does exist, has become the responsibility of the Government of Canada, because this bill was introduced on June 27, 1985, and it has been in the House of Commons for a full year.

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Senator MacEachen: It was open to the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister, to schedule that bill the first month after it was introduced and to remove what Senator Murray describes as "the potential danger to public safety."

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Senator MacEachen: But now, having found it tolerable to live with that potential danger to public safety for a full year, and the bill having arrived in the Senate five days ago, the government is raising the matter as an issue in an effort to dissuade the Senate from doing its duty in dealing with the amendment proposed by Senator Hastings.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: That is the first point I have on the potential danger to public safety. I add another point. If the failure to have this bill made law is a potential danger to public safety, why was not the minister prepared today to say, "We will have Royal Assent immediately"?

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: "We will remove that potential danger to public safety."

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Why is the Leader of the Government, threatened as he is in his mind by the potential danger to public safety, not now ready to remove that danger by having Royal Assent immediately?

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: But, from what we have gathered, Royal Assent may be delayed. We do not know; we can only assume that—

Senator Frith: No decision has been made.

Senator MacEachen: We assume it will be delayed because of the formidable difficulties raised by the Leader of the Government against having a quick reassembly of the House of Commons.

So, "potential danger", I think, is a bit unfair to the Senate.

Senator Frith: It is their responsibility.

Senator MacEachen: We are dealing with the bill quickly. It will move out of here today. Then, before it can become law, it is up to the government to have Royal Assent, and if it wants to deal with a possible amendment it will have to do so in the House of Commons, which it must have present in any event to have Royal Assent. So, we are not complicating in any way the work of the government.

Senator Frith: It took them a year to get it here.

Senator MacEachen: So much on the bill itself. On the alarms sounded by the Leader of the Government against precipitate action by the Senate, how refreshing it would have been to have the new Leader of the Government come in here saying, "We want to do something with the Senate. I want to give it some leadership that will lift it out of the moribund reputation it enjoys in the minds of the Canadian people."

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: How refreshing it would have been to have him say, "I will co-operate in changing the Senate so it can become a more effective body."

Senator Murray: I like the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: Instead of that, we had a speech which, in my view, was a clear argument for the abolition of the Senate.

When I came to the Senate, I assumed that I was entering a legislative body. I did not think I was becoming a member of the Business Council on National Issues, which has the opportunity to make representations to the Minister of Finance and has the opportunity to repeat those representations; which can write stern letters and hold the minister to account and which can exercise quiet diplomacy and persuasion. Whether it be the Business Council on National Issues, whether it be the Canadian Labour Congress or the Canadian Catholic Conference, it is their job to do that in a democratic society. Are we now to believe that that is also the function of a senator?

● (1610)

Senator Frith: That is what we are told.

Senator MacEachen: To persuade, to be diplomatic?

Senator Frith: To be a lobby.

Senator MacEachen: To hold them to account? To write stern letters?

I think it is interesting to say, and I accept Senator Murray's view, that the Senate is not without influence. Certainly, the Business Council on National Issues is not without influence, but that is not the point. The point is that the Senate is a legislative body.

I have always disagreed with the former Leader of the Government in the Senate when he consistently urged that the Senate should be only an advisory body. That is not its constitutionally intended function. If we are merely advisers, I suggest we can have a cheaper and more effective set of advisers than senators. We are a legislative body.

If a member of the Senate, such as Senator Hastings, spends so much time studying, worrying about and examining a bill and concludes there ought to be an amendment, and if he wants to put it before his colleagues in the Senate and we all say that is going too far—

Senator Frith: That is not diplomatic enough.

Senator MacEachen: —and that we should never amend a bill, I think senators will lose interest. What Senator Hastings is doing is selecting a small but important point and saying, “Senators, I want you to decide whether you agree with me that when the Parole Board has deliberated and reached a decision, it should be possible to go to the courts.” That is hardly confrontation with the government. That is hardly politicizing the institution. I doubt if it has great political impact on the country. It is an effort to improve the legislation, motivated by a keen conscience and a keen understanding of this problem.

What happens if the amendment is accepted? The bill will come out of committee and out of the house today as amended. One amendment will go to the House of Commons, not the whole bill but just a single amendment, and the remainder of the bill will be approved and it will move out of the Senate today. Is that a dangerous departure from the past? Is that unsenatorial? I think it is what I expect the Senate to do where appropriate, that is, to improve a bill by amending it and have it considered by the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, a number of points were made this morning to the effect that the views of the Senate have been considered by the House of Commons. The views of the Senate have never gone before the House of Commons. They have never been formally considered by the House of Commons. The report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was not tabled in the House of Commons. It was not brought before the Commons in any way. When a legislative body delivers and considers a matter, that matter has to go before that body in the form of a motion. That is how a legislative body deliberates—it is not in the back corridors or through a process of osmosis. If this amendment were carried, that amendment would go before the House of Commons, it would be debated and either accepted or defeated.

I would think that Senator Murray should not be hasty in pre-judging the outcome of that vote, because the amendment is quite limited. It does not remove the function of the Parole Board. The function of the Parole Board is maintained, but it assigns a review function to the judiciary.

I can see that there is a difference of view between myself and the Leader of the Government in the Senate about the function of the Senate and what it ought to be in the twentieth century: the modern Senate. The modern Senate of Canada ought to mean more than quiet diplomacy and persuasion. In my opinion, if we are to gain the respect of the people of Canada in a greater way, from time to time we must stand up and say what the Senate would like to have considered by the House of Commons. If they decide against us, that is not to say that the will of the Commons will not prevail. It can prevail and it ought to prevail, but there is a long journey between saying that the will of the Commons should prevail and that the Senate should remain solely an advisory body. There is an immense spectrum in between that can give the Senate an effective function without contesting what I regard to be a fundamental of our democracy, namely, the supremacy of the elected members of the House of Commons. They must have their way.

[Senator MacEachen.]

However, is it not open to the Senate, with our constitutional functions, to put some ideas before the House of Commons in the form of an amendment?

Senator Lefebvre: Of course.

Senator MacEachen: Then the Commons can say yes or no. The Senate, if it is wise, will conclude that the Commons will have its way.

I am delighted that the amendment has been put, if only to have a discussion on the role of the Senate, because, when I said this morning that I had high expectations of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I have not changed my view.

Senator Frith: Shaken a bit.

Senator MacEachen: I think he will, in the government, gradually be able to have ministers who seldom appreciate the Senate—and I know a lot about that—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: —come around to the view that there is a place in the legislative process for the Senate that need not entail confrontation and hostility; but that there can be a co-operative and constructive relationship between the two bodies.

That does not mean that the Senate should abdicate and give away its legislative functions. One of the legislative functions is to amend. Let us move gently into this slight evolutionary process so that it will be possible for a member of the Senate to move an amendment, test his colleagues and, if carried, see it go to the House of Commons. Then we will see what they think. That is what is happening today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

● (1620)

Senator Hicks: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, it is not necessary for me to speak at length about this matter, but I do want to point out to the government leader in the Senate—and I join with all of the good things that have been said about him today; what I am going to say now will in no way detract from that—something having to do with the remarks he made about the Senate’s amending bills.

The Senate has amended bills and sent them back to the House of Commons much more recently than in the period of the late John George Diefenbaker. I recall distinctly that in 1972 the Senate amended a bill amending the Criminal Code having to do with wiretapping and sent it back to the House of Commons. In that case the bill was resubmitted to the House of Commons. However, it did not follow the example under the Diefenbaker administration to which Senator Murray referred, because the House of Commons did not accept the amendments which the Senate had made and returned the bill to the Senate. After serious consideration by the Senate, the conclusion of the senators at that time was to the effect that if they wanted to be wrong and did not accept our good amendments, let them have it. We passed the bill without the Commons having accepted the amendments the Senate had made. We had the satisfaction the next year of seeing all of our suggested amendments incorporated in another piece of legislation. Senator Murray might be interested in having a look at the political footwork which probably had something to do with the behaviour in the House of Commons at that time.

In any event, I remember that one very clearly. There have not been formal amendments by the Senate since that time and, indeed, for some years before that, to the extent there used to be in years gone by. One of the reasons is that this body began a decade or more ago to undertake the pre-study of bills before its committees. By the kind of negotiation to which the government leader in the Senate properly referred, arrangements have been made, sometimes when the bills were before the committees in the House of Commons, sometimes when the bill was reported back from the committees to the House of Commons, and the changes which have been suggested by the Senate have actually and technically been made in the House of Commons. Perhaps this did something to destroy the visible role that the Senate played, but it was not a withdrawal of the function of the Senate in amending legislation. I certainly do not agree we should ever consent to such a withdrawal.

Perhaps while I am speaking I should say something about the nature of this amendment and why I am going to support it. I agree that there is the possibility of a real debate, which would have caused me some difficulty had I had to choose between the appropriateness of the Parole Board or the court ruling on this question of the withholding of mandatory supervision. I agree that it would have been difficult to decide. Generally speaking, I think that these things should be left to the court. I agree, however, that a burden might be imposed upon them. Listening to the discussion that has gone on here today, one has some doubt as to how great that burden might be, but I agree that there is some indication that that might have imposed a substantial burden upon the court which it would have been unfortunate to ask them to assume.

Honourable senators, it seems to me that this amendment gives us the best of two worlds. It leaves the decision making, in the first instance, with the Parole Board, but it does not deny to the person who thinks he is aggrieved by a decision of that board an opportunity to get his case before the courts. If it can be brought before a superior court and it is still wrong, he can appeal it and have recourse to the whole body of law and jurisprudence of which we are all very proud in this country and, indeed, in most of the civilized countries of the western world. Therefore, it seems to me that the arguments which the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate has made are eminently sensible, that we are not causing any great hardship to anyone if we test this amendment and that, if the House of Commons does not want to accept the amendment—and remember, they cannot make this bill into law without reconvening the House of Commons either for Royal Assent or for the acceptance of our amendment, followed by Royal Assent, so they must come back in any event—we are not introducing any significant delay. It seems to me that this is a reasonable thing for us to do. For that reason I am going to support the amendment, because I think it improves the legislation in this rather narrow but, to me, important aspect.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, before the vote is taken, I simply want to clarify something which I do not really understand. My question is addressed to Senator Nurgitz. On May 14 when the twenty-first report of the committee was submitted, my understanding was that this report was submitted on behalf of Senator Nurgitz. That is the way it is signed. It is signed by P. Derek Lewis for Nathan Nurgitz, deputy chairman.

The report is very clear. True, it does refer to a previous decision of the Senate regarding Bill S-32, but the purpose of this reference was to do a pre-study of Bill C-67. The report states in its first section:

It is the opinion of the Committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32—namely, that the courts, rather than the National Parole Board, should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates who would otherwise be eligible for release on mandatory supervision.

It then goes on to say:

We have heard the comments of the Solicitor General with respect to the appropriateness of the Board taking on this responsibility, but with respect we must disagree.

That is stated in Senator Nurgitz's report, which was tabled on May 14 of this year.

On June 12 the twenty-second report of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee was tabled. That one was simply signed by the chairman, Senator Lewis. Senator Nurgitz, however, was still a member of the committee at that time and, I believe, was deputy chairman. The twenty-second report, in referring to the previous report, states:

This report is intended to supplement the Committee's interim report of May 14—

This does not contradict the first report, it merely adds to it.

Senator Nurgitz back in May supported the principle that the court rather than the National Parole Board should make such decisions and the Senate approved that. To my knowledge, no honourable senator on one side or the other got up to contradict or to oppose the recommendation of our own committee some two months ago. The proposal that has been made by Senator Hastings does not even go that far. The amendment merely provides for the right of appeal. If two months ago the view was that such decisions should be made by the court, not the Parole Board, and if the amendment put forward today simply provides for a right of appeal, I just do not understand why Senator Nurgitz is opposed to it.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, by way of a brief reply, on May 13 or 14 I was the chairman of the committee and in the hands of the committee. I did not speak in favour of or against the recommendation. I was in the Chair. I am not aware of who was there and cannot even recall at the moment whether any senator on the government side attended. The purpose in bringing in the report at that time was because the committee was holding endless meetings to hear witnesses who had very similar positions to those of the witnesses of the previous week, albeit that they were against the government position, and we were being urged because we were, in fact, attempting to negotiate with the Solicitor General for some amendments. Frankly, there were people on both sides who were anxious to get that going.

● (1630)

The purpose in bringing in that report in May was in the hope of gaining some portion of what the Senate committee wanted. I believe there are four items in that report, of which two were negotiated as amendments that ultimately ended up in the bill. That is the purpose of what we did in May.

The precedent for doing that was the divorce bills which the Senate had some months earlier. In a pre-study we came in with five recommendations that we urged the Minister of Justice to accept. I believe three and a half of them gained acceptance. That was precisely the principle.

I was out of the country for the June meeting. I considered the June meeting to be rather unfair and wrong because the idea of the main meeting was to stake out our position. But, as I say, I was out of the country. Someone thought that it was perhaps time to move for another committee report, and that was done. I was not there.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is moved by Senator Hastings, seconded by Senator Petten, that clause 5 of the bill be amended by adding immediately after line five on page 10, the following:

(8) An inmate who is in custody pursuant to an order made under subsection (4) may appeal against that order to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Chairman: Will those honourable senators in favour of the amendment please rise?

Will those honourable senators opposed to the amendment please rise?

The motion is carried 22 to 18.

The motion was resolved in the affirmative.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 5, as amended, carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

[Senator Molgat.]

The Chairman: Shall the bill be reported as amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

PAROLE ACT AND RELATED STATUTES

BILL TO AMEND CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we will now proceed with Bill C-68.

The Senate is now in Committee of the Whole to take into consideration Bill C-68, intituled, An Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code.

Shall the title be postponed?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that all clauses carry in Bill C-68.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE ADOPTED

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-67, to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiaries Act, has considered the said bill and has the honour to report the bill with an amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall the report on Bill C-67 be adopted?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Now.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I raise a question in connection with the amendment which has been proposed and carried. The amendment says:

(8) An inmate who is in custody pursuant to an order made under subsection (4) may appeal against that order to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

Since we are into the question of legislation, when do they appeal? It does not say when. How do they appeal? Is it by way of notice of appeal?

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: By regulation.

Senator Nurgitz: It has been deemed, as a result of a recommendation by the Senate committee, that the regulations would not be contained in independent regulations but that they would appear within the statute. It does not say whether we go to an appeal court of superior jurisdiction or to a trial court of superior jurisdiction, and so on. In connection with an appeal, I am wondering where, how and why? Do we not need grounds? Is it a hearing de novo, or is it not a hearing de novo?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): That should have been dealt with in the Committee of the Whole. You were handling the bill for the government?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe that what the Leader of the Opposition has said is sound. The question of the regularity or wording of an amendment should be raised in committee, where the amendment carries. For that reason, I believe that the point of order is not well founded. My second thought on the subject is that most provinces have rules providing for what happens if a statute says "a court". They also have rules if the statute makes a reference to a judge or to a judge of a superior court; and if they do not have the necessary rules, they soon make them once Parliament passes a statute that says so. For those two reasons, principally the first one, I do not believe that the point of order is regular.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Did you say "most provinces" or "all provinces"?

Senator Frith: All provinces have rules of procedure dealing with the question. There may not be a rule in every province that deals with this precise statement, but certainly in all provinces there are rules of procedure to say what happens when a statute refers to a judge, a court, et cetera.

● (1640)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, it is obvious to me that our colleague, Senator Nurgitz, has pointed to some very serious deficiencies in the amendment that was passed by the committee.

Senator Frith: That is where they should have been raised then.

Senator Murray: Objection has been taken to the fact that he raised them as a point of order. I do not argue with that objection, but it is obvious to me that the deficiencies pointed out by Senator Nurgitz will have to be considered by the Senate when it deals with third reading of this bill.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, there is no way that the clause which has been adopted can be dealt with at third reading, because any deficiencies in the amendment should have been corrected in Committee of the Whole. To raise them at third reading leaves us powerless because we cannot change that clause, even if we find it necessary, without going back to the Committee of the Whole. Therefore, I do not think it will help us to go to third reading, because we cannot do anything at third reading.

Senator Doody: Can you not amend a bill at third reading?

Senator MacEachen: You cannot amend a bill at third reading without sending it to committee or instructing a committee to amend it in that particular, because the clauses are not before the house for amendment at third reading.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not sure of the validity of the point the Leader of the Opposition has just made about amendments at third reading. However, he has pointed out, I think correctly, that the Senate could indeed at the third reading stage send the bill to a committee, in this instance Committee of the Whole, with instructions. I for one will want to hear further discussion on the deficiencies that have been pointed out by Senator Nurgitz. It is one thing for my friends to amend the bill.

Senator Frith: Why did he not point them out in committee?

Senator Murray: We can have that discussion at third reading.

An Hon. Senator: No.

Senator Murray: Why not? The committee has reported and the Senate is dealing with the bill at third reading.

Senator MacEachen: You cannot raise a point of order on an item that is in Committee of the Whole. Senator Nurgitz was handling the bill for the government, and it was his responsibility at that point to advise us if he found there were deficiencies.

Senator Murray: I am not proposing that we discuss the matter on a point of order. The Senate is seized with the report from the Committee of the Whole. In due course we will have third reading. At that time surely it is legitimate and proper for honourable senators to draw attention to deficiencies in the bill as amended by the committee. What is third reading for if not for that purpose? Surely, if the deficiencies pointed out by my honourable friend, Senator Nurgitz, are real, substantive and of concern to senators, then, as I understand it, senators have the option of sending the bill back to a Committee of the Whole with instructions regarding the deficiencies. Again, I recognize that it is irregular to discuss these matters on a point of order. Perhaps I should defer this discussion until we get to third reading, but I want to flag for my friends the fact that in view of the deficiencies that have been pointed out by Senator Nurgitz, I think it would be quite improper for the Senate to rush ahead with third reading right away.

Senator Frith: Don't you want the bill?

Senator Murray: I want the bill, but I can wait until tomorrow for it.

Senator Guay: Have you changed your mind?

Senator Murray: Speaking to the reputation of the Senate, it is one thing for the Senate to take the rare step of amending a government bill that has come from the House of Commons. It is another thing for the Senate, which has so many people with legislative experience here—much more than I—to send back a bill to the House of Commons with an amendment that is as deficient as Senator Nurgitz suggests it is. That is a hell of a thing to do for the reputation of the Senate, and I want no part of it.

Senator MacEachen: I must say, honourable senators, that it is difficult to listen to that lecture with equanimity. The amendment was proposed in the Committee of the Whole. The bill was entrusted to a representative of the government in the person of Senator Nurgitz. Sitting next to him was the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It was possible at that time to have these deficiencies elaborated upon and drawn to our attention. However, they were left untouched, left unexplained and the bill was passed in Committee of the Whole. Now we hear Senator Nurgitz, whose responsibility it was at Committee of the Whole stage to draw these deficiencies, if they exist, to the attention of the committee, objecting. To say that the Senate's reputation will suffer is nonsense. What is suffering is the reputation of the government due to its inability to handle a simple piece of legislation in Committee of the Whole. Now, the Leader of the Government is saying, after calling upon us to get through this bill so that public safety will not suffer, that we cannot have third reading, that we should wait until tomorrow.

Senator Murray: I would simply remind my honourable friends that we are talking about their amendment, drafted over the lunch hour while we agreed to a brief break, brought in here in only one language, finally put before us, and, after a fairly brief discussion, voted upon. I say again that it is the role of the Senate at third reading to deal with amendments that have been made in committee and to pass judgment upon them. I simply say that I want to hear further discussion on the deficiencies that have been identified by my friend, Senator Nurgitz. I want to hear that discussion at third reading and then we will decide what to do.

I am open to suggestions as to how soon we can proceed to third reading debate and how soon after that we can proceed to a vote at third reading. These are matters that are not usefully canvassed across the floor in this way. I do not believe in conducting negotiations quite in this way, and perhaps we should allow for some consultation on the matter. However, at the moment I am not prepared to give leave for third reading immediately without having had the opportunity to discuss the points that Senator Nurgitz has raised. Certainly, without having had that discussion, I am not prepared to give the assurance now that I would be willing to have a vote on the matter immediately.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, parenthetically, the Leader of the Government does not seem to be as concerned about public safety all of a sudden as he was a few moments ago.

Senator Guay: Right on!

Senator Murray: That amendment gives me more concern for public safety.

Senator Frith: Let me make it clear for the record that we are prepared to give this bill third reading now.

[Senator Murray.]

On the question of whether the point of order is properly raised or not, it might be of some help to refer to rule 46(o), which clearly provides for reconsideration of a clause of a bill agreed to while in Committee of the Whole, and no notice is required to do so. Therefore, the time to raise this question was before we left Committee of the Whole, and that is what the rules contemplate.

• (1650)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the report?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the adoption of the report please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the adoption of the report please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

Motion agreed to and report adopted, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, unless some arrangements can be made through the usual channels, I would have to decline leave to proceed with third reading today. If arrangements could be made for a debate, in which we would canvass the deficiencies identified in the amendment by Senator Nurgitz, I would be prepared to proceed with debate on third reading, but I would not be prepared to give an assurance that we could dispose of the matter this afternoon.

Senator Frith: Do you want to have a recess in order that we can have some discussion?

Senator Murray: I think that would be appropriate.

PAROLE ACT AND RELATED STATUTES

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred the Bill C-68, to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code, has examined the said bill and reports the same without amendment.

Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, leave is not granted. I think that these bills should be treated in the same way.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I think if we recess for five minutes, we can have a discussion about this matter.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if we are to attempt to consider—

Senator Doody: We will be back tomorrow, in any event.

Senator Frith: Perhaps not; that is why I am raising this point as to whether Senator Hastings and others would agree that we just do not ask for leave for third reading of this bill either, for the moment—at least until we have recessed. In other words, I am of the opinion that we should keep these two bills together, because if we come to some agreement on Bill C-67, then Bill C-68 would be the only reason for coming back tomorrow, and I think that would be undesirable.

It seems to me, then, that the solution is to say that we have not moved third reading on either of these bills yet. Is that satisfactory?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Yes.

Senator Frith: In other words, we can consider that the motion for third reading has not yet been put to us and will be put after the recess and dealt with then in whatever way we have agreed to do so—or failed to agree.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I wonder whether the leaders on both sides of the house, while giving consideration to urgent matters arising from the urgency of these two bills, would also give consideration to the possibility of sitting this evening. All honourable senators are here. I do not see why we cannot sit this evening.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the suggestion of Senator Guay, but it was precisely to avoid negotiating across the floor that I have asked that the usual channels be employed for the purpose of discussing how we will proceed from here.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it has been suggested that we do not move on third reading of Bill C-67 and Bill C-68, but that we suspend our deliberations until 5 p.m. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until 5 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

• (1700)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

DISPOSITION OF BILLS C-67 AND C-68

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have had some discussions during the recess, if that is the right word. I cannot say that we have come to a definite agreement about some of the dimensions of the procedural problem we are facing. Without wanting to be too arcane, I think the questions that we have to consider are the following: The position we are in right now is a position that is a normal one in the House of Commons; that is, between report of the Committee of the Whole and third reading, the other place has a report stage which takes place before third reading is moved. That is not a stage that I have experienced in the Senate. But whatever stage we are at, before arriving at it we adopted the report of the Committee of the Whole. We know that Senator Nurgitz will speak to the question of whether or not the clause that was added during Committee of the Whole study should stand because of uncertainty, to put it as simply as it can be put; that is, whether there will be difficulties in interpretation, or that the clause is not clear as to what court is to be involved.

The trouble with that is that what we will be doing is, in any event, saying that we have adopted the committee's report, which includes an amendment to the bill, and now we are going to turn around and move third reading and say that the committee report we have adopted is not to stand adopted because we are going to change part of it. We will have voted in a period of approximately 15 or 20 minutes, I guess, two ways on the same question.

While I think it is true that it is customary in the Senate, and not in the House of Commons, to have amendments proposed at third reading, perhaps partly because we do not have the report stage interval, I am sure that cannot mean that any amendment is receivable. It seems to me it is quite open right now as to whether or not any amendment that is proposed at third reading that has the effect of reversing a decision that the Senate made to adopt the committee's report might not—and in fact I think would not—be receivable.

I think it is fair to tell honourable senators what the result of the consultations was, and that those questions still remain. Again, what remains is, would any amendment having the effect of reversing the decision the Senate made on a committee report be receivable? Then there is the other point concerning the regularity of the amendment made during Committee of the Whole. I understand that an amendment of that nature was held to be receivable in the other place and, therefore, to that extent is in order.

So, there are a few questions to be settled, among them whether or not the right move for the Senate to make now is to proceed to give leave to go to third reading and then debate these questions I have just raised, or whether it is better to have some interval—either between now and this evening or now and tomorrow—before the Senate deals with third reading.

I leave those questions for honourable senators to speak to because I did find it a little difficult to settle on a sound procedure that would not give rise to the questions I have just raised.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, much of the discussion at this point is hypothetical. Certainly, it is hypothetical whether an amendment would be moved at third reading, what the amendment would be and whether the amendment would be in order. I suggest, therefore, that for the moment the Senate give leave for third reading, that Senator Nurgitz, at that stage, have the opportunity to elaborate on the deficiencies which he has already identified in the amendment passed by the Committee of the Whole, and then we will see whether a remedy is necessary and what the remedy should be.

It is possible, I think, as the Leader of the Opposition pointed out earlier, to move a motion to refer the bill back to the Committee of the Whole. Senator Frith has correctly pointed out that it is possible to propose an amendment to the bill at third reading, but we shall see after we have considered and debated and discussed the deficiencies that Senator Nurgitz has found in the amendment. We will then decide what remedy to propose and how to proceed.

So, I suggest that His Honour put the question of when to proceed with third reading of the bill, and that we at least begin the debate on third reading now.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators, to proceed with third reading of Bill C-67, to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am ready to hear Senator Nurgitz on what he perceives to be the deficiencies in the amendment. Indeed, if he can make proposals to improve or to remove any of those deficiencies, then that is another matter that we will consider, but if the intent is to find a procedural way of upsetting the decision taken by the Committee of the Whole, or to negative the clear report of the Committee of the Whole, then I think we are going to be in difficulty. I have no hesitation in proceeding with third reading, but I think that if the intention is to defeat the amendment made by the Committee of the Whole rather than to improve it or refine it or remove its deficiencies, then I think that is another matter and we will have a very serious problem.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave, I move the third reading of Bill C-67.

[Senator Frith.]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, that this bill be read the third time now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I do not want to take issue with the comments of the Leader of the Opposition. Indeed, I will not be attempting to lay out for him, or for anybody else, any method by which to sabotage the amendment made during Committee of the Whole. Let me be clear; I think enough has already been said regarding Bill C-67. I really wish to point out to honourable senators what I perceive, frankly off the top of my head, to be serious deficiencies in the drafting of the amendment.

Let me be clear; I will not make any suggestions. I trust the leadership on both sides will then determine what to do with the problem I will lay out, and the problem as I see it is that this is a sort of new form of legislative drafting. I have not seen a statute which provides for an appeal not stating what kind of appeal it will be. I do not know now, honourable senators, whether this is intended to be a rehearing appeal, as is often the case. In legal terminology, that is called a de novo hearing—or, whether it was meant to be an “appeal” appeal, that is, that a judge would consider the evidence that had already been given—not new evidence, but what was already on the record.

• (1710)

I do not know in these proceedings, honourable senators, if one is to appeal, or when one is to appeal. Can one be refused and then two years later wake up one morning and say, “I will appeal”? Can one do that? Because all statutes dealing with appeals state that you must appeal within a certain time. Surely there must be some order in the organization of the affairs of any institution. Some appeals must be made within 15 days; some, 30 days, and some, 60 days. It is one thing for the Deputy Leader of the Opposition to say, “Well, there will be rules.” Can he say which ones? Is it a 15-day rule? Is it a 30-day or 60-day rule? I don’t know.

Then, surely, if one is to appeal, one must appeal against someone. Who is it you are appealing against? Whom does the inmate have to serve?

Senator Frith: Oh, that is easy.

Senator Nurgitz: That is easy? Surely to goodness it is a little unusual here. Surely there is a question of the person in whose custody he is. Does that person have to be served with a notice?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You do not find that in the statutes. The matter of who gets served is in the rules. Show me a statute that states who gets served and how many days’ notice they get. That is all in the rules.

Senator Nurgitz: Well, I would think that most of the statutes, including the Criminal Code, would indicate that you would have to appeal within a certain number of days; that you would have to give notice to the provincial Attorney General or to his deputy.

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Nurgitz: Whom do you serve? Do you serve the provincial Attorney General. There are no rules to cover this. Senator Frith will be the first one to stand up and say that there are no rules to cover the question of an appeal from a dismissal of a Parole Board hearing. There are none. So what rules will we look at?

Senator Frith: It is not for Parliament to provide for that.

Senator Nurgitz: I see.

Senator Frith: It is not. Look at any statute.

Senator Nurgitz: May I ask Senator Frith if it is for Parliament to provide them or not to provide them.

Senator Frith: It is not. For example, under Ontario law there are many cases where there is a right of appeal. The statutes do not give me that right to find out whom I serve, or what the rules are; I go to the Rules of Court and the Judicature Act of Ontario to find that out. In many cases they have had to come up with a rule because the statute gave some authority to the court, but the court decided, "All right, we have the authority to deal with this; now we are going to have to deal with it by the rules," and that is the way it is usually dealt with.

Senator Nurgitz: Whose rules? The court's rules?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Nurgitz: So, now this is a good appeal.

Senator Frith: Not "now"; it has always been like that.

Senator Nurgitz: So, we will need the ten provinces and two territories to enact rules for this.

Senator Frith: Exactly. There is nothing new about that; we do it all the time. Who is "we," incidentally?

Senator Nurgitz: What will an inmate do until those rules are promulgated?

Senator Frith: File a notice of appeal.

Senator Nurgitz: With whom?

Senator Frith: Put a notice to the court, and they will have to decide whether it is regular or not.

Senator Nurgitz: Which court? The trial court or the appeal court?

Senator Frith: A superior court. If you look at the rules you will find, when there is a reference to a court or a judge, just what that means in each province. In every province there is a provision in the Judicature Act, or in the Rules of Court, that says reference to a court in a statute shall mean—

Senator Nurgitz: What does that mean, honourable senators? I am not satisfied that I even know what it means when it says, "This is an appeal." Does that mean it goes to the appeal court?

Senator Frith: No, not necessarily.

Senator Nurgitz: I see. So we don't even know which court it goes to.

Senator Frith: No. There are many cases, for example, of appeals from an administrative tribunal to a court, and the court provides the rules for how that is carried out. But this is not the place to debate that.

Senator Nurgitz: Well, I don't want to debate it. I want to point out that when Bill S-32 was passed, it was done with great precision. Page after page of the procedure for a judicial review was set out. That is my point. I spent the break attempting to find that, but I was not able to. In any case, as I indicated earlier, I only proposed to tell you of the problem; I do not have a solution.

Honourable senators, those are the only comments I have with respect to Bill C-67.

Senator Frith: Well, honourable senators, briefly, I really do believe that it is not a question for the legislature. If they have a solution for how it can be improved, of course they can improve it; but I do not think the question of whether an amendment is in order or not is influenced by difficulties of interpretation, because I admit there will be difficulties of interpretation here; but there are difficulties of interpretation with many provisions. That is what the courts are for.

In any event, as Senator Nurgitz said, I do not think we should debate these avocasseries any longer here. I recognize the problems he has raised. He has raised some important questions, but I do not think the solution lies here. It might have rested in the committee itself, but, the committee having made its report, it seems to me that what we are facing now at third reading, having accepted the report, is either adopting it at third reading as amended or moving acceptable amendments.

Senator Nurgitz: I only wish to point out, honourable senators, that further to the comments of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, much has been made of the status and stature of the Senate. Frankly, I think we should all be embarrassed by what is, to say the least, sloppy and probably, to be more accurate, inadequate in terms of an amendment.

Senator Frith: Well, that should have been raised earlier.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, we did not have the French version when we were considering—

Senator Frith: The French version of which document?

Senator Tremblay: Of the amendment, when we were considering the amendment in Committee of the Whole.

I glanced through this version after the committee tabled its report, and it seems to me it could be improved. I don't think this would involve any substantial changes, but it would involve a change in part of the wording. I wonder if I could simply move that this be done, since according to the Constitution Act of 1982, both versions have equal authority.

I will ask one of the pages to distribute copies so that you can follow the text.

Senator Frith: Is this an amendment?

Senator Tremblay: We shall see exactly what this change involves. It does indeed change the French version that we had, but I don't think it changes the substance, just the wording.

In the English version, we have the expression: "on any grounds of law or fact or mixed law and fact".

Personally, I don't think the French equivalent exists. It seems to me that in French it should read as follows—you have the text in the copy that is being passed around right now—"pour des motifs soit de droit, soit de fait, ou pour des motifs à la fois de droit et de fait".

I consulted several people, and I think they all agree that this French version would be preferable to the one we were given earlier and had not been considered in Committee of the Whole since it was not available at the time.

So how should we proceed? Should I move that the French version be amended in the way I indicated, or should we simply note that the text has been revised, as the note at the top of the page indicates? It might not be an amendment as such. In any case, I am open to suggestions on the appropriate way to proceed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we certainly can have no objection to improving the concordance of the two versions. Our problem is with a technical or a substantial amendment that would affect our decision with respect to the committee's report.

The problem is in fact dealt with in rule 47(1), which provides the following:

A motion shall not be made which is the same in substance

The English "in substance" renders the French "essentielle-ment".

as any question which, during the same session, has been resolved in the affirmative or negative, unless the order, resolution, or other decision on such question has been rescinded as hereinafter provided.

The "hereinafter" provides as follows:

An order, resolution, or other decision of the Senate may be rescinded on five days' notice if at least two-thirds of the senators present vote in favour of its rescission.

This means that in the present situation, at the third reading stage in the Senate, amendments may certainly be moved. It is not a problem. They cannot do this in the other place, but we can here, because there is nothing in our rules that prohibits it.

Furthermore, I think Bourinot mentions somewhere that in the Senate, amendments may be proposed at the third reading stage. We can therefore move amendments, but these amendments must conform to the rules. We cannot say that any amendment is admissible on third reading. The principle is that amendments may be moved, but not just any amendment.

[Senator Tremblay.]

It seems to me that an amendment whose purpose would be to alter the decision we made hardly an hour ago is not in order, if the result would be essentially to change or abrogate a decision already made. That would be a pity, because if there were a chance of improving the concordance of both versions, we certainly could not object. On the other hand, I think we must object to any change that would essentially modify a decision already made.

In this case, I think Senator Tremblay's suggestion does not essentially change the decision we made, and for that reason, we could probably accept it.

[English]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I hesitate to intervene in a discussion of the rules for the first time in my career in this place, but I do want to say that I believe my honourable friend, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, is wrong. The rule to which he refers says that the motion may not be the same in substance as any question which has been resolved in the affirmative or negative during the present session. The bill before us will not have been resolved in the affirmative or the negative until it has passed, or otherwise, third reading.

What is the third reading stage for if it is not precisely to give honourable senators an opportunity to change that which has taken place at an earlier stage? I have been brought up to understand that that is why we have three stages for bills in these legislative assemblies.

Senator Frith: There is no problem making amendments.

Senator Murray: I say that on the point of order and I make that point again with regard to the argument made by the Leader of the Opposition a few moments ago that we may not, on third reading, negative something that has already been done. What is the point of third reading if we may not change what has been done at an earlier stage?

Senator Frith: What was done?

Senator Murray: We are confronted with quite substantive arguments on deficiencies identified by Senator Nurgitz. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition has since argued to the contrary, but there is no doubt about it from listening to the argument that there are serious problems.

Senator Frith: So, vote against third reading.

Senator Murray: There are serious problems with the amendment that has passed through the Committee of the Whole.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay just mentioned certain problems with respect to the French version of the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

[English]

The question before us now is: What is our remedy for the deficiencies pointed out by Senators Nurgitz and Tremblay?

Senator Frith: Vote against third reading.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend suggests that we vote against third reading.

Senator Frith: That is what is before us. As yet, we do not have an amendment.

Senator Murray: I am suggesting that we have remedies. One such remedy was identified earlier by the Leader of the Opposition. We can move that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be returned to the Committee of the Whole with instructions; return it to the Committee of the Whole for reconsideration; or return it to the Committee of the Whole to delete.

Another remedy which the Leader of the Opposition indicates he would have some difficulty with procedurally as well as in substance would be to amend the bill on third reading to provide for the deletion of the amendment that has come to us from the Committee of the Whole.

In any case, I put that to honourable senators and I think the only way to test the waters is to have one of those remedies proposed. Then, perhaps, we shall have a point of order on it and, perhaps, a discussion on the substance of it.

● (1730)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think that the Leader of the Government, in his first sortie into the rules, wants to read one of them right out of the book, and I am referring to rule 47. What is before us now is a motion for third reading of this bill. There is no amendment before us. Senator Nurgitz, I take it, was speaking to that motion for third reading. He said that he did not like this bill as we now have it because it has a problem in one of its clauses. His remedy would then be to amend that, had we not already adopted the committee's report. Having adopted the committee's report, we cannot receive amendments that go against that report.

Senator Murray: I disagree.

Senator Frith: The amendment is a motion and it is the same in substance as any question which, during the same session, has been resolved. The question that has been resolved is the motion to adopt the report. If it were to be sent back to committee, that is when it would be sent. An amendment would then be made to say that the report shall not now be adopted and the bill shall be sent back to committee. What stands before us now is an adopted report. That is the key difference.

Senator Murray: But we have a bill before us and we can make motions.

Senator Frith: Yes, you can certainly make motions and you can move amendments, but you cannot move amendments that negative a decision that has already been made.

Senator Murray: Why not?

Senator Frith: Because the rules say so, unless five days' notice is given.

Senator Murray: No, no, no, the purpose of third reading surely is to—Senator Frith: The motion for third reading of a bill in the Senate can include a motion to amend. But that motion to amend or any motion cannot have the effect of negating an earlier decision.

So far, all we have done is give the bill first reading, accept it in principle and give it second reading. We have referred it to committee. The committee has reported and we have adopted the committee's report. We cannot have in the same session a motion that is, in effect, negating a decision previously made, namely, to adopt the report. This is absurd. You cannot really mean that you would move that the committee's report be adopted, agree to it on division and then make another motion to refer the bill back to the committee.

Senator Murray: You can send the bill back.

Senator Frith: You cannot.

Senator Murray: Of course you can.

Senator Frith: This bill has been sent to the committee.

Senator Murray: But it may be sent back to the committee.

Senator Frith: Yes, but not after we have adopted the report of the committee.

Senator Murray: Why not?

Senator Frith: This means that there will be no end to it. This means that a committee could present a report which the Senate adopts and somebody could stand up later and say that he does not want it adopted. That is just too bad if we have adopted it. We cannot send the bill back unless in the first instance we say that "the committee's report be not now adopted but that the bill be sent back with certain instructions."

You are now making a motion. Your motion is to send the bill back to committee for consideration, yet you have just agreed to a motion adopting the report of the committee. If there were ever a case in which you are making irreconcilable decisions in the same session—within an hour, let alone in the same session—it is the present case. I cannot believe that anyone could suggest that this situation is not covered by the rules.

Senator Tremblay: If I may, I will ask a question of reading, so to speak. In this debate Senator Frith has been referring to rule 47; is that the case?

Senator Frith: I have.

Senator Tremblay: If I may, I will read it:

A motion shall not be made which is the same in substance as any question which, during the same session, has been resolved in the affirmative or negative—

Senator Frith: Exactly. We have made a decision that the report be adopted. Then you turn around and make a motion that it shall not be adopted but that it shall be sent back to committee.

Senator Tremblay: It is my understanding that the motion should not be the same to be admissible. If it is the same in substance, then this section does apply. Do I read it correctly?

Senator Frith: Yes, you do. What do you consider more different in substance than the following: The report is adopted by motion. Then you want to say that it shall not be adopted, but that the bill shall be sent back to committee, yet you have just passed a motion that it was adopted. You cannot send it back to the committee without saying that it shall not be adopted and you have already decided that it was adopted. I do not know how it could be any clearer.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think that we should test the waters as to the remedies that can be brought to these problems at third reading stage.

[Translation]

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, in the light of the important questions raised by my colleague, Senator Nurgitz, I move, seconded by Senator Sherwood, that Bill C-67 be not now read the third time but that it be amended by striking out subclause 8 of clause 5 on page 10.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sherwood, that Bill C-67 be not now read the third time but that it be amended by striking out subclause 8 of clause 5 on page 10.

[English]

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this amendment is not in order. The motion made in committee was that subclause 8 be added to the bill. The motion was put in committee and carried. The committee reported. It was moved that the committee's report be adopted and that motion was carried. That means that the Senate decided that subclause 8 shall be added to Bill C-67. I repeat this in the most simple terms: Subclause 8 shall be added to Bill C-67. It was so moved in the committee, so reported by the committee, so moved in the Senate and so accepted by the Senate. We now have a motion which says that subclause 8 shall be taken out of Bill C-67. This is clearly in contravention of rule 47. It absolutely negatives the decision that we made an hour or so ago.

Then what happens? How long will we keep doing this? How long will these motions be in order—forever? No, because they are not in order now and they will not be in order later. How many kicks at the cat do we take? There has to be some order in the way in which we deal with our business.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I call the attention of honourable senators to rule 58, which is very clear and which states:

At any time before a bill is passed a senator may move for the reconsideration of any clause thereof already carried.

[Senator Tremblay.]

That is exactly what the Honourable Senator Cogger is trying to do. He is trying to move for reconsideration of a clause that has already been carried.

Senator Frith: How is that to be read with rule 47?

Senator Doody: I think that Senator Tremblay has already made that point.

● (1740)

Senator Frith: Read it with rule 47. Rule 58 says:

At any time before a bill is passed a senator may move for the reconsideration of any clause thereof already carried.

But he cannot make a motion to negative a report that has been adopted by motion, because the two motions are absolutely inconsistent.

Senator Doody: There is a basic and fundamental difference of opinion, and someone will have to rule on it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The only thing I have to do is put the motion to a vote. I have no other alternative. I have a motion before the Senate, and if no one wishes to speak on it then I have to put the motion before the Senate for a vote.

Senator Frith: With respect, Your Honour, you do not have to put the motion to the Senate because a point of order has been raised that the motion is not in order; and Your Honour would not put a motion to the Senate that is not in order.

This motion is not in order, in my respectful submission, and therefore it should not be put until the question has been settled as to whether or not it is in order. I have raised a point of order that this motion is out of order for the reasons I have explained.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: You have raised a point of order, but you have not asked the Speaker to rule on it.

Senator Frith: We did.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: You did?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it seems to me that rule 47 does provide a real difficulty with respect to the amendment proposed by Senator Cogger. If the amendment were accepted, it would be a precise re-enactment of the vote which took place a short time ago. When the amendment moved by Senator Hastings was put, those of us who wanted to support it supported the amendment, and those who wanted the amendment defeated voted against it. The effect is to get, illegitimately in my view, a second crack at that vote by voting precisely on the same substance as we did a short time ago.

I thought for a moment that perhaps it was different because we now have a Speaker in the Chair whereas we were then in Committee of the Whole. But the rule is explicit. It does not specify the location. It is the same in substance as any question which during the same session has been dealt with. In my view, that is very difficult, because the same group of persons will be dealing with precisely the same question within a matter of a couple of hours—the same in substance. It simply gives all of us a second chance to vote on the same matter, on precisely the same form.

Part of the logic behind our parliamentary system is that Parliament should not contradict itself in the course of a session. It is a basic law of Parliament that Parliament should not reverse itself on the same question in the same session. The effect of this motion, if put, is to give the Senate an opportunity to reverse itself within a matter of a couple of hours on the substance of the same question, and in my view that really is going pretty far. I do not believe that Parliament was ever intended to operate in that way.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, since Senator Frith has asked the Chair to settle this point of order, if no honourable senator wishes to take the floor in connection with Senator Cogger's motion, may I suggest that we adjourn to give me an opportunity to consult precedents? I will be ready to give my decision in half an hour. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1830)

At 6.30 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Frith has raised a point of order and has asked the Chair to rule on his point of order. First, I shall review the facts. The Honourable Senator Nurgitz moved:

That Bill C-67, as amended, be now read the third time.

The Honourable Senator Cogger moved:

That the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be amended by striking out the new subclause (8) of clause 5.

Honourable senators, it is my opinion that this motion in amendment is in order. Rule 58 is quite clear:

At any time before a bill is passed a senator may move for the reconsideration of any clause thereof already carried.

I do not believe that this contradicts rule 47 in any way, as suggested by Senator Frith. The Senate has not yet made a decision with regard to Bill C-67. It is true that the bill was given second reading and that it received agreement in principle. It was then referred to Committee of the Whole so that the Senate could consider making certain amendments.

The bill has now been returned to this house with an amendment, and the Senate is now considering whether to give the bill as amended, third reading. In my opinion, it is in order for a senator to disagree with this motion by proposing an amendment, as Senator Cogger has done, so that senators can vote against the bill.

[Translation]

I should like to refer honourable senators to Beauchesne, Fifth Edition, citation 802.(1) on page 239, and I quote:

When an Order of the Day for the third reading of a bill is called, the same type of amendments which are permissible at the second reading stage are permissible at the third reading stage with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

Honourable senators, I may also refer you to citation 804 on page 239 and page 240:

There are limitations on the type of amendments that can be moved on third reading. They must be relevant to the bill which they seek to amend. They should not seek to give a mandatory Instruction to a committee. They should not contradict the principle of the bill as adopted on second reading.

Senator Frith mentioned this problem as one that was covered by rule 47. However, I think rule 47 means that if in a session there is a vote on a bill and the bill is adopted by Parliament, we cannot, in the same session, introduce another bill that would contradict the substance of the bill previously adopted.

That is how I interpret rule 47, and I think that in the present case, rule 58 takes precedence. It is clear that Senator Cogger had the right to present his amendment and that is why I declare the motion in amendment in order.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in deference to His Honour, I do not like to disagree with a ruling or to appeal a ruling. However, it seems to me that His Honour has overlooked the fact that rule 47 speaks not of bills but of motions. The conflict that I was raising was not a conflict arising out of a decision on the bill but was a conflict on two motions. Rule 47 makes no distinction among motions for bills, or the reading of bills, or other motions. However, the motion has been adopted. It seems to me that the motion is contrary, but we have put all that on the record. For those reasons, I hope some day that I will be able to persuade His Honour, or someone else, to reverse that ruling. In the meantime I do not think that we will appeal the ruling. I want it understood that we do not agree with it. In case I have to argue my position again, I do not want to be taken as having accepted the ruling as sound.

So that we can carry on, I suggest that His Honour put the amendment and that we deal with it in due course.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sherwood:

That the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be amended by striking out the new subclause (8) of clause 5.

Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

Motion in amendment negatived on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Balfour	Marshall
Bielish	Muir
Cogger	Murray
David	Nurgitz
Doody	Phillips
Kelly	Robertson
MacDonald	Sherwood
(Halifax)	Simard
Macdonald	Tremblay—17.
(Cape Breton)

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	LeBlanc
Anderson	(Beauséjour)
Barrow	Lewis
Bosa	MacEachen
Corbin	McGrand
De Bané	Molgat
Frith	Petten
Guay	Pitfield
Haidasz	Robichaud
Hastings	Rousseau
Hicks	Stewart
Kenny	(Antigonish-
Lapointe	Guysborough)—23.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill, as amended, be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, earlier I moved a new version of the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

It does not involve any changes in the decisions made in Committee of the Whole, since at that stage we did not have the French version. We received it later on.

I am merely proposing a change in wording, not in substance.

I am just suggesting, and I don't know whether it is through a motion on the record or in the bill, that we adopt this version rather than the other one, it being agreed that no change in substance is involved.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if this merely means obtaining leave of the Senate to improve the French version and provide for a better concordance between the two versions, I don't think it is necessary to present a motion. We merely require the unanimous consent of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed, on division.

PAROLE ACT AND RELATED STATUTES

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved third reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatory Act and the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE SENATE

TRIBUTES TO DEPARTING PAGES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just before we adjourn, as I assume Senator

Doody will be proposing we do, may I say that last week, thanks to the hospitality of the Speaker, we had an opportunity, informally, to mention that we will be losing quite a few pages between now and next fall.

At the time we passed Bill C-45, a number of supportive comments about the employees we work with were made, particularly by Senator Muir. Those here in the chamber with whom we work most closely are the pages. Perhaps you will permit me just to put on the record our thanks to the following:

Andrew Johnson, the chief page, who has been with us for four years. He graduated in honours Economics and is now consulting with an international firm before undertaking MBA studies in the fall of 1987;

Caroline Coderre, who has been with us for three years. She will be writing her bar exams in the fall;

Christian Whalen—whose sister, Sybille, you will remember, was a page—has been with us for two years. He will be taking law at UNB in the fall;

Colette Labrecque, who has been with us two years, will be completing an undergraduate degree in the fall;

Nuiok Joyal has been with us for one year and will be completing an undergraduate degree in the fall; and

Bruno Beaulieu, who has been with us one year, will be continuing his studies in the fall.

Still with us in the fall will be:

Brian Rolfes, who has been with us for one year and who will be next year's chief page; and Monique Ménard, who has been with us for one year.

In the fall, when we return, we shall be greeting six new pages. We express our thanks to those pages who have served us so cheerfully, loyally and effectively in the past.

[Translation]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Frith for drawing our attention to the fact that our young friends are leaving us, and I want to thank them for the excellent work they have done for all of us over the years.

[English]

I join with Senator Frith in extending our appreciation, thanks and warmest good wishes to these pages in their future careers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, when I put the motion for adjournment I intend to ask that the Senate accept the motion that we return on Tuesday, September 16, 1986, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Whether or not we will have any business from the other place at that time, obviously, remains to be seen.

However, I do know that we have at least five bills for pre-study before committees. These bills can be considered and, at that point, we can decide what the order of business should be. Therefore, I would recommend that those committee chairmen who are responsible for the pre-studies before their committees make arrangements during the interlude between now and September 16 to get in touch with the appropriate witnesses. I will never be able to use the word "appropriate" again without thinking of Senator MacEachen! In any event, I would ask the committee chairmen to look at the business before them and to try to line up the witnesses in order to be ready to deal with that business during the week of September 16.

Honourable senators, having said that, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g):

That when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 16, 1986, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

In passing this written motion to our chief page, Andrew Johnson, I thank him and the other pages. I also thank all of you for the co-operation we have received during the year. There were times, particularly towards the end of the year, when I would have been pleased if things had gone a little more smoothly. However, it is the function of senators to behave as senators, and I think we have done that as well as we ever could have.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, notwithstanding the motion before us, of course it is always possible that we will be called back here at an earlier date. We do not know precisely when we will be meeting again, but, in any case, I should like to express my warmest good wishes to all honourable senators for a pleasant summer holiday and express the wish that I may see you all in good health and in good form sooner or later.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 16, 1986, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 24, 1986

The Senate met at 4 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE PAUL YUZYK

TRIBUTES

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to make some remarks, to recall some anecdotes and to comment on Senator Paul Yuzyk's role in the Senate. On February 4, 1963, four new and young senators were sworn in to take their seats in this honoured Senate chamber. They were Senator Paul Yuzyk, Senator David Walker, Senator Orville Phillips and your servant. Senator Paul Yuzyk became the longest-serving Ukrainian to be appointed to the Canadian Parliament's upper chamber. His maiden speech on March 3, 1963, entitled, "Canada: a Multicultural Nation", was warmly received by his colleagues. He voiced the concern of several ethnic groups that Canadians must accept the fact that they live in a multicultural nation, not a country of two solitudes comprised of the British and the French.

Multiculturalism was a subject of rancorous debate in the Canadian media when the idea was first brought up by Senator Yuzyk. Now, after more than two decades of acceptance, the concept unobtrusively manifests itself on Parliament Hill during Canada Day when ethnocultural performing groups delight crowds; in the precincts of Parliament, such as in this chamber when former Governor General Edward Schreyer delivered a segment of his installation speech in Ukrainian; and in the dozens of schools in western Canada where children take courses in English and in Ukrainian.

Senator Yuzyk's campaign for multiculturalism was capped in 1971 when the then Liberal Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau, told the nation that the government, after extensive deliberations, would introduce an official policy on multiculturalism. The policy, which committed the government to supporting ethnocultural endeavours, was endorsed by all parties.

During the past two decades, Senator Yuzyk served on a variety of national and international bodies. From 1972 on he was active in the North Atlantic Assembly, NATO, particularly in the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information. In 1977 he was elected the rapporteur of the Subcommittee on the Free Flow of Information and People.

Multiculturalism was just one of the many challenges that attracted the senator. At times his involvement in the fight for human rights at home and abroad consumed a great deal of his time and resources. He was a regular speaker at demonstrations against the abuse of human rights in the Soviet Union.

Additionally, the senator served as Chairman of the Human Rights Commission of the World Congress of Free Ukrainians, and as Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Parliamentary Delegation at Helsinki. When he returned from Helsinki, he was convinced that the role of Russia was a political stunt and that they had no intention whatsoever of honouring their pledge.

When a Canadian delegation went to Russia in 1975, the leader of the group, the Honourable James Jerome, then Speaker of the House of Commons, selected a delegation of four senators and eight members of the House of Commons. The four senators selected were Senator Raymond Perrault, the then Leader of the Government, Senator Paul Yuzyk, Senator William Petten and myself. The U.S.S.R. ambassador in Ottawa refused to provide a visa to Senator Yuzyk because of his role on the International and Canadian Human Rights Commission. When Senator Yuzyk informed me that he had been refused permission to visit his father's homeland, he was very upset and I am sure that he never forgot that event. At that time I told him that he would be with us in spirit and that I would request permission from them to visit the only Catholic church that was open in Moscow. At a state dinner, I did request Mr. Brezhnev's assistant to take me to church, and the whole Canadian delegation of 12 attended Mass. I had also said to Paul that when we visited Kiev, the Ukrainian capital, I would ask to go to church. I did ask President Nikolai Podgorny, who was a Ukrainian, and they took me to the only Orthodox cathedral open in Kiev.

Senator Yuzyk was a member of the Canadian delegation to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, the Madrid Review Conference in 1980 and was a Canadian observer at the 1985 CSCE Human Rights Experts Meeting in Ottawa.

A large number of Ukrainian Canadians revered Senator Yuzyk for his efforts at stimulating the growth of the organized Ukrainian community. He is credited with helping to establish the Ukrainian National Youth Federation, the Ukrainian Catholic Brotherhood and the Ukrainian Canadian Committee. Senator Yuzyk was also a founder of the Ukrainian Student Union—SUSK—an organization which strongly supported his call for a federal multiculturalism policy.

A true scholar who believed that serious study is a prerequisite to career advancement, Senator Yuzyk seemed as at home in the classroom as he did making a speech on the floor of the Senate. He was appointed assistant professor of Slavic Studies and History at the University of Manitoba in 1951 and stepped up to associate professor in 1958. From 1966 to 1978 he was a full professor at the University of Ottawa where he taught part-time courses on Central and Eastern Europe, Russian and Soviet history, and Canadian-Soviet relations.

Among his academic achievements were a B.A. in mathematics and physics in 1945; an honours B.A. in history in 1947; an M.A. in history in 1948 and a doctor of philosophy degree in history from the University of Minnesota in 1958.

As you all know, Senator Yuzyk was a member of many committees. He and I both enjoyed working on Senator Croll's Poverty Committee, and on the Science Policy Committee headed by the late Senator Lamontagne. He enjoyed working on the Foreign Affairs Committee, on NATO, on Defence, and, last but not least, Senator Yuzyk was deputy chairman of Senator Hébert's Committee on Youth.

Senator Yuzyk wrote more than half a dozen books and contributed several opinion pieces to Ukrainian and mainstream newspapers. His work: "Ukrainian Canadians: Their Place and Role in Canadian Life" was considered one of the best works on Ukrainians in Canada. His other published works include: "The Ukrainians in Manitoba: A Social History", which was written with a fellowship from the Manitoba Historical Society; "For a Better Canada", and "The Ukrainian Greek Orthodox Church in Canada", an edited version of his doctoral thesis.

In 1980 the University of Ottawa Press published a widely discussed work: "A Statistical Compendium on the Ukrainians in Canada—1896-1976", which Senator Yuzyk co-edited with William Darcovich.

It was a rare day that Senator Yuzyk, who lived with his wife in an Ottawa suburb, would not spend at least part of his waking hours engaged in one community cause or another. Perhaps his most notable community role was holding the UNA's top executive office in Canada. He was first elected to that position in 1970, when the title was Vice-President. Later, the title was revised to Supreme Director for Canada to better reflect the UNA's role in Canada. Senator Yuzyk was re-elected to that position for the fourth time at the 31st UNA Convention, held in Dearborn, Michigan, in May of this year.

Senator Yuzyk's last official trip was in May 1986 when he travelled to Europe for a meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly.

Because of his enormous work and contribution to all spheres of our Senate duties, I hope and pray that, when the federal government plans an important project or building regarding multiculturalism in Canada, his name will be favoured and considered most seriously. I am convinced that, when historians write about the Senate, Senator Paul Yuzyk will have his name selected for his multiculturalism contribution.

Some three years ago, when the senator was informed that they had found positive signs of cancer, he said: "Rhéal, don't worry; by a severe diet and by being extremely careful, I will beat it." I said: "Why don't you take life easy and relax? You are not eternal; you will be replaced like every one of us." He said: "Yes, I will be replaced; I do not worry. If I live, I will continue to fight for my people; I will continue to serve Him. If I die, I will see Him and live with Him forever."

Well, as you know, on July 9, at the age of 73, after a brief battle with cancer, he passed away.

His funeral was held at the Cathedral-Basilica of Notre-Dame on Sussex Drive in Ottawa, and people came from across Canada and the U.S.A. The celebrants were Metropolitan Maxim Hermaniuk of Winnipeg, Bishop Isidore Borecky of Toronto, Reverend Vladimir Shewchuk, his parish priest, and, with other priests, they celebrated one of the nicest and longest religious ceremonies that I have ever attended, while the Ukrainian Choir of Ottawa prayed and sang for two and a half hours. The six honorary pallbearers were the Honourable Don Mazankowski, Deputy Prime Minister, representing The Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, myself representing the Senate, the Honourable David Crombie, Minister of Multiculturalism, and three of his close friends, Dr. L. Kawula, General J. Romanow and Colonel B. Yarymovich. I was pleased to see such a large turn out, so many senators and members of the House of Commons and, most of all, so many ethnic organizations.

His son, Theodore, asked me at the funeral home if it would be possible to have the funeral procession pass in front of the Senate, and I said: "Why not?" I contacted our Chief of Security, Mr. R. Gladstone, and, with the co-operation of the RCMP, two Mounted Policemen in red tunics were posted on each side of the Senate door. Chief Gladstone and the Leader of the Government, the Honourable Lowell Murray, took the salute. The Honourable Don Mazankowski, the Honourable Royce Frith, Deputy Leader of the Opposition, the two whips, Senator Phillips and Senator Petten, and a group of nine other senators stood at attention while Senator Yuzyk was slowly driven by the Senate door for the last time.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, in concluding I would like to tell Mrs. Mary Yuzyk, who is now in the Senate gallery, how much my wife and I appreciated their good companionship and friendship, and how much I enjoyed working with Paul.

Not only were we sworn in together, but before Paul moved his family from Winnipeg to Ottawa and I did the same with mine we shared the same apartment and here, for three years, the same office.

Paul's unfailing faith towards his creator, his wife and his children was convincing and enriching. His devotion to Ukrainians and all ethnic groups in this country made him a highly respected champion. His contribution to the progress of our Canadian mosaic made him the cultural witness who helped enormously to promote our multiculturalism. Thus Canadians are the envy and enjoy the respect of all nations.

• (1610)

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Bélisle has been so thorough in his research and so accurate in his recollection of his long association with Senator Yuzyk that, speaking for my colleagues on this side, I think I can best start by supporting everything he has said and thank him for his thoroughness and scholarship, particularly appropriate when dealing with our scholarly colleague who left us earlier this month.

I remember Senator Yuzyk when I was a member of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, the B and B Commission as it was called, B and B meaning bilingualism and biculturalism. Senator Yuzyk, quite early in the life of that commission, appeared before it and was an active proponent of what he called the "third force." He and I disagreed on that description because I did not think that the force he was referring to could be said to be a "third force" in the sense that it did not have the linguistic homogeneity that the other two major language groups in the country have. However, that was just a technicality because Senator Yuzyk was more concerned with the force that he was speaking of than whether it was the third force or not. He lived to see his ideals and his work reach important fruition because, as Senator Bélisle has said, although that commission was concerned with bilingualism and biculturalism, it saw most of its recommendations given effect in legislation concerning bilingualism rather than biculturalism, but Senator Yuzyk lived to see multiculturalism recognized as the partner to bilingualism.

As Senator Bélisle has said, the funeral ceremonies that took place earlier this month paid very moving testimony to the impact that Senator Yuzyk had on Canadian life. And I must also reinforce what Senator Bélisle has said about what a conscientious and hard-working and effective senator Senator Yuzyk was.

So while I may not have agreed with him on this question of "third force," I have no doubt at all about how strong a force Senator Yuzyk was in Canadian life and how he will be missed as the ideals he worked for are vindicated in the continuing multicultural evolution of Canadian society.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, having been born and bred in Manitoba myself, I have a special reason for associating myself with the eloquent testimony Senator Bélisle has rendered to the memory and the achievement of our colleague, Senator Paul Yuzyk.

I recall well his first appearance on the stage, if I may put it that way, in my native province where he emerged as a man who was establishing for himself an intellectual reputation, an academic reputation and a cultural reputation which served to underline his views of the contribution which the various ethnic groups could make to the development and growth of our nation. In Manitoba we are sensitive, indeed, to the contribution which so many different people from so many different places have made to the growth and development of our province, to say nothing of the Canadian nation itself.

The appointment of Paul Yuzyk to the Senate was one of the most important appointments, I think, that the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker made during his tenure as Prime Minister of Canada. We certainly regarded it as a great compliment to Manitoba. It was more than that because it gave Paul Yuzyk a platform from which he could speak to the people of the various ethnic groups in the nation and from which he could speak to all Canadians about the values he held so dear and which were so important to life and to growth.

[Senator Frith.]

It was not multiculturalism as such, although that was so important to him, but what lay behind it, namely, human rights, the rights of individuals in this somewhat difficult world. It was the devotion he had to democratic, representative and responsible institutions of government that prompted him to lift his eyes from the Canadian scene, where he was indeed a leader, to take part in the international proceedings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and other forums where he had an opportunity to express to the world the ideals for which he stood and to speak for those people in other countries who could not speak for themselves and to whom he felt a special obligation.

We will always remember his contribution to the development of democratic, responsible institutions, his fearlessness in calling attention, wherever he was, to what he felt was wrong and unjust in the area of human rights and his dedication to the principle that the various ethnic groups of this country make a special contribution and that it should be recognized for what it is, part of the very web and woof of our nation.

Paul Yuzyk was given a great opportunity and he made the most of it and we, now, have reason to be grateful for his effort and his contribution.

In making these few remarks about our distinguished colleague whose departure we mourn, I should merely conclude by saying that I know I speak for all in this chamber when I offer a word of sympathy to those whom he leaves behind and hope that they will take comfort in the many happy memories they have of our departed colleague.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words in tribute to Senator Yuzyk. Perhaps I may speak on behalf of the Committee on Youth of which he was a member and where he gave expression to his enthusiasm, his tolerant attitude, his kindness and his love for young people. His contribution to the committee's work was absolutely invaluable. Wherever the committee met, as soon as he spoke, he immediately made witnesses feel welcome and at ease. With him, we all felt we were in the presence of a holy man.

I also knew him as a teacher. He taught me a number of things. Some of us are wise when we enter the Senate. Some lack that wisdom and are sometimes inclined to talk too much. Senator Yuzyk took me aside and explained, very kindly, how this august chamber worked and how to go about getting the best possible results. He was the first one to try. I don't know whether he succeeded. But I am deeply grateful to this gentleman who was not a member of my party and who wanted to help me change for the better.

As an immigrant, I also want to say a few words about Senator Yuzyk. When people wonder about the contribution made by immigrants to Canada, they should look at Senator Yuzyk's contribution in the area of multiculturalism and the contribution made by the various ethnic groups in this country. Those of us who belong to groups other than the two founding nations cannot but be very proud. He projected an image of these groups that was so grand and beyond the human scale of things that if we have a good name in this country, we can say we owe it to him. He set standards for us to achieve, and few of us will be able to live up to those standards. Honourable senators, thank you very much.

● (1620)

[English]

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to join with our colleagues who have just spoken in paying tribute to our friend and colleague, the late Honourable Paul Yuzyk, who served both our country and this institution with dignity and distinction. I shall never forget him. He was a man descended from Ukrainian immigrants, a man who never forgot his roots and who practised and developed further the values of the rich Ukrainian culture and the values of his deep Christian faith.

Having earned a Ph.D. degree in history through hard work and through his talents, he rose in the academic world, not only teaching history as a full professor but, in particular, letting his students know what Canada really is—a country made up of people from various parts of the world who are learning to live in harmony and to share the richness of their cultures with their fellow Canadians.

When I first came to know Senator Yuzyk in the early 1960s, at a time when I served in the other place, I grew to admire and respect him more and more as we took part in the work of many parliamentary committees and associations, especially the North Atlantic Assembly and bodies such as the Canadian Association of Slavists, where he was one of the first to use the word “multiculturalism” to explain what it is and means to Canada.

He was also a great fighter for human rights, always abhorring prejudice and fanaticism. He was able to unite many people to work in harmony toward achieving those aspirations which we as Canadians have before us at all times as a society that lives in harmony and values its roots.

I appreciated in particular Senator Yuzyk's support and advice when as a minister I had the responsibility of implementing the federal government's policy on multiculturalism, which was announced in the other place by the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau on October 8, 1971. Senator Yuzyk was always a voice of reason, moderation and mutual understanding.

In paying tribute to Senator Yuzyk, I wish also to express my appreciation for the work he did in the Parliamentary Sponsoring Committee of the Baltic Nights on Parliament Hill, which not only is a popular event but is one entrenched as a tradition; an event appreciated not only by members of this house and the other place, but also by the other ethnocultural communities which sponsor this event.

As was said, we shall miss Paul very much, and we promise to take up the challenge which he has left us, a challenge to make Canada an even better place in which to live.

On this occasion I should like to express to his wife Mary and her family our deepest sympathy in their great personal loss and sorrow.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as several of our colleagues have already indicated and as all those who served with our late colleague on various parliamentary committees, on Senate committees and in parliamentary associations can attest, he was an exceptionally devoted senator.

[English]

He was, as Senator Roblin has pointed out, zealously devoted to human rights. He represented this Parliament in monitoring the Helsinki Accords, and no parliamentarian was better informed or took a closer interest in that subject.

Senator Yuzyk was a scholar and an historian specializing in Slavic studies and history, and most particularly in the history, culture and language of the Ukrainian people.

Senator Bélisle has mentioned the eminent prelates of the Ukrainian Catholic Church and the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, the Roman Catholic Church, and representatives of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, all of whom took part in the religious service at his funeral on July 14 at Notre Dame Basilica. Even more touching, I thought, was the presence of youngsters in the uniforms of the youth groups which Paul Yuzyk had formed, encouraged and led all his life; of members of the Royal Canadian Legion—for he had served with the Canadian Army in the 1940s—and of the host of friends and admirers, many of them of Ukrainian ancestry, who saw in Paul Yuzyk the personification of the multicultural ideal in this country.

● (1630)

Our late colleague knew not only the history and culture of Ukraine, but the incredible saga of the Ukrainian people in Canada, especially western Canada. In his own time—and he made reference to this in the last published interview he gave a few days before his death—he had known racial prejudice and discrimination. He had seen the gap between the ideal and the reality in our country, and he laboured all his life to close that gap. To all who came under his influence, his message and his example was one of equality and tolerance, of pride in one's culture and confidence in Canada.

On behalf of the members of the government, I extend our condolences to his wife and family on their personal loss and to the Ukrainian Canadian community on the loss of a distinguished son and leader who will have a special place in their memories and in their history.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I should also like to tell Mrs. Yuzyk that the Speaker of the Senate joins with all senators in saying that the absence of Senator Yuzyk will be deeply felt in this institution. We will always have the fondest memories of him.

[English]

To Madame Yuzyk and her family I offer my most sincere sympathy.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

REPORT TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Privacy Commissioner for the period ended March 31, 1986, pursuant to section 40(1) of the Privacy Act, Chapter III, Statutes of Canada, 1980-81-82-83.

INFORMATION COMMISSIONER

REPORT TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Information Commissioner for the period ended March 31, 1986, pursuant to section 40(1) of the Access to Information Act, Chapter 111, Statutes of Canada, 1980-81-82-83.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PAROLE

RELEASE OF DANGEROUS INMATES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is a rather unusual question, but this is an unusual session. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to provide me with the names of the 54—or 56, 75, or whatever the number is—dangerous inmates who, allegedly, will be released from institutions in the next two months?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall inquire of my colleague the Solicitor General to see what information, if any, can properly be divulged on that matter at this time.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the information has already been supplied to Mr. Greg Weston of the Ottawa Citizen—not only the list of the names of the 54 inmates but their offences, their mandatory supervision release dates and their warrant expiry dates—is it unreasonable of me to ask that the government leader make a phone call to the Deputy Prime Minister or to the Solicitor General and make available to me that list before we commence discussion of Bill C-67 this afternoon?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend is now asking me to confirm the authenticity of a report which was apparently carried in the Ottawa Citizen—a report which I have not seen. However, I shall make the inquiry that I undertook to make in answer to his opening question.

[The Hon. the Speaker:]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the Senate adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with respect to being recalled, I have no objection to the motion that we be available. However, to avoid uncertainty, could we set a firm time to meet, say, at 8 o'clock? In that event, if the House of Commons has completed its deliberations before then, we will have time to complete our work after 8 o'clock or perhaps even after 7 o'clock. That would give all of us some certainty as to how to plan the next few hours at least.

Senator Doody: My reason for wishing to adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell is that I have been given to understand that there is a reasonable expectation that the bill will get through the House of Commons by 4 o'clock or 5 o'clock this afternoon. It is close to 5 o'clock now and the bill has not yet arrived. However, if there is a possibility that the bill will reach us within the next few minutes, then I think it might be appropriate for us to return quickly.

Perhaps honourable senators can tell me whether they would prefer to have the house adjourn to reassemble at the call of the bell or adjourn until 8 o'clock?

Senator MacEachen: Eight o'clock.

Senator Hastings: Perhaps 7 o'clock.

Senator Doody: It may be a bit difficult for us to reach consensus on this within an hour.

Senator MacEachen: Why don't we say that we will adjourn to reassemble at the call of the bell, but not before 7 o'clock?

Senator Flynn: Perhaps we could say that if the bill does not reach us before 5.30, we will come back at 7 o'clock.

Senator Doody: The latest suggestion I tender, then, is that if the bill has not reached us by 5.30 we will return at 7 o'clock. Would that be acceptable?

Senator MacEachen: That is splendid.

Senator Doody: If that is acceptable, then perhaps we should leave it at that.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that we will adjourn until 5.30 or, alternatively, 7 p.m.?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1900)

At 7.09 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

PAROLE ACT PENITENTIARY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—COMMONS DISAGREEMENT WITH SENATE AMENDMENT

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons, which reads as follows:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, because this House believes that the National Parole Board is better structured and experienced to deal with all matters of fact relating to the prediction of violent behaviour and that public safety is properly preserved through decision-making being kept with the Board.

When shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a question, if I may, with respect to the message. I presume that the paper we have on our desks is a copy of the message. I should like to know to whom in the Senate the message is addressed. Is it addressed to the Speaker, to the Clerk, or is it addressed—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): To the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: —to individual senators? What is the mode of transmission of the message from the House of Commons to the Senate? His Honour has stated that a message has been received. I should like to know who has received the message.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the message states:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the amendment—

It is quite clear that the message is sent to "Their Honours". The Senate is the recipient of the message from the House of Commons, and that is stated quite clearly in the message.

Senator MacEachen: So, the mode of transmission is directly to each individual senator and not to the Speaker or to the Clerk, because there is no person identified in this communication from Mr. Koester. I should like to know what the procedure is.

Senator Doody: It is the usual procedure.

Senator MacEachen: It is not addressed to the Speaker, it is not addressed to the Clerk, it is addressed individually to each of the senators.

Senator Doody: The message states "that this House disagrees with the amendment", and so on. The message is sent to the Senate to acquaint honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: But who received the message on behalf of the Senate?

Senator Doody: We, collectively.

Senator MacEachen: That is an impossibility. As the honourable senator realizes, it is not possible for us to receive the message collectively unless we gather together.

All I want is clarity. When a communication comes from the House of Commons to the Senate, the Deputy Leader of the Government has said it comes to the senators collectively; that states quite clearly that it comes directly to the senators, not to the Clerk and not to the Speaker. That is what I should like to have established.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I stand to be corrected on this, but it seems to me that the standard procedure is the form in which this message has been sent. We have been, almost on a daily basis, the recipients of messages from the House of Commons informing the Senate of changes in committee membership and of various other actions which the House of Commons wished to acquaint us of. This is the form that has always been used.

Senator MacEachen: It is a form which states that the Senate directly receives the message, not the Speaker or the Clerk, and that, therefore, the only way it can be received directly by the Senate is to have it sent individually to each senator, as was done in this case.

MOTION FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENT

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move:

That the Senate do not insist upon its amendment to the Bill C-67, intituled: "An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act", to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on a point of order, do we add that additional phrase to the Clerk's Scroll which we have received but which does not contain the phrase "to which the House of Commons has disagreed"? Do we add that? Presumably we do.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I do not know what the status of the Clerk's Scroll is. I do not know what bearing it has on this particular set of circumstances. To date, until now, we have preserved and followed the standard procedures of this chamber. I suggest that it is probably in the best interests of all that we continue to do that.

Senator MacEachen: I do not know either what the status of the Clerk's Scroll is, but if it has any status it is imperfectly drawn, because it does not contain the motion as read by the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, may I be permitted a question? Are you not going to ask for leave to present this motion?

Senator Doody: Leave is not necessary for a motion of this sort.

Senator Hastings: What authority are you citing for giving that opinion?

Senator Doody: I have taken the precaution of checking the precedents established in this chamber. I have found two, one in 1959 and one in 1974, in which amendments were not accepted by the House of Commons. Debate went forward immediately on their receipt, or later that day in one case, and I can cite the particulars.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Without notice and without leave being asked?

Senator Doody: Without notice and without leave being asked. The first one I call honourable senators' attention to occurred on July 18, 1959. I can say that precedents are not easy to establish, because Senate amendments and rejections have not been very numerous. The composition of this particular chamber in the past has seen to that.

In any event, a message was sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that the House disagreed with an amendment to Bill C-48 in July of 1959. The honourable Senator Aseltine moved, seconded by the honourable Senator Choquette, that the motion be taken into consideration later that day, and, the question being put, it was resolved in the affirmative and later that day, pursuant to the Order of the House, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the message from the said House of Commons with respect to Bill C-48 entitled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act." That was then proceeded with.

On December 13, 1973, the Senate amended Bill C-176 and sent it back to the House of Commons. The Commons did not agree to the Senate amendment. On Friday, January 11, 1974, the House of Commons sent a message to the Senate, as follows:

• (1910)

THE HON. THE SPEAKER: Honourable senators, a message has been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that that house does not concur in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-176, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act.

The Speaker asked when the message would be taken into consideration, and Senator Martin, the government leader of the day, said, "Later this day." Some honourable senators said, "Now."

Then a debate ensued over whether it should be considered right away or later in the day. The government leader carried the day, so the motion was debated later that day.

On both of those occasions no leave was requested and no leave was granted; nor was the question of leave even raised.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is certainly worthwhile putting that on the record, because our rules would clearly indicate that one day's notice would be required under section 45.(1)(h), which states:

45.(1) One day's notice shall be given of any of the following motions:

(h) for the making of a substantive motion;

I think that this is certainly a substantive motion. I imagine that leave would be given anyway, but it does seem to me that one day's notice is required under our rules.

Senator Doody: As Honourable Senator Frith suggests, I think it is important that it be placed on the record of the house. However, with reference to our own rules, perhaps notice should be taken of section 46(i) also, which states:

46. No notice is required of the following motions:

(i) for the consideration forthwith or on a future day of Commons amendments to a public bill;

This could very well be considered, I would think, as a Commons amendment to a public bill.

Senator Frith: That would be a bit of a stretch, I think, but so would the other one.

Senator Doody: That is right. In any event, this has been the habit or custom of this chamber.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, on that point, from a procedural point of view it seems to me that it is perfectly clear that when there is a rule stating that notice is required to deal with a substantive motion, that rule dominates the situation and cannot be set aside by a precedent in which it is not clear whether there was tacit acquiescence to the waiving of the notice requirement. In other words, in the face of the clear rule which Senator Frith has quoted, I do not regard that the precedents govern the situation, because it could very well be that there was a tacit agreement; but even if there was not a tacit agreement the rules can still be invoked and made to operate.

I want to make it absolutely clear that we are operating on the assumption that leave has been granted to waive the requirement for notice, because this is clearly a substantive motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, speaking to the point of order, I would draw the attention of the Deputy Leader of the Government to rules 44(1) and (2). Rule 44(1) states:

Two day's notice shall be given of any of the following motions:

Rule 44(2) states:

A like notice is required of any inquiry not relating to a bill or other matter appearing among the Orders of the Day or on the Order Paper.

With the greatest respect, I think the motion you have made falls within the category of other matters appearing among the Orders of the Day.

Senator Doody: The situation we have before us is one that was undoubtedly brought about by the composition of the chamber. During the previous discussions the numbers were somewhat different, and it would seem that it was more difficult to proceed along the lines I suggested earlier. Obviously, we are in the hands of the Senate, and the Senate can do what it wishes. I am simply pointing out what the Senate did in the past, when there was a majority in that party and it was on this side of the house, and I am saying that I think that is the way we should proceed this evening.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think it is clear that we are ready to proceed, but I do think it is important that the point made by Senator MacEachen be noted so that this evening does not take its place as an occasion where precedents, which we do not think apply, are reinforced.

In any event, we can proceed if it is clear that we will not have this cited to us on another occasion as if we acquiesced in the application of those precedents.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In any event, I understand that leave has been granted that we should proceed. Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with respect to the motion before us, my understanding of parliamentary rules is that I am not permitted to discuss the principles of the bill, the policy of the government in proposing this bill or its policy generally with respect to penitentiary and parole matters; rather, the debate is to be confined to amendments. I trust, then, that you will allow me a few minutes to cover a few matters.

I do not want to get into the question of urgency. That debate, as those of us know who have been watching either in person or on the parliamentary channel, has taken place in the other place. We are not even here to discuss the principle of the bill, because, indeed, both houses passed the bill. The amendment that we agreed to here did not affect the principle that persons who are dangerous offenders ought not to be released by some method—whether it be a parole board or by the courts—but should remain incarcerated until the warrant expiry date. For instance, if a person has received a nine year sentence, he is to be released on the three hundred and sixty-fifth day of the ninth year. He is not, as our current law under mandatory supervision allows, to be released—assuming parole has been refused—after two thirds, or the sixth year point in the case of my example.

I wish to reiterate so that we are all clear that that is all we are discussing, because that principle has been decided, notwithstanding the comments of my good friend Senator Hastings, who attempted to make the case before us when we sat on July 2 that this was foolhardy and we were postponing the inevitable and that these people, because of illness—and I accept what he says—will not be able to help themselves, whether we release them at the six-year point or the nine-year point, and we are having a problem with them. I remind Senator Hastings, as I reminded him then, that to carry that to its logical conclusion means that we might as well never send anyone to a penal institution because ultimately they will be out and ultimately they will commit another offence.

Certainly those people—I do not mean to be unkind to them, and I think Senator Hastings referred to them as being sick—are sick; I accept that. We have an innocent society out there which it is our responsibility to protect.

● (1920)

Regrettable as it may be, there clearly must be within the penitentiary system a method of detaining such people as long as we possibly can, because that will reduce the number of offences.

Honourable senators, we agreed on July 2 that the Parole Board, being a board constantly sitting, determining and assessing risks, should continue to do so. That board makes the assessment that a certain prisoner is a bad risk and that he should be detained until warrant expiry. The only question before us today relates to Senator Hastings' amendment, which states that after a decision has been made, for example, refusing mandatory supervision in a case which the Parole Board would consider to be a high risk case, that person should have the right of appeal to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction in the province in which he or she is confined.

Honourable senators, I would repeat that section 18 of the Federal Court Act allows appeals—albeit on law, albeit on procedure, albeit on jurisdiction; but it allows appeals. Senator Hastings made the case that we are dealing with the right of liberty of the subject, and I respect that. I believe that when it comes to such matters we have to be especially careful. He talked about the hearing that takes place at the back of a prison. Senator Hastings has forgotten to remind us about the fact that what was formerly put in regulations will now be spelled out in the act with the passage of Bill C-67. Bill C-67 sets out all of the various procedural matters which have to be followed. A breach of those, I would suggest to all honourable senators, would leave open to the Correctional Service under section 18 of the Federal Court Act an appeal to the Federal Court. I suggest to honourable senators who may have practised some law in this field that that would violate those rules and would clearly leave open a question of appeal, and probably a successful appeal.

In any event, honourable senators, we are clear in our determination, as was the House of Commons, that some method must be made available to protect the public by having some persons, because of illness or otherwise, remain in custody until the expiry of their warrant.

I should also like to mention that having watched a good deal of the proceedings in the House of Commons, the principles of the bill—and I appreciate that I am not entitled to speak to them so I will not enunciate those principles—were, indeed, approved by the Honourable Bob Kaplan, the justice critic for the Liberal party in the House of Commons. He supported those principles. Other speakers, whether impliedly or explicitly, did similarly.

What is the situation now? The House of Commons has dealt with the bill. There was some suggestion by honourable senators that the various reports of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs were not considered. I will say to honourable senators that that may or may not have been the case, but they have now been considered and, in a rather decisive vote in the late afternoon today, the amendment as proposed on July 2—whether in the view of some it was well-framed or not does not matter—was defeated in the House of Commons. The House of Commons, after consideration of the Senate amendment, has rejected the notion of an appeal on fact, because, in essence, there was already—and I am sure that Senator Hastings would agree—an appeal in law. Senator Hastings' argument has been rejected, as can be seen from the message from the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, on July 2, as recorded at page 2798 of the Debates of the Senate, Senator Hastings stated:

I have done all I can in loyalty to my conscience to convince honourable senators and to convince the government of my conviction that this legislation is inadequate. As an appointed official, I cannot block the will of an elected government.

Without getting into much deeper discussion regarding legislative roles, I would suggest, honourable senators, that many argued strenuously that our point of view was not taken into account by the House of Commons. It has now been taken into account. That amendment has been defeated and we are now back to considering Bill C-67 and what we will do with respect to the Hastings amendment. I would suggest, honourable senators, the House of Commons having spoken, we ought to pass the motion as before us, remove the amendment and proceed with the final passage of Bill C-67.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, like my distinguished colleague I shall try to confine myself to the message we have received from the House of Commons and to the motion by the Honourable Senator Doody in response to that message, but I think in fairness I should comment on a few happenings and sayings which have taken place since the Senate adopted that amendment on July 2.

I believe that some very irresponsible statements have been made by members of this government. I don't know whether they have any knowledge whatever of administering penitentiaries, but when they engaged in this numbers game from 30 to 54, to 74 or 75, I wonder if they knew what pressure they were putting on CS officers in the penitentiaries tonight. They have built a straw man out of public protection and that is why we are here today. As was demonstrated by witness after witness who appeared before us, there is not one iota of public protection contained in this bill. This we heard from witnesses who deal with prisoners every day and have some knowledge of the problems.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

It is time to stop this rhetoric, because you will place the officers of the Correctional Service in an unprecedented, impossible position over the next few weeks. At the outset we were told by the minister that that involved only a handful; we were told by the Commissioner of the Correctional Service that it involved about one hundred; and we were told by Mr. Outerbridge that he really did not know, and that is probably the most logical answer with respect to the numbers involved. These statements are dangerous.

• (1930)

I plead with the Leader of the Government in the Senate. At least he acted responsibly—he said that there may be an element of public safety. But his colleagues, including the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, are inflaming the public. They are inflaming the public about a situation that simply does not exist. Not only are they inflaming the public, they are inflaming men in custody.

The fact is that the Evaluation and Projects Division of the Canadian Correctional Service recently completed a project. One of the conclusions was that "there is no statistical information available on the exact number of offenders who are both mentally ill and dangerous." That is the correct situation—there is no information available. But this numbers game is completely misleading. If we were to say that this involved 75 in two months, that would mean 450 a year, and that would involve an institution that we do not have. But still it goes on. Having inflamed the public and the inmates, those men who faithfully discharge their duties to us are placed in an impossible position.

I will not comment upon any other portion of the bill, such as that having to do with the one-shot remission or the sunset clause that we amended in 1983. I will not make the comment that the distinguished Solicitor General has not seen fit to include the Senate in any review of this bill that is made in three years. That is history now. But I do intend to comment upon the statements that have been made about this institution, our conduct and our proceedings here.

I should like to inform the editor of the Toronto Globe and Mail that if I, as an appointed Canadian senator, am not at liberty to use my best efforts to recommend to the government better legislation in the light of what little knowledge I have, then why am I here? Why did the people of Canada pay my expenses to visit the institutions in the prairie region and Kingston to gain a little more information so as to deal with the bill? All honourable senators can ask that question. Why the hell are we here, if it is the will and the wish of the public of Canada that, when the House of Commons passes a bill, we rubber stamp it? I believe that my responsibility is to do the best I can to make my best effort to examine legislation and, if possible, to improve upon it. I believe, with respect to any issue, that I have a responsibility to bring that issue up for public discussion.

It is interesting to see the change in the trend of this discussion that has gone on over the past four weeks. There is more balanced reporting now, and the public is coming to the conclusion that there is no public protection whatsoever in this bill. It is unfortunate that we have been called here on this occasion. The recall of Parliament is an occasion reserved for declarations of war, the settlement of national strikes or any national emergency. We have been called here to deal with this bill and the actions of this government, which are political in nature and have nothing whatsoever to do with public protection.

Senator Walker: Nuts!

Senator Hastings: So you say, sir.

Senator Walker: Yes, I do.

Senator Hastings: With the vast knowledge of Senator Walker on penitentiaries, I am sure that he knows what it is all about. He was not here for any discussion; he was not here for any committee meetings, yet he can say "nuts" tonight.

Senator Walker: I have listened to your hot air for years.

Senator Hastings: You are going to listen to a little more tonight and it may be late in the morning before we finish, so just relax.

Senator Walker: You are crazy enough to do it.

Senator Hastings: You are crazy enough to listen.

Senator Walker: Don't be silly.

Senator Hastings: I wish to comment, then—

Senator Walker: Comment.

Senator Hastings: I shall continue, sir.

Senator Olson: Don't let him bother you.

Senator Hastings: He doesn't bother me. I just consider where it is coming from.

Senator Walker: Those are old clichés. We want to get down to business here.

Senator Hastings: Is Senator Walker raising a point of order? Would he like to make a speech? I will sit down.

Senator Walker: You have no order, so go ahead, get it over with.

Senator Hastings: As I was saying, there is not one iota of public protection in this bill. I will not quote Mr. Outerbridge when he said that it will have no effect whatsoever on violence in society. I will not quote the article by Victims of Violence in Society, who said that the people will be satisfied or placated for the moment, but they will take revenge on the government when they see exactly what this bill is all about. I will not comment upon the overwhelming evidence given by the people who work in the voluntary agencies throughout Canada—those people who dedicate their time to assisting the inmates—who have told us that there is nothing to this bill. I will not comment with respect to the people who work in our penitentiaries, who deliver a service daily—and it is a discredit to this government that it did not take the time to go and talk to those people who walk the ranges of our penitentiaries every night—who know what the score is. What did they tell us? They told us that there is not one iota of public protection in this bill.

As to remission—and I say this for the benefit of the editor of the Toronto Globe and Mail—there is no law in Canada that provides for the automatic release of an inmate at the serving of two-thirds of his sentence. There is no such law. Section 12 of the Canadian Penitentiary Act says that an inmate in an institution, with the exception of those serving indeterminate sentences or life sentences, can earn remission. Every inmate can earn remission so as to be released at the serving of two-thirds of his sentence if he follows the rules of the institution. If an inmate applies himself to the programs of the institution, he can earn remission. When an inmate enters an institution there is a contract entered into.

There is lots of time, senator, don't worry.

Senator Walker: I am worried about you. I think you might take a stroke.

Senator Hastings: A stroke? I have my nitroglycerin right here to keep me going.

A social contract is entered into between the government, the people of Canada and the inmate. He is told every month that he has earned so much remission. We have made an agreement to release him for that period of earned remission that he can serve on the street under mandatory supervision. No matter what anybody may think, no matter what anyone has agreed to, the men we are dealing with regard this as a contract. When all else fails—when parole or other release plans fail—the inmate has his earned remission, which he has obtained on his own merits, and he is looking forward to his release.

Now, however, through this bill, we grant authority to the parole board to summarily break that agreement and tell an inmate that he has to remain in custody. Honourable senators, when we call a man a violent man, he may just react as a violent man. We may have to pay the price of labelling people this way. I still maintain that it would be far better to release him on mandatory supervision and to have him supervised during that period of his remission in society.

Let me bring to the attention of honourable senators the case of an inmate recently released from a penitentiary. This inmate was totally incompetent, totally dysfunctional. He talked to the devil half of the time and to God the other half of the time. He was very dangerous when alcohol was involved. In May came the day of release and the Correctional Service of Canada, to its credit, took him under escort to his own province. It had him examined by the local regional psychiatric centre, which declared him psychoschizophrenic but would not commit him. To the credit of the Correctional Service of Canada and the parole officer, it released him. He did not take his pills, but sold them. The parole officer cancelled his mandatory supervision and put him back in custody. Honourable senators should make their decision as to which was the better way to release that man: under mandatory supervision, under the supervision of a parole officer, who watched him carefully, and the minute he broke parole he was brought back into custody; or, as is proposed by this bill, hold him until warrant expiry and let him go without any supervision whatever. But that is what we are going to do.

● (1940)

Now may I deal with the question of "Why the board?"

Senator Walker: Come back to the issue.

Senator Hastings: I am back to the issue.

Senator Walker: You have been way off it all evening. Go ahead.

Senator Hastings: I hope that Senator Walker will take part in the debate and stop his blubbing over there. He should get up and take part, and play his role as a senator.

Why the board over a judicial review? Why the board over a judicial appeal? It is appropriate, says the minister. I guess it is appropriate. It is the easiest way. It is the simplest way. As I said, the meeting is held in a penitentiary—a "hearing" it is called. The inmate is aware of what is taking place only by way of a statement which is given to him by the Parole Board. The accuser decides what the accused shall hear. The accuser decides what information, what documentation, shall be made available to the accused, the inmate. Counsel is available, but all that counsel can do is make a statement at the end of the hearing. Counsel cannot cross-examine. Counsel can just make a character reference after whatever evidence is unfolded. He has no opportunity to cross-examine.

It seems to me—and I am not learned in law—that "beyond doubt" is thrown away and "reasonable doubt" will now be substituted.

I guess it is "appropriate". I guess it is much easier that way. Senator Nurgitz indicated—and he is learned in law—what a wonderful hearing it will be. I hope that when he closes the debate he will explain to me—as one who is not learned in law—what fundamental principles of justice will prevail at that hearing.

We are told by the former Solicitor General that the judiciary does not want the job. I do not doubt it. I do not doubt it because I think that the judiciary is well aware of the failures with respect to prediction and the inability to accurately predict. The judiciary is well aware of placing men in custody who do not have to be there. But we persist in this dream world, honourable senators, notwithstanding all of the evidence that is available that we cannot predict, and we legislate laws based on predictability.

The Solicitor General has stated—and I believe that Senator Nurgitz also stated this—that thousands of decisions are made by this almighty board, about which the former Chief Justice of Canada had occasion to comment.

What is the record? First, let me deal with the eleven men that were gated in 1982. When the Solicitor General appeared before us he said that five stayed out and six were returned for an offence. He was careful not to say "violent offence"; he said "offence". What does that tell us? Out of eleven men they were wrong 45 per cent of the time; but had they had their way all eleven would have stayed and completed their sentence until warrant expiry. That is a 45 per cent failure.

[Senator Hastings.]

With the best evidence that I had available, I am suggesting to honourable senators that out of those eleven, instead of six coming back we would have had nine or ten. That is why I am saying there is an element in this law of creating violence, because of the men who were prepared to go out and do their best, 45 per cent—I want honourable senators to remember that figure—did not have to stay there. But keep them there; and if we keep them there, in those warehouses of violence, we will probably find that we have a violent man on our hands who was deceived with respect to his remission, who was held in custody. We have broken our agreement with him.

Briefly let me deal with the statistics with respect to this great decision-making authority of the National Parole Board. I want to tell honourable senators that in the ten-year period ending December 31, 1984, out of 15,000 released on parole—on parole after a complete examination by the Parole Board, with all of its vast knowledge—there were 37 homicides. That is one every three months. There were 238 crimes against the person and 259 robberies.

Moving over to mandatory supervision, under mandatory supervision there were 95 murders and 734 crimes against the person. Honourable senators may think those figures are large, and they are. I would agree that there are 95 murders too many. But the fact is that those released under mandatory supervision represent 3.02 per cent of 27,000. On the parole side it is 1.79 per cent out of 15,000. So there is not much difference: 1.79 per cent to 3.02 per cent—three to two; and that is after the Parole Board deals with the best inmates available, the first offenders—those under three years. Their record should be much better than the man whom we keep and let out at two-thirds. So it is three to two. That is their great decision-making ability.

We had figures presented to us in committee which indicated—I want to be accurate—that during that same period, from 1975 to 1984, of the number of people released on parole—that is, 15,000—the number that successfully reached warrant expiry was 8,315 or 54 per cent. The number of men released on mandatory supervision who successfully reached warrant expiry was 14,123, or 52 per cent.

● (1950)

Where is the great decision-making ability of this board with ratings like these: 45 per cent of inmates who are gated successfully complete mandatory supervision, 54 per cent of inmates successfully complete parole and 52 per cent successfully complete mandatory supervision? The fact is that it is very hard to prejudge a person's ability or his conduct. When it comes to making a decision with respect to what an individual will do under a given set of circumstances, it is a most error-filled process. We do not know. I could never undertake to indicate what anyone in this chamber would do in a certain set of circumstances, and that is what it is all about.

We are told that an appeal system would reflect on the integrity of the board. Surely a board that is wrong 50 per cent of the time could withstand the scrutiny of a superior court. All court decisions are appealable to the Supreme Court of Canada. Why cannot this great board of political appointments withstand such scrutiny or examination in the interests of justice—an examination that would be carried out by a court of competent jurisdiction? Such a system is much more appropriate.

I hate to repeat it, but we in this chamber have maintained the same position since 1974, as indicated in our work on parole, our work on Bill S-32 and our work on this bill. Always we have thought that it would be better to vest the decision-making process in a court of competent jurisdiction. Senator Nurgitz was present in 1983 when the former Solicitor General accepted our suggestions for a judicial review. He said at that time, "I am more than satisfied with the amendment." He was part of the committee that asked for the amendment. Senator Nurgitz held that view until June 13, when he prepared the report of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. Somewhere between June 13 and July 2 he changed his mind. I am wondering if he is now dissatisfied. Is he dissatisfied that we have no amendment in this bill? Is he dissatisfied that the government will not accept our suggestion? I hope that when he closes the debate he will respond to these questions. I hope that Senator Flynn will take part in this debate, because he was present at the meeting in which we reaffirmed our belief that such decisions should be made by the courts.

Senator Flynn: I don't have enough time to explain the situation.

Senator Hastings: He is a former Minister of Justice and a former Leader of the Government in the Senate, and he was a member of the committee of 1983 that insisted that a Liberal Solicitor General give us the amendment. I hope that Senator Flynn will take part tonight and tell us that he still insists on an appeal to a judicial body.

Senator Flynn: Stop repeating the same thing!

Senator Hastings: Senator Barootes—and I hope that he will take part in the debate—was present at the meeting of the committee that drafted the first recommendation which said that we reaffirm our belief in the judicial decision-making process. I hope that he will tell us what has happened since June 15. I ask the senators opposite to share this information with me. I may join them.

Senator Walker: You are nothing but a windbag. This is the fourth time I have heard you give this same speech.

Senator Hastings: Hang around, sir.

Senator Walker: You ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Senator Hastings: I do not know how long I have listened to the honourable senator blubber away in this chamber, but I have never interrupted him. Any time he has had something to say, I have listened with rapture and interest.

Senator Walker: If I were like you, I would resign.

Senator Hastings: I hope the honourable senator will offer me the same consideration. He is sitting over there with his pal on the right blubbing and bellyaching.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order!

Senator Hastings: Senator Doyle was present at that meeting of the committee.

Senator Flynn: Come on!

Senator Hastings: All I am asking is that he tell me what happened between May 13 and July 2, because I would like to change my mind to support this motion.

Senator Flynn: You are really pushing it.

Senator Hastings: I am sure that if it impressed these honourable senators it would impress me.

Senator Flynn: You can never change your mind on an obsession.

Senator Hastings: The motion is that we do not insist upon our amendment. It is a great ray of light. We are not going to insist on a decision we made. We are not going to insist on the decision we made in 1974. We are not going to insist on the decision we made in 1983, and we are not going to insist on the decision we made in May 1986. I think that we should insist. At least we should give it the consideration it deserves. This is the first time in a number of years that we have had a message from the House telling us that they do not agree with us. I do not think that we should simply say, "That's it." We were right the other times. If we were not right, then we were wrong. Perhaps the motion should be to refer the message to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to give the bill further consideration with respect to clause 5. If we were right then, I say we are right tonight. I say that we should be prepared to give further consideration to this bill.

Honourable senators, it is very easy to lead those apostles of retribution and vengeance that are so prevalent in society today. It is very easy to take up the cry, "Lock 'em up," which is second only to, "Hang 'em," and purport to get out in front and lead with such a bill. With the greatest respect, that is precisely what the government has done. I repeat, the government is not protecting society one iota. It has sown the wind, and I suggest that it will reap the wild wind with this legislation.

Senator Walker: Why don't you sit down now.

Senator Hastings: I am just about ready. Don't worry. Are you still awake? Hang in there.

Senator Walker: I am trying my best.

Senator Hastings: Are you listening?

Senator Walker: I have heard this four times before.

Senator Hastings: I hope, sir, that you live to hear it again, because I have no intention of giving up what I think—though you may not agree—are the important rights of individuals. It is the right of an inmate to release. Honourable Senator Nurgitz said in his speech that if we accept his advice we will never put anybody in jail. That is not true. I am not arguing about putting people in custody. I am arguing that they must be released when they are entitled to be released.

Senator Nurgitz: When did I say that?

Senator Walker: That is a total fabrication.

Senator Hastings: That is something you have no regard for. You have no regard for the commitment that was made to an inmate on the date of his arrival in the penitentiary; you have no regard whatsoever for that remission which he builds up and no regard whatsoever for that one thing that these men can depend on.

Honourable senators, I think this bill is worth much more consideration. This is a problem that must be dealt with devoid of all this political rhetoric that is taking place. That is quite possible, and I assure honourable senators that if and when the discussions cease in this institution, it will move to another forum, and I thank God for the Supreme Court of Canada which has a different conception—

Senator Flynn: And it will be there.

Senator Hastings: I can never be there.

Senator Flynn: No, I say the court will be there.

Senator Hastings: It will be before the court. I can assure you that the first detention order that the board makes will be before the court.

Senator Flynn: You have not invented it.

Senator Hastings: I can assure you it will be before the courts, and I thank God again for the Supreme Court of Canada which has a much different conception of the rights of Canadians. The Federal Court of Canada has already ruled in the case of Howard vs. Stoney Mountain Penitentiary that remission is the right to liberty and freedom. The Federal Court has also ruled—

Senator Flynn: That is not the issue.

Senator Hastings: The court has also ruled that in any hearing with respect to that remission the fundamental rules of justice must apply. They have ruled that counsel must be present and, in effect, when counsel is present, counsel must have the right to cross-examine.

Senator Flynn: They can still do that. This bill is not changing anything.

Senator Hastings: I know that Senator Flynn has never been to a Parole Board hearing or he would not make that statement.

Senator Flynn: I do understand what the discipline of the court is.

Senator Frith: Let him finish.

Senator Hastings: In any event, honourable senators, if it has to move from here—although I think there is still work to be done—I say thank God for the courts of this land that have a different conception from that of the former Solicitor General and the present government as to what constitutes the rights of Her Majesty's subjects, whether they are in or out of prison.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, there have been a few changes in this chamber since I was here last. I should like to begin tonight by offering my congratulations and best wishes to Senator Murray, the new Leader of the Government in the Senate. He has already had a wealth of experience in his political career, and he now has a marvelous opportunity to serve both in this house and in cabinet and to make a special contribution to Parliament and to our country. I wish him well.

[Senator Walker.]

I wish to thank the former Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Roblin, for his support, his courtesy and his good humour with me, personally, as I began my work in this house.

An Hon. Senator: As with everyone.

Senator Fairbairn: He and I will be bonded together for eternity for our efforts and ultimate success on the sugar-beet future in western Canada.

Senator Frith: The sugar-beet kids.

Senator Fairbairn: He is fondly remembered there and I hope he will now be free to attack other western problems with even greater vigour and persistence.

Honourable senators, I have spent some considerable time reviewing the file on Bill C-67, particularly the recent events since I was unable to be here on July 2 when the Senate last met. It is not my intention to prolong this debate by rehashing all the old arguments. I fully support the splendid speech given by Senator Hastings on this bill on July 2, and also the speech by the Leader of the Opposition on the responsibilities of today's modern Senate.

As a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, and most particularly of the sub-committee which held lengthy discussions at eight penal institutions across the country, in the west and in Kingston, I remain firmly convinced that inmates should have recourse to the courts if this Parliament decides to pass a law which can change the nature of their sentence on the basis of prejudgment of future acts of violence.

If I had any doubt about the necessity of a recourse to the court appeal process, those doubts would have been blown away by the actions of the government in the last three weeks. The government has insisted, as it is certainly its responsibility to do, that the Parole Board is the most appropriate agency to decide on who the high-risk inmates will be and to be sure that in the future they are not released on mandatory supervision at two-thirds of their sentence but, rather, that they remain safely in jail until the end of their sentence.

That is a wrenching responsibility for any person or group of persons, and one which demands great care, study and independence of decision. For, unless our system of justice changes, those prisoners within our penitentiary system who are not there on life sentence or indeterminate sentence do have rights to earn remission by good behaviour towards release on mandatory supervision at two-thirds of their sentence. When this bill becomes law, the Parole Board must make judgment on evidence presented to it that interferes with and overrules that process, that system; a procedure that breaks that legal contract.

The Senate amendment which was moved and adopted in this place on July 2 provided for a court appeal of a Parole Board decision. That amendment has been rejected by the government and, through its majority, by the House of Commons.

The government, which has sat on this legislation for months, all of a sudden senses an urgency which demands immediate passage of this bill. Minister after minister, as indicated by my colleague, has stated that public safety demands it, otherwise violent criminals will be roaming the streets. In an excess of zeal to justify this newly discovered urgency, the government has used what some people have described as scare tactics. The former Solicitor General, early in July, warned that perhaps some 30 of Canada's most dangerous offenders would be released this summer and that the Senate was jeopardizing public safety. The Prime Minister told us that failure to pass the bill as it was would put on the streets of Canada during the summer some people who, according to the House of Commons—not the Parole Board, but the House of Commons—ought not to be there.

In recent days we have had the Solicitor General's department estimating that there were some 50 of these dangerous inmates in question; the Deputy Prime Minister has increased that number to 56, and only last week the Solicitor General said that there were between 54 and 75 potentially violent inmates to be released between now and the end of October. In fact, today he told the House of Commons that there were between 100 and 150 of these inmates, 40 of whom are eligible for release within the next three months.

Honourable senators, there is one question I would like to ask tonight: What is left for the Parole Board to decide? The government has declared that anywhere from 30 to 75 persons, upon becoming eligible for release on mandatory supervision, are to be affected by this bill within the next three months. An expectation has been raised—again in terms of public anxiety or public fear—that those inmates will all be kept in jail. Where does that leave the board? How can the board now begin a careful and fair assessment of whether or not someone might do violence when released, when the government has already told Canadians to expect 75 candidates for release under mandatory supervision to be kept in prison? Can any of us now be fully confident that the board will be able to make these decisions free from pressure?

● (2010)

There is no question in my mind that the statements of recent days have already lowered the credibility of the National Parole Board to act in this matter, and the only winners in this game will be the lawyers as they take aim at the courts under the Charter of Rights.

That is not what the National Parole Board was set up to do, and it certainly did not ask for that job. There are a great many people inside and outside the prison system who strongly believe that this type of decision is a decision for the courts. I noted only yesterday in an article appearing in the Ottawa Citizen a comment by Justin Ciale, who was described as the architect of mandatory supervision when it was brought in in 1970, and who is a former member of the National Parole Board. He said "there is absolutely no way of anyone—certainly not the Parole Board—predicting violent behaviour."

Honourable senators, another aspect of this debate that bothered me—and the new Solicitor General touched on it in his appearance before the Committee of the Whole of the Senate on July 2—related to his justifying the reasons for the choice of the Parole Board rather than the court or others. He made the point, repeatedly, that the members of the House of Commons had studied the bill for many months and it was their judgment that the Parole Board could best handle this, based on evidence which they had heard. He said that they made a reasoned and rational decision after hearing all of the evidence.

I have looked over the list of witnesses who appeared before that committee and can say that they came from various places, many from within the government, but they did not come from within the prison system. The Commons committee did not go out to talk to people within the prison system. Over and over we were told during the Senate committee deliberations on this bill that there was no problem within the prison system regarding the provisions of the bill. It seems that this assurance may have gone back to October of 1985 when the Commissioner of the Correctional Service of Canada told the House of Commons committee that he had travelled to institutions in the summer of 1985 and found no problem at all with the provisions of the bill from within those institutions, in terms of such issues as morale or tensions within the prisons.

Honourable senators, that certainly is not the story that members of the Senate committee heard when they visited penitentiaries over the last few months. Unlike the House of Commons committee, the members of the Senate committee talked directly with authorities at all levels—administration, psychiatric, vocational training, educational training, representatives of the prison guards, inmates' committees and John Howard and Elizabeth Fry workers from both inside and outside the institutions. In several cases, there was a very incomplete knowledge of the legislation and its application, even though it had been a matter of public knowledge for many months. I think it is fair to say that there was a majority preference that the value judgment on these dangerous inmates should come via the courts rather than the National Parole Board. Everywhere there was apprehension about the effect of the cancellation of releases under mandatory supervision for inmates currently serving their sentences, not after the bill might become law, but those who were already sentenced and serving those sentences. Everywhere there was apprehension about the effect the bill would have on the emotional equilibrium of the conditions within the penitentiaries.

Everywhere, also, there was concern about the inability to predict the nature of future behaviour of individuals. This was particularly bothersome to some very sensitive prison personnel who admitted to us having been completely wrong on occasions when they were certain they were completely right in their private predictions of the potential for violence or, indeed, potential for integration of inmates into the community after their release. With their day-to-day observations and their knowledge of the prison behaviour and prison network, they were dead wrong in their assessments.

We in the Senate committee from both sides of the house spent a great deal of time trying to grapple with this dilemma, and for that reason the committee issued two interim reports during its pre-study of the bill, as well as reports on the committee's visits to penitentiaries in the west and in the Kingston area. We did that so the Solicitor General and the government would be fully aware of the depth of the committee's concern and of the direction of its thinking well in advance of the passage of the bill by the House of Commons.

Against that background, it was regrettable to hear the former Solicitor General, Mr. Beatty, accuse senators of using "bad faith" because the Senate did not rush out a final pre-study report.

This morning, the current Solicitor General made similar criticisms of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee of the Senate for dragging its heels on the pre-study of Bill C-67. He suggested that it had been granted the right to conduct the pre-study last December and that it had not proceeded to that until late February. He also suggested that the government had deliberately delayed action on this bill because it was waiting for the final report on the pre-study conducted by the Senate committee.

Honourable senators, the chronology of events as stated by the minister does not tell the story of the committee, and if this is to be entered into in debate, let us take a look at what the committee was doing during the time referred to by the Solicitor General. The committee had before it the pre-study of the divorce legislation, a high priority of the government; the committee dealt with the prostitution bill, a high priority of the government; the committee was given the lotteries bill—perhaps the most sloppy piece of legislation the house has seen for years, and which had a built-in deadline of December 31. The committee met that deadline. That was of high priority to the government. The committee was given the electoral boundaries bill in December and got to it in January, an extremely high priority of the government. At the end of January the committee began its pre-study of Bill C-67, not late February, as indicated by the minister.

While the committee grappled with other issues of high priority, such as the employment equity bill and the RCMP amendments bill, the committee worked very hard both inside the committee and around the country in the penitentiaries during those weeks leading up to June. That is the record, honourable senators. The facts clearly indicate that the government was fully aware of the Senate's specific concerns relating to this bill in the middle of May.

It is somewhat contrived, even for this government, to seriously suggest, as the Solicitor General did this morning, that the government was delaying and waiting for the Senate to speak before bringing forward the legislation which is now seen as so urgent that we are sitting here this evening in emergency session. If any honourable senator believes that line of reasoning, Senator Frith tells me that there is a pile of swamp land down in Florida at bargain-basement prices that we should take a look at.

[Senator Fairbairn.]

• (2020)

Let us be quite clear on what has happened here in the Senate. We did not defeat a bill. We did not gut the bill. We did not dispute—and let us be clear on that—on either side of this house, the claim that there are dangerous criminals who will resort to violent means on their release, whether on mandatory supervision or at the end of their full term. Not even the inmates' committees would argue that point. Finally, we did not even oppose the designation of the Parole Board as the instrument to prejudice potential violence. What we did was suggest another element of protection, namely the availability of an appeal to the courts for inmates who have earned their remission but are deemed by the Parole Board to be ineligible for release on mandatory supervision. We added that amendment quickly, and then we passed the bill immediately in one day.

In my view, honourable senators, given the truly agonizing nature of this problem, and given the immense effort which had been made to seek the best solution for a segment of our population—which is all too easy to totally ignore and abandon—we in this house would have abrogated any shred of responsibility we have, collectively or as individual senators, had we not made a final effort to try to change the government's decision. This is not just an isolated piece of legislation without any context; it is part of our whole judicial system that governs the rights of all individuals in our society as well as the protection of those individuals.

It has been said by critics of the bill, as well as by witnesses from within the government, that this is a band-aid solution and that we are tinkering with the system. Let us be frank, honourable senators: we are tinkering with the system. We are taking a short-term approach in response to genuine fears that criminals who have already been violent and destructive once will be violent and destructive again. Our conclusion is to let the Parole Board decide the potential for violence and rescind what amounts to time off for good behaviour to these inmates and to slam the gate on them. The inmates are locked up; it is a perfect solution. The inmates are locked up, the government is off the hook, Parliament has acted, the public is relieved, and our tinkering has kept us away from one more crisis: another headline for now. But then we again run smack into our judicial system, because we have to let these inmates out finally and, when they have completed their sentences, we have to let them out angrier, potentially even more destructive and totally without supervision of any kind. By playing with the system we all end up losers; there are no winners here.

As we consider the bill surrounded by all the controversy, all the doubts, and all the legitimate fears, we in this chamber should resolve right now that the larger issue of reform must not be dropped but must be accelerated.

There is a sentencing commission report which is due in September; there is the Correctional and Criminal Law Review which should produce suggested amendments to the government by spring; there is the whole question of how to deal with dangerous offenders who should be kept in mental institutions rather than adding turmoil and tension to our penitentiaries. We need more facilities for these people and not less. There is the question, very germane to this discussion, of why the courts are avoiding the Dangerous Offenders Act, which enables a judge to hand out indeterminate sentences, if so judged. As of July 9 of this year there are, I am told, only 58 inmates sentenced under the Dangerous Offenders Act in Canada. This act has been used sparingly, to say the least, and when it is used it is only in the provinces of Ontario, Alberta, and British Columbia.

There is also the pressure now to seek alternative punishment in the community for a number of crimes rather than using incarceration as the only solution. There is the pressure to deal with overcrowding in our penal institutions all across this country. The single biggest fear in terms of violence and destruction in our prisons is double bunking, jamming people together—the disturbed, the depressed, the violent, the young and the old—two to a cell, a practice described by everyone we talked to in the prisons as akin to throwing a match into a drum of gasoline. This is a practice that is increasing, as we learned, as the prison population grows and the expansion of facilities is cut back.

Honourable senators, I can only conclude that if nothing else has been accomplished by this debate on Bill C-67 over these months, over these past days and weeks, it has at least focused a spotlight on the dark side of our society which, in the interests of either a concerned public or of those who still have a life to lead in prison and eventually back in the community, cannot be ignored. And, honourable senators, finally, it has also put a spotlight on the Senate and the work we do here. We do work, and we work well together in this legislative chamber and in its committees. When I look around at my colleagues on both sides of the house, I feel invigorated by the experience, the knowledge, the wisdom and the skill that is concentrated here. I am proud to be a part of it, and I have learned an enormous amount since my appointment two years ago.

I read the comments of the government leader, Senator Murray, on July 22 on what, in his view, was expected of the “modern” Senate, when he asked us to: “Stay on the path of moderation, conciliation, quiet diplomacy, persuasion, and common sense,” in our relations with the other house. I would like to think that I am a thoroughly modern senator; so is Senator Murray. I agree with everything that Senator Murray said. He is absolutely right.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Fairbairn: I have watched all of those techniques being used successfully in the past two years in one way or another. But, honourable senators, in our capacity as legislators—to rethink and suggest and persuade—there is nothing sinister and nothing wrong in extending that persuasion to the occasional amendment when quiet diplomacy falls on deaf ears. We are not affronting our elected colleagues in the House of Commons—not at all. We are not thwarting our elected colleagues in the House of Commons. What we are saying is: We are partners in this legislative institution called Parliament and we want to urge you one more time to have a look at an alternative, because we have an honest disagreement. That is not a wrong thing to do, honourable senators; it is a right thing to do in a modern, working Senate.

The House of Commons has looked at our alternative; it has rejected it; and we are now dealing with that decision at the earliest opportunity. When it is resolved, however it is resolved, then we will get on with other issues. Until at some point the Senate undergoes a constitutional change, and perhaps gains greater direct powers through election here, in my view we must get on with our work as active parliamentarians in a constructive and thoughtful way. That is certainly why I am here.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the motion before us is that the Senate do not insist upon this amendment to Bill C-67. I can think of scores of reasons why we should insist on our amendment, and one reason why we should not.

Many of the reasons we should insist on it have been outlined by Senators Hastings and Fairbairn. We have always been against this bill. We were against it when it was a Liberal bill and we are against it when it is a Conservative bill. That is the first reason we should insist on the amendment—that is, for the sake of consistency.

We should insist on it because it is a good amendment, taking into account the fact that the bill purports to do something that it is not going to be able to achieve. It purports to reduce violence in our society. It purports to do that by telling people who have been put in prison and told to behave themselves that they will get a reduction of their term, remission, for good behaviour. Honourable senators, that is a very important tool in our penitentiary system, because it encourages good behaviour and makes the administration of penitentiaries that much easier. Passage of this bill will mean that any remission a prisoner may have accrued will be wiped out or can be wiped out by the Parole Board, which has a totally different job within the system, and can be wiped out without any appeal. The public are told that they should be worried if it is not passed, because it will solve that problem. That is another reason why we should insist on the amendment. We should really insist on defeating the bill because it is flying false colours.

Given that the bill is going to pass, or has been passed, there is the potential for abuse with no judicial input—except, as Senator Flynn says, there is the provision of section 18 of the Federal Court Act. In terms of the psychological dimension, if prisoners are gated by the Parole Board, they will understand what it means if the Senate has given them the right to appeal. It is a good amendment; it is good for the administration of the penitentiaries; good for the prisoners; and good for the people of Canada. Those are reasons we should insist on it.

Another reason we should insist on this amendment is that it was treated irresponsibly by the government. In its first reactions the government did not say that it was an interesting thought and perhaps there was some merit to this amendment. No. After the House of Commons had passed the bill and dumped it here and the members had run off to their cottages, they had the guile and gall to say that the Senate was endangering public safety because it had amended the bill. The truth is, even if the bill had been passed without the proposed amendment, the same situation would have existed. The responsibility was with the House of Commons for not waiting around; it was not with the Senate. That was a decision taken by the former Solicitor General. I have looked through the clippings and so far as I can see the present Solicitor General did not take that position. If he did not, I compliment him on that. He never made the deceptive, exploitive statement made by the former Solicitor General. I must say, having known that gentlemen for some time, I was genuinely disappointed in his remark. He has only two ways of explaining his remark. Either it was a callous, cynical exploitation, for political purposes, of a misstatement of a situation or he did not understand what he was saying; and I know he is too bright for it to have been the second alternative. I hope the new Leader of the Government—

Senator Murray: Who voted against the amendment.

Senator Frith:—who voted against the bill, as it turned out, with his colleagues—

Senator Murray:—as amended. That is why we are back here.

Senator Frith: As the leader knows, that would have made no difference. I hope the new Leader of the Government in the Senate, who is, admittedly, here to do the government's work in the Senate but is still the only representative the Senate has in cabinet, will mention the matter to his colleague Mr. Beatty and say to him, "Perrin, that was an unfair bum rap you laid on the Senate." Knowing Senator Murray, I know he will do that. That is another reason we should insist on it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: That is the only good reason.

Senator Frith: Another reason the government should have accepted this amendment is that it is a good amendment, and that is why we should insist on it.

The government will have some real problems with retroactivity. I would ask Senator Nurgitz to consider the fact that several provisions of the Penitentiary Act will be repealed in order to implement this system. Section 35 of the Interpretation Act states:

Where an enactment is repealed in whole or in part, the repeal does not

(c) affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued, accruing or incurred under the enactment so repealed;

That is another reason why we should insist on the amendment.

Another reason is that the House of Commons does not seem to understand what this bill is all about. They sent a message to us today which states:

—this House disagrees with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, because this House believes that the National Parole Board is better structured and experienced to deal with all matters of fact relating to the prediction of violent behaviour and that public safety is properly preserved through decision-making being kept with the Board.

[Senator Frith.]

The board does not have that jurisdiction now, so what do they mean by, "... kept with the Board?" Have they heard about the Supreme Court of Canada, which said that the Parole Board did not have the right to do that? Even in the official message they sent to us they have shown that they do not really understand what the bill is all about.

Now we are told that the House of Commons has considered our position and, therefore, we should not insist on our amendment. I do not believe that they have considered it at all. I do not believe that it ever entered their minds to accept this amendment. Therefore, their statement that they have considered the amendment and the position that we took carries no weight and washes not at all with me.

Those are some of the many reasons why we should insist upon our amendment. In this case we are right and they are wrong and that is why we should insist on our amendment.

● (2040)

Now I will come to the one reason why we should not insist upon it. Notwithstanding that we are right and they are wrong, notwithstanding all of these reasons to insist, the fact is that we are not an elected body. It is our job—and I believe that we classically fulfilled our job in this case—to expose the weaknesses of this bill. We proposed an amendment. We drew to the attention of the people of the country and to the media the weaknesses of this bill. We passed a good amendment, an amendment that we can be proud of. If the majority of the elected representatives still give us the back of their hand, then I suppose they should get away with it. Among the many reasons why we should insist there is that one reason why we should not.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I plan to make some comments upon this particular motion—comments largely based upon those made today by the Solicitor General in his address to the House of Commons. That is one reason why I wish to make some observations. There is another reason, which is that this is quite an important debate for "the modern Senate", because, for the first time in quite a number of years, the Senate has broken out of a pattern. It has broken the pattern of refusing to participate more fully in its legislative role. For these two reasons I want to make a number of observations.

I was surprised at the comments made in the House of Commons today by the Solicitor General. He said:

Let me also say that I very much regret the necessity to call the house back. We are here today because Canada's appointed Senate acted at the last moment—indeed, after this house had risen for the summer—to impede a vital piece of legislation, Bill C-67, an act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act.

The first point to be made is that the Senate acted at the last moment because it received the legislation at the last moment. The two companion bills, one of which is Bill C-67, arrived in the Senate on the last day of the session. As I recollect, those were the last two bills sent to the Senate from the House of Commons.

The Senate acted at the last moment because it could not act earlier—the bills did not come any earlier from the House of Commons. I believe that that comment of the Solicitor General was, to say the least, misleading and incomplete.

Honourable senators, Bill C-67 was introduced in the House of Commons on June 27, 1985, and it reached the Senate precisely one year later. The Commons had the bill for a full year while the alleged time bomb was ticking, threatening the safety of the Canadian people. When the bill arrived in the Senate that Friday, surely no one who knew the history of the bill could have expected that all necessary waivers would be granted to have the bill passed in all its stages on a Friday afternoon in order to have it enacted into law through Royal Assent that evening. What respect would any of us have for Senator Hastings—

Senator Walker: None.

Senator MacEachen: —if, in the light of his advocacy of the principles that he has espoused tonight, he gave up his right, a right which is conferred upon every senator by the rules, to consider a bill as it moves through certain stages, first reading one day, second reading the next and so on? He simply asked that the rules be obeyed, and the government called the Senate back—quite properly, we had no objection—on July 2. That was the date chosen by the government. In the meantime, the government knew full well that the house had departed, that Royal Assent could not be given to this bill until the house returned and that the time bomb would go on ticking until Royal Assent was granted.

It was interesting that, despite the time bomb Mr. Perrin Beatty said was ticking and threatening the safety of Canada, neither the Leader of the Government in the Senate nor the Solicitor General would give any assurance that Royal Assent would be given to Bill C-67. Nevertheless, the Solicitor General said that the reason we are back is that the Senate acted to impede.

On July 2 the Senate put the bill through all of its stages. The Senate gave the bill to the government after one full day of debate.

Senator Flynn: As amended.

Senator MacEachen: As amended, and I will come to that.

The bill was before the House of Commons for a full year. It came to the Senate on June 27 and was dealt with on July 2. It seems to me that to accuse Canada's appointed Senate of impeding the bill is untrue and inaccurate.

I find it even more irritating to have the Solicitor General make that comment in view of what occurred at third reading. Senator Nurgitz rose in his place and moved the third reading of the bill as amended. Presumably, he wanted to advance the bill, to have the bill adopted. Otherwise, if he did not want the bill adopted, there was no necessity to move the third reading. I repeat that he did move the third reading of the bill as amended. Then his Conservative colleagues said, "On division." We all know that those words are used by a party when it wishes to oppose a bill without voting against it. If we on this side had taken the same attitude as that taken by the Conservatives, the bill would have at that moment died in the Senate of Canada and would have disappeared. It was the Liberal majority in the Senate that ensured not the impedance of the bill but the survival of the bill.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

• (2050)

Senator MacEachen: No wonder the people of Canada, in a poll today, asserted their disappointment at the performance of the government. This is just another example: to move that a bill be advanced and given third reading, and then to oppose it. That is what we saw. I would rather the Solicitor General did not refer to these matters, because it would spare me the embarrassment of recalling that painful moment when the Conservative Party in the Senate really did not know whether it wanted the bill or did not want it. But we know from the Solicitor General that he wanted the bill.

Having made those comments which might be regarded as marginally political, I ask honourable senators: What did the government have in mind when it sent this bill to the Senate on the last moment of the last day of the session? Surely it did not think very much about what it was doing, or it hoped that everyone in the Senate would be asleep at the switch. I must say that I regard the action of Senator Hastings on that Friday as responsible and worthy of respect.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: Certainly not worthy of contempt; and I believe that the Senate acted responsibly on July 2 in clearing the bill in one day even though we did make an amendment. Those are the facts.

Senator Flynn was not in the Senate when those painful events took place. He was not present, but I was, and I saw the disarray that existed over this bill. I say to honourable senators that if the Solicitor General wishes to make an impression he had better not use this kind of misleading statement in defence of his bill. He goes on to say:

There is only one guarantee I can offer you, and that is that every further day of delay jeopardizes the safety of law-abiding Canadians.

He said, "every further day of delay jeopardizes—

Senator Frith: There is something for you to laugh at, Jacques.

Senator MacEachen: —the safety of law abiding Canadians." What about the delay from July 2 to July 24? The Prime Minister said, "We are not going to recall Parliament," and the former Solicitor General said, "We are not going to recall Parliament." Then the new Deputy Prime Minister said, "Yes, we want to recall Parliament," and finally the new Solicitor General said, "Yes, I think we ought to." What about the confusion between July 2 and 24, and what about the jeopardy to the safety of law-abiding Canadians during the five months when this bill languished in the House of Commons? After the legislative committee made its report in the House of Commons, the bill sat there for almost five months before it was called by the government. There is only one guarantee that I can give honourable senators. It is that every day of that five months jeopardized the safety of law-abiding Canadians, and for that the government should be condemned for negligence, if not for a greater crime.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: So please do not attack the Senate. It is interesting, honourable senators, that in the course of the past two or three weeks the focus of attention in the press has gradually become directed at the government and its handling of the bill—and, more than that, there is a growing concern and anxiety about whether this bill will do precisely what its supporters say it will do. Yesterday there was a full page article in the Ottawa Citizen raising deep concerns about the claims made in support of the bill. In my opinion, if the Senate has done nothing else, it has done a big thing in elevating the consciousness of the Canadian people about this problem, and I believe it has laid a time bomb for the government, because as time goes on we will be able to observe the impact that this bill and its enactment will have—an impact along the lines that have been so carefully explained by Senator Hastings.

I read another passage from the remarks of the Solicitor General in which he said that the Senate amendment had already been considered and rejected by the House of Commons. I cannot find that that is a true statement. The Solicitor General said:

All that the Senate amendment did was to revive the issue from a different angle; not a new angle, I should add, but an angle that had already been considered and rejected by the House.

He goes on to say that the honourable member for Burnaby had moved this precise amendment in the House of Commons—and so he did. It was ruled out of order by His Honour the Speaker in the House of Commons, and accordingly it was never considered and never approved or rejected by the House of Commons.

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator MacEachen: Because it was ruled out of order by the Speaker.

Senator Flynn: For what reason?

Senator MacEachen: Because, the Speaker stated, it went beyond the scope of the bill.

Senator Flynn: That is very interesting.

Senator MacEachen: This chamber did not reach that conclusion, nor did anyone raise a point of order against the validity of the amendment. Today it was put to the House of Commons and no points of order were raised. Perhaps we are having a little impact over there. They took the trouble to debate the amendment in the House of Commons. Though it is true that the government majority defeated the amendment, I believe that the debate was won on its merits by the opposition in this case. That is my view.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Flynn: It is irrelevant anyway.

Senator Frith: As irrelevant as some of the comments of some honourable senators here.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, when the Solicitor General was in this chamber and we had an opportunity to discuss the bill with him quite frankly and openly, I asked him why in his view it was preferable for the Parole Board, rather than the courts, to make the final decision with respect to the gating of prisoners—because we had not decided at that point to move an amendment; we did not decide until after we had heard from the Solicitor General. All that the Solicitor General could say was that since the House of Commons had made a decision that the Parole Board should make the final decision, since the House of Commons had reached that conclusion, the Senate should therefore reach a similar conclusion. He may be right, but I wish he could have given us some reasons. Unfortunately, he did not give them to us. However, today in the House of Commons, in dealing with this question, he said:

The reasoning is as follows: The length of a prisoner's sentence is clearly a decision for the courts. A detention decision, on the other hand, affects only the manner in which the sentence is served—whether all of it should be served in incarceration, or the last part back out in society but under supervision. It is a decision based on risk assessment. It is, in other words, like a parole decision, and the National Parole Board makes thousands of these risk-based decisions every year.

I admit that that was an effort by the Solicitor General to back up his assertion. I have reflected upon this point while following the debate in the House of Commons and while listening to the assertions of Senator Hastings and Senator Fairbairn as to the nature of the bargain that apparently has been entered into between an inmate and the system; namely, if an inmate shows good behaviour, at the end of a certain period that inmate is automatically released. That system has been in existence in Canada for quite a long time. It is understood by inmates, by attorneys and by correctional authorities. One receives a sentence, but if one behaves properly one will get out after serving two-thirds of that sentence. In a sense, it is a bargain that has been entered into.

● (2100)

I would like to read a few paragraphs from a paper which I had prepared in my office. It reads as follows: Gating, it must be remembered, is an extraordinarily unusual procedure. It, in effect, provides for the retroactive and unilateral breach of the contract which exists between the correctional system and the inmate. Not only is it a decision that applies retroactively, but it is one that is made on the basis of possible harm that may occur only in the future. I would add parenthetically that the decision to extend is not based upon bad behaviour, because in this process good behaviour has to take place before a right to mandatory supervision arises. The decision to gate is based upon a future prospect and is a judgment reached by, in this case, the Parole Board. The next sentence is: Since an inmate now has an absolute right under law to be released on mandatory supervision, gating amounts to the imposition of an additional period of incarceration for an offence that might be committed some time in the future. The Canadian Criminal Justice Association found the proposed retroactive alteration of sentence to be "repugnant to our basic legal principles" and found it difficult to reconcile with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This can be found in the hearings of the legislative committee of the House of Commons.

I find the Solicitor General's reasoning very suspect when gating, in effect, amounts to an additional sentence. It could amount to two years, three years or more. It is an additional sentence imposed by the Parole Board which, in my view, in the view of those on this side of the house and in the view of others in former days, should at least be reviewed by the courts. That is the nature of the amendment.

Honourable senators, determining the merits of the case has been for me a very interesting problem. They are not clear cut. It is far from clear cut that results will be achieved. Is it better to keep a person in prison for those additional two or three years or to put him under a supervised program in the community? What does the extension of the sentence do to the mental outlook of the inmate for the rest of his stay in prison and when he or she completes the sentence? As has been said by Senator Fairbairn, may you not be releasing a more angry and anti-social individual than is released under the present system? It seems to me that these are very deep questions. In my view, it is because they are deep and because the answers cannot be clear cut that it would be a mistake for the Senate—having made the point, having brought the matter out in the way it has done, having debated it and having had it referred to the House of Commons where a clear-cut decision was taken on the amendment—to insist on the amendment when despite the opinions that prevail, the merits are not in my judgment absolute. They cannot be regarded as absolutely certain one way or another.

Apart from that, as Senator Frith has pointed out, an elected body has dealt exclusively with this amendment in a special session and has found it unacceptable. I was in government long enough to understand one rule of cabinet—that there may be acceptance of a general conclusion, even though there is disagreement. In other words, acquiescence does not always carry with it internal intellectual assent or consent. That is the situation in which I find myself today. I can accept the conclusion of the House of Commons as a principle of law or an enactment or an operation, but it does not carry with it the convictions that would prompt me to abandon this amendment. Nor does the Solicitor General's argument in which he draws an artificial distinction between a decision on detention and a decision on sentence sway my view. It is a pretty artificial distinction.

Honourable senators, that is my point of view with respect to how the Senate has behaved. Tonight the decision on the amendment will be put to the Senate. Of course, we will not oppose. We will not make it impossible to have the motion that has been moved by the Deputy Leader of the Government accepted, for the very reasons Senator Frith and I have stated.

We have broken new ground. We have discovered that the House of Commons is prepared to consider an amendment from the Senate and that democracy is still functioning in Canada. The House of Commons met, and apart from statements by one or two members, no explosive blows were issued against the Senate. The merits of the amendment were discussed. I think that that is progress. It encourages me to believe that in the future the Senate can take on a responsible legislative function, and that it will not be deterred by the rejection of the amendment today, because the exercise has been wholly beneficial to the Senate, to democracy in Canada and to this particular issue. I know that Senator Roblin has his view on the role of the Senate. Senator Murray repeated that view on July 2. I have a different view. I think that we on this side of the house will responsibly take similar action in the future where circumstances warrant it.

It is worth remembering something that has been ignored by many, certainly by the Solicitor General in the House today, namely, that the principle of the amendment which was pushed in this case in the Senate by a Liberal majority on July 2 against a Conservative government was pushed in the past by Liberal and Conservative senators against a Liberal government. Mr. Kaplan, at the insistence of the Senate and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, came to accept in 1983 the view of the Senate that a judicial process should be involved in gating. So we did not invent a new principle to embarrass a Conservative government.

Senator Flynn: It was a Senate bill.

Senator MacEachen: We know that it was a Senate bill, but it was still a public bill. Do you mean to say that the role of the Senate is different—

Senator Flynn: No, I do not—

Senator MacEachen: —with respect to a bill introduced in the Senate and one introduced in the House of Commons? That does not stand up at all. The fact is that the Senate, in this case, treated the Liberal government and the Conservative government in precisely the same way. It would seem to me that it would have been shameful conduct on the part of the Liberal majority to back away this time simply because it confronted a Conservative government. I think, deep down, honourable senators appreciate that.

This has been an interesting debate. I am sorry that only Senator Nurgitz has participated so far. Perhaps my comments will stimulate Senator Flynn to rise now and reply.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to make a few remarks before Senator Nurgitz closes the debate on this motion. I believe that he would like me to remind him that he left a wrong impression of what this amendment does to Bill C-67—and I am sure it was not intended. I say that because my experience with the mover of this motion is that he is usually fair and objective. He uses a lot of common sense under this present government just as he did in the Senate and in the committees under the previous government. I want to be very fair about that.

Yet today Senator Nurgitz tried to make the argument, I think, that this amendment has something to do with public safety; that it has something to do with who will make the recommendation as to whether or not there will be earned remission. In my opinion he should clarify that, because, although I accept some of his arguments, I do not accept the one that there is anything herein contained other than an appeal to a court of competent jurisdiction respecting whether or not mandatory supervision or remission is to be granted. In my opinion that is all that is involved in this amendment. The rest of this bill, which the Senate and the other place have passed, dealing with changes respecting what is done with the last third of the sentence, is not part of this amendment. This amendment gives the inmate the right to appeal to a court of competent jurisdiction against a decision that he thinks may be unfair, a decision that will be made by the National Parole Board, and that is all.

I was not here on July 2, but I read the proceedings very carefully.

Senator Flynn: You missed us.

Senator Olson: All I want is for Senator Nurgitz to be his usual fair and objective self and to describe what this amendment does in fact, and not try to attribute to it a great many things that should not be attributed by a fair and objective mover of the motion. It says:

(8) an inmate who is in custody pursuant to an order made under subsection (4) . . .

I will not read it all, because I do not want to take the time of this chamber, but that refers to an order made by the Parole Board, not an order made by a court. It then goes on to say:

. . . may appeal against that order to a superior court . . .

That is all we are talking about. Therefore, essentially the same process of seeking advice from people who are probably skilled in psychological and psychiatric matters will be pursued in the same way as before. All that happens is that they can appeal that order if they choose, and they will be heard in the proper way.

Senator Flynn: You know very well that that is defective.

Senator Olson: I do not know how defective it may or may not be. Senator Flynn has a bad habit of throwing in red herrings, but I can tell from Senator Nurgitz's expression that he agrees that the interpretation I am now giving is the right one and that it is not an amendment that has to do with public safety or determining all of those things, because that same process will be in place anyway.

Senator Flynn can laugh, but it is fairly important that the record be clear, because there are a few thousand people who read this record and they want to know what this amendment does in fact do.

Senator Flynn: In practice, yes.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Olson: Yes, in practice, and in practice it allows the inmate an appeal against a decision that is made under section 4 by the National Parole Board, and that is all. It is important that that be understood, and I see that Senator Nurgitz, when he rises immediately following me, will acknowledge that he is ready to accept that that is what the amendment does and that it does not do a whole lot of other things that have been ascribed to it, not by him but by other people who have tried to make a mountain out of a molehill as to what this amendment does, in fact, do.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that, if the Honourable Senator Nurgitz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the discussion of the amendment to Bill C-67.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, technically that is not so, because the rule says that the mover of the motion has the last word. However, leave is granted.

Senator Nurgitz: I thank the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I also would like to thank Senator Olson for bringing to my attention what may perhaps have been an impression left that I had said things about the amendment other than what, in fact, I had certainly intended to say. Let me be clear: The amendment deals with appeal only and I think Senator Olson is seeking that from me.

What I should point out to him is that perhaps in reading the proceedings of July 2, where the whole question was being debated, there may have been some confusion, because at that point both sides were arguing on broader grounds. That may have been the reason for that impression. In any event, I wish to be clearly understood, and the major part of what I would like to say now is with respect to the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition and by my friends on the committee, Senators Fairbairn and Hastings, who consistently talked about such things as angry people. Senator Fairbairn used an expression implying that the equilibrium or some delicate balance within the penal system would be destroyed. Honourable senators, as Senator MacEachen has told us, he saved the bill. When he saved the bill, he gave to the National Parole Board the right to create that anger, and I do not understand Senator Fairbairn's argument on the merits of the case, when she talks about destroying the balance.

Senator Frith: A tenth of a loaf is better than none.

Senator Nurgitz: A tenth of a loaf is better than none, yes.

Senator Flynn: You are against the whole bill; you said that.

• (2120)

Senator Nurgitz: Let it be clear that the bill received third reading—

Senator Frith: On division.

Senator Nurgitz: —on division, and it was very clear that senators on the Conservative side wished the bill to pass without amendment. That is all that was created.

In any event, I do not propose to deal with the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition respecting who was or was not responsible and what minister said something and what minister did not.

Senator Balfour: Who is the Leader of the Opposition?

Senator Nurgitz: I will deal with a couple of the substantive matters that have been raised. I regret the pain that he seems to have endured, and as for the Liberal Party saving the bill and the country, a Liberal member of the House of Commons, who had carriage of this matter, spoke for over three hours in filibustering this bill, with, I am told, the help of many others.

This bill was pre-studied. Much of the debate that is taking place in this chamber is about the Senate receiving the bill at the eleventh hour on June 27. The bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on December 21, 1985.

Senator MacEachen: That was a document, not a bill. You know it was not a bill.

Senator Nurgitz: With respect to the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition respecting making sentences longer, in 1970, honourable senators, Parliament spoke as to how a sentence would be served. In 1986 Parliament is speaking again on how a sentence will be served. A sentence is still a sentence. In 1970 Parliament said that after one third of a sentence an inmate could apply for parole and, if he exhibited those sorts of qualities that made him a good risk, he would be out on the street serving the last two thirds of his sentence. Parliament further said in 1970 that if he had not made parole, as they say within the walls—that is, if he did not qualify, then after two thirds he was out under mandatory supervision. Parliament is speaking again in 1986. It is saying other things, too. It is saying that after one sixth of a sentence an inmate may apply for day parole. For the first time provision is made for day parole in legislation. In any event, we are not changing the sentences; we are talking about the administration of the sentences.

Senator Frith has stated that this will serve as a tool in the penitentiary service by saying, “if you are good, if you demonstrate good qualities, this is something to look forward to.” Honourable senators, that incentive, that tool for the penitentiary service, is still there. We are talking about 12,000 inmates, and we are talking about, in some cases—

Senator Frith: Every one of whom knows he could be gated. Every one of the 12,000 inmates knows that.

Senator Balfour: Is that the Leader of the Opposition speaking?

Senator Nurgitz: The Deputy Leader of the Opposition has said each one knows that he or she can be gated. They know that long before then, because targeting takes place some six months before the sentence expires, so that during the six months leading up to the final two thirds of a sentence that inmate knows whether he will be out.

Senator Frith: With this legislation?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes. In Bill C-67 the process of the National Parole Board hearing starts within six months of the presumed release date under mandatory supervision. That is very clear.

Senator Frith: That is still four and a half years a person can be earning remission.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, we can get into all kinds of problems. If we are talking about a three-year sentence, we are not talking about a long period, but when we are talking about a 15-year sentence, we are talking about a long time.

The matter of retroactivity was raised. Senator Fairbairn, I believe, said—well, I am not sure, and I should not attribute something to her if I am not sure she said it. I believe Senator Fairbairn said that it is a bargain and that we are breaching faith. We have received the assurances from the minister that there is a legal opinion from the Department of Justice indicating, certifying, assuring—however these things go—the Solicitor General that this legislation does, indeed, not breach the Charter.

Senator Frith: Or the interpretation of it.

Senator Nurgitz: Or its interpretation. I want to say to Senator Frith and Senator Hastings, who applaud the Supreme Court, that we all applaud the Supreme Court. If the Supreme Court of Canada speaks and strikes down portions of this legislation, then so be it, but the Supreme Court of Canada has been striking down legislation for years and we have lived with that. That is one of the nice things about the system.

Senator MacEachen: Not the Senate.

Senator Nurgitz: Not the Senate.

Senator Frith commented on the perhaps inexact wording in the message from the House of Commons by use of the words “through decision-making being kept with the Board”. It seems clear to most honourable senators that this decision-making process would be entirely within the board and not be subject to appeal, which is, I presume, what it means. Perhaps as the sponsor of the bill I, too, can now reflect and say that others might have chosen better wording.

Again, Senator Fairbairn was clear in saying, “We did not dispute the legislation; we did not defeat the legislation; we did not defeat the bill; we did not oppose; we just added another element.” But then she went on to discuss the emotional equilibrium that will be upset. The Liberal majority in the Senate voted in favour of legislation that said that the National Parole Board would gate or would not permit release under mandatory supervision. That was voted on. Both houses of Parliament have passed that.

Honourable senators, it is the taking away that Senator Hastings says is breaking faith, because there is a bargain with an inmate: “Be good and you will be out.”

Senator Frith: I could not have said it better myself.

Senator Nurgitz: Senator Hastings said today that when it comes to the rights of individuals he wants those rights to be preserved by the decisions of the courts of this land. I thought he said that. That is absolute, Senator Olson, is it not?

Senator Olson: The right of appeal to the courts, at least.

Senator Nurgitz: Exactly. Senator Hastings has been in Parliament for 20 years; for 17 of those years he has had friends in government. For 20 years we have never allowed an appeal from the National Parole Board that takes away two thirds of a sentence. An inmate with a nine-year sentence would have an opportunity to be out after three years, and the decision of the National Parole Board makes him stay a possible six more years. Never has there been any question raised here, and I am not aware of one being raised in the House of Commons, that there should be an appeal because it is the liberty of the subject, because we are doing something for which an inmate could be entitled, because of a raw decision—

Senator Hastings: That is not remission.

Senator Nurgitz: I am only saying that if a man feels aggrieved, he is stuck.

Senator Hastings: No inmate has the right to release on parole; they have the right to release under mandatory supervision.

Senator Nurgitz: One assumes that the right to mandatory supervision, without ever amending it, is entrenched in the Charter of Rights, but it is not; it is a piece of legislation and it is now being amended. That is all that I am saying. Parliament spoke in 1970 as to how that would happen; it is now speaking again.

With respect to the breach of faith, to the changing of the system, as I heard the Liberal critic in the House of Commons speak today, I thought he said that he approved the bill in principle. I am not speaking of the amendment. He approved in principle the process of having a person serve his sentence to the expiry date of his warrant, and that I heard clearly.

● (2130)

I am somewhat disappointed, honourable senators, that we have not heard a little more today about protection of the public, but that is another matter.

Senator Olson: You told us we should stick to the amendment.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, I will attempt to stick to the amendment.

Senator Olson: But you are bringing out all of these other things.

Senator Nurgitz: Senator Hastings raised something in Bill C-67 that I, as a lawyer, found gave rights to an inmate. Well, there are many items of rights and, in fact, those rights are contained within this bill and are not done by regulation, or, if one likes, the regulations are contained in the bill, thanks to negotiations by the standing Senate committee.

There are many rights, including the right to a fair hearing and the right to notice. Those rights, for example, comply with a couple of decisions that came out of the Federal Court requiring the corrections system to give all available information to the inmate so that he knows the kind of case he has to meet. I am certain with respect to all other matters, such as opportunity for full answer and defence, that those matters, if not adhered to by the board, would certainly be matters in which the Federal Court would be interested under an appeal under section 18.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray:

That the Senate do not insist upon its amendment to the Bill C-67, intituled: "An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act", to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

24 July 1986

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 24th day of July, 1986, at 9:50 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a number of Bills.

Yours sincerely,
A.P. Smyth

Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 16th September, 1986, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (2140)

At 10 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, (Bill C-67, Chapter 42, 1986).

An Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code (Bill C-68, Chapter 43, 1986).

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 16, 1986, at 2 p.m.

The Thirty-third Parliament was prorogued by Proclamation on Thursday, August 28, 1986.

ABBREVIATIONS

1r, 2r, 3r	= first, second, third reading
amds	= amendments
com	= committee
div	= division
m	= motion
neg	= negatived
qu	= question
ref	= referred
rep	= report
r.a.	= Royal Assent

Acts passed during the Session

Public Acts

Chapter

Bill No.

41	Ontario and Manitoba Courts Act amendment.....	C-3
42	Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act amendment	C-4
43	Freshwater Fish Marketing Act amendment	C-5
44	Saltfish Act amendment	C-6
45	Income Tax Act amendment	C-7
46	Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act amendment	C-8
47	Customs Act and Customs Tariff Act amendment	C-9
48	Income Tax Conventions Interpretation Act	C-10
49	Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act.....	C-14
50	Appropriation Act No. 3, 1984-85.....	C-16

Assented to February 26, 1985

1	Public Works Act and Public Lands Grants Act amendment.....	C-13
2	Currency Act amendment	C-21
3	Excise Tax Act and Excise Act amendment	C-17
4	Pension Act amendment	C-28

Assented to February 27, 1985

5	Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85 (No. 2).....	C-11
6	International Centre for Ocean Development Act	C-22
7	Western Grain Stabilization Act amendment	C-29

Assented to March 29, 1985

8	Small Businesses Loans Act amendment	C-23
9	Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance Act	C-37
10	Appropriation Act No. 4, 1984-85.....	C-34
11	Appropriation Act No. 1, 1985-86.....	C-35

Assented to April 3, 1985

12	Customs Tariff Act amendment	C-38
----	------------------------------------	------

Assented to May 16, 1985

13	Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution Act.....	C-43
14	Customs Act and Special Import Measures Act amendment	C-40
15	Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation Act.....	C-50
16	Bretton Woods Agreements Act amendment	C-30
17	Meat Inspection Act.....	C-33

Acts passed during the Session—Cont'd

Public Acts—Cont'd

Chapter

Bill No.

Assented to May 29, 1985

18	Unemployment Insurance Act amendment	C-52
----	--	------

Assented to June 20, 1985

19	Criminal Law Act, 1985 amendment	C-18
20	Investment Canada Act	C-15
21	Prairie Farm Assistance Act	C-41
22	Sports Pool and Loto Canada Winding-up Act	C-2
23	Income Tax Conventions Act	S-3
24	Appropriation Act No. 2, 1985-86	C-54

Assented to June 27, 1985

25	Oil Substitution and Conservation and Canadian Home Insulation Program Act Amendment	C-24
26	Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) Act amendment	C-25
27	Indian Act amendment	C-31
28	Aeronautics Act amendment	C-36
29	Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments Act, 1982-87	C-39
30	Old Age Security Act amendment	C-26
31	Fisheries Act amendment	C-32
32	Farm Improvement Loans Act amendment	C-56
33	Fisheries Improvement Loans Act amendment	C-57
34	Advance Payments for Crops Act amendment	C-58
35	Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authorization Act	C-53
36	Agricultural Stabilization Act amendment	C-25
37	Borrowing Authority Act, 1985-86 (No. 2)	C-51
38	Judges Act amendment	C-61
39	House of Commons Act amendment	C-63
40	Western Grain Transportation Act amendment	C-44

Assented to October 29, 1985

41	Crown Corporations Dissolution Authorization Act	C-60
42	Customs Tariff Act amendment	C-71
43	Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security Act amendment	C-69
44	Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) Act amendment	C-77
45	Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada Act amendment	C-72
46	Condominium Ordinance Validation Act	C-73

Assented to December 12, 1985

47	Seeds Act and Canada Grains Act	C-64
48	Governor General's Act and Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act and Salaries Act and Judges Act amendment	C-78

Assented to December 20, 1985

49	Canada Development Corporation Reorganization Act	C-66
50	Criminal Code (prostitution) Act amendment	C-49
51	Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation Act	C-79
52	Criminal Code (lotteries) Act amendment	C-81
53	Tax Rebate Discounting Act	C-83
54	Appropriation Act No. 3, 1985-86	C-89

Assented to February 13, 1986

1	Customs Act	C-59
2	Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and Income Tax Act amendment	C-82
3	Divorce Act amendment	C-46
4	Divorce Act, 1985	C-47
5	Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance Act	C-48

Acts passed during the Session—Cont'd

Public Acts—Cont'd

Chapter

Bill No.

Assented to February 13, 1986—Cont'd

6	Income Tax Act and related statutes Act amendment	C-84
7	Income Tax Conventions Act	S-6

Assented to March 4, 1986

8	Representation Act, 1985	C-74
9	Excise Tax Act and Excise Act amendment	C-80

Assented to March 26, 1986

10	Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act	C-76
11	Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and related Acts amendment	C-65
12	Family Allowances Act, 1973 amendment	C-70
13	Immigration Act, 1976 amendment	C-55
14	Petroleum Incentives Program Act amendment	C-85
15	Army Benevolent Fund Act and related Acts amendment	C-100
16	Public Pensions Reporting Act	C-255
17	Appropriation Act No. 4, 1985-86	C-101
18	Appropriation Act No. 1, 1986-87	C-102

Assented to April 23, 1986

19	Borrowing Authority, 1986-87	C-99
----	------------------------------------	------

Assented to May 1, 1986

20	Canadian Arsenals Limited Divestiture Authorization Act	C-87
----	---	------

Assented to June 17, 1986

21	Foreign Arbitral Awards	C-107
22	Commercial Arbitration Act	C-108
23	Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands Mercury Pollution Claims Settlement Act	C-110
24	Income Tax Act amendment	C-109
25	Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act amendment	C-86
26	Competition Tribunal and related Acts amendment	C-91
27	Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government Act	C-93
28	Appropriation Act No.2, 1986-87	C-115

Assented to June 27, 1986

29	Duties Relief Act	C-98
30	Currency Act amendment	C-118
31	Employment Equity Act	C-62
32	Young Offenders Act, Criminal Code, Penitentiary Act, Prisons and Reformatories Act amendment	C-106
33	Farm Debt Review Act	C-117
34	Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 amendment	C-96
35	Judges and related Judicial Acts amendment	C-128
36	Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization Act	C-88
37	Customs Act and Customs Tariff Act amendment	C-111
38	Canada Pension Plan and Federal Court Act amendment	C-116
39	Energy Administration Act	C-112
40	Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985	C-90
41	Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act	C-45

Assented to July 24, 1986

42	Parole Act and Penitentiary Act amendment	C-67
43	Parole Act, Penitentiary Act, Prisons and Reformatories Act and Criminal Code amendment	C-68

Acts passed during the Session—Cont'dLocal and Private ActsChapterAssented to December 12, 1985*

55 Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada Act S-5

Assented to June 17, 1986

63 Pine Hill Divinity Hall Act..... S-7

(For Status of Legislation at Prorogation see p. 119 of Index)

Aboriginal peoples

- Goose Bay, Labrador
 - Barring of Inuit from meeting addressed by Minister of, Justice, 2546
 - Request for report and apology, 2547
 - Request for answer, 2581
- Proposed NATO base, funding of interest groups, 2582
- Queen Charlotte Islands, logging dispute, Haida Indian rights, 1517, 1560
- Yukon economic development program, delay in implementation, government policy, 2095

Académie française

- Three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of founding, 1705

Access to information

- Government guidelines for public servants, 188, 195, 214, 427, 428
- Tabling of documents, 75

Adams, Hon. Willie

- Aboriginal peoples
 - Goose Bay, Labrador, barring of Inuit from meeting addressed by Minister of Justice, qu, 2546
- Constitution
 - First Ministers' conference, aboriginal rights, Senate representation, qu, 761
- Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 386
- Indian bill C-31, 1140
 - Discrimination, 1140
 - Effect on children, 1141
- National Research Council
 - Closing of research facilities, loss of jobs, qu, 407
- Native peoples
 - Funding of programs, rumoured government cuts, qu, 867
- Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authorization bill C-53, 1182
- Oil exploration and activity around the Beaufort Sea, 1182
- Youth Committee
 - 2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2693

Adams, Right Honourable John, the late, Prime Minister of Barbados, 623

- Representation at funeral, 647, 666

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne

- Consideration of Speech from the Throne, 8; termination of debate, 13
- Motion for Address in reply, Hon. Heath Macquarrie, 13; seconded Hon. Arthur Tremblay, 19; Address in reply adopted, 254

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 62
- Bielish, Martha P., 201
- Cools, Anne C., 244
- Cottreau, Ernest G., 248
- Davey, Keith, 107
- Doody, C. William, 51
- Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 82
- Graham, B. Alasdair, 198
- Hicks, Henry D., 109
- Kelly, William M., 87
- MacEachen, Allan J., 29
- Macquarrie, Heath, 14
- Marsden, Lorna, 89
- Murray, Lowell, 117
- Nurgitz, Nathan, 67

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne—Cont'd

Speakers: Senators—Cont'd

- Phillips, Orville H., 250
- Roblin, Duff, 35
- Rowe, Frederick W., 48
- Tremblay, Arthur, 19
- Yuzyk, Paul, 105

Advance payments for crops

- Collecting defaults, 1178
- Cost-price squeeze, 1179
- Expanding flexibility of the program, 1178
- Maximum advances, 1178

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 1179
- Barootes, Efstathios William, 1178

Advance Payments for Crops bill C-58. 1r, 1166; 2r, 1178; 3r, 1181; r.a., 1217

Advertising

- Source of funds for material in magazine, 1111

Aeronautics

- Airport security around the world, 1121
- Civil aviation security, 1120
- Dubin Commission, 1119
- Medical reporting provision, 1120
- Regulatory powers, 1120
- Speakers: Senators
 - Frith, Royce, 1121
 - MacDonald, Finlay, 1119
 - Stollery, Peter A., 1120

Aeronautics bill C-36. 1r, 1102; 2r, 1119; 3r, 1143; r.a., 1217

Aging, justice for the elderly, 370, 976, 1442

- Referenda and plebiscites, 1443
- Senate reform, 977
- Speakers: Senators
 - Croll, David A., 976
 - MacDonald, Finlay, 1442

Agricultural stabilization

- Cattle producers, 1196
- Hog production in P.E.I., 1196
- Potato industry, 1197
- Top-loading, 1195
- Tripartite stabilization plans, 1195
- United States tariffs, 1196
- Speakers: Senators
 - Argue, Hazen, 1195
 - Corbin, Eymard, 1197
 - Phillips, Orville H., 1195

Agricultural Stabilization bill C-25. 1r, 1195; 2r, 1195; 3r, 1198; r.a., 1217

Agriculture, 202

- Agricultural products processors, availability of financial assistance, 1943, 2680
- Discussion paper "Tax Issues in Agriculture", 667
 - Government attitude, 608
 - Suggested referral to committee, 606

Agriculture—Cont'd

Farm credit crisis, request for meeting of ministers of agriculture, 985

Farm debt legislation, government policy, 2571

Farm debt review, 1267

Role of panels, 2096

Fertilizer supplement, possible legal action, 693, 973

Grain

Grasshopper threat in prairie provinces, request for assistance, 2547

Request for response, 2570

Plight of producers, deficiency payments and two-price system for wheat, government policy, 2285

Inspection fees, government policy, 695

Marketing of potatoes, qu, 80, 242, 510, 537, 638

National strategy, 1558

National sugar policy, 1654

Potato industry

Government assistance, 2037, 2095, 2130

Re-establishment of commission of inquiry, 1971

Stabilization assistance, 1974

Stabilization or diversion program, 1970, 2099

Stabilization policy, 2154, 2173

Prairie provinces, deteriorating situation, government action, 967

Sugar-beet industry

Crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1881

Canadian industry, 1882

Jobs at risk, 1882

Motion withdrawn, 1887

National policy necessity, 1885

Uncertainty issue, 1881

Future prospects, 933, 1173

Government policy, 760, 770, 934, 1089, 1173, 1176, 1237, 1834, 1852, 1870, 1905, 1923, 1943, 1974, 2117, 2133

1983 stabilization payment, 1093, 1174, 1313, 1400, 1433, 1502, 1537, 1559, 1737

Government policy, 1311, 1987, 2003, 2023, 2036, 2048, 2067, 2152

1986 crop year, government policy, 2090

Request for answer, 1324, 1354

Producers and government representatives, meeting, 2094

United States and EEC subsidies, Canadian position at Tokyo, 2428

Western Canada

Drought and other conditions, government assistance, 1223, 1231, 1280, 1325, 1362, 1406, 1430, 1479, 1501, 1536, 1559, 1670, 1671, 1714, 1735, 1854, 2023, 2283

Availability of application forms, 1870

Government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1450

Motion withdrawn, 1466

Motion withdrawn, 1466

Government policy, 1834

Grain producers and beef producers, disparity in criteria for payments, 1946, 2101

Effect on harvest of adverse climatic conditions, government assistance, 1374, 1376, 1380

Western Grain Stabilization Act, suggested amendment, 2269

Wheat

Domestic price, 2667

Exports to Republic of China, 2173, 2679

Two-price system

Effect of price increase, 2382, 2387

Effect on baking industry, 2667

Possible influx of subsidized American bakery products, 2286

World grain prices, initial payment for wheat, 2161, 2171

Agriculture and Forestry, Standing Senate Committee (from May 14/86)

Farm debt review, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-117 prior to receipt of legislation, 2598

Order of reference, 2598

Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, Standing Senate Committee (until May 14/86)

Agricultural stabilization, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-25 prior to receipt of legislation, 966, 999

Fish marketing in Canada, authority to study, 388, 476, 490

Fisheries, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-32 prior to receipt of legislation, 646

Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, authority to examine annual report, 478, 490

International Cheese Council of Canada, authority to receive presentation, 1221

Notice of meeting, 918

Prairie farm assistance and crop insurance, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-41 prior to receipt of legislation, 966

Proposed splitting of committee, progress of debate, 2446

Reports

1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 236

See Journals of the Senate

2nd, Meat Inspection bill C-33, rep without amdt, 922

3rd, agricultural stabilization, rep on subject matter of Bill C-25, 1134

4th, "Herbicide Pricing", rep on study of "Soil at Risk", 2018, 2091, 2139, 2772

Zero-Till Association, 2139

"Soil at Risk", authority to print additional copies, 290

"Soil at Risk - Canada's Eroding Future", authority to study impact, 280, 331, 340, 404, 717

Economy, 719

Farming industry, 718

Purchase of grazing leases, 720

Urban growth, 719

See appendix p. 345

"Tax Issues in Agriculture", authority to study discussion paper, 618

Western grain transportation, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-44 prior to receipt of legislation, 966

Air Canada

Board of directors, replacement of members, 658, 660

Strike of ticket agents, 831, 856

Alberta, 202

Economy, government assistance, 2308

Amendments, observations or recommendations in or re committee reports

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11, 618

Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, rep with recommendations, 1713

Competition Tribunal bill C-91, rep with observations, 2614

Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81, rep with recommendations, 1789

Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) bill C-77, rep with amdts, 1377

Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, rep with recommendations, 1733

Customs bill C-59, rep with amdts, 1669

Amendments, observations or recommendations in or re committee reports—Cont'd

- Divorce and corollary relief, rep on subject matter of bill C-47, with recommendations, 1549
- Employment Equity bill C-62, rep with observations and recommendations, 2676
- Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, rep with observations and recommendation, 2065
- Federal-Provincial Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, rep without amdt but with comments, 2765
- Financial institutions depositors compensation, rep on subject matter of Bill C-79, with observations, 1767
- Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84, rep with observations, 1938
- Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, rep with amdts, 1496
- Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, rep without amdt but with comments, 2776
- Representation, 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt but with comments, 2018

Appendices

- Agriculture Committee
 - "Soil at Risk - Canada's Eroding Future", 345
- Appropriation No. 3, 1985-86 bill C-89
 - Highlights of supplementary estimates (B), 1985-86, 1731
- Appropriation No. 4, 1985-86 bill C-101
 - Supply to date, 1985-86, 2239
- Appropriation No. 1, 1986-87 bill C-102
 - Interim supply for April to June, 1986, 2241
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Customs tariff, rep on subject matter of Bill C-111, 2695
 - Investment in Canada, rep on subject matter of Bill C-15, 848
- Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association, meeting in Italy, report, 2486
- Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-fifth meeting, Puerto Rico, 132
- Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-sixth meeting, Niagara-on-the Lake, Ontario, 1332
- Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-seventh meeting at Tucson, Arizona, 2625
- Canada's relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa, 1159
- Conclusions and Recommendations adopted unanimously by the Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Environment, 517
- Criminal Law Amendment, 1985 backgrounder, 830
- Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, income tax statistics, 1879, 1901, 1902
- Family orders and agreements enforcement assistance, rep on subject matter of Bill C-48, 1551
- Fisheries Committee report
 - 1st, 2745
- Hungarians in Canada, 2593
- Japan
 - Address of His Excellency Yasuhiro Nakasone, Prime Minister, 1843
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee reports
 - 8th, divorce and corollary relief, subject matter of Bill C-47, 1549
 - 9th, family orders enforcement assistance, subject matter of Bill C-48, 1551
 - 21st, parole and penitentiaries, interim report on subject matter of Bill C-67, 2484
 - 22nd, parole and penitentiaries, interim report on subject matter of Bill C-67, 2606
- National Finance Committee reports
 - 2nd, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, supplementary (B), 293

Appendices—Cont'd

- National Finance Committee reports—Cont'd
 - 4th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, supplementary (C), 684
 - 5th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, 960
 - 6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 980
 - 9th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1416
 - 10th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B), 1646
 - 14th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (C), 2187
 - 16th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, 2522
 - Official Languages Policy and Programs, 1163
 - Parliamentary Affairs Commission (A.I.P.L.F.), Summary of Symposium held in Brazil, April 20-25, 1986, 2595
 - Pension Process, 235
 - Poverty in Canada
 - Senate report on poverty, Poverty Line Update, 1984, 1513
 - Prime Minister
 - United Nations, fortieth anniversary, speech, 1445
 - Redistribution after Census of 1981, 1991 and 2001, 1764
 - Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee reports
 - 3rd, Statutory Instruments No. 30, 1417
 - 4th, Statutory Instruments No. 31, 1424
 - 5th, Statutory Instruments No. 32, 2210
 - 6th, Statutory Instruments No. 33, 2300
 - Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee reports
 - 9th, Consultation paper on training and document entitled "Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians For a Better Future", 2378
 - 10th, Authority to adjourn from place to place to study report They Served, We Care, 2661
 - Standing Rules and Orders Committee reports
 - 4th, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1469
 - 5th, Rules of the Senate, use of male and female genders, 1470
 - 6th, government responses to committee reports, 1475
 - 7th, guidelines for financial operation of committees, 2108
 - 9th, rule 67 (1), suggested amendment, 2411
 - Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, 1218
 - United Nations Organization
 - Address of His Excellency Javier Perez De Cuellar, Secretary-General, 640
- Appropriation No. 3, 1984-85 bill C-16. 1r, 296; 2r, 312, 323; 3r, 340; r.a., 404
- Appropriation No. 4, 1984-85 bill C-34. 1r, 703; 2r, 715; 3r, 728; r.a., 756
- Appropriation No. 1, 1985-86 bill C-35. 1r, 703; 2r, 716; 3r, 728; r.a., 756
- Appropriation No. 2, 1985-86 bill C-54. 1r, 1035; 2r, 1048, 1074; 3r, 1094; r.a., 1101
- Appropriation No. 3, 1985-86 bill C-89. 1r, 1683; 2r, 1720, 1743; 3r, 1776; r.a., 1831
See appendix p. 1731
- Appropriation No. 4, 1985-86 bill C-101. 1r, 2214; 2r, 2229; 3r, 2250; r.a., 2258
See appendix p. 2239
- Appropriation No. 1, 1986-87 bill C-102. 1r, 2214; 2r, 2230, 2250; 3r, 2251; r.a., 2258
See appendix p. 2241

Appropriation No. 2, 1986-87 bill C-115. 1r, 2577; 2r, 2601, 2616; 3r, 2617; r.a., 2623

Appropriations

Bill C-54, urgency of passage, 1066, 1091
Bill C-115, request for information, 2770

Argentina

See Visitors

Argue, Hon. Hazen, P.C.

Adams, Rt. Hon. John, the late, 623
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 62
Advance Payments for Crops bill C-58, 1179
Maximum advances, 1179
Agricultural Stabilization bill C-25, 1195
Cattle producers, 1196
Hog production in P.E.I., 1196
Top-loading, 1196
United States tariffs, 1196
Agriculture
Agricultural products processors, availability of financial assistance, qu, 1943, 2680
Discussion paper "Tax Issues in Agriculture", government attitude, qu, 608
Farm debt legislation, government policy, qu, 2571
Farm debt review, qu, 1267
Role of panels, qu, 2096
Grain
Grasshopper threat in prairie provinces, request for assistance, qu, 2547
Request for response, qu, 2570
Prairie provinces, deteriorating situation, government action, qu, 968
Sugar-beet industry, stabilization payments, government policy, 2153
United States and EEC subsidies, Canadian position at Tokyo, qu, 2428
Western Canada
Drought and other conditions, government assistance, qu, 1223, 1231, 1280, 1326, 1362, 1406, 1430, 1501, 1536, 1735
Government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1450
Motion withdrawn, 1466
Grain producers and beef producers, disparity in criteria for payments, qu, 1942, 2101
Effect on harvest of adverse climatic conditions, government assistance, qu, 1381
Western Grain Stabilization Act, suggested amendment, qu, 2269
Wheat
Domestic price, qu, 2667
Two-price system
Effect of price increase, qu, 2382
World grain prices, initial payment for wheat, qu, 2161, 2171
Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
Proposed splitting of committee, progress of debate, qu, 2446
Report
4th, "Herbicide Pricing", 2772
"Soil at Risk - Canada's Eroding Future", authority to study impact, 718
Appropriation No. 1, 1986-87 bill C-102, 2250
Medical and health services, availability and delivery, 2250
Banking

Argue, Hon. Hazen, P.C.—Cont'd

Banking—Cont'd
Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank, status of proposed joint committee, qu, 1222
Northland Bank
Compensation of debenture holders, qu, 1311
Status, qu, 1235
Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
Committee proceedings, televising, 1449
Board of Grain Commissioners
Termination of appointment of member, status of chief commissioner, qu, 1950
Budget
Farm Credit loan provisions, impact on farmers, qu, 2086
Impact on senior citizens, 995
Canada Post Corporation
Closing of post office in Forget, Saskatchewan, qu, 2584
Canada's Cultural Industries
Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1616
Canadian film industry, 1618
The Western Producer, 1617
Canada-United States relations
Bilateral trade negotiations
Agricultural products, qu, 1309
Government policy, qu, 2267
Marketing boards, qu, 2207
Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting
U.S. agriculture policy as agenda item, qu, 2207, 2273, 2389
Request for answer, 2365
Canadian hog production, United States import duty, qu, 739, 971
Canadian Wheat Board, 64
Alleged absence of minister from advisory committee meetings, qu, 1172, 1238
Appointment of commissioner, qu, 2173
Criticism contained in study team report to task force on program review, qu, 2149
Dwarf wheat, marketing, qu, 741
Capital gains on farm land, 63
Co-operatives, 63
Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2081
Drought assistance, 63
Economy
Canadian dollar, decline in value, 543
Pioneer Trust
Closing, qu, 506
Status, qu, 528
Energy
Gasoline prices reduction, qu, 2154, 2329
Oil pricing, 2219, 2329
Government action, qu, 2088, 2120, 2134
Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2738, 2749, 2750
Canada Assistance Plan, 2739, 2755
Financial institutions, 2755
Moratorium on farm credit loans, 2739
Suicide rate, 2739
Farm Products Marketing Agencies bill C-4, 216
Canadian Wheat Board, 261
Canagrex, 261
Tobacco industry, 216
Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2715
Canadian Nurses Association proposals, 2715
Emphasis on deficit reduction, 2715
False saving, 2715

Argue, Hon. Hazen, P.C.—Cont'd

- Federal-provincial relations, First Ministers' Conference, Regina, Feb. 14-15, 1985, failures and shortcomings, 535, 888
- Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1812
 - Double standard, 1813
- Government of Canada
 - Remuneration of senior officials and others, qu, 704
- Grain
 - Conference of ministers of exporting countries, qu, 2448
 - International conference, government approach, qu, 2504
 - Freight rates, 64
 - Wheat pricing, terms of reference of House of Commons task force, qu, 2468
- Health and Welfare
 - Social assistance programs, suggested review, qu, 706
- Human rights
 - Saskatchewan, passage of Bill 144 imposing settlement on government employees, qu, 1972, 2103
- Indian bill C-31, 1142
- Industry
 - Canadian Porcelain Company, offer to purchase by employee co-operative, qu, 952
 - Government attitude, qu, 989
 - Co-op Implements, proposed relocation from Winnipeg to Regina, qu, 530
- International trade
 - European Economic Community, proposed export of agricultural products to Canada, qu, 988
- Metric conversion
 - Government policy, qu, 338
- Patronage appointments, 66
- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 858, 874
- Prairie Farm Assistance bill C-41, 1072, 1096
 - Crop insurance, 1072
- Press releases, 67
- Senate
 - Adjournment, 2784
 - Business, 1194
 - Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, 2213
 - Security service, staff reductions, qu, 943
- Social programs
 - Universality, government policy, 379
- Social security system, 65
- Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.
 - Felicitations on United Nations award, 1011
- Thanksgiving
 - Cross-Canada aid to distressed Saskatchewan farmers, 1383
- Transport
 - Airport car rental service, qu, 261
 - Canadian airports, security, qu, 1113
 - Freight rates, western grain, qu, 194
 - Port of Churchill, Manitoba
 - Grain shipments to U.S.S.R. and availability of hopper cars, qu, 1324
 - Railways, shortfall in CN and CP expenditures on expansion, qu, 1973
 - Western Grain Stabilization Fund, government policy, qu, 260
- Transport and Communications Committee
 - Car rental outlets at airports, authority to study policy, 316, 412
 - Motion withdrawn, 1330
- U.S.S.R.
 - Chernenko, President Konstantin, the late, 622
- Welfare
 - Adequacy of payments, qu, 191, 410, 412
- Western Grain Stabilization bill C-29, 612
 - Agricultural Stabilization Act, 614

Argue, Hon. Hazen, P.C.—Cont'd

- Western Grain Stabilization bill C-29—Cont'd
 - Canadian Wheat Board, 613
 - Department of Finance, 613
 - Dwarf wheat, 613
 - Early payment, 613
 - United States, 614
- Western Grain Transportation bill C-44, 1212
 - Variable rates, 1212
- Youth
 - Government policy, qu, 2216
- Yukon
 - Brannigan, Dr. Don, Mayor of Whitehorse, visit, 2507

Army Benevolent Fund

- Children of veterans assistance extension, 2252
- Elimination of "100 per cent rule", 2252
- Hees, Hon. George, 2253
- Hong Kong and Dieppe prisoners of war, 2252
- Spousal right of appeal, 2253
- Veterans Land Act, 2253
- Speakers: Senators
 - Marshall, Jack, 2251
 - Stanbury, Richard J., 2253

Army Benevolent Fund and related Acts bill C-100. 1r, 2246; 2r, 2251; 3r, 2254; r.a., 2258Asselin, Hon. Martial, P.C.

- Air Canada
 - Strike of ticket agents, qu, 856
- Criminal Law 1985 bill C-18, 817
 - Air safety regulations, 820
 - Appeal procedures, 818
 - Blood samples, 822
 - Computer offences, 819
 - Drugs, 819
 - Impaired driving, 821
 - Impounding of a vehicle used to commit an offence, 821
 - Indictments, 818
 - Information concerning searches, 819
 - Offences punishable on summary conviction, 821
 - Powers of judges and justices in the administration of justice, 818
 - Pre-hearing conferences, 818
 - Professional secrecy, 819
 - Protection of individual rights, 818
 - Release on bail, 818
 - Restitution of seized goods, 819
 - Telewarrants, 820
 - See* appendix p. 830
- Information Commissioner, report tabled, 2838
- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 587
- Parliamentary Affairs Commission of the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians, meeting in Brazil, 2489, 2592
- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 874
- Prime Minister
 - United Nations, fortieth anniversary, speech, 1405
- Privacy Commissioner, report tabled, 2838
- Selection Committee
 - 2nd report, committee members, 55
- Simard, Hon. Jean-Maurice, 1129
- Speaker pro tempore, 73, 96, 207, 279, 316, 332, 370, 396, 481, 504, 519, 528, 542, 604, 655, 769, 789, 865, 881, 892, 908, 929,

Asselin, Hon. Martial, P.C.—Cont'dSpeaker pro tempore—Cont'd

941, 1062, 1088, 1102, 1295, 1308, 1321, 1352, 1362, 1371, 1379, 1386, 1573, 1704, 1767, 1789, 1832, 2016, 2111, 2116, 2147, 2403, 2444, 2463, 2501, 2651, 2665, 2678, 2786, 2834

Dailly, Senator Etienne, Vice-President of Senate of Republic of France, visit, 1964

Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 2029

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2830

Speaker's ruling, 2831

Response to address of His Excellency Yasuhiro Nakasone, Prime Minister of Japan, 1848

Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, Speaker's ruling, 2514

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, the late, tribute, 2837

Atlantic fishery, 125Auditor General

Cabinet documents, access to information, 320

Auditor General, report for fiscal year ending Mar. 31/85, 1480Austin, Hon. Jack, P.C.

Aboriginal peoples

Queen Charlotte Islands, logging dispute, Haida Indian rights, qu, 1517

Agriculture

Wheat exports to Republic of China, qu, 2173, 2679

Canada Development Corporation

Sale of shares, qu, 945, 975

Canada-United States relations

Trade

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles, compensation for workers in industry, qu, 2547

Energy

International oil pricing, agenda item at economic summit, qu, 2022, 2156, 2222

Natural gas exports to U.S., representations by Alberta and British Columbia, qu, 1987

Natural gas, proposed pipeline to Vancouver Island, qu, 946

Energy, Mines and Resources

Director General of Communications, termination of employment, qu, 381, 433

Foreign affairs

Middle East, mission of Secretary of State for External Affairs, qu, 2163

Governor General

Visit to United Kingdom, qu, 1517

Libya

United States air strike, legality under international law, qu, 2281

Australia

Missen, Senator Alan, the late, tribute, 2326

Aviation disasters

Air-India aircraft loss

Tokyo Airport explosion, possible acts of terrorism, 1108, 1237

Treatment of insurance claims, 1113

Gander, Newfoundland, 1705

Balfour, Hon. R. James

Budget proposals, 2371

Canadian Rural Transition Program, 2372

Commodity-based loan program, 2372

Balfour, Hon. R. James—Cont'd

Budget proposals—Cont'd

Energy sector considerations, 2373

Farm sector priority, 2373

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-seventh meeting, at Tucson, Arizona, 2616, 2676

See appendix p. 2625

Customs bill C-59, 1506, 1577

Expedited release of goods, 1507

Post-release audit, 1507

Customs and Special Import Measures bill C-40, 815, 834

Anti-Dumping Act, 816

Delegation of authority, 816

Farm Improvement Loans bill C-56, 1153

Intermediate-term farm loans, 1153

Prairie Farm Assistance bill C-41, 1057, 1094

Prairie Farm Emergency Fund, 1058

Western Grains Research Foundation, 1058

Seeds and Canada Grain bill C-64, 1506, 1546

Protection against false advertising, 1506

Role of Canadian Seed Growers Association, 1506

Small Businesses Loans bill C-23, 713

Cost-sharing measures, 713

Loss-sharing arrangement, 714

Banking

Canadian Commercial Bank

Bad loans, 1373

Collapse, 1226

Alleged existence of document indicating difficulty, 1255

Correction of statement by Leader of the Government, 1265

Committee study, 1230, 1256

Request for answers, 1377

Offer of chartered banks to assist in examination of loan portfolio, 1252

Priority of creditors, 1256

Protection of pension funds, 1280

Role of independent auditors, 1254

Government assistance, 705

Judgment of Inspector General as to solvency, 1230

Memorandum of Intent, request for information, 1252, 1266, 1436

Request for answers, 1322, 1353

Salvage recommendation, 1285

Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank

Availability of names of uninsured depositors, 1373

Compensation of depositors, referral of subject matter of bill to committee, 1295

Delay in instituting inquiry, 1376

Deposit insurance, government policy, 1266, 1276

Replies to questions, 1374

Senate study, 1234

Wording of resolution, 1235

Status of proposed joint committee, 1221

Confidence in system, 1372

Estey Commission of Inquiry, 1295

Green paper on regulation of financial institutions

Status, 1310

Suggested withdrawal, 1312

International banking centres, promotion, 2089, 2471

Loans to aid-receiving countries, alleged restriction, 871, 953, 974

Mercantile Bank, possibility of merger, government involvement, 1379

Northland Bank, status, 1235, 1256

Compensation of debenture holders, 1311

Compensation of depositors, government policy, 1297

Banking—Cont'd

- Payments to uninsured depositors, government policy, 1374
- Regulation of banks, 1286

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

- Aeronautics, subject matter of Bill C-36, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 967
- Authority to engage services, 481
- Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 388, 620, 680, 1251, 1274, 1281, 1573, 2411
- Canadian Arsenals Limited divestiture, subject matter of Bill C-87, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2149
- Committee proceedings, televising, 1448, 1449, 1489
- Speaker's ruling, 1467
- Competition tribunal, subject matter of Bill C-91, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2302
- Customs tariff, subject matter of Bill C-111, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2530
- Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 957, 1106
- Financial institutions depositors compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 1352
- Financial institutions, subject matter of Bill C-103, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2670
- Income tax, subject matter of Bill C-84, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 1534
- Investment in Canada, subject matter of Bill C-15, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 646
- Notice of committee meetings, 715, 1398

Reports

- 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 279
 - See Journals of the Senate
- 2nd, Customs and Customs Tariff bill C-9, rep without amdt, 332
- 3rd, Income Tax bill C-7, rep without amdt, 396
- 4th, Income Tax Conventions bill S-3, rep without amdt, 624
- 5th, Small Businesses Loans bill C-23, rep without amdt, 733
 - Negative resolution procedure, 735
 - Service fee, 733
- 6th, investment in Canada, subject matter of Bill C-15, 835
 - See appendix p. 848
- 7th, Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 bill S-4, rep without amdt, 964
- 8th, Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada bill C-72, rep without amdt, 1398
- 9th, Customs bill C-59, rep with amdts, 1669, 1705
- 10th, financial institutions, interim rep on restructuring, 1695
- 11th, tax rebate discounting, rep on subject matter of Bill C-83, 1704
- 12th, income tax and related acts, rep on subject matter of Bill C-84, 1713
- 13th, financial institutions depositors compensation, rep on subject matter of Bill C-79, 1767, 1783, 1804
 - Analysis of support package, 1773
 - Method of calculation, 1807
 - Background, 1768, 1771
 - Canadian banking system weakness, 1808
 - Confidentiality, 1774, 1807
 - Ministerial responsibility, 1773, 1806
 - Moral responsibility, 1770, 1774
- 14th, Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84, rep without amdt, 1938
 - Availability of proceedings, 1952
- 15th, Canadian Arsenals Limited divestiture authorization, subject matter of Bill C-82, 2362
- 16th, Restructuring of financial institutions, 2403

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee—Cont'dReports—Cont'd

- 17th, Competition Tribunal bill C-91, rep without amdt, but with observations, 2614
- 18th, customs tariff, subject matter of Bill C-111, 2678
 - See appendix p. 2695
- Tax rebate discounting, subject matter of Bill C-83, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 1534

Barbados

- Adams, Rt. Hon. John, the late, 623
 - Canadian representation at funeral, 647, 666
- Miller, Hon. Billie, Minister of Education, visit, 1948

Barootes, Hon. Efstathios William (Introduced in the Senate Jan. 22/85), 416

- Advance Payments for Crops bill C-58, 1178
 - Collecting defaults, 1178
 - Cost-price squeeze, 1179
 - Expanding flexibility of the program, 1178
 - Maximum advances, 1178
- Canada's Cultural Industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1612
 - Saskatchewan culture, 1613
- Currency bill C-118, 2653, 2671
 - Minting of $1 coin, 2654
 - Composition and cost, 2654
 - Weight, 2671
- Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2079
- Energy Administration bill C-112, 2731, 2771
 - Negotiated prices, 2731
 - Transition to natural gas competitive market, 2731
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2711
- Fonyo, Steve
 - "Journey for Lives" across Canada, 941
- Greece
 - National Day of Greece, 722
- Greek Independence Day, 2208, 2215
- Immigration, 1976 bill C-55, 2104, 2137, 2185
 - Case backlog, 2104
 - Immigration Appeal Board, 2105
 - Plaut, Rabbi Gunther, "Refugee Determination in Canada", 2104
 - Refugee appeal process, 2104
- Investment Canada bill C-15, 1054
 - Foreign Investment Review Agency, 1054
 - Fossil fuel, 1055
 - Ministerial decisions, 1054
 - Unemployment, 1055
- National Finance Committee
 - 6th report, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1003
- Old age security
 - De-indexation of pensions, presentation of petitions, 1131
- Petroleum Incentives Program bill C-85, 2224, 2247
 - Exploration Tax Credit, 2225
 - Framework, 2224
 - Grandfathering, 2248
 - Ministerial discretion, 2248
 - PIP phase out, 2225
 - "Specified portion", 2248
- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 857, 874
 - Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, 857
 - Government of Saskatchewan, 857
 - Income Averaging Annuity Certificates, 857, 876

Barootes, Hon. Efstathios William —Cont'd

- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50—Cont'd
- “The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion”, 877
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology committee
- 7th report, Immigration, 1976 bill C-55, rep without amdt, 2123
- Western Grain Transportation bill C-44, 1208
- Freight rate ceiling, 1209
- Railway accountability, 1209
- Senior Grain Transportation Committee, 1209
- Stability and predictability, 1209

Barrow, Hon. A. Irvine

- Customs bill C-59, 1576
- Disparity in appeal period for department and taxpayer, 1577
- Honour system for payment of duties, 1576
- Increased scope for mail openings, 1576
- Customs Tariff bill C-111, 2728
- Semiconductor devices and computer parts, 2728
- Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada bill C-72, 1366
- Income Tax bill C-109, 2564
- Scientific Research Tax Credits, 2564

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe (Deceased Mar. 28/85), 731Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Deputy Governor General, appointment, 2Bélisle, Hon. Rhéal

- Acting Speaker, 463, 534, 592, 811, 921, 951, 1430, 1476, 1950, 2065, 2130
- Benidickson, Hon. William M., P.C., the late, 418
- Budget speech, accommodation for senators in Senate gallery of House of Commons, 2065
- Divorce bill C-46, Divorce and Corollary Relief bill C-47, and Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance bill C-48, 1945
- Artificial insemination, embryo implantation, in vitro fertilization, 1946
- Inadequate reconciliation provisions, 1946
- Farm Debt Review bill C-117 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 2750
- Report, 2765
- Lithuania
- Sixty-eighth anniversary of proclamation of independence, 2032
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 2802
- Report, 2822
- Parole and related Statutes bill C-68 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 2822
- Senate
- Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 823
- Minutes of Proceedings, recording of choosing of Acting Speaker, 1966
- Prayer at commencement of sittings, qu, 13
- Telephone service, 539
- Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, the late, tribute, 2834

Bell, Hon. Ann Elizabeth

- Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1743
- Croll, Hon. David A., tribute, 1740
- Meat Inspection bill C-33, 904
- National Finance Committee

Bell, Hon. Ann Elizabeth—Cont'd

- National Finance Committee—Cont'd
- 5th report, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, 999
- Parliament
- Report of commission to review salaries of members of Parliament and senators, definition of “members of Parliament” and “salaries”, 922
- Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty
- Thirty-third anniversary of accession to Throne, felicitations, 492

Benidickson, Hon. William Moore, P.C. (Deceased Jan. 4/85), 416Berntson, Hon. Eric, Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan, visit, 416*Bielish, Hon. Martha P.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 201
- Agricultural industry, 202
- Alberta, 202
- Canada's cultural industries
- Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1630
- Involvement of children and schools in cultural development, 1631
- Farm Products Marketing Agencies bill C-4, 215
- Tobacco production, 215
- Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 356, 388
- Borrowing limit, 356
- National Soil Conservation Week, 798
- “Soil at Risk”, 798
- Status of Women
- Persons Awards 1985, 1403
- Ukraine, sixth-eighth anniversary of Proclamation of Independence, 1849
- Western Grain Stabilization bill C-29, 590, 614
- Early payments, 590
- Farm financing, 590
- Purpose of plan, 590
- Women's Institute, 202

Bills, Numerically, Commons

- C-2 Sports Pool and Loto Canada Winding-up
- C-3 Ontario and Manitoba Courts
- C-4 Farm Products Marketing Agencies
- C-5 Freshwater Fish Marketing
- C-6 Saltfish
- C-7 Income Tax
- C-8 Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax
- C-9 Customs and Customs Tariff
- C-10 Income Tax Conventions Interpretation
- C-11 Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2)
- C-13 Public Works and Public Land Grants
- C-14 Foreign Extraterritorial Measures
- C-15 Investment Canada
- C-16 Appropriation No. 3, 1984-85
- C-17 Excise Tax and Excise
- C-18 Criminal Law, 1985
- C-21 Currency
- C-22 International Centre for Ocean Development
- C-23 Small Businesses Loans
- C-24 Oil Substitution and Conservation and Canadian Home Insulation Program
- C-25 Agricultural Stabilization
- C-26 Old Age Security
- C-27 Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms)
- C-28 Pension
- C-29 Western Grain Stabilization
- C-30 Bretton Woods Agreements
- C-31 Indian

Bills, Numerically, Commons—Cont'd

- C-32 Fisheries
- C-33 Meat Inspection
- C-34 Appropriation No. 4, 1984-85
- C-35 Appropriation No. 1, 1985-86
- C-36 Aeronautics
- C-37 Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance
- C-38 Customs Tariff
- C-39 Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments 1982-87
- C-40 Customs and Special Import Measures
- C-41 Prairie Farm Assistance
- C-43 Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution
- C-44 Western Grain Transportation
- C-45 Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations
- C-46 Divorce
- C-47 Divorce and Corollary Relief
- C-48 Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance
- C-49 Criminal Code (prostitution)
- C-50 Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation
- C-51 Borrowing Authority, 1985-86 (No. 2)
- C-52 Unemployment Insurance, 1971
- C-53 Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authorization
- C-54 Appropriation No. 2, 1985-86
- C-55 Immigration, 1976
- C-56 Farm Improvement Loans
- C-57 Fisheries Improvement Loans
- C-58 Advance Payments for Crops
- C-59 Customs
- C-60 Crown Corporations Dissolution Authorization
- C-61 Judges
- C-62 Employment Equity
- C-63 House of Commons
- C-64 Seeds and Canada Grain
- C-65 Royal Canadian Mounted Police
- C-66 Canada Development Corporation Reorganization
- C-67 Parole and Penitentiary
- C-68 Parole and related Statutes
- C-69 Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security
- C-70 Family Allowances, 1973
- C-71 Customs Tariff
- C-72 Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada
- C-73 Condominium Ordinance Validation
- C-74 Representation 1985
- C-76 Toronto Harbour Commissioners', 1985
- C-77 Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting)
- C-78 Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges
- C-79 Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation
- C-80 Excise Tax and Excise
- C-81 Criminal Code (lotteries)
- C-82 Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax and Income Tax
- C-83 Tax Rebate Discounting
- C-84 Income Tax and related Statutes
- C-85 Petroleum Incentives Program
- C-86 Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation
- C-87 Canadian Arsenal's Limited Divestiture Authorization
- C-88 Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization
- C-89 Appropriation No. 3, 1985-86
- C-90 Pension Benefits Standards, 1985
- C-91 Competition Tribunal
- C-93 Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government
- C-96 Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977
- C-98 Duties Relief
- C-99 Borrowing Authority, 1986-87

Bills, Numerically, Commons—Cont'd

- C-100 Army Benevolent Fund and related Acts
- C-101 Appropriation No. 4, 1985-86
- C-102 Appropriation No. 1, 1986-87
- C-106 Young Offenders, Criminal Code, Penitentiary, Prisons and Reformatories
- C-107 United Nations Foreign Arbitral Awards Convention
- C-108 Commercial Arbitration
- C-109 Income Tax
- C-110 Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands Mercury Pollution Claims Settlement
- C-111 Customs Tariff
- C-112 Energy Administration
- C-115 Appropriation No. 2, 1986-87
- C-116 Canada Pension Plan and Federal Court
- C-117 Farm Debt Review
- C-118 Currency
- C-128 Judges and related Acts
- C-255 Public Pensions Reporting

Bills, Numerically, Senate

- S-1 Railways (pro forma)
- S-2 Marriage (prohibited degrees)
- S-3 Income Tax Conventions
- S-4 Canadian Patent No. 855, 255
- S-5 Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada
- S-6 Income Tax Conventions
- S-7 Pine Hill Divinity Hall
- S-8 Smoking Prohibition

Bills, Private, Commons

- Public Pensions Reporting C-255. 1r, 1985; 2r, 2030; ref to com, 2030; rep without amdt, 2084; 3r, 2104; r.a., 2258

Bills, Private, Senate

- Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 S-4. 1r, 921; 2r, 938, 955; ref to com, 956; rep without amdt, 964; 3r, 1024
- Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada S-5. 1r, 1414; 2r, 1414; ref to com, 1415 rep without amdt, 1476; 3r, 1476; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 1495; r.a., 1712
- Pine Hill Divinity Hall S-7. 1r, 1733; 2r, 1781; ref to com, 1783; rep without amdt, 1863; 3r, 1863; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 2614; r.a., 2623

Bills, Public, Commons

- Advance Payments for Crops C-58. 1r, 1166; 2r, 1178; 3r, 1181; r.a., 1217
- Aeronautics C-36. 1r, 1102; 2r, 1119; 3r, 1143; r.a., 1217
- Agricultural Stabilization C-25. 1r, 1195; 2r, 1195; 3r, 1198; r.a., 1217
- Appropriation No. 3, 1984-85 C-16. 1r, 296; 2r, 312, 323; 3r, 340; r.a., 404
- Appropriation No. 4, 1984-85 C-34. 1r, 703; 2r, 715; 3r, 728; r.a., 756
- Appropriation No. 1, 1985-86 C-35. 1r, 703; 2r, 716; 3r, 728; r.a., 756
- Appropriation No. 2, 1985-86 C-54. 1r, 1035; 2r, 1048, 1074; 3r, 1094; r.a., 1101
- Appropriation No. 3, 1985-86 C-89. 1r, 1683; 2r, 1720, 1743; 3r, 1776; r.a., 1831
- Appropriation No. 4, 1985-86 C-101. 1r, 2214; 2r, 2229; 3r, 2250; r.a., 2258
- Appropriation No. 1, 1986-87 C-102. 1r, 2214; 2r, 2230, 2250; 3r, 2251; r.a., 2258

Bills, Public, Commons—Cont'd

- Appropriation No. 2, 1986-87 C-115. 1r, 2577; 2r, 2601, 2616; 3r, 2617; r.a., 2623
- Army Benevolent Fund and related Acts C-100. 1r, 2246; 2r, 2251; 3r, 2254; r.a., 2258
- Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) C-11. 1r, 419; 2r, 439, 459; ref to com, 462; rep without amdt but with recommendation, 618; 3r, 618; r.a., 621
- Borrowing Authority, 1985-86 (No. 2) C-51. 1r, 1199; 2r, 1199; 3r, 1208; r.a., 1217
- Borrowing Authority, 1986-87 C-99. 1r, 2261; 2r, 2289, 2309; ref to com, 2317; rep without amdt, 2327; 3r, 2349; r.a., 2361
- Bretton Woods Agreements C-30. 1r, 881; 2r, 901, 913; 3r, 927; r.a., 928
- Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation C-86. 1r, 2529; 2r, 2556, 2573, 2587; 3r, 2601; r.a., 2623
- Canada Development Corporation Reorganization C-66. 1r, 1496; 2r, 1543, 1565, 1657; ref to com, 1660; rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1713; 3r, 1741; r.a., 1830
- Canada Pension Plan, Federal Court C-116. 1r, 2697; 2r, 2729; 3r, 2770; r.a., 2783
- Canadian Arsenal Limited Divestiture Authorization C-87. 1r, 2362; 2r, 2394; 3r, 2405; r.a., 2410
- Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance C-37. 1r, 743; 2r, 743; ref to Committee of the Whole, 747; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Heath Macquarrie in the Chair, Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall, Minister of State (Finance) taking part in the debate, 747; rep without amdt, 755; 3r, 755; r.a., 756
- Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security C-69. 1r, 1220; 2r, 1260, 1302; 3r, 1313, 1327, 1363; r.a., 1414
- Commercial Arbitration C-108. 1r, 2444; 2r, 2451; 3r, 2462; r.a., 2623
- Competition Tribunal C-91. 1r, 2565; 2r, 2577; ref to com, 2581; rep without amdt but with observations, 2614; 3r, 2617; r.a., 2623
- Condominium Ordinance Validation C-73. 1r, 1379; 2r, 1394, 1408; 3r, 1409; r.a., 1414
- Criminal Code (lotteries) C-81. 1r, 1476; 2r, 1503, 1522; ref to com, 1525; rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1789; 3r, 1825; r.a., 1831
- Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) C-77. 1r, 1321; 2r, 1355, 1365; ref to com, 1366; rep with amdt, 1377; m in amdt, 1378; concurrence by Commons in Senate amdt, 1379; 3r, 1378; r.a., 1414
- Criminal Code (prostitution) C-49. 1r, 1495; 2r, 1538, 1561; ref to com, 1565 rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1733; 3r, 1776; r.a., 1830
- Criminal Law, 1985 C-18. 1r, 804; 2r, 817, 843; ref to com, 847; rep without amdt, 990; 3r, 1024; r.a., 1100
- Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution C-43. 1r, 779; 2r, 795; 3r, 807; r.a., 927
- Crown Corporations Dissolution Authorization C-60. 1r, 1220; 2r, 1239, 1259; 3r, 1269; r.a., 1414
- Currency C-21. 1r, 418; 2r, 438, 456; 3r, 458; r.a., 617
- Currency C-118. 1r, 2617; 2r, 2653, 2670; 3r, 2681; r.a., 2783
- Customs C-59. 1r, 1476; 2r, 1506, 1576; ref to com, 1577; rep with amdt, 1669, 1705; 3r, 1705; concurrence by Commons in Senate amdt, 1880; r.a., 2031
- Customs and Customs Tariff C-9. 1r, 236; 2r, 266, 284; ref to com, 286; rep without amdt, 332; 3r, 340; r.a., 403
- Customs and Special Import Measures C-40. 1r, 804; 2r, 815; 3r, 834; r.a., 928
- Customs Tariff C-38. 1r, 757; 2r, 762, 771; ref to Committee of the Whole, 773; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon.

Bills, Public, Commons—Cont'd

- Customs Tariff C-38—Cont'd
- Heath Macquarrie in the Chair, 773; rep without amdt, 777; 3r, 777; r.a., 777
- Customs Tariff C-71. 1r, 1284; 2r, 1299, 1329; 3r, 1355; r.a., 1414
- Customs Tariff C-111. 1r, 2697; 2r, 2726; 3r, 2770; r.a., 2783
- Divorce C-46. 1r, 1880; 2r, 1930, 1945, 1964; ref to com, 1965; rep without amdt, 1967; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031
- Divorce and Corollary Relief C-47. 1r, 1880; 2r, 1930, 1945, 1964; ref to com, 1965; rep without amdt, 1968; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031
- Duties Relief C-98. 1r, 2624; 2r, 2654; 3r, 2670; r.a., 2783
- Employment Equity C-62. 1r, 2362; 2r, 2392, 2416, 2432; ref to com, 2433; rep with observations and recommendations, 2676; 3r, 2681; m re message to House of Commons, 2681, 2706; r.a., 2783
- Energy Administration C-112. 1r, 2731; 2r, 2731; 3r, 2771; r.a., 2783
- Excise Tax and Excise C-17. 1r, 396; 2r, 450; 3r, 473; r.a., 617
- Excise Tax and Excise C-80. 1r, 1984; 2r, 2006, 2055; ref to com, 2061; rep without amdt but with observations and recommendation, 2065; 3r, 2066; r.a., 2092
- Family Allowances, 1973 C-70. 1r, 1833; 2r, 1855, 1892, 1908, 1927, 1943, 1956, 1975, 2009, 2026; ref to com, 2029; rep without amdt, 2122; 3r, 2134, 2156, 2175; r.a., 2258
- Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance C-48. 1r, 1880; 2r, 1930, 1945, 1964; ref to com, 1965; rep without amdt, 1968; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031
- Farm Debt Review C-117. 1r, 2737; 2r, 2737, 2749; ref to Committee of the Whole, 2749; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, Hon. John Wise, Minister of Agriculture, taking part in the debate, 2749; rep without amdt, 2765; 3r, 2765; r.a., 2783
- Farm Improvement Loans C-56. 1r, 1130; 2r, 1153; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217
- Farm Products Marketing Agencies C-4. 1r, 188; 2r, 215; 3r, 225; r.a., 403
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 C-96. 1r, 2678; 2r, 2683, 2707; ref to com, 2721; rep without amdt but with comments, 2765; 3r, 2766; r.a., 2783
- Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation C-79. 1r, 1810; 2r, 1810; 3r, 1824; r.a., 1830
- Fisheries C-32. 1r, 1114; 2r, 1145; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217
- Fisheries Improvement Loans C-57. 1r, 1129; 2r, 1152; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217
- Foreign Extraterritorial Measures C-14. 1r, 332; 2r, 358, 388; 3r, 397; r.a., 403
- Freshwater Fish Marketing C-5. 1r, 332; 2r, 356, 384; 3r, 397; r.a., 403
- Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges C-78. 1r, 1496; 2r, 1540; ref to com, 1543; rep without amdt, 1649; 3r, 1649; r.a., 1712
- Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands Mercury Pollution Claims Settlement C-110. 1r, 2488; 2r, 2497, 2509; 3r, 2539; r.a., 2623
- House of Commons C-63. 1r, 1213; 2r, 1213; 3r, 1216; r.a., 1217
- Immigration, 1976 C-55. 1r, 2083; 2r, 2104; ref to com, 2107; rep without amdt, 2122; 3r, 2137, 2181; r.a., 2258
- Income Tax C-7. 1r, 236; 2r, 265, 324; ref to com, 324; rep without amdt, 396; 3r, 398; r.a., 403
- Income Tax C-109. 1r, 2529; 2r, 2557, 2564; 3r, 2573; r.a., 2623
- Income Tax and related Statutes C-84. 1r, 1849; 2r, 1871, 1888; ref to com, 1892; rep without amdt, 1938; availability of com proceedings, 1952, 1975; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031

Bills, Public, Commons—Cont'd

- Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada C-72. 1r, 1284; 2r, 1356, 1366; ref to com, 1366; rep without amdt, 1398; 3r, 1398; r.a., 1414
- Income Tax Conventions Interpretation C-10. 1r, 332; 2r, 357; 3r, 384; r.a., 403
- Indian C-31. 1r, 1012; 2r, 1038; ref to com, 1048; rep without amdt, 1106; 3r, 1136; r.a., 1217
- International Centre for Ocean Development C-22. 1r, 528; 2r, 588, 609; 3r, 618; r.a., 621
- Investment Canada C-15. 1r, 964; 2r, 997, 1024, 1052, 1067; 3r, 1093; r.a., 1101
- Judges C-61. 1r, 1212; 2r, 1212; 3r, 1213; r.a., 1217
- Judges and related Acts C-128. 1r, 2739; 2r, 2739; ref to com, 2741; rep without amdt, 2768; 3r, 2768; r.a., 2783
- Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization C-88. 1r, 2678; 2r, 2686, 2721; 3r, 2770, r.a., 2783
- Meat Inspection C-33. 1r, 881; 2r, 903, 917; ref to com, 918; rep without amdt, 922; 3r, 922; r.a., 928
- Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authorization C-53. 1r, 1166; 2r, 1181; 3r, 1183; r.a., 1217
- Oil Substitution and Conservation and Canadian Home Insulation Program C-24. 1r, 1103; 2r, 1123; 3r, 1144; r.a., 1217
- Old Age Security C-26. 1r, 1101; 2r, 1114, 1144; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217
- Ontario and Manitoba Courts C-3. 1r, 332; 2r, 365; 3r, 384; r.a., 403
- Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations C-45. 1r, 2696; 2r, 2723; ref to com, 2725; rep without amdt but with comments, 2776; 3r, 2777; r.a., 2783
- Parole and Penitentiary C-67. 1r, 2747; 2r, 2790; ref to Committee of the Whole, 2799; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, Hon. James Kelleher, Solicitor General, taking part in the debate, 2802; rep with amdt, 2822; 3r, 2826; m in amdt, 2830; message from Commons of disagreement with Senate amdt, 2839; m for non-insistence on Senate amdt, 2839; r.a., 2857
- Parole and related Statutes C-68. 1r, 2749; 2r, 2800; ref to Committee of the Whole, 2801; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, 2822; rep without amdt, 2824; 3r, 2832; r.a., 2857
- Pension C-28. 1r, 519; 2r, 531, 539; 3r, 588; r.a., 617
- Pension Benefits Standards, 1985 C-90, 1r, 2734; 2r, 2734, 2771; 3r, 2772; r.a., 2783
- Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax C-8. 1r, 347; 2r, 364, 392; 3r, 398; r.a., 403
- Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax and Income Tax C-82. 1r, 1881; 2r, 1912, 1928; 3r, 1943; r.a., 2031
- Petroleum Incentives Program C-85. 1r, 2214; 2r, 2224; 3r, 2247; r.a., 2258
- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation C-50. 1r, 850; 2r, 857, 873; 3r, 882; r.a., 928
- Prairie Farm Assistance C-41. 1r, 1035; 2r, 1057, 1072; 3r, 1094; r.a., 1101
- Public Works and Public Lands Grants C-13. 1r, 347; 2r, 357, 437; 3r, 456; r.a., 617
- Representation, 1985 C-74. 1r, 1733; 2r, 1750, 1777, 1793; ref to com, 1804; rep without amdt, 1863; 3r, 1888; m in amdt, 1906; ref to com, 1908; rep without amdt but with comments, 2018; 3r, 2040, 2052, 2070; r.a., 2092
- Royal Canadian Mounted Police C-65. 1r, 1984; 2r, 2005, 2024; ref to com, 2026; rep without amdt, 2148; 3r, 2149; r.a., 2258
- Saltfish C-6. 1r, 244; 2r, 286, 303; 3r, 322; r.a., 403
- Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government C-93. 1r, 2488; 2r, 2496, 2507; 3r, 2622; r.a., 2623

Bills, Public, Commons—Cont'd

- Seeds and Canada Grain C-59. 1r, 1476; 2r, 1506, 1546; 3r, 1546; r.a., 1712
- Small Businesses Loans C-23. 1r, 703; 2r, 713; ref to com, 715; rep without amdt, 733; 3r, 733; r.a., 756
- Sports Pool and Loto Canada Winding-up C-2. 1r, 1035; 2r, 1048, 1096; 3r, 1100; r.a., 1101
- Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) C-27. 1r, 1102; 2r, 1116; 3r, 1143; r.a., 1217
- Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments, 1982-87 C-39/. 1r, 1102; 2r, 1121; 3r, 1143; r.a., 1217
- Tax Rebate Discounting C-83. 1r, 1827; 2r, 1827; 3r, 1830; r.a., 1831
- Toronto Harbour Commissioners', 1985 C-76. 1r, 1881; 2r, 1911, 1948, 2011; ref to com, 2012; rep without amdt, 2093; 3r, 2112; r.a., 2258
- Unemployment Insurance, 1971 C-52. 1r, 929; 2r, 946; 3r, 948; r.a., 950
- United Nations Foreign Arbitral Awards Convention C-107. 1r, 2444; 2r, 2449; 3r, 2461; r.a., 2623
- Western Grain Stabilization C-29. 1r, 528; 2r, 590, 612; 3r, 618; r.a., 621
- Western Grain Transportation C-44. 1r, 1208; 2r, 1208; 3r, 1212; r.a., 1217
- Young Offenders, Criminal Code, Penitentiary, Prisons and Reformatories C-106. 1r, 2651; 2r, 2672, 2687; 3r, 2705; r.a., 2783

Bills, Public, Senate

- Income Tax Conventions S-3. 1r, 478; 2r, 484, 511; ref to com, 511; rep without amdt, 624; 3r, 624; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 1035; r.a., 1101
- Income Tax Conventions S-6. 1r, 1648; 2r, 1672, 1697; 3r, 1705; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 1880; r.a., 2031
- Marriage (prohibited degrees) S-2. 1r, 332; 2r, 394; ref to com, 395; rep with amdt, 1496, 1744; 3r, 1776, 2004, 2367;
- Railways S-1 (pro forma). 1r, 8
- Smoking Prohibition S-8. 1r, 2018; 2r, 2061, 2376, 2391, 2406, 2413, 2429; m in amdt, Speaker's ruling, 2495, 2510; ref to com, 2514

Board of Grain Commissioners

- Termination of appointment of member, status of Chief Commissioner, 1950

Bonn Economic Summit 1985

- See Economic Summit

Bonnell, Hon. M. Lorne

- Agriculture
 - Wheat, two-price system
 - Effect of price increase, qu, 2387
 - Potato industry
 - Government assistance, qu, 2037, 2095, 2130
 - Stabilization policy, qu, 2154, 2173
- Banking
 - Canadian Commercial Bank, collapse, qu, 1230
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 1107
- Cabinet
 - Conflict-of-interest guidelines, government policy, qu, 2387, 2389
- Canada Post Corporation
 - Closing of post office at Springhill, Nova Scotia, qu, 2704
- Canada-U.S. relations

Bonnell, Hon. M. Lorne—Cont'dCanada-U.S. relations—Cont'd

Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting, agenda, qu, 2130

Employment

CN shops, Prince Edward Island, qu, 2570

Disparity in treatment of displaced employees, qu, 2585

Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 1908

"Child and Elderly Benefits Consultation Paper", 1908

Child Tax Credit, 1910

Universality, 1908

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2711

Second class citizens, 2711

Health

Communicable diseases, Canada's participation in world immunization program, qu, 2036

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Frog Lake Indian Nation, self-government proposals, qu, 2652

Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie, the late, tribute, 2528

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee 30th report, 2404, 2420

National Film Board "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", motion to refer back to committee, 2518

National Finance Committee

17th report, federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, subject matter of Bill C-96, 2659

Nuclear disaster

Ukraine, effects of radiation, government knowledge and action, qu, 2387

Old Age Security bill C-26, 1115

Parliament

Caucus rooms and members' offices, electronic eavesdropping, qu, 1925

Pension bill C-28, 539

Prisoners of war, 540

They Served - We Care recommendations, 539

Veterans exposed to radiation, 540

Prince Edward Island

Economy, government assistance, qu, 2304, 2328, 2412

Privacy

Reported giving of information re unemployed, qu, 2094, 2600

Regional Industrial Expansion

Minister, suggested appointment, qu, 2570

Senate

Business, 1676

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1694

Question period, 2616

Delayed answers, 1400

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

"Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians for a Better Future", authority to study consultation paper, 831, 879

Pension benefits standards, subject matter of Bill C-90, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2501

Reports

2nd, old age security (Bill C-26), 1050

10th, authority to travel and to engage services to study report They Served, We Care, 2651

They Served - We Care, authority to review, 330

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

2nd report, invitation to provinces to appear before Senate committees, 956

Transport

CN Marine, increase in ferry rates, qu, 2094

CN Rail, Prince Edward Island equipment department staff reductions, qu, 2174

Bonnell, Hon. M. Lorne—Cont'dTransport—Cont'd

CN shops, Moncton layoffs, qu, 2328

Northumberland Strait ferry, delay in commencement of 1986 season, qu, 2037, 2554

Prince Edward Island, proposed tunnel or causeway to mainland, qu, 2095

Task force report, elimination of Prince Edward Island ferry service, qu, 2174

Unemployment Insurance

Withdrawal of benefits of armed forces pensioners, qu, 2468

Borrowing authority (Bill C-11)

Borrowing authority already granted, 440

Deficit, 460

Economic policy, 461

Non-lapsing contingent, 460

Reserve, 440

Social programs, 461

Speakers: Senators

Doody, C. William, 439, 462

MacEachen, Allan J., 459

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11. 1r, 419; 2r, 439, 459; ref to com, 462; rep without amdt but with recommendation, 618; 3r, 618; r.a., 621Borrowing authority (Bill C-51)

Budget, 1201

Deficit, 1202

Interest rates, 1207

Tax burden, 1201

Unemployment, 1203

Speakers: Senators

Doody, C. William, 1199

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 1207

MacEachen, Allan J., 1200

Roblin, Duff, 1205

Borrowing Authority, 1985-86 (No. 2) bill C-51. 1r, 1199; 2r, 1199; 3r, 1208; r.a., 1217Borrowing Authority, 1986-87 (Bill C-99)

Budgetary deficits, 2309, 2313

Dollar value, 2311, 2314

Progress, 2313

Tax increases, 2310, 2313

$2 billion non-lapsing reserve, 2290, 2316

Speakers: Senators

Doody, C. William, 2289, 2316

MacEachen, Allan J., 2309

Roblin, Duff, 2312

Borrowing Authority, 1986-87 bill C-99. 1r, 2261; 2r, 2289, 2309; ref to com, 2317; rep without amdt, 2327; 3r, 2349; r.a., 2361Bosa, Hon. Peter

Banking

Canadian Commercial Bank

Committee study, request for answers, 1377

Budget, proposals, 2298

Medical extra-billing practices, 2298

Universality, 2298

Cabinet

Leader of the Government in the Senate, responsibilities, 42

Bosa, Hon. Peter—Cont'd

- Canada-Italy International Social Security Agreement
 - Pension applications, 2246
- Canada's International Relations, Special Joint Committee
 - 1st report, Bilateral trade with the United States and Canada's participation in research on Strategic Defense Initiative (interim), 1661
 - International tensions, 1662
 - "Prisoner's dilemma" theory, 1662
 - United Nations, 1661
- Communications
 - Museum of Man, change of name, qu, 1973, 2103
- Concentration camps, qu, 2100
- Currency bill C-118, 2654, 2670
 - $1 coin, 2671
- Economy
 - Wage and price controls, qu, 377
- Education
 - Toronto school, change of name, qu, 1288
- Energy
 - Oil pricing, qu, 2051
- Federal-provincial relations
 - Establishment of cross-party caucus committees, qu, 2790
- Foreign affairs
 - Middle East, Gulf of Sidra, United States-Libya conflict, safety of Canadian nationals, qu, 2221
 - Re-establishment of diplomatic relations with Iran, qu, 2068
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation
 - Motion to authorize Foreign Affairs Committee to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington D.C. to study, 2236
- Health, ill effects of smoking, 462, 474, 1935, 1981
 - Advertising and sales promotion of cigarettes, 475
 - Cost of smoking to employer and taxpayer, 475
 - Recommendations for implementation on Parliament Hill, 475
 - Requests to Prime Minister and Treasury Board re non-smoking areas, 1981
 - Second-hand smoke, 375
 - "Tips to help smokers butt-out", Ann Landers, quote, 1982
- House of Commons
 - Alleged remarks by Conservative M.P., qu, 2112
 - Government attitude, qu, 2133
 - Disparaging remarks by Conservative M.P., qu, 2308
- Human rights
 - Meeting of experts, participation by Canadian parliamentarians, qu, 868
- Immigration
 - Entry of Soviet Jews, government action, qu, 2470
 - Proposed reduction in quotas, qu, 78
 - Qualifications for entry, qu, 97
- Immigration, 1976 bill C-55, 2105, 2122, 2137, 2185
 - Case backlog, 2105
 - Immigration Appeal Board, 2106
 - Immigration policy, 2106
 - Multiculturalism, 2106, 2138
 - Refugee-status determination system, 2106
 - Temporary measures, 2138
- Industry
 - Cornwall, establishment of American plant, qu, 523, 524, 530, 712
- International terrorism
 - Seizure of Italian cruise ship, request for information, qu, 1355, 1363
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fifth Conference, Mexico City, 2479

Bosa, Hon. Peter—Cont'd

- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fourth Annual Conference, 1106, 1184, 1529
 - Africa and other world problems, 1529
 - Disarmament, 1530
 - Drug traffic and youth, 1530
 - History of union, 1184
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fourth Annual Conference, Ottawa and Spring Conference, Lomé, Togo, 1480
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fifth Conference, Mexico City, 2445
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Sixth Conference on European Co-operation and Security at Bonn, West Germany, 2665, 2774
- June 24 celebrations
 - Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, anniversary of landing of Giovanni Caboto, qu, 1092
- Libya
 - Reported incidents in Tripoli, qu, 2281
- McBride, Captain Ronald G.
 - Unveiling of memorial sculpture and visit of industrial mission from Friuli, Italy, 1649, 1700
 - History, 1701
- Metric conversion
 - Government policy, qu, 1407
- Mexico
 - Earthquake disaster, government action, qu, 1268
- Multiculturalism
 - Federal-provincial conference, request for observer status for interested parties, qu, 873
- Parliamentary secretaries
 - Suggested appointment of senators, qu, 841, 1224, 2789
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 22813
- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 861
- Reform of the Senate
 - Commons resolution, consideration by joint committee, qu, 867
 - Parliamentary secretaries, suggested appointment of senators, qu, 1233
- Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1797
- Restaurant of Parliament
 - Provision of services, qu, 321
- Rules of the Senate
 - Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, qu, 61, 81
- Senate
 - Foreign Affairs Committee, meeting, qu, 2069
 - Question Period
 - Request for answers, 382, 2089
 - Retirement of members, statistics, 450
- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2376
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - 7th report, Immigration bill C-55, rep without amdt, 2122
- World Cup soccer
 - Congratulations to television sponsor and networks, qu, 2679

Bosley, Hon. John

- Appointment to office of Speaker of the House of Commons, 3
- Response to address to both houses of His Excellency Yasuhiro Nakasone, Prime Minister of Japan, 1848

Bretton Woods Agreements

- Bonn Economic Summit, 914
- International Development Association, 902, 914
- International Finance Corporation, participation of Canada, 902, 915
- Payments, 903
- United States, 915
- World Bank, 901, 913

Bretton Woods Agreements—Cont'dSpeakers: Senators

Flynn, Jacques, 901, 916

MacEachen, Allan J., 913

Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-30. 1r, 881; 2r, 901, 913; 3r, 927; r.a., 928

Broadcasting

Caplan task force report, 2504, 2586

Task force, qualifications of co-chairman, 942

Threatened jamming of U.S. radio station by Cuba, possible interference with radio station CFRB, Toronto, 945, 1023

Buckwold, Hon. Sidney L.Agriculture

Grain, plight of producers, deficiency payments and two-price system for wheat, government policy, qu, 2285

Sugar-beet industry crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1886

Western Canada, drought conditions

Government action, 1224

Government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1462

The Western Producer, 1615Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1615

Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2081

Foreign affairs

Zimbabwe, status of white farmers, qu, 507

International trade

Exportation of grain to People's Republic of China, qu, 78, 242

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 859

Reform of the Senate, 634

Senate

Question Period

Request for answers, 303

Youth

Katimavik program, cancellation, announcement of new program, qu, 2202

Budget

Agriculture, impact of cuts, 1134

Atlantic provinces, impact of measures, 986, 1020

Date of presentation, 494, 509, 637, 677

De-indexation of pension benefits

Government position, 1013, 1021

Government statement, 1169

Request for reply to petitions, 1037

Farm Credit loan provision, impact on farmers, 2086

Impact of measures, 1016

Impact on employment, 932

Impact on firefighting personnel at airports, 2112, 2223

Minister of External Affairs, statement, government position, 781

Oil pricing, loss of revenue, 2112, 2222

Preparation

Alleged negotiations between government and Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, 446

Use of consultants, 447, 635, 1090

Proposed business transfer tax, 2112

Request for briefing, 925

Tax incentive for investment in Cape Breton, 951

Tax increases, government policy, 929

Budget—Cont'd

Timing of implementation of budgetary provisions, 1020

Version of budget paper sent to Canadian embassies, 2149, 2272

See National Finance Committee

Budget, impact on senior citizens, 965, 991, 1051, 1079, 1244

Point of order, 991

Speaker's ruling, 1051

Speakers: Senators

Frith, Royce, 1079, 1244

Roblin, Duff, 1081

Budget, proposals, 2140, 2371

Canadian Rural Transition Program, 2373

Commodity-based loan program, 2372

Commodity exchanges, 2141

Downstream/upstream revenue, 2142

Energy deregulation, 2141

Energy sector considerations, 2373

Farm financing and debt servicing, 2141

Farm sector priority, 2373

Impact of deficits, 2144

Medical extra-billing practices, 2298

National sugar policy, 2140

New oil reference price, 2142

Nielsen report, 2143

Petro-Canada lay-offs, 2143

Public debt, 2144

Options for deficit reduction, 2145

Universality of social programs, 2145, 2298

Speakers: Senators

Balfour, R. James, 2371

Bosa, Peter, 2298

Everett, Douglas D., 2143

Olson, H.A., 2140

Budget Speech

Accommodation for senators in Senate gallery of House of Commons, 924, 2065

Cabinet

Access to information, 113

Conflict-of-interest guidelines, government policy, 2384, 2387, 2388, 2405

Senator's arm's length relationship, 2386

Leader of the Government in the Senate, responsibilities, 28, 41, 213

Cabinet, access to information, 220, 254, 268, 287, 306, 1411

Employment, 269

Journalists, 269

Public servants, 269

Real disposable income per capita, 269

Speakers: Senators

Davey, Keith, 254, 1411

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 268

Phillips, Orville H., 287

Steuart, D.G., 306

Canada Council

Effect of budget reductions, 46

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation

Board of directors, 2556, 2573, 2587

Increasing fees, 2573, 2588

Losses of failed western banks, 2587

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation—Cont'd

Retroactivity, 2574, 2587

Speakers : Senators

Flynn, Jacques, 2556, 2587

Godfrey, John M., 2573

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-86. 1r, 2529; 2r, 2556, 2573, 2587; 3r, 2601; r.a., 2623Canada Development Corporation

Sale of shares, government policy, 945, 975

Canada Development Corporation reorganization

Adversary system, 1659

Definition of "associate" loophole, 1565, 1741, 1742

Equity consolidation, 1742

Rights issue, 1544

Transitional measures, 1545

Speakers: Speakers

Godfrey, John M., 1565, 1741

Kelly, William M., 1543, 1659, 1741

Sinclair, Ian, 1657, 1742

Stewart, John, B., 1742

Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66. 1r, 1496; 2r, 1543, 1565, 1657; ref to com, 1660; rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1713; 3r, 1741; r.a., 1830Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association

Meeting in Italy, 2363, 2479

See appendix p. 2486Canada-Greece relations, 1714, 1787

Good relations at risk, 1787

Canada-Italy International Social Security Agreement

Pension applications, 2246

Canada Pension Plan, Federal Court

Children's benefits, 2729

Disability benefits, 2729

Harmonization with Quebec Pension Plan, 2730

Increased contribution rates, 2729

Survivor benefits, 2729

Speakers: Senators

Frith, Royce, 2730

Tremblay, Arthur, 2729

Canada Pension Plan, Federal Court bill C-116. 1r, 2697; 2r, 2729; 3r, 2770; r.a., 2783Canada Post Corporation

Board members, replacement, 2569

Closing of post office at Forget, Saskatchewan, 2584

Closing of post office at Springhill, Nova Scotia, 2704

Door-to-door delivery service, limited cancellation, 831, 937

Prospective strike, government policy, 530

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-fifth Meeting, Puerto Rico, 113, 225, 2275

Energy, defence and multilateral questions, 226

Environmental and multilateral issues, 227

Trade and economic questions, 226

See appendix p. 132Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-fifth Meeting, Puerto—Cont'd*Speaker: Senator

Stanbury, Richard J., 225

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-seventh Meeting, at Tucson, Arizona, 2616, 2676*See* appendix p. 2625Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-sixth Meeting, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, 929, 1327, 1358

Economic and trade questions, 1359

Energy, defense and multilateral questions, 1360

Fisheries, environment and multilateral issues, 1360

See appendix p. 1332Speaker: Senator

Stanbury, Richard J., 1358

Canada-United States relations, 31

American countervail on Atlantic groundfish, government attitude, 1853

Bank of Nova Scotia, appeal to Supreme Court of United States, 478, 504

Bilateral trade negotiations, 1388, 1392, 1399, 1431, 1521

Agricultural products, 1309

Marketing boards, 2207

Agriculture, consultations with Canadian producers, 2364, 2472

Benefits accruing to other trading partners, 2464, 2495

Canadian publishing and Canadian magazines, 2769

Canadian use of lobbyist, 2304

Canadian testimony before congressional committee or special prosecutor, government policy, 2426, 2537

Government position, 2383

Cultural industries, 1651

Effect on Canadian lumber industry, 1853

Export of fresh water, 1851

Statement by government leader, 1864

Fisheries, imposition of U.S. tariff, government attitude, 2386

Government policy, 1236, 1535, 1538, 2265, 2328, 2342

Individual negotiators for specialized areas, 2668

Items for negotiation, 1352, 2665

Items not for negotiation, 1353

Participation of provinces, 1552, 1557

Statement by Premier of Ontario, 2045, 2222

Position of United States, 2303

Remuneration of Canadian negotiator, 1852

Request for amplification of delayed answer, 2505

Role of lobbyist, 2268

Position of United States, 2472

United States Ambassador's comments, 1308, 1310

United States countervailing duties, government action, 2467

United States undertakings, government position, 2282

User fees on Great Lakes, 1517, 1718

Canadian advertising in United States media, 651

Canadian content rules, effect on U.S. trade into Canada, 2503

Canadian hog export embargo, 953

Canadian hog production, United States import duty, 738, 971

Canadian potatoes, United States import duty, 727, 740, 973

Cultural heritage and national identity, government policy, 2769

Extraterritorial jurisdiction, 648

Fish, alleged subsidization of Canadian exports, 1063

Free trade

Impact on auto pact, availability of report to Province of Ontario, 2493

Free trade arrangement, impact on employment in Canada, 1518

Garrison Dam project, 46, 82, 102, 214, 497, 795

Canada-United States relations—Cont'd

- Garrison Dam project,—Cont'd
 - Diversion unit legislation enactment, 2448, 2555
 - United States study of bill, 2342
- Georges Bank, World Court judgment, 298
- Government policy, 81, 243
- Investment restrictions, 650
- Japanese automobile plant, effect of establishment in Canada, 2493
- Kidnapping of Canadian citizen by bounty hunters from United States, 529
- Northern waters, sovereignty, 1092
- Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting
 - Acid rain, government objectives, 2160
 - Scope of agreement, 2197
 - Status of agreement, 2382, 2472
 - Agenda, 2130, 2151
 - Oil import tax, agenda item, 2174
 - Status of document, 2155, 2272
 - U.S. agriculture policy as agenda item, 2207, 2273, 2389
 - Request for answer, 2365
- Prime Minister's speech in Chicago
 - "Cultural sovereignty", definition, 1656
 - "Joint tenancy" and "constructive internationalism", definition, 1655
- Summit meeting in Quebec City
 - Absence of Governor General, 657, 669, 671, 674, 677, 814, 1174, 2494
 - Agenda, 648
 - Availability of background information, 762
 - Declaration on international security, 674, 814, 833, 937
 - Effect on employment in Atlantic provinces, 678, 1023
 - Invitations to gala performance, request for answer, 2221
 - Newspaper article, 652
 - Press release, 652
 - Request for texts of agreements, 673
- Trade
 - Commitment to halt protectionism, 2700
 - Imposition of tariff on publications and computer parts, 2536, 2545, 2546
 - Imposition of U.S. tariffs and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2542, 2560, 2562, 2566 2572, 2582, 2702
 - Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles, 2489
 - Compensation, 2502
 - Compensation for workers in industry, 2547
 - Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes, shingles and steel products, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2530
 - New approaches, government policy, 62, 242, 259
 - Policy, 648
 - Tariff discussions, request for information, 2542, 2702
- Trans-border pollution problems, 608, 669, 1951, 2050, 2102, 2156
 - Mandate of special envoys, 671
- U.S. weapons testing in Canada, cruise missile mishap, 1868, 1869, 1871, 2039

Canada-United States relations, free trade, 1362Canadair , 253

- Government policy, 336, 432
- See National Finance Committee

Canada's cultural industries

- Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1573, 1578
- Advertising, 1624

Canada's cultural industries—Cont'd

- Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider—Cont'd
 - "Battle of the book", 1592
- Bilingualism, 1629
- Books, movies, broadcasting, culture or economics, 1590
- Broadcasting, 1604
- Canadian Authors' Association, 1609
- Canadian film industry, 1618, 1643
- Canadian football, 1624
- Canadian identity, 1635
- Canadian subsidiaries of American agencies, 1625
- Canadian talent, 1638
- Copyrights, 1625
- Cost of being Canadian, 1635
- Cultural identity, 1635
- Cultural sovereignty, 1620
- Culture, definition, 1604
- Freedom to be different, 1640
- Gulf and Western's acquisition of Canadian companies, 1595
- Investment Canada Act, 1594
- Involvement of children and schools in cultural development, 1631
- Literary and intellectual heritage, 1594
- Motion withdrawn, 1645
- Nine questions, 1621
- Patriation policy, 1596
- Penetration of Canadian markets by U.S. cultural industries, 1619
- Saskatchewan culture, 1613
- Symbols and values, nation's survival, 1641
- The Western Producer*, 1615, 1617
- Time* magazine, 1623
- Trade negotiations, 1610
- Written word, important measure of values, 1583
- Speakers: Senators
 - Argue, Hazen, 1616
 - Barootes, Efsthios, 1612
 - Bielish, Martha P., 1630
 - Buckwold, Stanley L., 1615
 - Davey, Keith, 1620
 - David, Paul, 1615
 - De Bané, Pierre, 1642
 - Doyle, Richard J., 1608
 - Flynn, Jacques, 1574, 1578
 - Frith, Royce, 1574, 1578
 - Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 1628
 - Grafstein, Jerahmiel S., 1573, 1578, 1645
 - Haidasz, Stanley, 1644
 - Hays, Dan, 1604
 - Hébert, Jacques, 1590
 - Lapointe, Renaude, 1639
 - Le Moyne, Jean, 1632
 - MacDonald, Finlay, 1627
 - MacEachen Allan J., 1610
 - Macquarrie, Heath, 1601
 - Marsden, Lorna, 1641
 - Murray, Lowell, 1575
 - Robertson, Brenda M., 1619
 - Roblin, Duff, 1574, 1587
 - Simard, Jean-Maurice, 1635
 - Turner, Charles, 1637

Canada's International Relations, Special Joint Committee

- Appointment
 - Message from House of Commons, 1010, 2488, 2670
 - Message to House of Commons, 1155, 1183

Canada's International Relations, Special Joint Committee—Cont'd

Appointment—Cont'd

Senate membership, 1183

Reports

1st, bilateral trade with United States and Canada's participation in research on Strategic Defense Initiative (interim), 1221, 1316, 1395, 1508, 1568, 1661, 2670

Canada's role, 1510

East-West relations, 1509

International tensions, 1662

"Prisoner's dilemma" theory, 1662

United Nations, 1661

Final, "Independence and Internationalism", 2697

Canadian Arsenals Limited divestiture authorization

Consolidated Revenue Fund, 2405

Export of armaments, 2396

Progress of transaction, 2394

Reciprocal Pension Transfer Agreement, 2395, 2397

Speakers : Senators

Hicks, Henry D., 2396, 2405

Kelly William M., 2394, 2405

Canadian Arsenals Limited Divestiture Authorization bill C-87. 1r, 2362; 2r, 2394; 3r, 2405; r.a., 2410

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Cutbacks in service, 100

Effect of budget reductions, 46, 1479

Funding, government policy, 318

Independence, government policy, 99, 318

International service, possible cancellation, 194, 427

Mandate, parliamentary committee study, 318, 322

Rumoured sale, 299

Staff reductions, 944

Canadian Commercial Bank

See Banking

Canadian Commercial Bank financial assistance

Confidence in financial institutions, 745

Depositors, 744

Government's responsibility, 745

Impact of failure on depositors and shareholders, 747

Inspector General of Banks, 747

Shareholders, 744

Stability of Canadian financial institutions, 747

Speakers: Senators

Frith, Royce, 745

Godfrey, John M., 751

MacEachen, Allan J., 747

Roblin, Duff, 743

Turner, Charles, 754

also

McDougall, Hon. Barbara Jean, Minister of State (Finance), 747

Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37. 1r, 743; 2r, 743; ref to Committee of the Whole, 747; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Heath Macquarrie in the Chair, Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall, Minister of State (Finance) taking part in the debate, 747; rep without amdt, 755; 3r, 756; r.a., 756

Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security

Canadian information, 1303

Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security—Cont'd

Designation of the institute in French, 1261

East-West relations, 1303

International members of the board, 1304

Strategic Defense Initiative, 1304

Speakers: Senators

MacEachen, Allan J., 1302

Macquarrie, Heath, 1260, 1305, 1313, 1327

Roblin, Duff, 1305

Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security bill C-69. 1r, 1220; 2r, 1260, 1302; 3r, 1313, 1327, 1363; r.a., 1414

Canadian internationalism, 246

Canadian National Railways

Board of directors

Replacement of chairman, 779

Replacement of members, 812, 833, 2023

Canadian Patent No. 855, 255

Canadian Oxygen Limited and BOC Inc., 938, 955

Forane, 938, 955

Speakers: Senators

Langlois, Léopold, 955

Nurgitz, Nathan, 938

Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 bill S-4. 1r, 921; 2r, 938, 955; ref to com, 956; rep without amdt, 964; 3r, 1024

Canadian Pension Commission, Pension Review Board

Replacement of Wing Commander MacKenzie, DFC, 1066, 1174

Vacancies, 807

Canadian Wheat Board, 63

Alleged absence of minister from advisory committee meetings, 1172, 1238

Appointment of commissioner, 2173

Criticism contained in study team report to task force on program review, 2149

Dwarf wheat, marketing, 741

Mission to China, composition of delegation, 2585, 2669

Sprouted wheat, presentation of petitions for direct emergency open quota, 1405

Cape Breton

Labour relations, 2789

Provincial status, 2790

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Board of directors, appointment, 1235

President, appointment, 725, 726, 1023

Prompt delivery of copies of tabled reports to senators' offices, 2159

Censorship, nature and danger, 1322, 1368

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 1369

Mill, John Stuart, quotes, 1368

National Film Board, 1369

Speaker: Senator

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 1368

Census 1986, 93Charbonneau, Hon. Guy, Speaker of the Senate

- Appointment, 1
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Proceedings, televising, ruling, 1467
- Berntson, Hon. Eric, Deputy Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan, visit, 416
- Budget, impact on senior citizens, ruling, 1051
- Canada's International Relations Committee
 - 1st report, bilateral trade with United States and Canada's participation in research on Strategic Defense Initiative (interim), 1221
- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod
 - Jalbert, René M., Esq., appointment, 1220
- Hungary
 - Nagy, His Excellency Lajos, Ambassador, visit, 2581
- Indonesia
 - Djalal, His Excellency Hasjim, Ambassador, visit, 1430
- Industry
 - Canadian Porcelain Company, offer to purchase by employee cooperative, government attitude, 990
- Information Commissioner, special report tabled, 2083
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee
 - Reports
 - 1st, "Soil at Risk", printing of additional copies, 419
 - 19th, tabled, 1534
 - 20th and 21st, tabled, 1735
 - 22nd, 23rd and 24th, tabled, 1999
 - 24th (revised), tabled, 2032
 - 25th, tabled, 2160
 - 26th and 27th, tabled, 2302
 - 31st to 40th, tabled, 2559
 - Schedule of salary revisions tabled, 2093
- Official Languages
 - Report of commissioner, year ending Mar. 31/86, tabled, 2614
- Official Languages, Policy and Programs
 - Estimates 1986-87, P.C. vote 15, message from Commons, 2083
- Parliament
 - Estimates, 1986-87, Parliament vote 10, message from Commons, 2083
- Standing joint committees
 - Message from Commons, 2082
 - Propriety of Commons referrals, 2195
 - Speaker's statement, 2223
- Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2696
- People's Republic of China, delegation, visit, 1220
- Republic of Rwanda, representatives, visit, 2559
- Senate
 - Clerks at the Table, 47
 - Clerk Assistant, issuance of commission to Richard G. Greene, 2362
 - Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, statement, 2245
 - Minutes of Proceedings, recording of points of order, 1967
 - Official report, 1648
 - Prayer at commencement of sittings, 27
 - Property Qualification of Senators, renewal, 303
 - Reception for new senators, 434, 695
 - Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, motion in amendment, ruling, 2495
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1249
- Standing Joint Committees
 - Appointment of Commons members, 2195

Charbonneau, Hon. Guy, Speaker of the Senate—Cont'd

- Youth, Special Senate Committee
 - 2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", point of order, 2338
 - Ruling, 2342

Chernenko, Konstantin, the late, President of U.S.S.R., 622

- Government representation at funeral, 677

Child and Elderly Benefits consultation paper

- See Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

China, Peoples' Republic of, delegation visit, 1220Christmas, bureaucratic and political comments, 296, 405, 440*Christmas greetings, 415, 1831*Citizenship

- Increase in fees, 98

Clerk's Accounts

- Statement tabled pursuant to rule 112 and ref to com, 951, 2501

Cogger, Hon. Michel (Introduced in the Senate May 14/86), 2463

- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, motion in amendment, 2830

Commercial arbitrationSpeakers : Senators

- Frith, Royce, 2451
- Phillips, Orville H., 2451

Commercial Arbitration bill C-108. 1r, 2444; 2r, 2451; 3r, 2462; r.a., 2623Committee of Selection

- See Selection Committee

Committee of the Whole

- Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37, Hon. Heath Macquarrie in the Chair, Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall, Minister of State (Finance) taking part in the debate, 747
- Customs Tariff bill C-38, Hon. Heath Macquarrie in the Chair, 773
- Farm Debt Review bill C-117, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, Hon. John Wise, Minister of Agriculture taking part in the debate, 2750
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, Hon. James Kelleher, Solicitor General taking part in the debate, 2802
- Parole and related Statutes bill C-68, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, 2822

Committees of the Senate

- Authority to meet during Senate adjournment, 419

Committees, Special, Joint

- Canada's International Relations

Committees, Special, Senate

- National Defence
- Youth

Committees, Standing, Joint

- Library of Parliament
- Official Languages (from Feb.24/86)
- Official Languages Policies and Programs (until Feb. 24/86)
- Printing of Parliament
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments
- Restaurant of Parliament

Committees, Standing, Senate

- Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry (until May 14/86)
- Agriculture and Forestry (from May 14/86)
- Banking, Trade and Commerce
- Energy and Natural Resources
- Fisheries (from May 14/86)
- Foreign Affairs
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs
- National Finance
- Selection
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology
- Standing Rules and Orders
- Transport and Communications

Commonwealth of Australia

- See* Australia

Communications

- Cairo conference, participation of Parliamentarians, 2286
- Museum of Man, change of name, 1971, 1973, 2103

Competition tribunal

- Abuse of market power, 2578
- Bank and crown corporation mergers, 2579
- Conspiracy, 2579
- Membership, 2578
- Mergers and impact on competition, 2578
- Speakers: Senators
 - Frith, Royce, 2579
 - MacDonald, Finlay, 2577
 - Sinclair, Ian, 2580

- Competition Tribunal bill C-91. 1r, 2565; 2r, 2577; ref to com, 2581; rep without amdt but with observations, 2614; 3r, 2617; r.a., 2623

Concentration camps, 2100Condominium ordinance validation

- Housing costs, 1394
- Land Titles Act, 1394
- Need for housing, 1394
- Speakers: Senators
 - Lucier, Paul, 1408
 - Marshall, Jack, 1394

- Condominium Ordinance Validation bill C-73. 1r, 1379; 2r, 1394, 1408; 3r, 1409; r.a., 1414

Constitution

- First Ministers' Conference, aboriginal rights, Senate representation, 692, 743, 761
- Quebec's opting out, government policy, 281

Consumer and Corporate Affairs

- Combines and trust companies legislation, 1255
- Patent Office closing, 954, 975
- Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption
 - Alleged wrongdoing in inspection process, suggested prosecution, 1382
 - Labour union action at processing plant, 1382
 - Responsibility of processor's parent company, government policy, 1381
 - Sale as pet food, 1382, 1436
 - See* Fisheries and Oceans
- Trademark legislation, 479, 679, 771

Cook, Hon. Eric (Retired July 26/84)

- Tributes, 22

Cools, Hon. Anne C.

- Adams, Rt. Hon. John, the late, representation at funeral, 666
- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 244
- Canadian internationalism, 246
- Capital punishment, 248
- Social justice, 247

Co-operatives, 63Corbin, Hon. Eymard G. (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

- Agricultural Stabilization bill C-25, 1197
 - Potato industry, 1197
- Agriculture
 - Inspection fees, government policy, qu, 695
 - Marketing of potatoes, qu, 80, 242, 510, 537, 638
 - Potato industry
 - Re-establishment of commission of inquiry, qu, 1971
 - Stabilization or diversion program, qu, 1970, 2099
 - Stabilization policy, qu, 2154
 - Sugar-beet industry crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1883
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Proceedings, authority to televise, 1492
- Canada-United States relations
 - Canadian potatoes, United States import duty, qu, 727, 740, 973
 - Meeting in Quebec City, absence of Governor General, qu, 677
 - Trade, imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2567
- Communications
 - Cairo conference, participation of Parliamentarians, qu, 2286
- Environment
 - Soil conservation, qu, 104
- Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2737, 2749, 2753
 - "Atlantic Canada", 2761
 - Potato industry, 2754
- Farm Products Marketing Agencies bill C-4, 219
 - Potato marketing in eastern Canada, 219
- Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements
 - Equalization payments, qu, 210
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2717, 2766
 - Impact on New Brunswick francophones, 2718
- Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1817
- Fisheries and Oceans
 - Future of Star-Kist plant, government policy, request for answer, 1870
 - Product inspection standards, qu, 1906, 1922
 - Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption

Corbin, Hon. Eymard G. —Cont'dFisheries and Oceans—*Cont'd*Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption—Cont'd

Consumer confidence, future of Star-Kist plant, government policy, qu, 1297, 1435

Foreign affairs

Iran

Diplomatic relations, re-establishment, 1257, 1435

Expulsion of Iranian nationals from Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, qu, 1311

Francophone Commonwealth

Establishment, possible government participation, qu, 337

Hatfield, Hon. Richard B.

Fifteenth anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1666, 1706, 1996

Division of communities, 1708

Room for improvement, 1708

Health, ill effects of smoking, 1935

House of Commons bill C-63, 1214

Human rights

Afghanistan and Iran, United Nations resolutions, Canada's position, qu, 1716 1739

Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84

Availability of committee proceedings, 1955

Indian bill C-31, 1141

Justice for Indian women, 1141

Industry

New Brunswick, closure of Star-Kist plant, government action, qu, 1393

Request for answer, 1400

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Estimates of the Senate for 1986-87, 1725

Inter-Parliamentary Union

Seventy-fourth Annual Conference, Ottawa and Spring Conference, Lomé, Togo, 1837

Actions of RCMP, 1838

Canada-Iran relations, 1840

Democratic rights and freedoms, 1839

National Resistance Council of Iran representatives, statement, 1837

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

14th report, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt, 1863

Multiculturalism

Minister's communiqué, disparity between French and English versions, qu, 1377

National Film Board

Possibility of budget cuts in Ontario, qu, 525, 679

National Finance Committee

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to report, 585, 592

National Soil Conservation Week, 808

Erosion, 809

Official Languages Committee

Quorum, 463

Official report, point of order, 1793

Old age security

De-indexation of pensions, presentation of petitions, 1130

Parliament

Report of commission to review salaries of members of Parliament and senators, definition of "members of Parliament" and "salaries", 921

Parliament buildings

Centre block, removal of portraits of British Prime Ministers, 1527, 1934

Parliament Hill

"Fairyland of beauty and excitement", 1716

Corbin, Hon. Eymard G. —Cont'd

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2776, 2781

Parliamentary privileges and traditions, 2781

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2813

Point of order

Tabling of documents in Senate in bilingual form in compliance with Official Languages Act, 2565

Poverty

Secretary of State for External Affairs, reported statement on "elementary conditions", qu, 1716

Regional Industrial Expansion

Atlantic provinces, government assistance to industry, qu, 605, 814

Remembrance Day, 1485

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1781, 1797, 2052

Amalgam formula, 2055

American Review of Canadian Studies, R.K. Carty, quote, 2052

Courtney, Prof. John C., quote, 2054

Freeze on electoral map, 1798

Hnatyshyn formula, 1798

Lack of public testimony, 2053

Regional disparities, 2052

Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65, point of order, 1984

Senate

Business, 1681

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, question of privilege, 1693

Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 621

Order paper question, request for answer, 1093

Privilege, 1741

Question Period

Distribution of delayed answers, 519

Request for answers, 638, 1176, 1792

Simard, Hon. Jean-Maurice, 1128

Social programs

Universality, government policy, qu, 407, 409

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

Audio recording and broadcasting proceedings of Senate committees, request to study, 653

Report

5th, Rules of the Senate, use of male and female gender, 1570

Transport

Atlantic provinces, freight rate increases, qu, 499, 680

VIA Rail, resumption of "Atlantic Limited" service, qu, 724

Unemployment, method of combatting, 701

UNESCO

General conference, Sofia, Bulgaria, composition of Canadian delegation, qu, 1375

Youth

Government policy, qu, 2162

Katimavik, cancellation of program, government policy, qu, 1942, 2131

Government knowledge of contents of Special Senate Committee report before tabling, qu, 2205

Youth Committee

2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action," 2620

Correctional service

Commissioner's office, increased cost of administration, 2284, 2389

Corrections, 2246

Correctional investigator, annual report, request for tabling, 2565

Daniel Hawe Report, motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6, for production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2338, 2359, 2539

Corrections—Cont'd

Request for tabling of document, 2669, 2704, 2787

Corrections system, 68Cottreau, Hon. Ernest G.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 248
Democracy, 248

Criminal Code (lotteries)

Authority to operate sports pool betting, 1503
Definition of "lottery scheme", 1505
Legalized gambling, 1825
Manufacture and export of gaming equipment, 1505
Restrictions, 1505
Uncertainties in law, 1503
Speakers: Senators
Frith, Royce, 1825
Nurgitz, Nathan, 1503
Perrault, Raymond J., 1522

Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81. 1r, 1476; 2r, 1503, 1522; ref to com, 1525; rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1789; 3r, 1825; r.a., 1831Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting), 68, 248

Horse racing, 1355
Pari-mutuel betting, 1365
Race Tracks of Canada Incorporated, 1365
Speakers: Senators
Frith, Royce, 1365
Nurgitz, Nathan, 1355

Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) bill C-77. 1r, 1321; 2r, 1355, 1365; ref to com, 1366; rep with amdt, 1377; m in amdt, 1378; concurrence by Commons in Senate amdt, 1379; r.a., 1414Criminal Code (prostitution)

Adverse consequences, 1561
Enhancement of pimp's control, 1565
Fraser report, 1539, 1562
Juvenile prostitution, 1539
Proposed provision a breach of rights under Charter, 1563
Prostitution not defined, 1562
Stop-gap action, 1563
Street soliciting, nuisance, 1539, 1563
Wide discretionary powers for police, 1562
Speakers: Senators
Flynn, Jacques, 1563
Frith, Royce, 1564
Hicks, Henry D. 1564
Lewis, P. Derek, 1561
MacDonald, Finlay, 1538

Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49. 1r, 1495; 2r, 1538, 1561; ref to com, 1565; rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1733; 3r, 1776; r.a., 1831Criminal law, 1985

Air safety regulations, 820, 846
Appeal procedures, 818
Blood samples, 822
Computer offences, 819

Criminal law, 1985—Cont'd

Contempt of court provisions, 844
Drugs, 819, 846
Extraterritoriality, 844
Impaired driving, 821
Impounding of a vehicle used to commit an offence, 821
Indictments, 818
Information concerning searches, 819
Mandatory supervision, 844
Offences punishable on summary conviction, 821
Powers of judges and justices in the administration of justice, 818
Pre-hearing conferences, 818
Professional secrecy, 819
Protection for medical doctors, 846
Protection of individual rights, 818
Release on bail, 818
Restitution of seized goods, 819
Seizing profits from crime, 844
Seizure of vehicles, 846
Sentencing reform, 844
Telewarrants, 820, 844
War crimes and crimes against humanity, 845
See appendix p. 830
Speakers: Senators
Asselin, Martial, 817
Frith, Royce, 843
Nurgitz, Nathan, 846

Criminal Law, 1985 bill C-18. 1r, 804; 2r, 817, 843; ref to com, 847; rep without amdt, 990; 3r, 1024; r.a., 1100Croll, Hon. David A.

Aging, justice for the elderly, 370, 976
Senate reform, 977
Benidickson, Hon. William M., the late, 417
Canada-United States relations
Bilateral trade negotiations, role of lobbyist, qu, 2268, 2472
Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2078
Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 1897
Guaranteed annual income, 1899
Universality, 1897
Grey Cup
Congratulations to Winnipeg Blue Bombers on winning Canadian professional football championship, 76
Health and Welfare
"Guaranteed Annual Income—born again", 1295
Health services, universality, government policy, qu, 374
Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie, the late, tribute, 2527
Poverty in Canada
Poverty Line Update, 1983, 73
Poverty Line Update, 1984, 1495
See appendix p. 1513
Reform of the Senate, qu, 625
Senate
Business
Orders of the Day, 1442
Televising of sittings, qu, 424
Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A., resignation, 624
Tribute, 1740

Crown Assets Disposal Corporation dissolution

Disposal of surplus goods, 797
Employees, 796
Legal proceedings related to obligations or liabilities, 796
Transfer of assets and liabilities, 798
Transfer of responsibilities, 807

Crown Assets Disposal Corporation dissolution—Cont'dSpeakers: Senators

De Bané, Pierre, 797
 Flynn, Jacques, 795
 Graham, B. Alasdair, 796

Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution bill C-43. 1r, 779; 2r, 795; 3r, 807; r.a., 927Crown corporations, 88

Composition of boards of directors, 672
 de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited and Canadair Limited, government policy, 336, 432
 Disposal, 297
 Petro-Canada, possible privatization, 1280
 Qualifications of officials, 1737

Crown corporations dissolution authorization

Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd., 1239
 St. Anthony Fisheries Limited, 1239
 Societa a responsibilita limitata Immobiliare San Sebastiano, 1240
 Uranium Canada, Ltd., 1240

Speakers: Senators

Kelly, William M., 1239
 Sinclair, Ian, 1259

Crown Corporations Dissolution Authorization bill C-60. 1r, 1220; 2r, 1239, 1259; 3r, 1269; r.a., 1414Cultural heritage and national identity

Government policy, 1278, 1381, 1432, 2701, 2769

Cultural organizations

Relationship to government, 222

Currency (Bill C-21)

Calgary Winter Olympics, 457
 Olympic Coins, 438, 457
 Program to help smaller communities build facilities, 457

Speakers: Senators

Nurgitz, Nathan, 438, 458
 Perrault, Raymond J., 456

Currency bill C-21. 1r, 418; 2r, 438, 456; 3r, 458; r.a., 617Currency (Bill C-118)

$1 coin, 2653, 2671
 Cost and composition, 2654
 Weight, 2671

Speakers: Senators

Barootes, Efstathios William, 2653, 2671
 Bosa, Peter, 2671

Currency bill C-118. 1r, 2617; 2r, 2653, 2670; 3r, 2681; r.a., 2783Customs

Disparity in appeal period for department and tax payer, 1577
 Expedited release of goods, 1507
 Honour system for payment of duties, 1576
 Increased scope for mail-openings, 1576
 Post-release audit, 1507

Speakers: Senators

Balfour, R. James, 1506
 Barrow, A. Irvine, 1576

Customs bill C-59. 1r, 1476; 2r, 1506, 1576; ref to com, 1577; rep with amtds, 1669, 1705; 3r, 1705; concurrence by Commons in Senate amtds, 1880; r.a., 2031

Customs and Customs Tariff

Civil aircraft trade, 267
 General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, 284
 Liberalization of world trade, 285
 "Made in Canada" items, 267
 Ministerial prescription, 267
 Valuation code, 266, 285

Speakers: Senators

Hays, Dan, 284
 Murray, Lowell, 266, 285

Customs and Customs Tariff bill C-9. 1r, 236; 2r, 266, 284; ref to com,
 286; rep without amdt, 332; 3r, 340; r.a., 403

Customs and Excise

Prime Minister's wife, alleged non-declaration of gifts, 2560

Customs and special import measures

Anti-Dumping Act, 816
 Delegation of authority, 816

Speakers: Senators

Balfour, R. James, 815
 Frith, Royce, 817
 Godfrey, John M., 816

Customs and Special Import Measures bill C-40. 1r, 804; 2r, 815; 3r,
 834; r.a., 928

Customs Tariff (Bill C-38)

Child pornography, 772
 Criminal Code, 763, 774
 Holding of material, 773
 Importation of obscene material and hate propaganda, 762
 Material of a treasonable or seditious character, 764, 775
 Regulations and instructions for customs officers, 772

Speakers: Senators

Neiman, Joan, 771
 Nurgitz, Nathan, 762, 772

Customs Tariff bill C-38. 1r, 757; 2r, 762, 771; ref to Committee of the Whole, 773; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Heath Macquarrie in the Chair, 773; rep without amdt, 777; 3r, 777; r.a., 777

Customs Tariff (Bill C-71)

Goods made/not made in Canada, 1299
 Motor vehicles, 1299

Speakers: Senators

Hicks, Henry D., 1329
 Kelly, William M., 1299

Customs Tariff bill C-71. 1r, 1284; 2r, 1299, 1329; 3r, 1355; r.a., 1414

Customs tariff (Bill C-111)

Duty-free goods from Caribbean, 2726
 Obscene material and hate propaganda, 2727
 Semiconductor devices and computer parts, 2727
 Tariff rate response to private sector needs, 2726

Speakers: Senators

Barrow, Irvine A., 2728

Customs tariff (Bill C-111)—Cont'd

Speakers; Senators—Cont'd
Simard, Jean-Maurice, 2726

Customs Tariff bill C-111. 1r, 2697; 2r, 2726; 3r, 2770; r.a., 2783

Dailly, Senator Etienne, Vice-President of Senate of Republic of France, visit, 1964

Davey, Hon. Keith

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 107
Air Canada
Board of directors, replacement of members, qu, 658, 660
Broadcasting
Caplan task force report, qu, 2504, 2586
Task force, qualifications of co-chairman, qu, 942
Cabinet, access to information, 254, 1411
Canada's cultural industries
Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1620
Advertising, 1624
Canadian football, 1624
Canadian subsidiaries of American agencies, 1625
Copyrights, 1625
Cultural sovereignty, 1620
Nine questions, 1621
Time magazine, 1623
Canada-United States relations
Bilateral trade negotiations
Canadian use of lobbyist, qu, 2304
Government position, qu, 2383
Cultural industries, qu, 1651
Canadian advertising in United States media, qu, 651
Cultural heritage and national identity, 2769
Summit meeting in Quebec City, newspaper article, qu, 652
Trade
Imposition of tariff on publications and computer parts, qu, 2545
Imposition of U.S. tariffs and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, qu, 2564
Cultural heritage and national identity
Government policy, qu, 1278, 1381, 1432, 2701, 2769
Employment and Immigration
Maclean's magazine, prospective hiring of non-Canadians, qu, 769
Environment
Public Environment Group, qu, 300, 319, 431
External Affairs
Overseas distribution of summary of Globe and Mail items, qu, 380, 501
Finance
Document entitled "John Turner as Minister of Finance: An Era of Economic Decline", qu, 262, 319, 429
Investment Canada bill C-15, 1067
Canada's cultural heritage and national identity, 1069
Canadian Football League, 1070
Film industry, 1070
Foreign investment, 1068
Foreign Investment Review Agency, 1068
Unemployment, 1068
National Finance Committee
Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
Instruction to report, 560, 600
Parliament
Caucus rooms, electronic eavesdropping, apology by Deputy Prime Minister, qu, 1941

Davey, Hon. Keith—Cont'd

Political appointments, 109
Prime Minister
Newspaper advertisement, qu, 769
Request for clarification of statements, qu, 197
Reform of the Senate
Election of members, statement of Minister of Justice, qu, 910
Senate
Doyle, Hon. Richard J., appointment, party affiliation, qu, 706
Senate, authority to broadcast proceedings, 867, 905
Cost, 906
Image, 905
Sport
Canadian Football League, future, qu, 469
Supply and Services
Poll, awarding of contract, qu, 1433, 1521, 1560, 1739, 2096
Toronto harbourfront
Public access, qu, 868, 1023
Universality of social programs, 108
United Nations
Food and Agriculture Organization, cancellation of appointment of Hon. Eugene Whelan, P.C., qu, 479, 636
University of Toronto
Mock parliament election results, qu, 479

David, Hon. Paul D. (Introduced in the Senate Apr. 25/85), 803

Canada's cultural industries
Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1615
End of Decade Women's Conference, meeting held at Nairobi, Kenya, 1251, 1272
Discrimination faced by women, 1273
Objectives for the year 2000, 1273
Obstacles to peace, 1273
World economy, 1273
Official Languages Policy and Programs
Reports
1st, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 942
4th, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1967
Rules of the Senate
Rule 77 (7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 2168
Youth Committee
2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action," 2590

Deaths

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe (Mar. 28/85), 731
Benidickson, Hon. William Moore, P.C. (Jan. 4/85), 416
Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., former leader of New Democratic Party (Feb. 24/86), 2078
Hollet, Hon. Malcolm Mercer, 1321
Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie (May 31/86), 2526
Malone, Richard Sankey, 1102
Missen, Senator Alan, of Commonwealth of Australia, 2326
Riley, Hon. Daniel A. (Sept. 13/84), 22
Yuzyk, Hon. Paul (July 9/86)

De Bané, Hon. Pierre, P.C. (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
Fish marketing in Canada, authority to study, 491
Budget
Impact of measures, qu, 1017
Canada's cultural industries
Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1642
Canadian film industry, 1643

De Bané, Hon. Pierre, P.C. —Cont'd

Constitution

Quebec's opting out, government policy, qu, 281

Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution bill C-43, 797

Disposal of surplus goods, 797

External Affairs

Overseas distribution of Globe and Mail items, qu, 381

Finance

Protection of bondholders against inflation, reported statement by minister, 970

Fisheries and Oceans

Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, qu, 1230

Foreign affairs

Burkina-Faso, closing of Canadian diplomatic post, qu, 58, 301

Gift of war planes to Turkey, qu, 410

Lebanon, government aid, qu, 99, 264

Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 387

Public Service

Placement of former ministerial assistants, qu, 214, 224, 428

Regional Industrial Expansion

Government assistance to industry, United States intervention, 607

Saltfish bill C-6, 303

Senate

Business

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1694

Prime Minister, comments, qu, 401

Victoria Building, senators' parking, qu, 1298

De Cuellar, His Excellency Javier Perez, Secretary-General, United Nations Organization

Address to members of both houses, 624

See appendix p. 640

Deficit, 30, 83, 110, 119, 251de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited

Government policy, 336, 432

Possible negotiation of sale, government position, 813

Sale to Boeing Corporation, 1559, 1738, 1854

Burns Fry prospectus, 1854

Off-the-record private briefings, job security, 1715, 1855

Tabling of memorandum agreement, 1654

Use of de Havilland technology, 1715, 1854

See National Finance Committee

Democracy, 248Denis, Hon. Azellus, P.C.

Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, 1539

Customs Tariff bill C-38, 764

Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2756

Bankruptcy Act, 2756

Timing, 2762

Fiftieth anniversary of election to Parliament, tributes, 1371

Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1817

Foreign investment

President of Treasury Board, reported statement, qu, 471, 679, 694

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1057

Parliament Hill

Cost of tourist reception tent, 1433

Landscaping east of Centre Block, qu, 909

Suggested relocation of tourist reception tent, qu, 946, 974

Denis, Hon. Azellus, P.C.—Cont'd

Senate

Prayer at commencement of sittings, qu, 46

"Senate Bulletin", qu, 1519

Department of the Environment

Research scientists, termination of employment, 214, 382

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C.

Tributes on resignation from the Senate, 1832

Dickson, Rt. Hon. Brian, Chief Justice of Canada

Royal Assent, 927, 1414, 2091, 2623

Diplomatic missions

Security, 652

Disarmament

Deployment of nuclear weapons, government policy, 472, 636

Space-based defensive weapons, government policy, 421, 424

Divorce and corollary relief and family orders and agreements enforcement assistance (bills C-46, C-47 and C-48)Artificial insemination, embryo implantation, in vitro fertilization/, 1947

Barriers to remarriage, 1932

Custody and support orders, 1931

Grounds, 1931

Inadequate reconciliation provisions, 1946

Jurisdiction, 1930

Speakers: Senators

Bélisle, Rhéal, 1945

Nurgitz, Nathan, 1930

Divorce and Corollary Relief bill C-47. 1r, 1880; 2r, 1930, 1945, 1964; ref to com, 1965; rep without amdt, 1968; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031Divorce bill C-46. 1r, 1880; 2r, 1930, 1945, 1964; ref to com, 1965; rep without amdt, 1967; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031Documents tabled

See Journals of the Senate

Donahoe, Hon. Richard A. (Retired Sept. 27/84)

Tributes, 22

Doody, Hon. C. William, Deputy Leader of the Government

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 51

Agriculture

Agricultural products processors, availability of financial assistance, 1943

Potato industry

Re-establishment of commission of inquiry, 1971

Stabilization assistance, 1974

Stabilization or diversion program, 1971

Sugar-beet industry, government policy, 1905, 1923, 1943, 1974

Sugar-beet industry crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1881

Western Canada, drought conditions, government action, 1223

Grain producers and beef producers, disparity in criteria for payments, 1942

Agriculture and Forestry Committee

Doody, Hon. C. William, —Cont'dAgriculture and Forestry Committee—Cont'd

- Farm debt review, subject matter of Bill C-117, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2598
- Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
 - Agricultural stabilization, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-25 prior to receipt of legislation, 966
 - Fisheries, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-32 prior to receipt of legislation, 646
 - Prairie farm assistance and crop assistance, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-41 prior to receipt of legislation, 966
 - "Soil at Risk", authority to print additional copies, 291
 - "Tax Issues in Agriculture", authority to study discussion paper, 618
 - Western grain transportation, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-44 prior to receipt of legislation, 966
- Appropriation No. 3, 1984-85 bill C-16, 312, 323
- Appropriation No. 4, 1984-85 bill C-34, 715
- Appropriation No. 1, 1985-86 bill C-35, 716
- Appropriation No. 2, 1985-86 bill C-54, 1048, 1076, 1094
 - Post-secondary education, 1078
 - Urgency of passage, 1067, 1091
- Appropriation No. 3, 1985-86 bill C-89, 1720, 1744, 1767
- Appropriation No. 4, 1985-86 bill C-101, 2229, 2250
- Appropriation No. 1, 1986-87 bill C-102, 2230, 2251
- Appropriation No. 2, 1986-87 bill C-115, 2601, 2617
 - Request for information, answer, 2770
- Banking
 - Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank
 - Status of proposed joint committee, 1222
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Aeronautics, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-36 prior to receipt of legislation, 967
 - Authority to engage services, 481
 - Authority to meet during Senate sittings, 1274
 - Availability of proceedings, 1954
 - Canadian Arsenals Limited divestiture, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-87 prior to receipt of legislation, 2149
 - Customs tariff, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-111 prior to receipt of legislation, 2530
 - Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 957, 1106
 - Interim report tabled, 1695
 - Income tax, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-84 prior to receipt of legislation, 1534
 - Investment in Canada, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-15 prior to receipt of legislation, 646
- Report
 - 13th, financial institutions depositors' compensation, rep on subject matter of Bill C-79, 1767
 - Tax rebate discounting, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-83 prior to receipt of legislation, 1534
- Barbados, Hon. Billie Miller, Minister of Education, visit, 1948
- Board of Grain Commissioners
 - Termination of appointment of member, status of Chief Commissioner, 1950
- Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11, 439, 462
 - Borrowing authority already granted, 440
 - Reserve, 440
- Borrowing Authority, 1985-86 (No. 2) bill C-51, 1199
- Borrowing Authority, 1986-87 bill C-99, 2289, 2316, 2349
 - $2 billion non-lapsing reserve, 2290, 2316
- Budget
 - Date of presentation, 494
 - De-indexation of pension benefits, request for reply to petitions, 1037

Doody, Hon. C. William, —Cont'd

- Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1660
- Canada-United States relations
 - Bank of Nova Scotia, appeal to Supreme Court of United States, 479
 - Trade, new approaches, government policy, 62
 - Trans-border pollution problems, 1952
- Canada's International Relations Committee
 - Appointment
 - Message from House of Commons, 2670
 - Message to House of Commons, 1155, 2488
 - Senate membership, 1183
- Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security bill C-69, 1364
- Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 bill S-4, 1024
- Christmas, bureaucratic and political comments, 405
- Christmas greetings, 1831
- Committees, select
 - Authority to meet during Senate adjournments, 419
- Communications
 - Museum of Man, change of name, 1972, 1974
- Consumer and Corporate Affairs
 - Trademark legislation, 480
- Corrections
 - Daniel Hawe report, motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6, for production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2339, 2359
- Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) bill C-77, 1378
- Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, 1776
- Crown Corporation Dissolution Authorization bill C-60, 1269
- Currency bill C-118, 2681
- Customs bill C-59, 1706
- Customs Tariff bill C-38, 765
- Customs Tariff bill C-111, 2770
- Economy
 - Canadian dollar, decline in value, 1926, 1939
 - Government action, 1969, 1970
 - Market intervention, role of Governor of Bank of Canada, 1968
 - Request for statements of Chairman of Economic Council of Canada and Michael McCracken of Infometrica Ltd., 1970
- Economic Council of Canada
 - Rumoured dissolution, 483
- Employment and Immigration
 - Long-term Illegal Migrants Review Committee, possible investigation of conduct of chairman, 807
- Employment Equity bill C-62
 - Motion re message to House of Commons, 2681
- Energy
 - Oil pricing, government policy, 1924
 - Request for answers, 1904
 - Petroleum Incentive Program, reduction in grants, 59
 - Price of Canadian crude oil, 483
- Energy and Natural Resources Committee
 - Canada-Newfoundland Atlantic Accord implementation, authority to study subject matter or Bill C-94 prior to receipt of legislation, 2559
 - Canada petroleum resources, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-92 prior to receipt of legislation, 2459
 - Oil substitution and conservation, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-24 prior to receipt of legislation, 966
 - Petroleum incentives program, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-85 prior to receipt of legislation, 2171
- Estimates
 - Date of tabling, 494
- External Affairs

Doody, Hon. C. William, —Cont'dExternal Affairs—Cont'd

Ambassador to Ireland, appointment, alleged partisanship of appointee, 1940

Parking tickets, payment by Canadian diplomats abroad, 805

Family allowances

De-indexation, petitions against Bill C-70, number and disposition, 1923

Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2737, 2749, 2765

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2720, 2765

Federalism, 53

Finance

Suggested impropriety of minister, 807

Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1810, 1824

Fisheries and Oceans

Product inspection standards, 1906, 1922

Foreign affairs

Burkina-Faso, closing of Canadian diplomatic post, 57

India, detention of Canadian national, 56

Iran, persecution of Baha'is 480

Organization of American States, government policy, 60

Foreign Affairs Committee

International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation

Authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington, D.C. to study, 2254

Foreign Extraterritorial Measures bill C-14, 397

Draft Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, 398

OECD, 397

Proposed Export Administration Act, 398

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod

Jalbert, René M., Esq., appointment, 1220

Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges bill C-78, 1649

Health and Welfare

Canada-Belgium social security agreement, delay in tabling, 483

Hollet, Hon. Malcolm Mercer, the late, 1321

Human rights

Japanese-Canadians, government apology and compensation, government policy, 1905

Meeting of experts, desirability of Senate participation, 639

Saskatchewan, passage of Bill 144 imposing settlement on government employees, 1973

Immigration

Entry of Soviet refugees, government policy, 58

Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84

Availability of committee proceedings, 1954, 1975

Entry of Soviet refugees, government policy, 58

Income Tax bill C-109, 2573

Income Tax Conventions bill S-3, 478

Income Tax Conventions bill S-6, 1648, 1672, 1698, 1705

Capital gains, non-discrimination, pensions and double taxation relief, 1672

Rate of withholding tax on dividends, 1672

Uniformity, 1698

International terrorism

Motion for appointment of special Senate committee, 1887

Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, expression of outrage, expression of condolences, 1531

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1028

Branch plant, 1028

Economic development of Newfoundland, 1029

Foreign Investment Review Agency, 1028

Doody, Hon. C. William, —Cont'd

Japan

Nakasone, His Excellency Yasuhiro, Prime Minister, address to members of both houses, 1833

See appendix p. 1843

Judges bill C-61, 1212

Judges and related Acts bill C-128, 2739, 2768

June 24 celebrations

Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, anniversary of landing of Giovanni Caboto, 1093

Justice

Canada Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals, cost and scope, 1921

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

Authority to engage services, 1251

Authority to meet during sittings of the Senate, 1694, 1983

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-27 prior to receipt of legislation, 966

Constitution 1867, electoral boundaries adjustment, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-76 prior to receipt of legislation, 1516

Criminal Code, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-18 prior to receipt of legislation, 646

Divorce and corollary relief, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-47 prior to receipt of legislation, 982

Divorce, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-46 prior to receipt of legislation, 982

Family orders enforcement assistance, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-48 prior to receipt of legislation, 982

Indian Act, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-31 prior to receipt of legislation, 646

Parole and penitentiary, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-67 prior to receipt of legislation, 1714

Parole, penitentiary, prisons and reformatories, Criminal Code, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-68 prior to receipt of legislation, 1714

Report

14th, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt, 1863

Young offenders, Criminal Code, penitentiary, prisons and reformatories, subject matter of Bill C-106, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2617

Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, 1749, 2367

Meat Import Act

Tabling of reports, 1887

National Aeronautics and Space Administration of the United States

Space shuttle "Challenger" disaster, expression of condolences, 1880

National Defence Committee

2nd report, "Canada's Territorial Air Defence", 1059

National Finance Committee

Authority to engage services, 478

Authority to meet during sitting of the Senate, 2737

Borrowing authority, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-51 prior to receipt of legislation, 965

Estimates ref to com

Year ending Mar. 31/85

Supplementary (B), 76

Supplementary (C), 625

Year ending Mar. 31/86, 612

Supplementary (A), 942

Supplementary (B), 1476

Supplementary (C), 2093

Year ending Mar. 31/87, 2084

Doody, Hon. C. William, —Cont'dNational Finance Committee—Cont'd

- Excise Tax and Excise, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-80 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477
- Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-96 prior to receipt of legislation, 2381
- Petroleum and gas revenue tax and income tax, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-82 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477
- Post-secondary education and training, authority to study government activities, 1274

Reports

- 4th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, supplementary (C), 696
- 5th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, 1033
- 6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1004
- 10th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B), 1699
- 11th, petroleum and gas revenue tax and income tax, subject matter of Bill C-82, 1695
- 12th, Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, rep without amtds but with observations and recommendations, 1713
- 14th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (C), 2209
- 15th, Borrowing Authority 1986-87, rep without amdt, 2327
- 16th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/87, 2589
- 17th, Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, subject matter of Bill C-96, 2565, 2604
- 18th, Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, rep without amdt but with comments, 2765
- Supplementary fiscal equalization payments, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-39 prior to receipt of legislation, 965

National Soil Conservation Week, 778, 810

Official languages

- Commissioner of Official Languages, report, referred to committee, 2261

Official Languages Policy and Programs Committee

- Authority to meet during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, 466

Estimates 1985-86

- Privy Council Vote 15 referred, 621

Estimates 1986-87

- Privy Council Vote 15 referred, 2224
- Authority to examine, 2238

Quorum, 463

Report

- 1st, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1009, 1156

Report of Commissioner of Official Languages referred, 723

Parliament

Caucus rooms, electronic eavesdropping

- Apology by Deputy Prime Minister, 1941
- Prime Minister's reaction, 1926

Caucus rooms and members' offices, electronic eavesdropping, 1925

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2696, 2725, 2776, 2777

Parliamentary secretaries

- Suggested appointment of senators, 1224

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2747, 2790, 2799, 2811, 2823, 2840

Point of order, 2830

Precedents for Commons non-concurrence with Senate amdt, 2840

Doody, Hon. C. William, —Cont'd

Parole and related Statutes bill C-68, 2749, 2801, 2824

Penitentiaries

- Canada-Alberta agreement and memorandum of intent, request for tabling, 1927

Pension Benefits Standards bill C-90, 2772

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax and Income Tax bill C-82, 1912, 1929, 1943

PGRT phase-out, 1912

Pine Hill Divinity Hall bill S-7, 1733

Property Qualification of Senators

- Supplementary return authorized, 396

Public Pensions Reporting bill C-255, 2104

Public Works

- Cleaning services, possible layoff of employees, 1941

Quebec, 53

Register of senators' interests

- Motion to refer to committee, 1666

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1780, 1907

Research and development, support and government policy, 31058

- Capital gains exemption, 1058

Research Tax Credit Program, 1059

Restaurant of Parliament

- Availability of French apples, 59

Rowe, Hon. Frederick W., "The Smallwood Era", felicitations on publication, 445

Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65, 1984

Rules of the Senate

- Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, 61

Senate

- Absence of Leader of the Government, 1221

- Adjournment, 13, 113, 220, 228, 334, 404, 466, 519, 688, 959, 1012, 1100, 1217, 1371, 1398, 1403, 1413, 1478, 1492, 1534, 1649, 1704, 1831, 1864, 1920, 1968, 2111, 2149, 2197, 2259, 2302, 2342, 2521, 2530, 2560, 2599, 2665, 2704, 2769, 2833, 2856

- Business, 383, 397, 398, 620, 646, 647, 951, 1050, 1136, 1194, 1370, 1404, 1516, 1719, 1793, 2254, 2700, 2768, 2838

Committee pre-study of bills, 965

- Committees authorized to study subject matter of Bills C-27, C-41, C-44, C-24 and C-36, 999

- Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1703

- Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 661, 697, 801

Easter greetings, 2259

Jurisdiction over services, 806

Leader of the Government, absence, 805

Legislative program, 482

Minutes of Proceedings

- Recording of choosing of Acting Speaker, 1966

- Recording of points of order, 1967

Official report, 1648

Question Period, 2616

- Request for answers, 1951

Proceedings, authority to broadcast

- Motion in amendment, 1875

- Implications under present Rules of the Senate, 1876

Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2377, 2391

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

- Authority to engage services, 1703, 1711, 1730

- Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 804

- Canada Pension Plan and Federal Court, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-116 prior to receipt of legislation, 2598

Doody, Hon. C. William, —Cont'dSocial Affairs, Science and Technology Committee—Cont'd

Family Allowances, 1973, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-70 prior to receipt of legislation, 1516

Immigration, 1976, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-55 prior to receipt of legislation, 1106, 1516

Motion withdrawn, 1547

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1250, 1316

Old age security, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-26 prior to receipt of legislation, 965

Pension benefits standards, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-90 prior to receipt of legislation, 2501

Report

10th, 2660

Sports Pool and Loto Canada Winding-up bill C-2, 1099

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

Budgetary process, authority to study documentation proposals for improvement, 1467

Register of senator's interests, notice of motion, 1552

Status of Women

Affirmative action legislation, government policy, 1950

Armed forces personnel, restriction of spouses activities, government policy, 1906

Broadcasting task force, remuneration of women members, 1225

Senior government appointments

Bird, Hon. Florence, 806

Franklin, Dr. Ursula, 806

Tax Rebate Discounting bill C-83, 1830

Transport

Railways, shortfall in CN and CP expenditures on expansion, 1973

Transport and Communications Committee

Bell Canada reorganization, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-19 prior to receipt of legislation, 2678

Canada shipping and related statutes, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-75 prior to receipt of legislation, 2149

Car rental outlets at airports, authority to study policy, 413

Northern Transportation Company Limited, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-53 prior to receipt of legislation, 1089

Western grain transportation, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-44 prior to receipt of legislation, 1062

Unemployment, method of combatting, 700

United Nations

de Cuellar, His Excellency Javier Perez, Secretary-General, address to members of both houses, 624

See appendix p. 640

Food and Agriculture Organization, cancellation of appointment of Hon. Eugene Whelan, P.C., 479

United Way Campaign 1985, 1361

University of Toronto

Mock parliament election results, 479

Wallenberg, Raoul

Honorary Canadian citizenship, request for answers, 1927

Young Offenders, Criminal Code, Penitentiary, Prisons and Reformatory bill C-106, 2688, 2705

Youth

Cancellation of programs, government policy, 1921, 1923
Katimavik, 1921, 1942

Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., (Deceased Feb. 25/86)

Former Leader of the New Democratic Party, tributes, 2078

Doyle, Hon. Richard J. (Introduced in the Senate Mar. 21/85), 688

Appointments, 666

Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security bill C-69, 1314

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1608

Canadian Authors' Association, 1609

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1032

Foreign Investment Review Agency, 1033

Malone, Richard Sankey, the late, 1102

Party affiliation, 706

Pension Benefits Standards, 1985 bill C-90, 2734

Availability to part-time workers, 2735

Early vesting and locking-in, 2735

Inflation protection, 2736

Portability, 2735

Survivor's share, 2736

Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65, 2005, 2025, 2148

Marin commission report, 2005

Privacy rights, 2006

Public complaints process, 2006

Right to grieve, 2006

Drought assistance, 63Duties relief

Machinery program, 2655

Simplification of existing law, 2656

Streamlining of procedure, 2655

Speakers: Senators

Hicks, Henry D. 2656

Phillips, Orville H., 2654

Duties Relief bill C-98. 1r, 2624; 2r, 2654; 3r, 2670; r.a., 2783Economic and social policies, government statement, 370, 388, 1060

Proposed elimination of full indexation of old age security, 1060

Universality, 1060

Economic Council of Canada

Rumoured dissolution, 483, 637

Economic Development

Nova Scotia

Cape Breton Advisory Committee report

Government action, 1354

Request for copies, 1289

Economic Summit

Bonn, West Germany, 1985

Securing of third window, Prime Minister's statement, 851

Technology, growth and employment working group report, 1281

United States embargo on Nicaragua, Canadian position, 852

United States interest rate policy, 811

World drug trade, government position, 850, 974

Economy, 31, 83

Canadian dollar, decline in value, 508, 509, 543, 604, 1926, 1939, 2068

Government action, 1969, 1970, 2085, 2471

Market intervention, role of Governor of Bank of Canada, 1968, 2599

Economy—Cont'd

- Canadian dollar, decline in value—Cont'd
 - Request for statement of Chairman of Economic Council of Canada and Michael McCracken of Infometrica Ltd., 1970
- Value, 2492, 2503
 - Timing and extent of market intervention, 1999
 - Appearance of Governor of Bank of Canada before Senate, 2004
- Fiscal outlook, updated economic projections, 47
- Foreign investment, competition, 355
- Government policy, 781
- Interest rates, 2203, 2283, 2329
 - Government policy, 238, 257, 428, 429, 676, 2121
 - Increase, 2001, 2561, 2568, 2703
- Leader of the Government in the Senate, statement, request for clarification, 42, 76
- Manitoba
 - Construction of Winnipeg research centre, 472
 - Cancellation, 44, 239
- Mortgages, effect of bank rate on interest rates, 2205
- National conference, 659, 689, 703, 709, 815
 - Availability of information, 660
 - Senate opposition representation, 693
 - Suggested follow-up, 694
- Pioneer Trust
 - Closing, 506
 - Status, 528
- Taxation and unemployment, government policy, 211
- United States investment in Canada, 1651
- Wage and price controls, 377
- See* The Economy and the Budget

Education, 50

- Post-secondary
 - Availability of report, 529, 814
 - Government assistance, 258, 284, 430
 - Ministerial meetings, 529
 - See* National Finance Committee
- Toronto school, change of name, 1288

Employment

- Cape Breton, unemployment rate, 2552
- CN shops, layoffs at Moncton, government policy, 2548, 2552
 - See also* Transport
- CN shops, Prince Edward island, 2570
 - Disparity in treatment of displaced employees, 2585
- Effect of budgetary cuts on female employees, 407, 433
- Government policy, 376
- Job creation, 898, 910
 - Government policy, 79
- London, Ontario, status of CN computer express terminal, 2554, 2702
- Nannies, remuneration, 354
- Nova Scotia, decentralization program, 101, 426, 498, 637
- Public service staff reductions, job creation, government policy, 2469
- Royal commission, report, government response, 635
- Summer Youth Employment Program, 409, 505, 2493, 2669

Employment and Immigration

- Government policy, possible changes, 759
- Immigrant wife of Canadian citizen, status, 2052
- Long-term Illegal Migrants Review Committee, possible investigation of conduct of chairman, 791, 806, 936
- Maclean's* magazine, prospective hiring of non-Canadians, 769

Employment equity

- Canadian Human Rights Commission, 2393, 2419
- Employer discretion, 2418
- Enforcement, 2418
- Federal Public Service exemption, 2418
- Process, 2418
- Voluntary compliance, 2419
- Speakers: Senators
 - Marsden, Lorna, 2417
 - Robertson, Brenda M., 2392

Employment Equity bill C-62. 1r, 2362; 2r, 2392, 2416, 2432; ref to com, 2433; rep with observations and recommendations, 2676; 3r, 2681; message to House of Commons, 2681, 2706; r.a., 2783

“Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians for a Better Future”

See Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

End of Decade Women's Conference

Composition of Canadian delegation and agenda, 652, 899, 912, 970

End of Decade Women's Conference, meeting held at Nairobi, Kenya, 1251, 1272

- Discrimination faced by women, 1273
- Objectives for the year 2000, 1273
- Obstacles to peace, 1273
- World economy, 1273
- Speaker: Senator
 - David, Paul D., 1272

Energy

- Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Development Agreement, 334, 432
- Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Development Agreement, 510, 638
- Canadianization, government policy, 296
- East coast exploration, replacement of petroleum incentive grants, government policy, 1363
- Federal-provincial agreement, 741
- Gasoline
 - Prices reduction, 2154, 2329
 - Pricing, 2599
 - Policy, proposed committee study, 280, 431
 - Advisory committee study, 470
- Heavy oils, construction of upgrader at Lloydminster, Alberta, government policy, 2122
- Higher cost producers, minister's statement, request for clarification, 2119
- International oil pricing, agenda item at economic summit, 2022, 2156, 2222
- Natural gas exports to U.S., representations by Alberta and British Columbia, 1987
- Natural gas, proposed pipeline to Vancouver Island, 946
- New pricing agreement, progress of negotiations, 423, 501, 631
- Oil and gas industry
 - Application of tax incentives, 2119
 - Government policy, 2383
 - Layoffs, government policy, 2445, 2494
 - Pricing, government policy, 2583
- Oil pricing, 2001, 2022, 2034, 2046, 2121, 2217, 2329
 - Government action, 2087, 2120
 - Government policy, 1864, 1904, 1923, 2004, 2051, 2134
 - Effect on Hibernia development, 1852

Energy—Cont'dOil pricing—Cont'd

- Protection of interests of producers, government action, 1850
- Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, government policy, 467, 501
- Petroleum Incentive Program, reduction in grants, 59, 301
- Price of Canadian crude oil, 483, 637
- Pricing, deregulation of industry, government policy, 2464, 2538

Energy administration

- Deregulation, 2732
- Negotiated prices, 2731
- TransCanada Pipelines, 2732
- Transition to natural gas competitive market, 2731

Speakers: Senators

- Barootes, Efstathios William, 2731
- Olson, H.A., 2732

Energy Administration bill C-112. 1r, 2731; 2r, 2731; 3r, 2771; r.a., 2783

Energy and Natural Resources, Standing Senate Committee

- Authority to meet during sittings of the Senate, 2445
- Canada-Newfoundland Atlantic Accord implementation, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-94 prior to receipt of legislation, 2559
- Canada petroleum resources, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-92 prior to receipt of legislation, 2489
- National Energy Program
 - Authority to publish and distribute interim report, 1062
 - Authority to review all aspects, 333, 369
- Oil substitution and conservation, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-24 prior to receipt of legislation, 966
- Petroleum incentives program, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-85 prior to receipt of legislation, 2171
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 296
 - 2nd, oil substitution and conservation, subject matter of Bill C-24, 1062
 - See Journals of the Senate*
 - 4th, petroleum incentives program, subject matter of Bill C-85, 2214
 - 5th, "Oil Marketing: 1986," 2678, 2741
 - Deregulation, 2744
 - Financial assistance to producers of conventional and nonconventional oil, 2742
 - High provincial royalties, 2742
 - Price monitoring group, 2743
 - Western Accord, 2743
 - Woods Gordon study, 2741

Energy, Mines and Resources

- Articles sent to weekly newspapers, 2506
- Director General of Communications, termination of employment, 381, 433
- Hibernia drilling platforms, construction site location criteria, 1696
- Propaganda articles, 2652

Environment

- Air pollution on Parliament hill, message from Commons, 1495
 - Public education campaign, 1649, 1673, 1699
 - Motion withdrawn, 1699
- Government policy re employment, 79
- Newfoundland, integration of weather services, qu, 608
- Pollution, Niagara River and Great Lakes, 264, 382
- Public Environment Group, 300, 319, 431

Environment—Cont'd

- Soil conservation, 104
- Toxicology research and development, government policy, 1715, 2101
- Wildlife, effect of budgetary cuts, 299
- World Commission on Environment and Development, submission, input of people of Canada, 2504

Estey, Hon. Willard Z., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

- Royal Assent, 403

Estimates

- Date of tabling, 494, 524, 535, 538, 542
- Question of privilege, 622

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-16)Speakers: Senators

- Doody, C. William, 313, 323
- Frith, Royce, 323

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-34)Speakers: Senators

- Doody, C. William, 715
- Frith, Royce, 716

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-35)Speakers: Senators

- Doody, C. William, 716
- Frith, Royce, 717

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-54)

Post-secondary education, 1075

Speakers: Senators

- Doody, C. William, 1048, 1076, 1094
- Stewart, John B., 1074, 1094

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-89)Speakers: Senator

- Doody, C. William, 1720
- Frith, Royce, 1720
- See appendix p. 1731*

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-101)Speakers: Senators

- Doody, C. William, 2229, 2250
- Frith, Royce, 2229
- See appendix p. 2239*

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-102)

Medical and health services, availability and delivery, 2250

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 2250
- Doody, C. William, 2230
- Frith, Royce, 2250
- See appendix p. 2241*

Estimates referred to National Finance Committee

Year ending Mar. 31/85

Supplementary (B), 76; rep of com, 279, 312

See appendix p. 293

Supplementary (C), 624; rep of com, 666, 696

See appendix p. 684

Year ending Mar. 31/86, 612; rep of com, 951, 975, 999, 1033

Estimates referred to National Finance Committee—Cont'd

- Year ending Mar. 31/86, 612; rep of com—Cont'd
 - Supplementary (A), 942; rep of com, 964, 1000, 1405, 1483
 - See appendices p. 980 and 1416
 - Supplementary (B), 1476; rep of com, 1573, 1699, 1719
 - Supplementary (C), 2093; rep of com, 2174, 2208, 2228
 - See appendix p. 2187
 - See appendices p. 960 and 1646 and 1731
- Year ending Mar. 31/87, 2084; rep of com, 2501, 2540, 2589
 - See appendix p. 2522

Estonian, Latvian, Lithuanian and Ukrainian Communities of Ottawa
Thirteenth ecumenical memorial service and concert, 1009Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada bill S-5. 1r, 1414; 2r, 1414; ref to com, 1415; rep without amdt, 1476; 3r, 1476; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 1495;
r.a., 1712Everett, Hon. Douglas D.

- Benidickson, Hon. William M., the late, 418
- Budget, proposals, 2143
 - Impact of deficits, 2144
 - Options for deficit reduction, 2145
 - Public debt, 2144
 - Universality of social programs, 2145
- Canada-United States relations
 - Trade
 - Imposition of tariff on publications, qu, 2546
 - Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, qu, 2563, 2702

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-17, 451

- Air transportation tax, 452
- Deficit, 453
- Fuel tax rebate, 451
- Increasing government spending or reducing taxes, 453
- Neutral tax system, 454
- Removal of sales tax from primary producers, 452
- Transfer of burden of tax, 454

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements

- Equalization payments, qu, 208

Investment Canada

- Foreign investment, government policy, qu, 316, 319, 431

Manitoba

- Winnipeg, future of St. Paul's College site building, qu, 300, 383

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", motion to refer back to committee, 2515National Finance Committee

- 10th report, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B), 1700

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 859

- Setting of precedent, 862

Reform of the Senate

- Leader of the Government, views, qu, 899

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2074

- Elected Senate solution, 2074
- Representation by population, 2074
- Workload of members of Parliament, 2075

Senate

- Business, 1676, 1680
 - Orders of the Day, 1441
 - Question Period
 - Form, suggested referral to Standing Rules and Orders Committee, qu, 2553
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1689

Everett, Hon. Douglas D.—Cont'd

- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2406
 - Bad legislation, 2407
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1250, 1292
- Report
 - 8th, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2291
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - Reports
 - 3rd, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1242
 - 7th, guidelines for financial operation of committees, 2125
- Unemployment Insurance, 1971 bill C-52, 947, 948
 - Abuses, 948
 - Special review committee, 947

Excise Tax and Excise (Bill C-17)

- Air transportation tax, 451
- Appeals system, 455
- Deficit, 453
- Federal tax on motor vehicles, 451
- Fuel tax rebate, 451
- Increasing government spending or reducing taxes, 453
- Neutral tax system, 454
- Removal of sales tax from primary producers, 452
- Special recovery program, 455
- Transfer of burden of tax, 454
- Speakers: Senators
 - Everett, Douglas D., 451
 - Murray, Lowell, 450

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-17. 1r, 396; 2r, 450; 3r, 473; r.a., 617Excise Tax and Excise (Bill C-80)

- Appeal mechanism, 2007
- Assessment provisions inequities for Revenue Canada and taxpayer, 2057
- Broad-based measures, 2007
- Closure, 2056, 2060
- Consultative process, 2056
- Elimination of automatic indexation of specific taxes, 2007
- Energy conservation and prefabricated construction goods tax, 2057, 2060
- Frazee, Rowland, comments, 2059
- Speakers: Senators
 - MacEachen, Allan J., 2055
 - Simard, Jean-Maurice, 2006, 2060

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80. 1r, 1984; 2r, 2006, 2055; ref to com, 2061; rep without amdt with observations, 2065; 3r, 2066;
r.a., 2092Expo 86

- Attendance of members of Parliament, 2090

External Affairs, 18

- Ambassador to Ireland, appointment
 - Alleged partisanship of appointee, 1940, 2102
 - Application of code of conduct, 2163
- Clarke, Mr. Victor, Special Adviser to Canadian High Commission, appointment, 1670
- Overseas distribution of summary Globe and Mail items, 380, 501
- Parking tickets, payment by Canadian diplomats abroad, 805
- Passports, issuance at Hull, 851, 937

External Affairs,—Cont'd

Visit by minister to U.S.S.R., 792

External relations

Family planning promotion, government support and policy, 1696

Fairbairn, Hon. Joyce (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1Agriculture

National strategy, qu, 1558

National sugar policy, qu, 1654

Sugar-beet industry

Crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1881

Canadian industry, 1882

Jobs at risk, 1882

Motion withdrawn, 1887

Uncertainty issue, 1882

Government policy, qu, 770, 934, 1173, 1176, 1852, 1870, 1905, 1923 1943, 1974, 2117, 2133

1983 stabilization payment, government policy, qu, 1311, 1400, 1433, 1502, 1537, 1559, 1737, 1987, 2003, 2023, 2036, 2048, 2067, 2152

Request for answers, 1324, 1354

Western Canada

Drought conditions, government assistance, qu, 1671, 1854

Motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1463

Budget

De-indexation of pension benefits, government position, qu, 1021

Canada-United States relations

U.S. weapons testing in Canada, cruise missile mishap, qu, 1868, 1869, 2039

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Mandate, parliamentary committee study, qu, 322

Disarmament

Deployment of nuclear weapons, government policy, qu, 473

Fisheries and Oceans

Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, qu, 1258

Foreign affairs

Visit of President Reagan to cemetery at Bitburg, West Germany, Prime Minister's views, qu, 813

Health and Welfare

Social benefits, issuance of discussion paper, qu, 236

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Departmental staff reductions, government policy, qu, 1323

Indian bill C-31, 1042, 1137

Band control over membership, 1043

Communication and implementation program, 1138

Discouragement in native youth, 1045

Financial assistance to bands, 1044, 1138

High impact bands, 1044

Referral to Supreme Court, 1138

Sexual discrimination, 1043, 1139

Spending cutbacks on Indian programs, 1138

Strains on current infrastructure on reserves, 1138

International terrorism

Training sites, qu, 1110

Libya

Evacuation of Canadian nationals, qu, 2304

United States air strike, position of Canadian nationals, qu, 2268

Malone, Richard Sankey, the late, 1102Native peoples

Funding of programs, task force report, qu, 870

Nuclear disaster

Ukraine, effects of radiation, qu, 2366, 2537

Fairbairn, Hon. Joyce—Cont'dNuclear disaster—Cont'd

Ukraine, effects of radiation,—Cont'd

Government knowledge and action, qu, 2385

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2846

Chronology of events, 2848

Dangerous Offenders Act, 2849

Earned remission, 2846

Role of Parole Board and courts, 2847

Old age security

De-indexation of pensions

Presentation of petitions, 1088, 1104

Press release by president of National Advisory Council on Aging, qu, 1064

Government policy, qu, 407, 501

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2073

Impact on Alberta, 2074

SenateQuestion Period

Request for answers, 303, 1951

Social programs

Universality, government policy, qu, 371, 380

Status of Women

Senior government appointments, Dr. Ursula Franklin, qu, 791

Summit meetings

Suggested return to former format, qu, 856

Transport

Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, qu, 840

Unemployment Insurance

Petition against calculation of severance pay as income, qu, 708

Youth

Cancellation of programs, government policy, qu, 1921

Announcement of new program, qu, 2203

Government policy, qu, 2221

Youth Committee

2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2256, 2259, 2294

Family allowances

De-indexation, petitions against Bill C-70, number and disposition, 1923

Family Allowances, 1973

Adequacy of existing benefits, 1963

"Child and Elderly Benefits" consultation paper", 1908, 1928, 1961, 1976

Child Tax Credit, 1895, 1910, 1976, 2158, 2177, 2179

Child tax exemption, 2176

Conservative, Liberal philosophical differences, 2159

Evolution of social security net, 1957

Federal sales tax, 2176

Guaranteed annual income, 1899

History of previous amendments, 1857

Impact of proposed amendments, 1859

Industry and Humanity, Mackenzie King, quotes, 1944

Interaction between federal and provincial benefits, 1977

Minister of National Health and Welfare, quotes, 2176

National Council of Welfare, 2177

Prime Minister, quotes, 2175

Psychological component, 1896

Question of trust, 2009

Regressive legislation, 1927

State responsibility to the family structure, 2137

Symbolic importance, 2157

"Total financial resources" income concept, 1977

Transfer payments, 2028

Universality, 1896, 1897, 1908, 1963, 2027, 2028

Family Allowances—Cont'd

See appendices p. 1879, 1909, 1902

Speakers: Senators

Bonnell, M. Lorne, 1908
 Croll, David A., 1897
 Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 2009
 Graham, B. Alasdair, 1893, 2134
 Le Moynes, Jean, 1943
 MacEachen, Allan J., 2175
 Marsden, Lorna, 1975, 2156
 Rousseau, Yvette, 1927
 Thériault, Norbert L., 2026
 Tremblay, Arthur, 1855, 2028, 2178
 Turner, Charles, 1956

See also Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70. 1r, 1833; 2r, 1855, 1892, 1908, 1927, 1943, 1956, 1975, 2009, 2026; ref to com, 2029; rep without amdt, 2122; 3r, 2134, 2156, 2175; r.a., 2258

Family orders and agreements enforcement assistance

Garnishment, 1932
 Support and custody, 1932
Speaker: Senator
 Nurgitz, Nathan, 1930

Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance bill C-48. 1r, 1880; 2r, 1930, 1945, 1964; ref to com, 1965; rep without amdt, 1968; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031

Farm debt review

"Atlantic Canada", 2761
 Bankruptcy Act, 2756
 Canada Assistance Plan, 2739, 2755
 Farm Credit Corporation funds, 2738
 Financial institutions, 2755
 Moratorium on farm credit loans, 2739
 Potato industry, 2754
 Provincial debt review boards, 2738
 Rural transition programs, 2756
 Suicide rate, 2739
 Timing, 2762

Speakers: Senators

Argue, Hazen, 2738, 2754
 Corbin, Eymard G., 2753, 2761
 Denis, Azellus, 2756, 2762
 Olson, H.A., 2756

also

Wise, Hon. John, Minister of Agriculture, 2750

Farm Debt Review bill C-117. 1r, 2737; 2r, 2737, 2749; ref to Committee of the Whole, 2749; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, Hon. John Wise P.C., Minister of Agriculture taking part in the debate, 2750; rep without amdt, 2765; 3r, 2765; r.a., 2783

Farm improvement loans

Debt service charge, 1154
 Intermediate-term farm loans, 1153

Speakers: Senators

Balfour, R. James, 1153
 Olson, H.A., 1154

Farm Improvement Loans bill C-56. 1r, 1130; 2r, 1153; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217

Farm products marketing agencies

Canadian Wheat Board, 216
 Canagrex, 216
 Potato marketing in eastern Canada, 219
 Tobacco production, 215

Speakers: Senators

Argue, Hazen, 216
 Bielish, Martha P., 215
 Corbin, Eymard G., 219
 Roblin, Duff, 217

Farm Products Marketing Agencies bill C-4. 1r, 188; 2r, 215; 3r, 225; r.a., 403

Federal-provincial consultation, 38, 123

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements

Equalization payments, 208
 See National Finance Committee

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, federal post-secondary education and health contributions, 1977

Canadian Nurses Association, proposals, 2715
 Cash transfer payments reductions, 2714
 Effect on Atlantic Canada, 2709
 Emphasis on deficit reduction, 2715
 EPF entitlements escalator amendment, 2684
 False saving, 2715
 Impact on New Brunswick francophones, 2718
 Importance of research, 2717
 "No strings" transfers, 2708
 Research and development constraints, 2708
 Second class citizens, 2711

Speakers: Senators

Argue, Hazen, 2715
 Bonnell, M. Lorne, 2711
 Corbin, Eymard G., 2717
 Hicks, Henry D., 2707
 Macquarrie, Heath, 2683, 2718
 Molgat, Gildas L., 2716
 Stewart, John B., 2712, 2767
 Thériault, L. Norbert, 2709

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96. 1r, 2678; 2r, 2683, 2707; ref to com, 2721; rep without amdt but with comments, 2765; 3r, 2766; r.a., 2783

Federal-provincial relations, 88

Establishment of cross-party caucus committees, 2790
 First Ministers' Conference, Regina, Feb. 14-15, 1985, failures and shortcomings, 535, 888, 939
 Government of Quebec, attitude to sovereignty, 1502
 Health and education
 Effect of reduction in transfer payments, 1520, 1556, 1558

Federalism, 53

Felicitations

Griffith, Mr. Hubert, Editor of Debates (English), 25 years of service, 1534

Felicitations—Cont'd

- Macdonald, Hon. John M., 25th anniversary of appointment, 1114, 1126
- Murray, Hon. Lowell P.C., on becoming Leader of the Government in the Senate 2786
- Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty, Thirty-third anniversary of accession to Throne, 492
- Riel, Hon. Maurice, Privy Council appointment, 244
- Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C., 25th anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1177
- Rowe, Hon. Frederick W., "The Smallwood Era", publication, 445
- Sherwood, Hon. Cyril B., induction into Dairy Hall of Fame, 1521
- Sinclair, Hon. Ian, nomination to Business Hall of Fame, 604
- Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O., United Nations award, 1010

Film industry

- Identification of Canadian production locales, 2097

Finance

- Deputy Minister, meetings, government policy, 1498
- Document entitled "John Turner as Minister of Finance: An Era of Economic Decline", 262, 319, 429
- Financial institutions, restructuring, possible committee study of discussion paper, 783
 - Report (interim) tabled, 1695
- Ministerial aide, payment, 782
- Protection of bondholders against inflation, reported statement by minister, 969
- Recording of ministerial discussions, 223
- Suggested impropriety of minister, 807
- See Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Finance, Italian and Newfoundland electors, comments of minister, 347, 444Financial institutions

- Concentration of economic power, government policy, 2283
- Discussion paper, "The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion", 893
- Pioneer Trust failure, request for investigation, 894, 925, 1022
- Takeovers by industrial conglomerates, government policy, 2282

Financial institutions depositors compensation

- Attitude of auditors, 1821
- Confidentiality, 1812, 1815, 1823
- Deposit insurance limit, 1816
- Double standard, 1813
- Estey Commission, 1816
- "High risk investments", 1817
- Insolvency principle, 1819
- Ministerial responsibility, 1824
- Mismanagement, 1821
- "Off-set" arrangement, 1811
- Reimbursement of the banks, 1823

Speakers : Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 1812
- Corbin, Eymard G., 1817
- Denis, Azellus, 1817
- Frith, Royce, 1818
- Kelly, William M., 1810, 1820
- Molgat, Gildas L., 1814
- Olson, H.A., 1818
- Roblin, Duff, 1821
- Stewart, John B., 1816
- Turner, Charles, 1815

Financial institutions depositors compensation—Cont'd

See Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79. 1r, 1810; 2r, 1810; 3r, 1824; r.a., 1830Fisheries

- West German fleet, overfishing in waters under Canadian jurisdiction, 835, 870

Fisheries and Oceans

- Canned tuna unfit for human consumption, suggested method of disposal, 1254
- Decision of minister re licence, 1171, 1238
 - Request for answer, 1236
- Fishing vessel support program, cancellation, 1986
- Future of Star-Kist plant, government policy, request for answer, 1870
- Independence of inspectors, 1298
- Inspection function, consultation with industry, 1298
- Parliamentary secretary, whereabouts, 2070
- Product inspection standards, 1363, 1906, 1922
- Reported fee for access to minister, 1170
- Resignation of minister, tributes, 1265, 1267
- Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, 1230, 1236, 1258
 - Consumer confidence, future of Star-Kist plant, government policy, 1297, 1435
 - Members of the government, extent of knowledge, 1276
 - Prime Minister's Office, extent of knowledge, 1265, 1435
 - Request for answers, 1353
 - Suggested inquiry, 1308, 1384
 - See Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Fisheries (Bill C-32)

- Allocation of fish between competing groups, 1148
- Consultation, 1146
- Fisheries management, 1145
- Native rights, 1146
- Regulation-making powers, 1149
- Scope of the act, 1146
- Speakers: Senators
 - Godfrey, John M., 1149
 - LeBlanc, Roméo, 1147
 - Marshall, Jack, 1145

Fisheries bill C-32. 1r, 1114; 2r, 1145; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217Fisheries improvement loans

- Guaranteed loans program, 1152
- Security, 1152
- Speakers: Senators
 - LeBlanc, Roméo, 1152
 - Marshall, Jack, 1152

Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-57. 1r, 1129; 2r, 1152; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217Fisheries, Standing Senate Committee (from May 14/86)

- Authority to publish and distribute interim report on marketing of fish in Canada, 2652, 2673
- Order of reference, 2598
- Report
 - 1st, 2698
 - See appendix p. 2745

Fitness and Amateur Sport

Appointment of females to advisory council, 2121

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C.

Agriculture

Potato industry, government assistance, 2131

Banking

Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank

Status of proposed joint committee, 1223

Regulation of banks, 1286

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

13th report, financial institutions depositors' compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, 1775

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 731

Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-30, 901, 916

International Development Association, 902

International Finance Corporation, Canadian participation, 902

World Bank, 901

Budget, impact on senior citizens, point of order, 991

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-86, 2556, 2574, 2587, 2601

Board of directors, 2556, 2587

Increasing fees, 2588

Losses of failed western banks, 2587

Retroactivity, 2587

Canada-United States relations

Extraterritorial jurisdiction, 649

Trade, imposition of tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles and steel products, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2531

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1574, 1578

Canada's International Relations Committee

1st report, bilateral trade with United States, and Canada's participation in research on Strategic Defense Initiative, (interim), 1316, 1568

Censorship, nature and danger, 1370

Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, 1563

Soliciting, nuisance problem, 1563

Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution bill C-43, 795, 807

Employees, 797

Transfer of assets, 798

Transfer of responsibilities, 807

Customs Tariff bill C-38, 765

David, Hon. Paul, 803

Employment

Job creation, 910

Environment

Air pollution on Parliament Hill and public education campaign, 1674

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, 2066

Foreign affairs

India, detention of Canadian national, qu, 115

Income Tax bill C-7, 265, 324

Administration of tax system, 265

Farmers, 265

Small business tax simplification, 265

Taxation of charities, 265

Industry

Aerospace, allocation of service contracts, 2069

Canadian Porcelain Company, offer to purchase by employee co-operative, government attitude, 990

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

6th report, Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, rep with amdts, 1748

Libya

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C.—Cont'd

Libya—Cont'd

United States air strike

Consultations between Canada and United States and between Canada and western allies, 2345

Request for answers, 2280

Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, 394, 1776, 2289

Motion in amendment, 1776, 2004

Meat Inspection bill C-33, 923

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", motion to refer back to committee, 2475, 2518

National Finance Committee

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to report, 575

Report

10th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B), 1700

Ontario and Manitoba Courts Amendment bill C-3, 365

Petitions, 1789

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1750, 2040, 2054, 2075

Closure, 2075

Impact on smaller provinces, 2076

Rights and freedoms

Canadian forces, spouses of members, 1511, 1527, 2235

Motion in amendment, 1526

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Alleged conduct of former corporal, 1065

Rules of the Senate

Rule 77 (7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 2436

Senate

Adjournment, 688

Business

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1690, 1695, 1703

Motion re second distinct sitting, 1761

Point of order, 1703

Christmas recess, 1792

Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 802

Official report, 1648

Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament

Motion to constitute immediately in Committee of the Whole, 2242

Question Period, form, suggested referral to Standing Rules and Orders Committee, 2554

Small Businesses Loans bill C-23, 735

Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2391, 2432, 2511

Social programs

Universality, government policy, 378

Wells, Robert, Q.C., President of Canadian Bar Association, visit, 2307

Youth Committee

2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action"

Point of order, 2336

Fonyo, Steve

"Journey for Lives" across Canada, 866, 941

Foreign affairs

Afghanistan

Possibility of political settlement, 1740

Refugees, government policy, 1740

Soviet army defectors, government policy, 2327

Africa, famine relief, 524, 638

Bangladesh, aid to disaster victims, 945

Burkina-Faso, closing of Canadian diplomatic post, 57, 301

Foreign affairs—Cont'd

- Central America, use of military force, government policy, 2162, 2272
- Forthcoming visit of government leader to southern Africa, correction of press report, 1868, 1870
- Gift of war planes to Turkey, 410
- Green paper on competitiveness and security, 897, 908, 909, 912
 - Question of privilege, 921
- Honduras and Nicaragua, U.S. military assistance to Contra forces, government position, 792
- India
 - Aid for victims of industrial accident at Bhopal, 263
 - Detention of Canadian national, 56, 115
- Iran
 - Diplomatic relations, re-establishment, 1257, 1435, 2068, 2068
 - Expulsion of Iranian nationals from Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, 1311
 - Persecution of Baha'is, 480, 636
- Lebanon, government aid, 99, 264
- Mexico, reported nuclear pact with Canada, 450
 - Correction to statement by Leader of the Government, 467
- Middle East
 - Gulf of Sidra, United States-Libya conflict, safety of Canadian nationals, 2221
 - Mission of Secretary of State for External Affairs, 2163
- Namibia, proposed establishment of interim administration, government position, 791, 936
- Nicaragua, absence of Canadian observers from election, 223, 382
- Organization of American States, government policy, 60, 301
- Overseas delegations, parliamentary representation, 760
 - Amplification of statement, 769
- Philippines presidential election
 - Attitude of Canadian government, 2066
 - Canadian Ambassador, possible recall, 2068
 - Status of Canada-Philippines relations, 2032, 2049
- Sale of CF-104 aircraft to Turkey, 299, 431
- Shooting down of South Korean aircraft, Soviet compensation for next-of-kin of Canadian victims, 761, 815
- South Africa, apartheid
 - Canadian position at Commonwealth Conference, 1386, 1520
 - Government action to adopt United Nations convention, 2099
- Third World, government aid, 934, 1173
- U.S.S.R., treatment of Canadian journalist, government attitude, 770
- United States, imposition of economic sanctions against Nicaragua, 837, 842, 974
 - Government policy, 855, 872, 881, 937
- Visit of President Reagan to cemetery at Bitburg, West Germany, Prime Minister's views, 813
- Zimbabwe, status of white farmers, 507

Foreign affairs, gift of war planes to Turkey, 347, 441

- Balance of power between Turkey and Greece, 443
- NATO, 442
- Possibility of Greek air force receiving aircraft, 443
- Possible Turkish attack against Greek islands, 441
- Tension in the Aegean, 441

Speakers: Senators

- Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 441
- Phillips, Orville H., 442

Foreign Affairs, Standing Senate Committee

- Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa, authority to study, 188, 233, 366
- International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation, authority to study, 1406

Foreign Affairs, Standing Senate Committee—Cont'd

- International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation,—Cont'd
- Authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington D.C., 2195, 2235, 2254

Reports

- 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 236
 - See Journals of the Senate
- 2nd, Canada's relations with countries of Middle East and North Africa, 1131
 - Arab-Israeli conflict, 1133
 - Canada-Israel Committee, 1132
 - Embassy in Damascus, 1133
 - Israel, 1132
 - See appendix p. 1159

Foreign affairs, visit of Canadian parliamentary delegation to Federal Republic of Germany, 965, 1157, 1727

- Berlin Wall, 1729
- Prosperity and problems, 1727
- Speaker, ambassador of goodwill, 1727
- Speakers: Senators
 - MacEachen, Allan J., 1728
 - Macquarrie, Heath, 1727
 - Wood, Dalia, 1157

Foreign extraterritorial measures

- American Law Institute, Restatement of U.S. Foreign Relations Law, 390, 398
- Attorney General, 362, 391
- Bank of Nova Scotia, 360
- Blocking mechanism, 391
- COCOM, 361
- Canada and U.S. relations, 359
- Canadian governmental responses to foreign governmental measures, 362
- Canadian sovereignty, infringement, 391
- Control of Canadian exports to other countries, 361
- Export Administration Act, 390, 398
- Foreign antitrust judgments, 362
- NATO, 361, 389
- OECD, 390, 397
- Production of evidence, 360
- Strategic exports, 361
- U.S. antitrust laws, 360
- United Kingdom and Australia, 361
- United States, 389
- Speakers: Senators
 - MacEachen, Allan J., 388
 - Nurgitz, Nathan, 359, 391

Foreign Extraterritorial Measures bill C-14. 1r, 332; 2r, 359, 388; 3r, 397; r.a., 403Foreign investment

- Effect of Prime Minister's statements, 2151
- Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, reported statement, 102
- President of Treasury Board, reported statement, 471, 679, 694

Forestry and Fisheries

- Government policy, 45

France

- See Visitors

Francophone Commonwealth

Establishment, possible government participation, 337

Francophone summit

Canadian Head of State, reported statement by Prime Minister, 2048

Famine relief, reported breach of agreement between Government of Canada and Government of Quebec, 2033, 2069

Premier of New Brunswick, status, 2034, 2104

Freshwater fish marketing

Borrowing limit, 356

Speakers: Senators

Adams, Willie, 386

Bielish, Martha P., 356, 388

De Bané, Pierre, 387

LeBlanc, Roméo, 385

Marshall, Jack, 386

Molgat, Gildas L., 384

Steuart, D.G., 386

Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5. 1r, 332; 2r, 356, 384; 3r, 397; r.a., 403

Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation

See Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee

Frith, Hon. Royce, Deputy Leader of the Opposition

Académie française, 350th anniversary of founding, 1705

Access to information

Tabling of documents, 75

Aeronautics bill C-36, 1121

Airport security around the world, 1121

Agriculture

Sugar-beet industry crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1881

Western Canada, drought conditions, government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1450

Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee

Agricultural stabilization, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-25 prior to receipt of legislation, 999

Fish marketing in Canada, authority to study, 476, 491

Report

2nd, Meat Inspection bill C-33, 922

"Soil at Risk", authority to print additional copies, 292

Appropriation No. 3, 1984-85 bill C-16, 323

Appropriation No. 4, 1984-85 bill C-34, 716

Appropriation No. 1, 1985-86 bill C-35, 717

Appropriation No. 2, 1985-86 bill C-54, 1077

Appropriation No. 3, 1985-86 bill C-89, 1720, 1743

Appropriation No. 4, 1985-86 bill C-101, 2229

Appropriation No. 1, 1986-87 bill C-102, 2230, 2250

Appropriation No. 2, 1986-87 bill C-115, 2602, 2616

Banking

Canadian Commercial Bank

Bad loans, qu, 1373

Collapse

Memorandum of Intent, request for information, qu, 1252, 1266, 1436

Request for answers, 1322, 1353

Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank

Availability of names of uninsured depositors, qu, 1373

Status of proposed joint committee, qu, 1223

Confidence in system, qu, 1372

Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'd

Banking—Cont'd

Estey Commission of Inquiry, qu, 1295

Regulation of banks, 1287

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Authority to meet during Senate sittings, 1274, 1281

Committee proceedings, televising, 1449, 1491

Competition tribunal, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-91 prior to receipt of legislation, 2302

Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 957

Notice of committee meetings, 1398

Reports

Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, (interim), 1695

13th, financial institutions depositors' compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, 1767, 1775

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 732

Budget

De-indexation of pension benefits, government position, qu, 1013

Oil pricing, loss of revenue, qu, 2112, 2222

Preparation

Alleged negotiations between government and Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, qu, 446

Request for briefing, qu, 925

Tax increases, government policy, qu, 931

Budget, impact on senior citizens, 965, 991, 1079, 1244

Budget proposals, 2371

Cabinet

Access to information, qu, 113

Leader of the Government in the Senate, responsibilities, qu, 28, 41

Cabinet, access to information, 220

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-86, 2557, 2574

Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1660

Canada Pension Plan, Federal Court bill C-116, 2729

Canada-United States relations

Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1390, 1399

Extraterritorial jurisdiction, qu, 649

Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting, agenda, qu, 2151

Acid rain, scope of agreement, qu, 2197

Status of agreement, qu, 2382, 2472

Prime Minister's speech in Chicago

"Joint tenancy" and "constructive internationalism", qu, 1655

Trade, imposition of tariff on Canadian shakes, shingles and steel products, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2532

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1574, 1578

Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1660, 1743

Canada's International Relations Committee

Appointment

Message to House of Commons, 1183

Canadian Arsenal Limited Divestiture Authorization bill C-87, 2405

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Effect of budget reductions, qu, 1479

International service, possible cancellation, qu, 194, 427

Staff reductions, 944

Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37, 745

Confidence in financial institutions, 745

Depositors, 745

Government's responsibility, 745

Shareholders, 745

Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'd

- Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security bill C-69, 1269, 1315, 1327
- Canadian National Railways
 - Board of directors
 - Replacement of chairman, qu, 779
 - Replacement of members, qu, 812, 833, 2023
- Christmas, bureaucratic and political comments, 405
- Christmas greetings, 1831
- Commercial Arbitration bill C-108, 2444, 2451
- Competition Tribunal bill C-91, 2579, 2617
- Constitution
 - Quebec's opting out, government policy, qu, 282
- Cook, Hon. Eric, tributes, 23
- Corrections
 - Daniel Hawe report, motions nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6, for production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2359
- Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81, 1504, 1825
 - Legalized gambling, 1825
- Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) bill C-77, 1365
 - Pari-mutuel betting, 1365
 - Race Tracks of Canada Incorporated, 1365
- Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, 1564
- Criminal Law bill C-18, 821, 834, 843
 - Contempt of court provisions, 844
 - Mandatory supervision, 844
 - Seizing profits from crime, 844
 - Sentencing reform, 844
 - Telewarrants and extraterritoriality, 844
 - War crimes and crimes against humanity, 845
- Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution bill C-43, 808
- Cultural organizations
 - Relationship to government, 222
- Customs and Excise
 - Prime Minister's wife, alleged non-declaration of gifts, qu, 2560
- Customs and Special Import Measures bill C-40, 817, 834
 - Delegation of authority, 817
- Customs Tariff bill C-38, 765, 772
- Denis, Hon. Azellus, P.C., fiftieth anniversary of election to Parliament, tributes, 1371
- Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C., tributes on resignation, 1832
- Divorce, Divorce and Corollary Relief, Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance, bills C-46, 47 and 48, 1930
- Donahoe, Hon. Richard A., tributes, 23
- Economic and social policies, government statements, 370
- Economy
 - Canadian dollar, decline in value, 508
 - Timing and extent of market intervention, appearance of Governor of Bank of Canada before Senate, qu, 2004
 - Leader of the Government in the Senate, statement, request for clarification, 42, 76
- Employment and Immigration
 - Long-term Illegal Migrants Review Committee, possible investigation of conduct of minister, qu, 806, 936
- Employment Equity bill C-62, 2432
 - Motion re message to House of Commons, 2681
- Energy and Natural Resources Committee
 - Canada-Newfoundland Atlantic Accord implementation, subject matter of Bill C-94, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2559
- Environment
 - Air pollution on Parliament Hill and public education campaign, 1649, 1673
 - Motion withdrawn, 1699
 - Soil conservation, 105

Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'd

- Environment—Cont'd
 - World Commission on Environment and Development, submission, input of people of Canada, qu, 2504
- Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada bill S-5, 1414
- Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 1856, 2011
- Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2737, 2749, 2752
- Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements
 - Equalization payments, 208
- Federal-Provincial Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2685, 2720, 2766
- Finance
 - Financial institutions, restructuring, possible committee study of discussion paper, qu, 783
 - Suggested impropriety of minister, qu, 807
- Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1810, 1818
 - Insolvency principle, 1819
- Fisheries and Oceans
 - Resignation of minister, tribute, 1266
 - Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption
 - Members of the government, extent of knowledge, qu, 1276
 - Prime Minister's Office, extent of knowledge, qu, 1265, 1435
 - Request for answers, 1353
- Fisheries Committee
 - Authority to publish and distribute report on marketing of fish in Canada, 2652, 2673
- Foreign affairs
 - Green paper on competitiveness and security, 913
 - United States, imposition of economic sanctions against Nicaragua, 838
 - Government policy, qu, 855, 872, 881
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation
 - Authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington D.C., to study, 2196, 2236
- Report
 - 2nd, Canada's relations with countries of Middle East and North Africa, 1132
- Foreign Extraterritorial Measures bill C-14, 360, 392
- Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 387
- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod
 - Jalbert, René M., Esq., appointment, 1220
- Government advertising
 - Awarding of contracts, qu, 794
- Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges bill C-78, 1541
- Greek Independence Day, 2216
- Health and Welfare
 - Health services, universality, government policy, qu, 351
 - Palliative care, use of heroin, government policy, qu, 258
- Health, ill effects of smoking, 728
- Human rights
 - Japanese-Canadians, government apology and compensation, 240
- Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84
 - Availability of committee proceedings, 1954
- Industry
 - Shipbuilding, government policy, qu, 2111, 2679
- Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie, the late, tribute, 2526
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee
 - Notice of meeting, 492, 1403
 - Postponement of meeting, 1087
- Reports
 - Estimates of the Senate for 1986-87, tabled, 1696
 - Consideration, 1708, 1725, 1751

Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'dInternal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee—
*Cont'd*Reports—Cont'd

OASIS, 1709

Victoria building, 1709

26th and 27th, tabled, 2302, 2361

28th and 29th, tabled, 2363, 2575, 2576

30th, tabled, 2403, 2420

31st to 40th, tabled, 2559, 2574

41st, 2787

International terrorism

Motion for appointment of Special Senate Committee, 1991

Motion withdrawn, 2374

Reservations, 1991

Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, expression of outrage, expression of condolences, 1532

Training sites, qu, 1110

Investment Canada

Foreign investment, government policy, qu, 319

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1071

Judges and related Acts bill C-128, 2739

Justice

Quebec, appeal of speeding conviction, decision of minister, qu,
282, 430

Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee

Constitution 1867 and electoral boundaries readjustment, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-74 prior to receipt of legislation, 1547Parole, penitentiary, prisons and reformatories and Criminal Code, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-68 prior to receipt of legislation, 1714

Reports

14th, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt, 1863

15th, parole and penitentiaries, subject matter of Bills C-67 and C-68, authority to travel from place to place in Canada to study, 1948

19th, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2020

20th, Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65, rep without amdt, 214821st, parole and penitentiaries, interim rep on subject matter of Bill C-67, 247324th, Employment Equity bill C-62, rep with observations and recommendations, 2677

Libya

United States air strike

Consultations between Canada and United States and between Canada and western allies, 2345

Request for answers, 2278

Macdonald, Hon. John M., felicitations on 25th anniversary of
appointment, 1126

Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, 2367

Meat Inspection bill C-33, 923

Metric conversion

Government policy, qu, 196, 302

National Defence Committee

Appointment, 71, 94, 112

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2455

Motion to refer back to committee, 2514

National Finance Committee

Borrowing authority, authority to examine subject matter of Bill
C-51 prior to receipt of legislation, 998

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to meet forthwith, 497, 526

Excise tax and excise, authority to study subject matter of Bill
C-80 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'dNational Finance Committee—*Cont'd*Petroleum and gas revenue tax and income tax, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-82 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477Post-secondary education and training, authority to study government activities, 1275

Reports

6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A),
100710th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B),
169912th, Canada Development Corporation reorganization bill C-
66, rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1713

14th, estimates 1985-86, supplementary (C), 2228

Supplementary fiscal equalization payments, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-39 prior to receipt of legislation, 999

National Postal Museum

Advisory committee, motion for return, 2410

National Revenue

Definition of "partnership", tax avoidance, qu, 1284

Nuclear disaster

Ukraine, safety and health of Canadian nationals, government action, qu, 2386

Official Languages Policy and Programs Committee

Estimates 1986-87, Privy Council Vote 15, referred, 2224

Quorum, 463

Report

1st, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1008

Ontario and Manitoba Courts Amendment bill C-3, 365

Parliament

Caucus rooms, electronic eavesdropping, Prime Minister's reaction, qu, 1926

Standing joint committees, propriety of Commons referrals, 2128

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2696,
2725, 2776

Implications for independence of Parliament, 2778

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2747, 2791, 2811, 2823, 2826,
2831

Commons disagreement with Senate amendment, 2840

Point of order, 2830

Potential for abuse, 2849

Speaker's ruling, 2831

Parole and related Statutes bill C-68, 2822, 2825

Pension Benefits Standards bill C-90, 2771

Petitions, 1789

Pine Hill Divinity Hall bill S-7, 1733

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 860, 877

Privilege, 1096

Statement by Senator Roblin on alleged conflict of interest, 2444

Reform of the Senate, qu, 625

Request for information, qu, 656

Register of senators' interests, 1666

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee

Reports

2nd, Statutory Instruments No. 29, 495

5th, Statutory Instruments No. 32, 2230, 2274, 2360, 2500

Representation, 1985, bill C-74, 1779, 1795, 1801, 1906

Senate responsibility, 1907

Research and Development, support and government policy, 1293

Riel, Hon. Maurice, P.C.

Privy Council appointment, felicitations, 244

Rights and freedoms

Canadian forces, spouses of members, 1512, 1526, 2015, 2235,
2411

Motion in amendment, 1526

Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'd

- Riley, Hon. Daniel A., the late, 23
- Royal Canadian Mounted Police
 - Alleged conduct of former corporal, qu, 1064, 2100
- Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65, 2024
 - Definition of "complaint", 2025
 - Marin commission report, 2024
 - Public Complaints Commission, limitation of powers, 2025
- Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada
 - Request for tabling of report, qu, 925
- Rules of the Senate
 - Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, 61
 - Rule 67 (1), motion to amend, 2459
 - Rule 77 (7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 1849, 1913, 1995, 2170, 2408, 2452
 - Health and discomfort, 1914
 - May's Parliamentary Practice, 20th Edition*, 1916
 - New York State Journal of Medicine*, 1916
 - Precedent, 1916
 - Suggested amendments, 758
- Selection Committee
 - 2nd report, committee members, 55
- Senate
 - Adjournment, 113, 466, 520, 688, 959, 1399, 1413, 1478, 1492, 2111, 2530, 2783
 - Allocation of rooms, question of privilege, 2016
 - Bourassa, Paul, tribute on completion of term as page, 843
 - Business, 383, 397, 398, 503, 646, 647, 737, 743, 1050, 1404, 1516, 1677, 1681, 1719, 2015, 2254, 2436, 2577
 - Committees authorized to examine subject matter of Bills C-27, C-44, C-24 and C-36 prior to receipt of legislation, 999
 - Disposition of Bills C-67 and C-68, 2825
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1690, 1703, 1761
 - Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 662, 802, 823
 - Doyle, Hon. Richard J., appointment, qu, 666
 - Easter greetings, 2259
 - Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, 2211
 - Speakers statement, 2246
 - Legislative program, qu, 481
 - Minutes of the Proceedings
 - Recording of choosing of Acting Speaker, 1966
 - Recording of points of order, 1967
 - Official report
 - Correction of statement, 370
 - Printing of appendices, 709
 - Order No. 3 and Inquiry No. 2 withdrawn, 1384
 - Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament
 - Motion to constitute immediately in Committee of the Whole, 2242
 - Proceedings, motion to authorize broadcasting, 1271
 - Motion in amendment, 1877
 - Question Period
 - Form, suggested referral to Standing Rules and Orders Committee, 2554
 - Oral questions, delayed answers, 300, 433, 502, 1400, 1836
 - "Order for return", point of order, qu, 1324
 - Requests for answers, 303, 382, 1112, 1290, 1384, 1394, 1974, 1989, 2653, 2668
 - Security service, staff reduction, 944
 - "Senate Bulletin", qu, 1520
 - Small Businesses Loans bill C-23, 714, 733
 - Adequate funding, 714
 - Difficulty in achieving objectives of bill, 714

Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'd

- Small Businesses Loans bill C-23—Cont'd
 - Legislation by order in council, 714
- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2415, 2431
 - Motion in amendment, 2511
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - Authority to meet during sittings of the Senate, 2029, 2083
 - Family Allowances, 1973, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-70 prior to receipt of legislation, 1547
 - Immigration, 1976, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-55 prior to receipt of legislation, 1516
 - Motion withdrawn, 1547
 - National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1249, 1261
 - Old age security, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-26 prior to receipt of legislation, 999
 - Pension benefits standards, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-90 prior to receipt of legislation, 2501
- Reports
 - 9th, authority to adjourn from place to place within and outside Canada to study, 2397
 - Motion withdrawn, 2410
 - 10th, authority to travel and to engage services to study report They Served, We Care, 2651, 2660
 - Veterans affairs, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1302
- Social programs
 - Universality, government policy, 372, 375, 378
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - Register of senators' interests, authority to study related matters, 1726
- Reports
 - 3rd, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1243
 - 4th, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1482
 - Motion in amendment, 1860, 1875
 - 6th, government responses to committee reports, 1758
 - 8th, rule 77 (7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 2381
 - 9th, Message from House of Commons re amendments to their Standing Orders, 2435
- Statistics Canada
 - Cancellation of 1986 census, qu, 237
- Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) bill C-27, 1118
- Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A., resignation, 623
- Terrorism, motion for appointment of Special Senate Committee, 2520, 2540
- Trade
 - Imports from Third World countries, government attitude, qu, 836
- Transport
 - CN Rail, reductions in service in Newfoundland and east of Montreal, qu, 1833
 - CN Route, possible sale, government action, 2390
 - Port of Churchill, Manitoba
 - Grain shipments to U.S.S.R. and availability of hopper cars, 1324
- Transportation and Communications Committee
 - Car rental outlets at airports, authority to study policy, 495
- Tributes to departing pages, 2832
- Unemployment, method of combatting, 701
- United Nations Foreign Arbitral Awards Convention bill C-107, 2450
- Wallenberg, Raoul
 - Proposed conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1669
- Youth

Frith, Hon. Royce—Cont'd

- Youth—Cont'd
 - Abolition of Katimavik, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1920
 - Government policy, qu, 2216
 - Report of Special Senate Committee, government policy, qu, 2116
- Youth Committee
 - Appointment, 310
 - Report
 - 2nd, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2692
 - Point of order, 2341
- Yuzk Hon. Paul, the late, tribute, 2835

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod

- Jalbert, René M., Esq., appointment, 1220
- Lajoie, Claude, Esq., appointment, 1

Gigantès, Hon. Philippe Deane

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 82
- Aging, justice for the elderly, 978
- Air Canada
 - Board of directors, replacement of members, qu, 659
- Aviation disasters
 - Air-India aircraft loss, treatment of insurance claims, qu, 1113
- Banking
 - Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank
 - Delay in instituting inquiry, qu, 1376
- Borrowing Authority, 1985-86 (No. 2) bill C-51, 1207
- Budget
 - Impact of measures, qu, 1017
- Cabinet
 - Conflict-of-interest guidelines, government policy, senator's arm's length relationship, 2386
- Cabinet, access to information, 268, 289
 - Employment, 269
 - Journalists, 269
 - Public servants, 269
 - Real disposable income per capita, 269
- Canada-Greece relations, 1714, 1787
 - Good relations at risk, 1787
- Canada Post Corporation
 - Prospective strike, government policy, qu, 530
- Canada's cultural industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1628
 - Bilingualism, 1629
- Canada's International Relations Committee
 - 1st report, bilateral trade with United States and Canada's participation in research on Strategic Defense Initiative (interim), 1395
- Canada-United States relations
 - Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1392
 - Government policy, qu, 2328
 - Items not for negotiation, qu, 1353
 - Free trade, 1362
 - Kidnapping of Canadian citizen by bounty hunters from United States, qu, 529
 - Summit meeting in Quebec City, absence of Governor General, qu, 657, 2494
 - Invitations to gala performance, request for answer, 2221
 - Trade, imposition of tariff on publications and computer parts, qu, 2536, 2545
- Censorship, nature and danger, 1322, 1368
 - Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 1369
 - Mill, John Stuart, quotes, 1368
 - National Film Board, 1369

Gigantès, Hon. Philippe Deane—Cont'd

- Christmas, bureaucratic and political comments, 296, 405, 440
- Customs Tariff bill C-38, 775
 - Material of a treasonable or seditious nature, 775
- Deficit, 83
- Disarmament
 - Space-based defensive weapons, government policy, qu, 424
- Economy, 83
 - Canadian dollar, decline in value, qu, 509
 - National conference, availability of information, qu, 660
- Employment
 - Job creation, qu, 898, 910
 - Government policy, qu, 79
- Employment and Immigration
 - Immigrant wife of Canadian citizen, status, qu, 2052
- End of Decade Women's Conference, meeting held at Nairobi, Kenya, 1274
- Energy
 - Gas pricing policy, advisory committee study, qu, 471
 - Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, government policy, qu, 468
 - Price of Canadian crude oil, qu, 483
- Energy, Mines and Resources
 - Articles sent to weekly newspapers, qu, 2506
 - Propaganda articles, 2652
- Estimates
 - Date of tabling, qu, 537, 538
 - Question of privilege, 622
- Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 2009
 - Question of trust, 2009
- Finance
 - Protection of bondholders against inflation, reported statement by minister, qu, 970
 - Recording of ministerial discussions, qu, 223
- Finance, Italian and Newfoundland electors, comments of minister, 347, 444
- Fisheries and Oceans
 - Canned tuna unfit for human consumption, suggested method of disposal, 1255
 - Decision of minister re licence, qu, 1171
 - Independence of inspectors, qu, 1298
 - Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, qu, 1236
- Foreign affairs
 - Afghanistan, Soviet army defectors, government policy qu, 2327
 - India, detention of Canadian national, 57
 - Sale of CF-104 aircraft to Turkey, qu, 299, 431
- Foreign affairs, gift of war planes to Turkey, 347, 441
 - NATO, 442
 - Possible Turkish attack against Greek islands, 441
 - Tension in the Aegean, 441
- Greece
 - National Day of Greece, 646, 720
- Greek Independence Day, 2216
- Immigration
 - Entry of Soviet refugees, government policy, qu, 58, 411
- Japan, 85
- Justice
 - Quebec, appeal of speeding conviction, decision of minister, qu, 336, 432
 - Request for clarification of statements, 197
- Labour
 - Canada-United States free trade, prospective agreement, possible effects on employment, qu, 2035
- Law Reform Commission
 - Bigamy and polygamy, treatment, qu, 1255
- Lévesque, Hon. René, contribution to national life, 1295, 1330
- Libya

Gigantès, Hon. Philippe Deane—Cont'dLibya—Cont'd

Safety of Canadian nationals, government position, qu, 2305, 2327

National Finance Committee

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to report, 571

Pension bill C-28, 539

Reform of the Senate, 634

Senate

Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 662

Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, 2214

Official report

Printing of appendices, qu, 708

Request for revision of statement, 279

Oral questions, delayed answers, qu, 502

Question Period, request for answers, 638, 1112, 2272, 2472

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

Authority for subcommittee to travel, 2039, 2064

Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits, authority to study, 512

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1269, 1306

Reports

4th, Family Allowances, 1973, subject matter of Bill C-70, 1784

8th, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2332

Social programs

Universality, government policy, qu, 377, 470

Strategic Defense Initiative, 1221, 1262

First strike, 1262

Potential accidents, 1263

Russian research on weapons in outer space, 1264

Star Wars, 1263

Umbrella, 1262

Symbolic apple, 339

Technological revolution, 86

The Economy and the Budget, 1106, 1188

Increasing economic activity, 1189

Pensions, 1189

Unemployment, 1189

United States, 1190

Transport

Canadian airports, security, qu, 1113, 1325

Trudeau, Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott, P.C., record of administration, 1221, 1401

Economy, 1401

Employment, 1402

Inflation, 1402

Westell, Prof. Anthony, Carleton University, quote, 1402

Unemployment, 84

Unemployment, method of combatting, 657, 698

Youth Committee

2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2337, 2369, 2692

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, the late, tribute, 2836

Godfrey, Hon. John M.

Aging, justice for the elderly, 978

Australia

Missen, Senator Alan, the late, tribute, 2326

Banking

Canadian Commercial Bank, collapse, qu, 1229

Offer of chartered banks to assist in examination of loan portfolio, qu, 1252

Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank

Godfrey, Hon. John M.—Cont'dBanking—Cont'd

Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank—Cont'd

Senate study, wording of resolution, qu, 1235

Estey Commission of Inquiry, qu, 1297

Regulation of banks, qu, 1287

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 1107

Cabinet

Leader of the Government in the Senate, responsibilities, 28

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-86, 2573, 2588

Board of directors, 2573

Increasing fees, 2573

Retroactivity, 2574

Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1565, 1741

Definition of "associate" loophole, 1565, 1741

Canada-United States relations

Trade, imposition of tariff on publications and computer parts, 2537

Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37, 751

Canadian Pension Commission

Replacement of Wing Commander MacKenzie, DFC, qu, 1066, 1174

Competition Tribunal bill C-91, 2619

Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Trademark legislation, qu, 479, 679, 771

Corrections

Daniel Hawe Report, motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6, for production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2340

Customs and Special Import Measures bill C-40, 816

David, Hon. Paul, 803

Employment

Nannies, remuneration, qu, 354

Employment and Immigration

Long-term Illegal Migrants Review Committee, possible investigation of conduct of chairman, qu, 791

External Affairs

Parking tickets, payment by Canadian diplomats abroad, qu, 805

Fisheries bill C-32, 1149

Regulation-making powers, 1149

Foreign affairs committee

International financial system and institutions, authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington D.C., to study, 2237

Foreign investment

President of Treasury Board, reported statement, 695

Health and Welfare

Canada-Belgium social security agreement, delay in tabling, qu, 483, 680

Health, ill effects of smoking, 476, 768

Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84, 1888, 1989

Capital gains, 1888

Child Tax Credit, 1889

Child Tax Exemption, 1889

Retroactivity, 1890

Small business investment measures, 1889

Income Tax Conventions bill S-3, 485

Income Tax Conventions Interpretation bill C-10, 358

Immovable property, 359

Indian bill C-31, 1042

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Estimates of the Senate 1985-86, 1726

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1052

Encouraging Canadians to invest in Canada, 1054

Foreign Investment Review Act, 1052

Godfrey, Hon. John M.—Cont'd

- Investment Canada bill C-15—Cont'd
 - Ministerial administration of the act, 1053
 - Tax treatment of corporations, 1054
- Justice
 - Unlicensed cable television operators, stay of prosecutions, qu, 221
- Library of Parliament Committee
 - Frequency of meetings and composition, qu, 27, 62
- Meat Import Act
 - Tabling of reports, qu, 1887, 2023
- National Finance Committee
 - 6th report, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1004
- Official Languages Committee
 - Quorum, 463
- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 863
- Parliament
 - Caucus rooms, electronic eavesdropping, apology by Deputy Prime Minister, qu, 1941
 - Standing joint committees, propriety of Commons referrals, 2128
- Printing of Parliament Committee
 - Frequency of meetings and composition, qu, 27, 62
- Regional Development Incentives
 - Non-compliance by minister with Act, qu, 882, 1259
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - Authority to examine subject matter of clauses of certain bills, 207, 313, 615
- Report
 - 2nd, Statutory Instruments No. 29, 495
- Rights and freedoms
 - Canadian forces, spouses of members, 1512
- Royal Assent
 - Alternative procedure, qu, 607, 757
- Rules of the Senate
 - Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, qu, 62
 - Rule 67 (1), motion to amend, 2461
 - Rule 77 (7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 1995, 2169
- Suggested amendments, qu, 757
- Saltfish bill C-6, 304
- Senate
 - Adjournment, 1650
 - Business, 737, 1681
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1692
 - Cabinet members in the Senate, committee membership, qu, 1375
 - Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 655, 661, 801, 823
 - Official report, printing of appendices, 709
 - Proceedings, authority to broadcast, motion in amendment, 1877
 - Results of experiment in British House of Lords, 1877
 - Question Period
 - Request for answers, 1051
 - Referral of bills to committee before second reading, qu, 2571
- Senate, office of Speaker, 887
- Small Businesses Loans bill C-23, 733
- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2392, 2413, 2429, 2510
 - Faulty legislation, 2415
 - Modified motion in amendment, 2510
 - Procedural technicalities, 2413, 2429
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1305
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - Audio recording and broadcasting proceedings of Senate committees, request to study, 653

Godfrey, Hon. John M.—Cont'd

- Standing Rules and Orders Committee—Cont'd
 - Reports
 - 2nd, invitation to provinces to appear before Senate committee, 957
 - 3rd, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1240
 - 4th, Royal Assent ceremony changes, motion in amendment, 1862, 1873
 - 9th, message from House of Commons re amendments to their Standing Orders, 2435
 - 11th, membership of cabinet members on Senate committees, 2602
 - Time limit for government response to reports of Senate committees, request for consideration, 1364
- Strategic Defense Initiative, government attitude, 1282
- Altenberg, General Wolfgang, Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff, Federal Armed Forces of Germany, quote, 1283
- Deterrence, 1282
- U.S.S.R. and U.S. parity in nuclear weapons, 1282
- Unemployment, method of combatting, 700
- Youth Committee
 - Appointment, 311

Government advertising

- Awarding of contracts, 794

Government cutbacks, 121, 198Government of Canada

- Agricultural programs, composition of task force, 524
- Alleged freeze on programs, 523, 680
- Appointments, 694
- Policies and personality of former Prime Minister Trudeau, government attitude, 850
- Remuneration of senior officials and others, 704, 899
- Visit of Deputy Prime Minister to Yukon, use of government aircraft, 896

Government spending, 36Governor General's and Governor General's retiring annuity and salaries and judges

- Judicial allowances, 1541
- Relativity factor, 1541

Speakers: Senators

- Frith, Royce, 1541
- Nurgitz, Nathan, 1540

Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges bill C-78, 1r, 1496; 2r, 1540; ref to com, 1543; rep without amdt, 1649; r.a., 1712Governor General, Her Excellency, Rt. Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, P.C.

- Deputy
 - Beetz, Hon. Jean, appointment, 2
 - Dickson, Rt. Hon. Brian
 - Royal Assent, 927, 1414, 2091, 2623
 - Estey, Hon. Willard Z.
 - Royal Assent, 403
 - La Forest, Hon. Gérard V.J.
 - Royal Assent, 950, 1217, 1712, 2258, 2361, 2783
 - Lamer, Hon. Antonio
 - Royal Assent, 616, 621, 1100, 1830, 2031, 2857
 - Le Dain, Hon. Gerald, E.
 - Royal Assent, 756, 2410

Governor General, Her Excellency, Rt. Hon. Jeanne Sauv , P.C.—*Cont'd*Deputy—Cont'd

Wilson, Hon. Bertha

Royal Assent, 777

Speech from the Throne at Opening of First Session of Thirty-third Parliament, 1

Visit to United Kingdom, 1517

Grafstein, Hon. Jerahmiel S.

Access to information

Government guidelines for public servants, qu, 195, 214, 427, 428

Banking

International banking centres, promotion, qu, 2089, 2471

Canada-United States relations

Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1389, 1431

Canadian publishing and Canadian magazines, 2769

Cultural industries, qu, 1652

Export of fresh water, qu, 1851

Government policy, qu, 1236, 2342

Items for negotiation, qu, 1352

United States Ambassador's comments, qu, 1310

U.S. countervailing duties, government action, qu, 2467

User fees on Great Lakes, qu, 1517, 1718

Canadian content rules, effect on U.S. trade into Canada, qu, 2503

Free trade, impact on auto pact, availability of report to Province of Ontario, qu, 2493

Japanese auto plants, effect of establishment in Canada, qu, 2493

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1573, 1578, 1645

Written word, important measure of values, 1583

Chernenko, Konstantin, the late

Government representation at funeral, qu, 677

Cultural heritage and national identity

Government policy, qu, 81, 243, 1432

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited

Sale to Boeing Corporation, 1738, 1854

Use of de Havilland technology, qu, 1715, 1854

Economy

Canadian dollar, decline in value, qu, 508

Government policy, qu, 781

Employment

Government policy, qu, 376

Foreign affairs

Green paper on competitiveness and security, qu, 912

Iran, persecution of Baha'is, qu, 480, 636

Overseas delegations, parliamentary representation, qu, 760

South Africa, apartheid, government action to adopt United Nations convention, qu, 2099

Third World, government aid, qu, 934, 1173

Foreign Affairs Committee

Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa, authority to study, 366

Government of Canada

Policies and personality of former Prime Minister Trudeau, government attitude, qu, 850

Human rights

Discriminatory hiring practices against visible minorities, qu, 425

Japanese Canadians, government apology and compensation, qu, 27, 240, 673, 790, 1657, 1835, 2364

U.S.S.R., treatment of Canadian journalist, government attitude, qu, 770

Immigration

Grafstein, Hon. Jerahmiel S.—Cont'dImmigration—Cont'd

Entry of Soviet refugees, government policy, qu, 43, 241

Multiculturalism

Status of minority groups, government policy, qu, 869

Nuclear disaster

Ukraine, safety and health of Canadian nationals, government action, qu, 2385

Publishing industry

Canadian share of market, qu, 2428, 2494

Reform of the Senate, 634

Supply and Services

Publications, request for removal of permission fee, qu, 2002

United Nations

Government policy, qu, 605, 712

Graham, Hon. B. Alasdair

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 198

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Appointment of president, qu, 725, 1023

Crown Assets Disposal Corporation Dissolution bill C-43, 796

Legal proceedings related to obligations or liabilities, 797

Employment

Cape Breton, unemployment rate, qu, 2552

Decentralization program, qu, 101, 426, 498, 637

Family allowances

De-indexation, petitions against Bill C-70, number and disposition, qu, 1923

Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 1893, 2134

Child Tax Credit, 1895

Psychological component, 1896

State responsibility to the family structure, 2137

Universality, 1896

Foreign affairs

Philippines presidential election, status of Canada-Philippines relations, qu, 2032

Government cutbacks, 198

Industrial Development Division, 199

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1030

Canada's cultural heritage and national identity, 1031

Foreign investment entrepreneurship, 1030

Foreign Investment Review Agency, 1030

Ministerial decision-making authority, 1032

Senate

Question Period

Answers to unasked questions, qu, 2284

Sydney Steel Corporation, 199

The Economy and the Budget, 1191

Atlantic region economy, 1192

Capital gains, 1191

Closure of heavy water plants, 1192

Equity, 1191

Long term prospects, 1193

Pensions, 1192

Unemployment, 1192

Unemployment, 198

World peace, 201

Youth

Katimavik, cancellation of program, government policy, qu, 1921

Grain

Conference of ministers of exporting countries, 2448

International conference, government approach, 2504

Wheat pricing, terms of reference of House of Commons task force, 2468

- Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian bands mercury pollution claims settlement
 Band and individual settlements, 2497
 Social consequences of pollution, 2498
 Unknown future consequences, 2509
Speakers: Senators
 Robertson, Brenda M., 2497, 2510
 Watt, Charlie, 2509
- Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands Mercury Pollution Claims Settlement bill C-110. 1r, 2488; 2r, 2497, 2509; 3r, 2539; r.a., 2623
- Greece
 National Day of Greece, 646, 720
See Canada-Greece relations
- Greek Independence Day, 2208, 2215
- Grey Cup
 Congratulations to Winnipeg Blue Bombers on winning Canadian professional football championship, 76
- Guay, Hon. Joseph-Philippe, P.C.
 Canada-United States relations
 Garrison Dam project, qu, 46, 82, 102, 214, 497, 795
 Diversion unit legislation enactment, qu, 2448, 2555
 United States study of bill, qu, 2342
 Trans-border pollution problems, qu, 1951, 2050, 2102, 2156
 Department of the Environment
 Research scientists, termination of employment, qu, 214, 382
 Economy
 Foreign investment, competition, qu, 355
 Employment
 Public service staff reductions, job creation, government policy, qu, 2469
 Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84
 Availability of committee proceedings, 1955
 Industry
 Co-op Implements, proposed relocation from Winnipeg to Regina, qu, 530, 899
 VIA Rail maintenance centre location, qu, 538, 713
 International terrorism
 Training sites, qu, 1110
 National Finance Committee
 Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 Instruction to report, 562, 601
 Official report
 Correction, quality of translation, 1495
 Parliament Hill
 "Fairylend of beauty and excitement", qu, 1716
 Parole and related Statutes bill C-68, 2825
 Riel, Louis, 100th anniversary of hanging 1430, 1486
 Senate
 Question Period
 Requests for answers, 302
 Transport
 Airport car rental service, 261
 Parking, 322, 500
 Port of Churchill, Manitoba
 Continued operation, qu, 1431
 Grain car access, qu, 869
 Grain shipments to U.S.S.R. and availability of hopper cars, qu, 1067 1324
- Haidasz, Hon. Stanley, P.C.
 Adams, Rt. Hon. John, the late
 Representation at funeral, qu, 647
 Army Benevolent Fund and related Acts bill C-100, 2253
 Banking
 Payments to uninsured depositors, government policy, qu, 1374
 Budget
 De-indexation of pension benefits, government statement, qu, 1170
 Cabinet
 Conflict-of-interest guidelines, government policy, qu, 2389
 Canada Council
 Effect of budget reductions, qu, 46
 Canada Post Corporation
 Door-to-door delivery, limited cancellation of service, qu, 831, 937
 Canada-United States relations
 Summit meeting in Quebec City, request for texts of agreements, qu, 673
 Canada's cultural industries
 Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1644
 Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 Effect of budget reductions, qu, 46
 Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, 1304
 Citizenship
 Increase in fees, qu, 98
 Consumer and Corporate Affairs
 Combines and trust companies legislation, qu, 1255
 Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption as pet food, qu, 1382, 1436
 Crown corporations
 de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited and Canadair Limited, government policy, qu, 336, 432
 Petro-Canada, possible privatization, qu, 1280
 Diplomatic missions, security, qu, 652
 Economy
 Canadian dollar, decline in value, qu, 509
 Energy
 Federal-provincial agreement, qu, 741
 Environment
 Pollution, Niagara River and Great Lakes, qu, 264, 382
 Estonian, Latvian, Lithuanian and Ukrainian Communities of Ottawa
 Thirteenth ecumenical memorial service and concert, 1009
 Federal-provincial relations
 Health and education, effect of reduction in transfer payments, qu, 1520 1556
 Financial institutions
 Concentration of economic power, government policy, qu, 2283
 Fisheries and oceans
 Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, suggested inquiry, qu, 1308
 Foreign affairs
 Mexico, reported nuclear pact with Canada, qu, 450
 Health and Welfare
 Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, qu, 284, 500
 Government action, qu, 1233, 1434
 Hazardous products, government policy, qu, 1309
 Health, ill effects of smoking, 1979
 Contradictory government programs re use of tobacco, 1980
 Cost statistics, 1979
 Human rights
 Berne meeting, absence of senators from membership of observer group, qu, 2349, 2412
 Fate of Polish refugee, qu, 2349

Haidasz, Hon. Stanley, P.C.—Cont'd

- Human rights—Cont'd
 - Japanese-Canadians, government apology and compensation, government policy, qu, 1905, 2789
 - Meeting of experts, 729
 - Participation by Canadian parliamentarians, qu, 856, 868
 - Primate of Poland, expression of sympathy, 96, 203
- Human rights and fundamental freedoms
 - Appointment of Senate committee, 2084
- Human rights, meeting of experts, desirability of Senate participation, 397, 487
- Immigration
 - Entry of Soviet Jews, government policy, qu, 2468
 - Refugee determination, government policy, qu, 2285, 2468
- Immigration, 1976 bill C-55, 2139, 2181
 - Backlog, 2182
 - Band-aid solution, 2182
 - Foreign medical graduates, 2183
 - Hockey players, preferential treatment, 2184
 - "Investor" category, 2183
 - Larger legislative reform promised, 2184
 - Multiculturalism, 2181
 - Plaut, Rabbi Gunther, "Refugee Determination in Canada", 2182
- Indian Act
 - Status of women, removal of discriminatory provisions, qu, 376, 380, 537
- Industry
 - New Brunswick, closure of Star-Kist plant, government action, qu, 1393
- International terrorism
 - Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, qu, 1497
 - Expression of outrage, expression of condolences, 1532
- Justice
 - Canada Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals
 - Cost and scope, qu, 1921, 2102
 - Destroyed files, government action, qu, 1377
 - Extension of mandate and cost, qu, 2507
 - Extension of time, budget, qu, 1654
 - Scope of inquiry, qu, 1323
- Multiculturalism
 - Government policy, qu, 2269, 2285
 - Suggested joint committee, qu, 1313
- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 574, 601
- Native peoples
 - Treatment of Louis Riel and Métis, government position, qu, 1480
- Nuclear disaster
 - Ukraine, effects of radiation
 - Government advice to Canadian travellers, qu, 2427
 - Government knowledge and action, qu, 2387
- Nuclear energy
 - Safety of Canadian reactors, qu, 2385
- Parliament
 - Caucus rooms and members' offices, electronic eavesdropping, qu, 1926
 - Staff relations, denial of right to strike, qu, 832
- Parliament Hill
 - Canadian flag at half-staff, qu, 647
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2812
- Reform of the Senate, qu, 633
 - Appointments review committee, qu, 660
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments
 - 5th report, Statutory Instruments No. 32, 2274
- Senate
 - Question Period, request for answers, 2273

Haidasz, Hon. Stanley, P.C.—Cont'd

- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2018, 2061, 2376, 2790
 - Chief Medical Officer of England, quote, 2061
 - Cost statistics, 2062
 - Dewey, Martin, Smoke in the Workplace, quote, 2061
 - Harmful effects of passive smoking, 2062
 - Tarnopolsky, Mr. Justice Walter, quote, 2061
- Sport
 - Toronto, proposed domed stadium, government assistance, qu, 449, 712
- Status of Women
 - Equal pay for work of equal value, government delay, qu, 2002
 - Role in Canadian armed forces, qu, 2086
- Thirteenth Baltic Evening
 - Announcement, 620
- UNESCO
 - Canada's participation, qu, 1656
- United Nations
 - Ratification of international convention against taking of hostages, qu, 652
- World War II
 - 40th anniversary of cessation of hostilities in Europe, 866
 - 40th anniversary of surrender of German forces, qu, 842, 973
- Yuzyk Hon. Paul, the late, tribute, 2837

Hastings, Hon. Earl A.

- Agriculture
 - Farm credit crisis, request for meeting of ministers of agriculture, qu, 985
- Alberta
 - Economy, government assistance, qu, 2308
- Budget, impact on senior citizens, 1086
- Canada-United States relations
 - Summit meeting in Quebec City, press release, qu, 652
- Correctional service
 - Commissioner's office, increased cost of administration, qu, 2284, 2389
- Corrections, 2246
 - Correctional investigator, annual report, request for tabling, 2565
 - Daniel Hawe Report, motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6, for production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2338, 2359, 2539
 - Request for tabling of documents, qu, 2669, 2704, 2787
- Energy
 - Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Development Agreement, qu, 510, 638
 - Canadianization, government policy, qu, 297
 - Gas pricing policy, proposed committee study, qu, 280, 431
 - Advisory committee study, qu, 470
 - Heavy oils, construction of upgrader at Lloydminster, Alberta, government policy, qu, 2122
 - Oil pricing, government policy, qu, 1867, 2220
 - Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, government policy, qu, 469
- Energy and Natural Resources Committee
 - Authority to meet during sittings of the Senate, 2445
- National Energy Program
 - Authority to publish and distribute interim report, 1062
 - Authority to review all aspects, 333, 369
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 296
 - 2nd, oil substitution and conservation (Bill C-24), 1062
 - See Journals of the Senate
 - 4th, petroleum incentives program, subject matter of Bill C-85, 2214
 - 5th, "Oil Marketing: 1986," tabled, 2678

Hastings, Hon. Earl A.—Cont'd

- Health and Welfare
 - Health services, universality, government policy, 374
- International trade
 - Beef imports from European Economic Community, qu, 985
- Labour
 - Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, government attitude towards provisions, qu, 1135, 1238
- National Parole Board
 - Appointment of members, qu, 1500, 1672, 1718
 - Parole provisions, administration, government policy, qu, 1669
- National Revenue
 - Abandonment of Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, qu, 353, 375
- Old age security
 - De-indexation of pensions
 - Position of Canadian Petroleum Association, qu, 1064
 - Presentation of petitions, 1035, 1062, 1103, 1130, 1166
- Parole
 - Release of dangerous inmates, qu, 2838
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2747, 2791, 2793, 2805, 2840
 - Amendment, 2813
 - Commons disagreement with Senate amendment, 2840
 - Earned remission, 2795, 2843
 - Federal Court of Canada, decision citation, 2798
 - Freedom of the individual, 2798
 - Gating, 2797, 2806
 - Howard vs Stoney Mountain Penitentiary*, 2846
 - Laskin, Chief Justice Bora, quote, 2796
 - "Mandatory Supervision: A Discussion Paper", 2797
 - Number of mentally ill and dangerous inmates, 2842
 - Parole Board credibility, 2807
 - Parole Board decision statistics, 2844
 - Public safety, 2794, 2805
 - Regional representation on Parole Board, 2812
- Parole and related Statutes bill C-68, 2749, 2801, 2825
- Penitentiaries
 - Canada-Alberta agreement and memorandum of intent
 - Effect on employees, qu, 1852, 1988
 - Request for tabling, 1849, 1927
 - Conditions, government study, qu, 1836
 - Stoney Mountain, construction of doghouse, qu, 1869, 1988
- Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax bill C-82, 1913, 1928
 - Canadianization, 1929
 - Multinational promises, 1929
 - Security of supply, 1929
- Petroleum Incentives Program bill C-85, 2225
 - Canadianization, 2226
 - Commitments, 2226
 - Frontier exploration, 2225
- Senate
 - Question Period
 - Request for answers, 381
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - They Served - We Care*, authority to review, 233

Hatfield, Hon. Richard B.

- Tribute on 25th anniversary of election to New Brunswick legislature, 2665

Hatfield, Hon. Richard B., fifteenth anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1449, 1663, 1706, 1996, 2012

- Division of communities, 1708
- Language equality, 1663
- Patriation, 1663
- Room for improvement, 1708

Hatfield, Hon. Richard B., fifteenth anniversary of becoming Premier—Cont'd

- Trust fund establishing financing of French language newspaper, 2013

Speakers: Senators

- Corbin, Eymard, G., 1706, 1996
- Simard, Jean-Maurice, 1663, 2013

Hays, Hon. Daniel Phillip (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

- Agriculture
 - Western Canada, drought conditions, government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1461
- Canada-United States relations
 - Bilateral trade negotiations
 - Agriculture, consultations with Canadian producers, qu, 2364, 2472
 - Canadian hog production, United States import duty, qu, 738
- Canada's cultural industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1604
 - Broadcasting, 1604
 - Culture, definition, 1604
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - Effect of budget reductions, qu, 1479
- Funding, government policy, qu, 318
- Independence, government policy, qu, 99, 318
- Mandate, parliamentary committee study, qu, 318
- Canadian National Railways
 - Board of directors, replacement of chairman, qu, 780
- Canadian Wheat Board
 - Sprouted wheat, presentation of petitions for direct emergency open quota, 1405
- Customs and Customs Tariff bill C-9, 284
 - General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, 284
- Energy
 - Higher cost producers, minister's statement, request for clarification, qu, 2119
 - Oil and gas industry, application of tax incentives, qu, 2119
 - Government policy, qu, 2383
 - Oil and gas pricing, government policy, qu, 2583
- Energy and Natural Resources Committee
 - 5th report, "Oil Marketing: 1986", 2741
- Government of Canada
 - Agricultural programs, composition of task force, qu, 524
- Reform of Parliament, proposed joint committee, qu, 213
- Youth Committee
 - 2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2399

Health

- Communicable diseases, Canada's participation in world immunization program, 2036

Health and Welfare

- Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, 284, 500
 - Government action, 1233, 1434
- Canada-Belgium social security agreement, delay in tabling, 483, 680
- Consumption of alcohol, "A little of what you fancy...", 1312
- Fitness of meat for Canadian consumption, 1653, 2039
- Guaranteed Income Supplement, 502
- Hazardous products, government policy, 1309
- Health services, universality, government policy, 350, 373, 500
- Palliative care, use of heroin, government policy, 258
- Social assistance programs
 - Suggested review, 706

Health and Welfare—Cont'dSocial assistance programs—Cont'd

- Universality, government policy, 2037, 2049
- Social benefits, issuance of discussion paper, 236

Health and Welfare, "Guaranteed Annual Income—born again", 1295Health, ill effects of smoking, 462, 474, 728, 766, 799, 1935, 1979

- Advertising and sales promotion of cigarettes, 475
- Contradictory government programs re use of tobacco, 1980
- Cost of smoking to employer and taxpayer, 475, 1979
- Injurious effects on smoker, 767
- Recommendations for implementation on Parliament Hill, 475
- Request to Prime Minister and Treasury Board re non-smoking areas, 1981
- Second-hand smoke, 475, 767
- "Tips to help smokers butt-out", Ann Landers, quote, 1982
- Voluntary restraint by the Senate, 729
- Wilson, Peter, 728

Speakers: Senators

- Bosa, Peter, 474, 1981
- Frith, Royce, 728
- Godfrey, John M., 768
- Haidasz, Stanley, 1979
- Macquarrie, Heath, 766

Hébert, Hon. Jacques

Canada's cultural industries

- Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1590
- "Battle of the book", 1592
- Gulf and Western's acquisition of Canadian companies, 1595
- Investment Canada Act, 1594
- Literary and intellectual heritage, 1594
- Patriation policy, 1596

Canada-United States relations

- Trade, imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, qu, 2561, 2562

Hunger strike, 2211

Speaker's statement, 2245

Katimavik participants, visit, 316

India, General Malhotra, Director General of National Cadet Corps, visit, 497

Quebec National Assembly, parliamentary interns, visit, 504

Youth

- Abolition of Katimavik, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1918
- Motion withdrawn, 1920

Katimavik, cancellation of program, government policy, 2132

Youth Committee

- Appointment, 96, 204
- Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 777, 1467
- Authority to publish and distribute report, 1985
- Order of reference, amendment, 1169, 1430, 1468
- Reports

- 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 279

See Journals of the Senate

- 2nd, "Youth: a plan of action", 2045, 2147

"Herbicide Pricing"

- See Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
- "Soil at Risk, Canada's Eroding Future"

Hicks, Hon. Henry D.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 109

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Proceedings, authority to televise, 1490

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 732

Canada-Greece relations, 1788

Canadian Arsenal Limited Divestiture Authorization bill C-87, 2396, 2405

Export of armaments, 2396

Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, 1564

Enhancement of pimp's control, 1565

Customs Tariff bill C-71, 1329

Customs Tariff bill C-111, 2728

Deficit, 110

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C., tributes on resignation from the Senate, 1833

Duties Relief bill C-98, 2656

Simplification of existing law, 2656

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, 2066

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2707

Cash transfer payments reductions, 2708

"No strings" transfers, 2708

Research and development constraints, 2708

Fisheries Committee

Authority to publish and distribute report on marketing of fish in Canada, 2675

Fisheries and Oceans

Resignation of minister, tribute, 1266

Foreign affairs

Nicaragua, absence of Canadian observers from election, qu, 223, 382

Foreign Affairs Committee

Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa, authority to study, 366

International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation, authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington D.C. to study, 2236

Report

2nd, Canada's relations with countries of Middle East and North Africa, 1412

Income Tax Conventions bill S-6, 1697

Ratification, 1697

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee

Senate estimates for 1986-87, 1711

International Centre for Ocean Development bill C-22, 609

Board of directors, replacement of members, qu, 793

Financial support, 610

International Ocean Institute at Malta, 610

Programs, 610

International terrorism

Motion for appointment of special Senate committee, 1937, 1948

Cost, 1937

Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, 1748

National Defence

Canadian forces, future role, qu, 257, 429

National Finance Committee

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to report, 578

Report

16th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/87, 2589

National Postal Museum

Advisory committee, 2363, 2410

Membership, qu, 2700

Order for return, qu, 2571, 2653

Parliament buildings

- Hicks, Hon. Henry D.—Cont'd
 Parliament buildings—Cont'd
 Centre block, removal of photographs of British Prime Ministers, 1383, 1435, 1489, 1933
 Westminster heritage, 1933
 Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2820
 Senate amendments, precedents, 2820
 Pine Hill Divinity Hall bill S-7, 1733, 1781, 1863
 History, 1782
 Pornography, 111
 Remembrance Day, 1485
 Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1781
 Research and development, 110
 Rowe, Hon. Frederick W.
 "The Smallwood Era", felicitations on publication, 445
 Senate
 Adjournment, 1371, 1705
 Business, 1676
 Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1688
 Question Period
 Request for answers, 356
 Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 4th report, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1482
 Strategic Defense Initiative, government attitude, 1270
 Scientific and technical spin-off, 1270
 Star Wars, 1270
 Umbrella, 1270
 "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2398
 Transport
 VIA Rail, resumption of "Atlantic Limited" service, 726
 Universality of social programs, 110
 World War II, 40th anniversary of cessation of hostilities in Europe, 865
- Hollet, Hon. Malcolm Mercer
 Tributes on death, 1321
- House of Commons
 Alleged remarks by Conservative M.P., 2112
 Government attitude, 2133
 Disparaging remarks by Conservative M.P., 2308
 Placement of former members' staffs, 408
- House of Commons (Bill C-63)
 Committee on Internal Economy, 1213
Speakers: Senators
 MacEachen, Allan J., 1215
 Phillips, Orville H., 1213
 Turner, Charles, 1214
- House of Commons bill C-63. 1r, 1213; 2r, 1213; 3r, 1216; r.a., 1217
- Human rights
 Afghanistan and Iran, United Nations resolutions, Canada's position, 1716 1739
 Berne meeting, absence of senators from membership of observer group, 2349, 2412
 Discriminatory hiring practices against visible minorities, 425
 Discriminatory hiring practices, government policy, 2095
 Fate of Polish refugee, 2349
 Japanese-Canadians, government apology and compensation, 27, 240, 673, 790, 1657, 1835, 2364, 2789
 Government policy, 1905
 Meeting of experts, 729
- Human rights—Cont'd
 Meeting of experts—Cont'd
 Suggested participation by Canadian parliamentarians, 856, 868
 Primate of Poland, expression of sympathy, 96, 203
 Saskatchewan, passage of Bill 144 imposing settlement on government employees, 1972, 2103
- Human rights and fundamental freedoms
 Standing Senate committee, appointment, 2084
- Human rights, meeting of experts, desirability of Senate participation, 397, 487, 513, 639
Speakers: Senators
 Haidasz, Stanley, 487
 Yuzyk, Paul, 513
- Hungary
 "Hungarians in Canada," history
 See appendix p. 2593
 Nagy, His Excellency Lajos, Ambassador, visit, 2581
- Immigration
 Entry of Soviet Jews, government action, 2469, 2470
 Entry of Soviet refugees, government policy, 43, 58, 241, 411
 Proposed reduction in quotas, 78
 Qualifications for entry, 97
 Refugee determination, government policy, 2285, 2468
- Immigration, 1976
 Case backlog, 2105, 2182
 Foreign medical graduates, 2183
 Hockey players, preferential treatment, 2184
 Immigration Appeal Board, 2105
 Immigration policy, 2106
 "Investor" category, 2183
 Larger legislative reforms promised, 2184
 Multiculturalism, 2106, 2138, 2181
 Plaut, Rabbi Gunther, "Refugee Determination", report, 2104, 2182
 Refugee appeal process, 2104
 Refugee-status determination, 2104
 Temporary measures, 2138, 2182
Speakers: Senators
 Barootes, Efstathios, 2104, 2185
 Bosa, Peter, 2105, 2137, 2185
 Haidasz, Stanley, 2181
- Immigration, 1976 C-55. 1r, 2083; 2r, 2104; ref to com, 2107; rep without amdt, 2122; 3r, 2137, 2181; r.a., 2258
- Income tax and related statutes
 Capital gains exemption, 1872, 1888
 Child Tax Credit, 1889
 Child Tax Exemption, 1889
 Response to Cape Breton Advisory Committee, 1872
 Restrictions on investment tax credits, 1872
 Retroactivity provision, 1890, 1892
 Small business investment measures, 1889, 1892
Speakers: Senators
 Godfrey, John M., 1888
 MacDonald, Finlay, 1873
 Murray, Lowell, 1891

Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84. 1r, 1849; 2r, 1871, 1888; ref to com, 1892; rep without amdt, 1938; availability of committee proceedings, 1952, 1975; 3r, 1989; r.a., 2031

Income tax and Tax Court of Canada

Amounts in dispute, 1357
Safeguards, 1357
Technical amendments, 1356
Speakers: Senators
Barrow, A. Irvine, 1366
Nurgitz, Nathan, 1356

Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada bill C-72. 1r, 1284; 2r, 1356, 1366; ref to com, 1366; rep without amdt, 1398; 3r, 1398; r.a., 1414

Income tax (Bill C-7)

Administration of tax system, 265
Advance rulings, 324
Farmers, 265
Filing notice of objection to assessment, 324
Security for taxes in dispute, 324
Small business tax simplification, 265
Taxation of charities, 265
Speakers: Senators
Flynn, Jacques, 265, 324
Kolber, Leo E., 324

Income Tax bill C-7. 1r, 236; 2r, 265, 324; ref to com, 324; rep without amdt, 396; 3r, 398; r.a., 403

Income tax (Bill C-109)

Retroactivity, 2558
Scientific Research Tax Credit program, 2557, 2564
Transitional relief provisions, 2558
Speakers: Senators
Barrow, A. Irvine, 2564
Simard, Jean-Maurice, 2557

Income Tax bill C-109. 1r, 2529; 2r, 2557, 2564; 3r, 2573; r.a., 2623

Income tax conventions (Bill S-3)

Dividends, 484
Interest paid by a resident of one country to a resident of another, 484
Royalties, 484
Speakers: Senators
Kelly, William M., 484
Leblanc, Fernand-E., 511

Income Tax Conventions bill S-3. 1r, 478; 2r, 484, 511; ref to com, 511; rep without amdt, 624; 3r, 624; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 1035; r.a., 1101

Income tax conventions (Bill S-6)

Capital gains, non-discrimination, pensions and double taxation relief, 1672
Rate of withholding tax on dividends, 1672
Ratification, 1697
Uniformity, 1698
Speakers: Senators
Doody, C. William, 1672, 1698
Hicks, Henry D., 1697

Income Tax Conventions bill S-6. 1r, 1648; 2r, 1672, 1697; 3r, 1705; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 1880; r.a., 2031

Income tax conventions interpretation

Immovable property, 358
Non-residents who carry on business through a permanent establishment, 458
Real property, 358
Speakers: Senators
Godfrey, John M., 358
Murray, Lowell, 357

Income Tax Conventions Interpretation bill C-10. 1r, 332; 2r, 357; 3r, 384; r.a., 403

India

See Aviation disasters
Foreign affairs
Visitors

Indian Act

Reinstatement of Indian women to membership of Indian bands, 525, 1836
Status of women, removal of discriminatory provisions, 262, 376, 380, 537, 870

Indian affairs

Adoption of Indian children, 742

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Departmental staff reductions, government policy, 1322
Frog Lake Indian Nation, self-government proposals, 2652

Indian (Bill C-31)

Band control of membership, 1039, 1140
Broadening of access to Indian status and band membership, 1041
Communication and implementation program, 1138
Discouragement in native youth, 1045
Effect on children, 1141
Enfranchisement, 1038, 1137
Financial assistance to bands, 1044, 1138
High impact bands, 1041
Indian women, 1141
Referral to Supreme Court, 1138
Regulation of use of intoxicants on reserves, 1040
Restoration of rights, 1039
Self-government, 1046
Sexual discrimination, 1038, 1136
Spending cutbacks on Indian programs, 1138
Strains on current infrastructure on reserves, 1138
Speakers: Senators
Adams, Willie, 1140
Argue, Hazen, 1142
Corbin, Eymard, 1141
Fairbairn, Joyce, 1042, 1137
Marchand, Len, 1045, 1139
Neiman, Joan, 1142
Nurgitz, Nathan, 1038, 1142
Watt, Charlie, 1136

Indian bill C-31. 1r, 1012; 2r, 1038; ref to com, 1048; rep without amdt, 1106; 3r, 1136; r.a., 1217

Indonesia

See Visitors

Industrial Development Division, 199

Industry

- Aerospace, allocation of service contracts, 2051, 2068
- Armaments, possible manufacture and export by West German company from proposed Canadian factory, 2038
- Canadian Porcelain Company, offer to purchase by employee co-operative, 952
 - Government attitude, 989
- Co-op Implements, proposed relocation from Winnipeg to Regina, 530, 899
- Cornwall, establishment of American plant, 523, 524, 530, 712
- Footwear, importation quotas, government policy, 1362
- Layoffs at Calgary and Regina IPSCO plants, government action, 2119
- New Brunswick, closure of Star-Kist plant, government action, 1393
 - Request for answer, 1400
- Petro-chemical feedstocks, cost, 45
- Railways, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Transcona shops and east yards, 935, 954
- St. Thomas, Ontario, foundry, possible closing, 2307
- Shipbuilding, government policy, 2111, 2679
- VIA Rail maintenance centre location, 538, 713
- Yukon, Cyprus Anvil Mine
 - Closing, 927
 - Re-opening of mine, status of negotiations, 1392

Information Commissioner

- Report tabled, 2838
- Special report tabled, 2083

Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie (deceased May 31/86)

- Tributes, 2526

Inquiries, calling the attention of the Senate to matters of national and international interest

- Aging, justice for the elderly, 370, 976, 1442
- Auditor General, report for fiscal year ending Mar. 31/85, 1480
- Budget, impact on senior citizens, 965, 991, 1051, 1079, 1244
- Budget, proposals, 2140, 2298, 2371
- Cabinet, access to information, 220, 254, 268, 287, 306
- Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association, meeting in Italy, 2363
- Canada-Greece relations, 1787
- Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-fifth meeting, Puerto Rico, 113, 225, 2275
- Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-seventh meeting at Tucson, Arizona, 2616
- Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-sixth meeting, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, 929, 1327, 1358
- Canada-United States relations, free trade, 1362
- Censorship, nature and danger, 1322, 1368
- Christmas, bureaucratic and political comments, 296, 405, 440
- Economic and social policies, government statements, 370, 388, 1060
- End of Decade Women's Conference, Nairobi, Kenya, 1251, 1272
- Federal-provincial relations, First Ministers' Conference, Regina, Feb. 14-15, 1985, failures and shortcomings, 535, 888, 939
- Finance, Italian and Newfoundland electors, comments of minister, 347, 444

Inquiries

- Foreign affairs, gift of war planes to Turkey, 347, 441
- Foreign affairs, visit of Canadian parliamentary delegation to Federal Republic of Germany, 965, 1157, 1727
- Greece
 - National Day of Greece, 646, 720
- Greek Independence Day, 2215
- Hatfield, Hon. Richard B., fifteenth anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1449, 1663, 1706, 1996, 2012
- Health and welfare, "Guaranteed Annual Income—born again", 1295
- Health, ill effects of smoking, 462, 474, 728, 766, 799, 1935, 1979
- Human rights, meeting of experts, desirability of Senate participation, 397, 487, 513, 639
- International terrorism
 - Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, expressions of outrage and condolences, 1503 1531
- Inter-Parliamentary Conference on the Environment, Nairobi, Kenya, 333, 514
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fifth Annual Conference, Mexico City, 2445, 2479
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fourth Annual Conference, 1106, 1184
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fourth Annual Conference, Ottawa and Spring Conference, Lomé, Togo, 1480, 1529, 1837
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Sixth Conference on European Co-operation and Security at Bonn, West Germany, 2665, 2774
- Lévesque, Hon. René, contribution to national life, 1295, 1330
- McBride, Captain Ronald G., unveiling of memorial sculpture and visit of industrial mission from Friuli, Italy, 1649, 1700
- National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 1221, 1247, 1261, 1269, 1291, 1305, 1315, 1358, 2261, 2291, 2317, 2330, 2350, 2367, 2398, 2408, 2437, 2452, 2473, 2514
- National Soil Conservation Week, 738, 777, 808
- Parliament Buildings, Centre Block, removal of portraits of British Prime Ministers, 1468, 1489, 1527, 1933
- Parliamentary Affairs Commission of the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians, meeting in Brazil, 2489, 2592
- Research and development, support and government policy, 804, 824, 1293, 1366
- Riel, Louis, 100th anniversary of hanging, 1430, 1486
- Rights and freedoms, Canadian forces, spouses of members, 1386, 2014
- Senate, office of Speaker, 26, 270, 324, 783, 883, 900, 904
- Strategic Defense Initiative, 1221, 1262, 1270, 1282
- The Economy and the Budget, 1106, 1188
- Trudeau, Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott, P.C., record of administration, 1221, 1401
- Unemployment, method of combatting, 657, 698
- "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2045, 2147, 2164, 2231, 2256, 2259, 2294, 2333, 2369, 2399, 2590, 2620, 2688

Insurance

- Bankruptcy of insurance companies, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, 2465, 2537
- Bankruptcy of Northumberland General Insurance Company, compensation of insured victims, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce committee, 2552

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Standing Senate Committee

- Notice of meeting, 492, 1403

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Standing Senate Committee—Cont'd

Parliamentary employment and staff relations, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-45 prior to receipt of legislation, 924, 940

Postponement of meeting, 1087

Reports

Estimates for financial year 1986-87, tabled, 1696

Consideration, 1708, 1721, 1751

OASIS, 1709

Research assistance, 1752

Victoria building, 1710

Motion to ref to com, 1725

Negated, 1758

1st, "Soil at Risk", printing of additional copies, 419

2nd, 3rd and 4th tabled, 494

5th, tabled, 688

6th, 7th, 8th and 9th tabled, 736

7th, revised, tabled, 779

10th, 11th and 12th tabled, 1012

13th, tabled, 1169

14th, 15th, 16th and 17th tabled, 1276

18th, tabled, 1406

19th, tabled, 1534

20th and 21st, tabled, 1735

22nd, 23rd and 24th, tabled, 1999

24th (revised), tabled, 2032

25th, tabled, 2160

26th and 27th, tabled, 2302, 2361

28th and 29th, tabled, 2363, 2575, 2576

30th, tabled, 2403, 2402

31st to 40th, tabled, 2559, 2574

41st, 2787

See Journals of the Senate

Schedule of authorized salary revisions tabled, 769, 2093

International Centre for Ocean Development

Board of directors, replacement of members, 793

Financial support, 610

International Ocean Institute at Malta, 610

Law of the Sea Conference, 611

Programs, 589, 610

Wasting of sea products, 589

Speakers: Senators

Hicks, Henry D., 609

LeBlanc, Roméo, 610

Macquarrie, Heath, 558, 611

International Centre for Ocean Development bill C-22. 1r, 528; 2r, 588, 609; 3r, 618; r.a., 621

International Financial System and Institutions

See Foreign Affairs Committee

International relations

Proposed parliamentary committee, 215

International terrorism

Motion for appointment of special Senate committee, 1887, 1935, 1948, 1991, 2126

Adequacy of existing policy, 2127

Canadian Security Intelligence Service, 2127

Motion withdrawn, 2374

RCMP, 2127

Reservations, 1991

International terrorism—Cont'd

Motion for appointment of special Senate committee—Cont'd

Solicitor General, quote, 2128

Special emergency response team, 2128

Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, 1497, 1717

Seizure of Italian Cruise ship, request for information, 1355, 1363

Training sites, 1109

International terrorism, seizure of Egyptian aircraft, 1497

Expression of outrage, expression of condolences, 1503, 1531

Air safety in Canada, 1532

Murder, 1532

Speakers: Senators

Doody, C. William, 1532

Frith, Royce, 1532

Haidasz, Stanley, 1532

Olson, H.A., 1531

International trade

European Economic Community

Beef imports from, 983

Proposed export of agricultural products to Canada, 987

Exportation of grain to People's Republic of China, 78, 242

Footwear, removal of import quotas, 1518, 1519, 1718

Japanese automobiles, importation, government action, 982

Inter-Parliamentary Conference on the Environment, Nairobi, Kenya, 333, 514

Canadian participation, 116

See appendix p. 517

Speaker: Senator

Olson, H.A., 514

Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fifth Annual Conference, Mexico City, 2479

Contadora process, 2481

Contributions of parliaments, 2481

Role of science and technology in economic development, 2481

Terrorism, 2481

Speaker: Senator

Bosa, Peter, 2479

Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fourth Annual Conference, 1184

History of union, 1184

Speaker: Senator

Bosa, Peter, 1184

Inter-Parliamentary Union, Seventy-Fourth Annual Conference, Ottawa and Spring Conference, Lomé, Togo, 1480, 1529, 1837

Africa and other world problems, 1529

Canada-Iran relations, 1840

Democratic rights and freedoms, 1839

Disarmament, 1530

Drug traffic and youth, 1530

National Resistance Council of Iran representatives, statement, 1837

RCMP actions, 1838

Speakers: Senators

Bosa, Peter, 1529

Corbin, Eymard G., 1837

Inter-Parliamentary Union, Sixth Conference on European Co-operation and Security, at Bonn West Germany, 2774

- Human rights issues, 2775
- Nuclear energy and states' duty, 2775
- Speaker : Senator
- Bosa, Peter, 2774

Interprovincial trade

- Barriers, 1392

Inuit

- Status, government policy, 262, 411

Investment Canada

- Foreign investment
 - Government policy, 316, 317, 319, 431
 - Terminology, 352
- United Auto Workers Union, proposed independence of Canadian section, 317

Investment Canada (Bill C-15)

- Branch plant, 1024
- Canada's bargaining position, 1027
- Canada's cultural heritage and national identity, 1031, 1069
- Canadian Football League, 1070
- Economic nationalism, 1025
- Encouraging Canadians to invest in Canada, 1054
- Film industry, 1070
- Foreign investment, 1024, 1068
- Foreign investment control over Canadian industries, 1026
- Foreign Investment Review Agency, 997, 1025, 1052, 1068
- Foreign participation in our economy, 997
- Fossil fuel, 1055
- Limitation on foreign investment, 1024
- Ministerial decision-making authority, 1032, 1053, 1070
- Tax treatment of corporations, 1054
- Unemployment, 997, 1025, 1055, 1068
- Speakers: Senators
 - Barootes, Efstathios William, 1054
 - Davey, Keith, 1067
 - Doody, C. William, 1028
 - Doyle, Richard J., 1032
 - Godfrey, John M., 1052
 - Graham, B. Alasdair, 1030
 - Kelly, William M., 997, 1070
 - Sinclair, Ian, 1024

Investment Canada bill C-15. 1r, 964; 2r, 997, 1024, 1052, 1067; 3r, 1093; r.a., 1101

Iran

- See* Foreign affairs

Jalbert, René M., Esq.

- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, appointment, 1220

Japan, 85

- Nakasone, His Excellency Yasuhiro, Prime Minister, address to both houses, 1833
- See* appendix p. 1843

Judges and related acts

- Judicial salary adjustments, 2741
- P.E.I. and Newfoundland courts reorganization, 2740

Judges and related acts—Cont'd

- Speakers: Senators
 - Lewis, P. Derek, 2740
 - Nurgitz, Nathan, 2740

Judges and related Acts bill C-128. 1r, 2739; 2r, 2739; ref to com, 2741; rep without amdt, 2768; 3r, 2768; r.a., 2783

Judges (Bill C-61)

- Speakers: Senators
 - Doody, C. William, 1212
 - Neiman, Joan, 1213

Judges bill C-61. 1r, 1212; 2r, 1212; 3r, 1213; r.a., 1217

June 24 celebrations

- Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, anniversary of landing of Giovanni Caboto, 1092

Justice

- Canada Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals
 - Cost and scope, 1921, 2102
 - Extension of mandate and cost, 2507
 - Extension of time, budget, 1654
 - Government action, 1377
 - Scope of inquiry, 1323
- Capital punishment, government policy, 238, 411, 740
- Quebec, appeal of speeding conviction, decision of minister, 282, 336, 430, 432
- Unlicensed cable television operators, stay of prosecutions, 221
- Zundel, Ernst, conviction, 725

Katimavik

- Abolition, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1918
- Motion withdrawn, 1920
- Cancellation of program, 1921
- Government policy, 2131
- Participants, visit, 316

Kelleher, Hon. James P.C., Solicitor General of Canada

- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2802

Kelly, Hon. William M.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 87
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Committee proceedings, televising, 1449, 1490
- Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1543, 1659, 1660, 1741
 - Adversary system, 1659
 - Definition of "associate", 1741
 - Rights issue, 1544
 - Transitional measures, 1545
- Canadian Arsenalns Limited Divestiture Authorization bill C-87, 2394, 2405
 - Consolidated Revenue Fund, 2406
 - Progress of transaction, 2394
 - Reciprocal Pension Transfer Agreement, 2395
- Crown corporations, 88
- Crown Corporations Dissolution bill C-60, 1239
 - Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd., 1239
 - St. Anthony Fisheries Limited, 1239
 - Societa a responsibilita limitata Immobiliare San Sebastiano, 1240
 - Uranium Canada, Ltd., 1240

Kelly, Hon. William M.—Cont'd

- Customs Tariff bill C-71, 1299, 1355
 - Goods made/not made in Canada, 1299
 - Motor vehicles, 1299
- Deficit, 88
- Federal-provincial relations, 88
- Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1810, 1820
 - Confidentiality, 1812
- "Off-set" arrangement, 1811
- Income Tax Conventions bill S-3, 484, 624
 - Dividends, 484
 - Interest paid by a resident of one country to a resident of another, 484
 - Royalties, 484
- International terrorism, motion to appoint Special Senate Committee, 1887, 1935
 - Adequate security, 1936
 - Cost, 1937
 - Motion withdrawn, 2374
 - Problem of definition, 1936
- Investment Canada bill C-15, 997, 1070
 - Foreign Investment Review Agency, 997
 - Foreign participation in our economy, 997
 - Ministerial decision-making authority, 1070
 - Unemployment, 997, 1071
- National Energy Program, 88
- National Finance Committee
 - Reports
 - 10th, estimates year ending Mar 31/86, supplementary (B), 1573, 1719
 - See appendix p. 1646
 - 12th, Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1713
 - 13th, Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, rep without amdt but with observations and recommendation, 2065
 - 16th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/87, 2540
- Oil Substitution and Conservation and Canadian Home Insulation Program bill C-24, 1123
 - Alternative energy options, 1124
 - Conservation, 1123
- Senate
 - Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, 2213
- Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payment 1982-87 bill C-39, 1121
 - Floor provisions, 1121
- Terrorism
 - Motion for appointment of Special Senate Committee, 2363, 2421, 2540

Kenny, Hon. Colin (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

Kirby, Hon. Michael

- Advertising
 - Source of funds for material in magazine, qu, 1111
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - 13th report, financial institutions depositors' compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, 1770
- Canada-United States relations
 - Trade, new approaches, government policy, qu, 259
- Economy
 - Taxation and unemployment, government policy, qu, 212
- Energy
 - Canadianization, government policy, qu, 296
- Federal-provincial fiscal relations
 - Equalization payments, qu, 211

Kirby, Hon. Michael—Cont'd

- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 581
- Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments, 1982-87 bill C-39, 1122
 - Alberta, 1122
 - Calculating the average, 1122
 - Government financial and fiscal priorities, 1123
 - Ontario, 1122
 - Transition provision, 1122

Kolber, Hon. Leo E.

- Banking
 - Green paper on regulation of financial institutions
 - Suggested withdrawal, qu, 1312
- Economy
 - Interest rates, government policy, qu, 257, 429
- Health and Welfare
 - Consumption of alcohol, "A little of what you fancy...", qu, 1312
- Income Tax bill C-7, 324
 - Advance rulings, 324
 - Filing notice of objection to assessment, 324
 - Security for taxes in dispute, 324
- Sheiner, Dr. and Mrs. Norman and Dr. and Mrs. Morrie Gelfand, visit, 831

Korea

See Visitors

Labour

- Canada-United States free trade, prospective agreement, possible effects on employment, 2035
- Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, government attitude towards provisions, 1135, 1238

Lafond, Hon. Paul C.

- Aviation disaster, Gander, Newfoundland, 1705
- Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 731
- Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C., tributes on resignation from the Senate, 1833
- External Affairs
 - Passports, issuance at Hull, 851
- National Defence
 - Canadian Forces, increase in contingent in western Europe, effect on establishment, qu, 651, 972
- National Defence Committee
 - Appointment, 26, 71, 203
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 236
 - 2nd, "Canada's Territorial Air Defence", 445
 - 3rd, "Military Air Transport", 2456
- Status of white paper, qu, 2203
- Remembrance Day, 1485
- Rights and freedoms
 - Canadian forces, spouses of members, committee action, 2411
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - 3rd report, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1243

La Forest, Hon. Gérard V.J., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

Royal Assent, 950, 1217, 1712, 2258, 2361, 2783

Lajoie, Claude, Esq.

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, appointment, 1

Lamer, Hon. Antonio, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

Royal Assent, 616, 621, 1100, 1830, 2031, 2857

Lang, Daniel A.

Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada bill C-72, 1358

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", motion to refer back to Committee, 2473

Parliament

Review of commission to review salaries of members of Parliament and senators, definition of "members of Parliament" and "salaries", question of privilege, 921

Reform of the Senate

Commons resolution, consideration by the Senate, qu, 867

Senate

Proceedings, authority to broadcast, 906

Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2432

Langlois, Hon. Léopold

Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 bill S-4, 955

Canadian Oxygen Limited and BOC Inc., 955

Insurance

Bankruptcy of insurance companies, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, qu, 2465, 2537

Bankruptcy of Northumberland General Insurance Company, compensation of insured victims, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, qu, 2552

Remembrance Day, 12Senate*Official report

Correction of translation, 1128

Telephone service, qu, 539

Transport and Communications CommitteeReports

1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 296

See Journals of the Senate

2nd, aeronautics (Bill C-36), 1089

3rd, western grain transportation (Bill C-44), 1089

4th, Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, 1168, 1577

See appendix p. 1218

5th, Northern Transportation Company Limited (Bill C-53), 1168

6th, transportation of dangerous goods, rep on subject matter, 2045, 2441

Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, authority to study, 519

Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, P.C.

Acting Speaker, 743

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1639

Freedom to be different, 1640

Law Reform Commission

Bigamy and polygamy, treatment, 1255

Lawson, Hon. Edward M.Economy

National conference, suggested follow-up, qu, 694

Lawson, Hon. Edward M.—Cont'dTransport

CN Route, possible sale, government action, qu, 2305, 2390, 2586

Leblanc, Hon. Fernand-E.

Borrowing Authority, 1986-87 bill C-99, 2291

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, 2008

Income Tax Conventions bill S-3, 511

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

19th report, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2020

National Finance Committee

Budgetary deficits, authority to study, 347, 395, 639

Post-secondary education and training, authority to study government activities, 1251, 1274, 1276, 1293

Reports

1st, expenses incurred in 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 207

See Journals of the Senate

2nd, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, supplementary (B), 279

See appendix p. 293

3rd, Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11, 618

4th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, supplementary (C), 666, 696

See appendix p. 684

5th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, 951, 975

See appendix p. 960

6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 964, 1000

See appendix p. 980

7th, supplementary fiscal equalization payments (Bill C-39), 1088

8th, borrowing authority (Bill C-51), 1088

9th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1405

See appendix p. 1416

14th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (C), 2174, 2208

See appendix p. 2187

16th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/87, 2501

See appendix p. 2522

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

Audio recording and broadcasting proceedings of Senate committees, request to study, 624, 653

Report

2nd, invitation to provinces to appear before Senate committees, 956

LeBlanc, Hon. Roméo, P.C. (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, alleged wrongdoing in inspection process, suggested prosecution, qu, 1382

Fisheries

West German fleet, overfishing in waters under Canadian jurisdiction, qu, 836

Fisheries and Oceans

Inspection function, consultation with industry, qu, 1298

Fisheries bill C-32, 1147

Allocation of fish between competing groups, 1148

Consultation, 1148

Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-57, 1152

Foreign affairs

United States, imposition of economic sanctions against Nicaragua, qu, 840

Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 385

International Centre for Ocean Development bill C-22, 610

LeBlanc, Hon. Roméo, P.C. — Cont'd

- International Centre for Ocean Development bill C-22—Cont'd
- Law of the Sea Conference, 611
- Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization bill C-88, 2687
- Constitutional guarantee of ferry services, 2687, 2721
- National Housing Program
 - Effect of cutbacks on native population, qu, 693
- Public Works and Public Lands Grants bill C-13, 437
 - Department of Public Works, 437
- Saltfish bill C-6, 304
- Unemployment Insurance, 1971 bill C-52, 949
 - Seasonability, 949

Le Dain, Hon. Gerald E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

- Royal Assent, 756, 2410

Lefebvre, Hon. Thomas-Henri (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

- Energy
 - Oil pricing, government policy, qu, 1924, 2004
- Senate
 - Business
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1693
 - Prime Minister, comments, qu, 406

Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Standing Senate Committee

- Authority to engage services, 1251
- Authority to meet during sittings of the Senate, 1694, 1983, 2542
- Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-27 prior to receipt of legislation, 966
- Constitution 1867 and Electoral Boundaries Adjustment, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-76 prior to receipt of legislation, 1516 1547
- Criminal Code, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-18 prior to receipt of legislation, 646
- Divorce, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-46 prior to receipt of legislation, 982
- Divorce and corollary relief, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-47 prior to receipt of legislation, 982
- Family orders and agreements enforcement assistance, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-48 prior to receipt of legislation, 982
- Indian Act, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-31 prior to receipt of legislation, 646
- Parole and penitentiaries, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-67 prior to receipt of legislation, 1714
- Parole, penitentiaries, prisons and reformatories and Criminal Code, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-68 prior to receipt of legislation, 1714
- Postponement of meeting, 2175
- Reports
 - 1st, Criminal Law Amendment, 1985 bill C-18, rep without amdt, 990
 - 2nd, Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) amendment, subject matter of Bill C-27, 1105
 - 3rd, Indian bill C-31, rep without amdt, 1106
 - 4th, Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) bill C-77, rep with amdt, 1377
 - 5th Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada bill S-5, rep without amdt, 1476
 - 6th, Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, rep with amdts, 1496, 1744
 - Adoptive relationships, 1746

Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Standing Senate Committee—*Cont'dReports—*Cont'd

- 6th, Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, rep with amdts—Cont'd
 - Church opinions, 1746
 - Provincial governmental views, 1747
- 7th, divorce, subject matter of Bill C-46, 1535
- 8th, divorce and corollary relief, subject matter of Bill C-47, 1535
 - Notice of inquiry, 1535
 - Withdrawn, 1997
 - See appendix p. 1549
- 9th, family orders and agreements enforcement assistance, subject matter of Bill C-48, 1535
 - Notice of inquiry, 1535
 - Withdrawn, 1997
 - See appendix p. 1551
- 10th, Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges bill C-78, rep without amdt, 1649
- 11th, Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1733
- 12th, Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81, rep without amdts but with recommendations, 1789
- 13th, Pine Hill Divinity Hall bill S-7, rep without amdt, 1863
- 14th, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt, 1863
- 15th, penitentiary and parole, and parole, penitentiaries, prisons and reformatories and Criminal Code, subject matter of Bill C-67 and C-68, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada to study, 1920, 1948
- 16th, Divorce bill C-46, rep without amdt, 1967
- 17th, Divorce and Corollary Relief bill C-47, rep without amdt, 1968
- 18th, Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance bill C-48, rep without amdt, 1968
- 19th, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt but with comments, 2018
- 20th, Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65, rep without amdt, 2148
- 21st, parole and penitentiaries, subject matter of Bill C-67, interim report, 2473
 - See appendix p. 2484
- 22nd, parole and penitentiaries, subject matter of Bill C-67, interim report 2598
 - See appendix p. 2606
- 23rd, young offenders, Criminal Code, penitentiary, prisons and reformatories, subject matter of Bill C-106, 2665
- 24th, Employment Equity bill C-62, rep with observations and recommendations, 2676
- 25th, Judges and related Acts bill C-128, rep without amdt, 2768
- 26th, Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, rep without amdt but with comments, 2776
- Young offenders, Criminal Code, penitentiary, prisons and reformatories, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-106 prior to receipt of legislation, 2616

Le Moyne, Hon. JeanBanking, Trade and Commerce Committee

- Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 957
- Proceedings, authority to televise, 1492
- Canada-United States relations
 - Summit meeting in Quebec City, absence of Governor General, qu, 657, 671, 1174
- Trade

Le Moyne, Hon. Jean—Cont'dCanada-United States relations—*Cont'd*Trade—Cont'd

Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2567

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1632

Canadian identity, 1635

Cost of being Canadian, 1635

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

International service, possible cancellation, qu, 194

Cultural organizations

Relationship to government, qu, 222

Environment

Wildlife, effect of budgetary cuts, qu, 299

Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 1943

Industry and Humanity, Mackenzie King, quotes, 1944

Justice

Capital punishment, government policy, qu, 740

National Finance Committee

6th report, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1007

Official report

Quality of translation, question of privilege, 2362

Parliament buildings

Centre block, removal of portraits of British Prime Ministers, 1934

Prime Minister

Criticism of appointments, request for apology, qu, 660

Reform of the Senate, 626

Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada

Request for inquiry into leak, qu, 925

Request for tabling of report, 925

Senate

Question Period, request for answers, 1112

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

8th report, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2330, 2359

Social programs

Universality, government policy, qu, 338, 350

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

4th report, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1482

Lévesque, Hon. René, contribution to national life, 1295, 1330Lewis, Hon. P. Derek

Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, 1561

Adverse consequences, 1561

Fraser report, 1562

Proposed provision a breach of rights under Charter, 1563

Prostitution not defined, 1562

Stop-gap action, 1563

Wide discretionary powers for police, 1562

Judges and related Acts bill C-128, 2740

Judicial salary adjustments, 2741

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee—Cont'd

Reports

21st, parole and penitentiaries, subject matter of Bill C-67, interim report, 2473

See appendix p. 2484

22nd, parole and penitentiaries, subject matter of Bill C-67, interim report 2598

See appendix p. 2606

Lewis, Hon. P. Derek—Cont'dLegal and Constitutional Affairs Committee—*Cont'd*Reports—Cont'd

23rd, young offenders, Criminal Code, penitentiary, prisons and reformatories, subject matter of Bill C-106, 2665

24th, Employment Equity bill C-62, rep with observations and recommendations, 2676

25th, Judges and related Acts bill C-128, rep without amdt, 2768

26th, Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, rep without amdt but with comments, 2776

Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, study of subject matter by committee, 2790

Young Offenders, Criminal Code, Penitentiary, Prisons and Reformatories bill C-106, 2687

Acceptance of evidence of disturbed children, 2688

Prohibition of reporting of proceedings, 2688

Library of Parliament

Annual report of Parliamentary Librarian 1983-84, tabled, 2529

Library of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

Frequency of meetings and composition, 62

Report of Librarian tabled, 207, 1496

Libya

Canadian nationals

Evacuation, 2304

Safety, government position, 2305, 2327

Reported incidents in Tripoli, 2281

United States air strike

Consultations between Canada and United States and between Canada and western allies, 2261, 2323, 2343

Clarification of statement in official record, 2366, 2381

Consultation with allies, 2281

Government attitude, 2280

Government policy, 2270

Identification of special envoy, 2286

Legality under international law, 2281

Position of Canadian nationals, 2268

Request for answers, 2277

Lithuania

Sixty-eighth anniversary of proclamation of independence, 2032

Lucier, Hon. Paul

Aboriginal peoples

Yukon economic development program, delay in implementation, government policy, qu, 2095

Budget

Impact on firefighting personnel at airports, qu, 2112, 2223

Condominium Ordinance Validation bill C-73, 1408

Expo 86

Attendance of members of Parliament, qu, 2090

Government of Canada

Visit of Deputy Prime Minister to Yukon, use of government aircraft, qu, 896

Industry

Yukon, Cyprus Anvil Mine

Closing, qu, 927

Re-opening of mine, status of negotiations, qu, 1392

Reform of the Senate, 631

Government attitude, qu, 1233

Tax Rebate Discounting bill C-83, 1828

Child Tax Credit, 1828

Freedom of choice, 1830

Lucier, Hon. Paul—Cont'd

- Transport
- Airport tax, reported restructuring, qu, 1111, 1434

Lutheran Church in America (Canada Section) and the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada

- Presentation of petition, 1405

MacDonald, Hon. Finlay (Introduced in the Senate Jan. 22/85), 416

- Aeronautics bill C-36, 1119
- Civil aviation security, 1120
- Dubin Commission, 1119
- Medical reporting provision, 1120
- Regulatory powers, 1120
- Aging, justice for the elderly, 1442
- Referenda and plebiscites, 1443
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
- Proceedings, authority to televise, 1492
- Canada's cultural industries
- Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1627
- Competition Tribunal bill C-91, 2577, 2617, 2620
- Abuse of market power, 2578
- Bank and crown corporation mergers, 2579
- Conspiracy, 2579
- Membership, 2578
- Mergers and impact on competition, 2578
- Criminal Code bill C-49, 1538
- Fraser report, 1539
- Juvenile prostitution, 1539
- Street soliciting, 1539
- Federal-provincial relations
- First ministers' conference, Regina, February 1985, failures and shortcomings, 939
- Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84, 1871, 1892, 1989
- Availability of committee proceedings, 1953
- Capital gains exemption, 1872
- Response to Cape Breton Advisory Committee, 1872
- Restrictions on investment tax credits, 1872
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
- 6th report, Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, 1749
- National Finance Committee
- Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
- Instruction to report, 569
- Report
- 6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1005
- Parliament buildings
- Centre block, removal of portraits of British Prime Ministers, 1934
- Parliamentary secretaries
- Suggested appointment of senators, qu, 842
- Prohibited Degrees of Marriage bill S-2, 1749
- Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2073
- Senate
- Proceedings, authority to broadcast, 2374
- Cost, 2376
- Senate image, 2375
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
- National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1292
- Toronto Harbours Commissioners', 1985 bill C-76, 1911, 2012, 2112

Macdonald, Hon. John M.

- Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 732

Macdonald, Hon. John M.—Cont'd

- Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization bill C-88, 2686, 2722, 2770
- CN Marine to become crown corporation, Marine Atlantic Inc., 2687
- Constitutional guarantee of ferry services, 2687
- Terms of union, 2722
- User fees, 2723
- Remembrance Day, 11
- Senate
- Expressions of welcome and appreciation, 11
- Twenty-fifth anniversary of appointment, felicitations, 1114, 1126
- Unemployment Insurance, 1971 bill C-52, 946
- Abuses, 947
- Proposed special committee, 947
- Variable entrance requirement, 946

MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C., Leader of the Opposition
(Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

- Access to information
- Government guidelines for public servants, qu, 188, 196, 427
- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 29
- Auditor General
- Cabinet documents, access to information, qu, 320
- Aviation disasters
- Air-India aircraft loss, Tokyo Airport explosion, possible acts of terrorism, qu, 1108, 1237
- Banking
- Canadian Commercial Bank
- Collapse, qu, 1226
- Alleged existence of document indicating difficulty, qu, 1255
- Committee study, qu, 1230, 1256
- Priority of creditors, qu, 1256
- Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank
- Compensation of depositors, referral of subject matter of bill to committee, qu, 1295
- Senate study, qu, 1234
- Status of proposed joint committee, qu, 1221
- Mercantile Bank, possibility of merger, government involvement, qu, 1379
- Northland Bank, status, qu, 1256
- Benidickson, Hon. William M., the late, 416
- Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11, 459
- Deficit, 460
- Economic policy, 461
- Non-lapsing contingent, 460
- Social programs, 461
- Borrowing Authority, 1985-86 (No. 2) bill C-51, 1200
- Budget, 1201
- Deficit, 1202
- Tax burden, 1201
- Unemployment, 1203
- Borrowing Authority, 1986-87, bill C-99, 2309
- Budgetary deficits, 2309
- Dollar value, 2311
- Tax increases, 2310
- Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-30, 913
- Bonn Economic Summit, 914
- International Development Agency, 914
- International Finance Corporation, 915
- United States, 915
- World Bank, 913
- Budget
- Date of presentation, qu, 494, 509, 637, 677
- De-indexation of pension benefits
- Government position, qu, 1013

MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C.,—Cont'dBudget—*Cont'd*De-indexation of pension benefits—Cont'd

Government statement, qu, 1169

Version of budget paper sent to Canadian embassies, qu, 2149, 2272

Budget, impact on senior citizens, 993, 1086

Minister of External Affairs, statement, government position, qu, 781

Tax incentive for investment in Cape Breton, qu, 951

Tax increases, government policy, qu, 929

Canada-United States Inter-parliamentary Group

Twenty-fifth meeting, report of Canadian delegation, 2275

Canada-United States relations, 33

American countervail on Atlantic groundfish, government attitude, qu, 1853

Bilateral trade negotiations

Benefits accruing to other trading partners, qu, 2464, 2495

Canadian use of lobbyist

Canadian testimony before congressional committee or special prosecutor, government policy, qu, 2426, 2537

Cultural industries, qu, 1651

Effect on Canadian lumber industry, qu, 1853

Government policy, qu, 1535, 2267

Items for negotiation, qu, 2666

Participation of provinces, qu, 1552

Statement by Premier of Ontario, qu, 2045, 2222

Request for amplification of delayed answer, 2505

United States ambassador's comments, qu, 1308

Cultural heritage and national identity, 2769

Extraterritorial jurisdiction, qu, 648

Fish, alleged subsidization of Canadian exports, qu, 1063

Free trade arrangements, impact on employment in Canada, qu, 1518

Government policy, 243

Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting

Acid rain, government objectives, qu, 2160

Scope of agreement, 2200

Status of document, 2155, 2272

Prime Minister's speech in Chicago

"Joint tenancy" and "constructive internationalism", definition, qu, 1655

Summit meeting in Quebec City,

Absence of Governor General, qu, 657, 814

Declaration on international security, qu, 674, 814, 833, 937

Trade

Commitment to halt protectionism, qu, 2700

Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, qu, 2566, 2572, 2582

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles, qu, 2489

Compensation, qu, 2502

New approaches, government policy, qu, 62

Trans-border pollution problems, qu, 608

Mandate of special envoys, qu, 671

U.S. weapons testing in Canada, cruise mishap, qu. 1871, 2039

Canada's International Relations Committee

Reports

1st, bilateral trade with United States and Canada's participation in research on Strategic Defense Initiative, 1319, 1508

Final, "Independence and Internationalism", 2697

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1610

Trade negotiations, 1610

Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37, 747

MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C.,—Cont'dCanadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37—Cont'd

Impact on depositors and shareholders, 747

Inspector General of Banks, 747

Stability of Canadian financial institutions, 747

Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security bill C-69, 1302, 1314, 1328, 1364

Canadian information, 1303

East-West relations, 1303

International members of the board, 1304

Strategic Defense Initiative, 1304

Cape Breton

Provincial status, qu, 2790

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Appointment of president, qu, 726, 1023

Corrections

Daniel Hawe Report, motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6, for production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2339

Crown corporations

Disposal, qu, 297

Crown Corporations Dissolution Authorization bill C-60, 1260

Cultural heritage and national identity, qu, 1433

Customs Tariff bill C-38, 763

Deficit, 30

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited

Possible negotiation of sale, government position, qu, 813

Disarmament

Deployment of nuclear weapons, government policy, qu, 472, 636

Space-based defensive weapons, government policy, qu, 421

Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2078

Economic Development

Nova Scotia

Cape Breton Advisory Committee report, government action, qu, 1354

Economic Summit

Bonn, West Germany

Securing of third window, Prime Minister's statement, qu, 851

United States embargo on Nicaragua, Canadian position, qu, 852

United States interest rate policy, qu, 811

Economy, 31

Canadian dollar, value

Government action, qu, 1970, 2085

Market intervention, role of Governor of Bank of Canada, qu, 1968, 2599

Timing and extent of market intervention, qu, 1999

Fiscal outlook, updated economic projections, qu, 47

National conference, qu, 689, 710

Energy

Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Agreement, 335

East coast exploration, replacement of petroleum incentive grants, government policy, 1363

Oil pricing

Government policy, qu, 1868

Effect on Hibernia development, qu, 1852

Petroleum Incentive Program, reduction in grants, 60

Estimates

Date of tabling, qu, 494, 535, 542

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, 2055

Assessment provisions inequities for Revenue Canada and taxpayer, 2057

Closure, 2056

Consultative process, 2056

Energy conservation and prefabricated construction goods tax, 2057

Frazee, Rowland, comments, 2059

Expressions of welcome and appreciation, 10

MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C.,—Cont'd

- External Affairs
 - Ambassador to Ireland, appointment
 - Alleged partisanship of appointee, qu, 1940, 2102
 - Application of code of conduct, qu, 2163
 - Clarke, Mr, Victor, Special Adviser to Canadian High Commission in London, appointment, qu, 1670
 - Visit by minister to U.S.S.R., qu, 792
- Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 2175
 - Child tax credit, 2177
 - Child tax exemption, 2176
 - De-indexation, 2176
 - Federal sales tax, 2176
 - Minister of National Health and Welfare, quotes, 2176
 - National Council of Welfare, 2177
 - Prime Minister, quotes, 2175
- Finance
 - Deputy Minister, meetings, government policy, qu, 1500
 - Ministerial aide, payment, qu, 782
 - Protection of bondholders against inflation, reported statement by minister, qu, 969
- Fisheries
 - West German fleet, overfishing in waters under Canadian jurisdiction, qu, 835, 870
- Fisheries and oceans
 - Fishing vessel support program, cancellation, qu, 1986
- Fisheries Committee
 - Authority to publish and distribute report on marketing of fish in Canada, 2674
- Foreign affairs
 - Afghanistan
 - Possibility of political settlement, qu, 1740
 - Refugees, government policy, qu, 1740
 - Canadian Parliamentary delegation, visit to Federal Republic of Germany, 1728
 - Berlin Wall, 1729
 - Central America, use of military forces, government policy, qu, 2162, 2272
 - Forthcoming visit of government leader to southern Africa, correction of press report, qu, 1869
 - Honduras and Nicaragua, U.S. military assistance to Contra forces, government position, qu, 792
 - India
 - Aid for victims of industrial accident at Bhopal, qu, 263
 - Detention of Canadian national, qu, 56
 - Namibia, proposed establishment of interim administration, government position, qu, 791, 936
 - Organization of American States, government policy, qu, 61
 - Philippines presidential election
 - Attitude of Canadian government, qu, 2066
 - Canada-Philippines relations, status, qu, 2049
 - Shooting down of South Korean aircraft, Soviet compensation for next-of-kin of Canadian victims, qu, 761, 815
 - South Africa
 - Apartheid, Canadian position at Commonwealth Conference, qu, 1386, 1520
 - United States, imposition of economic sanctions against Nicaragua, qu, 837, 842, 974
 - Government policy, 855, 872, 937
 - Visit of President Reagan to cemetery at Bitburg, West Germany, Prime Minister's views, 813
- Foreign Extraterritorial Measures bill C-14, 388, 397
 - American Law Institute, Restatement of U.S. Foreign Relations Law, 390
 - Attorney General, 391
 - Blocking mechanism, 391

MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C.,—Cont'd

- Foreign Extraterritorial Measures bill C-14—Cont'd
 - Canadian sovereignty, infringement, 391
 - Export Administration Act, 390
 - NATO, 389
 - OECD, 390
 - United States, 389
- Francophone summit
 - Famine relief, reported breach of agreement between Government of Canada and Government of Quebec, qu, 2033, 2069
 - Premier of New Brunswick, status, 2034, 2104
- Government of Canada
 - Remuneration of senior officials and others, qu, 704, 899
- House of Commons bill C-63, 1215
 - Board of Internal Economy, 1215
- Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84
 - Point of order, availability of committee proceedings, 1952, 1975, 1990
- Industry
 - Armaments, possible manufacture and export by West German company from proposed Canadian factory, qu, 2038
 - Footwear, importation quotas, government policy, qu, 1362
- International Centre for Ocean Development
 - Board of directors, replacement of members, qu, 794
- International relations
 - Proposed parliamentary committee, qu, 215
- International terrorism
 - Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, qu, 1498
- International trade
 - Footwear, removal of import quotas, qu, 1518, 1519, 1718
 - Japanese automobiles, importation, government action, qu, 982
- Justice
 - Capital punishment, government policy, qu, 238, 411
 - Unlicensed cable television operators, stay of prosecutions, 222
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 - 19th report, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2020
- Libya
 - United States air strike
 - Consultations between Canada and United States and between Canada and western allies, qu, 2261, 2323, 2343
 - Clarification of statement in official record, 2366
 - Consultations with allies, qu, 2281
 - Government attitude, qu, 2280
 - Government policy, qu, 2270
 - Identification of special envoy, qu, 2286
 - Request for answers, 2277
- Murray, Hon. Lowell P.C., tribute to new Leader of the Government in the Senate, 2786
- National Aeronautics and Space Administration of the United States
 - Space shuttle "Challenger" disaster, expression of condolences, 1880
- National Defence, 33
 - Canadian forces
 - Increase in contingent in western Europe
 - Budgetary provision, qu, 724
 - Effect on establishment, qu, 651, 972
 - Uniforms, qu, 283
 - Departmental budget, government policy, qu, 282, 430
- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 534, 542, 545
 - Meeting, 602
- Reports
 - 6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1000
 - 10th, estimates 1985-86, supplementary (B), 1699, 1720

MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C.,—Cont'd

- Newfoundland
 - Ochre Pit Cove, Conception Bay, request to U.S. for "third world" treatment and financial aid, qu, 1985
- North Atlantic Treaty Organization
 - Strategic defence initiatives research, Canadian participation, qu, 723
 - The Netherlands, removal of nuclear weapons from aircraft, attitude of government, qu, 1573
- Old age security
 - Government policy, qu, 376
- Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2696
 - Employee consultation, 2696
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2791, 2803, 2823, 2826, 2830
 - Commons disagreement with Senate amdt, 2839, 2950
 - Gating, 2852
 - Roles of Parole Board and courts, 2804
 - Senate responsibility, 2819
- Prime Minister
 - Broadcast speech on free trade, availability of text in advance, qu, 2653
- Reform of the Senate, qu, 625
 - Request for information, qu, 655
- Regional Industrial Expansion
 - Government assistance to industry, United States intervention, qu, 606
 - Nova Scotia, heavy water plants, government policy, qu, 893
- Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2070
 - Amalgam method, 2070
 - Impact on smaller provinces, 2071
 - Timing, 2072
- Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C., felicitations on 25th anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1177
- Roblin, Hon. Duff P.C., tribute to former Leader of the Government in the Senate, 2786
- Selection Committee, 6th report, 2700
- Senate
 - Adjournment, 1100, 1217, 1398, 1650, 1864, 2303, 2705
 - Allocation of rooms, 2017
 - Business, 620, 737, 1676, 1680, 2788, 2838
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1683, 1685, 1695
 - Motion re second distinct sitting, 1761
 - Point of order, 1683
 - Expressions of welcome and appreciation, 10
 - Leader of the Opposition, statement, qu, 13
 - Legislative program, qu, 482
 - Official report, point of order, 1648, 2208
 - Orders of the Day, point of order, 1439
 - Prime Minister, comments, question of privilege, 396
 - Proceedings, authority to broadcast, motion in amendment, 1876
 - Question Period
 - Delayed answers, 502
 - Requests for answers, qu, 302, 1174, 1521, 1855, 1988, 2330
- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2416
 - Modified motion in amendment, 2512
- Social programs
 - Universality, government policy, qu, 347, 402, 470, 501
- Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.
 - United Nations award, felicitations, 1011
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - 6th report, government responses to committee reports, 1759
- Sydney Steel Corporation
 - Request for answer, 1235
- Terrorism

MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C.,—Cont'd

- Terrorism—Cont'd
 - Tokyo Summit statement, government policy re Libyan nationals, qu, 2425, 2554
- Transport
 - Canadian airports, security, qu, 1108, 1433
- Unemployment, 30
- Wallenberg, Raoul
 - Resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship
 - Notification of U.S.S.R., qu, 1717, 1987, 2103
 - Request for answers, 1926
- Youth, Special Senate Committee
 - 2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2337

Macquarrie, Hon. Heath

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 14
- Agriculture
 - Potato industry, stabilization assistance, 1974
- Cabinet, access to information, 290
- Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association, meeting in Italy, 2479
 - See appendix p. 2486
- Canada's cultural industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1601
- Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association
 - Meeting in Italy, 2363
- Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 747
- Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security bill C-69, 1260, 1305, 1313, 1327
- Currency bill C-118, 2654
- Customs Tariff bill C-38 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 773
- External Affairs, 18
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2683, 2718, 2766
 - EPF entitlements escalator amendment, 2684
- Foreign affairs
 - Bangladesh, aid to disaster victims, qu, 945
 - Canadian Parliamentary delegation, visit to Federal Republic of Germany, 1727
 - Prosperity and problems, 1727
 - Speaker, ambassador of goodwill, 1727
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa, authority to study, 188, 233, 368
- Report
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 236
 - See Journals of the Senate
- Health, ill effects of smoking, 766
 - Effects on others, 767
 - Injurious effects on smoker, 766
- Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie, the late, tribute, 2529
- International Centre for Ocean Development bill C-22, 588, 611
 - Programs, 589
 - Wasting of sea products, 589
- Mexico
 - Earthquake disaster, Province of Alberta action, qu, 1268
- National defence, 18
- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 580
- Report
 - 17th, federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, subject matter of Bill C-96, 2604

Macquarrie, Hon. Heath—Cont'd

- Order of Canada
 - Appointment of former members of federal cabinet and former provincial premiers, qu, 2288
 - Revised reply, 2449
- Parliament Hill
- "Fairylend of beauty and excitement", qu, 1716
- Prince Edward Island, Legislative Assembly members, visitors, 1496
- Quebec, 17
- Senate
 - Business
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1693
 - Motion re second distinct sitting, 1761
 - Foreign Affairs Committee, meeting, qu, 2069
- Transport
 - Ottawa International Airport, proposed change of name, qu, 869
- Wallenberg, Raoul
 - Proposed conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, message from Commons, 1668

Malone, Richard Sankey, the late, 1102

Manitoba

- Clerk of Legislative Assembly and parliamentary interns, visit, 1999
- Winnipeg, future of St. Paul's College site building, 300, 383

Marchand, Hon. Leonard Stephen, P.C. (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

- Aboriginal peoples
 - Goose Bay, Labrador
 - Barring of Inuit from meeting addressed by Minister of Justice, request for report and apology, qu, 2547
 - Request for answer, 2581
 - Proposed NATO base, funding of interest groups, qu, 2582
 - Queen Charlotte Islands, logging dispute, Haida Indian rights, qu, 1517, 1560
- Agriculture
 - Sugar-beet industry crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1883
- Western Canada
 - Drought and other conditions, government assistance, qu, 1737
 - Motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1460
- Canada-United States relations
 - Summit meeting in Quebec City, trans-border pollution problems, qu, 669
- Constitution
 - First Ministers' Conference, aboriginal rights, request for Senate representation, qu, 692
- Environment
 - Government policy re employment, qu, 79
 - Pollution, Niagara River and Great Lakes, qu, 264
- Fonyo, Steve, "Journey for Lives" across Canada, 866
- Indian Act
 - Reinstatement of Indian women to membership of Indian bands, qu, 525, 1836
- Indian Affairs and Northern Development
 - Departmental staff reductions, government policy, qu, 1322
- Indian bill C-31, 1045, 1139
 - Band control of membership, 1047
 - Enfranchisement, 1046
 - Self-government, 1046
 - Sexual discrimination, 1046, 1140
- National Housing Program
 - Effect of cutbacks on native population, qu, 692, 815

Marchand, Hon. Leonard Stephen, P.C.—Cont'd

- Native Economic Development Program
 - Government policy, qu, 240, 428
- Native peoples
 - Funding of programs, rumoured government cuts, qu, 871
- Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government bill C-93, 2507, 2622
 - Legal entity, 2508, 2623
 - Need for constitutional recognition of self-government, 2508
- Senate
 - Allocation of rooms, question of privilege, 2018
- Business
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, question of privilege, 1693
- Question Period
 - Request for answers, 2667
- Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.
 - United Nations award, felicitations, 1011

Marine Atlantic Inc. acquisition authorization

- CN Marine to become crown corporation, Marine Atlantic Inc., 2687
- Constitutional guarantee of ferry services, 2687
- Errors to be rectified, 2721
- Speakers: Senators
 - LeBlanc, Roméo, 2687
 - Macdonald, John M., 2686, 2722
 - Rowe, Frederick W., 2721

Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization bill C-88. 1r, 2678; 2r, 2686, 2721; 3r, 2770; r.a., 2783

Marriage (prohibited degrees)

- Adoptive relationships, 394, 1748
- Speakers: Senators
 - Flynn, Jacques, 394, 1748, 1776, 2004
 - Neiman, Joan, 394
 - Stanbury, Richard J., 1776

Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2. 1r, 332; 2r, 394; ref to com, 395; rep with amdts, 1496, 1744; 3r, 1776, m in amd, 1776, 2004, 2367;

Marsden, Hon. Lorna

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 89
- Canada-United States relations
 - Bilateral trade negotiations
 - Cultural industries, qu, 1652
 - Items for negotiation, qu, 1352
 - Prime Minister's speech in Chicago
 - "Cultural sovereignty", definition, qu, 1656
- Canada's cultural industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1641
 - Symbols and values, nation's survival, 1641
- Canadian National Railways
 - Board of directors, replacement of chairman, qu, 779
- Census 1986, 93
- Economic Council of Canada
 - Rumoured dissolution, qu, 483, 637
- Economic Summit
 - Bonn, West Germany
 - Technology, growth and employment working group report, qu, 1281
 - World drug trade, government position, qu, 850, 974

Marsden, Hon. Lorna—Cont'd

- Economy
 - National conference, qu, 659, 691
- Employment
 - Effect of budgetary cuts on female employees, qu, 407, 433
 - Royal commission, report, government response, qu, 635
 - Summer Youth Employment Program, qu, 505, 2493, 2669
- Employment and Immigration
 - Government policy, possible changes, qu, 759
- Employment Equity bill C-62, 2417
 - Canadian Human Rights Commission, 2419
 - Employer discretion, 2418
 - Enforcement, 2418
 - Federal Public Service exemption, 2418
 - Process, 2418
 - Voluntary compliance, 2419
- End of Decade Women's Conference
 - Composition of Canadian delegation and agenda, qu, 652, 899, 912, 970
- Environment
 - Toxicology research and development, government policy, qu, 1715, 2101
- Equal pay for work of equal value, 91
- External relations
 - Family planning promotion, government support and policy, qu, 1696
- Family Allowances, 1973, bill C-70, 1975, 2156
 - "Child and Family Benefits" consultation paper, 1976
 - Child Tax Credit, 1976, 2158
 - Conservative, Liberal philosophical differences, 2159
 - Interaction between federal and provincial benefits, 1977
 - Symbolic importance, 2157
 - "Total financial resources" income concept, 1977
- Family allowances
 - De-indexation, petitions against Bill C-70, number and disposition, qu, 1923
- Fitness and Amateur Sport
 - Appointment of females to advisory council, qu, 2121
- Government of Canada
 - Remuneration of senior officials and others, 705
- Indian Act
 - Status of women, removal of discriminatory provisions, qu, 870
- Old Age Security bill C-26, 1144
 - Never-married women, 1144
 - Spouse's Allowance Program, 1144
- Public Works
 - Cleaning services
 - Placement of laid off employees aged fifty and over, qu, 2117
 - Possible layoff of employees, qu, 1941, 2102
- Research and development, support and government policy, 804, 824, 1366
 - Budget measures, 1367
 - Instability and uncertainty of funding, 825
 - Interference in research, 826
 - Lack of commitment to future, 827
 - Lack of understanding of scientific standards and quality, 826
 - Ontario, 828
 - Private sector role, 1366
 - Privatization, 827
 - Wastage of public funds, 827
- Rights and freedoms, Canadian forces, spouses of members, 1386, 1510
 - Public behaviour on basis of marriage, 1511
- Science and humanities
 - Research councils, funding, budget proposal implementation, qu, 2569

Marsden, Hon. Lorna—Cont'd

- Science and Technology
 - Research and development, government funding, qu, 911
- Senate
 - Question Period, request for answer, 408, 1112, 2668
- Sexual abuse of children
 - Badgley committee report, government action, qu, 1671
- Social justice, 89
- Social programs
 - Universality, government policy, qu, 370, 375, 470
- Statistics Canada
 - 1986 census
 - Cancellation, qu, 98, 99
 - Restoration, qu, 425, 679
- Status of women
 - Affirmative action legislation, government policy, qu, 1950
 - Armed forces personnel, restriction of spouses' activities, government policy, qu, 1379, 1906, 2134
 - Association of spouses of military members, status of government grant, qu, 2134
 - Broadcasting task force, remuneration of women members, qu, 1224, 1325
 - Economic equality, government policy, qu, 1558, 1852
 - Equal pay for work of equal value, government policy, qu, 213, 428, 472
 - Funding of groups, government policy, qu, 1654
- Senior government appointments
 - Bird, Hon. Florence, qu, 833, 936, 954
 - Franklin, Dr. Ursula, qu, 806, 900
 - Replacement of female appointees, qu, 789, 811, 867, 881, 938, 955, 1237
- Supply and Services
 - University of Hawaii, contract for survey research, qu, 1437
- Technological development and employment
 - Ministerial conference report, qu, 1281
- Transport
 - Airport security
 - Remuneration of guards, qu, 2446
 - Testing of guards, qu, 2446, 2600
- Wallenberg, Raoul
 - Resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, motion, 1679
 - Inspiration and symbol, 1679
- Youth
 - Cancellation of programs, government policy, qu, 1923
 - Government assistance, qu, 2116
 - Report of Special Senate Committee, government response, qu, 2493
- Youth Committee
 - 2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2231

Marshall, Hon. Jack

- Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
 - Fish marketing in Canada, authority to study, 388, 476, 492
 - Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, authority to examine annual report, 478, 490
 - International Cheese Council of Canada, authority to receive presentation, 1221
 - Orders of reference, 2598
 - Proposed splitting of committee, 2446, 2447
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 236
 - See Journals of the Senate
 - 2nd, agricultural stabilization (Bill C-25), 1134

Marshall, Hon. Jack—Cont'dAgriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee—*Cont'd*Reports—Cont'd

- 4th, "Herbicide Pricing", result of study of "Soil at Risk, Canada's Eroding Future", 2018, 2091

"Soil at Risk", authority to print additional copies, 291

Army Benevolent Fund and related Acts bill C-100, 2251

Children of veterans assistance extension, 2252

Elimination of "100 per cent rule", 2252

Hong Kong and Dieppe prisoners of war, 2252

Spousal right of appeal, 2253

Veterans Land Act, 2253

Canadian Pension Commission, Pension Review Board

Vacancies, qu, 807

Condominium Ordinance Validation bill C-73, 1394, 1409

Housing costs, 1394

Land Titles Act, 1394

Need for housing, 1394

Energy, Mines and Resources

Hibernia drilling platforms, construction site location criteria, qu, 1696

Environment

Air pollution on Parliament Hill and public education campaign, 1674

Newfoundland, integration of weather services, 609

Fisheries bill C-32, 1145

Consultation requirement, 1146

Fisheries management, 1145

Native rights, 1146

Scope of the act, 1146

Fisheries Committee

Authority to publish and distribute interim report on marketing of fish in Canada, 2652

Report

1st, 2698

See appendix p. 2745

Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-57, 1152

Guaranteed loans program, 1152

Security, 1152

Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 386

Health and Welfare

Guaranteed Income Supplement, 502

National Defence Committee

2nd report, "Canada's Territorial Air Defence", 681

Old Age Security bill C-26, 1114, 1144

Canada Pension Plan, 1145

Common-law spouses, 1115

Spouse's allowance, 1114, 1145

War Veterans Allowance, 1145

Pension bill C-28, 531, 541

Annual increase in basic rate of pension, 531

Continuation of married rate extension, 531

Pension Entitlement Boards, 532

Pension Review Board, 532

Prisoners of war, 541

Residence requirements, 541

Spouses of severely disabled veterans, 532

Veterans exposed to radiation, 541

Remembrance Day, 1484

Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C., felicitations on 25th anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1177

Rules of the Senate

Rule 67 (1), motion to amend, 2459, 2477

Saltfish bill C-6, 286, 305

Borrowing limit, 286

Canadian Saltfish Corporation, 286

Senate

Marshall, Hon. Jack—Cont'dSenate—Cont'd

Adjournment, 1413

Business, 620

Motion to authorize broadcasting of proceedings, 2112

Costs, 2113

Criticism by media, 2114

Lack of public interest, 2113

Sherwood, Hon. Cyril B.

Felicitations on induction into Dairy Hall of Fame, 1521

Small craft harbours projects

Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, 1194

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 804

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1291

Report

8th, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss," 2317

They Served - We Care, authority to review, 76, 228

See appendix p. 235

Veterans affairs, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1012, 1300

Veterans Affairs Subcommittee, notice of meeting, 1403

United Nations

World Conference on Women, Canadian delegation, breakdown by sex, qu, 1407

Veterans Affairs

Aging Veterans Program applications, qu, 1407

World War II

D-Day, forty-first anniversary of invasion of Europe by allied forces, 964

McBride, Captain Ronald G.

Unveiling of memorial sculpture and visit of industrial mission from Friuli, Italy, 1649, 1700

History, 1701

Speaker: Senator

Bosa, Peter, 1700

McDougall, Hon. Barbara Jean P.C., Minister of State (Finance)

Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37, 743

Native business summit, comments, 2790

McElman, Hon. Charles

Air Canada

Board of directors, replacement of members, qu, 659

Budget

Atlantic provinces, impact of measures, qu, 1020

Canada-United States relations

Summit meeting in Quebec City

Absence of Governor General, qu, 657

Trans-border pollution problems, qu, 670, 2050

Economy

Point of order, 2205

Taxation and unemployment, government policy, 212

Employment

CN shops, layoffs at Moncton, government policy, qu, 2552

Fisheries and Oceans

Parliamentary secretary, whereabouts, qu, 2070

Product inspection standards, qu, 1363

Francophone summit

Canadian Head of State, reported statement by Prime Minister, qu, 2048

Hatfield, Hon. Richard B.

McElman, Hon. Charles—Cont'd

Hatfield, Hon. Richard B.—Cont'd

Fifteenth anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 2012

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee
30th report, 2404

International terrorism

Seizure of Italian cruise ship, request for information, 1363

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1056

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2437

National Finance Committee

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to report, 556

Meeting, 603

Report

6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1006

Order of Canada

Appointment of former members of federal cabinet and former provincial premiers, point of order, 2364

Revised reply, expression of thanks, 2470

Pension Benefits Standards, 1985 bill C-90, 2737, 2771

Excess credit "stripping", 2771

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 864

Public Pensions Reporting bill C-255, 2030

Reform of the Senate, qu, 626, 631

Riley, Hon. Daniel A., the late, 24

Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C., felicitations on 25th anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1177

Rules of the Senate

Rule 77 (7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 1995, 2169

Motion in amendment, 2170

Senate

Business, 1681

Committees authorized to examine subject matter of Bills C-27, C-41, C-44, C-24 and C-36, 999

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferral of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1690

Minutes of Proceedings, recording of choosing of Acting Speaker, 1966

Question Period, request for answers, 1112, 1951

Simard, Hon. Jean-Maurice, 1128

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1307

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

3rd report, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1241

Transport

CN shops, Moncton layoffs, government policy, qu, 2470

VIA Rail, resumption of "Atlantic Limited" service, qu, 726

Meat Import Act

Tabling of reports, 1887, 2023

Meat inspection

Features of bill, 913, 917

Inspection of imported meat products, 903

Meat inspection legends, 918

Registered establishments, 917

Speakers: Senators

Frith, Royce, 923

Robertson, Brenda, 903, 918

Roblin, Duff, 923

Stewart, John B., 917, 922

Meat Inspection bill C-33. 1r, 881; 2r, 903, 917; ref to com, 918; rep without amdt, 922; 3r, 922; r.a., 928

Metric conversion

Government policy, 196, 281, 302, 338, 1407, 2003

Mexico

Earthquake disaster

Government action, 1268

Province of Alberta action, 1268

See Foreign Affairs

Middle East

See Foreign Affairs Committee

Miller, Hon. Billie, Minister of Education, Barbados, visit, 1948

Missen, Senator Alan, the late, of Commonwealth of Australia

Tribute, 2326

Molgat, Hon. Gildas L.

Agriculture

Sugar-beet industry

Crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1884

Canadian industry, 1885

National policy, 1985

Government policy, qu, 771

1983 stabilization payment, qu, 1093, 1174, 1313, 1537, 1738, 2048

1986 crop year, government policy, qu, 2090

Western Canada, drought conditions, government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1452, 1464

Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee

Fish marketing in Canada, authority to study, 476, 491

Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, authority to study annual report, 490

Proposed splitting of committee, qu, 2446

Report

4th, "Herbicide Pricing", 2139

"Soil at Risk - Canada's Eroding Future", authority to study impact of report, 717

Sugar-beet industry, government policy, qu, 760, 771

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Committee proceedings, television, 1449

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-sixth meeting, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, 1361

Canada-United States relations

Bilateral trade negotiations

Individual negotiators for specialized areas, qu, 2668

Canadian hog export embargo, qu, 953

Garrison Dam project, diversion unit legislation enactment, 2449

Northern waters, sovereignty, qu, 1092

Summit meeting in Quebec City

Absence of Governor General, qu, 669

Availability of background information, qu, 762

Canadian Wheat Board

Mission to China, composition of delegation, qu, 2585, 2669

Economy

Manitoba

Construction of Winnipeg research centre, qu, 472

Cancellation, 44, 239

Employment

Job creation, qu, 910

Molgat, Hon. Gildas L.—Cont'dEmployment—Cont'd

Summer Youth Employment Program, qu, 409

Energy

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, government policy, qu, 469

Price of Canadian crude oil, qu, 483, 637

Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2756

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2716

Importance of research, 2716

Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1814

Confidentiality, 1815

Foreign affairs

Forthcoming visit of government leader to southern Africa, correction of press report, qu, 1870

Philippines presidential election, possible recall of Canadian Ambassador, qu, 2068

Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 384

Health and Welfare

Social assistance programs, universality, government policy, qu, 2037, 2049

Industry

Aerospace, allocation of service contracts, qu, 2051, 2068

Railways, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Transcona shops and east yards, qu, 935

Inter-Parliamentary Conference on the Environment, Nairobi, Kenya, 515

Manitoba, Clerk of Legislative Assembly and parliamentary interns, visit, 1999

McDougall, Hon. Barbara Jean, P.C.

Native business summit, comments, qu, 2790

National Defence

Management of real property, qu, 1717

White paper, status, 2365

National Finance Committee

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to meet forthwith withdrawn, 526

Excise tax and excise, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-80 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477

National Soil Conservation Week, 738

Parliament Buildings, Centre Block, removal of portraits of British Prime Ministers, 1468

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2747, 2799, 2821

Senate amendments, precedents, 2821

Representation, 1985, bill C-74, 1804

Rules of the Senate

Distribution of revised edition, 2326

Rule 67 (1), motion to amend, 1904, 1997

Rule 77 (7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 2437

Suggested amendments, qu, 758

Senate

Adjournment, 2785

Business

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferral of honorary Canadian citizenship, point of order, 1687

Cabinet ministers in the Senate, committee membership, 1376

Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 662

Official report, printing of appendices, 708

Prime Minister, comments, qu, 409

Question Period

Form, suggested referral to Standing Rules and Orders Committee, 2554

Request for answers, 1177, 1792, 2572, 2668, 2789

Referral of bills to committee before second reading, 2571

Senate Reform Committee

Molgat, Hon. Gildas L.—Cont'dSenate Reform Committee—Cont'd

1st report, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 279

See Journals of the Senate

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

8th report, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2332

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

Reports

1st, invitation to provinces to appear before Senate committees, 892, 919

2nd, audio recording and broadcasting of Senate committee proceedings, 929, 956

3rd, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1168, 1244

4th, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1448, 1480

See appendix p. 1469

5th, Rules of the Senate, use of male and female genders, 1448, 1569, 1570

Use of "sénatrice" and "sénateur", 1570

See appendix p. 1470

6th, government response to committee reports, 1449, 1571, 1760, 1783

Point of order, 1760

Proposed rule as in House of Commons requesting government response within 4 months, 1571

Referred back to committee, 1783

See appendix p. 1475

7th, procedural guidelines for financial operation of committees, 2093, 2123, 2254

See appendix p. 2108

8th, Rule 77 (7), amendment to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 2381

9th, Rule 67 (1), suggested amendment, 2411, 2433

See appendix p. 2424

10th, "Register of Senators' Interests", 2425, 2455

11th, membership of cabinet ministers on Senate committees, 2575

12th, on government response to committee reports, 2768

Time limit for government response to reports of Senate committees, request for consideration by committee, 1365

Supply and Services

"How Canadians Govern Themselves", unavailability of booklet, qu, 2002, 2222

Ukraine

Sixty-seventh anniversary of the proclamation of independence, 436

Molson, Hon. Hartland de M.

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C., tributes on resignation from the Senate, 1833

External Affairs

Passports, issuance at Hull, qu, 851, 937

Interprovincial trade

Barriers, qu, 1392

Ontario

Tornado damage, government action, qu, 986, 1258

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 858

Senate

Business

Orders of the Day, 1442

Jurisdiction over services, qu, 806

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1221, 1247, 1358

Report

Molson, Hon. Hartland de M.—Cont'd

- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee—Cont'd
Report—Cont'd
8th, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2332, 2452, 2515

Muir, Hon. Robert

- Air Canada
 - Strike of ticket agents, qu, 831
- Argentina, His Excellency the Hon. Francesco Jose Pulit, Ambassador and delegation, visit, 2197, 2495
- Banking
 - Regulation of banks, qu, 1288
- Cape Breton Development Corporation
 - Board of directors, appointment, qu, 1235
 - President, appointment, qu, 725, 726, 1023
 - Prompt delivery of copies of tabled reports to senators' offices, 2159
- Cape Breton, labour relations, qu, 2789
- Crown Corporations
 - Qualifications of officials, qu, 1737
- Economic Development
 - Nova Scotia
 - Cape Breton Advisory Committee report, request for copies, 1289
- Economy
 - National conference, 710
- Education
 - Toronto school, change of name, qu, 1289
- Foreign affairs
 - Mexico, reported nuclear pact with Canada, qu, 450
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee
 - Parliamentary employment and staff relations, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-45 prior to receipt of legislation, 940
- Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authorization bill C-53, 1181
 - History of company, 1181
- Nuclear energy
 - Safety of Canadian reactors, qu, 2386
- Official languages
 - RCMP, recruiting practices, qu, 2097, 2585
- Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2723, 2781
 - Canada Labour Code, 2724
 - Collective bargaining framework, 2724
 - Compulsory arbitration, 2725
 - Public Service Staff Relations Act, 2724
 - Right to grieve, 2724
- Senate
 - Debates, treatment of speeches, qu, 409
- Transport
 - CN Marine and CN Rail, reductions in service, qu, 47, 241
- Transportation and Communications Committee
 - Report
 - 7th, Toronto Harbour Commissioners', 1985 bill C-76, 2093
- Unemployment Insurance, 1971 bill C-52, 948
- Youth
 - Katimavik, cancellation of program, government policy, 2132

Multiculturalism, 106

- Federal-provincial conference, request for observer status for interested parties, 873
- Government policy, 2269
- Minister's communiqué, disparity between French and English versions, 1377

Multiculturalism—Cont'd

- Refugee determination, government policy, 2285
- Status of minority groups, government policy, 869
- Suggested joint committee, 1313

Murray, Hon. Lowell, P.C., Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (from June 30/86)

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 117
- Atlantic fishery, 125
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 388, 680, 1251, 1363, 1371, 1573, 2411
 - Committee proceedings, televising, 1448, 1449, 1489
- Competition tribunal, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-91 prior to receipt of legislation, 2302
- Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 958, 1107
- Financial institutions depositors compensation, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-79 prior to receipt of legislation, 1352
- Financial institutions, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-103 prior to receipt of legislation, 2670
- Notice of committee meetings, 715, 1398
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 279
 - See Journals of the Senate
 - 2nd, Customs and Customs Tariff bill C-9, 332
 - 3rd, Income Tax bill C-7, 396
 - 5th, Small Businesses Loans bill C-23, 733
 - 6th, Investment in Canada (Bill C-15), 835
 - See appendix p. 848
 - 7th, Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 bill S-4, 964
 - 8th, Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada bill C-73, 1398
 - 9th, Customs bill C-59, rep with amds, 1669, 1705
 - 10th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B), 1573
 - See appendix p. 1646
 - 11th, tax rebate discounting, subject matter of Bill C-83, 1704
 - 12th, income tax and related statutes, subject matter of Bill C-84, 1713
 - 13th, financial institutions depositors' compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, 1767
 - 14th, Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84, 1938
 - Availability of proceedings, 1955
 - 15th, Canadian Arsenals Limited divestiture authorization, subject matter of Bill C-87, 2362
 - 16th, Restructuring of financial institutions, 2403
 - 17th, Competition Tribunal bill C-91, rep without amdt, but with observations, 2614
- Cabinet, access to information, 309
- Canada's cultural industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1575
- Cape Breton
 - Labour relations, 2789
 - Provincial status, 2790
- Corrections
 - Request for tabling of documents, 2787
- Customs bill C-59, 1706
- Customs and Customs Tariff bill C-9, 266, 285
 - Civil aircraft trade, 267
 - Liberalization of world trade, 285
 - "Made in Canada" items, 267
 - Ministerial prescription, 267

Murray, Hon. Lowell, P.C., —Cont'd

- Customs and Customs Tariff bill C-9—Cont'd
 - Valuation code, 266, 285
- Deficit, 119
- Economy
 - Canadian dollar, value
 - Request for statements of Chairman of Economic Council of Canada and Michael McCracken of Infometrica Ltd., qu, 1970
 - Interest rates, qu, 2204, 2329
 - Mortgages, effect of bank rate on interest rates, qu, 2205
- Excise Tax and Excise bill C-17, 450
 - Air transportation tax, 451
 - Appeals system, 455
 - Federal tax on motor vehicles, 451
 - Fuel tax rebate, 451
 - Fuel tax rebate program for upstream oil and gas sector, 456
 - Removal of sales tax from primary producers, 456
- Federal-provincial consultation, 123
- Federal-provincial relations
 - Establishment of cross-party caucus committees, 2790
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation, authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington D.C. to study, 2235
- Government cuts, 121
- Human rights
 - Japanese-Canadians, government apology and compensation, 2789
- Income Tax Conventions Interpretation bill C-10, 357
 - Immovable property, 358
 - Non-residents who carry on business through a permanent establishment, 458
 - Real property, 358
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee
 - 30th report, 2403
- McDougall, Hon. Barbara P.C.
 - Native business summit, comments, 2790
- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 553
 - Petroleum and gas revenue tax and income tax, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-82 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477
 - Report
 - 6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1008
- North-South Institute, 130
- Old age security
 - De-indexation of pensions, presentation of petitions, 1104
- Official development assistance, 127
- Official Languages Committee
 - Quorum, 465
- Parliamentary secretaries
 - Suggested appointment of senators, 2789
- Parole
 - Release of dangerous inmates, 2838
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2823, 2828
 - Amendment implications, 2815
 - Public concern, 2816
- Penitentiary and related Statutes bill C-68, 2825
- Regional development, 127
- Regional Industrial Expansion
 - Government assistance to industry, United States intervention, qu, 607
- Roblin, Hon. Duff P.C., tribute to former leader of the Government in the Senate, 2786

Murray, Hon. Lowell, P.C., —Cont'd

- Senate
 - Adjournment, 1413, 1650
 - Business, 2788
 - Disposition of Bills C-67 and C-68, 2826
 - Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, point of order, 2211
 - Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament
 - Motion to constitute immediately in Committee of the Whole, 2243
 - Tribute to departing pages, 2833
- Social policy, 124
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - 7th report, procedural guidelines for financial operation of committees, 2256
- Youth Committee
 - 2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2333
- Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, the late, tribute, 2837

Nakasone, His Excellency Yasuhiro, Prime Minister of Japan

- Address to both houses, 1833
- See Appendix p. 1843

National Aeronautics and Space Administration of the United States

- Space shuttle "Challenger" disaster, expression of condolences, 1880

National Defence, 18, 33

- Canadian forces
 - Future role, 257, 429
 - Increase in contingent in western Europe
 - Budgetary provision, 724
 - Effect on establishment, 651, 972
 - Uniforms, 283, 430
- Departmental budget, government policy, 282, 430
- Management of real property, 1717
- New Brunswick, layoff of civilian personnel at Canadian forces bases, 2047
- White paper, status, 2203, 2365

National Defence, Special Senate Committee

- Appointment, 26, 71, 94, 112, 203
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 236
 - 2nd, "Canada's Territorial Air Defence", 445, 681, 1059
 - Commitment to the Allied Command Europe Mobile Force, 681
 - Military space program, 682
 - Modernization of surveillance system around North America, 682
 - 3rd, "Military Air Transport", 2065, 2456
 - Availability of civilian equipment and personnel resources, 2457
 - Canadian defence position among nations, 2459
 - Committee recommendations, 2458
 - Equipment obsolescence, 2457
 - Globe and Mail, quote, 2458
 - Overdue white paper, 2458
 - Winnipeg Free Press, editorial quote, 2458

National Energy Program, 88

- See Energy and Natural Resources Committee

National Film Board

- Possibility of budget in Ontario, 525, 679

National Film Board—Cont'd

"The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 1221, 1247, 1261, 1269, 1291, 1305, 1315, 1358, 2261, 2291, 2317, 2330, 2350, 2367, 2398, 2408, 2437, 2452, 2473, 2514

See Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

National Finance, Standing Senate Committee

Authority to engage services, 478

Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 850, 2737

Borrowing authority, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-51 prior to receipt of legislation, 965, 998

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to meet forthwith, 497, 526

Instruction to report, 534, 535, 542, 543, 592

Budgetary deficits, authority to study, 347, 395, 639

Estimates ref to com

Year ending Mar. 31/85

Supplementary (B), 76

Supplementary (C), 625

Year ending Mar. 31/86, 612

Supplementary (A), 942

Supplementary (B), 1476

Supplementary (C), 2093

Year ending Mar. 31/87, 2084

Excise tax and excise, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-80 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-96 prior to receipt of legislation, 2381

Meeting, 602, 2061

Petroleum and gas revenue tax and income tax, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-82 prior to receipt of legislation, 1477

Post-secondary education and training, authority to study government activities, 1251, 1274, 1276, 1293

Reports

1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 207

See Journals of the Senate

2nd, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, supplementary (B), 279, 312

See appendix p. 293

3rd, Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11, rep without amdt but with recommendation, 618

4th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/85, supplementary (C), 666, 696

Canadair and de Havilland Corporation, 696

Petro-Canada, 696

See appendix p. 684

5th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, 951, 975, 999, 1033

Federal transfers, 975

Post-secondary education, 976, 1034

See appendix p. 960

6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 964, 1000

Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., 1001

Cape Breton, 1001

Closure of heavy water plants, 1001

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, 1000

Energy requirements of the future, 1005

Labrador Linerboard Limited, 1004

See appendix p. 980

7th, supplementary fiscal equalization payments, subject matter of Bill C-39, 1088

8th, borrowing authority, subject matter of Bill C-51, 1088

9th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1405, 1483

See appendix p. 1416

National Finance, Standing Senate Committee—Cont'dReports—Cont'd

10th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B), 1573, 1699, 1719

Feasibility of monthly availability of Treasury Board decisions affecting funding, 1720

See appendix p. 1646

11th, petroleum and gas revenue tax and income tax, subject matter of Bill C-82, 1695

12th, Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1713

13th, Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, rep without amdt but with observations and recommendation, 2065

14th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (C), 2174, 2208, 2228

See appendix p. 2187

15th, Borrowing Authority 1986-87, rep without amdt, 2327

16th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/87, 2501, 2540

Annual accounting of tax expenditures, 2540

Enormity of accounts receivable, 2589

Regular effectiveness evaluation, 2540

Secret reductions of departmental budgets, 2589

See appendix p. 2522

17th, federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, subject matter of Bill C-96, 2565, 2603, 2657

Implications for Atlantic Canada, 2659

Progressive reduction to health services and post-secondary education, 2657

Reduction of federal visibility, 2658

18th, Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, rep without amdt but with comments, 2765

Supplementary fiscal equalization payments, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-39 prior to receipt of legislation, 965, 998

National Housing Program

Effect of cutbacks on native population, 692, 815

National Parole Board

Appointment of members, 1500, 1672, 1718

Federal Court decision, 223, 301

Parole provisions, administration, government policy, 1669

National Postal Museum

Advisory committee, 2363, 2410

Membership, 2700

Order for return, 2571, 2653

National Research Council

Closing of research facilities, loss of jobs, 407

National Revenue

Abandonment of Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, 353, 375

Definition of "partnership", tax avoidance, 1284

Suggested consumption tax, 115

Suggested increase in corporate taxes, 353

Tax evasion and avoidance, 711

National Soil Conservation Week, 738, 777, 798, 808, 892

Erosion, 809

"Soil at Risk", 798

National unity, 249Native Economic Development Program

Government policy, 240

Native peoples

Funding of programs

Rumoured government cuts, 867, 871

Task force report, 870

Treatment of Louis Riel and Métis, government position, 1480

Natural resources, 49Neiman, Hon. Joan

Customs Tariff bill C-38, 764, 771

Criminal Code, 775

Regulations and instructions for customs officers, 771

Foreign Extraterritorial Measures bill C-14, 363

Indian bill C-31, 1142

Indian women, 1142

Judges bill C-61, 1213

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

Authority to engage services, 1251

Indian Act, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-31 prior to receipt of legislation, 647

Reports

1st, Criminal Law bill C-18, 990

2nd, Statute law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) amendment (Bill C-27), 1105

3rd, Indian bill C-31, 1106

4th, Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) bill C-77, 1377

6th, Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, rep with amtds, 1496, 1744

7th, divorce, subject matter of Bill C-46, 1534

8th, divorce and corollary relief, subject matter of Bill C-47/3, 1535

Notice of inquiry, 1535

See appendix p. 1549

9th, family orders enforcement assistance, subject matter of Bill C-48, 1535

Notice of inquiry, 1535

See appendix p. 1551

10th, Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges, bill C-78, rep without amdt, 1649

11th, Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1733

12th, Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81, rep without amdt but with recommendations, 1789

13th, Pine Hill Divinity Hall bill S-7, rep without amdt, 1863

14th, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt, 1863

19th, Representation 1985 bill C-74, rep without amdt but with comments, 2018

20th, Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65, rep without amdt, 2148

Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, 394, 2005

Adoptive relationships, 394

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1803

Restaurant of Parliament

Joint committee membership, qu, 322

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

6th report, government responses to committee reports, 1571

Newfoundland

Ochre Pit Cove, Conception Bay, request to U.S. for "third world" treatment and financial aid, 1985

North Africa

See Foreign Affairs Committee

North Atlantic Treaty Organization

Strategic defence initiatives research, Canadian participation, 723

The Netherlands, removal of nuclear weapons from aircraft, attitude of government, 1573

North-South Institute, 130Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal authorization

History of company, 1181

Oil exploration and activity around the Beaufort Sea, 1182

Speakers: Senators

Adams, Willie, 1182

Muir, Robert, 1181

Steuart, D.G., 1182

Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authorization

bill C-53. 1r, 1166; 2r, 1181; 3r, 1183; r.a., 1217

Northland Bank

See Banking

Nuclear disaster

Ukraine, effects of radiation, 2366, 2537

Government advice to Canadian travellers, 2427

Government knowledge and action, 2385, 2387

Health and safety of Canadian nationals, 2385

Nuclear energy

Safety of Canadian reactors, 2385, 2386

Nurgitz, Hon. Nathan

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 67

Agriculture

Sugar-beet industry crisis, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1886

National policy, 1886

Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 bill S-4, 938

Canadian Oxygen Limited and BOC Inc., 938

Corrections system, 68

Criminal Code, 68

Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81, 1503, 1525, 1825

Authority to operate sports pool betting, 1503

Definition of "lottery scheme", 1505

Manufacture and export of gaming equipment, 1505

Repeal of authority to operate sports pool betting, 1503

Restrictions, 1505

Uncertainties in law, 1503

Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting) bill C-77, 1355

Criminal Law, 1985 bill C-18, 846

Air safety, 846

Drugs, 846

Protection for medical doctors, 847

Seizure of vehicles, 846

War crimes, 846

Currency bill C-21, 438, 458

Olympic Coins, 438

Customs Tariff bill C-38, 762, 772

Nurgitz, Hon. Nathan—Cont'd

- Customs Tariff bill C-38—Cont'd
 - Child pornography, 772
 - Criminal Code, 763, 774
 - Holding of the material, 773
 - Importation of obscene material and hate literature, 762
 - Treason and sedition, 764
- Customs Tariff bill C-71, 1355
- Horse racing, 1355
- Divorce, Divorce and Corollary Relief, Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance bills C-46, C-47 and C-48, 1930, 1964, 1989
 - Barriers to remarriage, 1932
 - Custody and support, 1931
 - Garnishment, 1932
 - Grounds, 1931
 - Jurisdiction, 1930
- Employment Equity bill C-62
 - Motion re message to House of Commons, 2706
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - 2nd report, Canada's relations with countries of Middle East and North Africa, 1133
- Foreign Extraterritorial Measures bill C-14, 359, 392
 - Attorney General, 362
 - Bank of Nova Scotia, 360
 - COCOM, 361
 - Canada and U.S. relations, 359
 - Canadian governmental responses to foreign governmental measures, 362
 - Control of Canadian exports to other countries, 361
 - Foreign antitrust judgments, 362
 - NATO, 361
 - Production of evidence, 360
 - Strategic exports, 361
 - U.S. antitrust laws, 360
 - United Kingdom and Australia, 361
- Governor General's and Governor General's Retiring Annuity and Salaries and Judges bill C-78, 1540
 - Judicial allowances, 1541
 - Relativity factor, 1541
- Income Tax and Tax Court of Canada bill C-72, 1356
 - Amounts in dispute, 1357
 - Safeguards, 1357
 - Technical amendments, 1356
- Indian bill C-31, 1038, 1142
 - Band control of membership, 1039
 - Broadening of access to Indian status and band membership, 1041
 - Enfranchisement, 1038
 - High impact bands, 1041
 - Regulation of use of intoxicants on reserves, 1040
 - Restoration of rights, 1039
 - Sexual discrimination, 1038
- International terrorism
 - Motion for appointment of Special Senate Committee, 2126
 - Adequacy of existing policy, 2127
 - Canadian Security Intelligence Service, 2127
 - RCMP, 2127
 - Solicitor General, quote, 2128
 - Special emergency response team, 2128
- Judges and related Acts bill C-128, 2740
 - P.E.I. and Newfoundland courts reorganization, 2740
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 - Postponement of meeting, 2175
 - Reports

Nurgitz, Hon. Nathan—Cont'd

- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee—Cont'd
- Reports—Cont'd
 - 5th, Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada, rep without amdt, 1476
 - 15th, parole and penitentiaries, subject matter of Bill C-67 and parole, penitentiaries, prisons and reformatories, subject matter of Bill C-68, request for authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada to study, 1920, 1948
 - 16th, Divorce bill C-46, rep without amdt, 1967
 - 17th, Divorce and Corollary Relief bill C-47, rep without amdt, 1968
 - 18th, Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance bill C-48, rep without amdt, 1968
- Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2780
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2791, 2809, 2822, 2826, 2832, 2841
 - Commons disagreement with Senate amdt, 2841
 - Day parole, 2792, 2802
 - Federal/provincial responsibilities, 2813
 - Mandatory supervision, 2791, 2792
 - Point of order, 2822
 - Retroactivity, 2799
- Parole and related Statutes bill C-68, 2800, 2832
 - Calculation of sentences, 2800
 - Correctional Service of Canada, new designation, 2800
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - Authority to examine subject matter of clauses of certain bills, 614
- Reports
 - 1st, Statutory Instruments No. 28, 333, 366
 - 2nd, Statutory Instruments No. 29, 463, 495
 - 3rd, Statutory Instruments No. 30, 1405, 1483
 - See appendix p. 1417
 - 4th, Statutory Instruments No. 31, 1406, 1483
 - See appendix p. 1424
 - 5th, Statutory Instruments No. 32, 2195, 2230, 2322
 - See appendix p. 2210
 - 6th, Statutory Instruments No. 33, 2277
 - See appendix p. 2300
 - 7th, Statutory Instruments No. 34, 2698
 - See Journals of the Senate
 - Expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 296
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - 7th report, procedural guidelines for financial operation of committees, 2256
- Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) bill C-27, 1116
 - Canadian Human Rights Act, 1117
 - Canadian Shipping Act, 1118
 - Discussion paper on equality rights, 1116
 - Examination of bills and regulations, 1118
 - Fisheries Act, 1118
 - Indian Act, 1116
 - National Defence Act, 1117
 - Search and seizure provisions, 1116
- Transport and Communications Committee
 - Car rental outlets at airports, authority to study policy, 485
- Wallenberg, Raoul
 - Conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship
 - Proposal, 1668
 - Resolution of approval, 1678
 - History, 1678
 - International Human Rights Day, 1678

Official development assistance, 127Official Languages

- Department of the Solicitor General, policy, 758
- RCMP, recruiting practices, 2097, 2585
- Report of Commissioner tabled, 703, 1129, 2261, 2614
 - Referred to committee, 723, 2261
 - Message from Commons, 2302

Official Languages Policy and Programs, Standing Joint Committee (until Feb. 24/86)

- Authority to meet during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, 466
- Estimates, 1985-86
 - Privy Council Vote 15 referred, 621, 2083, 2224
 - Message from Commons, 621, 2083
- Estimates 1986-87
 - Privy Council Vote 15 referred, 2083
 - Message from Commons, 2083
- Quorum, 464
 - Message from Commons, 481
- Reports
 - 1st, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 942, 1008, 1156
 - 2nd, annual reports of Commissioner of Official Languages, 1134
 - See appendix p. 1163
 - 3rd, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1284
 - 4th, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1967
- Report of Commissioner of Official Languages
 - Message from Commons, 733
 - Referral to committee, 723
- See also Official Languages, Standing Joint Committee

Official Languages, Standing Joint Committee (from Feb. 24/86)

- Privy Council Vote 15 referred, 2238
- Report
 - 5th, tabled, 2488
- Report of Commissioner tabled, 2261
 - Message from Commons, 2302
 - Referred to committee, 2261
- See also Official Languages, Policies and Programs

Official report, 1793

- Correction of translation, 1128
- Correction, quality of translation, 1495
- Point of order, 1793
- Quality of translation, question of privilege, 2362

Oil substitution and conservation and Canadian Home Insulation Program

- Alternative energy options, 1124
- Conservation, 1123
- Cost-effectiveness of programs, 1124
- Speakers: Senators
 - Kelly, William M., 1123
 - Olson, H.A., 1124

Oil Substitution and Conservation and Canadian Home Insulation Program bill C-24. 1r, 1103; 2r, 1123; 3r, 1144; r.a., 1217Old age security

- De-indexation of pensions
 - Government monitoring, 1063
 - Position of Canadian Petroleum Association, 1064
 - Presentation of petitions, 1035, 1062, 1088, 1103, 1130, 1166

Old age security—Cont'd

- De-indexation of pensions—Cont'd
 - Press release by president of National Advisory Council on Aging, 1064
- Government policy, 376, 399, 407, 501

Old age security (Bill C-26)

- Canada Pension Plan, 1145
- Common-law spouses, 1115
- Never-married women, 1144
- Spouse's allowance, 1114, 1144
- War Veterans Allowance, 1145
- Speakers: Senators
 - Bonnell, M. Lorne, 1115
 - Marsden, Lorna, 1144
 - Marshall, Jack, 1114, 1144

Old Age Security bill C-26. 1r, 1101; 2r, 1114, 1144; 3r, 1178; r.a., 1217Olson, Hon. H.A., P.C.

- Agriculture
 - Discussion paper "Tax Issues in Agriculture", 667
 - Suggested referral to committee, qu, 606
 - Fertilizer supplement, possible legal action, qu, 693, 973
 - Potato industry, government assistance, qu, 2131
 - Prairie provinces, deteriorating situation, government action, qu, 967
 - Sugar-beet industry
 - Future prospects, qu, 933, 1173
 - Government policy, qu, 934, 1089, 1237, 1834, 1905, 2117
 - Producer and government representatives, meeting, qu, 2094
 - Stabilization payment, 1983, government policy, qu, 1311, 1738, 2023, 2048, 2152
 - 1986 crop year, government policy, qu, 2091
 - Western Canada
 - Drought and other conditions
 - Availability of application forms, qu, 1870
 - Government assistance, qu, 1223, 1325, 1431, 1479, 1559, 1670, 1671, 1714, 1736, 2023, 2283
 - Government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46 (g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1451
 - Government policy, qu, 1834
 - Effect on harvest of adverse climatic conditions, government assistance, qu, 1374, 1376, 1380
 - World grain prices, initial payment for wheat, qu, 2171
- Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
 - Proposed splitting of committee, 2447
- Air Canada
 - Board of directors, replacement of members, qu, 658
- Alberta
 - Economy, government assistance, qu, 2308
- Banking
 - Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank
 - Deposit insurance, government policy, qu, 1266, 1276
 - Replies to questions, qu, 1374
 - Green paper on regulation of financial institutions, status, qu, 1310
 - Northland Bank
 - Compensation of depositors, government policy, qu, 1297
 - Regulation of banks, qu, 1287
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 1107
- Report

Olson, Hon. H.A., P.C.—Cont'dBanking, Trade and Commerce Committee—*Cont'd*Report—Cont'd

13th, financial institutions depositors' compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, 1805

Borrowing Authority, 1986-87, bill C-99, 2315

Budget

Agriculture, impact of cuts, qu, 1134

De-indexation of pension benefits, request for reply to petitions, qu, 1037

Preparation, use of consultants, qu, 447, 635

Tax increases, government policy, qu, 932

Budget, impact on senior citizens, 997

Budget, proposals, 2140

Commodity exchanges, 2141

Downstream/upstream oil revenue, 2142

Energy deregulation, 2141

Farm financing and debt servicing, 2141

National sugar policy, 2140

New oil reference price, 2142

Nielsen report, 2143

Petro-Canada lay-offs, 2143

Canada-United States relations

Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1388, 1399

Government policy, qu, 2265

Position of United States, qu, 2303, 2472

Provincial participation, qu, 1557

Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting, agenda, qu, 2130, 2151

U.S. agriculture policy as agenda item, 2273

Acid rain, scope of agreement, 2201

Oil import tax, agenda item, qu, 2174

Trade

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes, shingles and steel products, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2533

Tariff discussions, request for information, qu, 2542, 2702

Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81, 1826

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited

Sale to Boeing Corporation

Off-the-record private briefings, job security, qu, 1716, 1855

Economy

Canadian dollar

Decline in value, qu, 1926, 1939

Value, qu, 2492, 2503

Interest rates

Government policy, qu, 2121

Increase, qu, 2001, 2561, 2568, 2703

Energy

Gas pricing policy, advisory committee, qu, 471,

International oil pricing, agenda item at economic summit, 2023

New pricing agreement, progress of negotiations, qu, 423, 501, 631

Oil and gas industry layoffs, government policy, qu, 2445, 2494

Oil and gas pricing, government policy, qu, 2584

Oil pricing, qu, 2001, 2022, 2034, 2046, 2217

Government action, qu, 2087

Government policy, qu, 1866, 1923

Request for answers, 1904

Protection of interests of producers, government action, qu, 1850

Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, government policy, qu, 467, 501

Pricing, deregulation of industry, government policy, qu, 2464, 2538

Energy Administration bill C-112, 2732, 2771

Deregulation, 2732

TransCanada Pipelines, 2732

Olson, Hon. H.A., P.C.—Cont'd

Energy and Natural Resources Committee

5th report, "Oil Marketing: 1986", 2744

Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada bill S-5, 1414, 1476

Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2756

Rural transition program, 2756

Farm Improvement Loans bill C-56, 1154

Debt service charge, 1154

Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1818

Foreign affairs

Africa, famine relief, qu, 524, 638

Green paper on competitiveness and security, qu, 897, 908

Mexico, reported nuclear pact with Canada, correction to statement by Leader of the Government, qu, 467

Government of Canada

Alleged freeze on programs, qu, 523, 680

Industry

Layoffs at Calgary and Regina IPSCO plants, government action, 2119

Petro-chemical feedstocks, cost, qu, 45

International terrorism

Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, expression of outrage, expression of condolences, 1503, 1531

International trade

Beef imports from European Economic Community, qu, 983

Inter-Parliamentary Conference on the Environment, Nairobi, Kenya, 333, 514

See appendix p. 517

Libya

United States air strike, request for answers, 2277

Lutheran Church in America (Canada Section) and the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada

Presentation of petition, 1405

National Revenue

Suggested increase in corporate taxes, qu, 353

Oil Substitution and Conservation and Canadian Home Insulation Program bill C-24, 1124

Cost-effectiveness of programs, 1124

Old age security

De-indexation of pensions, presentation of petitions, 1088, 1104

Parliamentary secretaries

Suggested appointment of senators, qu, 842

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67

Commons disagreement with Senate amendment, 2853

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax bill C-8, 392

Petroleum Incentives Program bill C-85, 2226, 2247

Canadianization, 2250

"Farm-in" arrangements, 2249

Grandfathering, 2227

Ministerial discretion, 2227, 2249

"Specified portion", 2227

Prairie Farm Assistance bill C-41, 1094

Crop insurance, 1094

User-pay philosophy, 1095

Rules of the Senate

Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, qu, 114, 426

Rule 67 (1), motion to amend, 2460

Science and Technology

Canada-Alberta memorandum of understanding, qu, 780, 813

Senate

Adjournment, 2197

Availability of information in absence of government leader, qu, 1869

Business, 1680

Christmas recess, 1793

Olson, Hon. H.A., P.C.—Cont'dSenate—Cont'd*Business—Cont'd

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1686

Expressions of welcome and appreciation, 11

Question Period

Request for answers, 1050, 1951, 1986, 2555

Social programs

Universality, government policy, qu, 399

Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.

United Nations award, felicitations, 1011

Transport

Canadian airports, security, qu, 1109

Travel to Ukraine, refund of reservation deposits, request for action, 2581, 2770

Unemployment insurance

Benefits, proposed cutbacks, qu, 97

Ontario

Tornado damage, government action, 986, 1258

Ontario and Manitoba Courts amendmentSpeakers: Senators

Flynn, Jacques, 365

Frith, Royce, 365

Ontario and Manitoba Courts Amendment bill C-3. 1r, 332; 2r, 365; 3r, 384; r.a., 403Opening of Parliament

Speech from the Throne by Her Excellency the Governor General, 3

Order of Canada

Appointment of former members of federal cabinet and former provincial premiers, 2288

Point of order, 2364

Revised reply, 2449

Expression of thanks, 2470

Order, point of

Budget, impact on senior citizens, 991

Speaker's ruling, 1051

Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84, availability of committee proceedings, 1952

Senate

Availability of explanatory background notes from Commons on receipt of bills for first reading, 1984

Business

Orders of the Day, 1439

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferral of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1686

Hébert, Senator, hunger strike, 2211

Minutes of the Proceedings

Recording of choosing of Acting Speaker, 1966

Recording of points of order, 1967

Official report, 2208

Question Period, "Order for Return", 1324

Tabling of documents in bilingual form in compliance with Official Languages Act, 2565

Youth Committee

2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2336

Speaker's ruling, 2342

Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament, Standing Senate Committee

Appointment, 8

ParliamentAddress to both houses

De Cuellar, His Excellency Javier Perez, Secretary General, United Nations, 624

See appendix p. 640

Nakasone, His Excellency Yasuhiro, Prime Minister of Japan, 1833

See appendix p. 1843

Caucus rooms, electronic eavesdropping

Apology by Deputy Prime Minister, 1941

Prime Minister's reaction, 1926

Caucus rooms and members' offices, electronic eavesdropping, 1925

Estimates, 1986-87, Parliament vote 10 referred to proposed Standing Joint Committee, 2083

Report of commission to review salaries of members of Parliament and senators, definition of "members of Parliament" and "salaries", question of privilege, 921

Staff relations, denial of right to strike, 832

Standing joint committees,

Message from Commons, 2082

Propriety of Commons referrals, 2128, 2195

Speaker's statement, 2223

Parliament buildings

Centre Block, removal of photographs of British Prime Ministers, 1383, 1435

Parliament Buildings, Centre Block, removal of photographs of British Prime Ministers, 1468, 1489, 1527, 1933

Westminster heritage, 1933

Speakers: Senators

Corbin, Eymard, 1527, 1934

Hicks, Henry D., 1489, 1933

Parliament Hill

Air pollution, message from Commons, 1495

Public education campaign, 1649, 1673

Canadian flag at half-staff, 647

Cost of relocation of tourist tent, 1433

"Fairylane of beauty and excitement", 1716

Landscaping east of Centre Block, 909

Suggested relocation of tourist reception tent, 946, 974

Parliamentary Affairs Commission of the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians

Meeting in Brazil, 2489, 2592

See appendix p. 2595

Parliamentary employment and staff relations

Canada Labour Code, 2724

Collective bargaining framework, 2724

Compulsory arbitration, 2725

Employee consultation, 2696

Implications for independence of Parliament, 2778

Parliamentary privileges and traditions, 2781

Public Service Staff Relations Act, 2724

Right to grieve, 2724

Speakers: Senators

Corbin, Eymard G., 2781

Frith, Royce, 2777

MacEachen, Allan J., 2696

Muir, Robert, 2723, 2781

Nurgitz, Nathan, 2780

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45. 1r, 2696; 2r, 2723; ref to com, 2725; rep without amdt but with comments, 2776; 3r, 2777; r.a., 2783

Parliamentary secretaries

Suggested appointment of senators, 841, 1224

Parole

Release of dangerous inmates, 2838

Parole and penitentiary

Amendment, 2813, 2828
 Amendment implications, 2815
 Chronology of events, 2848
 Dangerous Offenders Act, 2849
 Day parole, 2792, 2802
 Earned remission, 2795, 2843, 2846
 Federal Court of Canada, decision citation, 2798
 Federal/provincial responsibilities, 2813
 Freedom of the individual, 2798
 Gating, 2797, 2806, 2852
Howard vs Stoney Mountain Penitentiary, 2846
 Laskin, Chief Justice Bora, quote, 2796
 "Mandatory supervision: A Discussion Paper", 2797
 Number of mentally ill and dangerous inmates, 2842
 One-Chance mandatory supervision, 2791, 2792
 Parole Board credibility, 2807
 Parole Board decision statistics, 2844
 Point of order, 2822
 Potential for abuse, 2849
 Precedents for Commons non-concurrence, 2840
 Public concern, 2816
 Public safety, 2794, 2805, 2807
 Regional representation on Parole Board, 2812
 Retroactivity, 2799
 Roles of Parole Board and courts, 2804, 2847
 Senate responsibility, 2819
Speakers: Senators
 Doody, C. William, 2839
 Fairbairn, Joyce, 2846
 Frith, Royce, 2828, 2849
 Hastings, Earl A., 2793, 2805
 Hicks, Henry D., 2820
 MacEachen, Allan J., 2803, 2839, 2850
 Molgat, Gildas L., 2821
 Murray, Lowell, 2815, 2823
 Nurgitz, Nathan, 2791, 2798, 2822, 2826, 2841, 2854
 Olson, H.A., 2853
 Tremblay, Arthur, 2827
 also
 Kelleher, Hon. James, Solicitor General, 2802

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67. 1r, 2747; 2r, 2790, 2800; ref to Committee of the Whole, 2801; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, Hon. James Kelleher P.C., Solicitor General, taking part in the debate, 2802; rep with amdt, 2822; 3r, m in amdt, 2830; message from Commons of disagreement with Senate amdt, 2839; m for non-insistence on Senate amdt, 2839; r.a., 2857

Parole and related statutes

Calculation of sentences, 2800
 Correctional Service of Canada, new designation, 2800

Speakers: Senators

Hastings, Earl A., 2801
 Nurgitz, Nathan, 2800

Parole and related Statutes bill C-68. 1r, 2749; 2r, 2800; ref to Committee of the Whole, 2801; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair, 2822; rep without amdt, 2824; 3r, 2832; r.a., 2857

Patronage appointments, 66, 109Penitentiaries

Canada-Alberta agreement and memorandum of intent
 Effect on employees, 1852, 1988
 Request for tabling, 1849, 1927
 Tabled, 1988
 Conditions, government study, 1836
 Stoney Mountain, construction of doghouse, 1869, 1988

Pension (Bill C-28)

Annual increase in basic rate of pension, 531
 Continuation of married rate extension, 531
 Pension Entitlement Boards, 532
 Pension Review Board, 532
 Prisoners of war, 540
 Residence requirements, 541
 Spouses of severely disabled veterans, 532
They Served - We Care recommendations, 539
 Veterans exposed to radiation, 540

Speakers: Senators

Bonnell, M. Lorne, 539
 Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 539
 Marshall, Jack, 531, 541

Pension bill C-28. 1r, 529; 2r, 531, 539; 3r, 588; r.a., 617

Pension benefits standards

Availability to part-time workers, 2735
 Early vesting and locking-in, 2735
 Excess credit "stripping", 2771
 Inflation protection, 2736
 Portability, 2735
 Survivors share, 2736

Speakers: Senators

Doyle, Richard J., 2734
 McElman, Charles, 2771

Pension Benefits Standards, 1985 bill C-90. 1r, 2734; 2r, 2734, 2771; 3r, 2772; r.a., 2783

People's Republic of China

Delegation, visit, 1220

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C.

Canada-United States relations

Trade

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes, shingles and steel products, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, qu, 2530, 2542
 Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, qu, 2543, 2560

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Cutbacks in service, qu, 100
 Staff reductions, 944

Criminal Code (lotteries) bill C-81, 1522Currency bill C-21, 456

Calgary Winter Olympics, 457
 Olympic Coins, 457

Program to help smaller communities to build facilities, 457

Energy

Oil pricing, government policy, qu, 1864

Expo 86

Attendance of members of Parliament, 2090

Film industry

Identification of Canadian production locales, qu, 2097

Fonyo, Steve

"Journey for Lives" across Canada, 941

Foreign investment

Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, reported statement, qu, 102

Forestry and Fisheries
 Government policy, qu, 45
 Human rights
 Discriminatory hiring practices, government policy, qu, 2095
 International trade
 European Economic Community, proposed export of agricultural products to Canada, qu, 987
 Metric conversion, government policy, qu, 2003
 National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2350
 Restaurant of Parliament
 Availability of French apples, qu, 59
 Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1249
 Sports Pool and Loto Canada Winding-up bill C-2, 1096
 Calgary Winter Olympics, 1097
 Loto Canada, 1097
 Provincial commitment, 1099
 Sports Pool, 1098

Petitions, 1789

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax

Annual tax credit, 364
 Major measures, 364
 Technical amendments, 364
Speakers: Senators
 Olson, H.A., 392
 Phillips, Orville H., 364, 393

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax bill C-8. 1r, 347; 2r, 364, 392; 3r, 398; r.a., 403

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax and Income Tax

Canadianization, 1929
 Multinational promises, 1929
 PGRT phase-out, 1912
 Security of supply, 1929
Speakers: Senators
 Doody, C. William, 1912
 Hastings, Earl A., 1928

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax and Income Tax bill C-82. 1r, 1881; 2r, 1912, 1928; 3r, 1943; r.a., 2031

Petroleum Compensation Charge, 37

Petroleum Incentives Program

Canadianization, 2226, 2250
 Commitments, 2226
 Exploration Tax Credit, 2225
 "Farm-in" arrangements, 2249
 Framework, 2224
 Frontier exploration, 2225
 Grandfathering, 2227, 2248
 Ministerial discretion, 2227, 2248, 2249
 PIP phase-out, 2225
 "Specified portion", 2248
Speakers: Senators
 Barootes, Efsthios, 2224, 2247
 Hastings, Earl A., 2225
 Olson, H.A., 2227, 2249

Petroleum Incentives Program bill C-85. 1r, 2214; 2r, 2224; 3r, 2247; r.a., 2258

Petten, Hon. William J.

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 732
 Christmas greetings, 415
 Cook, Hon. Eric, tributes, 24
 Divorce and Corollary Relief and Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance bills C-47 and C-48, notice of inquiry withdrawn, 1997
 Health, ill effects of smoking, 1935
 Petitions, 1789

Phillips, Hon. Orville H.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 250
 Agricultural Stabilization bill C-25, 1195
 Hog production in P.E.I., 1198
 Potato industry, 1198
 Top-loading, 1195
 Tripartite stabilization plans/, 1195
 Budget speech
 Accommodation for senators in Senate gallery of House of Commons, 924
 Cabinet, access to information, 287
 Canadian Patent No. 855, 255 bill S-4, 921
 Commercial Arbitration bill, C-108, 2444, 2451, 2462
 Deficit, 253
 Duties Relief bill C-98, 2654, 2670
 Machinery program, 2655
 Streamlining of procedures, 2655
 Environment
 Air pollution on Parliament Hill and public education campaign, 1675
 Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2720
 Foreign affairs, gift of war planes to Turkey, 442
 Balance of power between Turkey and Greece, 443
 NATO, 443
 Possibility of Greek airforce receiving aircraft, 443
 House of Commons bill C-63, 1213
 Committee on Internal Economy, 1213
 Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie, the late, tribute, 2528
 Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee
 Senate estimates for 1986-87/, 1711
 Korea, Committee on Economics and Science of National Assembly, visit, 2065
 Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 Authority to meet during sittings of the Senate, 2542
 Library of Parliament Committee
 Frequency of meetings and composition, 28, 62
 National Finance Committee
 Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 850
 Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 Instruction to report, 560
 Meeting, 2061
 Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax bill C-8, 364, 393
 Annual tax credit, 364
 Major measures, 364
 Technical amendments, 364
 Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 860
 Printing of Parliament Committee
 Frequency of meetings and composition, 28, 62
 Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 Frequency of meetings and composition, 28
 Rules of the Senate
 Rule 77 (7) motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 1917, 1993
 "Ginger-ale" research, 1993
 Motion in amendment, 1993

Phillips, Hon. Orville H.—Cont'd

Selection Committee

Reports

- 1st, Speaker pro tempore, 25, 54
- 2nd, committee members, 25, 54
- 3rd, committee members, 220, 225
- 4th, committee members, 504, 533
- 5th, committee members, 2566
- 6th, committee members, 2699

Senate

- Adjournment, 2022, 2077, 2441
- Allocation of rooms, question of privilege, 2016
- Business, 96, 592, 647, 924, 2015, 2463, 2530
- Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 801
- Meetings of committees, 1009
- Official report, request for revision of statement, 279
- Proceedings, authority to broadcast, 906, 1245
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - “Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians for a Better Future”, authority to study consultation paper, 1409
- Social welfare, 253
- Sports Pool and Loto Canada Winding-up bill C-2, 1048
 - Calgary Olympics, 1048
 - Losses, 1048
 - Medical research, 1048
- Standing Rules and Orders
 - 11th report, 2463
- Terrorism, appointment of special Senate committee, 2539
- Unemployment, 252
- United Nations Arbitral Awards Convention bill C-107, 2449, 2461
- Youth Committee
 - Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 1467

Pine Hill Divinity Hall

History, 1782

Speaker: Senator

Hicks, Henry D., 1781

Pine Hill Divinity Hall bill S-7. 1r, 1733; 2r, 1781; ref to com, 1783; rep without amdt, 1863; 3r, 1863; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 2614; r.a., 2623

Pioneer Trust payment continuation

- Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, 857
- Downturn in real estate market, 875
- Government of Saskatchewan, 857
- Income Averaging Annuity Certificates, 857, 876
- Operations of company, 861
- Payment of interest, 862, 874
- Setting of precedent, 862
- Speaker's ruling, 873
- The Fifth Estate*, 882
- “The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion”, 877
- Unprotected depositors, 857
- Speakers: Senators
 - Argue, Hazen, 858, 874
 - Barootes, Efsthathios, 857, 874
 - Everett, Douglas D., 859
 - Roblin, Duff, 877
 - Steuart, D.G., 861, 879, 882

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50. 1r, 850; 2r, 857, 873; 3r, 882; r.a., 928

Point of Order

See Order, point of

Pornography, 50, 111

Post-secondary education

See National Finance Committee

Poverty

Secretary of State for External Affairs, reported statement on “elementary conditions”, 1716

Poverty in Canada

- Poverty Line Update 1983, 73
- Poverty Line Update, 1984, 1495
- See* appendix p. 1513

Prairie farm assistance

- Crop insurance, 1072, 1094
- Prairie Farm Emergency Fund, 1058
- User-pay philosophy, 1095
- Western Grains Research Foundation, 1058

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 1072
- Balfour, R. James, 1057, 1095
- Olson, H.A., 1094

Prairie Farm Assistance bill C-41. 1r, 1035; 2r, 1057, 1072; 3r, 1094; r.a., 1101

Press releases, 67Prime Minister

- Broadcast speech on free trade, availability of text in advance, 2653
- Criticism of appointments, request for apology, 660
- Newspaper advertisement, 769
- Request for clarification of statements, 197
- United Nations, fortieth anniversary, speech, 1405, 1430
- See* appendix p. 1445

Prince Edward Island

- Economy, government assistance, 2304, 2328
- Legislative Assembly members, visit, 1496

Printing of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

Frequency of meetings and composition, 28, 62

Privacy

- Reported giving of information re unemployed, 2094, 2600
- Tabling of documents, 75

Privacy Commissioner

Report tabled, 2838

Privilege, 1096

- Foreign affairs
 - Green paper on competitiveness and security, 921
- Parliament
 - Report of commission to review salaries of members of Parliament and senators, definition of “members of Parliament” and “salaries”, 921
- Rowe, Hon. Frederick W., omission from attendance record, 1226
- Senate
 - Office of Speaker, newspaper report, 900
 - Prime Minister, comments, 396
 - Statement by Senator Roblin on alleged conflict of interest, 2444

Property Qualification of Senators

- Renewal, 303
- Report tabled, 396
- Supplementary return authorized, 396

Public pensions reportingSpeakers: Senators

McElman, Charles, 2030

Robertson, Brenda M., 2030

Public Pensions Reporting bill C-255. 1r, 1985; 2r, 2030; ref to com, 2030; rep without amdt, 2084; 3r, 2104; r.a., 2258

Public Service

Alleged requirement for ministerial approval of job applications, 224

Placement of former ministerial assistants, 214, 224, 428

Public Works

Cleaning services

Placement of laid-off employees aged fifty and over, 2117

Possible layoff of employees, 1941, 2102

Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, awarding of contract for federal building, 2388

United States Embassy property, possible acquisition by Government of Canada, 316, 432

Public Works and Public Lands Grants

Department of Public Works, 437

Speakers: Senators

LeBlanc, Roméo, 437

Walker, David, 357

Public Works and Public Lands Grants bill C-13. 1r, 347; 2r, 357, 437; 3r, 456; r.a., 617

Publishing industry

Canadian share of market, 2428, 2494

Quebec, 17, 53

National Assembly, parliamentary interns, visit, 504

Provincial election results, 1557

Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty

Thirty-third anniversary of accession to Throne, felicitations, 492

Questions (oral)

Aboriginal peoples

Goose Bay, Labrador

Barring of Inuit from meeting addressed by Minister of Justice, 2546

Request for report and apology, 2547

Request for answer, 2581

Proposed NATO base, funding of interest groups, 2582

Queen Charlotte Islands, logging dispute, Haida Indian rights, 1517, 1560

Yukon economic development program, delay in implementation, government policy, 2095

Access to information

Government guidelines for public servants, 188, 195, 214, 427, 428

Adams, Right Honourable John, the late, Prime Minister of Barbados

Representation at funeral, 647

Advertising

Source of funds for material in magazine, 1111

Agricultural products producers, availability of financial assistance, 1943, 2680

Agriculture

Discussion paper "Tax Issues in Agriculture", 667

Questions (oral)—Cont'd

Agriculture—Cont'd

Discussion paper 'Tax Issues in Agriculture'—Cont'd

Government attitude, 608

Suggested referral to committee, 606

Farm credit crisis, request for meeting of ministers of agriculture, 985

Farm debt legislation, government policy, 2571

Farm debt review, 1267

Role of panels, 2096

Fertilizer supplement, possible legal action, 693, 973

Grain

Grasshopper threat in prairie provinces, request for assistance, 2547

Request for response, 2570

Plight of producers, deficiency payments and two-price system for wheat, government policy, 2285

Inspection fees, government policy, 695

Marketing of potatoes, 80, 242, 510, 537, 638

National strategy, 1558

National sugar policy, 1654

Potato industry

Government assistance, 2037, 2095, 2130

Re-establishment of commission of inquiry, 1971

Stabilization assistance, 1974

Stabilization or diversion program, 1970, 2099

Stabilization policy, 2154, 2173

Prairie provinces, deteriorating situation, government action, 967

Sugar-beet industry

Future prospects, 933, 1173

Government policy, 760, 770, 934, 1089, 1173, 1176, 1237, 1834, 1852, 1870, 1905, 1923, 1943, 1974, 2117, 2133

Meeting between producers and government representatives, 2094

1983 Stabilization payment, 1093, 1174, 1313, 1400, 1433, 1502, 1537, 1559, 1737

Government policy, 1311, 1987, 2003, 2023, 2036, 2048, 2067, 2152

1986 crop year, government policy, 2090

Request for answer, 1324, 1354

United States and EEC subsidies, Canadian position at Tokyo, 2428

Western Canada

Drought and other conditions, government assistance, 1223, 1231, 1280, 1325, 1362, 1406, 1430, 1479, 1501, 1536, 1559, 1670, 1671, 1714, 1735, 1854, 2023, 2283

Availability of application forms, 1870

Government policy, 1834

Grain producers and beef producers, disparity in criteria for payments, 1942, 2101

Effect on harvest of adverse climatic conditions, government assistance, 1374, 1376, 1380

Western Grain Stabilization Act, suggested amendment, 2269

Wheat

Domestic price, 2667

Exports to Republic of China, 2173, 2679

Two-price system

Effect of price increase, 2382, 2387

Effect on baking industry, 2667

Possible influx of subsidized American bakery products, 2286

World grain prices, initial payment for wheat, 2161, 2171

Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee

Proposed splitting of committee, progress of debate, 2446

Air Canada

Board of Directors, replacement of members, 658, 660

Strike of ticket agents, 831, 856

Alberta

Questions (oral)—Cont'dAlberta—Cont'd

Economy, government assistance, 2308

Appropriations

Bill C-54, urgency of passage, 1066, 1091

Bill C-115, request for information, 2770

Auditor General

Cabinet documents, access to information, 320

Aviation disastersAir-India aircraft loss

Tokyo Airport explosion, possible acts of terrorism, 1108, 1237

Treatment of insurance claims, 1113

BankingCanadian Commercial Bank

Bad loans, 1373

Collapse, 1226

Alleged existence of document indicating difficulty, 1255

Committee study, 1230, 1256

Request for answers, 1377

Leader of the Government, correction of statement, 1265

Offer of chartered banks to assist in examination of loan portfolio, 1252

Priority of creditors, 1256

Protection of pension funds, 1280

Role of independent auditors, 1254

Government assistance, 705

Judgment of Inspector General as to solvency, 1230

Memorandum of intent, request for information, 1252, 1266, 1436

Request for answers, 1322, 1353

Salvage recommendation, 1285

Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank

Availability of names of uninsured depositors, 1373

Compensation of depositors, referral of subject matter of bill to committee, 1295

Delay in instituting inquiry, 1376

Deposit insurance, government policy, 1266, 1276

Replies to questions, 1374

Senate study, 1234

Wording of resolution, 1235

Status of proposed joint committee, 1221

Confidence in system, 1372Estey Commission of Inquiry, 1295*Green paper on regulation of financial institutions

Status, 1310

Suggested withdrawal, 1312

International banking centres, promotion, 2089, 2471Loans to aid-receiving countries, alleged restriction, 871, 953, 974*Mercantile Bank, possibility of merger, government involvement, 1379*Northland Bank

Compensation of debenture holders, 1311

Compensation of depositors, government policy, 1297

Status, 1235, 1256

Payments to uninsured depositors, government policy, 1374

Regulation of banks, 1286

Board of Grain Commissioners

Termination of appointment of member, status of Chief Commissioner, 1950

Broadcasting

Caplan task force report, 2504, 2586

Task force, qualifications of co-chairman, 942

Threatened jamming of U.S. radio station by Cuba, possible interference with radio station CFRB, Toronto, 945, 1023

Budget

Agriculture, impact of cuts, 1134

Questions (oral)—Cont'dBudget—Cont'd

Atlantic provinces, impact of measures, 986, 1020

Date of presentation, 494, 509, 637, 677

De-indexation of pension benefits

Government position, 1013, 1021

Government statement, 1169

Request for reply to petitions, 1037

Farm Credit loan provisions, impact on farmers, 2086

Impact of measures, 1016

Impact on employment, 932

Impact on firefighting personnel at airports, 2112, 2223

Minister of External Affairs, statement, government position, 781

Oil pricing, loss of revenue, 2112, 2222

Preparation

Alleged negotiations between government and Independent

Petroleum Association of Canada, 446

Use of consultants, 447, 635, 1090

Proposed business transfer tax, 2112

Request for briefing, 925

Tax incentive for investment in Cape Breton, 951

Tax increases, government policy, 929

Timing of implementation of budgetary measures, 1020

Version of budget paper sent to Canadian embassies, 2149, 2272

Cabinet

Access to information, 113

Conflict-of-interest guidelines, government policy, 2384, 2387, 2388, 2405

Senator's arm's length relationship, 2386

Leader of the Government in the Senate, responsibilities, 28, 41, 213

Canada Council

Effect of budget reductions, 46

Canada Development Corporation

Sale of shares, government policy, 945, 975

Canada Post Corporation

Closing of post office at Forget, Saskatchewan, 2584

Closing of post office at Springhill, Nova Scotia, 2704

Door-to-door delivery service, limited cancellation, 831, 937

Prospective strike, government policy, 530

Replacement of board members, 2569

Canada-United States relations

American countervail on Atlantic groundfish, government attitude, 1853

Bank of Nova Scotia, appeal to Supreme Court of United States, 478, 504

Bilateral trade negotiations, 1388, 1392, 1399, 1431, 1521

Agricultural products, 1309

Marketing boards, 2207

Agriculture, consultations with Canadian producers, 2364, 2472

Benefits accruing to other trading partners, 2464, 2495

Canadian publishing and Canadian magazines, 2769

Canadian use of lobbyist, 2304

Canadian testimony before congressional committee or special prosecutor, government policy, 2426, 2537

Government position, 2383

Cultural industries, 1651

Effect on Canadian lumber industry, 1853

Export of fresh water, 1851

Fisheries, imposition of U.S. tariff, government attitude, 2386

Government policy, 1236, 1535, 1538, 2265, 2328, 2342

Government position on United States undertakings, 2282

Individual negotiators for specialized areas, 2668

Questions (oral)—Cont'dCanada-United States relations—*Cont'd*Bilateral trade negotiations—Cont'd

Items for negotiation, 1352, 2665

Items not for negotiation, 1353

Participation of provinces, 1552, 1557

Statement by Premier of Ontario, 2045, 2222

Position of United States, 2303

Remuneration of Canadian negotiator, 1852

Request for amplification of delayed answer, 2505

Role of lobbyist, 2268

Position of U.S., 2472

United States countervailing duties, government action, 2467

United States ambassador's comments, 1308, 1310

User fees on Great Lakes, 1517, 1718

Canadian advertising in United States media, 651

Canadian content rules, effect on U.S. trade into Canada, 2503

Canadian hog export embargo, 953

Canadian hog production, United States import duty, 738, 971

Canadian potatoes, United States import duty, 727, 740, 973

Cultural heritage and national identity, government policy, 2769

Extraterritorial jurisdiction, 648

Fish, alleged subsidization of Canadian exports, 1063

Free trade

Impact on auto pact, availability of report to Province of Ontario, 2493

Free trade arrangement, impact on employment in Canada, 1518

Garrison Dam project, 46, 82, 102, 214, 497, 795

Diversion unit legislation enactment, 2448, 2555

United States study of bill, 2342

Georges Bank, World Court judgment, 298

Government policy, 81, 243

Investment restrictions, 650

Japanese automobile plants, effect of establishment in Canada, 2493

Kidnapping of Canadian citizen by bounty hunters from United States, 529

Northern waters, sovereignty, 1092

Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting

Acid rain, government objectives, 2160

Status of agreement, 2382, 2472

Scope of agreement, 2197

Agenda, 2130, 2151

Oil import tax, agenda item, 2174

Status of document, 2155, 2272

U.S. agriculture policy as agenda item, 2207, 2273, 2389

Request for answer, 2365

Prime Minister's speech in Chicago

"Cultural sovereignty", definition, 1656

"Joint tenancy" and "constructive internationalism", definition, 1655

Request for amplification of delayed answer, 2505

Summit meeting in Quebec City

Absence of Governor General, 657, 669, 671, 674, 677, 814, 1174, 2494

Agenda, 648

Availability of background information, 762

Declaration on international security, 674, 814, 833, 937

Effect on employment in Atlantic provinces, 678, 1023

Invitations to gala performance, request for answer, 2221

Newspaper article, 652

Press release, 652

Request for texts of agreements, 673

Trade

Commitment to halt protectionism, 2770

Imposition of tariff on publications and computer parts, 2536, 2545, 2546

Questions (oral)—Cont'dCanada-United States relations—*Cont'd*Trade—Cont'd

Imposition of U.S. tariffs and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2542, 2560, 2562, 2566, 2572, 2582, 2702, 2703

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles, 2489

Compensation, 2502

Compensation for workers in industry, 2547

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles and steel products, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2530

New approaches, government policy, 62, 242, 259

Policy, 648

Tariff discussions, request for information, 2542, 2702

Trans-border pollution problems, 608, 669, 1951, 2050, 2102, 2156

Mandate of special envoys, 671

U.S. weapons testing in Canada

Cruise missile mishap, 1868, 1869, 1871, 2039

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Effect of budget reductions, 46, 1479

Funding, government policy, 318

Independence, government policy, 99, 318

International service, possible cancellation, 194, 427

Mandate, parliamentary committee study, 318, 322

Rumoured sale, 299

Staff reductions, 944

Canadian National Railways

Board of Directors

Replacement of chairman, 779, 812

Replacement of members, 833, 2023

Canadian Pension Commission

Replacement of Wing Commander MacKenzie, DFC, 1066, 1174

Canadian Wheat Board

Alleged absence of minister from advisory committee meetings, 1172, 1238

Appointment of commissioner, 2173

Criticism contained in study team report to task force on program review, 2149

Dwarf wheat, marketing, 741

Mission to China, composition of delegation, 2585, 2669

Cape Breton

Labour relations, 2789

Provincial status, 2790

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Board of directors, appointment, 1235

President, appointment, 725, 726, 1023

Chernenko, Konstantin, the late, President of U.S.S.R.

Government representation at funeral 677

Citizenship

Increase in fees, 98

Communications

Museum of Man, change of name, 1971, 1973, 2103

Concentration camps, 2100

Constitution

First ministers' conference, aboriginal rights, request for Senate representation, 692, 761

Quebec's opting out, government policy, 281

Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Combines and trust companies legislation, 1255

Patent Office closing, 954, 975

Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption

Alleged wrongdoing in inspection process, suggested prosecution, 1382

Labour union action at processing plant, 1382

Questions (oral)—Cont'dConsumer and Corporate Affairs—Cont'd*Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption—Cont'd

Responsibility of processor's parent company, government policy, 1381

Sale as pet food, 1382, 1436

Trademark legislation, 479, 679, 771

Correctional service

Commissioner's office, increased cost of administration, 2284, 2389

Corrections

Daniel Hawe report, production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2539

Request for tabling of documents, 2669, 2704

Crown corporations

Composition of boards of directors, 672

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited and Canadair Limited, government policy, 336, 432

Disposal, 297

Petro-Canada, possible privatization, 1280

Qualifications of officials, 1737

Cultural heritage and national identity

Government policy, 1278, 1381, 1432, 2701, 2769

Cultural organizations

Relationship to government, 222

Customs and excise

Prime Minister's wife, alleged non-declaration of gifts, 2560

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited

Possible negotiation of sale, government position, 813

Sale to Boeing Corporation, 1559, 1738, 1854

Burns Fry prospectus, 1854

Off-the-record private briefings, job security, 1715, 1855

Tabling of memorandum of agreement, 1654

Use of de Havilland technology, 1715, 1854

Department of the Environment

Research scientists, termination of employment, 214, 382

Diplomatic missions

Security, 652

Disarmament

Deployment of nuclear weapons, government policy, 472, 636

Space-based defensive weapons, government policy, 421, 424

Economic Council of Canada

Rumoured dissolution, 483, 637

Economic DevelopmentNova Scotia

Cape Breton Advisory Committee report

Government action, 1354

Request for copies, 1289

Economic SummitBonn, West Germany

Securing of third window, Prime Minister's statement, 851

United States embargo on Nicaragua, Canadian position, 852

United States interest rate policy, 811

World drug trade, government position, 850, 974

EconomyCanadian dollar

Decline in value, 508, 509, 543, 604, 1926, 1939, 2068

Government action, 1969, 1970, 2085, 2471

Market intervention, role of Governor of Bank of Canada, 1968, 2599

Request for statements of Chairman of Economic Council of Canada and Michael McCracken of Infometrica Ltd., 1970

Timing and extent of market intervention, 1999

Appearance of Governor of Bank of Canada before Senate, 2004

Value, 2492, 2503

Questions (oral)—Cont'dEconomy—Cont'd

Fiscal outlook, updated economic projections, 47

Foreign investment, competition, 355

Government policy, 781

Interest rates, 2203, 2283, 2329

Government policy, 238, 257, 428, 429, 676, 2121

Increase, 2001, 2561, 2568, 2703

Leader of the Government in the Senate, statement, request for clarification, 42, 76

Manitoba

Construction of Winnipeg research centre, 472

Cancellation, 44, 239

Mortgages, effect of bank rate on interest rates, 2205

National conference, 659, 689, 703, 709, 815

Availability of information, 660

Senate opposition representation, 693

Suggested follow-up, 694

Pioneer Trust

Closing, 506

Status, 528

Taxation and unemployment, government policy, 211

United States investment in Canada, 1651

Wage and price controls, 377

EducationPost-secondary

Availability of report, 529, 814

Government assistance, 258, 284, 430

Ministerial meetings, 529

Toronto school, change of name, 1288

Employment

Cape Breton, unemployment rate, 2552

CN shops, layoffs at Moncton, government policy, 2548, 2552

CN shops, Prince Edward Island, 2570

Disparity in treatment of displaced employees, 2585

Effect of budgetary cuts on female employees, 407, 433

Government policy, 376

Job creation, 898, 910

Government policy, 79

London, Ontario, status of CN computer express terminal, 2554, 2702

Nannies, remuneration, 354

Nova Scotia, decentralization program, 101, 426, 498, 637

Public service staff reductions, job creation, government policy, 2469

Royal Commission, report, government response, 635

Summer Youth Employment Program, 409, 505, 2493, 2669

Employment and Immigration

Government policy, possible changes, 759

Immigrant wife of Canadian citizen, status, 2052

Long-term Illegal Migrants Review Committee, possible investigation of conduct of chairman, 791, 806, 936

Maclean's magazine, prospective hiring of non-Canadians, 769

End of Decade Women's Conference

Composition of Canadian delegation and agenda, 652, 899, 912, 970

Energy

Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Agreement, 334, 432

Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Development Agreement, 510, 638

Canadianization, government policy, 296

East coast exploration, replacement of petroleum incentive grants, government policy, 1363

Federal-provincial agreement, 741

Questions (oral)—Cont'dEnergy—Cont'd*Gasoline

Price reduction, 2154, 2329

Pricing, 2599

Pricing policy, proposed committee study, 280, 431, 470

Heavy oils, construction of upgrader at Lloydminster, Alberta, government policy, 2122

Higher cost producers, minister's statement, request for clarification, 2119

International oil pricing, agenda item at Economic Summit, 2022, 2156, 2222

Natural gas exports to U.S., representations by Alberta and British Columbia, 1987

Natural gas, proposed pipeline to Vancouver Island, 946

New pricing agreement, progress of negotiations, 423, 501, 631

Oil and gas industry

Application of tax incentives, 2119

Government policy, 2383

Layoffs, government policy, 2445, 2494

Pricing, government policy, 2583

Oil pricing, 2001, 2022, 2034, 2046, 2051, 2121, 2217, 2329

Government action, 2087, 2120

Government policy, 1864, 1923, 2004, 2134

Effect on Hibernia development, 1852

Request for answers, 1904

Protection of interests of producers, government action, 1850

Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, government policy, 467, 501

Petroleum Incentive Program, reduction in grants, 59, 301

Price of Canadian crude oil, 483, 637

Pricing, deregulation of industry, government policy, 2464, 2538

Energy, Mines and Resources

Articles sent to weekly newspapers, 2506

Director General of Communications, termination of employment, 381, 433

Environment

Government policy re employment, 79

Pollution, Niagara River and Great Lakes, 264, 382

Public Environment Group, 300, 319, 431

Soil conservation, 104

Toxicology research and development, government policy, 1715, 2101

Wildlife, effect of budgetary cuts, 299

World Commission on Environment and Development, submission, input of people of Canada, 2504

Estimates

Date of tabling, 494, 524, 535, 538, 542

Expo 86

Attendance of members of Parliament, 2090

External Affairs

Ambassador to Ireland, appointment

Alleged partisanship of appointee, 1940, 2102

Application of code of conduct, 2163

Clarke, Mr. Victor, Special Adviser to Canadian High Commission in London, appointment, 1670

Overseas distribution of summary of Globe and Mail items, 380, 501

Parking tickets, payment by Canadian diplomats abroad, 805

Passports, issuance at Hull, 851, 937

Visit by minister to U.S.S.R., 792

Family Allowances

De-indexation, petitions against Bill C-70, number and disposition, 1923

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements

Equalization payments, 208

Federal-provincial relations

Establishment of cross-party caucus committees, 2790

Questions (oral)—Cont'dFederal-provincial relations—Cont'd

Government of Quebec, attitude to sovereignty, 1502

Health and education, effect of reduction in transfer payments, 1520, 1556, 1558

Film industry

Identification of Canadian production locales, 2097

Finance

Deputy Minister, meetings, government policy, 1498

Document entitled "John Turner as Minister of Finance: An Era of Economic Decline", 262, 319, 429

Financial institutions, restructuring, possible committee study of discussion paper, 783

Ministerial aide, payment, 782

Protection of bondholders against inflation, reported statement by minister, 969

Suggested impropriety of minister, 807

Financial institutions

Concentration of economic power, government policy, 2283

Discussion paper, "The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion", 893

Pioneer Trust failure, request for investigation, 894, 925, 1022

Takeovers by industrial conglomerates, government policy, 2282

Fisheries

West German fleet, overfishing in waters under Canadian jurisdiction, 835, 870

Fisheries and Oceans

Decision of minister re licence, 1171, 1238

Request for answer, 1236

Fishing vessel support program, cancellation, 1986

Independence of inspectors, 1298

Inspection function, consultation with industry, 1298

Parliamentary secretary, whereabouts, 2070

Product inspection standards, 1363, 1906, 1922

Reported fee for access to minister, 1170

Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, 1230, 1236, 1258

Consumer confidence, future of Star-Kist plant, government policy, 1297, 1435

Request for answer, 1870

Members of the government, extent of knowledge, 1276

Prime Minister's Office, extent of knowledge, 1265, 1435

Request for answers, 1353

Suggested inquiry, 1308, 1384

Suggested method of disposal, 1254

Fitness and amateur sport

Appointment of females to advisory council, 2121

Foreign affairsAfghanistan

Possibility of political settlement, 1740

Refugees, government policy, 1740

Soviet army defectors, government policy, 2327

Africa, famine relief, 524, 638

Bangladesh, aid to disaster victims, 945

Burkina-Faso, closing of Canadian diplomatic post, 57, 301

Central America, use of military force, government policy, 2162, 2272

Forthcoming visit of government leader to southern Africa, correction of press report, 1868, 1870

Gift of war planes to Turkey, 410

Green paper on competitiveness and security, 897, 908, 909, 912

Honduras and Nicaragua, U.S. military assistance to Contra forces, government position, 792

India

Aid for victims of industrial accident at Bhopal, 263

Detention of Canadian national, 56, 115

Iran

Questions (oral)—Cont'dForeign affairs—Cont'd*Iran—Cont'd

- Diplomatic relations, re-establishment, 1257, 1435, 2068
- Expulsion of Iranian nationals from Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, 1311

Persecution of Baha'is, 480, 636

Lebanon, government aid, 99, 264

Mexico, reported nuclear pact with Canada, 450

Correction to statement by Leader of the Government, 467

Middle East

Gulf of Sidra, United States-Libya conflict, safety of Canadian nationals, 2221

Mission of Secretary of State for External Affairs, 2163

Namibia, proposed establishment of interim administration, government position, 791, 936

Nicaragua, absence of Canadian observers from election, 223, 382

Organization of American States, government policy, 60, 301

Overseas delegations, parliamentary representation, 760

Amplification of statement, 769

Philippines presidential election

Attitude of Canadian government, 2066

Possible recall of Canadian Ambassador, 2068

Status of Canada-Philippines relations, 2032, 2049

Sale of CF-104 aircraft to Turkey, 299, 431

Shooting down of South Korean aircraft, Soviet compensation for next-of-kin of Canadian victims, 761, 815

South Africa, apartheid

Canadian position at Commonwealth Conference, 1386, 1520

Government action to adopt United Nations convention, 2099

Third World, government aid, 934, 1173

U.S.S.R., treatment of Canadian journalist, government attitude, 770

United States, imposition of economic sanctions against Nicaragua, 837, 842, 974

Government policy, 855, 872, 881, 937

Visit of President Reagan to cemetery at Bitburg, West Germany, Prime Minister's views, 813

Zimbabwe, status of white farmers, 507

Foreign investment

Effect of Prime Minister's statements, 2151

Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, reported statement, 102

President of the Treasury Board, reported statement, 472, 679, 694

Forestry and Fisheries

Government policy, 45

Francophone Commonwealth

Establishment, possible participation of government, 337

Francophone summit

Canadian Head of State, reported statement by Prime Minister, 2048

Famine relief, reported breach of agreement between Government of Canada and Government of Quebec, 2033, 2069

Premier of New Brunswick, status, 2034, 2104

Government advertising

Awarding of contracts, 794

Government of Canada

Agricultural programs, composition of task force, 524

Alleged freeze on programs, 523, 680

Appointments, 694

Policies and personality of former Prime Minister Trudeau, government attitude, 850

Remuneration of senior officials and others, 704, 899

Questions (oral)—Cont'dGovernment of Canada—Cont'd

Visit of Deputy Prime Minister to Yukon, use of government aircraft, 896

Governor General

Visit to United Kingdom, 1517

Grain

Conference of ministers of exporting countries, 2448

International conference, government approach, 2504

Wheat pricing, terms of reference of House of Commons task force, 2468

Health

Communicable diseases, Canada's participation in world immunization program, 2036

Health and Welfare

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, 284, 500

Government action, 1233, 1434

Canada-Belgium Social Security Agreement, delay in tabling, 483, 680

Consumption of alcohol, "A little of what you fancy...", 1312

Fitness of meat for Canadian consumption, 1653, 2039

Hazardous products, government policy, 1309

Health services, universality, government policy, 350, 373, 500

Palliative care, use of heroin, government policy, 258

Social assistance programs

Suggested review, 706

Universality, government policy, 2037, 2049

Social benefits, issuance of discussion paper, 236

House of Commons

Alleged remarks by Conservative M.P., 2112

Attitude of government, 2133

Disparaging remarks by Conservative M.P., 2308

Placement of former members' staffs, 408

Human rights

Afghanistan and Iran, United Nations resolutions, Canada's position, 1716, 1739

Berne meeting, absence of senators from membership of observer group, 2349, 2412

Discriminatory hiring practices against visible minorities, 425

Discriminatory hiring practices, government policy, 2095

Fate of Polish refugee, 2349

Japanese-Canadians, government apology and compensation, 27, 240, 673, 790, 1657, 1835, 2364, 2789

Government policy, 1905

Meeting of experts, suggested participation by Canadian parliamentarians, 856, 868

Saskatchewan, passage of Bill 144 imposing settlement on government employees, 1972, 2103

Immigration

Entry of Jews, government action, 2469, 2470

Entry of Soviet refugees, government policy, 43, 58, 241, 411

Proposed reduction in quotas, 78

Qualifications for entry, 97

Refugee determination, government policy, 2285, 2468

Indian Act

Reinstatement of Indian women to membership of Indian bands, 525, 1836

Status of women, removal of discriminatory provisions, 262, 376, 380, 537, 870

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Departmental staff reductions, government policy, 1322

Frog Lake Indian Nation, self-government proposals, 2652

Industry

Aerospace, allocation of service contracts, 2051, 2068

Armaments, possible manufacture and export by West German company from proposed Canadian factory, 2038

Questions (oral)—Cont'dIndustry—Cont'd

- Canadian Porcelain Company, offer to purchase by employee co-operative, 952
- Government attitude, 989
- Co-op Implements, proposed relocation from Winnipeg to Regina, 530, 899
- Cornwall, establishment of American plant, 523, 524, 530, 712
- Footwear, importation quotas, government policy, 1362
- Layoffs at Calgary and Regina IPSCO plants, government action, 2119
- New Brunswick, closure of Star-Kist plant, government action, 1393
- Request for answer, 1400
- Petro-chemical feedstocks, cost, 45
- Railways, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Transcona shops and east yards, 935, 954
- St. Thomas, Ontario, foundry, possible closing, 2307
- Shipbuilding, government policy, 2111, 2679
- VIA Rail maintenance centre location, 538, 713
- Yukon, closing of Cyprus Anvil Mine, 927
- Re-opening of mine, status of negotiations, 1392

Insurance

- Bankruptcy of insurance companies, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, 2465, 2537
- Bankruptcy of Northumberland General Insurance Company, compensation of insured victims, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, 2552

International Centre for Ocean Development

- Board of directors, replacement of members, 793

International relations

- Proposed parliamentary committee, 215

International terrorism

- Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, 1497, 1717
- Seizure of Italian cruise ship, request for information, 1355, 1363
- Training sites, 1109

International trade

- European Economic Community
 - Beef imports from, 983
 - Proposed export of agricultural products to Canada, 987
- Exportation of grain to People's Republic of China, 78, 242
- Footwear, removal of import quotas, 1518, 1519, 1718
- Japanese automobiles, importation, government action, 982

Interprovincial trade

- Barriers, 1392

Inuit

- Status, government policy, 262, 411

Investment Canada

- Foreign investment
 - Government policy, 316, 317, 319, 431
 - Terminology, 352
- United Auto Workers Union, proposed independence of Canadian section, 317

June 24 celebrations

- Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, anniversary of landing of Giovanni Caboto, 1092

Justice

- Canada Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals
 - Cost and scope, 1921, 2101
 - Destroyed files, government action, 1377
 - Extension of mandate and cost, 2507
 - Extension of time, budget, 1654
 - Scope of inquiry, 1323
- Capital punishment, government policy, 238, 411, 740
- Quebec, appeal of speeding conviction, decision of minister, 282, 336, 430, 432
- Unlicensed cable television operators, stay of prosecutions, 221

Questions (oral)—Cont'dJustice—Cont'd

- Zundel, Ernst, conviction, 725

Labour

- Canada-United States free trade, prospective agreement, possible effects on employment, 2035
- Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, government attitude towards provisions, 1135, 1238

Law Reform Commission

- Bigamy and polygamy, treatment, 1255

Library of Parliament Committee

- Frequency of meetings and composition, 28, 62

Libya

- Canadian nationals
 - Evacuation, 2304
 - Safety, government position, 2305, 2327
- United States air strike

- Consultations between Canada and United States and between Canada and western allies, 2261, 2323, 2343
- Clarification of statement in official record, 2366
- Consultations with allies, 2281
- Government attitude, 2280
- Government policy, 2270
- Identification of special envoy, 2286
- Legality under international law, 2281
- Position of Canadian nationals, 2268
- Reported incidents in Tripoli, 2281
- Request for answers, 2277

Manitoba

- Winnipeg, future of St. Paul's College site building, 300, 383

McDougall, Hon. Barbara P.C.

- Native business summit, comments, 2790

Meat Import Act

- Tabling of reports, 1887, 2023

Metric conversion

- Government policy, 196, 281, 302, 338, 1407, 2003

Mexico

- Earthquake disaster
 - Government action, 1268
 - Province of Alberta action, 1268

Multiculturalism

- Federal-provincial conference, request for observer status for interested parties, 873
- Government policy, 2269, 2285
- Minister's communiqué, disparity between French and English versions, 1377
- Status of minority groups, government policy, 869
- Suggested joint committee, 1313

National Defence

- Canadian forces
 - Future role, 257, 429
 - Increase in contingent in western Europe
 - Budgetary provision, 724
 - Effect on establishment, 651, 972
 - Uniforms, 283, 430
- Departmental budget, government policy, 282, 430
- Management of real property, 1717
- New Brunswick, layoff of civilian personnel at Canadian forces bases, 2047
- White paper, status, 2203, 2365
- National Film Board
 - Possibility of budget cuts in Ontario, 525, 679
- National Housing Program
 - Effect of cutbacks on native population, 692, 815
- National Parole Board
 - Appointment of members, 1500, 1672, 1718
 - Federal Court decision, 223, 301

Questions (oral)—Cont'd

- National Parole Board—Cont'd
 - Parole provisions, administration, government policy, 1669
- National Postal Museum
 - Advisory committee
 - Membership, 2700
 - Order for return, 2571, 2653
- National Research Council
 - Closing of research facilities, loss of jobs, 407
- National Revenue
 - Abandonment of Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, 353, 375
 - Definition of "partnership", tax avoidance, 1284
 - Suggested consumption tax, 115
 - Suggested increase in corporate taxes, 353
 - Tax evasion and avoidance, 711
- Native Economic Development Program
 - Government policy, 240, 428
- Native peoples
 - Funding of programs
 - Rumoured government cuts, 867, 871
 - Task force report, 870
 - Treatment of Louis Riel and Métis, government position, 1480
- Newfoundland
 - Ochre Pit Cove, Conception Bay, request to U.S. for "third world" treatment and financial aid, 1985
- North Atlantic Treaty Organization
 - Strategic Defense Initiatives research, Canadian participation, 723
- The Netherlands
 - Removal of nuclear weapons from aircraft, attitude of government, 1573
- Nuclear disaster, Ukraine
 - Effects of radiation, 2366, 2537
 - Advice to Canadian travellers, 2427
 - Government knowledge and action, 2385, 2387
 - Safety and health of Canadian nationals, government action, 2385
- Nuclear energy
 - Safety of Canadian reactors, 2385, 2386
- Official Languages
 - Department of the Solicitor General, policy, 758
 - RCMP, recruiting practices, 2097, 2585
- Old age security
 - De-indexation of pensions
 - Government monitoring, 1063
 - Position of Canadian Petroleum Association, 1064
 - Press release by president of National Advisory Council on Aging, 1064
 - Government policy, 376, 399, 407, 501
- Ontario
 - Tornado damage, government action, 986, 1258
- Parliament
 - Caucus rooms, electronic eavesdropping
 - Apology by Deputy Prime Minister, 1941
 - Prime Minister's reaction, 1926
 - Caucus rooms and members' offices, electronic eavesdropping, 1925
 - Staff relations, denial of right to strike, 832
- Parliament buildings
 - Centre block, removal of photographs of British Prime Ministers, 1383, 1435
- Parliament Hill
 - Canadian flag at half-staff, 647
 - Cost of relocating tourist tent, 1433
 - "Fairyland of beauty and excitement", 1716
 - Landscaping east of Centre Block, 909
 - Suggested relocation of tourist reception tent, 946, 974
- Parliamentary secretaries

Questions (oral)—Cont'd

- Parliamentary secretaries—Cont'd
 - Suggested appointment of senators, 841, 1224, 2789
- Parole
 - Release of dangerous inmates, 2839
- Penitentiaries
 - Canada-Alberta agreement and memorandum of intent
 - Effect on employees, 1852, 1988
 - Request for tabling, 1927, 1988
 - Conditions, government study, 1836
 - Stoney Mountain, construction of doghouse, 1869, 1988
- Poverty
 - Secretary of State for External Affairs, reported statement on "elementary conditions", 1716
- Prime Minister
 - Broadcast speech on free trade, availability of text in advance, 2653
 - Criticism of appointments, request for apology, 660
 - Newspaper advertisement, 769
 - Request for clarification of statements, 197
- Prince Edward Island
 - Economy, government assistance, 2304, 2328, 2412
- Printing of Parliament Committee
 - Frequency of meetings and composition, 28, 62
- Privacy
 - Reported giving of information re unemployed, 2094, 2600
- Public Service
 - Alleged requirement for ministerial approval of job applications, 224
 - Placement of former ministerial assistants, 214, 224, 428
- Public Works
 - Cleaning services
 - Placement of laid-off employees aged fifty and over, 2117
 - Possible lay-off of employees, 1941, 2102
 - Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, awarding of contract for federal building, 2388
 - United States Embassy property, possible acquisition by Government of Canada, 316, 432
- Publishing industry
 - Canadian share of market, 2428, 2494
- Quebec
 - Results of provincial election, 1557
- Reform of Parliament
 - Proposed joint committee, 213
- Reform of the Senate, 625, 631
 - Appointments review committee, 660
 - Commons resolution
 - Consideration by joint committee, 867
 - Consideration by the Senate, 867
 - Election of members, statement of Minister of Justice, 910
 - Government attitude, 1233
 - Leader of the Government, views, 899
 - Parliamentary secretaries, suggested appointment of senators, 1233
 - Request for information, 655
- Regional Development Incentives
 - Non-compliance by minister with act, 882, 1259
- Regional Industrial Expansion
 - Atlantic provinces, government assistance to industry, 605, 814
 - United States intervention, 606
 - Minister, suggested appointment, 2570
 - Nova Scotia, heavy water plants, government policy, 893
- Restaurant of Parliament
 - Availability of French apples 59
 - Joint committee membership, 322
 - Provision of services, 321
- Rights and freedoms

Questions (oral)—Cont'dRights and freedoms—Cont'd

Canadian forces, spouses of members, committee action, 2411

Royal Assent

Alternative procedure, 607, 757

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Alleged conduct of former corporal, 1064

Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada

Request for inquiry into leak, 925

Request for tabling of report, 925

Royal visit

State dinner, Vancouver, composition of guest list, 2427

Rules of the Senate

Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, 61, 81, 114, 426

Suggested amendments, 757

Science and humanities

Funding for research councils, implementation of budget proposal, 2569

Science and Technology

Canada-Alberta memorandum of understanding, 780, 813

Research and development, government funding, 911

Senate

Absence of Leader of the Government, 805, 1221

Availability of information during absence, 1869

Business, 2788

Cabinet ministers in the Senate, committee membership, 1375

Debates, treatment of speeches, 409

Doyle, Hon. Richard J. appointment, 666

Party affiliation, 706

Foreign Affairs Committee, meeting, 2069

Journalist members, 728

Jurisdiction over services, 806

Leader of the Opposition, statement, 13

Legislative program, 481

Office of Leader of the Government, 28

Official report, printing of appendices, 708

Order paper question, request for answer, 1093, 1176

Prayer at commencement of sittings, 13, 27, 46

Prime Minister, comments, 401, 406, 409

Question Period

Answers to unasked questions, 2284

Delayed answers, 300, 426, 433, 500, 502, 635, 679, 936, 972, 1022, 1173, 1237, 1324, 1400, 1433, 1503, 1520, 1717, 1836, 1854, 1987, 2023, 2039, 2100, 2156, 2222, 2272, 2329, 2389, 2412, 2471, 2494, 2537, 2554, 2585, 2599, 2669, 2679, 2701, 2769

Form, suggested referral to Standing Rules and Orders committee, 2553

Government approach, 354

"Order for return", point of order, 1324

Requests for answers, 243, 302, 356, 381, 408, 638, 1050, 1112, 1173, 1174, 1290, 1384, 1394, 1521, 1792, 1855, 1951, 1974, 1986, 1988, 2089, 2273, 2330, 2472, 2555, 2572, 2653, 2667, 2789

Referral of bills to committee before second reading, 2571

Security service, staff reduction, 943

"Senate Bulletin", 1519

Televising of sittings, 424

Victoria Building, senators' parking, 1298

Sexual abuse of children

Badgley committee report, government action, 1671

Smoking Prohibition bill S-8

Study of subject matter by Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, 2790

Questions (oral)—Cont'd

Social programs

Universality, government policy, 338, 347, 370, 375, 377, 399, 402, 407, 409, 470, 501

Sport

Canadian Football League, future, 469

Toronto, proposed domed stadium, government assistance, 449, 712

Standing Rules and Orders

Time limit for government response to reports of Senate committees, request for consideration by committee, 1364

Statistics Canada

1986 census

Cancellation, 98, 99, 237, 298, 427

Restoration, 425, 679

Status of Women

Affirmative action legislation, government policy, 1950

Armed Forces personnel, restriction of spouses' activities, government policy, 1379, 1906, 2134

Association of spouses of military members, status of government grant, 2134

Broadcasting task force, remuneration of women members, 1224, 1325

Economic equality for women, government policy, 1558, 1852

Equal pay for work of equal value, government policy, 213, 428, 472

Government delay, 2002

Funding of groups, government policy, 1654

Role in Canadian armed forces, 2086

Senior government appointments

Bird, Hon. Florence, 805, 833, 936, 954

Franklin, Dr. Ursula, 791, 806, 900

Replacement of female appointees, 789, 811, 867, 881, 938, 955, 1237

Strategic Defense Initiative

Status of study, 1267, 1520

Summit meetings

Suggested return to former format, 856

Supply and Services

"How Canadians Govern Themselves", unavailability of booklet, 2002, 2222

Poll, awarding of contract, 1433, 1521, 1560, 1739, 2096

Publications, request for removal of permission fee, 2002

Sydney Steel Corporation

Request for answer, 1235

Symbolic apple, 339

Terrorism

Tokyo Summit statement, government policy re Libyan nationals, 2425, 2554

Toronto harbourfront

Public access, 868, 1023

Trade

Imports from Third World countries, government attitude, 836

Transport

Airport car rental service, 261

Parking, 322, 500

Airport security

Remuneration of guards, 2446

Testing of guards, 2446, 2600

Airport tax, reported restructuring, 1111, 1434

Atlantic provinces, freight rate increases, 499, 680

CN Marine and CN Rail, reductions in service, 47, 241

CN Marine, increase in ferry rates, 2094

CN Rail

Prince Edward Island, equipment department staff reductions, 2174

Questions (oral)—Cont'd

Transport—Cont'd

CN Rail—Cont'd

- Reductions in service in Newfoundland and east of Montreal, 1833
- CN Route, possible sale, government action, 2305, 2390, 2586
- CN shops, Moncton layoffs, 2328
 - Government policy, 2470
- Canadian airports, security, 1108, 1113, 1135, 1325, 1433
- Fate of Moncton CN shops, regional development in Atlantic provinces, 2118
- Freight rates, western grain, 192
- Mirabel Airport, government policy, 706
- Northumberland Strait ferry, delay in commencement of 1986 season, 2037, 2554
- Ottawa International Airport, proposed change of name, 869
- Port of Churchill, Manitoba
 - Continued operation, 1431
 - Grain car access, 869
 - Grain shipments to U.S.S.R. and availability of hopper cars, 1067, 1324
- Prince Edward Island, proposed tunnel or causeway to mainland, 2095
- Rail service, government policy, 195
- Rail transportation of dangerous goods, regulations, 27, 240
- Railways, shortfall in CN and CP expenditures on expansion, 1973
- St. Lawrence Seaway, Welland Canal blockage, 1393, 1436
- Task force report, elimination of Prince Edward Island ferry service, 2174
- Transportation of dangerous goods regulations, 840
- Travel to Ukraine, refund of reservation deposits, request for action, 2581, 2770
- Use of government aircraft, 103
- VIA Rail, resumption of "Atlantic Limited" service, 724, 726
- Western Grain Stabilization Fund, government policy, 260
- Unemployment
 - Adjusted statistics, 419
 - Armed forces, suggested recruitment, 426
 - Strategic defence research, Canadian participation, government policy, 705
- Unemployment insurance
 - Benefits, proposed cutbacks, 96
 - Petition against calculation of severance pay as income, 708
 - Withdrawal of benefits of armed forces pensioners, 2468
- UNESCO
 - Canada's participation, 1656
 - General conference, Sofia, Bulgaria, composition of Canadian delegation, 1375
- United Nations
 - Food and Agriculture Organization, cancellation of appointment of Hon. Eugene Whelan, P.C., 479, 636
 - Government policy, 605, 712
 - Ratification of international convention against taking of hostages, 652
- University of Toronto
 - Mock parliament election results, 479
- Wallenberg, Raoul
 - Honorary Canadian citizenship, request for answers, 1926
 - Resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, notification of U.S.S.R., 1717, 1987, 2103
- Welfare
 - Adequacy of payments, 191, 410, 412
- World Cup soccer
 - Congratulations to television sponsor and networks, 2679
- World War II

Questions (oral)—Cont'd

World War II—Cont'd

40th anniversary of surrender of German forces, 842, 973

Youth

- Government policy, 2162, 2216, 2221
- Katimivik, 1921, 1942
 - Cancellation of programs, government policy, 1921, 1923, 2131
 - Announcement of new program, 2202
 - Government knowledge of contents of Special Senate Committee report before tabling, 2205
- Report of Special Senate Committee
 - Government policy, 2116
 - Government response, 2493

Questions (Order Paper)

- Bonn Economic Summit, 1985
 - Technology, growth and employment working group report, 1281
- Canada-Italy International Social Security Agreement
 - Pension applications, 2246
- Canadian Pension Commission, Pension Review Board
 - Vacancies, 807
- Communications
 - Cairo conference, participation of Parliamentarians, 2286
- Energy, Mines and Resources
 - Hibernia drilling platforms, construction site location criteria, 1696
- Environment
 - Newfoundland, integration of weather services, 609
- External relations
 - Family planning promotion, government support and policy, 1696
- Health and Welfare
 - Guaranteed Income Supplement, 502
- Indian Affairs
 - Adoption of Indian children, 742
- Interparliamentary Conference on the Environment
 - Canadian participation, 116
- Order of Canada
 - Appointment of former members of federal cabinet and former provincial premiers, 2288
 - Point of order, 2364
 - Revised reply, 2449
 - Expression of thanks, 2470
- Senate
 - Retirement of members, statistics, 450
- Small craft harbours projects
 - Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, 1194
- Supply and Services
 - University of Hawaii, contract for survey research, 1437
- Technological Development and Employment
 - Ministerial conference report, 1281
- United Nations
 - World Conference on Women, Canadian delegation, breakdown by sex, 1407
- Veterans Affairs
 - Aging Veterans Program applications, 1407

Railways bill S-1 (pro forma). 1r, 8Reform of Parliament

- Proposed joint committee, 213

Reform of the Senate, 625, 631

- Appointments review committee, 660
- Commons resolution
 - Consideration by joint committee, 867
 - Consideration by the Senate, 867

Reform of the Senate,—Cont'd

- Election of members, statement of Minister of Justice, 910
- Government attitude, 1233
- Leader of the Government, views, 899
- Request for information, 655
- Suggested appointment of senators as parliamentary secretaries, 1233

Regional Development Incentives

- Non-compliance by minister with act, 882, 1259

Regional Industrial Expansion

- Atlantic provinces, government assistance to industry, 605, 814
- United States intervention, 606
- Minister, suggested appointment, 2570
- Nova Scotia, heavy water plants, government policy, 893

Register of senators' interests

- Consideration by committee, 1666, 1726
- Authority to consider related matters, 1726
- Notice of motion, 1552
- See Standing Rules and Orders Committee

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, Standing Joint Committee

- Authority to examine subject matter of clauses of certain bills, 207, 313, 614
- Frequency of meetings and composition, 28, 62
- Reports
 - 1st, Statutory Instruments No. 28, 333, 366
 - 2nd, Statutory Instruments No. 29, 463, 495
 - 3rd, Statutory Instruments No. 30, 1405, 1483
 - See appendix p. 1417
 - 4th, Statutory Instruments No. 31, 1406, 1483
 - See appendix p. 1424
 - 5th, Statutory Instruments No. 32, 2195, 2230, 2274, 2322, 2360, 2500
 - See appendix p. 2210
 - 6th, Statutory Instruments No. 33, 2277
 - See appendix p. 2300
 - 7th, Statutory Instruments No. 34, 2698
- Expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 296
- See Journals of the Senate

Remembrance Day, 11, 1485Representation, 1985

- Amalgam formula, 1777, 1795, 2055, 2070
- American Review of Canadian Studies*, R.K. Carty, quote, 2052
- Closure, 2075
- Courtney, Prof. John C., quote, 2054
- Elected Senate solution, 2074
- Fifteen per cent rule, 1794
- Freeze on electoral map, 1778, 1798
- Hnatyshyn formula, 1798, 2043
- Impact on Alberta, 2074
- Impact on smaller provinces, 2040, 2071, 2076
- Lack of consideration for Senate amendments, 2043
- Lack of public testimony, 2053
- Motion in amendment, 1906
- Regional disparities, 2052
- Representation by population, 1801, 2043, 2074
- Senate responsibility, 1907
- Suggested amendments to Constitutional formula, 2042
- Timetable, 1778, 1802, 2072

Representation, 1985—Cont'd

- Workload of members of Parliament, 2075

Speakers: Senators

- Corbin, Eymard G., 1781, 1797, 2052
- Doody, C. William, 1780, 1907
- Everett, Douglas D., 2074
- Fairbairn, Joyce, 2073
- Flynn, Jacques, 1750, 2075
- Frith, Royce, 1779, 1906
- Hicks, Henry D., 1781
- MacEachen, Allan J., 2070
- Molgat, Gildas, L., 1804
- Neiman, Joan, 1803
- Robertson, Brenda M., 2075
- Roblin, Duff, 1779, 1800
- Stanbury, Richard J., 1777
- Stewart, John B., 1793, 2040
- See appendices p. 1764-6

- Representation, 1985 bill C-74. 1r, 1733; 2r, 1750, 1777, 1793; ref to com, 1804; rep without amdt, 1863; 3r, 1888; m in amdt, 1906; ref to com, 1908; rep without amdt but with comments, 2018; 3r, 2040, 2052, 2070; r.a., 2092

Republic of Rwanda

- See Visitors

Research and development, 110, 127Research and development, support and government policy, 804, 824, 1058, 1293, 1366

- Budget measures, 1367
- Capital gains exemption, 1058
- Instability and uncertainty of funding, 825
- Interference in research, 826
- Lack of commitment to future, 827
- Lack of understanding of scientific standards and quality, 826
- Ontario, 828
- Privatization, 827, 1366
- Research Tax Credit Program, 1059
- Wastage of public funds, 827
- Speakers: Senators
 - Doody, C. William, 1058
 - Marsden, Lorna, 824, 1366

Restaurant of Parliament

- Availability of French apples, 59
- Joint committee membership, 322
- Provision of services, 321

Riel, Hon. Maurice, P.C.

- David, Hon. Paul, 803
- Fisheries Committee
 - Authority to publish and distribute interim report on marketing of fish in Canada, 2675
- Interparliamentary Conference on the Environment
 - Canadian participation, qu, 116
- Privy Council appointment, felicitations, 244
- Senate, office of Speaker, 26, 270, 324, 783, 883, 900, 904
 - Appointment to Senate of former premiers, 329
 - Authority, 273, 884
 - Deputy Speaker, 276
 - Ex officio* appointment of senators, 783
 - Parliamentary restaurant, 277
 - Pope's visit, 326

Riel, Hon. Maurice, P.C.—Cont'd

- Senate, office of Speaker—Cont'd
- Prayers, 276
- Protocol service of Secretary of State, 274, 325
- Queen's visit, 326
- Question of privilege, 900
- Royal Assent, 277, 326
- Senate integrity, 883
- Use of Senate chamber, 273, 326
- Visit to House of Lords, 327

Riel, Louis, 100th anniversary of hanging, 1430, 1486Speaker: Senator

- Guay, Joseph-Philippe, 1486

Rights and Freedoms, Canadian forces, spouses of members, 1386, 1510, 1526, 2014, 2235, 2411

- Committee action, 2411
- Motion in amendment, 1526
- Public behaviour on basis of marriage, 1511
- Referred to committee, 2235

Speakers: Senators

- Flynn, Jacques, 2014, 2235
- Frith, Royce, 1526, 2235
- Marsden, Lorna, 1510

Riley, Hon. Daniel A. (Deceased Sept. 13/84), 22Rizzuto, Hon. Pietro*Transport

- Mirabel Airport, government policy, qu, 706

Robertson, Hon. Brenda M. (Introduced in the Senate Jan. 22/85), 416

- Canada's cultural industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1619
 - Penetration of Canadian market by U.S. cultural industries, 1619
- Employment Equity bill C-62, 2392, 2432
 - Use of Canadian Human Rights Commission, 2393
- Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands Mercury Pollution Claims Settlement bill C-110, 2497, 2510, 2539
 - Band and individual settlements, 2497
 - Social consequences of pollution, 2498
- Meat Inspection bill C-33, 903, 918
 - Features of the bill, 903
 - Inspection of imported meat products, 903
- Public Pensions Reporting bill C-255, 2030
- Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2075
- Sechelt Indian Band Self-government bill C-93, 2496, 2508, 2622
 - Case-by-case basis, 2497
 - Constitutional self-government, 2622
 - Legal entity, 2496
 - New Approach, 2497
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - 4th report, Family Allowances, 1973, subject matter of Bill C-70, 1785
- Young Offenders, Criminal Code, Penitentiary, Prisons and Reformatories bill C-106, 2672
 - Custody provisions, 2673
 - Police power to arrest, 2673
 - Streamlined "review" process, 2673

Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C.

- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Proceedings, authority to televise, 1491
- Communications
 - Museum of Man, change of name, 1971, 1974, 2103
- Cook, Hon. Eric, tributes, 23
- Currency bill C-118, 2654
- Donahoe, Hon. Richard A., tributes, 23
- Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2079
- Felicitations on 25th anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1177
- Justice
 - Zundel, Ernst, conviction, qu, 725
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 - 11th report, Criminal Code (prostitution) bill C-49, 1735
- National Defence
 - Canadian forces, uniforms, qu, 283, 430
- Riley, Hon. Daniel A., the late, 23
- Senate
 - Journalist members, 728
 - Proceedings, authority to broadcast
 - Lack of justification, 2115
 - Motion in amendment 2115
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology
 - National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1316
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - Audio recording and broadcasting proceedings of Senate committees, request to study, 654
- Transport
 - Use of government aircraft, qu, 103

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., Leader of the Government (until June 30/86)

- Aboriginal peoples
 - Goose Bay, Labrador
 - Barring of Inuit from meeting addressed by Minister of Justice, 2546
 - Request for report and apology, 2548
 - Request for answer, 2581
 - Proposed NATO base, funding of interest groups, 2582
- Queen Charlotte Islands, logging dispute, Haida Indian rights, 1517, 1560
- Yukon economic development program, delay in implementation, government policy, 2095
- Académie française, 350th anniversary of founding, 1705
- Access to information
 - Government guidelines for public servants, 189, 196, 214, 427, 428
 - Tabling of documents, 75
- Adams, Rt. Hon. John, the late, 623
 - Representation at funeral, 648
- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 35
- Advertising
 - Source of funds for material in magazine, 1111
- Agriculture
 - Agricultural products processors, availability of financial assistance, 2680
 - Discussion paper "Tax Issues in Agriculture", 667
 - Government attitude, 608
 - Suggested referral to committee, 606
 - Farm credit crisis, request for meeting of ministers of agriculture, 986
 - Farm debt legislation, government policy, 2571
 - Farm debt review, 1267
 - Role of panels, 2096
 - Fertilizer supplement, possible legal action, 694, 973

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dAgriculture—Cont'd*Grain

Grasshopper threat in prairie provinces, request for assistance, 2547

Request for response, 2570

Plight of producers, deficiency payments and two-price system for wheat, government policy, 2285

Inspection fees, government policy, 695

Marketing of potatoes, 80, 242, 510, 537, 638

National strategy, 1559

National sugar policy, 1654

Potato industry

Government assistance, 2037, 2095, 2130

Stabilization or diversion program, 2100

Stabilization policy, 2154, 2173

Prairie provinces, deteriorating situation, government action, 967

Sugar-beet industry

Future prospects, 933, 1173

Government policy, 760, 770, 934, 1090, 1173, 1176, 1237, 1852, 1870, 2117, 2132

Producers and government representatives, meeting, 2094

1983 stabilization payment, 1093, 1174, 1313, 1400, 1433, 1502, 1537, 1737

Government policy, 1311, 1834, 1987, 2004, 2023, 2036, 2048, 2067, 2152 1986 crop year, 2090

Request for answer, 1324, 1354

United States and EEC subsidies, Canadian position at Tokyo, 2428

Western Canada

Drought and other conditions

Government assistance, 1231, 1280, 1325, 1362, 1406, 1430, 1480, 1501, 1536, 1559, 1670, 1671, 1714, 1736, 1854, 2023, 2284

Availability of application forms, 1870

Grain producers and beef producers, disparity in criteria for payment, 2101

Government assistance programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1450

Effect on harvest of adverse climatic conditions, government assistance, 1374, 1377, 1379

Western Grain Stabilization Act, suggested amendment, 2269

Wheat

Domestic price, 2667

Exports to Republic of China, 2173, 2679

Two-price system

Effect of price increase, 2382, 2388

Effect on baking industry, 2667

Possible influx of subsidized American bakery products, 2286

World grain prices, initial payment for wheat, 2162, 2171

Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee

Proposed splitting of committee, 2447

"Soil at Risk", authority to print additional copies, 291

Air Canada

Board of directors, replacement of members, 658, 660

Strike of ticket agents, 831, 856

Alberta

Economy, government assistance, 2308

Auditor General

Cabinet documents, access to information, 320

Aviation disastersAir-India aircraft loss

Tokyo Airport explosion, possible acts of terrorism, 1108, 1237

Treatment of insurance claims, 1114

Gander, Newfoundland, 1705

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dBanking*Canadian Commercial Bank

Bad loans, 1373

Collapse, 1226

Alleged existence of document indicating difficulty, 1255

Correction of statement by Leader of the Government, 1265

Committee study, 1230, 1256

Request for answers, 1377

Government assistance, 705

Offer of chartered banks to assist in examination of loan portfolio, 1252

Priority of creditors, 1256

Protection of pension funds, 1281

Role of independent auditors, 1254

Judgment of Inspector General as to solvency, 1230

Memorandum of intent, request for information, 1254, 1267, 1436

Request for answers, 1322, 1353

Salvage recommendation, 1285

Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank

Availability of names of uninsured depositors, 1373

Compensation of depositors, referral of subject matter of bill to committee, 1295

Delay in instituting inquiry, 1376

Deposit insurance, government policy, 1266, 1277

Replies to questions, 1374

Senate study, 1234

Wording of resolution, 1235

Confidence in system, 1372

Estey Commission of Inquiry, 1295

Green paper on regulation of financial institutions, status, 1310

Suggested withdrawal, 1312

International banking centres, promotion, 2089, 2471

Loans to aid-receiving countries, alleged restriction, 872, 954, 974

Mercantile Bank, possibility of merger, government involvement, 1379

Northland Bank

Compensation of debenture holders, 1312

Compensation of depositors, government policy, 1297

Status, 1235, 1256

Payments to uninsured depositors, government policy, 1374

Regulation of banks, 1286

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 620

Committee proceedings, televising, 1449

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 731

Benidickson, Hon. William M., P.C., the late, 417

Borrowing Authority, 1985-86 (No. 2) bill C-51, 1205

Budget, 1206

Deficit, 1205

Interest rates, 1207

Unemployment, 1206

Borrowing Authority, 1986-87 bill C-99, 2312

Budgetary deficits, 2313

Dollar value, 2314

Progress, 2313

Tax increases, 2313

Broadcasting

Caplan task force report, 2504, 2586

Task force, qualifications of co-chairman, 942

Threatened jamming of U.S. radio station by Cuba, possible interference with radio station CFRB, Toronto, 945, 1023

Budget

Agriculture, impact of cuts, 1134

Atlantic provinces, impact of measures, 987, 1021

Date of presentation, 509, 637, 677

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dBudget—Cont'd

De-indexation of pension benefits, government position, 1013, 1021, 1169

Farm Credit loan provisions, impact on farmers, 2086

Impact of measures, 1017

Impact on firefighting personnel at airports, 2112, 2223

Impact on unemployment, 932

Minister of External Affairs, statement, government position, 781

Oil pricing, loss of revenue, 2112, 2222

Preparation

Alleged negotiations between government and Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, 447

Use of consultants, 635, 1090

Proposed business transfer tax, 2112

Request for briefing, 925

Tax incentive for investment in Cape Breton, 951

Tax increases, government policy, 930

Timing of implementation of budgetary provisions, 1020

Version of budget paper sent to Canadian embassies, 2149, 2272

Budget, impact on senior citizens, 992, 1081

Cabinet

Access to information, 114

Conflict-of-interest guidelines, government policy, 2384, 2387, 2388, 2405

Canada Council

Effect of budget reductions, 46

Canada Development Corporation

Sale of shares, government policy, 945, 975

Canada Post Corporation

Closing of post office at Forget, Saskatchewan, 2584

Door-to-door delivery, limited cancellation of service, 831, 937

Prospective strike, 530

Replacement of board members, 2569

Canada-United States relations, 35

American countervail on Atlantic groundfish, government attitude, 1853

Bank of Nova Scotia, appeal to Supreme Court of United States, 504

Bilateral trade negotiations, 1389, 1392, 1399, 1431, 1521

Agricultural products, 1309

Marketing boards, 2207

Agriculture, consultations with Canadian producers, 2364, 2472

Benefits accruing to other trading partners, 2464, 2495

Canadian publishing and Canadian magazines, 2769

Canadian use of lobbyist, 2304

Canadian testimony before congressional committee or special prosecutor, government policy, 2426, 2537

Government position, 2383

Cultural industries, 1651

Effect on Canadian lumber industry, 1853

Export of fresh water, 1851

Statement by government leader, 1864

Fisheries, imposition of U.S. tariff, government attitude, 2386

Government policy, 1237, 1535, 1538, 2266, 2328, 2342

Individual negotiators for specialized areas, 2668

Items for negotiation, 1352, 2666

Items not for negotiation, 1354

Participation of provinces, 1552, 1557

Statement by Premier of Ontario, 2045, 2222

Position of United States, 2303

Remuneration of Canadian negotiator, 1852

Request for amplification of delayed answer, 2505

Role of lobbyist, 2268

Position of United States, 2472

United States ambassador's comments, 1308, 1310

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dCanada-United States relations—Cont'd*Bilateral trade negotiations—Cont'd

United States countervailing duties, government action, 2467

United States undertakings, government position, 2282

User fees on Great Lakes, 1517, 1718

Canadian advertising in United States media, 651

Canadian content rules, effect on U.S. trade into Canada, 2503

Canadian hog export embargo, 953

Canadian hog production, United States import duty, 738, 971

Canadian potatoes, United States import duty, 727, 740, 973

Cultural heritage and national identity, 2769

Extraterritorial jurisdiction, 648

Fish, alleged subsidization of Canadian exports, 1063

Free trade, impact on auto pact, availability of report to Province of Ontario, 2493

Free trade arrangement, impact on employment in Canada, 1519

Garrison Dam project, 46, 82, 102, 214, 498, 795

Diversion unit legislation enactment, 2448, 2555

United States study of bill, 2343

Georges Bank, World Court judgment, 298

Government policy, 81, 243

Investment restrictions, 650

Japanese auto plants, effect of establishment in Canada, 2493

Kidnapping of Canadian citizen by bounty hunters from United States, 529

Northern waters, sovereignty, 1092

Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting

Acid rain, government objectives, 2160

Scope of agreement, 2197

Status of agreement, 2382, 2472

Agenda, 2130, 2151

Oil import tax, agenda item, 2174

Status of document, 2155, 2272

U.S. agriculture policy as agenda item, 2207, 2273, 2390

Request for answer, 2365

Prime Minister's speech in Chicago

"Cultural sovereignty", definition, 1656

"Joint tenancy" and "constructive internationalism", definition, 1655

Request for amplification of delayed answer, 2505

Summit meeting in Quebec City

Absence of Governor General, 657, 669, 671, 674, 677, 814, 1174, 2494

Agenda, 648

Availability of background information, 762

Declaration on international security, 675, 814, 833, 937

Effect on employment in Atlantic provinces, 678, 1023

Invitations to gala performance, request for answer, 2221

Newspaper article, 652

Press release, 653

Request for texts of agreements, 673

Trade

Commitment to halt protectionism, 2700

Imposition of tariff on publications and computer parts, 2536, 2545, 2547

Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2542, 2560, 2562, 2566, 2572, 2582, 2702, 2703

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles, 2489

Compensation, 2502

Compensation for workers in industry, 2547

Imposition of U.S. tariff on Canadian shakes, shingles and steel products, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2531

New approaches, government policy, 242, 260

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dCanada-United States relations—*Cont'd*Trade—Cont'd

Policy, 648

Tariff discussions, request for information, 2542, 2702

Trans-border pollution problems, 609, 669, 2050, 2051, 2102, 2156

Mandate of special envoys, 671

U.S. weapons testing in Canada, cruise missile mishap, 1868, 1870, 1871, 2039

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1574, 1587

Books, movies, broadcasting, culture or economics, 1590

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Cutbacks in service, 100

Effect of budget reductions, 46, 1479

Funding, government policy, 318

Independence, government policy, 99, 318

International service, possible cancellation, 194, 427

Mandate, parliamentary committee study, 318, 322

Rumoured sale, 299

Staff reductions, 944

Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37, 743, 747

Depositors, 744

Shareholders, 744

Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security bill C-69, 1305

Canadian National Railways

Board of directors

Replacement of chairman, 779

Replacement of members, 812, 833, 2023

Canadian Pension Commission

Replacement of Wing Commander MacKenzie, DFC, 1066, 1174

Canadian Wheat Board

Alleged absence of minister from advisory committee meetings, 1172, 1238

Appointment of commissioner, 2173

Criticism contained in study team report to task force on program review, 2150

Dwarf wheat, marketing, 741

Mission to China, composition of delegation, 2585, 2669

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Board of directors, appointment, qu, 1235

President, appointment, 725, 726, 1023

Chernenko, Konstantin, the late, 622

Government representation at funeral, 678

Christmas greetings, 415

Citizenship

Increase in fees, 98

Communications

Museum of Man, change of name, 2103

Concentration camps, 2100

Constitution

First Ministers' Conference, aboriginal rights, request for Senate representation, 692, 743, 761

Quebec's opting out, government policy, 282

Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Combines and trust companies legislation, 1255

Patent Office closing, 954, 975

Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption

Alleged wrongdoing in inspection process, suggested prosecution, 1382

Labour union action at processing plant, 1383

Responsibility of processor's parent company, government policy, 1381

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dConsumer and Corporate Affairs—*Cont'd*Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption—Cont'd

Sale as pet food, 1382, 1436

Trademark legislation, 679, 771

Cook, Hon. Eric, tributes, 22

Correctional service

Commissioner's office, increased cost of administration, 2284, 2389

Corrections

Correctional investigator, annual report, request for tabling, 2565

Daniel Hawe report, production of service contracts and statement of expenditures, 2539

Request for tabling of documents, 2669, 2704

Crown corporations

Composition of boards of directors, 672

de Havilland Aircraft Limited and Canadair Limited, government policy, 336, 432

Disposal, 298

Petro-Canada, possible privatization, 1280

Qualifications of officials, 1737

Cultural heritage and national identity

Government policy, 1279, 1381, 1432, 2701, 2769

Cultural organizations

Relationship to government, 222

Customs and Excise

Prime Minister's wife, alleged non-declaration of gifts, 2560

Deficit, 37

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited

Possible negotiation of sale, government position, 813

Sale to Boeing Corporation, 1559, 1738, 1854

Burns Fry prospectus, 1854

Off-the-record private briefings, job security, 1715, 1855

Tabling of memorandum of agreement, 1654

Use of de Havilland technology, 1854

Denis, Hon. Azellus, P.C., fiftieth anniversary of election to Parliament, tributes, 1372

Department of the Environment

Research scientists, termination of employment, 215, 382

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C., tributes on resignation from the Senate, 1832

Diplomatic missions

Security, 652

Disarmament

Deployment of nuclear weapons, government policy, 473, 636

Space-based defensive weapons, government policy, 421, 424

Donahoe, Hon. Richard A., tributes, 22

Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2078

Economic Council of Canada

Rumoured dissolution, 637

Economic Development

Nova Scotia

Cape Breton Advisory Committee report

Government action, 1354

Request for copies, 1289

Economic Summit

Bonn, West Germany

Securing of third window, Prime Minister's statement, 851

United States embargo on Nicaragua, Canadian position, 852

United States interest rate policy, 811

World drug trade, government position, 851, 974

Economy

Canadian dollar, decline in value, 508, 509, 543, 604, 2068

Government action, 2085, 2471

Timing and extent of market intervention, 1999

Appearance of Governor of Bank of Canada before Senate, 2004

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dEconomy—*Cont'd*Canadian dollar, decline in value—Cont'd

Value, 2493, 2503

Market intervention, role of Governor of Bank of Canada, government action, 2599

Fiscal outlook, updated economic projections, 47

Foreign investment, competition, 355

Government policy, 781

Interest rates, 2203, 2283, 2329

Government policy, 238, 257, 428, 429, 676, 2121

Increase, 2001, 2562, 2568, 2703

Leader of the Government in the Senate, statement, request for clarification, 43, 77

Manitoba, cancellation of construction of Winnipeg research centre, 44, 239, 472

Mortgages, effect of bank rate on interest rates, 2205

National conference, 659, 689, 703, 709, 815

Availability of information, 660

Senate opposition representation, 693

Suggested follow-up, 694

Pioneer Trust

Closing, 506

Status, 528

Taxation and unemployment, government policy, 211

United States investment in Canada, 1651

Wage and price controls, 377

Education

Post-secondary

Availability of report, 529, 814

Government assistance, 258, 284, 430

Ministerial meetings, 529

Toronto school, change of name, 1289

Employment

Cape Breton, unemployment rate, 2552

CN shops, layoffs at Moncton, government policy, 2549, 2553

CN shops, Prince Edward Island, 2570

Disparity in treatment of displaced employees, 2585

Effect of budgetary cuts on female employees, 408, 433

Government policy, 376

Job creation, 898, 911

Government policy, 79

London, Ontario, status of CN computer express terminal, 2554, 2702

Nannies, remuneration, 354

Nova Scotia, decentralization program, 101, 426, 498, 637

Public service staff reductions, job creation, government policy, 2469

Royal commission, report, government response, 635

Summer Youth Employment Program, 409, 505, 2493, 2669

Employment and Immigration

Government policy, possible changes, 759

Immigrant wife of Canadian citizen, status, 2052

Long-term Illegal Migrants Review Committee, possible investigation of conduct of chairman, 791, 936

Maclean's magazine, prospective hiring of non-Canadians, 769

Employment Equity bill C-62, 2432

Motion re message to House of Commons, 2682

End of Decade Women's Conference

Composition of Canadian delegation and agenda, 652, 899, 912, 970

Energy

Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Agreement, 334, 432

Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Agreement, 510, 638

Canadianization, government policy, 297

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dEnergy—Cont'd

Director General of Communications, termination of employment, 381

East coast exploration, replacement of petroleum incentive grants, government policy, 1363

Federal-provincial agreement, 741

Gas pricing, 2599

Policy, proposed committee study, 281, 431

Advisory committee study, 471

Gasoline prices, reduction, 2154, 2329

Heavy oils, construction of upgrader at Lloydminster, Alberta, government policy, 2122

Higher cost producers, minister's statement, request for clarification, 2119

International oil pricing, agenda item at economic summit, 2023, 2156, 2222

Natural gas exports to U.S., representations by Alberta and British Columbia, 1987

Natural gas, proposed pipeline to Vancouver Island, 946

New pricing agreement, progress of negotiations, 423, 501, 631

Oil and gas industry

Application of tax incentives, 2119

Government policy, 2384

Layoffs, government policy, 2445, 2494

Pricing, government policy, 2583

Oil pricing, 2001, 2022, 2034, 2046, 2051, 2121, 2217, 2329

Government action, 2087, 2120

Government policy, 1865, 2004, 2134

Effect on Hibernia development, 1853

Protection of interests of producers, government action, 1850

Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, government policy, 467, 501

Petroleum Incentive Program, reduction in grants, 301

Price of Canadian crude oil, 637

Pricing, deregulation of industry, government policy, 2464, 2538

Energy and Natural Resources Committee

4th report, petroleum incentives program, subject matter of Bill C-85, 2214

Energy, Mines and Resources

Articles sent to weekly newspapers, 2506

Director General of Communications, termination of employment, 433

Environment

Government policy re employment, 79

Pollution, Niagara River and Great Lakes, 264, 382

Public Environment Group, 300, 319, 431

Soil conservation, 104

Toxicology research and development, government policy, 1715, 2101

Wildlife, effect of budgetary cuts, 299

World Commission on Environment and Development, submission, input of people of Canada, 2504

Estimates

Date of tabling, 524, 535, 538, 543

Question of privilege, 622

Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, 2007

Expo 86

Attendance of members of Parliament, 2090

Expressions of welcome and appreciation, 9

External Affairs

Canadian Ambassador to Ireland, appointment

Alleged partisanship of appointee, 2102

Application of code of conduct, 2164

Clarke, Mr. Victor, Special Adviser to Canadian High Commission in London, appointment, 1670

Overseas distribution summary of Globe and Mail items, 380, 501

Passports, issuance at Hull, 851, 937

Visit by minister to U.S.S.R., 793

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'd

- Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2749
- Farm Products Marketing Agencies bill C-4, 217
 - Canadian Wheat Board, 217
 - Canagrex, 217
- Federal-provincial consultation, 38
- Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements
 - Equalization payments, 208
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2685
- Federal-provincial relations
 - Government of Quebec, attitude to sovereignty, 1502
 - Health and education, effect of reduction in transfer payments, 1520, 1556, 1558
- Film industry
 - Identification of Canadian production locales, 2098
- Finance
 - Deputy Minister, meetings, government policy, 1498
 - Document entitled "John Turner as Minister of Finance: An Era of Economic Decline", 262, 319, 429
 - Financial institutions, restructuring, possible committee study of discussion paper, 783
 - Ministerial aide, payment, 782
 - Protection of bondholders against inflation, reported statement by minister, 969
 - Recording of ministerial discussions, 223
- Financial institutions
 - Concentration of economic power, government policy, 2283
 - Discussion paper, "The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion", 893
 - Takeovers by industrial conglomerates, government policy, 2282
- Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1821
 - Attitude of auditors, 1821
 - Confidentiality, 1823
 - Ministerial responsibility, 1824
 - Mismanagement, 1821
 - Reimbursement of the banks, 1823
 - Pioneer Trust failure, request for investigation, 894, 925, 1022
- Fisheries
 - West German fleet, overfishing in waters under Canadian jurisdiction, 835, 870
- Fisheries and Oceans
 - Decision of minister re licence, 1171, 1238
 - Request for answer, 1236
 - Fishing vessel support program, cancellation, 1986
 - Future of Star-Kist plant, government policy, request for answer, 1871
 - Independence of inspectors, 1298
 - Inspection function, consultation with industry, 1298
 - Parliamentary secretary, whereabouts, 2070
 - Product inspection standards, 1363
 - Reported fee for access to minister, 1170
 - Resignation of minister, tributes, 1265
 - Sale of canned tuna fish unfit for human consumption, 1231, 1236, 1258
 - Consumer confidence, future of Star-Kist plant, government policy, 1297, 1435
 - Members of the government, extent of knowledge, 1276
 - Prime Minister's Office, extent of knowledge, 1265, 1435
 - Request for answers, 1353
 - Suggested inquiry, 1308, 1384
 - Suggested method of disposal, 1255
- Fitness and Amateur Sport
 - Appointment of females to advisory council, 2121

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'd

- Foreign affairs
 - Afghanistan
 - Possibility of political settlement, 1740
 - Refugees, government policy, 1740
 - Soviet army defectors, government policy, 2328
 - Africa, famine relief, 524, 638
 - Bangladesh, aid to disaster victims, 945
 - Burkina-Faso, closing of Canadian diplomatic post, 301
 - Central America, use of military force, government policy, 2162, 2272
 - Forthcoming visit of government leader to southern Africa, correction of press report, 1868, 1870
 - Gift of war planes to Turkey, 410
 - Green paper on competitiveness and security, 897, 908, 910, 912
 - Question of privilege, 921
 - Honduras and Nicaragua, U.S. military assistance to Contra forces, government position, 792
 - India
 - Aid for victims of industrial accident at Bhopal, 263
 - Detention of Canadian national, 116
 - Iran
 - Diplomatic relations, re-establishment, 1257, 1435, 2068
 - Expulsion of Iranian nationals from Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, 1311
 - Persecution of Baha'is, 636
 - Lebanon, government aid, 99, 264
 - Mexico, reported nuclear pact with Canada, 450
 - Correction to statement, 467
 - Middle East
 - Gulf of Sidra, United States-Libya conflict, safety of Canadian nationals, 2221
 - Mission of Secretary of State for External Affairs, 2163
 - Namibia, proposed establishment of interim administration, government position, 792, 936
 - Nicaragua, absence of Canadian observers from election, 223, 382
 - Organization of American States, government policy, 301
 - Overseas delegations, parliamentary representation, 760
 - Amplification of statement, 769
 - Philippines presidential election
 - Attitude of Canadian government, 2066
 - Canadian Ambassador, possible recall, 2068
 - Status of Canada-Philippines relations, 2032, 2049
 - Sale of CF-104 aircraft to Turkey, 431
 - Shooting down of South Korean aircraft, Soviet compensation for next-of-kin of Canadian victims, 761, 815
 - South Africa, apartheid
 - Canadian position at Commonwealth Conference, 1386, 1520
 - Government action to adopt United Nations convention, 2099
 - Third World, government aid, 934, 1173
 - U.S.S.R., treatment of Canadian journalist, government attitude, 770
 - United States, imposition of economic sanctions against Nicaragua, 837, 843, 974
 - Government policy, 855, 872, 937
 - Visit of President Reagan to cemetery at Bitburg, West Germany, Prime Minister's views, 813
 - Zimbabwe, status of white farmers, 507
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation, authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington, D.C. to study, 2237
- Report
 - 2nd, Canada's relations with countries of Middle East and North Africa, 1131
- Foreign investment
 - Effect of Prime Minister's statements, 2152

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dForeign investment—Cont'd

Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, reported statement, 103

President of Treasury Board, reported statement, 472, 679, 695

Forestry and Fisheries

Government policy, 45

Francophone Commonwealth

Establishment, possible government participation, 338

Francophone summit

Canadian Head of State, reported statement by Prime Minister, 2049

Famine relief, reported breach of agreement between Government of Canada and Government of Quebec, 2033, 2069

Premier of New Brunswick, status, 2034, 2104

Government advertising

Awarding of contracts, 794

Government of Canada

Agricultural programs, composition of task force, 524

Alleged freeze on programs, 523, 680

Appointments, 694

Deputy Prime Minister, visit to Yukon, use of government aircraft, 896

Policies and personality of former Prime Minister Trudeau, government attitude, 850

Remuneration of senior officials and others, 704, 899

Government spending, 36

Governor General

Visit to United Kingdom, 1518

Grain

Conference of ministers of exporting countries, 2448

International conference, government approach, 2504

Wheat pricing, terms of reference of House of Commons task force, 2468

Grey Cup

Congratulations to Winnipeg Blue Bombers on winning Canadian professional football championship, 76

Health

Communicable diseases, Canada's participation in world immunization program, 2036

Health and Welfare

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, 284, 500, 1234, 1434

Canada-Belgium Social Security Agreement, delay in tabling, 680

Consumption of alcohol, "A little of what you fancy...", 1312

Fitness of meat for Canadian consumption, 1653, 2039

Hazardous products, government policy, 1309

Health services, universality, government policy, 350, 373, 500

Palliative care, use of heroin, government policy, 258

Social assistance programs

Suggested review, 707

Universality, government policy, 2037, 2049

Social benefits, issuance of discussion paper, 237

House of Commons

Alleged remarks by Conservative M.P., 2112

Government attitude, 2133

Disparaging remarks by Conservative M.P., 2308

Placement of former members' staffs, 408

Human rights

Afghanistan and Iran, United Nations resolutions, Canada's position, 1717, 1739

Berne meeting, absence of senators from membership of observer group, 2349, 2412

Discriminatory hiring practices against visible minorities, 425

Discriminatory hiring practices, government policy, 2096

Fate of Polish refugee, 2349

Japanese Canadians, government apology and compensation, 27, 240, 673, 790, 1657, 1835, 2364

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dHuman rights—Cont'd

Meeting of experts, suggested participation by Canadian parliamentarians, 856, 868, 869

Primate of Poland, expression of sympathy, 204

Saskatchewan, passage of Bill S-144 imposing settlement on government employees, 2103

Immigration

Entry of Soviet Jews, government action, 2469, 2470

Entry of Soviet refugees, government policy, 44, 241, 411

Proposed reduction in quotas, 78

Qualifications for entry, 97

Refugee determination, government policy, 2285, 2469

Income Tax and related Statutes bill C-84, availability of committee proceedings, 1990

Indian Act

Reinstatement of Indian women to membership of Indian bands, 525, 1836

Status of women, removal of discriminatory provisions, 262, 376, 380, 537, 870

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Departmental staff reductions, government policy, 1322

Frog Lake Indian Nation, self-government proposals, 2652

Industry

Aerospace, allocation of service contracts, 2051, 2068

Armaments, possible manufacture and export by West German company from proposed Canadian factory, 2038

Canadian Porcelain Company, offer to purchase by employee co-operative, 952

Government attitude, 989

Co-op Implements, proposed relocation from Winnipeg to Regina, 530, 899

Cornwall, establishment of American plant, 523, 524, 530, 712

Footwear, importation quotas, government policy, 1362

Layoffs at Calgary and Regina IPSCO plants, government action, 2120

New Brunswick, closure of Star-Kist plant, government action, 1393

Request for answer, 1401

Petro-chemical feedstocks, cost, 46

Railways, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Transcona shops and east yards, 935, 954

St. Thomas, Ontario, foundry, possible closing, 2307

Shipbuilding, government policy, 2111, 2679

VIA Rail maintenance centre location, 538, 713

Yukon, Cyprus Anvil Mine

Closing, 927

Re-opening of mine, status of negotiations, 1393

Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie, the late, tribute, 2526

Insurance

Bankruptcy of insurance companies, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, 2467, 2537

Bankruptcy of Northumberland General Insurance Company, compensation of insured victims, request for study by Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, 2552

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee

Parliamentary employment and staff relations, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-45 prior to receipt of legislation, 924

Report

30th, 2404

Senate estimates for 1986-87, 1708, 1721, 1757

International Centre for Ocean Development

Board of directors, replacement of members, 793

International relations

Proposed parliamentary committee, 215

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'd

- International terrorism
 - Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, 1497, 1717
 - Seizure of Italian cruise ship, 1355, 1363
 - Training sites, 1109
- International trade
 - European Economic Community
 - Beef imports from, 983
 - Proposed export of agricultural products to Canada, 988
 - Exportation of grain to People's Republic of China, 79, 242
 - Footwear, removal of import quotas, 1518, 1519, 1718
 - Japanese automobiles, importation, government action, 982
- Interprovincial trade
 - Barriers, 1392
- Inuit
 - Status, government policy, 263, 411
- Investment Canada
 - Foreign investment
 - Government policy, 316, 319, 320, 431
 - Terminology, 353
 - United Auto Workers Union, proposed independence of Canadian section, 317
- June 24 celebrations
 - Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, anniversary of landing of Giovanni Caboto, 1092
- Justice
 - Canada Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals
 - Cost and scope, 2101
 - Destroyed files, government action, 1377
 - Extension of mandate and cost, 2507
 - Extension of time, budget, 1654
 - Scope of inquiry, 1324
 - Capital punishment, government policy, 238, 411, 740
 - Quebec, appeal of speeding conviction, decision of minister, 282, 336, 430, 432
 - Unlicensed cable television operators, stay of prosecutions, 221
 - Zundel, Ernst, conviction, 725
- Labour
 - Canada-United States free trade, prospective agreement, possible effects on employment, 2035
 - Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, government attitude towards provisions, 1135, 1238
- Law Reform Commission
 - Bigamy and polygamy, treatment, 1255
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 - Reports
 - 19th, Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 2019
 - 24th, Employment Equity bill C-62, rep with recommendations and observations, 2677
- Libya
 - Canadian nationals
 - Evacuation, 2304
 - Safety, government position, 2306, 2327
 - Reported incidents in Tripoli, 2282
 - United States air strike
 - Consultations between Canada and United States and between Canada and western allies, 2261, 2323, 2343
 - Clarification of statement in official record, 2366, 2381
 - Consultation with allies, 2281
 - Government attitude, 2280
 - Government policy, 2270
 - Identification of special envoy, 2286
 - Legality under international law, 2281
 - Position of Canadian nationals, 2268
 - Request for answers, 2277
- Macdonald, Hon. John M.
 - 25th anniversary of appointment, felicitations, 1114

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'd

- Malone, Richard Sankey, the late, 1102
- Manitoba
 - Clerk of Legislative Assembly and parliamentary interns, visit, 1999
 - Winnipeg, future of St. Paul's College site building, 300, 383
- Meat Import Act, tabling of reports, 2023
- Meat Inspection bill C-33, 923
- Metric conversion
 - Government policy, 196, 281, 302, 339, 1407, 2003
- Mexico
 - Earthquake disaster
 - Government action, 1268
- Multiculturalism
 - Federal-provincial conference, request for observer status for interested parties, 873
 - Government policy, 2269, 2285
 - Minister's communiqué, disparity between French and English versions, 1377
 - Status of minority groups, government policy, 869
 - Suggested joint committee, 1313
- Murray, Hon. Lowell P.C., felicitations on becoming Leader of the Government in the Senate, 2786
- National Defence, 36
 - Canadian forces
 - Future role, 257, 429
 - Increase in contingent in western Europe
 - Budgetary provision, 724
 - Effect on establishment, 651, 972
 - Uniforms, 283, 430
 - Departmental budget, government policy, 283, 430
 - Management of real property, 1717
 - New Brunswick, layoff of civilian personnel at Canadian forces bases, 2048
 - White paper, status, 2203, 2365
- National Defence Committee
 - Appointment, 94
- National Film Board
 - Possibility of budget cuts in Ontario, 525, 679
- National Film Board "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2354
- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to meet forthwith, 497, 526
 - Instruction to report, 534, 535, 542, 543, 593
 - Meeting, 602
 - Post-secondary education and training, authority to study government activities, 1274, 1276
- Reports
 - 6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1007
 - 10th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (B), 1720
- National Housing Program
 - Effect of cutbacks on native population, 692, 815
- National Parole Board
 - Appointment of members, 1500, 1672, 1718
 - Federal Court decision, 223, 301
 - Parole provisions, administration, government policy, 1669
- National Postal Museum
 - Advisory committee
 - Membership, 2700
 - Order for return, 2571, 2653
- National Research Council
 - Closing of research facilities, loss of jobs, 407
- National Revenue
 - Abandonment of Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, 353, 375

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dNational Revenue—Cont'd

Definition of "partnership", tax avoidance, 1285

Suggested consumption tax, 115

Suggested increase in corporate taxes, 353

Tax evasion and avoidance, 711

Native Economic Development Program, government policy, 240, 428

Native peoples

Funding of programs

Rumoured government cuts, 867, 871

Task force report, 870

Treatment of Louis Riel and Métis, government position, 1480

Newfoundland

Ochre Pit Cove, Conception Bay, request to U.S. for "third world" treatment and financial aid, 1985

North Atlantic Treaty Organization

Strategic Defense Initiative research, Canadian participation, 723

The Netherlands, removal of nuclear weapons from aircraft, attitude of government, 1573

Nuclear disaster

Ukraine, effects of radiation, 2366, 2537

Government advice to Canadian travellers, 2427

Government knowledge and action, 2385, 2387

Health and safety of Canadian nationals, 2385

Nuclear energy

Safety of Canadian reactors, 2385, 2386

Official Languages

Department of the Solicitor General, policy, 759

RCMP, recruiting practices, 2097, 2585

Old age security

De-indexation of pensions

Government monitoring, 1064

Position of Canadian Petroleum Association, 1064

Press release by president of National Advisory Council on Aging, 1064

Government policy, 376, 399, 407, 501

Ontario

Tornado damage, government action, 986, 1258

Order of Canada

Appointment of former members of federal cabinet and former provincial premiers, point of order, 2364

Revised reply, expression of thanks, 2470

Order, point of

Tabling of documents in Senate in bilingual form in compliance with Official Languages Act, 2565

Parliament

Report of commission to review salaries of members of Parliament and senators, definition of "members of Parliament" and "salaries", question of privilege, 921

Staff relations, denial of right to strike, 832

Parliament buildings

Centre block, removal of photographs of British Prime Ministers, 1383, 1435

Parliament Hill

Canadian flag at half-staff, 647

Cost of relocation of tourist tent, 1433

"Fairylane of beauty and excitement", 1716

Landscaping east of Centre Block, 909

Suggested relocation of tourist reception tent, 946, 974

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2777

Parliamentary secretaries

Suggested appointment of senators, 841

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2748

Penitentiaries

Canada-Alberta agreement and memorandum of intent

Effect on employees, 1852, 1988

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dPenitentiaries—*Cont'd*Canada-Alberta agreement and memorandum of intent—Cont'd
Request for tabling, 1849

Tabled, 1988

Conditions, government study, 1836

Stoney Mountain, construction of doghouse, 1869, 1988

Petroleum Compensation Charge, 37

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 877

Poverty

Secretary of State for External Affairs, reported statement on "elementary conditions", 1716

Prime Minister

Broadcast speech on free trade, availability of text in advance, 2653

Criticism of appointments, request for apology, 660

Newspaper advertisement, 769

Request for clarification of statements, 197

United Nations, fortieth anniversary, speech, 1405, 1430

See appendix p. 1445

Prince Edward Island

Economy, government assistance, 2304, 2328, 2412

Privacy

Reported giving of information re unemployed, 2094, 2600

Tabling of documents, 75

Privilege

Statement on alleged conflict of interest, 2444

Public Service

Alleged requirement for ministerial approval of job applications, 224

Placement of former ministerial assistants, 214, 224, 428

Public Works

Cleaning services

Placement of laid-off employees aged fifty and over, 2118

Possible layoff of employees, 2102

Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, awarding of contract for federal building, 2388

United States Embassy property, possible acquisition by Government of Canada, 317, 432

Publishing industry

Canadian share of market, 2428, 2494

Quebec

Provincial election results, 1557

Reform of Parliament

Proposed joint committee, 213

Reform of the Senate, 625, 631

Appointments review committee, 660

Commons resolution

Consideration by joint committee, 868

Consideration by the Senate, 867

Election of members, statement of Minister of Justice, 910

Government attitude, 1233

Leader of the Government, views, 899

Parliamentary secretaries, suggested appointment of senators, 1233

Request for information, 655

Regional Development Incentives

Non-compliance by minister with act, 882, 1259

Regional Industrial Expansion

Atlantic provinces, government assistance to industry, 605, 814

United States intervention, 606

Minister, suggested appointment, 2570

Nova Scotia, heavy water plants, government policy, 893

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee

5th report, Statutory Instrument No. 32, 2500

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1779, 1800

Representation by population, 1801

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'd

- Representation, 1985 bill C-74—Cont'd
 - Timetable, 1802
- Restaurant of Parliament
 - Joint committee membership, 322
 - Provision of services, 321
- Riel, Hon. Maurice, P.C.
 - Privy Council appointment, felicitations, 244
- Riley, Hon. Daniel A., the late, 22
- Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C., felicitations on 25th anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1177
- Royal Assent
 - Alternative procedure, 608, 757
- Royal Canadian Mounted Police
 - Alleged conduct of former corporal, 1065, 2100
- Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada
 - Request for inquiry into leak, 925
 - Request for tabling of report, 925
- Royal visit
 - State dinner, Vancouver, composition of guest list, 2427
- Rules of the Senate
 - Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, 81, 114, 426
 - Rule 67(1), motion to amend, 2460
 - Rule 77(7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 2409
- Saltfish bill C-6, 305
- Science and humanities
 - Research councils, funding, budget proposal implementation, 2569
- Science and Technology
 - Canada-Alberta memorandum of understanding, 780, 813
 - Research and development, government funding, 911
- Selection Committee
 - 2nd report, committee members, 55
- Senate
 - Adjournment, 521, 1493
 - Allocation of rooms, question of privilege, 2017
 - Availability of information in absence of government leader, 1869
 - Bourassa, Paul, tribute on completion of term as page, 843
 - Business, 383, 592, 619, 736, 743, 1050, 1195, 1468, 1676, 1680
 - Christmas recess, 1792
 - Orders of the Day, 1440
 - Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, 1683, 1687, 1761
 - Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 661, 801
 - Debates, treatment of speeches, 409
 - Doyle, Hon. Richard J., appointment, 667
 - Party affiliation, 706
 - Expressions of welcome and appreciation, 9
 - Griffith, Mr. Hubert, Editor of Debates, felicitations on 25 years of services, 1534
 - Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, 2212
 - Office of Leader of the Government, 29
 - Order paper question, request for answer, 1093
 - Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament
 - Motion to constitute immediately in Committee of the Whole, 2242
 - Prayer at commencement of sittings, 13, 46
 - Prime Minister, comments, 401, 406, 410
 - Proceedings, authority to broadcast, motion in amendment, 2112
 - Question Period
 - Answers to unasked questions, 2284
 - Delayed answers, 300, 426, 433, 500, 502, 635, 679, 936, 972, 1022, 1173, 1237, 1258, 1324, 1400, 1433, 1520, 1717, 1836, 1854, 1987, 2023, 2039, 2100, 2156, 2222, 2272,

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'd

- Senate—Cont'd
 - Question Period—Cont'd
 - 2329, 2389, 2412, 2471, 2494, 2537, 2554, 2585, 2599, 2669, 2701, 2769
 - Distribution of delayed answers, 519
 - Form, suggested referral to Standing Rules and Orders Committee, 2553
 - Government approach, 354, 355
 - "Order for return", point of order, 1324
 - Requests for answers, 302, 356, 382, 408, 638, 1050, 1112, 1173, 1175, 1176, 1290, 1384, 1394, 1521, 1792, 1855, 1989, 2089, 2329, 2472, 2555, 2572, 2653, 2667
 - Security service, staff reduction, 943
 - "Senate bulletin", 1520
 - Televising of sittings, 424
 - Victoria Building, senators' parking, 1298
- Senate, office of Speaker, 884
- Sexual abuse of children
 - Badgley committee report, government action, 1671
- Sinclair, Hon. Ian
 - Nomination to Business Hall of Fame, 604
- Small craft harbours projects
 - Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, 1194
- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, 2415, 2431
 - Modified motion in amendment, 2512
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - Authority for subcommittee to travel, 2040
- Social programs
 - Universality, government policy, 338, 347, 371, 375, 377, 399, 402, 407, 409, 470, 501
- Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.
 - United Nations award, felicitations, 1010
- Sport
 - Canadian Football League, future, 469
 - Toronto, proposed domed stadium, government assistance, 449, 712
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - Register of senators' interests, authority to study related matters, 1726
- Reports
 - 4th, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1481
 - Motion in amendment, 1860
 - 6th, government responses to committee reports, 1572, 1758, 1783
 - 7th, guidelines for financial operation of committees, 2124
 - 9th, message from House of Commons re amendments to their Standing Orders, 2435
 - 11th, membership of cabinet ministers on Senate committees, 2575
- Statistics Canada
 - 1986 census
 - Cancellation, 98, 99, 238, 298, 427
 - Restoration, 425, 679
- Status of women
 - Armed forces personnel, restriction of spouses' activities, government policy, 1379, 2134
 - Association of spouses of military members, status of government grant, 2134
 - Broadcasting task force, remuneration of women members, 1325
 - Economic equality, government policy, 1558, 1852
 - Equal pay for work of equal value, government policy, 213, 428, 472
 - Government delay, 2002
 - Funding of groups, government policy, 1654
 - Role in Canadian Armed Forces, 2086

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dStatus of women—Cont'd

Senior government appointments

Bird, Hon. Florence, 833, 936, 955

Franklin, Dr. Ursula, 791, 900

Replacement of female appointees, 789, 811, 867, 881, 938, 955, 1237

Strategic Defense Initiative

Status of study, 1267, 1520

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A.

Tributes on resignation, 623

Summit meetings

Suggested return to former format, 857

Supply and Services

“How Canadians Govern Themselves”, unavailability of booklet, 2003, 2222

Poll, awarding of contract, 1433, 1521, 1560, 1739, 2097

Publications, request for removal of permission fee, 2002

Sydney Steel Corporation

Request for answer, 1235

Terrorism

Tokyo Summit statement, government policy re Libyan nationals, 2426, 2554

Toronto harbourfront

Public access, 868, 1023

Trade

Imports from Third World countries, government attitude, 836

Transport

Airport car rental service, 261

Parking, 322, 500

Airport security

Remuneration of guards, 2446

Testing of guards, 2446, 2600

Airport tax, reported restructuring, 1111, 1434

Atlantic provinces, freight rate increases, 499, 680

Canadian airports, security, 1108, 1113, 1135, 1325, 1433

CN Marine and CN Rail, reductions in service, 47, 241

CN Marine, increase in ferry rates, 2095

CN Rail

Prince Edward Island equipment department staff reductions, 2174

Reductions in service in Newfoundland and east of Montreal, 1834

CN Route

Possible sale, government action, 2305, 2390, 2586

CN shops, Moncton layoffs, 2329, 2470

Fate of Moncton CN shops, regional development in Atlantic provinces, 2118

Freight rates, western grain, 192

Mirabel Airport, government policy, 706

Northumberland Strait ferry, delay in commencement of 1986 season, 2037, 2554

Ottawa International Airport, proposed change of name, 870

Port of Churchill, Manitoba

Continued operation, 1431

Grain car access, 869

Grain shipments to U.S.S.R. and availability of hopper cars, 1067, 1324

Prince Edward Island, proposed tunnel or causeway to mainland, 2095

Rail service, government policy, 195

Rail transportation of dangerous goods, regulations, 27, 240

St. Lawrence Seaway, Welland Canal blockage, 1393, 1436

Task force report, elimination of Prince Edward Island ferry service, 2174

Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, 840

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C., —Cont'dTransport—Cont'd

Travel to Ukraine, refund of reservation deposits, request for action, 2581, 2770

Use of government aircraft, 103

VIA Rail, resumption of “Atlantic Limited” service, 724, 726

Western Grain Stabilization Fund, government policy, 261

Tribute on retirement as Leader of the Government in the Senate, 2786

Unemployment

Adjusted statistics, 420

Armed forces, suggested recruitment, 426, 448

Strategic defence research, Canadian participation, government policy, 706

Unemployment insurance

Benefits, proposed cutbacks, 97

Petition against calculation of severance pay as income, 708

Withdrawal of benefits of armed forces pensioners, 2468

UNESCO

Canada's participation, 1656

General conference, Sofia, Bulgaria, composition of Canadian delegation, 1375

United Nations

Food and Agriculture Organization, cancellation of appointment of Hon. Eugene Whelan, P.C., 636

Government policy, 605, 712

Ratification of international convention against taking of hostages, 652

Wallenberg, Raoul

Resolution approving conferring of honorary Canadian citizenship, notification of U.S.S.R., 1717, 1987, 2103

See Senate, business

Welfare

Adequacy of payments, 191, 410, 412

World Cup soccer

Congratulations to television sponsor and networks, 2679

World War II

40th anniversary of cessation of hostilities in Europe, 865

40th anniversary of surrender of German forces, 842, 973

Youth

Government assistance, 2116

Government policy, 2162, 2216, 2221

Katimavik, cancellation of program

Announcement of new program, 2202

Government knowledge of contents of Special Senate Committee report before tabling, 2207

Government policy, 2132

Report of Special Senate Committee

Government policy, 2116

Government response, 2494

Youth Committee

Appointment, 310

Report

2nd, “Youth: A Plan of Action,” 2688

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, the late, tribute, 2836

Rousseau, Hon. Yvette

Family Allowances Act, 1973 bill C-70, 1927

“Child and Elderly Benefits” consultation paper, 1928

Regressive legislation, 1927

Rowe, Hon. Frederick W.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 48

Cook, Hon. Eric, tributes, 23

Donahoe, Hon. Richard A., tributes, 23

Education, 50

Rowe, Hon. Frederick W.—Cont'd

Energy

Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Agreement, qu, 334, 432

Hollet, Hon. Malcolm Mercer, the late, 1321

Marine Atlantic Inc. Acquisition Authorization bill C-88, 2721

Errors to be rectified, 2721

Natural resources, 49

Pornography, 50

Public Works

United States Embassy property, possible acquisition by Government of Canada, qu, 316

Riley, Hon. Daniel A., the late, 23

Senate

Adjournment, 689

Omission from attendance record, question of privilege, 1226

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

4th report, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1482

"The Smallwood Era", felicitations on publication, 445

Unemployment, 49

Royal Assent, 403, 616, 621, 756, 777, 927, 950, 1100, 1217, 1414, 1712, 1830, 2031, 2091, 2258, 2361, 2410, 2623, 2783, 2857

Alternative procedure, 607, 757

Dickson, Hon. Brian, Chief Justice of Canada, 927, 1414, 2091, 2623

Estey, Hon. Willard Z., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 403

La Forest, Hon. Gérard V.J., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 950, 1217, 1712, 2258, 2361, 2783

Lamer, Hon. Antonio, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 616, 621, 1100, 1830, 2031, 2857

Le Dain, Hon. Gerald E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 756, 2410

Wilson, Hon. Bertha, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 777

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Alleged conduct of former corporal, 1064, 2100

Royal Canadian Mounted Police (bill C-65)

Definition of "complaint", 2025

Marin commission report, 2005, 2024

Privacy rights, 2006

Public Complaints Commission, limitation of powers, 2025

Public complaints process, 2006

Right to grieve, 2006

Speakers: Senators

Doyle, Richard J., 2005

Frith, Royce, 2024

Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill C-65. 1r, 1984; 2r, 2005, 2024; ref to com, 2026; rep without amdt, 2148; 3r, 2149; r.a., 2258

Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada

Request for inquiry into leak, 925

Request for tabling of report, 925

Royal visit

State dinner, Vancouver, composition of guest list, 2427

Rules of the Senate

Distribution of revised edition, 2326

Rule 20, oral questions, suggested amendment, 61, 81, 114, 426

Rule 67(1), motion to amend, 1904, 1997, 2459, 2477

Report of Standing Rules and Orders Committee, 2411

See appendix p. 2424

Rule 77(7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 1849, 1913, 1993, 2168, 2408, 2436, 2452

"Ginger-ale" research, 1993

Health and discomfort, 1914

May's Parliamentary Practice, 20th edition, 1916

Motions in amendment, 1995, 2170, 2408, 2436

Negated, 1995

New York State Journal of Medicine, 1916

Precedent, 1916

Speakers: Senators

David, Paul D., 2168

Frith, Royce, 1913, 2170

McElman, Charles, 2169

Phillips, Orville H., 1993

Saltfish

Borrowing limit, 286

Canadian Saltfish Corporation, 286

Marketing system, 287

Speakers: Senators

De Bané, Pierre, 303

Godfrey, John M., 304

LeBlanc, Roméo, 304

Marshall, Jack, 286, 305

Thériault, L. Norbert, 287

Saltfish bill C-6. 1r, 244; 2r, 286, 303; 3r, 322; r.a., 403

Saskatchewan

Berntson, Hon. Eric, Deputy Premier, visit, 416

Sauvé, Rt. Hon. Jeanne, P.C., Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada

Speech from the Throne at Opening of First Session of Thirty-third Parliament, 3

See Governor General

Science and humanities

Research councils, funding, budget proposal implementation, 2569

Science and Technology

Canada-Alberta memorandum of understanding, 780, 813

Research and development, government funding, 911

Sechelt Indian band self-government

Case-by-case basis, 2497

Legal entity, 2496, 2508, 2623

Need for constitutional recognition of self-government, 2508, 2622

New approach, 2497

Speakers: Senators

Robertson, Brenda M., 2496, 2508, 2622

Marchand, Len, 2507, 2623

Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government bill C-93. 1r, 2488; 2r, 2496, 2507; 3r, 2622; r.a., 2623

Seeds and Canada grain

Protection against false advertising, 1506

Seeds and Canada grain—Cont'd

Role of Canadian Seed Growers Association, 1506

Speakers: Senators

Balfour, R. James, 1506, 1546
 Steuart, D.G., 1546

Seeds and Canada Grain bill C-64. 1r, 1476; 2r, 1506, 1546; 3r, 1546

Selection Committee

Appointment, 8

Reports

1st, Speaker, pro tempore, 25, 54
 2nd, committee members, 25, 54
 3rd, committee members, 220, 225
 4th, committee members, 504, 533
 5th, committee members, 2566
 6th, committee members, 2699

Senate

Absence of the Leader of the Government, 1221

Availability of information during absence, 1869

Adjournment, 13, 113, 220, 228, 334, 404, 466, 519, 688, 805, 959,
 1012, 1100, 1217, 1371, 1398, 1403, 1413, 1478, 1492,
 1649, 1704, 1831, 1864, 1920, 1968, 2022, 2111, 2149,
 2197, 2302, 2342, 2404, 2441, 2521, 2530, 2560, 2599,
 2665, 2704, 2769, 2783, 2833, 2856

Allocation of rooms, question of privilege, 2016

Bourassa, Paul, tribute on completion of term as page, 843

Business, 96, 383, 397, 398, 503, 592, 619, 620, 646, 647, 736, 743,
 920, 924, 951, 1050, 1136, 1194, 1370, 1404, 1468, 1516,
 1676, 1680, 1719, 2015, 2254, 2436, 2463, 2700, 2788,
 2838

Christmas recess, 1792

Committee meetings, 1009

Committee pre-study of bills, 965

Committees, authority to examine subject matter of Bills C-27,
 C-41, C-44, C-24 and C-36, 999

Disposition of Bills C-67 and C-68, 2825

Orders of the Day, point of order, 1439

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferring of honorary
 Canadian citizenship, 1677, 1683, 1695, 1703, 1761

Motion re second distinct sitting, 1680, 1761

Point of order and questions of privilege, 1687

Cabinet ministers in the Senate, committee membership, 1375

Clerk Assistant, issuance of commission to Richard G. Greene, 2362

Clerks at the Table, 47

Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 655, 661,
 697, 799, 823

Debates, treatment of speeches, 409

Doyle, Hon. Richard J., appointment, 666

Party affiliation, 706

Easter greetings, 2259

Expressions of welcome and appreciation, 9

Foreign Affairs Committee, meeting, 2069

Griffith, Mr. Hubert, Editor of Debates, felicitations on 25 years of service, 1534

Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, 2211, 2245

Journalist members, 728

Jurisdiction over services, 806

Leader of the Government, absence, 805

Leader of the Opposition, statement, qu, 13

Legislative program, 481

Lemay, Carole, tribute on completion of term as page, 778

Minutes of Proceedings

Recording of choosing of Acting Speaker, 1966

Recording of points of order, 1967

Senate—Cont'd

OASIS demonstration, change of time, 1438

Office of Leader of the Government, 28

Official report

Correction of statement, 279, 370

Correction, quality of translation, 1495

Point of order, 1648, 1793, 2208

Printing of appendices, 708

Order No. 3 and inquiry No.2 withdrawn, 1384

Order paper question, request for answer, 1093

Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament

Motion to constitute immediately in Committee of the Whole,
 2242

Negatived, 2245

Prayer at commencement of sittings, qu, 13, 27, 46

Prime Minister, comments, 401, 406, 409

Question of privilege, 396

Privilege, 1741, 2444

Proceedings, authority to broadcast, 867, 905, 1245, 1271, 1875,
 2112, 2374

Cost, 906, 2114, 2376

Criticism by media, 2114

Lack of justification, 2115

Lack of public interest, 2113

Motion in amendment, 1875, 2112

Senate image, 905, 2375

Property Qualification of Senators, renewal, 303

Question Period, 2616

Answers to unasked questions, 2284

Distribution of delayed answers, 519

Form, suggested referral to Standing Rules and Orders Committee, 2553

Government approach, 354

Oral questions

Delayed answers, 300, 426, 433, 500, 502, 635, 679, 936, 972,
 1022, 1173, 1237, 1258, 1324, 1400, 1433, 1520, 1717,
 1836, 1854, 1987, 2023, 2039, 2100, 2156, 2222, 2272,
 2329, 2389, 2412, 2471, 2494, 2537, 2554, 2585, 2599,
 2669, 2679, 2701, 2769

Requests for answers, 243, 302, 356, 381, 408, 638, 1050, 1112,
 1173, 1174, 1176, 1290, 1384, 1394, 1521, 1792, 1855,
 1951, 1974, 1989, 2089, 2273, 2330, 2472, 2555, 2572,
 2653, 2667

Reception for new senator, 434, 695, 810, 2483

Referral of bills to committee before second reading, 2571

Rowe, Hon. Frederick W., omission from attendance record, question of privilege, 1226

Security service, staff reduction, 943

Senate

"Senate Bulletin", 1519

Telephone service, 534, 539

Televising of sittings, 424

Tribute to departing pages, 2832

Victoria Building, senators' parking, 1298

Senate, office of Speaker, 26, 270, 324, 783, 883, 900, 904

Appointment to Senate of former premiers, 329

Authority, 273, 884

Deputy Speaker, 276

Ex officio appointment of senators, 783

Parliamentary restaurant, 277

Pope's visit, 326

Prayers, 276

Protocol service of Secretary of State, 274, 325

Queen's visit, 326

Question of privilege, 900

Senate, office of Speaker—Cont'd

- Royal Assent, 277, 326
- Senate integrity, 883
- Use of Senate chamber, 273, 326
- Visit to House of Lords, 326
- Speaker: Senator
 - Riel, Maurice, 270, 324, 783, 883, 900, 904

Senate Reform, Special Joint Committee

- 1st report, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 279

Senators, deceased

- Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe (Mar. 28/85), 731
- Benidickson, Hon. William Moore, P.C. (Jan. 4/85), 416
- Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie (May 31/86), 2526
- Riley, Hon. Daniel A. (Sept. 13/84), 22
- Yuzk Hon. Paul (July 9/86), 2834

Senators, new

- Barootes, Hon. Efstathios William (Jan. 22/85), 416
- Cogger, Hon. Michel (May 14, 1986), 2463
- Corbin, Hon. Georges (Nov. 5/84), 1
- David, Hon. Paul (Apr. 25/85), 803
- De Bané, Hon. Pierre, P.C. (Nov. 5/84), 1
- Doyle, Hon. Richard J. (Mar. 21/85), 688
- Fairbairn, Hon. Joyce (Nov. 5/84), 1
- Hays, Hon. Daniel Phillip (Nov. 5/84), 1
- Kenny, Hon. Colin (Nov. 5/84), 1
- LeBlanc, Hon. Roméo, P.C. (Nov. 5/84), 1
- Lefebvre, Hon. Thomas-Henri (Nov. 5/84), 1
- MacDonald, Hon. Finlay (Jan. 22/85), 416
- MacEachen, Hon. Allan Joseph, P.C. (Nov. 5/84), 1
- Marchand, Hon. Leonard Stephen, P.C. (Nov. 5/84), 1
- Robertson, Brenda M. (Jan. 22/85), 416
- Simard, Jean-Maurice (June 26/85), 1128
- Turner, Hon. Charles Robert (Nov. 5/84), 1

Senators, resignations

- Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C. (Jan. 21/86), 1832
- Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A. (Feb. 18/85), 623

Senators, retirements

- Cook, Hon. Eric (July 26/84), 22
- Donahoe, Hon. Richard A. (Sept. 27/84), 22

Sexual abuse of children

- Badgley committee report, government action, 1671

Sherwood, Hon. Cyril B.

- Farm Debt review bill C-117, 2737, 2765
- Farm Credit Corporation funds, 2738
- Provincial debt review boards, 2738
- Felicitations on induction into Dairy Hall of Fame, 1521
- Hatfield, Hon. Richard B. P.C., tribute on 25th anniversary of election to New Brunswick legislature, 2665
- Simard, Hon. Jean-Maurice, 1129

Simard, Hon. Jean-Maurice (Introduced June 26/85), 1128

- Auditor General, report for fiscal year ending Mar. 31/85, 1480
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - 13th report, financial institutions depositors' compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, 1808

Simard, Hon. Jean-Maurice —Cont'd

- Canada's cultural industries
 - Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent importance, 1635
- Canada's international relations
 - Final report, "Independence and Internationalism", 2697
- Customs tariff bill C-111, 2726, 2770
 - Duty-free goods from Caribbean, 2726
 - Obscene material and hate propaganda, 2727
 - Semiconductor devices and computer parts, 2727
 - Tariff rate response to private sector needs, 2726
- Excise Tax and Excise bill C-80, 2006, 2059, 2066
 - Broad-based measures, 2007
 - Closure, 2060
 - Comprehensive appeal mechanism, 2008
 - Elimination of automatic indexation of specific taxes, 2007
 - Energy conservation and prefabricated construction goods tax, 2060
- Hatfield, Hon. Richard B., fifteenth anniversary of becoming Premier of New Brunswick, 1449, 1663, 2012
 - Language equality, 1663
 - New Brunswick "quiet revolution", 1665
 - Patriation, 1663
 - Trust fund establishing financing of French language newspaper, 2013
- Income Tax bill C-109, 2557, 2564
 - Retroactivity, 2558
 - Scientific Research Tax Credit program, 2557
 - Transitional relief provisions, 2558
- Tax Rebate Discounting bill C-83, 1827
 - Child Tax Credit, 1828
 - Freedom of choice, 1828

Sinclair, Hon. Ian

- Agriculture
 - Discussion paper "Tax Issues in Agriculture", government attitude, qu, 608
 - Wheat, two-price system
 - Effect on baking industry, qu, 2667
 - Possible influx of subsidized American bakery products, qu, 2286
- Air Canada
 - Board of directors, replacement of members, qu, 658
- Banking
 - Canadian Commercial Bank
 - Collapse
 - Memorandum of Intent, request for further information, qu, 1267
 - Judgment of Inspector General as to solvency, qu, 1230
 - Role of independent auditors, qu, 1254
 - Salvage recommendation, qu, 1285
 - Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank
 - Deposit insurance, government policy, qu, 1277
 - Regulation of banks, qu, 1286
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Finance, restructuring of financial institutions, authority to study discussion paper, 958
 - Reports
 - 4th, Income Tax Conventions bill S-3, 624
 - 13th, financial institutions depositors' compensation, subject matter of Bill C-79, 1768
 - 18th, customs tariff, subject matter of Bill C-111, 2678
 - See appendix p. 2695
- Budget
 - Impact on unemployment, qu, 932
 - Preparation, use of consultant, qu, 1090

Sinclair, Hon. Ian—Cont'dBudget—Cont'd

Proposed business transfer tax qu, 2112

Cabinet

Conflict-of-interest guidelines, government policy, qu, 2384, 2405

Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1545, 1657, 1660 1742

Equity consolidation, 1742

Canada-United States relations

Bank of Nova Scotia, appeal to Supreme Court of United States, qu, 504

Bilateral trade negotiations

Government policy, qu, 1538

Items for negotiation, qu, 2665

Extraterritorial jurisdiction, qu, 648

Prime Minister and President of United States, meeting, agenda, qu, 2130, 2151

Summit meeting in Quebec City, agenda, qu, 648

Trade policy, qu, 648

Competition Tribunal bill C-91, 2580, 2620Crown corporations

Composition of boards of directors, qu, 672

Disposal, 298

Crown Corporations Dissolution Authorization bill C-60, 1259de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited

Sale to Boeing Corporation, qu, 1559, 1739

Off-the-record private briefings, job security, qu, 1715, 1854

Economic and social policies, government statements, 370, 388, 1060

Proposed elimination of full indexation of old age security, 1060

Universality, 1060

Economy

Canadian dollar, decline in value, qu, 508, 543, 604, 1939, 2068

Government action, qu, 1969, 2085, 2471

Market intervention, role of Governor of Bank of Canada, government action, 2599

Request for statements of Chairman of Economic Council of Canada and Michael McCracken of Infometrica Ltd., qu, 1970

Interest rates, qu, 2203, 2283

Government policy, qu, 239, 428, 676

National conference, qu, 703, 709, 815

Taxation and unemployment, government policy, qu, 211

United States investment in Canada, qu, 1651

Estimates

Date of tabling, qu, 536

Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2759Farm Improvement Loans bill C-56, 1154*Federal-provincial relations

Government of Quebec, attitude to sovereignty, qu, 1502

Finance

Deputy Minister, meetings, government policy, qu, 1498

Recording of ministerial discussions, qu, 223

Financial institutions

Discussion paper, "The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion", qu, 893

Pioneer Trust failure, request for investigation, qu, 926

Takeovers by industrial conglomerates, government policy, qu, 2282

Foreign investment

Effect of Prime Minister's statements, qu, 2151

Government of Canada

Appointments, qu, 694

Remuneration of senior officials and others, qu, 705, 899

Health and Welfare

Fitness of meat for Canadian consumption, qu, 1653, 2039

Sinclair, Hon. Ian—Cont'dIndustry

Railways, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Transcona shops and east yards, qu, 954

International terrorism

Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, qu, 1497, 1717

Training sites, qu, 1109

Investment Canada

Foreign investment, terminology, qu, 352

Investment Canada bill C-15, 1024, 1056

Canada's bargaining position, 1027

Foreign investment control over Canadian industries, 1026

Foreign Investment Review Act, 1026

Review of control arising from direct investment, 1026

National Finance Committee

Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11

Instruction to report, 557

National Revenue

Suggested consumption tax, qu, 115

Nomination to Business Hall of Fame, 604Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authorization bill C-53, 1182*Old age security*De-indexation of pensions

Government monitoring, qu, 1063

Presentation of petitions, 1037

Government policy, qu, 399

Quebec

Provincial election results, qu, 1557

Rules of the Senate

Rule 67(1), motion to amend, 2460

Senate

Adjournment, 523

Business, 383

Social programs

Universality, government policy, 372, 375

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

Register of senators' interests, authority to study related matters, 1726

Statistics Canada

Cancellation of 1986 census, qu, 98, 298, 427

"The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2408

Transport

Airport security, qu, 1135

Rail service, government policy, qu, 195

Small businesses loans

Adequate funding, 714

Cost-sharing measures, 713

Difficulty in achieving objectives of bill, 714

Legislation by order in council, 714

Loss-sharing arrangement, 714

Speakers: Senators

Balfour, R. James, 713

Flynn, Jacques, 735

Frith, Royce, 714

Godfrey, John M., 733

Small Businesses Loans bill C-23. 1r, 703; 2r, 713; ref to com, 715; rep without amdt, 733; 3r, 733; r.a., 756

Small craft harbours projects

Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, 1194

Smoking prohibition

Chief Medical Officer of England, quote, 2061

Smoking prohibition—Cont'd

- Cost statistics, 2062
- Dewey, Martin, Smoke in the Workplace, quote, 2061
- Faulty legislation, 2407, 2415
- Harmful effects of passive smoking, 2062
- Procedural technicalities, 2413, 2429
- Tarnopolsky, Mr. Justice Walter, quote, 2061

Speakers: Senators

- Everett, Douglas D., 2406
- Flynn, Jacques, 2391, 2511
- Frith, Royce, 2511
- Godfrey, John M., 2413, 2429, 2510
- Haidasz, Stanley, 2061, 2790
- MacEachen, Allan J., 2512
- Roblin, Duff, 2512
- Stewart, John B., 2513

- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8. 1r, 2018; 2r, 2061, 2391, 2406, 2413, 2429; m in amdt, Speaker's ruling, 2495; modified m in amdt, 2510; ref to com, 2514

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

- Authority for subcommittee to travel, 2039, 2064
- Authority to engage services, 1703, 1711, 1730
- Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 804, 2029, 2083
- Canada Pension Plan and Federal Court, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-116 prior to receipt of legislation, 2598
 - See appendix p. 2606
- Child and Elderly Benefits, authority to examine consultation paper, 481, 503, 512
- "Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians for a Better Future", authority to study consultation paper, 831, 879, 1409
- Family Allowances, 1973, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-70 prior to receipt of legislation, 1516, 1547
- Immigration, 1976, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-55 prior to receipt of legislation, 1106, 1516, 1547
 - Motion withdrawn, 1548
- National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine and report, 1221, 1247, 1261, 1269, 1291, 1305, 1315, 1358
 - Authority to publish and distribute report during adjournment, 2259
- Old age security, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-26 prior to receipt of legislation, 965, 999
- Pension benefits standards, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-90, prior to receipt of legislation, 2501

Reports

- 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 257
 - See Journals of the Senate
- 2nd, old age security, rep on subject matter of Bill C-26, 1050
- 3rd, consultation paper on Child and Elderly Benefits, tabled, 1733
- 4th, Family Allowances, 1973, subject matter of Bill C-70, 1775, 1784
 - Children living in poverty, 1785
 - Need for redistribution, 1786
 - Penalizing families with children, 1784
- 5th, Public Pensions Reporting bill C-255, rep without amdt, 2084
- 6th, Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, rep without amdt, 2122
- 7th, Immigration, 1976 bill C-55, rep without amdt, 2122
- 8th, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2261, 2291, 2317, 2330, 2350, 2452, 2473, 2514
 - Accountability to taxpayer and national interest, 2359
 - "At arm's length", 2369, 2440

Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee—Cont'dReports—Cont'd

- 8th, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss"—Cont'd
 - Censorship, 2332, 2408
 - Character assassination, 1249
 - Credibility of facts, 1247, 1291
 - Damage to national image and pride, 2455
 - Docu-drama, definition, 2408, 2439
 - "Documentary" misnomer, 1247, 1261, 2321
 - Global T.V., Peter Trueman, editorial quote, 2320
 - Historical contentiousness, 1316, 2317, 2351
 - Legion magazine, editorial quote, 2321
 - Macleans magazine, Barbara Amiel, quote, 2398
 - Mandate for creativity, 2330
 - Minimal research, 2292
 - National Film Act, 2440
 - National Film Board, death wish for Canada, 2399
 - Nielsen, Hon. Erik, quote, 2440
 - One-sided account, 2293
 - Producer, Mr. Paul Cowan, personal thesis, 2291, 2350, 2437
 - Recommendations, 2455
 - Referred back to committee, 2514
 - Role of National Film Board, 2368, 2438
- 9th, Consultation paper on training and document entitled "Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians for a Better Future", motion to permit committee to travel, 2363, 2397
 - Motion withdrawn, 2409
 - See appendix p. 2378
- 10th, authority to travel and to engage services to study report They Served, We Care, 2651, 2660
 - See appendix p. 2661
- 11th, pension benefits standards, subject matter of Bill C-90, 2678
- 12th, Canada Pension Plan and Federal Court Act, subject matter of Bill C-116, 2678
 - They Served - We Care*, authority to review, 76, 228, 330
 - See appendix p. 235
- Veterans affairs, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1012, 1300
- Veterans Affairs Subcommittee, notice of meeting, 1403

Social justice, 89, 247Social programs

- Universality, government policy, 338, 347, 370, 375, 377, 399, 402, 407, 409, 469, 501

Social security system, 65, 253"Soil at Risk"

- See Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
- "Herbicide Pricing"

South Africa

- See Foreign affairs

Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.

- Agriculture Fisheries and Forestry Committee
- Report

- "Soil at Risk", authority to print additional copies, 291
- "Soil at Risk - Canada's Eroding Future", authority to study impact, 280, 331, 340
- See appendix p. 345

- National Soil Conservation Week, 778, 892
- United Nations award, felicitations, 1010

Speaker of the House of Commons

Commission appointing Hon. John Bosley to office of Speaker of the House of Commons, 3

Speaker of the SenateActing

Bélisle, Hon. Rhéal, 463, 534, 592, 811, 921, 951, 1430, 1476, 1950, 2065, 2130, 2765

Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, P.C., 743

Commission appointing Hon. Guy Charbonneau to office of Speaker of the Senate, 1

Pro tempore

Asselin, Hon. Martial, P.C., 73, 96, 207, 279, 316, 332, 370, 396, 481, 504, 519, 528, 542, 604, 655, 769, 789, 865, 881, 892, 908, 929, 941, 1062, 1088, 1102, 1295, 1308, 1321, 1352, 1362, 1371, 1379, 1386, 1398, 1404, 1573, 1704, 1767, 1789, 2016, 2111, 2116, 2147, 2403, 2444, 2463, 2501, 2651, 2665, 2678, 2786

Response to address of His Excellency Yasuhiro Nakasone, Prime Minister of Japan, 1848

Rulings

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Motion to permit televising of committee proceedings, 1467

Budget, impact on senior citizens, point of order, 1051

Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2831

Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 873

"Youth: A Plan of Action", point of order, 2342

Senate

Clerk Assistant, Richard G. Greene, issuance of commission, 2362

Official report, 1648

Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, motion in amendment, ruling, 2495

Statements

Hébert, Senator Jacques, hunger strike, 2245

Standing joint committee, propriety of Commons referrals, 2223

Youth Committee

2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action"

Point of order, 2338, 2342

See Charbonneau, Hon. Guy

Speech from the Throne at Opening of First Session of Thirty-third Parliament, 3

See Address in reply to Speech from the Throne

Sport

Canadian Football League, future, 469

Toronto, proposed domed stadium, government assistance, 449, 712

Sports Pool and Loto Canada winding-up

Calgary Olympics, 1048, 1096

Losses, 1048

Loto Canada, 1097

Medical research, 1048

Provincial commitment, 1099

Sports Pool, 1098

Speakers: Senators

Doody, C. William, 1099

Perrault, Raymond J., 1096

Phillips, Orville H., 1048

Sports Pool and Loto Canada Winding-up bill C-2. 1r, 1035; 2r, 1048, 1096; 3r, 1100; r.a., 1101Stanbury, Hon. Richard J.

Army Benevolent Fund and related Acts bill C-100, 2253

Hees, Hon. George, 2253

Prisoners of war, 2253

Banking

Loans to aid-receiving countries, alleged restriction, qu, 871, 953, 974

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-fifth Meeting, Puerto Rico, 113, 225

Energy, defence and multilateral questions, 226

Environmental and multilateral issues, 227

Trade and economic questions, 226

See appendix p. 132

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-sixth Meeting, Niagara-on-the-Lake, 929, 1327, 1358

Economic and trade questions, 1359

Energy, defence and multilateral questions, 1360

Fisheries, environment and multilateral issues, 1360

See appendix p. 1332

Canada-United States relations

Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1391

Investment restrictions, qu, 650

Divorce, Divorce and Corollary Relief, Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance bills C-46, C-47, and C-48, 1964

Employment Equity bill C-62

Motion re message to House of Commons, 2681

Marriage (prohibited degrees) bill S-2, 1776

Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1777

Amalgam formula, 1777

Freeze on electoral map, 1778

Timetable, 1778

Transport

St. Lawrence Seaway, Welland Canal blockage, qu, 1393, 1436

Standing joint committees

Appointment of Commons members, 2195

Frequency of meetings and composition, 28, 62

Standing Rules and Orders, Standing Senate Committee

Audio recording and broadcasting proceedings of Senate committees, request to study, 624, 653

Budgetary process, authority to study documents on proposals for improvement, 1467

Message from Commons referred, 2083

Register of senators' interests, motion for consideration, 1552, 1666

Authority to study related matters, 1726

Reports

1st, audio recording and broadcasting of Senate committee proceedings, 892, 918

2nd, invitation to provinces to appear before Senate committees, 929, 956

3rd, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1168, 1240

4th, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1448, 1480, 1860, 1873

Background research, 1873

Constitution consideration, 1861

Impact on provincial legislatures, 1861

Motion in amendment, 1860, 1875

See appendix p. 1469

5th, Rules of the Senate, use of male and female genders, 1448, 1568

Use of "sénatrice" and "sénateur", 1570

See appendix p. 1470

6th, government responses to committee reports, 1449, 1571, 1758, 1783

Standing Rules and Orders, Standing Senate Committee—Cont'd Reports—Cont'd

- 6th, government responses to committee reports—Cont'd
 - Proposed rule as in House of Commons requesting government response within 4 months, 1571
 - Referred back to committee, 1783
 - Suggested amendment, 1759
 - See appendix p. 1475
- 7th, procedural guidelines for financial operation of committees, 2093, 2123, 2234, 2254
 - Advance budgetary research requirement, 2125
 - Budgetary restrictions and priorities, 2125
 - Two-step approach, 2255
 - See appendix p. 2108
- 8th, Rule 77(7), motion to amend to prohibit smoking at committee meetings, 2381
- 9th, Rule 67(1), motion to amend, 2411, 2433
 - Method of substitution of members on joint committees, 2434
 - Procedure on reporting of Interparliamentary delegations, 2433
 - Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, name change, 2434
 - Standing Joint Committee on Parliament, 2433
 - Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, 2434
 - Striking Committee in the House of Commons, 2434
 - See appendix p. 2424
- 10th, Register of Senators' Interests, 2425, 2455
- 11th, Membership of cabinet ministers on Senate committees, 2463, 2575, 2602
- 12th, Government response to committee reports, 2768
- Time limit for government response to reports of Senate committees, request for consideration, 1364

Statistics Canada

- 1986 census
 - Cancellation, 98, 99, 237, 298, 427
 - Restoration, 425, 679

Status of Women

- Affirmative action legislation, government policy, 1950
- Armed forces personnel, restriction of spouses' activities, government policy, 1379, 1906, 2134
- Association of spouses of military members, status of government grant, 2134
- Broadcasting task force, remuneration of women members, 1224, 1325
- Economic equality, government policy, 1558, 1852
- Equal pay for work of equal value, government policy, qu, 213, 428, 472
 - Government delay, 2002
- Funding of groups, government policy, 1654
- Persons Awards 1985, 1403
- Role in Canadian Armed Forces, 2086
- Senior government appointments
 - Bird, Hon. Florence, 805, 833, 936, 954
 - Franklin, Dr. Ursula, 791, 806, 900
- Replacement of female appointees, 789, 811, 867, 881, 938, 955, 1237

Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms)

- Canadian Human Rights Act, 1117
- Canadian Shipping Act, 1118
- Discussion paper on equality rights, 1116
- Examination of bills and regulations, 1118
- Fisheries Act, 1118
- Indian Act, 1116

Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms)—Cont'd

- National Defence Act, 1117
- Search and seizure provisions, 1116
- Speakers: Senators
 - Frith, Royce, 1118
 - Nurgitz, Nathan, 1116

Statute Law (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) bill C-27. 1r, 1102; 2r, 1116; 3r, 1143; r.a., 1217

Steuart, Hon. D.G.

- Agriculture
 - Western Canada, drought conditions
 - Government programs, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1460
- Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
 - "Soil at Risk - Canada's Eroding Future", authority to study impact, 344, 404
- Banking
 - Canadian Commercial Bank, collapse, qu, 1229
- Cabinet, access to information, 306
- Canada-United States relations
- Trade
 - Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, qu, 2562, 2567, 2702, 2703
- Consumer and Corporate Affairs
 - Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption
 - Responsibility of processor's parent company, government policy, 1381
- Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, tribute, 2079
- Energy
 - Petroleum Incentive Program, reduction in grants, qu, 59, 301
- Financial institutions
 - Pioneer Trust failure, request for investigation, qu, 894, 925, 1022
- Freshwater Fish Marketing bill C-5, 386
- Indian Act
 - Status of women, removal of discriminatory provisions, qu, 262
- Inuit
 - Status, government policy, qu, 263
- Investment Canada
 - United Auto Workers Union, proposed independence of Canadian section, qu, 317
- Northern Transportation Company Limited Disposal Authority bill C-53, 1182
- Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation bill C-50, 861, 878, 882
 - Government of Saskatchewan, 861
 - Operations of company, 861
 - The Fifth Estate*, 882
- Public Works
 - Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, awarding of contract for federal building, qu, 2388
- Rules of the Senate
 - Rule 67(1), motion to amend, 2459
- Seeds and Canada Grain bill C-64, 1546
- Strategic Defense Initiative, 1263
 - Status of study, qu, 1267, 1520
 - "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2367
- Transport
 - Freight rates, western grain, qu, 192
- Transport and Communications Committee
 - Car rental outlets at airports, authority to study policy, 413
- Western Grain Transportation bill C-44, 1209
 - Method of paying annual freight assistance, 1210
 - Removal of volume cap, 1209
 - Senior Grain Transportation Committee, 1210

Stewart, Hon. D.G.—Cont'd

- Youth Committee
- Appointment, 311

Stewart, Hon. John B.

- Appropriation No. 2, 1985-86 bill C-54, 1074, 1094
 - Post-secondary education, 1075
 - Urgency of passage, qu, 1066, 1091
- Borrowing Authority, 1986-87 bill C-99, 2290, 2317
- Budget
 - Atlantic provinces, impact of measures, qu, 986
 - Date of presentation, qu, 509, 677
 - Impact of measures, qu, 1016
- Budget, impact on senior citizens, 995, 1087
- Cabinet
 - Leader of the Government in the Senate, responsibilities, qu, 213
- Canada Development Corporation Reorganization bill C-66, 1742
 - Definition of "associate", 1742
- Canada-United States relations
 - Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1389, 1521
 - Summit meeting in Quebec City, absence of Governor General, qu, 674
- Trade
 - Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2563
- Cape Breton Development Corporation
 - Appointment of president, qu, 726
- Consumer and Corporate Affairs
 - Patent Office closing, qu, 954, 975
- Customs Tariff bill C-38, 764
 - Material of a treasonable or seditious character, 764
- Economic Development
 - Nova Scotia
 - Cape Breton Advisory Committee report, request for copies, qu, 1289
- Education
 - Post-secondary
 - Availability of report, qu, 529, 814
 - Government assistance, qu, 258, 284, 430
 - Ministerial meetings, qu, 529
- Estimates
 - Date of tabling, qu, 524
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2685, 2712, 2767
 - Cash transfer payments reductions, 2714
- Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1816
 - "High risk" investments, 1817
 - Money market, 1817
- Fisheries and Oceans
 - Decision of minister re licence, qu, 1171, 1238
 - Request for answer, 1236
 - Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, suggested public inquiry, qu, 1384
- Fisheries bill C-32, 1152
- Foreign affairs
 - Philippines presidential election, attitude of Canadian government, qu, 2067
- House of Commons bill C-63, 1214
- International terrorism
 - Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, qu, 1498
- Investment Canada bill C-15, 1057
- Meat Inspection bill C-33, 917, 922
 - Features of bill, 917
 - Meat inspection legend, 918
 - Registered establishments, 917

Stewart, Hon. John B.—Cont'd

- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 564
- Reports
 - 6th, estimates year ending Mar. 31/86, supplementary (A), 1002
 - 17th, federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, subject matter of Bill C-96, 2657
- National Revenue
 - Tax evasion and avoidance, qu, 711
- Parliament
 - Caucus rooms, electronic eavesdropping, apology by Deputy Prime Minister, qu, 1942
- Reform of the Senate, 626
- Representation, 1985 bill C-74, 1779, 2040, 2073
 - Amalgam formula, 1795
 - Fifteen per cent rule, 1794
 - Hnatyshyn formula, 2043
 - Impact on smaller provinces, 2040
 - Lack of consideration for Senate amendments, 2043
 - Representation by population, 2043
 - Suggested amendments to Constitution formula, 2042
- Senate
 - Business, qu, 2788
 - Committees, authority to invite provincial representations, 799
 - Prime Minister, comments, qu, 406
- Question Period
 - Government approach, qu, 354
 - Request for answers, 1173
- Smoking Prohibition bill S-8, modified motion in amendment, 2513
- Standing Rules and Orders Committee
 - 4th report, Royal Assent ceremony changes, 1482
- Unemployment
 - Armed forces, suggested recruitment, qu, 426, 448
 - Strategic defence research, Canadian participation, government policy, qu, 705

Stollery, Hon. Peter A.

- Aeronautics bill C-36, 1120
 - Regulatory powers, 1120
- Broadcasting
 - Threatened jamming of U.S. radio station by Cuba, possible interference with radio station CFRB, Toronto, qu, 945, 1023
- Budget
 - Timing of implementation of budgetary measures, qu, 1020
- Canada-United States relations
 - Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1390
- International terrorism
 - Seizure of Egyptian aircraft, qu, 1498
- Senate
 - Question Period, government approach, qu, 354
- Toronto Harbour Commissioners', 1985 bill C-76, 2011

Strategic Defense Initiative, 1221, 1262, 1270, 1282

- Altenburg, General Wolfgang, Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff, Federal Armed Forces of Germany, quote, 1283
- Deterrence, 1282
- First strike, 1262
- Potential accident, 1263
- Russian research on weapons in outer space, 1264
- Scientific and technical spin-off, 1270
- Star Wars umbrella, 1262, 1270
- Status of study, 1267, 1520

Strategic Defense Initiative—Cont'dSpeakers: Senators

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 1262
 Godfrey, John M., 1282
 Hicks, Henry D., 1270
 Stuart, D.G., 1263

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A. (Resigned Feb. 18/85)

Tributes on resignation, 623

Summit meetings

Suggested return to former format, 856

Supplementary fiscal equalization payments, 1982-87

Alberta, 1122
 Calculating the average, 1122
 Floor provisions, 1121
 Government financial and fiscal priorities, 1123
 Ontario, 1122
 Transition provision, 1122
Speakers: Senators
 Kelly, William, 1121
 Kirby, Michael, 1122

Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments, 1982-87 bill C-39. 1r, 1102; 2r, 1121; 3r, 1143; r.a., 1217Supply and Services "How Canadians Govern Themselves", unavailability of booklet, 2002, 2222

Poll, awarding of contract, 1433, 1521, 1560, 1739, 2096
 Publications, request for removal of permission fee, 2002
 University of Hawaii, contract for survey research, 1437

Sydney Steel Corporation, 199, 1235Symbolic apple, 339*"Tax Issues in Agriculture"

See Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee

Tax rebate discounting

Child Tax Credit, 1828
 Freedom of choice, 1830
Speakers: Senators
 Lucier, Paul, 1828
 Simard, Jean-Maurice, 1827

Tax Rebate Discounting bill C-83. 1r, 1827; 2r, 1827; 3r, 1830; r.a., 1831Technological development and employment

Ministerial conference report, 1281

Technological revolution, 86Terrorism

Tokyo Summit statement, government policy re Libyan nationals, 2425, 2554

Terrorism, motion for appointment of Special Senate Committee, 2363, 2421, 2520, 2539

Speakers: Senators
 Frith, Royce, 2520

Terrorism, —Cont'dSpeakers: Senators—Cont'd

Kelly, William M., 2421
 Phillips, Orville H., 2539

Thanksgiving

Cross-Canada aid to distressed Saskatchewan farmers, 1383

The Economy and the Budget, 1106, 1188

Atlantic region economy, 1192
 Capital gains, 1191
 Closure of heavy water plants, 1192
 Deficit, 1190
 Equity, 1191
 Increasing economic activity, 1189
 Long term prospects, 1193
 Pensions, 1189
 Unemployment, 1189
 United States, 1190

Speakers: Senators

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 1188
 Graham, B. Alasdair, 1191

"The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 1221, 1247, 1261, 1269, 1291, 1305, 1315, 1358, 2261, 2291, 2317, 2330, 2350, 2367, 2398, 2408, 2437, 2452, 2473, 2514

Accountability to taxpayer and to national interest, 1306, 2359, 2408

"At arm's length", 2369, 2440

Censorship, 2332, 2408, 2517

Character assassination, 1249, 2474

Cowan, Paul, producer, personal thesis, 2291, 2350, 2437, 2453

Credibility of facts, 1247, 1291, 2453

Damage to National image and pride, 2455

Defamatory libel, 2474

Disclaimer, 2519

Docu-drama, definition, 2408, 2439

"Documentary", misnomer, 1247, 1261, 2321

Global T.V., Peter Trueman, editorial quote, 2320

Historical contentiousness, 1316, 2317, 2351

Legion magazine, editorial quote, 2321

Maclean's magazine, Barbara Amiel, quote, 2398

Mandate for creativity, 2330

Minimal research, 2292, 2454

Motion to refer back to committee, 2455, 2514

National Film Act, 2440

National Film board, death wish for Canada, 2399

Nielsen, Hon. Eric, quote, 2440

One-sided account, 2293

Recommendations, 2455

Role of National Film Board, 2368, 2438, 2475

The Years of the Sky King, A. Whitehouse, quote, 2475

Speakers: Senators

Bonnell, M. Lorne, 2518

Everett, Douglas D., 2291

Flynn Jacques, 2475

Frith, Royce, 1261, 2515

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 1269

Godfrey, John M., 1305

Hicks, Henry D., 2398

Lang, Daniel A., 2473

Le Moyne, Jean, 2330

Marshall, Jack, 1291, 2317

McElman, Charles, 2437

Molson, Hartland de M., 1247, 2452

Perrault, Raymond J., 1249, 2350

'The Kid Who Couldn't Miss'—Cont'dSpeakers : Senators—Cont'd

Robichaud, Louis-J., 1316

Sinclair, Ian, 2408

Steuart, D.G., 2367

See Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee

National Film Board

Thériault, Hon. L. NorbertBanking

Canadian Commercial Bank, government assistance, qu, 705

Canada Post Corporation

Replacement of board members, qu, 2569

Canada-United States relationsBilateral trade negotiations

Fisheries, imposition of U.S. tariff, government attitude, qu, 2386

Remuneration of Canadian negotiator, qu, 1852

Georges Bank, World Court judgment, qu, 298

Summit meeting in Quebec City

Declaration on international security, effect on employment in Atlantic provinces, qu, 678, 1023

Trade

Imposition of U.S. and Canadian tariffs, mitigation of harmful effects, government policy and programs, 2567

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Rumoured sale, qu, 299

Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Sale of canned tuna unfit for human consumption, labour union action at processing plant, qu, 1382

de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited

Sale to Boeing Corporation, tabling of memorandum of agreement, qu, 1654

Economy

National conference, Senate opposition representation, 693

Employment

CN shops, layoffs at Moncton, government policy, qu, 2548

Public service staff reductions, job creation, government policy, qu, 2469

Energy

Gasoline pricing, qu, 2599

Oil pricing, qu, 2121

Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 2026

Transfer payments, 2028

Universality, 2027

Federal-provincial arrangements

Equalization payments, qu, 209

Health and education, effect of reduction in transfer payments, qu, 1558

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, Federal Post-Secondary Education, Health Contributions, 1977 bill C-96, 2710, 2766

Effect on Atlantic Canada, 2709

Fisheries and Oceans

Reported fee for access to minister, qu, 1170

Health and Welfare

Health services, universality, government policy, qu, 350, 373, 500

Industry

New Brunswick, closure of Star-Kist plant, government action, qu, 1393

Investment Canada

Foreign investment, government policy, qu, 317

Metric conversion

Government policy, qu, 281

Thériault, Hon. L. Norbert—Cont'dNational Defence

New Brunswick, layoff of civilian personnel at Canadian forces bases, qu, 2047

National Finance Committee

17th report, federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, subject matter of Bill C-96, 2660

Official Languages

Department of the Solicitor General, policy, qu, 758

Prime Minister

Criticism of appointments, request for apology, qu, 660

Saltfish bill C-6, 287

Marketing system, 287

Simard, Hon. Jean-Maurice, 1129Transport

CN Marine and CN Rail, reductions in service, qu, 47, 241

Fate of Moncton CN shops, regional development in Atlantic provinces, 2118

Unemployment

Adjusted statistics, qu, 419

Unemployment insurance

Benefits, proposed cutbacks, qu, 96

Youth Committee

Appointment, 311

"They Served. We Care"See Social Affairs, Science and Technology CommitteeThirteenth Baltic Evening

Announcement, 620

Thompson, Hon. Andrew

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Twenty-fifth Meeting, Puerto Rico, 227

Foreign affairs

Burkina-Faso, closing of Canadian diplomatic post, qu, 57

Organization of American States, government policy, qu, 60, 301

Indian affairs

Adoption of Indian children, qu, 742

National Parole Board

Federal Court decision, qu, 223, 301

Senate

Office of Leader of the Government, qu, 28

Office of Speaker, 326

Transport

Rail transportation of dangerous goods, regulations, qu, 27, 240

Toronto Harbour Commissioners', 1985Speakers: Senators

MacDonald, Finlay, 1911,

Stollery, Peter A., 2011

Toronto Harbour Commissioners', 1985 bill C-76. 1r, 1881; 2r, 1911,

1948, 2011; ref to com, 2012; rep without amdt, 2093; 3r, 2112; r.a., 2258

Toronto harbourfront

Public access, 868, 1023

Trade

Imports from Third World countries, government attitude, 836

See Canada-United States relations

Transport

- Airport car rental service, 261
 - Parking, 322, 499
- Airport security
 - Remuneration of guards, 2446
 - Testing of guards, 2446, 2600
- Airport tax, reported restructuring, 1111, 1434
- Atlantic provinces, freight rate increases, 499, 680
- Canadian airports, security, 1108, 1113, 1135, 1325, 1433
- CN Marine and CN Rail, reductions in service, 47, 241
- CN Marine, increase in ferry rates, 2094
- CN Rail
 - Prince Edward Island equipment department staff reductions, 2174
 - Reductions in service in Newfoundland and east of Montreal, 1833
- CN Route
 - Possible sale, government action, 2305, 2390, 2586
- CN shops, Moncton layoffs, 2328, 2470
 - See* Employment
- Fate of Moncton CN shops, regional development in Atlantic provinces, 2118
- Freight rates, western grain, 192
- Mirabel Airport, government policy, 706
- Northumberland Strait ferry, delay in commencement of 1986 season, 2037, 2554
- Ottawa International Airport, proposed change of name, 869
- Port of Churchill, Manitoba
 - Continued operation, 1431
 - Grain car access, 869
 - Grain shipments to U.S.S.R. and availability of hopper cars, 1067, 1324
- Prince Edward Island, proposed tunnel or causeway to mainland, 2095
- Rail service, government policy, 195
- Rail transportation of dangerous goods, regulations, 27, 240
- Railways, shortfall in CN and CP expenditures on expansion, 1973
- St. Lawrence Seaway, Welland Canal blockage, 1393, 1436
- Task force report, elimination of Prince Edward Island ferry service, 2174
- Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, 840
- Travel to Ukraine, refund of reservation deposits, request for action, 2581, 2770
- Use of government aircraft, 103
- VIA Rail, resumption of "Atlantic Limited" service, 724, 726
- Western Grain Stabilization Fund, government policy, 260

Transport and Communications, Standing Senate Committee

- Bell Canada reorganization, subject matter of Bill C-19, authority to study prior to receipt of legislation, 2678
- Canada shipping and related statutes, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-75 prior to receipt of legislation, 2149
- Car rental outlets at airports, authority to study policy, 316, 412, 485, 495, 1330
- Northern Transportation Company Limited, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-53 prior to receipt of legislation, 1089
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 296
 - See* Journals of the Senate
 - 2nd, aeronautics, subject matter of Bill C-36, 1089
 - 3rd, western grain transportation, subject matter of Bill C-44, 1069
 - 4th, Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, subject matter, 1168, 1577
 - See* appendix p. 1218

Transport and Communications, Standing Senate Committee—Cont'd Reports—Cont'd

- 5th, Northern Transportation Company Limited, subject matter of Bill C-53, 1168
- 6th, Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, subject matter, 2045, 2441
- 7th, Toronto Harbour Commissioners' 1985 bill C-76, rep without amdt, 2093
- Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, authority to study, 519
- Western grain transportation, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-44, 1062

Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations, 519, 840, 1168, 1577, 2045

See appendix p. 1218

Tremblay, Hon. Arthur

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 19
- Canada Pension Plan, Federal Court bill C-116, 2729, 2770
 - Children's benefits, 2729
 - Disability benefits, 2729
 - Harmonization with Quebec Pension Plan, 2730
 - Increased contribution rates, 2729
 - Survivor benefits, 2729
- Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 1855, 1892, 2028, 2134, 2178
 - Child tax credit, 2179
 - History of previous amendments, 1857
 - Impact of proposed amendments, 1859
 - Universality, 2028
 - See* appendices p. 1879, 1901, 1902
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, 2827, 2832
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - Authority to meet while Senate is sitting, 2083
 - Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits, authority to examine and report, 481, 503, 513
- National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1249
 - Authority to publish and distribute report during adjournment, 2259
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 257
 - See* Journals of the Senate
 - 3rd, consultation paper on Child and Elderly Benefits, tabled, 1733
 - 4th, Family Allowances, 1973, subject matter of Bill C-70, 1775, 1784
 - 5th, Public Pensions Reporting bill C-255, 2084
 - 6th, Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, rep without amdt, 2122
 - 7th, Immigration, 1976 bill C-55, rep without amdt, 2122
 - 8th, National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", 2261, 2291
 - 9th, Consultation paper on training and document entitled "Employment Opportunities Preparing Canadians for a Better Future, 2363, 2397
 - Motion withdrawn, 2409
 - See* appendix p. 2378
 - 10th, authority to travel and to engage services to study report They Served, We Care, 2651
 - See* appendix p. 2661
 - 11th, pension benefits standards, subject matter of Bill C-90, 2678
 - 12th, Canada Pension Plan, Federal Court Act, subject matter of Bill C-116, 2678

Tremblay, Hon. Arthur—Cont'd

Standing Rules and Orders Committee

3rd report, Rules of the Senate, suggested amendment, 1242

Tributes

Adams, Rt. Hon. John, the late, 623

Beaubien, Hon. Louis-Philippe, the late, 731

Benidickson, Hon. William Moore, P.C., the late, 416

Bourassa, Paul, tribute on completion of term as page, 843

Chernenko, Konstantin, the late, 622

Cook, Hon. Eric, 22

Denis, Hon. Azellus, P.C., fiftieth anniversary of election to Parliament, 1371

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C., tribute on resignation from the Senate, 1832

Donahoe, Hon. Richard A., 22

Douglas, Hon. T.C., P.C., the late, 2078

Fraser, Hon. John, resignation, 1265, 1267

Hatfield, Hon. Richard B. P.C., on twenty-fifth anniversary of election to New Brunswick legislature, 2665

Hollet, Hon. Malcolm Mercer, the late, 1321

Inman, Hon. Florence Elsie, the late, 2526

Lemay, Carole, completion of term as page, 778

Malone, Richard Sankey, the late, 1102

Missen, Senator Alan, the late, of Commonwealth of Australia, 2326

Riley, Hon. Daniel A., the late, 22

Roblin, Hon. Duff P.C., on retirement as Leader of the Government in the Senate, 2786

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A., 623

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, the late, 2834

Trudeau, Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott, P.C., record of administration, 1221, 1401

Economy, 1401

Employment, 1402

Inflation, 1402

Westell, Prof. Anthony, Carleton University, quote, 1402

Speaker: Senator

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 1401

Turner, Hon. Charles Robert (Introduced in the Senate Nov. 5/84), 1

Banking

Canadian Commercial Bank, collapse

Protection of pension funds, qu, 1280

Canada's cultural industries

Crisis in publishing industry, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1637

Canadian talent, 1638

Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance bill C-37, 754

Employment

London, Ontario, status of CN computer express terminal, qu, 2554, 2702

Family Allowances, 1973 bill C-70, 1956

Adequacy of existing benefits, 1963

"Child and Elderly Benefits" consultation paper, 1961

Evolution of social security net, 1957

Universality, 1963

Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation bill C-79, 1815

Deposit insurance limit, 1816

Estey Commission, 1816

House of Commons

Placement of former members' staffs, qu, 408

House of Commons bill C-63, 1214

Industry

St. Thomas, Ontario, foundry, possible closing, qu, 2307

Turner, Hon. Charles Robert—Cont'd

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations bill C-45, 2783

Public Service

Alleged requirement for ministerial approval of job applications, qu, 224

Ukraine

Nuclear disaster, effects of radiation, 2366, 2537

Government advice to Canadian travellers, 2427

Government knowledge and action, 2385, 2387

Health and safety of Canadian nationals, 2385

Sixty-seventh anniversary of proclamation of independence, 434

Sixty-eighth anniversary of proclamation of independence, 1849

Unemployment, 30, 49, 86, 198, 252

Adjusted statistics, 419

Armed forces, suggested recruitment, 426, 448

Strategic defence research, Canadian participation, government policy, 705

Withdrawal of benefits of armed forces pensioners, 2468

Unemployment insurance

Benefits, proposed cutbacks, 96

Petition against calculation of severance pay as income, 708

Withdrawal of benefits of armed forces pensioners, 2468

Unemployment insurance, 1971 (Bill C-52)

Abuses, 947

Proposed special committee, 947

Seasonality, 949

Special review committee, 947

Variable entrance requirement, 946

Speakers: Senators

Everett, Douglas D., 947

Leblanc, Roméo, 949

Macdonald, John M., 947

Muir, Robert, 948

Unemployment Insurance, 1971 bill C-52. 1r, 929; 2r, 946; 3r, 948; r.a., 950

Unemployment, method of combatting, 657, 698

Speakers: Senators

Doody, C. William, 700

Frith, Royce, 701

Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 698

Godfrey, John M., 700

UNESCO

Canada's participation, 1656

General conference, Sofia, Bulgaria, composition of Canadian delegations, 1375

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Chernenko, Konstantin, the late, 622

Government representation at funeral, 677

United Nations

De Cuellar, His Excellency Javier Perez, Secretary-General, address to members of both houses, 624

See appendix p. 640

Food and Agriculture Organization, cancellation of appointment of Hon. Eugene Whelan, P.C., 479, 636

United Nations—Cont'd

- Government policy, 605
- Ratification of international convention against taking of hostages, 652
- World Conference on Women, Canadian delegation, breakdown by sex, 1407

United Nations Foreign Arbitral Awards Convention, 2449

- Speakers: Senators
- Frith, Royce, 2450
- Phillips, Orville H., 2449

United Nations Foreign Arbitral Awards Convention bill C-107. 1r, 2444; 2r, 2449; 3r, 2461; r.a., 2623United States

- See Canada-United States relations
- Economic Summit
- Foreign affairs

United Way Campaign 1985, 1361University of Toronto

- Mock parliament election results, 479

Universality of social programs, 108, 253van Roggen, Hon. George

- Canada-United States relations
 - Bilateral trade negotiations, qu, 1391
 - United States undertakings, government position, qu, 2282
 - Summit meeting in Quebec City, absence of Governor General, qu, 657, 669
- Fisheries and Oceans
 - Resignation of minister, tribute, 1267
- Foreign affairs
 - Green paper on competitiveness and security, qu, 909
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - International financial system and institutions, Canada's participation
 - Authority to adjourn to Toronto, New York and Washington D.C. to study, 2195
 - Authority to study, 1406
 - Report
 - 2nd, Canada's relations with countries of Middle East and North Africa, 1131, 1412
 - See appendix p. 1159
- Human rights
 - Meeting of experts, desirability of Senate participation, 487
- Reform of the Senate, 625, 633
- Royal visit
 - State dinner, Vancouver, composition of guest list, qu, 2427
- Senate
 - Business, 620
- Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee
 - National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", authority to examine, 1270
- Transport
 - Ottawa International Airport, proposed name change, qu, 870

Veterans Affairs

- Aging Veterans Program applications, 1407
- They Served - We Care*
 - See Social Affairs, Science and Technology, Standing Senate Committee

Visitors

- Argentina, Pulit, His Excellency the Hon. Francesco Jose, Ambassador, and delegation, 2197, 2495
- Barbados, Hon. Billie Miller, Minister of Education, 1948
- Berntson, Hon. Eric, Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan, 416
- China, Peoples' Republic, delegation, 1220
- France, Senator Etienne Dailly, Vice-President of the Senate, 1964
- Hungary, Nagy, His Excellency Lajos, Ambassador, 2581
- India, General Malhorta, Director General of National Cadet Corps, 497
- Indonesia, Djalal, His Excellency Hasjim, Ambassador, 1430
- Katimavik participants, 316
- Korea, members of Committee on Economics and Science of National Assembly, 2065
- Manitoba, Clerk of Legislative Assembly and parliamentary interns, 1999
- People's Republic of China, delegation, 1220
- Prince Edward Island, Legislative Assembly Members, 1496
- Quebec National Assembly, parliamentary interns, 504
- Rwanda, Republic, Ambassador and Minister of Youth, 2559
- Sheiner, Dr. and Mrs. Nathan and Dr. and Mrs. Morrie Gelfand, 831
- Wells, Robert, Q.C., President of Canadian Bar Association, 2307
- Yukon, Dr. Don Brannigan, Mayor of Whitehorse, 2507

Votes

- National Film Board, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", motion to refer back to committee, 2520
- National Finance Committee
 - Borrowing Authority, 1984-85 (No. 2) bill C-11
 - Instruction to report, 588, 602
- Parole and Penitentiary bill C-67, motion in amendment, 2832
- Senate
 - Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament
 - Motion to constitute immediately in Committee of the Whole, 2242
- Youth Committee, 312

Walker, Hon. David, P.C.

- Cabinet, access to information, 289
- Canadian Wheat Board
 - Alleged absence of minister from advisory committee meetings, 1172
- Foreign affairs
 - Green paper on competitiveness and security, 913
- Health and Welfare
 - Palliative care, use of heroin, government policy, 259
- Industry
 - Canadian Porcelain Company, offer to purchase by employee co-operative, government attitude, qu, 989
- Libya
 - United States air strike
 - Consultations between Canada and United States and between Canada and western allies, 2347
- Public Works and Public Land Grants bill C-13, 357
- Trudeau, Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott, P.C., record of administration, 1401
- Western Grain Transportation bill C-44, 1211

Wallenberg, Raoul

- Conferral of honorary Canadian citizenship
 - Notification of U.S.S.R., 1717, 1987, 2103
 - Request for answers, 1926

Wallenberg, Raoul, resolution approving conferral of honorary Canadian citizenship

- History, 1678
- Inspiration and symbol, 1679
- International Human Rights Day, 1678
- Motion, 1677
- Proposal, message from Commons, 1668
- Speakers: Senators
 - Macquarrie, Heath, 1668
 - Marsden, Lorna, 1679
 - Nurgitz, Nathan, 1678
- See* Senate, business

Watt, Hon. Charlie

- Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee
 - Fish marketing in Canada, authority to study, 492
- Grassy Narrows and Islington Indian Bands Mercury Pollution Claims Settlement bill C-110, 2509
 - Unknown future consequences, 2509
- Indian bill C-31, 1136
 - Discrimination, 1136
 - Enfranchisement, 1137
- Inuit
 - Status, government policy, qu, 262, 411

Welfare

- Adequacy of payments, 191, 410, 412

Wells, Robert Q.C., President of Canadian Bar Association, visit, 2307Western grain stabilization

- Agricultural Stabilization Act, 614
- Canadian Wheat Board, 613
- Department of Finance, 613
- Dwarf wheat, 613
- Early payments, 590, 613
- Farm financing, 590
- Purpose of plan, 590
- United States, 614
- Speakers: Senators
 - Argue, Hazen, 612
 - Bielish, Martha P., 590, 614

Western Grain Stabilization bill C-29. 1r, 528; 2r, 590, 612; 3r, 618; r.a., 621Western grain transportation

- Freight rate ceiling, 1209
- Method of paying annual freight assistance, 1210
- Railway accountability, 1209
- Removal of volume cap, 1209
- Senior Grain Transportation Committee, 1209
- Stability and predictability, 1209
- Variable rates, 1212
- Speakers: Senators
 - Argue, Hazen, 1212
 - Barootes, Efstathios William, 1208
 - Steuart, D.G., 1209

Western Grain Transportation bill C-44. 1r, 1208; 2r, 1208; 3r, 1212; r.a., 1217Whips

- Chief Government Whip in the Senate, Hon. Orville H. Phillips

Whips—Cont'd

- Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate, Hon. William J. Petten

Wilson, Hon. Bertha, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal Assent, 777Wise, Hon. John P.C., Minister of Agriculture
Farm Debt Review bill C-117, 2750Women's Institute, 202*Wood, Hon. Dalia

- Foreign affairs
 - Canadian parliamentary delegation, visit to Federal Republic of Germany, 965, 1157
- Official Languages Policy and Programs Committee
 - Quorum, 463
 - Reports
 - 1st, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1008
 - 2nd, annual reports of Commissioner of Official Languages, 1134
 - See* appendix p. 1163
 - 3rd, authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada, 1284
- Status of Women
 - Senior government appointments
 - Bird, Hon. Florence, qu, 805, 936
- Transport
 - Airport security, qu, 1135

World Cup soccer, congratulations to television sponsor and networks, 2679World peace, 201*World War II

- D-Day, 41st anniversary of invasion of Europe by allied forces, 964
- 40th anniversary of cessation of hostilities in Europe, 865
- 40th anniversary of surrender of German forces, 842, 973

Young offenders, Criminal Code, penitentiary, prisons and reformatories

- Custody provisions, 2673
- Acceptance of evidence of disturbed children, 2688
- Prohibition of reporting of proceedings, 2688
- Police power to arrest, 2673
- Streamlined "review" process, 2673
- Speakers: Senators
 - Lewis, P. Derek, 2687
 - Robertson, Brenda M., 2672

Young Offenders, Criminal Code, Penitentiary, Prisons and Reformatories bill C-106. 1r, 2651; 2r, 2672, 2687; 3r, 2705; r.a., 2783Youth

- Cancellation of programs, government policy, 1921, 1923
- Government assistance, 2116
- Government policy, 2162, 2216, 2221
- Katimavik, abolition, motion to adjourn under rule 46(g) to consider matter of urgent public importance, 1918
 - Motion withdrawn, 1920
- Katimavik, cancellation of program
 - Announcement of new program, 2202

Youth—Cont'd

- Katimavik, cancellation of program—Cont'd
 - Government knowledge of contents of Special Senate Committee report before tabling, 2205
 - Government policy, 1921, 1942, 2131
- Report of Special Senate Committee
 - Government policy, 2116
 - Government response, 2493

"Youth: A Plan of Action",

- Alcoholism, 2371
- Apprenticeship programs, 2166, 2335, 2370
- Assessment of implications of recommendations, 2689
- Changing family structure, 2590
- Community responsibility, 2168
- Concerns, 2165
- Co-operative Career Work Association of Canada, 2233
- Co-operative education, 2233, 2335, 2591
- Dropouts, 2295
- Education and training, 2334
- Education and unemployment, 2590
- Educational system reform, 2232
- Employment and unemployment, 2166
- Foreign students, 2233
- Funding, 2693
- Jurisdictional co-ordination, 2232
- Illiteracy, 2258, 2294, 2370, 2400
- Inability of education system to challenge development of initiative, 2295
- Katimavik, 2167, 2691, 2693
- Katimavik, self-analyses, 2691
- Learning disabilities, 2401
- Literacy skills, 2232
- Little supporting documentation, 2333
- "Lost generation", 2165
- Macdonald royal commission, 2335
- National task force on co-ordination of educational qualifications, 2402
- National Training Act, 2336
- Native youth, 2165, 2296, 2690
- 1978 Tax Credit program, reinstatement, 2335
- Point of order, 2336, 2341
- Poorly designated areas of action, 2690
- Robinson, Prof. John B., research, 2333
- Senate committee on native issues, 2691
- Transition from school to work, 2591
- Teacher assessment, 2591

"Youth: A Plan of Action",—Cont'd

- Unemployment insurance, 2167
- Voiceless generation, 2257
- Work sharing, 2167
- Young Canadians' Community Service Program, 2167, 2232
- Youth action councils, 2168
- Youth unemployment, national disaster, 2148

Speakers : Senators

- Adams, Willie, 2693
- Corbin, Eymard G., 2620
- David, Paul, 2590
- Fairbairn, Joyce, 2256, 2259, 2294
- Frith, Royce, 2341, 2692
- Gigantès, Philippe Deane, 2369, 2692
- Hays, Dan, 2399
- Hébert, Jacques, 2147
- Marsden, Lorna, 2231
- Murray, Lowell, 2333
- Roblin, Duff, 2688
- Yuzyk, Paul, 2164

Youth, Special Senate Committee

- Appointment, 96, 204, 310
- Authority to meet during Senate sitting, 777, 1467
- Authority to publish and distribute report, 1985
- Order of reference, amendment, 1169, 1430, 1468
- Reports
 - 1st, expenses incurred during 2nd Session, 32nd Parliament, 279
 - See Journals of the Senate
 - 2nd, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2045, 2147, 2164, 2231, 2256, 2259, 2294, 2333, 2341, 2369, 2399, 2590, 2620, 2688

Yukon

See visitors

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul (deceased July 9/86)

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 105
- Human rights, meeting of experts, desirability of Senate participation, 513
- Multiculturalism, 106
- Tributes, 2834
- Ukraine
 - Sixty-seventh anniversary of the proclamation of independence, 434
- Youth Committee
 - 2nd report, "Youth: A Plan of Action", 2164

STATUS OF LEGISLATION
AT PROROGATION
(1st Session, 33rd Parliament)

GOVERNMENT BILLS
(HOUSE OF COMMONS)

BILL C-2

An Act respecting the winding-up of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation and Loto Canada Inc.

First reading, June 17, 1985. Second and third readings and Royal Assent, June 20. Chapter 22, 1985.

BILL C-3

An Act to amend various Acts as a consequence of the reconstitution of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba

First reading, December 13, 1984. Second reading, December 18. Third reading, December 19. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 41, 1984.

BILL C-4

An Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act

First reading, November 27, 1984. Second reading, November 28. Third reading, November 29. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 42, 1984.

BILL C-5

An Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act

First reading, December 13, 1984. Second reading, December 19. Third reading and Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 43, 1984.

BILL C-6

An Act to amend the Saltfish Act

First reading, December 4, 1984. Second reading, December 11. Third reading, December 12. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 44, 1984.

BILL C-7

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes

First reading, December 4, 1984. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, December 12. Report from Committee (without amendment); third reading and Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 45, 1984.

BILL C-8

An Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act

First reading, December 18, 1984. Second reading, December 19. Third reading and Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 46, 1984.

BILL C-9

An Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff

First reading, December 4, 1984. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, December 6. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, December 13. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 47, 1984.

BILL C-10

An Act respecting the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the Acts implementing such conventions

First reading, December 13, 1984. Second reading, December 18. Third reading, December 19. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 48, 1984.

BILL C-11

An Act to provide borrowing authority

First reading, January 22, 1985. Second reading and referral to National Finance Committee, January 23. Report from Committee (without amendment); third reading and Royal Assent, February 27. Chapter 5, 1985.

BILL C-13

An Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act

First reading, December 18, 1984. Second reading, January 22, 1985. Third reading, January 23. Royal Assent, February 26. Chapter 1, 1985.

BILL C-14

An Act to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings

First reading, December 13, 1984. Second reading, December 19. Third reading and Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 49, 1984.

BILL C-15

An Act respecting investment in Canada

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, March 13, 1985. Report from Committee, May 2.

(b) First reading, June 11. Second reading, June 19. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 20. Chapter 20, 1985.

BILL C-16

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1985

First reading, December 11, 1984. Second reading, December 12. Third reading, December 13. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 50, 1984.

BILL C-17

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act

First reading, December 20, 1984. Second reading, January 23, 1985. Third reading, January 24. Royal Assent, February 26. Chapter 3, 1985.

BILL C-18

An Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other Acts and to make other consequential amendments

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, March 13, 1985

(b) First reading, April 25. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, May 2. Report from Committee (without amendment), June 12. Third reading, June 13. Royal Assent, June 20. Chapter 19, 1985.

SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-19

An Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada

Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Transport and Communications Committee, June 25, 1986.

BILL C-21

An Act to amend the Currency Act

First reading, January 22, 1985. Second and third readings, January 23. Royal Assent, February 26. Chapter 2, 1985.

BILL C-22

An Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto

First reading, February 18, 1985. Second reading, February 26. Third reading and Royal Assent, February 27. Chapter 6, 1985.

BILL C-23

An Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act

First and second readings and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, March 26, 1985. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, March 28. Royal Assent, March 29. Chapter 8, 1985.

BILL C-24

An Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Energy and Natural Resources Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, June 19.

(b) First and second readings, June 25. Third reading, June 26. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 25, 1985.

BILL C-25

An Act to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, June 26.

(b) First, second and third readings, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 36, 1985.

BILL C-26

An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, June 18.

(b) First reading, June 20. Second reading, June 26. Third reading, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 30, 1985.

BILL C-27

An Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, June 25.

(b) First and second readings, June 25. Third reading, June 26. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 26, 1985.

BILL C-28

An Act to amend the Pension Act

First reading, February 14, 1985. Second reading, February 19. Third reading, February 20. Royal Assent, February 26. Chapter 4, 1985.

BILL C-29

An Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act

First reading, February 18, 1985. Second reading, February 26. Third reading and Royal Assent, February 27. Chapter 7, 1985.

BILL C-30

An Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and to repeal the International Development Association Act and amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof

First reading, May 9, 1985. Second reading, May 15. Third reading and Royal Assent, May 16. Chapter 16, 1985.

BILL C-31

An Act to amend the Indian Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, March 13, 1985.

(b) First reading, June 13. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 17. Report from Committee (without amendment), June 25. Third reading, June 26. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 27, 1985.

BILL C-32

An Act to amend the Fisheries Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee, March 13, 1985.

(b) First reading, June 25. Second reading, June 26. Third reading, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 31, 1985.

BILL C-33

An Act respecting the import and export of and interprovincial trade in meat products, the registration of establishments, the inspection of animals and meat products in registered establishments and the standards for those establishments and for animals slaughtered and meat products prepared in those establishments

First reading, May 9, 1985. Second reading and referral to Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee, May 15. Report from Committee (without amendment); third reading and Royal Assent, May 16. Chapter 17, 1985.

BILL C-34

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1985

First and second readings, March 26, 1985. Third reading, March 27. Royal Assent, March 29. Chapter 10, 1985.

BILL C-35

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1986

First and second readings, March 26, 1985. Third reading, March 27. Royal Assent, March 29. Chapter 11, 1985.

BILL C-36

An Act to amend the Aeronautics Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Transport and Communications Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, June 20.

(b) First and second readings, June 25. Third reading, June 26. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 28, 1985.

BILL C-37

An Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank

First and second readings; referral to Committee of the Whole; report from Committee (without amendment); third reading and Royal Assent, March 29, 1985. Chapter 9, 1985.

BILL C-38

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff

First reading, April 2, 1985. Second reading; referral to Committee of the Whole; report from Committee (without amendment); third reading and Royal Assent, April 3. Chapter 12, 1985.

BILL C-39

An Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to National Finance Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, June 20.

(b) First and second readings, June 25. Third reading, June 26. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 29, 1985.

BILL C-40

An Act to confirm certain acts or things done on behalf of the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise and to amend the Customs Act and the Special Import Measures Act

First reading, April 25, 1985. Second reading, April 30. Third reading, May 1. Royal Assent, May 16. Chapter 14, 1985.

BILL C-41

An Act to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and to amend the Crop Insurance Act in consequence thereof

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee, June 12, 1985.

(b) First reading, June 17. Second reading, June 19. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 20. Chapter 21, 1985.

BILL C-43

An Act to dissolve the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and to amend the Surplus Crown Assets Act and other Acts in consequence thereof

First reading, April 23, 1985. Second reading, April 24. Third reading, April 25. Royal Assent, May 16. Chapter 13, 1985.

BILL C-44

An Act to amend the Western Grain Transportation Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee, June 12, 1985. Withdrawn and referred to Transport and Communications Committee, June 19. Report from Committee, June 20.

(b) First, second and third readings, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 40, 1985.

BILL C-45

An Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons and the Library of Parliament

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee, May 28, 1985.

(b) First and second readings and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 26, 1986. Report from Committee (without amendment), third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 41, 1986.

BILL C-46

An Act to amend the Divorce Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, November 28.

(b) First reading, January 28, 1986. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, February 5. Report from Committee (without amendment), February 6. Third reading, February 11. Royal Assent, February 13. Chapter 3, 1986.

BILL C-47

An Act respecting divorce and corollary relief

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, November 28.

(b) First reading, January 28, 1986. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, February 5. Report from Committee (without amendment), February 6. Third reading, February 11. Royal Assent, February 13. Chapter 4, 1986.

BILL C-48

An Act to provide for the release of information that may assist in locating defaulting spouses and other persons and to permit, for the enforcement of support orders and support provisions, the garnishment and attachment of certain moneys payable by Her Majesty in right of Canada

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, November 28.

(b) First reading, January 28, 1986. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, February 5. Report from Committee (without amendment), February 6. Third reading, February 11. Royal Assent, February 13. Chapter 5, 1986.

BILL C-49

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution)

First reading, November 26, 1985. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, December 3. Report from Committee (without amendment), December 18. Third reading, December 19. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 50, 1985.

BILL C-50

An Act to provide for the continuation of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company

First reading, May 7, 1985. Second reading, May 8. Third reading, May 9. Royal Assent, May 16. Chapter 15, 1985.

BILL C-51

An Act to provide borrowing authority

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to National Finance Committee, June 12, 1985. Report from Committee, June 20.

(b) First, second and third readings, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 37, 1985.

BILL C-52

An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

First reading, May 28, 1985. Second and third readings and Royal Assent, May 29. Chapter 18, 1985.

BILL C-53

An Act to authorize the disposal of the Northern Transportation Company Limited and the forgiveness of its debt to Her Majesty and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Transport and Communications Committee, June 20, 1985. Report from Committee, June 27.

(b) First, second and third readings, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 35, 1985.

BILL C-54

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1986

First reading, June 17, 1985. Second reading, June 19. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 20. Chapter 24, 1985.

BILL C-55

An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, June 25, 1985.

(b) First reading, March 4, 1986. Second reading and referral to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, March 5. Report from Committee (without amendment), March 11. Third reading, March 19. Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 13, 1986.

BILL C-56

An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act

First and second readings, June 26, 1985. Third reading, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 32, 1985.

BILL C-57

An Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act

First and second readings, June 26, 1985. Third reading, June 27. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 33, 1985.

BILL C-58

An Act to amend the Advance Payments for Crops Act

First, second and third readings, June 27, 1985. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 34, 1985.

BILL C-59

An Act respecting Customs

First reading, November 7, 1985. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, December 4. Report from Committee (with three amendments), December 10. Adoption of Report and third reading, with one further amendment, December 12. Message from Commons concurring in amendments, January 28, 1986. Royal Assent, February 13. Chapter 1, 1986.

BILL C-60

An Act to authorize procurement of the dissolution of certain Crown corporations and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof

First reading, September 17, 1985. Second reading, September 19. Third reading, September 24. Royal Assent, October 29. Chapter 41, 1985.

BILL C-61

An Act to amend the Judges Act, the Federal Court Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the National Defence Act in relation to judicial matters and to amend An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act in consequence thereof

First, second and third readings, June 27, 1985. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 38, 1985.

BILL C-62

An Act respecting employment equity

First reading, April 29, 1986. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, May 7. Report from Committee (without amendment), June 19. Third reading, June 25. Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 31, 1986.

BILL C-63

An Act to amend the House of Commons Act

First, second and third readings, June 27, 1985. Royal Assent, June 28. Chapter 39, 1985.

BILL C-64

An Act to amend the Seeds Act and the Canada Grain Act

First reading, November 7, 1985. Second and third readings, November 28. Royal Assent, December 12. Chapter 47, 1985.

BILL C-65

An Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and other Acts in consequence thereof

First reading, February 11, 1986. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, February 13. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, March 13. Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 11, 1986.

BILL C-66

An Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation

First reading, November 26, 1985. Second reading and referral to National Finance Committee, December 5. Report from Committee (without amendment), December 17. Third reading, December 18. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 49, 1985.

BILL C-67

An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, December 17, 1985. Interim Report from Committee, May 14, 1986. Second Interim Report from Committee, June 12.

(b) First reading, June 27. Second reading and referral to Committee of the Whole; report from Committee (with one amendment); adoption of report and third reading, as amended, July 2. Commons disagrees with amendment; Senate does not insist on amendment and Royal Assent, July 24. Chapter 42, 1986.

BILL C-68

An Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, December 17, 1985.

(b) First reading, June 27, 1986. Second reading and referral to Committee of the Whole; report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, July 2. Royal Assent, July 24. Chapter 43, 1986.

BILL C-69

An Act to amend the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security Act and certain other Acts in relation thereto

First reading, September 17, 1985. Second reading, October 1. Third reading, October 9. Royal Assent, October 29. Chapter 43, 1985.

BILL C-70

An Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, November 28, 1985. Report from Committee, December 19.

(b) First reading, January 21, 1986. Second reading and referral to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, February 13. Report from Committee (without amendment), March 11. Third reading, March 19. Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 12, 1986.

BILL C-71

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff

First reading, September 26, 1985. Second reading, October 3. Third reading, October 8. Royal Assent, October 29. Chapter 42, 1985.

BILL C-72

An Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to make a related amendment to the Tax Court of Canada Act

First reading, September 26, 1985. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, October 9. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, October 17. Royal Assent, October 29. Chapter 45, 1985.

BILL C-73

An Act to validate certain ordinances of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories

First reading, October 15, 1985. Second and third readings and Royal Assent, October 29. Chapter 46, 1985.

BILL C-74

An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, November 28, 1985.

(b) First reading, December 18. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, December 20. Report from Committee (without amendment), January 23, 1986. Bill referred back to Committee, January 29. Report from Committee (without amendment), February 13. Third reading, February 20. Royal Assent, March 4. Chapter 8, 1986.

SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-75

An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof

Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Transport and Communications Committee, March 13, 1986.

BILL C-76

An Act respecting the operation of the Toronto Island Airport by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners

First reading, January 28, 1986. Second reading and referral to Transport and Communications Committee, February 12. Report from Committee (without amendment), March 5. Third reading, March 6. Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 10, 1986.

BILL C-77

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting)

First reading, October 3, 1985. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, October 9. Report and Committee (with one amendment); adoption of Report and third reading, as amended, October 10. Message from Commons concurring in amendment, October 15. Royal Assent, October 29. Chapter 44, 1985.

BILL C-78

An Act to amend the Governor General's Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act

First reading, November 26, 1985. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, November 28. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, December 5. Royal Assent, December 12. Chapter 48, 1985.

BILL C-79

An Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, October 8, 1985. Report from Committee, December 19.

(b) First, second and third readings and Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 51, 1985.

BILL C-80

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to National Finance Committee, November 7, 1985.

(b) First reading, February 11, 1986. Second reading and referral to National Finance Committee, February 19. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, February 20. Royal Assent, March 4. Chapter 9, 1986.

BILL C-81

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (lotteries)

First reading, November 7, 1985. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, November 27. Report from Committee (without amendment), third reading and Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 52, 1985.

BILL C-82

An Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to National Finance Committee, November 7, 1985. Report from Committee, December 11.

(b) First reading, January 28, 1986. Second reading, January 30. Third reading, February 4. Royal Assent, February 13. Chapter 2, 1986.

BILL C-83

An Act to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, November 28, 1985. Report from Committee, December 12.

(b) First, second and third readings and Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 53, 1985.

BILL C-84

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, November 28, 1985. Report from Committee, December 17.

(b) First reading, January 22, 1986. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, January 28. Report from Committee (without amendment), February 4. Third reading, February 11. Royal Assent, February 13. Chapter 6, 1986.

BILL C-85

An Act to amend the Petroleum Incentives Program Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Energy and Natural Resources Committee, March 19, 1986. Report from Committee, March 25.

(b) First and second readings, March 25. Third reading and Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 14, 1986.

BILL C-86

An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act

First reading, June 3, 1986. Second reading, June 11. Third reading, June 12. Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 14, 1986.

BILL C-87

An Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, March 13, 1986. Report from Committee, April 29.

(b) First, reading, April 29. Second reading, April 30. Third reading and Royal Assent, May 1. Chapter 20, 1986.

BILL C-88

An Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto

First reading, June 25, 1986. Second reading, June 26. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 36, 1986.

BILL C-89

An Act for granting to her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1986

First reading, December 11, 1985. Second reading, December 18. Third reading, December 19. Royal Assent, December 20. Chapter 54, 1985.

BILL C-90

An Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, May 28, 1986. Report from Committee, June 25.

(b) First reading, June 25. Second and third readings and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 40, 1986.

BILL C-91

An Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, April 17, 1986.

(b) First reading, June 10. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, June 11. Report from Committee (without amendment), third reading and Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 26, 1986.

SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-92

An Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act

Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Energy and Natural Resources Committee, May 27, 1986.

BILL C-93

An Act relating to self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band

First reading, May 27, 1986. Second reading, May 28. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 27, 1986.

SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-94

An Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments

Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Energy and Natural Resources Committee, June 5, 1986.

BILL C-96

An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to National Finance Committee, April 30, 1986. Report from Committee, June 10.

(b) First reading, June 25. Second reading and referral to National Finance Committee, June 26. Report from Committee (without amendment), third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 34, 1986.

BILL C-98

An Act to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remissions of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated

First reading, June 17, 1986. Second reading, June 18. Third reading, June 19. Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 29, 1986.

BILL C-99

An Act to provide borrowing authority

First reading, April 15, 1986. Second reading and referral to National Finance Committee, April 17. Report from Committee (without amendment), April 22. Third reading and Royal Assent, April 23. Chapter 19, 1986.

BILL C-100

An Act to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the Pension Act, the Veterans' Land Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act

First, second and third readings and Royal Assent, March 26, 1986. Chapter 15, 1986.

BILL C-101

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1986

First and second readings, March 25, 1986. Third reading and Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 17, 1986.

BILL C-102

An Act for granting to her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987

First reading, March 25, 1986. Second and third readings and Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 18, 1986.

SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-103

An Act to amend the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act in respect of certain regulatory matters

Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, June 19, 1986.

BILL C-106

An Act to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 17, 1986. Report from Committee, June 19.

(b) First reading, June 18. Second reading, June 25. Third reading, June 26. Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 32, 1986.

BILL C-107

An Act to implement the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards

First, second and third readings, May 13, 1986. Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 21, 1986.

BILL C-108

An Act relating to commercial arbitration

First, second and third readings, May 13, 1986. Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 22, 1986.

BILL C-109

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act

First reading, June 3, 1986. Second reading, June 5. Third reading, June 10. Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 24, 1986.

BILL C-110

An Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Government of Canada, the Government of Ontario, Reed Inc., Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd., the Islington Indian Band and the Grassy Narrows Indian Band

First reading, May 27, 1986. Second reading, May 28. Third reading, June 3. Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 23, 1986.

BILL C-111

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, June 3, 1986. Report from Committee, June 25.

(b) First and second readings, June 26. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 37, 1986.

BILL C-112

An Act to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto

First and second readings, June 26, 1986. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 39, 1986.

BILL C-115

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987

First reading, June 11, 1986. Second and Third readings and Royal Assent, June 17. Chapter 28, 1986.

BILL C-116

An Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, June 12, 1986. Report from Committee, June 25.

(b) First and second readings, June 26. Third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 38, 1986.

BILL C-117

An Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors

(a) Referral of subject-matter of Bill to Agriculture and Forestry Committee, June 12, 1986.

(b) First reading, June 26. Second reading, referral to Committee of the Whole, report from Committee (without amendment), third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 33, 1986.

BILL C-118

An Act to amend the Currency Act

First reading, June 17, 1986. Second reading, June 19. Third reading, June 25. Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 30, 1986.

BILL C-128

An Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in relation to judicial matters

First and second readings and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, June 26, 1986. Report from Committee (without amendment), third reading and Royal Assent, June 27. Chapter 35, 1986.

MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

(HOUSE OF COMMONS)

BILL C-255

An Act to impose reporting requirements with respect to public pension plans and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof (Senator Robertson)

First reading, February 11, 1986. Second reading and referral to Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee, February 13. Report from Committee (without amendment), March 4. Third reading, March 5. Royal Assent, March 26. Chapter 16, 1986.

GOVERNMENT BILLS

(SENATE)

BILL S-3

An Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Zambia, Canada and the Kingdom of Thailand, Canada and the Republic of Cyprus and Canada and the Federative Republic of Brazil for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax

First reading, February 5, 1985. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, February 13. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, March 12. Passed by the House of Commons, June 14. Royal Assent, June 20. Chapter 23, 1985.

BILL S-6

An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, a convention between Canada and the Cooperative Republic of Guyana and an agreement between Canada and India for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax

First reading, December 5, 1985. Second reading, December 11. Third reading, December 12. Passed by the House of Commons, January 24, 1986. Royal Assent, February 13. Chapter 7, 1986.

SENATORS' PUBLIC BILLS

BILL S-2

An Act to amend and consolidate the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons (Senator Flynn, P.C.)

First reading, December 13, 1984. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, December 19, 1984. Report from Committee (with five amendments), November 26, 1985. Adoption of Report, December 18. Third reading, with one further amendment, April 29, 1986.

BILL S-8

An Act to prohibit smoking in certain work areas and on board certain modes of transport (Senator Haidasz, P.C.)

First reading, February 13, 1986. Subject-matter of Bill referred to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, May 28.

SENATORS' PRIVATE BILLS

BILL S-4

An Act to extend the term of Canadian Patent No. 855,255 (Senator Nurgitz)

First reading, May 16, 1985. Second reading and referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, May 30. Report from Committee (without amendment), June 11. Third reading, June 13.

BILL S-5

An Act to provide for the creation by amalgamation of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada (Senator Olson, P.C.)

First and second readings and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, October 29, 1985. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, November 7. Passed by the House of Commons, November 21. Royal Assent, December 12. Chapter 55, 1985.

BILL S-7

An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of Pine Hill Divinity Hall (Senator Hicks)

First reading, December 18, 1985. Second reading and referral to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, December 19. Report from Committee (without amendment) and third reading, January 23, 1986. Passed by the House of Commons, June 16. Royal Assent, June 17.

